There is alſo in this Kingdome another Citie, that bordereth vpon the Georgians, called Araſſe, being the moſt chiefe and opulent Citie in the trade of Merchandiſe, partly by the aboundant growth of Silke there nouriſhed, partly by other good and neceſſary commodities, there growing and thither brought, as rough and ſmooth Galles, Cotten wooll, Allome; beſides all kinds of Spices, and Drugs, and Diamonds, and Rubies, and oher Stones brought out of the Eaſt Indies. But the principall commoditie is raw Silke of all ſorts; ſo that from hence hath beene and is carried yeerely fiue hundred, and ſometimes a thouſand mules lading of Silke to Aleppo in Syria. From this towne we ſpent ſix daies trauell to Tauris, paſſing ouer the Riuer Araxis, leauing Media Atropatia, and entring into Media the great. The chiefe of this Country is Tauris, memorable for the reſiance once of the Prophet Daniel, who neere vnto the ſame, builded a moſt magnificent Caſtle, which many yeeres remained a maruellous Monument; the beautie whereof was ſo liuely and perfect, that continuance of time did little deface it, being very freſh and flouriſhing in the time of Ioſephus. In this Caſtle were all the Kings of Media, Perſia, and Parthia for many yeeres together intombed. But now time hath worne it out, it faring with buildings as with mens bodies; they wax old, and are infeebled by yeeres, and looſe their beautie: neuertheleſſe, Ecbatana now called Tauris remaines in great glory vnto this day. It is ſeated at the foot of the Hill Orontes, eight dayes iourney or there abouts from the Caſpian Sea, and is ſubiect to Windes, and full of Snow; yet of a very wholeſome ayre, abounding with all things neceſſary for the ſuſtentation of man: wonderfull rich, as well by the perpetuall concourſe of Merchandiſes, that are brought thither from the Countries of the Eaſt, to bee conueyed into Syria, and into the Countries of Europe; as alſo of thoſe that come thither out of the Weſterne parts, to be diſtributed ouer all the Eaſt. It is very populous, ſo that it feedeth almoſt two hundred thouſand perſons: but now open to the fury of euery Armie without ſtrength of wals, and without Bulwarkes, ſauing a Caſtle built of late by the Turkes. The buildings are of burnt Clay, and rather low then high. On the South ſide of this Citie, is a moſt beautifull and flouriſhing Garden, large and ſpacious, repleniſhed with ſundry kinds of Trees, and ſweete ſmelling Plants, and a thouſand Fountaines and Brookes, deriued from a pretie Riuer, which with his pleaſant ſtreame diuides the Garden from the Citie: and is of ſo great beautie, that for the delicacy thereof, it is by the Countrey Inhabitants, called Sechis-Genet, that is to ſay, The eight Paradiſes: and was in times paſt, the ſtanding houſe of the Perſian Kings, whileſt they kept their reſidence in this Citie, and after they with-drew their ſeate from thence, by reaſon of the Turkiſh warres to Caſbin, became the habitation and place of aboad for the Perſian Gouernors. Sundry mutations euen of late yeares hath this Citie indured both by the great Turke and the Perſian. For in the yeare 1514. it was yeelded to Selymus the Turkiſh Tyrant, who contrary to his promiſe, exacted a great maſſe of Money from the Citizens, and carried away with him three thouſand families, the beſt Artificers in that Citie, eſpecially ſuch as were ſkilfull in making of Armour and weapons, onely to inrich and appopulate the great Citie Conſtantinople. Afterwards, in the yeare 1535. it was againe ſpoyled by Solyman the Turkiſh Emperour, who gaue the whole Citie for a prey vnto his Souldiers, who left neither houſe nor corner thereof vnranſacked, abuſing the miſerable Citizens with all manner of inſolency: euery common Souldier without controlement, fitting himſelfe with whatſoeuer beſt pleaſed his greedy deſire or filthy luſt: beſides, the moſt ſtately and royall Palace of King Tamas, together with the moſt ſumptuous and rich houſes of the Nobilitie, were by the great Turkes commandement all raſed downe to the ground, and the greateſt part of the beſt Citizens, and beautifull perſonages of all ſorts & conditions were carried away captiues. And in the yeare 1585. it was miſerably ſpoyled by Oſman Vizier, vnto Amurat the third, who commanded his Souldiers to doe the worſt that poſſibly they could or might doe to it. Abas now King of Perſia, repoſing no leſſe confidence in his owne good fortune, then the valour of his Souldiers marched in the yeare 1603. with his Army directly to the Citie of Tauris, and that with ſuch expedition, that he was come before it, before any ſuch thing was feared, much leſſe prouided for. In which ſiege he for battery vſed the helpe of the Canon, an engine of long time by the Perſian ſcorned, as not beſeeming valiant men, vntill that by their owne harmes taught; they are content to vſe it, being with the ſame, as alſo with ſkilfull Canoniers, furniſhed by the Portugals from Ormuz. So that after ſixe weekes ſiege, this Citie was ſurrendred into the Perſians hands, to the great reioycing of all Perſia, together with the whole Country of Seruan, except a Fort or two which ſtill ſtands out.

At this Citie we paid a Doller on a ſumme of goods, and fiue Shaughes to the keeper of the Caine wherein we lodged, and ſet forward to the wealthy Citie of Caſbin, diſtant from Tauris ten daies iourney; paſſing the three firſt daies ouer many rough and craggy Mountaines, full of a thouſand difficulties, which were the more increaſed by wonderfull great ſnowes that were fallen, by meanes whereof many Paſſengers, Horſes and Mules (if our guide had not beene good) had periſhed in one common deſtruction. Euery night we had great flaſhes of lightning, and huge Thunder-claps, with great ſtore of raine and ſnowes, which did much annoy our whole Carauan. We had no ſooner left thoſe hard paſſages, but we were forthwith encountred by a gallant troop of Perſian horſe-men, who lay vp and downe the Borders by the Kings Commandement, to murther all Turkiſh Merchants that ſhould paſſe that way: vpon reuenge of the death of a Perſian Merchant, who being richly arriued at Van, (a little before our comming) was iniuriouſly depriued both of his goods and life. Hereupon the Gouernour of this troope, demanded of our Carauan-Baſſa (who was a Chiulphalin) to deliuer vp into his hands, all the Turkie Merchants that were in our company; to which requeſt he durſt not condeſcend affirming, that there was none but Iewes and Chriſtians vnder his conduct; and withall beſtowed on him a bountifull preſent, of two hundred and fiftie Dollers, which was leuied amongſt vs.

Our firſt entry into the Perſian kingdome. Duzim.

By this time we came to the full Borders, and out-moſt bounds then of the great Turkes Dominion, ſo farre as the Othoman Empire on this ſide doth extend; and ſo entred into the Territories of the Perſian King: both which are diuided by the high Mountaine Duzim, and by a pretie Riuer that runneth at the foote thereof. This night we reſted at a Perſian Village, called Darnah, much ruinated, but ſeated in a very delightfull place, both for Springs of Water, and plentie of all things. For heere we bought foure Hens for fiue pence, a Kid for ten pence, and thirtie Egges for two pence. From Darnah we ſpent three daies further to Soltania, a very ancient Citie, trauelling by many Perſian Villages, and finding euery man at his labour, and neighbour with neighbour going from one Towne to another, which bred much contentment, and made vs wonder at the great peace and tranquilitie, which the Commons of Perſia liue in aboue the Commons of Turkie. The ruines of many faire Chriſtian Churches we beheld, but not without pitie, built all with great Arches and high Towers, elaborate with Gold, and other rich paintings to to the beautifying of the ſame.

Darnah. Great quiet in Perſia.

The deſcripti of Soltania.

At Soltania wee ſafely arriued. This deſolate Towne is on euery ſide enuironed with huge Mountaines, whoſe tops are to be ſeene a farre off, alwaies couered with deepe Snowes, called in ancient time Nyphates, Caſpius, Coathras and Zagras, taking their beginning no doubt of Caucaſus, the Father of Mountaines; which ioyning one to another, ſome one way, ſome another, doe diuide moſt large and wide Countries. Before this Towne lyeth a very great and ſpacious plaine, memorable for that dreadfull and horrible Tempeſt, which fell on Solyman the Turkiſh Emperour, and his whole Armie, in the yeare 1534. For whileſt hee lay incamped in theſe plaine fields with his Army, there fell downe ſuch an horrible and cruell Tempeſt from the Mountaines, as the like whereof the Perſians had neuer ſeene before at that time of the yeare, being in the beginning of September; and that with abundance of Raine, which froze ſo eagerly as it fell, that it ſeemed the depth of Winter, had euen then of a ſodaine beene come in: for ſuch was the rage of the bluſtering Winds, ſtriuing with themſelues, as if it had beene for victorie, that they ſwept the Snow from the top of thoſe high Mountaines, and caſt it downe into the plaines in ſuch abundance, that the Turkes lay as men buried aliue in the deepe Snow, moſt part of their Tents being ouerthrowne, and beaten downe to the ground, with the violence of the Tempeſt and weight of the Snow, wherein a wonderfull number of ſicke Souldiers and others of the baſer ſort which followed the Campe periſhed, and many other were ſo benummed, ſome their hands, ſome their feete, that they loſt the vſe of them for euer: moſt part of their beaſts which they vſed for carriage, but ſpecially their Camels were frozen to death. Neither was there any remedy to be found for ſo great miſchiefes, by reaſon of the helliſh darkneſſe of that tempeſtuous night, moſt of their fires being put out, by the extreamitie of the ſtorme: which did not a little terrifie the ſuperſtitious Turkes, as a thing accounted of them ominous.

A moſt horrible and terrible tempeſt.

The deſcription of Casbin.

From Soltania we ſpent foure daies trauell to Caſbin, paſſing by many Villages, where we paid a Shaughee a piece to the Beg or Gouernor of the Village, not as a cuſtome, but as a free gratuitie, and ſo entred into the Territories of Caſbin, a Citie very wealthy, by reaſon of the Kings Palace, and the great concourſe of Merchants which reſort thither. It was in ancient time, called Arſacia, as in Strabo; but now tearmed Caſbin, which in the Perſian language, ſignifieth chaſtiſement, or a place of puniſhment, becauſe the Kings were wont to baniſh or confine ſuch perſons, as for their offences and miſdemeanours, had deſerued ſuch chaſtiſement. This Citie is ſeated in a goodly fertile plaine of three or foure daies iourney in length, furniſhed with two thouſand Villages, to ſerue the neceſſary vſes thereof: but euill builded, and for the moſt part all of Brickes, not hardned with fire, but onely dried in the Sunne; as are moſt parts of the buildings of all Perſia. It is now one of the ſeats of the Perſian Kings Empire, which was tranſlated by King Tamas, (this Kings Grand-father) from Tauris, who built one goodly Seraglio for himſelfe, and another for his Women, and hath beene euer ſince continued by his Succeſſors, though the King that now raigneth, make moſt of his abode in Hiſpaan, fourteen daies iourny farther towards the Eaſt. There are three places in the Citie moſt of note: viz. the Kings Palace, the Baſſars, and the At-Maidan. The gate of the Kings Palace, is built with ſtone of diuers colours, and very curiouſly enamuled with Gold: on the ſeeling within, is carued the warres of the Perſian Kings, and the ſundry battels fought by them againſt the Turks and Tartars; the pauements of the roomes beneath, and Chambers aboue are ſpread with moſt fine Carpets, wouen and teſſued with Silke and Gold, all Enſignes and Monuments of the Perſian greatneſſe. There is likewiſe in this Citie ſundry Baſſars, where in ſome you may buy Shaſſes and Tulipants, and Indian cloath, of wonderfull fineneſſe: in others Silkes of all ſorts, as Veluets, Damaskes, Cloath of Gold and Siluer: in others infinite Furres, as Sables and Martine out of Muſcouia, and Agiam Furres brought from Coraſſan. In a word, euery ſtreet hath a ſeuerall Science or Trade, wherein is ſold whatſoeuer is fit and neceſſary for the vſe of man.

Baſſars are certaine ſtreets of Trafficke.

The At-Maidan, is the high ſpeech or chiefe Market place in this Citie; and is foure-ſquare, containing in circuit very neere a mile; and ſerues as a Burſſe for all ſorts of Merchants to meete on, and alſo for all others to ſell whatſoeuer Commodities they poſſeſſe, ſo that in one place is ſelling of Horſes, Mules and Camels; in another place Carpets, Garments, and Felts of all ſorts; and in another, all kind of Fruits, as Muske-mellons, Anguries, Pomegranats, Piſtaches, Adams Apples, Dates, Grapes, and Raiſins dryed in the Sunne. In this place do ſit daily twelue Sheriffes, that is, men to buy and ſell Pearle, Diamonds, and other pretious ſtones, and to exchange Gold and Siluer, to turne Spaniſh Dollers to great aduantage into Perſian Coyne; and to change the great pieces of the Perſian Coyne, as Abbaſſes, Larines, and ſuch like into certaine Braſſe Monies for the poore. They will alſo lend vpon any pawne, and that with as great intereſt as our diuelliſh Brokers and Scrieuners take in London. Finally, the ſtrength of this Citie conſiſteth not in walls and bulwarkes, but in the Souldiers that are continually maintained in and about this Citie; for out of Caſbin, and in the Villages belonging vnto the ſame, are maintained twenty thouſand Souldiers on horſebacke, howſoeuer in this Kings Fathers time were liuied but twelue thouſand.

Two places neere to this Citie, are very remarkable; the one is the Citie Ardouil; the other Giland. Ardouil is a Citie foure daies iourney from Caſbin, and two from Soltania. A Citie of great importance, where Alexander the great did keepe his Court, when he inuaded Perſia. It is a towne much eſteemed and regarded, by reaſon of the Sepulchers of the Kings of Perſia, which for the moſt part lye there intombed: and ſo is growne a place of their ſuperſtitious deuotion; as alſo becauſe it was the firſt place which receiued the Perſian Sect, wherein Giuni the firſt Author thereof did reſide and raigne.

Ardouil the firſt place that receiued the Perſian ſuperſtition.

The other place neere to Caſbin, remarkable in the Country of Gilan, in the Prouince of Hircania. The North part of this Kingdome is full of thicke Woods and ſhadowy Groues, wherein grow diuers ſorts of Trees, but ſpecially Cedars, Beeches and Oakes, a fit harbour and ſhelter for Tygres, Panthers, and Pardies, which wilde beaſts make the paſſage in thoſe places very dangerous: but neere to the Sea ſide it is full of paſture, and very delightfull, by reaſon of the manifold ſweete Springs which iſſue out of the Mountaine neere adioyning. Many principall Cities are there in this Countrey, as Beſtan, Maſſandran, Pangiazer, Bachu and Gheilan, Cities of ſuch ſtate and condition, as deſerue to haue a Gouernour of the ſame dignitie, that the Baſſa is with the Turkes. Concerning Bachu, it is a very ancient Hauen-towne, very commodious for Ships to harbour in, as alſo profitable to vent Commodities, by reaſon that Ardouill, Tauris, Eres, Sumachia, and Derbent, lye not many daies from thence. Neere vnto this Towne, is a very ſtrange and wonderfull Fountaine vnder ground, out of which there ſpringeth and iſſueth a maruellous quantitie of blacke Oyle, which ſerueth all the parts of Perſia to burne in their houſes; and they vſually carrie it all ouer the Countrey, vpon Kine and Aſſes, whereof you ſhall oftentimes meete three or foure hundred in company. Gheilan and the reſt ſtand likewiſe altogether in Trafficke: Gheilan being but foure eaſie daies trauell from Caſbin, and very neere vnto the Caſpian Sea.

Gheilan.

From Caſbin we ſet forwards to the great and populous Citie of Hiſpaan, lodging euery night either in a Perſian Village, or in a faire Caine built of ſtone, where we found all kind of prouiſion neceſſary for our ſelues and beaſts, trauelling ſixe or ſeuen in a company: company ſufficient, by reaſon of the great peace and tranquilitie, which the Perſians liue in aboue the Turkes; and ſo hauing ſpent ſixe daies, we arriued at Com, a very ancient Citie. This Citie is called by Ptolomie, Guriana, and was ſo great in times paſt, that the Inhabitants affirmed vnto vs, that when it was in his flouriſhing eſtate, it was twice as big as Conſtantinople; but it was much ruinated by Tamerlane, and euer ſince hath lien in the duſt without repaire, Caſſan carrying away the Trade of Merchandize from her, which was once the Miſtreſſe and Lady thereof. It is well ſeated for water, and all other neceſſaries, hauing a ſpacious Riuer running by it, with a ſtone bridge ouer the ſame: the which we no ſooner paſſed, but we entred into the bounds of Parthia; a Kingdome once famous, but now ſo mingled with Perſia, that the very name of Parthia, is quite extinguiſhed among them.

Of M. Mildnall, ye haue *ſup.l.*3. *c.*1.

AFter two daies trauell from Com, wee arriued at Caſſan, a principall Citie in Parthia, very famous and rich, howſoeuer Ortelius and others make no mention of it. This Citie is ſeated in a goodly Plaine, and becauſe it hath no Mountaines neere it, but within a daies iourney, the heate is very faſtidious, as great almoſt as it is in Ormuz: the Spring and Harueſt is ſooner in this Climate, then in any other parts of the Perſian Dominions. It wanteth neither Fountaines, Springs, nor Gardens, but aboundeth with all neceſſaries whatſoeuer: conſiſting altogether in Merchandize, and the beſt Trade of all the Land is there, being greatly frequented with all ſorts of Merchants, eſpecially out of India. The people are very induſtrious and curious in all ſciences, but eſpecially in weauing Girdles and Shaſhes, in making Veluets, Sattins, Damaskes, very good Ormuzenes, and Perſian Carpets of a wonderfull fineneſſe; in a word, it is the very Magazeen and Ware-houſe of all the Perſian Cities for theſe ſtuffes. Here may you buy all manner of Drugs and Spices, and Turkaſſes, with ſtore of Pearle, Diamonds, and Rubies; as alſo all ſorts of Silkes, as well wrought as raw. I am perſwaded, that in one yeare there is more Silke brought into Caſſan, then is of Broad-cloath brought into the Citie of London. This Citie is much to be commended for the ciuill and good gouernment, which is there vſed. An idle perſon is not permitted to liue among them: the childe that is but ſixe yeare old is ſet to labour: no ill rule, diſorder, or riot, is there ſuffered. For they haue a Law among them, (reſembling the Ægyptian Law which Diodorus mentioneth) whereby euery perſon is compelled to giue his name to the Magiſtrates, therewith declaring what kind of life hee liketh, how he liueth, and what art hee exerciſeth. And if any doe tell vntruly, is either well beaten on the feete, or imployed in publike ſlauery. The greateſt annoyance that this Citie is infeſted withall, is the aboundance and multitude of blacke Scorpions, of an exceeding greatneſſe, which many times doe much harm, if a ſpeciall care be not had of them. At this citie Maſter Iohn Mildenall and my ſelfe parted company; he trauelling to Labor in the Eaſt Indies; and my ſelfe ſetting forwards to the great Citie of Hiſpaan, three daies trauell diſtant from Caſſan.

The deſcription of Hiſpaan.

The fort of Hiſpaan.

The Kings Seraglio.

The Kings Garden.

This Citie in times paſt, was called Ecatompolis, the Citie of a hundred gates: and well it may keepe that name ſtill, ſince the huge wals of the ſame containe in circuit an eaſie daies iourney on horſebacke, and is become the greateſt Citie in all the Perſian Dominions: which is ſo much the more magnified and made populous, by reaſon of the Kings reſiance therein. Very ſtrong is this Citie by ſituation, compaſſed about with a very great wall, and watered with deep Channels of running Springs, conueighed into it, from a part of the Coronian Mountaines, which are as a wall inacceſſible about it. On the North ſide is erected a ſtrong Fort or Caſtle, being compaſſed about with a wall of a thouſand and ſeuen hundred yards, and in the midſt thereof is built a Tower, or rather a ſtrong keepe, ſundry Chambers and lodgings therein, but ſtored with little Ordnance. On the Weſt ſide of this Citie ſtandeth two Seraglios, the one for the King, the other for his Women; Palaces of great ſtate and magnificence, far exceeding all other proud buildings of this Citie: the wals gliſter with red Marble, and pargeting of diuers colours, yea all the Palace is paued with Checker and Teſſeled worke, and on the ſame is ſpread Carpets wrought with Silke and Gold: the windowes of Alabaſter, white Marble, and much other ſpotted Marble; the Poaſts and Wickets of maſſie Iuory, chekered with gliſtering blacke Ebony, ſo curiouſly wrought in winding knots, as may eaſier ſtay, then ſatisfie the eyes of the wondring beholder. Neere vnto this Palace, is a Garden very ſpacious and large, all flouriſhing and beautifull, repleniſhed with a thouſand ſundry kinds of grafts, trees, and ſweet ſmelling Plants, among which the Lilly, the Hyacinth, the Gilly-flower, the Roſe, the Violet, the Flower-gentle, and a thouſand other odoriferous flowers, doe yeeld a moſt pleaſant and delightfull ſight to all beholders. There are a thouſand Fountaines, and a thouſand Brookes; among them all, as the father of them all, a pretie Riuer, which with his milde courſe and delightſome noyſe, doth diuide the Garden from the Kings Palace; neither is this Garden ſo ſtraitly lookt vnto, but that both the Kings Souldiers and Citizens, may and doe at their pleaſures oftentimes on horſe-backe, repaire thither to recreate themſelues in the ſhadowes and walkes of thoſe greenes.

The Guard of the Kings Palace.

And as a Guard for the gate of this ſumptuous Palace, the King keepeth certine orders of Souldiers: whereof the moſt Noble and the greateſt in number, are called Churchi, which are as it were, the Kings Penſioners, being eight thouſand in number, all of them diuided vnder ſeuerall Captaines: which Captaines do yeeld obedience to the generall Captaine, called Churchi-Baſſa, a man alwaies of great authoritie. Next vnto this order is another, called Eſahul, to the number of a thouſand, diſtinguiſhed alſo vnder particular Captaines, and the chiefe Captaine is called Eſahul-Baſſa. All theſe are maintained by certaine Townes and Villages, which are Feudataries to the Crowne of Perſia; and they receiue at certaine times of the King, armor, horſes, apparell, and Tents, euery one as hee is in place and degree: with this ſtrong Garriſon is the King daily attended vpon, and maintayneth the Maieſtie of his Court, eſpecially when hee rideth in progreſſe.

And for the gouernment of this Citie, there is, beſides the King and the Prince twelue Sultanes, but three eſpecially are appointed by the King, for the generall gouernment of the whole Empire, hauing their ſeuerall diſtinct charges. One hath the care of all Martiall Affaires throughout the Kingdome: and the other two receiue all the Reuenues, keeping a iuſt account thereof, which two we may call Treaſurers. Next vnto theſe are the Mordari, two great Chancellours, whoſe Offie is to write all Orders, Commandements, and Letters concerning the gouernment of the Kingdome: one of them keepeth the Seale, and the other the Pen. Beſides, theſe there are two Caddi, that is, two Iudges; who make Anſwere and giue Sentence onely in matters of Controuerſie and ciuill Quarrels; but as touching criminall Cauſes, they haue no further authoritie, then to frame Examinations of Witneſſes, and to make declaration thereof, which they call the Sygill, and this Sygill they deliuer vp into the hands of the Sultan, that is eyther Gouernour of the Citie, or elſe of the Empire, and he cauſeth execution to bee done according to cuſtome. And looke as Hiſpaan is gouerned, ſo other Cities haue the ſelfe-ſame Magiſtrates, all being at the Kings diſpoſition and appointment.

The Caddi, or Iudges.

Concerning the Church gouernment, there is in this Citie, firſt the chiefe of the Law whom they call the Muſtaedini, a wicked and prophane Prieſt: and in the other ſubiect Cities are certaine peculiar heads, obedient to this chiefe Prieſt, who are not choſen and diſplaced at his pleaſure, as the Popiſh Biſhops are by the Pope, but by the King himſelfe, who is not onely a King, but a Prieſt, as Mahomet and Aly were. But to auoid trouble, the King granteth that fauour, and putteth ouer that burden from himſelfe vnto others, to whoſe iudgement, he alſo referreth himſelfe, whenſoeuer any conſultation is touching their Law or prophane Superſtition. Vnder this great Prieſt are Califes, and theſe doe daily execute ſeruice in the Moſchees or Temples. The chiefe of theſe Califes is hee that putteth the Horne vpon the Kings head, when hee is firſt inthronized. A Ceremonie once performed in Caſe neere Babylon, but ſince Solyman the Turkiſh Emperour wonne Aſſyria from the Perſian, it hath beene ſometimes performed in Caſbin, and ſometimes in Hiſpaan.

The Muſtaedini.
The Califes.

Finally, the Inhabitants of this Citie doe much reſemble the ancient Parthians in diuers things, but ſpecially in their continuall riding. They ride on horſe-backe for the moſt part, on horſe-backe they fight with the Enemie, they execute all Affaires as well publike as priuate on horſe-backe, they goe from place to place on horſe-backe, they buy and ſell, and on horſe-backe they conferre and talke with one another; and the difference betweene the Gentleman and the ſlaue is, that the ſlaue neuer rideth, nor the Gentleman neuer goeth on foote. Beſides, the nature of people is arrogant ſeditious, deceitfull, and very vnquiet, but that the fierceneſſe of their nature is much reſtrayned by the Kings ſeuere gouernment. To ſenſualitie they are much inclined, hauing three ſorts of women, as they terme them, viz. honeſt women, halfe honeſt women and Courtezans; and yet they chaſtiſe no offence with like extremitie as Adulterie, and that as well in the halfe honeſt woman, as in the honeſt. Laſt of all they are full of craftie ſtratagems, and are breakers of their promiſe (a vice that is very inbred in all Barbarians.) Not content with any mans gouernment long: and louers of Nouelties.

The nature of the Perſians.
The Perſians giuen to ſenſualitie.
The Perſians very inconſtant.

Abas, howſoeuer by the ſhedding of much bloud * he was ſaluted King, vpon the death of his Father, yet hath he ſo carryed the matter, that now he is exceedingly beloued and honoured of his Subiects, in ſo much that when they will confirme any thing by ſolemne Oathes, they will ſweare by the head of Abas the King, and when they wiſh well to any man, they vſually ſay, King Abas grant thee thy deſire.

This Prince is very abſolute both in perfection of his bodie, and his minde (but that he is in Religion a profeſſed Mohumetan) excellently compoſed in the one, and honourably diſpoſed in the other. Of an indifferent ſtature, neither to high nor to low. His countenance very ſterne, his eyes fierce and piercing, his colour ſwarffie, his Muſtachees on his vpper-lip long, with his beard cut cloſe to his chinne, expreſſing his martiall diſpoſition, and inexorable nature, that at the firſt a man would thinke to haue nothing in him, but miſchiefe and crueltie. And yet he is of nature courteous, and affable, eaſie to bee ſeene and ſpoken withall: his manner is to dine openly in the company of his greateſt Courtiers, delighting much in hawking and hunting accompanied with his Nobilitie, and the Ambaſſadours of forraine Princes. Hee will oftentimes runne, leape, and proue maſteries with his chiefe Courtiers, beeing himſelfe a moſt excellent Horſeman and cunning Archer.

The deſcription of the Perſian King.

Vſually euery morning he viſiteth his Stables of great Horſes, and according to an old cuſtome of the Perſian Kings, the Souldiers of his Court (before mentioned) doe receiue Horſes at his hands, as he is in place and degree. And theſe their Horſes are of ſingular vertue, equall with thoſe of the old time, which (as Strabo writeth) were accuſtomed to bee fed and brought vp in Armenia for the Kings vſe. They are wonderfull ſwift in courſe, fierce in battell, long breathed and very docible: when they are vnſadled, they are gentle and milde, but when they are armed, they are warlike, hardie, and manageable euen at the pleaſure of the Rider. And I haue ſeene of them ſold for a thouſand, and ſometimes a thouſand and ſixe hundred Duckets a piece.

The Perſian Horſes very good.

The weapons of the Perſian Souldiers.

After hee hath viewed his Horſes, hee paſſeth into his Armoury, certaine buildings neere vnto his Palace, where are made very ſtrong Curiaſſes, or Corſelets, Head-peeces, and Targets, moſt of them able to keepe out the ſhotte of an Harquebuſier, and much more to daunt the force of a Dart. Heere alſo the King furniſheth his Souldiers, not only with Curiaſſes, Head-peeces, and Targets; but with Bowes and Arrowes, Pouldrones, and Gauntlets, and with Launces made of good Aſh, armed at both ends; with Simatars and ſhirts of Maile, moſt finely and ſoundly tempered, wherewith both themſelues and their Horſes are defended in time of Warre.

The Kings exerciſes in the At-Maidan.

By this time hauing ſpent moſt of the fore-noone, he returneth againe into his Palace, and there remaynes till three of the clocke in the after-noone, at which time he makes his entry into the At-Maidan, which is the great Market place or high ſtreet of Hiſpaan: round about this place are erected certaine high Scaffolds, where the multitude doe ſit to behold the warlike exerciſes performed by the King and his Courtiers, as their running and leaping, their ſhooting with Bowes and Arrowes, at a marke both aboue and beneath, their playing at Tennis, all which they performe on Horſe-backe with diuers moe too long to write of. In this place alſo is to bee ſeene ſeuerall times in the yeare, the pleaſant ſight of Fire-workes, of Banquets, of Muſickes, of Wraſtlings, and of whatſoeuer Triumphs elſe is there to bee ſhewed, for the declaration of the ioy of this people.

His Iuſtice.

Beſides, the King very often in this place, in the preſence of the Princes and Peeres of the Realme, will giue iudgement in diuers cauſes: in the execution of Iuſtice hee is very ſeuere, as well to the greateſt as to the meaneſt, not ſparing (as might bee ſhewed) to hang vp his chiefe Caddi or Iudges, when he ſhall perceiue how that vpon bribes and fauour they delay the Suits of his Subiects, againſt the cleere and manifeſt truth: And I haue ſeene him many times alight from his Horſe, onely to doe Iuſtice to a poore bodie. Beſides, hee puniſheth Theft and Manſlaughter ſo ſeuerely, that in an Age a man ſhall not heare either of the one or of the other. So that ſince King Abas came vnto the Crowne, full twentie yeares and vpwards, the Perſian Empire hath flouriſhed in ſacred and redoubted Lawes, the people demeaning themſelues after the beſt manner they can, abundance of Collections comming plentifully in, the Rents of his Chamber were increaſed more then euer they were in his Grandfather Tamas his time, Armes, Artes, and Sciences doe wonderfully proſper, and are very highly eſteemed.

Sir Anthony Sherleys arriual in Perſia.

To this great Monarch, came Sir Anthonie Sherley Knight, with ſixe and twentie Followers, all gallantly mounted and richly furniſhed; whoſe entertaynment was ſo great, that the Perſians did admire, that the King ſhould vouchſafe ſuch high fauour to a meere ſtranger without deſert or tryall of his worth. Of whoſe bountie the World may iudge, ſince within three dayes after his firſt arriuall, the King ſent him fortie Horſes furniſhed with Saddles, and very rich trappings; foure of them fit for the proper vſe of any Prince, twelue Camels for cariage, together with ſixe Mules, foure and twentie Carpets, moſt of them rich and faire, three Tents or Pauilions, with all other neceſſaries of houſe; and laſtly, ſixe men laden with ſiluer. (But of this yee haue heard himſelfe.)

The returne of the Author by the way of Perſia, Suſiana, Chaldæa, Aſſyria, and Arabia.

HAuing tooke my leaue of Maſter Robert Sherley, and the reſt of my Countreymen, I left them to the mercy of the King (whoſe bountie and goodneſſe by their returne hath plentifully ſhewed it ſelfe) and betooke my ſelfe to the protection of the Almightie, to bring me in ſafetie againe into my owne Countrey: being in my returne, accompanied with one Signior Belchior Dios d' Croce, an Armenian Portugall, or Portugall Armenian; and one Chriſtophero a Greeke, who were ſent with Letters from the Gouernour of Goa, to the King of Spaine, but loſt afterwards their liues and Letters by ſhipwracke in the Venetian Gulfe. From Hiſpaan we ſpent ten dayes trauell to Siras, by perſwaſion of ſome Perſian Merchants that were bound for Aleppo with vs, trauelling through the very heart of Perſia it ſelfe, paying now and then a Shaughee a piece to certaine Villages in the way, no matter of importance worth the relating till we come to the Citie it ſelfe.

The deſcription of Siras, the ancient Perſepolis.

The Riuer Bindamir.

Siras is ſituated on the Bankes of Bindamir, a great and famous Riuer, which courſeth through Perſia, and the Kingdome of Lar, and ſo emptieth it ſelfe into the Perſian Gulfe, and was once the Metropoliticall ſeat of all the Kingdome, vntill of late yeares, Hiſpaan hath gained that priuiledge from her. Notwithſtanding it is large and ſpacious contayning very neere ten miles in circuit, and lyeth iuſt in the Road way which leades from Hiſpaan to Ormuz.

In and about this Towne are to be ſeene the ruines of many ancient Monuments: as two great gates, that are diſtant one from the other the ſpace of twelue miles, which ſhewes the circuit of this Citie, as it was in the time of the Monarchie, to be both large and ſpacious. On the South-ſide we viewed the ruines of a goodly Palace, builded, as they ſay, by King Cyrus; a Palace much magnified by Ælianus in his firſt Booke *de animalibus, cap.*59. And on the North-ſide the ruines of an old Caſtle, which ſeemes was girt about with a three-fold wall: the firſt wall being foure and twentie foot high, adorned and beautified with many Turrets and Spires: the ſecond was like vnto the firſt, but twice as high; and the third was foure ſquare, being foure ſcore and ten foot high. All fabricated of free ſtone. On each ſide were twelue Gates of Braſſe, with Brazen Pales ſet before them very curiouſly wrought, all which did ſhew the magnificence of the Founder. On the Eaſt-ſide of this ruinous Caſtle, ſome foure Acres of ground diſtant, is a Mountayne, on which was erected a goodly Chappell, in which moſt of the Perſian Kings in anticke times were intombed. And though this Citie hath endured ſundry mutations and changes, yet is it not to bee eſteemed one of the leaſt Cities in Perſia: for out of it in ſhort time is leuied twenty thouſand Horſemen well armed. Beſides, it is one of the greateſt and moſt famous Cities of the Eaſt, both for traffique of Merchandize; as alſo for moſt excellent Armour and Furniture, which the Armourers with wonderfull cunning doe make of Iron and Steele, and the Iuice of certayne Herbs, of much more notable temper and beautie, then are thoſe which are made with vs in Europe; not onely Head-pieces, Curiaſſes, and compleate Armours, but whole Capariſons for Horſes, curiouſly made of thinne plates of Iron and Steele.

Old Monuments.

Excellent Armour made in Syras.

From Siras, hauing ſpent eight dayes trauell and better, we entred into the Prouince of Suſiana, now called Cuſeſtan, but in old time Aſſyria. The bounds of this Countrey, North-wards is on the South part of Armenia, Eaſt-ward on a part of Perſia: Weſt-ward on Meſopotamia: and South-ward on a part of the Perſian Gulfe, which part is full of Fennes and mariſh Bogges, without either Port or Hauen. The Climate in that part is exceeding hot, and very much infeſted with bituminous matter, which both ſpoiles the growth of Trees, and corrupt the waters, whereby it comes to paſſe, that the people are not long liued.

Trauelling two dayes further from the entrance into this Kingdome, we reſted at Valdac, once the great Citie Suſa, but now very ruinous. Cloſe by this ruinous Towne ſwimmeth the famous Riuer Choaſpes, which after many turnings and windings through the Countrey of Suſiana, diſchargeth it ſelfe in the Perſian Gulfe. The water of this Riuer is very delicate to the taſte.

The deſcription of Suſa.
The Riuer Choaſpes.

Hauing paſſed ouer this Riuer, we ſet forward towards Moſul, a very ancient Towne in this Countrey, ſixe dayes iourney from Valdac; and ſo pitched on the bankes of the Riuer Tygris. Here in theſe Plaines of Aſſyria, and on the bankes of Tygris, and in the Region of Eden, was Niniue built by Nimrod, but finiſhed by Ninus. It is agreed by all profane Writers, and confirmed by the Scriptures, that this Citie exceeded all other Cities in circuit, and anſwerable magnificence. For it ſeemes by the ruinous foundation (which I throughly viewed) that it was built with foure ſides, but not equall or ſquare; for the two longer ſides had each of them (as we gheſſe) an hundred and fiftie furlongs; the two ſhorter ſides, ninetie furlongs, which amounteth to foure hundred and eightie furlongs of ground, which makes threeſcore miles, accounting eight furlongs to an Italian mile. The walls whereof were an hundred foot vpright, and had ſuch a breadth, as three Chariots might paſſe on the rampire in Front: theſe walls were garniſhed with a thouſand and fiue hundred Towers, which gaue exceeding beautie to the reſt, and a Strength no leſſe admirable for the nature of thoſe times. Now it is deſtroyed (as God foretold it ſhould bee by the Chaldæans) being nothing elſe, then a ſepulture of her ſelfe, a little Towne of ſmall trade, where the Patriarch of the Neſtorians keepes his ſeat, at the deuotion of the Turkes. Sundry times had wee conference with this Patriarch: and among many other ſpeeches which paſt from him, he wiſhed vs, before we departed, to ſee the Iland of Eden, but twelue miles vp the Riuer, which hee affirmed, was vndoubtedly a part of Paradiſe.

The deſcription of Niniue.
The magnificent building of Niniue, by Ninus.

This Iland lies in the heart of the Riuer Tygris, and is (as we could gheſſe) in circuit ten Engliſh miles, and was ſometimes walled round about with a wall of ſtrong defence, as appeares by the ruinous foundation of Bricke which there remayneth. And howſoeuer the beautifull Land of Eden is now forgotten in theſe parts, with thoſe flouriſhing Countries of Meſopotamia, Aſſyria, Babylonia, and Chaldæa, being all ſwallowed vp into meere Barbariſme, yet this Iland ſtill retaynes the name of the Ile of Eden.

The deſcription of the Iland of Eden.
Of Paradiſe, ſee my *Pilg.l.*1.*c.*3.
This Author alſo had here inſerted a diſcourſe thereof, here omitted. In ſtead whereof, I haue preſented you with the Map.

From the Iland of Eden wee returned to Moſul, and ſtayed there eight dayes, and ſo went downe the Riuer Tygris to Bagdat, or New Babylon, being carried not on Boat, as downe the Riuer Euphrates, but vpon certaine Zatarres or Rafts, borne vpon Goats skins blowne full of wind like Bladders. Which Rafts they ſell at Bagdat for fire, and carrie their skins againe home vpon Aſſes by Land, to make other Voyages downe the ſaid Riuer.

By this Riuer the Citie Bagdat is very aboundantly furniſhed with all kind of prouiſion, both of Corne, Fleſh, Fowle, Fiſh, and Veniſon of all ſorts; beſides great ſtore of Fruit, but eſpecially of Dates, and that very cheape. This Citie by ſome is called, New Babylon, and may well be, becauſe it did riſe out of the ruines of old Babylon, not farre diſtant, being nothing ſo great, nor ſo faire: for it contaynes in circuit but three Engliſh miles; and is built but of Bricke dried in the Sunne: their houſes alſo being flat roofed and low. They haue no raine for eight moneths together, nor almoſt any cloud in the Skie night nor day. Their Winter is in Nouember, December, Ianuarie, and Februarie, which moneth are neuertheleſſe as warme as our Summer in England. In a word, this Towne was once a place of great trade and profit, by reaſon of the huge Carauans, which were wont to come from Perſia, and Balſara: but ſince the Portugals, Engliſhmen, and Hollanders, haue by their traffique into the Eaſt Indies, cut off almoſt all the trade of Marchandize into the Gulfs of Arabia, and Perſia, both Grand Cairo in Egypt, and Bagdat in Aſſyria, are not now of that benefit, as they haue beene, either to the Merchant, or Great Turke; his Tributes both in Egypt, and his Cuſtomes in this place being much hindred thereby. After it continued vnder the Tartar and Perſian gouernement, vntill it was taken by Solyman the Turkiſh Emperour, for Tamas the Perſian King, who (after it was yeelded vnto him) according to an old ſuperſtitious manner, receiued at the hands of a poore Caliph, the Enſignes and Ornaments of the Kings of Aſſyria: ſo this Citie, with the great Countries of Aſſyria, and Meſopotamia, ſometimes famous Kingdomes of themſelues, and lately part of the Perſian Kingdome, fell into the hands of the Great Turke, in the yeere 1534. and ſo haue continued euer ſince, Prouinces of the Turkiſh Empire.

Cleere Skie.

Bagdat yeelded vnto the Turks.

A Caliph is a man reuerenced of all Mahometan Princes, and hath an old priuiledge in the choice and confirmation of the Aſſyrian Kings and Sultans of Egypt.

Hauing ſtayed twentie dayes at Bagdat, wee put our ſelues into the companie of a Chiaus, who was bound from the Baſſa of Bagdat for Conſtantinople, being in number ſixteene perſons and no more, to trauell through a great part of Chaldæa, and the Deſart of Arabia. So ſoone as we were out of this Citie, we paſſed ouer the ſwift Riuer Tygris, on a great Bridge made with Boats, chayned together with two mightie Chaynes of Iron: and ſo entred into a part of Bagdat, on this ſide of the Riuer, like London and Southwarke, where we ſtayed foure dayes.

The Tower of Babel.

Two places of great antiquitie did wee throughly view in the Countrey: the one was, the ruines of the old Tower of Babel, (as the Inhabitants hold vnto this day) built by Nimrod, the Nephew of Cham, Noahs ſonne. And now at this day, that which remayneth is called, the remnant of the Tower of Babel: there ſtanding as much, as is a quarter of a mile in compaſſe, and as high as the ſtone-worke of Pauls Steeple in London. It was built of burnt Bricke cemented and ioyned with bituminous Mortar, to the end, that it ſhould not receiue any cleft in the ſame. The Brickes are three quarters of a yard in length, and a quarter in thickneſſe, and betweene euery courſe of Brickes, there lieth a courſe of Mats made of Canes and Palme-tree leaues, ſo freſh, as if they had beene layd within one yeere.

The deſcription of old Babylon.

The other place remarkable is, the ruines of old Babylon; becauſe it was the firſt Citie, which was built after the Floud. Some doe thinke, that the ruines of Nimrods Tower, is but the foundation of this Temple of Bell, and that therefore many Trauellers haue beene deceiued, who ſuppoſe that they haue ſeene a part of that Tower which Nimrod builded. But who can tell whether it be the one or the other? It may be, that confuſed Chaos which wee ſaw, was the ruines of both, the Temple of Bel being founded on that of Nimrod.

From the ruines of old Babylon wee ſet forwards to Aleppo; trauelling, for the moſt part, through the Deſart Arabia. Hauing ſpent three dayes and better, from the ruines of old Babylon, we came to a Towne, called Ait, inhabited onely with Arabians, but very ruinous. Neere vnto which Towne is a Valley of Pitch very maruellous to behold, and a thing almoſt incredible, wherein are many Springs, throwing out aboundantly a kind of blacke ſubſtance like vnto Tarre and Pitch, which ſerueth all the Countries thereabouts to make ſtaunch their Barkes and Boats; euery one of which Springs maketh a noiſe like a Smiths Forge, in puffing and blowing out the matter, which neuer ceaſeth night nor day, and the noyſe is heard a mile off, ſwallowing vp all weighty things that come vpon it. The Moores call it, The mouth of Hell.

The mouth of Hell.

Anna a Towne in Arabia.

Three daies ſpent we on this Deſart, and ſo arriued at Anna, a towne of three miles in length, but very narrow, inhabited altogether with Curdies, a moſt theeuiſh people. Here we ſtayed two daies, and could not be ſuffered to paſſe without a preſent to the Gouernor of this towne, which came to a Ducket a piece. Cloſe by this Towne runneth the Riuer Euphrates, with a very ſwift current, which doth maruellouſly fructiferate the Countrey round about, whereby wee prouided our ſelues of all neceſſaries fit for trauell through the reſt of the Deſart.

From this Towne we proceeded, and euery ſecond night, through the good diſcretion of our Guide, we pitched on the banke of the Riuer Euphrates, which much refreſhed our ſelues and wearied beaſts, beholding euery day, great Droues of wild beaſts, as wild Aſſes all white, Gaſels, Wolues, Leopards, Foxes, and Hares. And now to winde vp all, in paſſing from Babylon to Aleppo, they ordinarily with Camels ſpend fortie dayes, trauelling through this ſorry and barren Deſart, lying vnmanured, becauſe of the ſcarcitie of moyſture. Howbeit, we vſed not their ſeruice, by reaſon of the ſpeed which the Chiaus made for Conſtantinople, ſo that the trauell which the Carauan is fortie dayes about, we paſſed in eighteene dayes in much ſecuritie, and ſo in great ſafety, by the mercy of God, I arriued againe in Aleppo.

Of the Iewes and their Synagogues, Schooles, or Vniuerſities, and other his Obſeruations in Europe.

Beniamin the ſonne of Ionas, of approoued memorie hath ſaid: Firſt, departing from the Citie Cæſar Auguſta, according to the direction of the Riuer Iberus, I came to Tortoſa, and from thence I went to Tarracona, and ancient Citie built by the ſonnes of Enac, and the Grecians, the like excellencie of which building is found in no other Countries of Spaine; and the Citie it ſelfe bordereth vpon the Sea. But two dayes iourney from thence I entred into Barchinonia, in the which there is a ſacred Synagogue frequented by [a] wiſe and prudent men, and alſo adorned with noble men, among whom are, Maſter Seſeth, and Sealthiel, and Selomoth the ſonne of Abraham, the ſonne of Hbazzidai of happie memorie. And it is little, but a fine Citie, ſeated vpon the very Sea ſhoare, diuers Merchants from all Countries reſorting thither, being a famous Mart-towne for the Grecians, Piſanes, Genueſes, Sicilians, Egyptians, Alexandrians, and out of the Land of Iſrael, and all the borders thereof. But departing from thence one dayes iourney and an halfe, I came to Gerunda, where there is a little Synagogue of the Iewes. Three dayes iourney from thence, I went to Narbona, which Citie giueth Lawes to the reſt: for out of it, the Law goeth forth into all Countries; where, there are wiſe men, both great, and honourable, eſpecially Kalonymos the ſonne of the great and honourable Theodorus of good memorie, of the ſeed of Dauid [b] by true deſcent and genealogie, who hath Inheritances and Lands from the Princes of the Countries, fearing the force or violence of no man. Abraham alſo, principally, is Head of the aſſemblie, and Machir, and Iehuda, and others like vnto theſe, the Diſciples of Wiſe-men: and, there are almoſt three hundred Iewes therein at this day. Foure leagues from thence, I came vnto the Citie Bidraſch, in the which there is an Vniuerſitie [c] adorned with the Diſciples of Wiſe-men; whoſe Heads are, Selomoh Hbalpetha, and Ioſeph the ſonne of Nathanael of good memorie. But, trauelling two dayes iourney from thence, I went to Mons Tremulus, in times paſt, Peſſulanus, now called by the Inhabitants, Mompelier; a Citie conuenient for trafficke and merchandizing, two leagues diſtant from the Sea, frequented by diuers Nations for the entercourſe of merchandiſe, Idumæans, and Iſmaelites of Algarba, Longobardes, and from the Kingdome of great Rome, and out of all the Land of Egypt and Iſrael, from all the Countrey of France, Spaine, and England, and of all the languages of the Nations are there found, by meanes of the Genueſes and Piſani. The Schollers alſo of the Wiſe-men are there very famous in this Age, eſpecially Reuben the ſonne of Theodorus, and Nathan the ſonne of Zacharias, and the chiefe of all, Semuel, and Selamias, and Mardochæus, who is now dead. Some among them are very rich, and liberall vnto the poore; who helpe all that come vnto them.

The famouſneſſe of Mons Paſſulanus.

Foure leagues from thence ſtandeth Lunel, a famous Vniuerſitie of ſuch as applie themſelues to the ſtudie of the Law of the Iſraelites day and night; where that great Maſter Meſſulam of happie memorie was then, with fiue wiſe and rich ſonnes, Ioſeph, Iſaac, Iacob, and Aharon, and Aſſer the Phariſie, who being ſeparated from the eyes of the world, ſtudieth day and night, faſting, and perpetually abſtayning from the eating of Fleſh; and hee is greatly conuerſant in the opinions and traditions of the ancient, and great Moſes Niſus, and old Samuel, and Salomo the Prieſt, and Maſter Iudas the Phyſician, the ſonne of Thebon a Spaniard: and there is a Synagogue, there, of three hundred Iewes, almoſt: but it is two miles diſtant from the Sea. Foure leagues from thence ſtandeth Pothiaquiers, a great Caſtle, in the which are fortie Iewes almoſt, and a great Conſiſtorie with Abraham the ſonne of Dauid of happie fame, a friendly man, and very learned, both in diſciplinary, and alſo in the ſacred bookes, vnto whom very many reſort from remote places for the learning of the Law, and being moſt curteouſly entertayned in his houſe, are taught: and if any want abilitie to defray their charges, hee liberally beſtowed his owne money for all vſes; for he is very rich. There are alſo other learned men there, as Ioſeph the ſonne of Menahhem, and Benbeneſeth, and Beniamin, and Abraham, and Iſaac the ſonne of Moſes of commendable memorie. About foure leagues from thence is Nogheres the Towne, called, The Burrough of Saint Ægidius, where there is an Vniuerſitie of Iewes, conſiſting almoſt of an hundred Wiſe-men, the chiefe whereof are, Iſaac the ſonne of Iacob, and Abraham the ſonne of Iudas, and Eliezer, and Iſaac, and Moſes, and Iacob the ſonne of the great Maſter Leui of excellent memorie: this Towne is three miles diſtant from the Sea, and is ſituated neere vnto a great Riuer, called Rhodano, which runneth through all that Countrey, which is called, Prouincia: but there, is the moſt noble and honourable Abba the ſonne of Iſaac of approoued memorie, made Gouernor by the principall Lord. From thence, after I had trauelled foure leagues, I came to the Citie Arelatum, where there are almoſt two hundred Iſraelites, among whom the chiefe are, Moſes, Tobias, and Iſaias, and Selomoh, and honourable Nathan, and Maſter Abba Meri a famous man. But three dayes iourney from thence I was brought to Maſſilia, a Citie renowmed for excellent and wiſe men, famous for two Colledges of three hundred Iewes almoſt. One of the Colledges lyeth neer vnto the Sea ſhore below, aboue which the other ſtandeth, as it were a certaine Tower, ſeated in an higher place : and there is a great Conſiſtorie * among them adorned with the Diſciples of Wiſemen, with Simon the Sonne of Antolius, and his Brother Iacob and Lebaarus, who are accounted the chiefe in the higher Colledge: but in the lower, rich Iacob Pirpſienus, and Abraham, and Mair, and his Son-in-law Iſaac, and another Mair. And this Citie, for Trade of Merchandize, is very famous on the Sea ſhoare, from whence taking ſhip, in foure dayes ſayling you come to Genua, a Citie ſtanding on the Sea-ſide, where there were two Iewes who were Brethren, Samuel the Sonne of Calaam, and his Brother of Sephta a Citie of Africa, good men. But the Citie is compaſſed with walls, ſubiect to no King; but gouerned by a Magiſtrate, who is ordayned by the will and conſent of the Citizen.

At Piſa were Moſes, and Hhaym, and Ioſeph with almoſt twentie Iewes. The Citie it ſelfe is not fortified with walls ; and is foure miles diſtant from the Sea, whereunto they goe in Veſſels by the Riuer which runneth through the middeſt of the Countrey it ſelfe, and entreth into the Citie. Foure leagues from thence ſtandeth Luca, a great Citie, where I found almoſt fortie Iewes ; and the principall Maſters amongſt them, Dauid, Samuel, and Iacob, learned men. It is ſixe dayes Iourney from thence to Rome, ſometimes a very great Citie, and head of the Empire of the Nations. And there were almoſt two hundred Iewes there, honeſt men, paying Tribute to no mortall man; among which, ſome are the Seruants of Alexander the Pope, the Supreme Prelate of all the Chriſtian Religion. And there were very learned men there, and eſpecially Dauid Magnus, and Iebiel the Popes Seruant, an excellent yong man, and wiſe, often frequenting his houſe, as gouernour of the houſe, and all the Domeſticall Affaires. And he is the Nephew of Nathan, the Author of the Booke and Commentaries Aaruch: Ioab alſo the Sonne of Great Selomon, and Menahem are heads of the Aſſembly, and Iebiel dwelling beyond Tiber, and Beniamen the Sonne of Sabthi, of good memory. But the Citie of Rome it ſelfe is diuided into two parts, betweene which the Riuer Tiber runneth. And in the former part ſtandeth a very great Temple, called the Romane Capitoll, at the which the houſe of Great Iulius Caſar ſtood. Moreouer, there are huge Buildings, and admirable workes, beyond other which may bee found in the whole World. But the Citie it ſelfe, if you ioyne the inhabited part with that which is razed, and without Inhabitant, contayneth the ſpace of foure and twentie miles. And in it are eightie Palaces of eightie Kings, from the Reigne of Tarquinius vntill the Reigne of Pipin the Father of that Charles who firſt vanquiſhed Spaine, poſſeſſed by the Iſmaelites. But the Palace of Titus is without Rome; who was not receiued by the three hundred Senators, becauſe that in the ſiege of Hieruſalem hee had ſpent three yeares, that is to ſay, one yeere beyond his determined time : and there is alſo part of a Church, to wit, of the Palace of Veſpaſian, of a very great and moſt firme building. Beſides, there is the Palace of King Malgalbinus, contayning three hundred and ſixtie ſmall Palaces according to the number of the dayes of the yeare, and the compaſſe thereof, as farre as we might gather by the ruines, contayneth three miles. But in times paſt a battaile was fought in that Palace, wherein aboue an hundred thouſand men in number were ſlaine; whoſe bones gathered together on a heape, are to be ſeene euen vntill this day. And the Emperour hath ingrauen the reſemblance of that fight on all the ſides of the houſes in Marble ſtone, with innumerable oppoſite factions of men, and the repreſentations of Horſes, Armes, and warlike furniture, that he might leaue a wonderfull Monument of the ancient Warres vnto Poſteritie. In the ſame place a rew of building is found lower then the ground of the Earth, where the Emperour and his Wife Auguſta are found, orderly ſeated in Chaires of Eſtate, and almoſt an hundred other men Seruants of the Empire, all embalmed by the arte of the Apothecarie, euen vntill this day.

And in a Church, two Brazen Pillars are found, the worke of King Salomon, with that Inſcription ingrauen in Hebrew on either ſide, Salomon the Sonne of Dauid. There is alſo a Vault, wherein Titus is reported to haue hidden the Veſſels of the Sanctuary brought from Hieruſalem. There is the repreſentation of an Horſe made of Braſſe, gilded. Departing from Rome, in two dayes Iourney I came to Capua, ſometimes great, built, as they ſay, by King Capis, a goodly Citie, yet to be diſliked for the waters, and therefore very vnwholſome for children eſpecially : wherein there were almoſt three hundred Iewes, and ſome among them very wiſe, and of great renowme : but, the chiefe were Lampaſſus and Samuel, Brethren, and famous Zaken, and Dauid a renowned man, whom ſome call our Prince. From thence I went to Puteoli, ſometimes called Surrentum, a great Citie, which Sinan Hadar-Ghezer built, being put to flight through feare of King Dauid, and brought into that place : but by reaſon of the inundation of the Sea, his people with two parts of the Citie were ouer-whelmed and drowned : and at this day, the Towers, and ſeats of Iudgement are ſeene drowned in the waters, which ſometimes, were in the middeſt of the Citie. There are alſo naturall bathes with moſt medicinable waters, which are frequented by diuers ſicke perſons with profitable vſe, eſpecially by the Longobardes, who in the Summer time come thither to ſeeke remedie. Departing from thence, a way of fifteene miles in length is made vnder the Mountaynes; and it is a worke made by Romulus the firſt King of the Romanes, through feare * of Dauid the King of Iſrael, and Ioab the chiefe Captaine of Dauids Armie. Hee made the like worke alſo in the Mountaynes, and vnder the Mountaynes, where Naples now ſtandeth, a famous and moſt ſtrongly fortified Citie, ſituated on the Sea, built by the Gracians. Fiue hundred Iewes almoſt dwelt there, among whom, the moſt renowmed, are Ezechias, and Salum, and Elias the Prieſt, and Iſaac of the Mountayne Hor. One dayes Iourney from thence I was brought to Salernum, a Citie famous for the Schooles of the Phyſicians, in the which, there were almoſt ſixe hundred Iewes, but among theſe, Iudas the Sonne of Iſaac, and Melchiſedeck a great man of the Citie Sipontum, and Salom the Prieſt, and Elias the Greeke, and Abraham Narbonenſis, and Thimon, were famous for their Learning. The Citie it ſelfe on the ſide of the Continent, is fortified with wals, on the other ſide it lyeth vpon the Sea-ſhoare, and hath an exceeding ſtrong Tower vpon the top of an Hill.

Halfe a dayes Iourney from thence is Malfi, in the which were twentie Iewes almoſt, and the chiefe among theſe were Hbananeel the Phiſician, and Elizeus, and honourable Abuel. All the Inhabitants of this Countrey apply themſelues to negotiation and Merchandize, and neglecting the care of ſowing the ground, liue vpon bought Corne, becauſe they dwell in exceeding high Mountaynes on the very tops of the Rockes: yet they abound with other Fruits, Vineyards, places where Oliues grow, Gardens, and Orchards, inuincible of all other men by reaſon of the ſituation of the place. But Beneuentum is one dayes Iourney diſtant from thence, a great Citie, partly ſeated vpon the Sea-ſhoare, and partly vpon a Mountayne: and there is an Vniuerſitie * there, conſiſting almoſt of two hundred Iewes, and the chiefe of theſe, are Colonymus, and Zerah, and Abraham, famous men. Two dayes Iourney from thence is Malchi, in the Countrey of Apulia, ſo called of Pul, that is to ſay, Beanes; there were almoſt two hundred Iewes; the chiefe whereof were Abbimaghats, and Nathan, and Saddoq. But, from thence in one dayes Iourney only I came to Aſculum, where I found about fortie Iewes, and among them, the principall, Contilus, and Tſemahh his Sonne-in-law, and Ioſeph. From thence two dayes Iourney to Tarnaa, ſituated vpon the Sea-ſhoare, in which place, they who go to Hieruſalem for the cauſe of Religion, vſe to aſſemble together, as into a Hauen moſt commodious for that Nauigation. And there was an Vniuerſitie there, conſiſting of two hundred Iſraelites or thereabouts, and the moſt renowmed among them, were Elias, and Nathan the Preacher, and Iacob: the Citie it ſelfe is great and fine. One dayes Iourney from thence ſtandeth Miquoles deuar, which great Citie was deſtroyed by Gulielmus King of Sicilia: and it is not only without Iſraelites, but alſo deſtitute of the people of their owne Nation, and vtterly waſted. From thence in halfe a dayes Iourney I came to Tarentum, which is the beginning of the Iuriſdiction of Calabria, inhabited by the Gracians; a great Citie, where are three hundred Iewes almoſt, and ſome of them learned, eſpecially Maali, and Nathan, and Iſrael. From hence, in one dayes Iourney I went to Baruedis, built vpon the Sea ſhoare, where are ten Iewes Dyers of Wooll. From whence Ornedo is two dayes Iourney diſtant, ſeated vpon the Sea, appertayning to the Counrey of the Gracians, and there are about fiue hundred Iewes there, the chiefe whereof were Menahem, Caleb, Mair, and Maali. Taking ſhip from thence, in two dayes I was brought to Ocropos, where there was one Iew only, named Ioſeph; and hitherto extendeth the Kingdome of Sicilia.

From thence in two daies iourney I came to Achilon, where there were about ten Iewes, the chiefe whereof is Sabthi. Halfe a daies iourney from hence ſtandeth Natolicon, ſeated in the entrance of the Sea. From hence, in one dayes iourney by Sea, I came to Patra the Citie of Antipater, one of the foure Kings of the Gracians, among whom the Kingdome of deceaſed Alexander was diuided: and there, ancient great buildings are to bee ſeene, in the which there were almoſt fiftie Iewes, and among them, the chiefe were Iſaac, Iacob, and Samuel. From thence, halfe a dayes iourney by Sea, I came to Lepantum, where, about an hundred Iewes dwell neere vnto the Sea, the principall whereof are Gaſarias, and Salum, and Abraham. From thence, in one dayes iourney and an halfe, I went to Cores, where, almoſt two hundred Iewes dwell, hauing in the Mountayne Paros poſſeſſions of their owne, which they inhabit: and among them the chiefe are Selomoh, Hbaijm, and Iedaia. From thence in three dayes iourney, I came to Corinth, and found three hundred Iewes, the principall whereof are Leo, Iacob, and Ezekias. Three dayes iourney from thence, I came to Thebes that great Citie, where, there are two thouſand Iewes, the moſt excellent workemen of Purple and Scarlet, in the Countries of Gracia, among whom there are moſt learned men, and very skilfull in the repetitions, and diſciplines, the

From this Citie to Biſſina, is one whole dayes iourney, where are an hundred Iewes almoſt, and great Sabthi, and Selomoh, and Iaacob haue the chiefe authoritie among them. From hence in two dayes by Sea, I arriued at Seleuca, built by Seleucus, one of thoſe foure Kings who aroſe after Alexander: the Citie it ſelfe is very great, in the which there are about fiue hundred Iewes, and the chiefe of theſe is Semuel made Gouernour * ouer his Nation, by the King of the Citie, together with his ſonnes the Diſciples of wiſe men, and Sabthai his ſonne in Law, and Elias, and Michael: and thoſe Iewes apply themſelues to Handy-crafts whereon they liue. From thence, in two dayes I came to Mitrici, where were almoſt twentie Iewes, among whom, the principall were Iſaias, Machir, and Eliab. From thence we trauelled three dayes iourney to Aabidon, ſeated vpon the ſea ſhoare: and trauelling fiue dayes iourney among the Mountaines, I came to Conſtantina, an exceeding great Citie, and the head of the Kingdome of Iauan, whom they call Greekes, the principall ſeate of the Emperour Emanuel, whoſe command twelue Kings obey: for euery one whereof there are ſeuerall Palaces at Conſtantinople, and Towers, and Countries; and vnto theſe the whole land is ſubiect. The principall and chiefeſt is called the great Aphrippos; the ſecond, Miga Demaſtocos; the third, Rominos; the fourth, Makdacos; the fifth, Alchaſom Magli: the reſt haue names like vnto theſe. The compaſſe of the Citie of Conſtantinople containeth eighteene miles, the halfe part whereof ſtandeth vpon the Sea, but the other halfe on the Continent: and it is ſeated vpon two armes of the Sea, or exceeding great mouthes of Riuers, * into one of the which, the waters flow from out of Ruſſia, but into the other from Spaine. And it is frequented by many Factors, from the Prouinces and Countries of Babylon, Senaar, Media, Perſia, and all the Kingdomes of the Land of Ægypt, and Canaan, and the Kingdomes of Ruſſia, Vngaria, and Pſianki, Buria, Longobardia, and Spaine. The Citie it ſelfe is common * and without difference, vnto the which Merchants reſort out of all Countries, trauelling both by Sea and Land: it hath none equall with it in the World, except Bagdat, that mightie Citie of the Iſmaelites. Heere is the moſt famous Temple of Saint Sophia: and the Patriarch of the Græcians dwelleth heere: nor doe they agree with the Doctrine of the Pope of Rome. There are other Temples alſo, as many in number, as the dayes of the yeare. But it hath that exceeding great Treaſure, almoſt beyond all eſtimation, by the Offerings and Riches yeerely brought from diuers Countries, Ilands, Caſtles, Forts, and places, ſo that no Temple of the whole World may bee compared with the Riches thereof. And in the middeſt of the Temple there are Pillars of Gold, and Siluer; huge Candleſtickes, Lanthornes, Lampes, and other Ornaments of Gold and Siluer, more then any man is able to reckon.

Next adioyning to the walls of the Temple, there is a place built for Princely Paſtimes, called Hippodromus, where, yeerely vpon the birth day of Ieſus of Nazareth, great Spectacles are publikely preſented; and there, all ſorts of men with all manner of Habits of the whole World, are ſhewed before the King and Qveene. Lions alſo, and Beares, Leopards, and wild Aſſes are brought forth into the place where theſe Spectacles are to bee ſeene, that they might fight together: and Birds alſo after the ſame manner: and I ſuppoſe that in no Countrey of the World ſuch Princely Sports are to be ſeene. But ſurely King Emanuel, beſides that Palace left him by his Anceſtors, hath built him another vpon the Sea ſhoare, which they call Bilberna: the Pillars, and walls whereof, he hath ouer-layed with beaten Gold and Siluer; whereon hee hath ingrauen all the Warres made by him and his Anceſtors. And hee hath prepared a Throne there for himſelfe, of Gold and Precious Stones: and hath adorned it with a Golden Crowne hanging on high by Golden Chaines; the compaſſe whereof is equall with the Throne it ſelfe, beſet with Precious Stones and Pearles, the price whereof no man is able to value, of ſo great a luſtre, that putting no Torch vnto them, they ſhine and may be ſeene in the night. Moreouer, there are other innumerable things in the ſame place, and incredible to bee told; and Tributes are yeerely brought into that Palace, wherewith the Towers are filled with Scarlet and Purple Garments and Gold; ſo that the like example of building and riches, can no where elſe bee found in the World. And it is affirmed that the Reuenue only of the Citie it ſelfe, gathered of the Markets, Hauen, and Tribute of Merchants, amounteth to twentie thouſand Crownes a day. Furthermore, the Grecians themſelues, Inhabitants of the Countrey, are exceeding rich in Gold and Precious Stones, and are attyred with moſt ſumptuous Apparell, their Garments beeing made of Crimſon, intermingled with Gold, or embroydered with Needle-worke, and are all carryed vpon Horſes much like vnto the Children of Kings. The Countrey it ſelfe being very large, aboundeth with all ſorts of Fruits, and hath alſo great plentie of Corne, Fleſh, and Wine; nor the like Riches in the whole World are to be found. They are alſo learned, and skilfull in the Diſcipline of the Gracians, and giuing themſelues wholly to pleaſure, they eate and drinke euery one vnder their Vine, and vnder their Figge-tree: and of all Tongues of the Nations, which they call Barbarians, they hyre Souldiers to fight with the Soldan King of the Children of Thogarma, who are commonly called Turkes, becauſe they themſelues through idleneſſe, and delights are made vnapt and vnmanly for the Warres, and ſeemed vnto mee very like vnto women through a certaine impotencie of delights.

But no Iewes dwell within the Citie, for they are excluded from them by an arme of waters, and being incloſed betweene that and another arme of the Sea of Sophia, they are not ſo much as permitted to come into the Citie but by Boate, and that for the cauſe of Traffique and Commerce. And there are about two thouſand Iewes, who are aſſembled with the Maſters, that is, the Diſciples of Wiſemen, among whom, Abtalion the Great, and Abdias, and Aaron Cuſpus, and Ioſeph Sarginus, and Eliakim the Gouernour, haue the chiefe authoritie: certaine of them are Artificers of Silken Garments, but very many are Merchants, and they very rich. No Iew is there permitted to bee carryed on Horſe-backe, except Selomon the Egyptian, the Kings Phyſician, through whoſe ſeruice the Iewes are comforted, and eaſe their captiuitie, which they feele to be grieuous.

For all the Iewes are very much hated of the Gracians, without any difference of the good and euill; by reaſon of the Tanners, who while they dreſſe skinnes, powre out the filthy water into the Streets before their owne doores: and therefore they are all oppreſſed together with a grieuous yoke, and are beaten in the Streets, and violently compelled to ſerue. But the Iewes themſelues are rich, as I haue ſaid, and good men, and mercifull, and obſeruers of the Commandements, who patiently endure the miſery of Captiuitie. But, from hence, after two dayes iourney ſtandeth Iſmos, in the which almoſt, three hundred Iewes dwell: among whome Semarias, Ghobadias, and Ioel, haue the preeminence: and very many Aſſemblies of the Iſraelites meete together there. From thence in three dayes ſayling I arriued at Rhodus, where I found almoſt foure hundred Iewes:

and the principall of theſe Aba, Hananeel and Eliam Maſters. Foure daies iourney from thence is Dophros diſtant, where there is an aſſembly of Iewes, together with Maſters. Moreouer, there are certaine hereticall Iewes there, * Cyprians, and Epicurians, whom the Iſraelites euery where abhorre. But theſe, profane the euening of the Sabbath, and obſerue the euening of the firſt day.

Dophros.

* Perhaps theſe were Coraim, or Scripture Iewes, hated for hating Traditions.

Corkos is two dayes iourney diſtant from thence, which is the beginning of the Land of Edom, of that which is called Armenia. And it is the beginning of the Dominion of Turus, Lord of the Mountaines of the King of Armenia, whoſe iuriſdiction appertaineth to the Metropolitan Citie Hbadochia; and extendeth euen vnto the Countrey of the Children of Thogarma, whom they call Turkes. Malmiſtras is two daies iourney diſtant from thence, which was ſometimes called Tharſis, ſeated vpon the Sea. And hitherto reacheth the Kingdome of the children of Ianan, who are called Grecians. Two daies iourney from thence, ſtandeth great Antiochia, nigh vnto the Riuer Per, ſeated in the Valley Iaboq, which Riuer runneth downe from the Mountaine Libanus, in the Countrey of Emath. King Antiochus built this Citie, nigh vnto the which ſtandeth a very high Mountaine, incloſed alſo with the wall of the Citie. And in the top of the Mountaine there is a Fountaine, whereof a certain man hath the charge, who through hollow Trunkes of Timber, diſtributeth the water by pipes vnder ground, conueighed into the Citie houſes of the Nobilitie. But on the other ſide, right ouer againſt the Mountaine, the Citie is compaſſed with the Channell of the Riuer. And it is a moſt ſtrong and well fortified Citie, pertaining to the Dominion of them that differ from our Faith.

But there are certaine Iſraelites there Artificers in Glaſſe, the chiefe whereof are Mardochæus and Hhaim, and Iſmael, Maſters. Two daies iourney from hence, I went to Liga, in times paſt called Laodicea, where are almoſt two hundred Iewes, and the chiefe of all are Hbaia and Ioſeph. Two daies iourney from thence to Gebal, the ſame is Baghalgad, vnder the Mountaine Libanus: and it lyeth next vnto that Nation which they cal Hbaſſiſſin, who follow not the doctrine of the Iſmaelites, but of a certaine man whom they ſuppoſe to be a Prophet: whoſe word they all obey, whether vnto death, or vnto life. And they call him Hheich al Hbaſſiſſin: and he is their Senator, at whoſe command all the men of the Mountaines come in and goe forth. His ſeat is in the Citie, called Karmos, which was the beginning of the Countrey, called in former times Sehon: and they haue a Religion among them, according to the doctrine of their old man. And in euery place they are a terrour vnto all; becauſe they kill euen Kings themſelues, by putting them vnder the ſawe: and their Dominion extendeth eight dayes iourney. They make warre with the Chriſtians, thoſe that are commonly called Frankes, and with the King of Tripolis, which ſelfe-ſame is Trabelos of the Countrey of Saam. But, it happened not long time ſince, that the Countrey of Tripolis being ſhaken with an Earth-quake, many, both of the Gentiles, and alſo of the Iewes were ouer-whelmed, and buried in the ruines of walls and houſes; and at the ſame time alſo, aboue twentie thouſand men periſhed in all the Land of Iſrael. From hence Gebal is one dayes iourney diſtant, that other, which was the bound of the children of Amon; where there are almoſt an hundred and twentie Iewes. And it is belonging to the Iuriſdiction of the Ginotines, whoſe Prince is called Gilianus Enbirena: and the place of the ancient Temple of the children of Amon, is found there, and in it the Idoll of the children of Amon, ſitting vpon a ſeate, called a Throne, and the Image is of ſtone, ouer-layed with Gold; but on either ſide two Images of women, alſo ſitting and before it ſtandeth an Altar, on the which, Sacrifices and Perfumes were made. But the chiefe and principall men of the Iewes, who dwell here, are Mair, Iaacob, and Sencha. And the Citie ſtandeth nigh vnto the Sea ſhoare, which is in the Countrey of the Iſraelites. From thence, in two dayes iourney I came to Beritus, ſometimes called Beeroth, where were almoſt fiftie Iewes, Salomon, and Ghobadia, and Ioſeph beeing the chiefe. Trauelling one dayes iourney from hence to Siyada, called Sidon in former times, a great Citie, where were twentie Iewes: diſtant from whence there is a certaine Nation which maketh warre with the Sidonians, the name of that Nation, in their owne Language, is Dogzyin, called Pagans by others, being of no Religion or Sect: they dwell in the Mountaynes, in the Caues and Holes of the Rockes, being ſubiect to no King or Prince; but lead their liues wildly, liuing among the higheſt Mountaynes and ſteepeſt Rockes; their Countrey extending the length of three dayes iourney, euen vnto the Mountayne Hermon. And they are infamous through their Inceſts; for the Fathers marry with the Daughters. But at a yearely Feſtiuall day which they ſolemnely hold, aſwell the men as the women, all meete together at the common Banquet, and there change Wiues each with other: and they ſay, that the ſoule, as ſoone as it happeneth to depart out of the bodie of a good man, goeth into the bodie of an Infant borne the very ſelfe-ſame houre: but departing out of the bodie of an euill man, that it goeth into the bodie of a Dogge, or into another beaſt. And ſo they vnderſtand, to wit, as they liue. But there are no Iewes among them, yet ſometimes Artificers and Dyers of clothes come vnto them, to exerciſe their Art and Merchandize, and depart againe: and the Iewes are courteouſly and louingly entertayned by them. Moreouer, this Nation is very ſwift, and moſt apt to runne thorow the Mountaynes and hils, inuincible of other mortall men. But one dayes iourney diſtant from Sidon, is new Tyrus, a very fine Citie,

Nor doe I thinke, any Hauen in the World, to bee found like vnto this. But on the top of the ridge of the Mountayne there remayneth the ſigne of the Altar broken downe and burned in the dayes of Achab, whereof notable mention is made in the Hiſtorie of Elias. And the place of that Altar is Circular, beeing almoſt foure Cubits ouer, in the Diameter; vnder the Mountayne it ſelfe, on the ſide thereof, the Riuer Chiſon deſcendeth. Caphar-Nahhum is foure leagues diſtant from thence, retayning the ancient name, a very high place which exceedeth Carmel in proſpect.

Againe from hence, in halfe a dayes iourney I went to Sargoreg, which by the Ancient was called Luz, where there is one Iew only, and he a Dyer of Woolles. Trauelling one dayes iourney from thence, I came to Sebaſte, which ſelfe-ſame Citie is Samaria, wherein the Palace of Achab the King of Iſrael is yet diſcerned. But it hath beene a very ſtrong and well fortified Citie, ſeated on a Mountayne, delightfull through the Fountaynes, and Riuers of Water, Gardens, Orchards, Vineyards, and places where Oliues grow: and hath no Iew inhabiting. Two leagues diſtant from hence is Nebilae, in time paſt called Sichem, in the Mountayne of Ephraim; where no Iewes are: and the Citie lyeth in a deepe Valley betweene the Mountaynes Gerezim and Ebal, or Hebal, in which there are about an hundred Cuthai, Obſeruers only of the Law of Moſes alone (theſe, as I ſaid, they call Samaritanes.) But they haue Prieſts, of the Poſteritie of Aaron, the Prieſt reſting in peace, who intermarry with none other, but with the women or men of their owne Family, that they may preſerue their Race and Kindred without mixture: and there they are commonly called Aharonites: notwithſtanding they are Miniſters and Prieſts of the Law of thoſe Samaritanes. But they offer Sacrifices, and burne burnt Offerings in the Synagogue which they haue in the Mountayne Garizim, alleaging that which is written in the Law. And thou ſhalt giue a bleſſing vpon Mount Garizim. But they ſay, that it is the very houſe of the Sanctuary: and they lay the burnt Offering in the Feaſt of Eaſter, and other Feſtiuall dayes vpon the Altar, built in the Mountayne Garizim, of the ſtones taken out of Iordan by the Children of Iſrael, and they vaunt that they are of the Tribe of Ephraim. Among them is the Sepulcher of Ioſeph the Iuſt, the Sonne of Iacob our Father, reſting in peace, as hath beene ſaid. And the bones of Ioſeph carryed out of Egypt by the Children of Iſrael, are buried in Sichem. But they want three Letters ע. ח. ה. H E, of the name of Abraham, Hheth, of the name of Iiſhhac, and Ghain, of the name of Iaghacob, in ſtead whereof they put Aleph, that is, ſpiritus tenuis. By this manifeſt token they are conuicted not to be of the Poſteritie and Seed of Iſrael, ſeeing they acknowledge the Law of Moſes, excepting theſe three Letters, which they know not. But they keepe themſelues from the defiling of the dead, and of bones, and alſo of the ſlaine, and of the Graue.

They haue alſo this cuſtome, to put off the garments which they daily weare, when they are to goe into the Synagogue, and to waſh their bodies with water, and put on other garments prouided onely for this vſe. And this is their daily cuſtome. But, the Mountaine Garizim is pleaſant with Fountaines, and Gardens: and contrarily, Ghebal is drie, full of Rockes and Stones, and betweene both, as wee haue ſaid, the Citie Siehem it ſelfe is ſeated. Foure leagues from thence is Mount Gilboagh, which the Chriſtians call Mount Gilboe, conſiſting of a moſt barren and dry ſoyle. From whence, after foure leagues, you come to the Valley of Aialon, which the Chriſtian Inhabitants of the Countrey call, Val de Luna; from whence, hauing trauelled the length of one league, I came vnto the Mountaine Moria, to Garaan, called the Towne of Dauid, a Citie in time paſt called, Gibghon or Gabaon; where no Iewes are. Hauing paſſed three leagues from thence, I entred into Hieruſalem, a little Citie, fortified with three walls, wherein there are many ſorts of men, Iacobites, Armenians, Grecians, and Gorgeri, or Georgij, and Franks, of all the Languages of the Gentiles. And there is an houſe prepared there, for the dying of Woolls and Cloaths, which the Iewes hyre euery yeere, of the Kings, vpon that condition, that they onely might exerciſe that Art. And there are Iewes dwelling in an angle of the Citie, vnder the Tower of Dauid, in which Tower, the walls of the old building are yet remayning, built by our Anceſtors, to the heighth of ten cubits, almoſt, from the very foundation. But that which remayneth beſide theſe, is the building of the Iſmaelites. And there is no building in the whole Citie, comparable with that Tower of Dauid in ſtrength. There are alſo two houſes there, called Hoſpitals, the Inhabitants whereof being Chriſtians are, called Hoſpitalers: and they are Horſe-men; out of whoſe two Colledges, foure hundred men, almoſt, goe forth furniſhed to the Battell: and in thoſe houſes, all ſicke perſons comming thither, are receiued, and cured, all plentie of neceſſarie things for the maintenance of life, as well to the ſicke, that are liuing, and recouering, as to the dead, for their funerall, being abundantly and ſufficiently miniſtred. But that ſecond houſe is called, The Hoſpitall of Salomon: for, it ſtandeth in the place of the Palace, ſometimes built by Salomon. Foure hundred of them therefore doe daily goe forth to the battell: and all theſe aſſociates are ſworne, and bound by an Oath, beſides many other more, who aſſemble thither, out of the Land of the Franckes and Italians: voluntary making a Vow, which, remayning there a yeere or two, they performe. Moreouer, there is a very great Temple there, which they call, The Sepulchre, the Sepulchre of Ieſus of Nazareth, for the viſiting whereof the Pilgrims aſſemble. Hieruſalem hath foure gates, the one is named, The Sleepe of Abraham; the other, The gate of Dauid; the third, The gate of Sion; and the fourth, The gate of Iehoſaphat. But this is before the holly Houſe, which ſometimes ſtood, in the which now, there is a Church called, The Temple of the Lord, ſituated in the very place of the ancient Sanctuarie: but the very Temple of the Lord, now ſo called, is a certaine huge and goodly Arch, built by Ghemar Ben Alchetab, now frequented by the Chriſtians, who haue no Image or Picture in that place, but onely reſort thither to pray.

Right ouer againſt this place there is a wall built, of the walls which were in the Sanctuarie, which they now call, The gate of Mercy: and vnto this gate, the Iewes come to pray, before the wall, in the Court. There alſo, I meane, at Hieruſalem, in the houſe which was Salomons, are the Stalls of Horſes ſeene, built by Salomon, a very ſtrong building, and conſiſting of very great ſtones: of which manner of building the like example is not to be ſeene in all the Land. The Fiſh-poole alſo is yet remayning, wherein the ancient killed their Sacrifices: and euery one of the Iewes write their name there in the wall. Going out at the gate of Iehoſaphat, they goe into the Deſart, called The Wilderneſſe of the people, in the which there is the Monument of the Hand (or Pillar of Abſalon, and the Sepulchre of Vzia the King, and a great Fountaine of the waters of Siloahh running into the Brooke Kedron: and nigh vnto the Fountaine, a great building from the dayes of our Anceſtors. But little ſtore of water is found in the Fountaine, and the greateſt part of men liuing at Hieruſalem, drinke raine-water, gathered in priuate Ciſternes. But, from the Valley of Iehoſaphat, vnto the Mountaine of Oliues, they continually aſcend: for nothing lieth betweene the Citie and that Mountaine, but this Valley. And from the Mountaine it ſelfe the Sodomiticall Sea is ſeene: but from that Sea vnto the heape of Salt, into the which Lots wife was turned, are two leagues. For that heape continueth ſtill, which, being diminiſhed by the flockes, ſometimes by licking, encreaſeth againe to the accuſtomed greatneſſe: from the Mountaine of Oliues alſo, all that plaine Countrey is ſeene, through which the Riuer Sitim runneth euen vnto the Mountaine Nebo.

Before Hieruſalem alſo, three houſes, as it were, of buriall are ſeene, wherein the Iſraelites were ſometimes buried, and the forme of the Graues is yet decent and conſpicuous, but it is daily diminiſhed by the Chriſtians, who digge vp the ſtones for the building of their priuate houſes. That ſpace and length of Ieruſalem is compaſſed with great Mountaines. But, in the Mountaine Sion, are the Sepulchres of the Familie of Dauid, and of thoſe Kings who aroſe after Dauid; but the place it ſelfe is commonly vnknowne. which I ſaid to be in the Mount Sion, fell downe, which when, at the commandement of the Patriarch, the Prieſt of the Temple determined to repaire; he appointed about twentie ſtones in number to be digged out of the ancient foundations of the walls of Mount Sion, for the repayring of the worke of the Temple. And among them, there were two men confederates, and friends; whereof the one, on a certaine day early in the morning brought the other home with him vnto a priuate Banquet, and after they had taken their breakfaſt together, when they came to their worke, being demanded by the Ouer-ſeer of the worke, why they came ſo late, they anſwered, that they would make amends for that houre with continued labour.

Iewiſh Fable or pia fraus of Abraham Pius.

In the meane ſpace, while all the reſt went to dinner, and while they performed that which they had promiſed, hauing taken away a certaine ſtone, and finding the mouth of a Caue, they ſaid one vnto the other: Let vs enter in, to ſee whether any Treaſure lye hidden heere. Going therefore in, they proceeded ſo long, vntill they came vnto a certaine Palace ſupported with Marble Pillars, ouer-layed with Gold and Siluer, before which, there was a Table, and thereupon a Scepter, and a golden Crowne: and this was the Sepulchre of Dauid the King of Iſrael, on whoſe left hand was the Sepulchre of Salomon, with the like gorgeous adorning, and many other, of the other Kings of Iuda of the Family of Dauid, who had beene buried there: and there were Cheſts locked vp, but what they contayned, is yet to men vnknowne. But, when thoſe men determined to enter into the Palace, being ſtrucken with the blaſt of a whirle-wind, they fell downe dead vpon the Earth out of the mouth of the Caue. And they lay in the ſame place vntill the euening: when being raiſed againe with another blaſt, they heard a voice like vnto the voice of a man, ſaying vnto them: Ariſe, and goe forth of this place. Wherevpon being much moued and ſtricken with an exceeding great feare, they went forth trembling, and reported the whole matter to the Patriarch, which, calling vnto Abraham ſirnamed Pius, a Conſtantinopolitan Phariſay liuing at Hieruſalem, he cauſed to be declared by the ſame two men, who being demanded what he thought, he ſaid, that it was the place of the Sepulchres of the houſe of Dauid, appointed for the Kings of Iuda. But, the next day after, both thoſe men lying in their beds, were found grieuouſly ſicke at home through feare, who ſaid, that they would neuer, vpon any conditions, enter in thither againe, affirming, that it was vtterly vnlawfull for any man to deſire to goe thether, where God forbade him. Wherefore, by the commandement of the Patriarch, the place was ſhut vp, and concealed from the eyes of men vntill this day, by the labour of men: but Abraham Pius, of whom I haue ſpoken, declared the whole matter vnto mee.

Bethlehem.
The Sepulcher of Rachel.

Bethlehem Iuda is two leagues diſtant from thence, next vnto which, within halfe a mile, almoſt, there is the Sepulchre of Rachel, in a place where two wayes meete: and the Graue is made with twelue ſtones, according to the number of the Sonnes of Iacob: and ouer the Tombe there is an Arch ſupported by foure Pillars. Moreouer, the ſtones of the Tombe are ingrauen with many diuers names of the Iewes paſſing by that way. But, in Bethlehem there are twelue Iewes, Dyers of Wools. The Fields of the Towne haue Riuers of waters, Welles and Fountaynes.

Hebron.

The Temple o Saint Abraham.

Trauelling ſixe leagues from hence, I came to Hebron, ſeated in a Plaine: for Hebron the ancient Metropolitan Citie ſtood vpon an hill, but it is now deſolate. But in the Valley there is a field, wherein there is a duplicitie, that is, as it were two little Valleyes, and there the Citie is placed, and there is an huge Temple there, called Saint Abraham: and that place was the Synagogue of the Iewes, at what time the Countrey was poſſeſſed by the Iſmaelites. But, the Gentiles, who afterward obtayned, and held the ſame, built ſixe Sepulchres in the Temple by the names of Abraham, Sara, Iſaac, Rebecca, Iacob, & Lia. And the Inhabitants now tel the Pilgrims, that they are the Monuments of the Patriarkes: and great ſummes of money are offered there. But ſurely to any Iew comming thither, and offering the Porters a reward, the Caue is ſhewed with the Iron Gate opened, which from Antiquitie, remayneth yet there. And a man goeth downe with a Lampe light into the firſt Caue, where nothing is found, nor alſo in the ſecond, vntill he enter into the third, in the which there are the ſixe Monuments of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iaacob, Sara, Rebecca, and Lia; the one right ouer againſt the other: and each of them are ingrauen with Characters, and diſtinguiſhed by the names of euery one of them, after this manner, Sepulchrum Abraham patris noſtri, ſuper quem pax ſit, and ſo the reſt, after the ſame example. And a Lampe perpetually burneth in the Caue, day and night, the Officers of the Temple continually miniſtring Oyle for the maintenance thereof. Alſo in the ſelfe-ſame Caue, there are tuns full of the bones of the ancient Iſraelites, brought thither by the Families of Iſrael, which euen vntill this day, remayne in that ſelfe-ſame place. But in the very field of Duplicitie, the Monuments of the ancient houſe of our Father Abraham, are yet extant and to be ſeene, and a Fountayn ſpringeth out before it, and no man may build an houſe there, for the reuerence of Abraham.

Fiue leagues Iourney from hence I came to Torondolos Gabraleris, which was ſometimes called Sunam, where are three hundred Iewes. Three leagues from thence, is Saint Samuel of Silo, to wit, a Towne in time paſt called Siloh, two leagues diſtant from Hieruſalem, where there is a great Temple, and therein the Sepulchre of the Prophet Samuel, tranſlated by the Chriſtians from Ramath, which is Rama, after that the Iſmaelites were expelled thence, and the Towne taken, where before the bodie of Samuel was preſerued, buried in the Synagogue of the Iewes. And now, as I haue ſaid, there is a goodly and great Temple in Silo, named by them S. Samuel of Silo: and it remayneth euen vntill this day.

Departing from thence, and hauing trauelled three leagues towards the Mountayne Moria, I came to Peſipua, which is Gibgha, the Countrey of Saul, otherwiſe called Gibgha of Beniamin, where are no Iewes. Beth-Nobi is three leagues diſtant from hence, the ſame beeing alſo called Nob, a Citie belonging to the Prieſts, where were two Iewes, Dyers, and in the middle of that way, are thoſe two Rockes, famous through the memory of Ionathan, whereof the one is named Boſſen, and the other Sina. Departing from thence, after three leagues I came to Ramas, which, in time paſt, was Harama; part of the walls and buildings whereof remayneth, euen from ancient times, and it is confirmed by the Inſcriptions of ſtones yet continuing, and the markes, ruines, and ſituation are ſhewed, of a very great Citie, ſometimes, where now there are only three Iewes. And there is yet ſeene a field of the Iſraelites, two miles long, furniſhed with many Sepulchres of the Iſraelites. Fiue leagues from hence ſtandeth Gapha, in time paſt Iapho, called Iope by others, ſeated on the Sea; where there is only one Iew, and he, a Dyer of Wooll. From hence, I trauelled three leagues to Ebalin, it is the ſame Citie which was ſometimes called Iebna, wherein the ſite of an ancient Schoole is yet ſeene, and there is no Iew there. And this is the furtheſt bound of the Tribe of Ephraim. From whence, hauing paſſed three leagues, I went to Palmis, ſometimes called Aſdod or Aſotus, in time paſt, the moſt famous Citie of the Palaſtines, but now deſtroyed: and in it there is no Iew. From whence Aſcalon is two leagues diſtant. This is Aſcalon ſurnamed the new, built by Eſdra the Prieſt, vpon the Sea ſhoare, which in the beginning, was called Benibera. This is foure leagues diſtant from the ancient Aſcalon of the Palaſtines, long ſince waſted. But, this new one is a very great and goodly Citie frequented by many men reſorting thither from all places for the cauſe of their Affaires, for that it is ſeated in part of the bounds of Egypt. And in it there are almoſt two hundred learned Iewes, among whom Tſamahh, and Aharon, and Salomo, haue the preeminence. There are alſo about fortie of thoſe Students, who are called Literall, that is, conuerſant in the ſimple meaning of the ſacred Books, and about three hundred Cuthai, or followers of the Doctrine of the Samaritanes. And in the middle of the Citie there is a Well, which in the Language of the Iſmaelites, the Inhabitants call Bir Abraham Alchelil, that is to ſay, the Well of Great Abraham, opened by Abraham in the dayes of the Palaſtines. From hence I paſſed to Seguras, the ancient name whereof was Lud, from whence in one dayes Iourney and an halfe, I came to Zarezin, which is Ieſreghel, where there is a certayne great Church: and there is only, one Iew there, a Dyer of Woolles. Foure leagues from hence is Sipuria, ſometimes called Tſipori, where are the Sepulchres of that great Maſter called Hakados, and Hhaijah, who came vp out of Babylon, and of Ionas, the Sonne of Amithay the Prophet, who are buried in the Mountayne: and beſide theſe, there are alſo many other ancient Sepulchers. Three leagues from hence, is Tiberia, neere vnto Iordan at the Lake, called the Sea of Kinnereth, or Genezareth, into the which Iordan floweth, and runneth out towards the Salt Sea into the Land of the Plaine: and this place is called Aſdoth-hapiſga, and going forth from thence, it falleth into the Sea of Sodom, which is called the Sea of Salt. But, at Tiberia, there are almoſt fiftie Iewes: and the chiefe among theſe, are Abraham the Seer, and Muchthar, and Iſaac. And in that place there are hot waters ſpringing out of the ground, which they call the Bathes of Tiberia; and the Synagogue of Caleb the Sonne of Iephune is there, not farre from the Bathes. There are alſo very many Sepulchres of the Iſraelites there, and the moſt famous, thoſe eſpecially of Iohn the Sonne of Zachai, and of Ionathan the Sonne of Leui: all theſe are in the lower Galiley. From hence, in two dayes Iourney I came to Timin, which in time paſt was called Tamnatha, famous for the Sepulchre of Samuel the Iuſt, which is yet to be ſeene, furniſhed alſo with other Sepulchers of the Iſraelites. From thence, after one whole dayes Iourney, ſtandeth Ghaſth, ſometimes called Gus Hhaleb, where there are about twentie Iewes. Trauelling ſixe leagues from hence, I went to Maran, the ancient name whereof was Maron. In it are the Sepulchers of Hilel and Samai in a Caue, with twentie Sepulchers of both their Diſciples, and other Monuments alſo, as of Beniamin the Sonne of Iephat, and Iehuda the Sonne of Bathira. Sixe leagues from thence is Galmah famous for the great buildings of the Sepulchers of the Iſraelites, where there are fiftie Iewes. Kadis is halfe a dayes Iourney diſtant from hence, called alſo Kades Nephthalim, vpon the banke of Iordan, where are the Sepulchers of the Ancient, of Eliezer the Sonne of Gharoch, and Eliezer the Sonne of Azarias, and Hunus ſurnamed Rotundus, and Raſbac, and Ioſe of Galiley. And the Monument of Barak the Sonne of Avinogham, is yet remayning there. Departing from this place one whole dayes Iourney, I came to Baliyuus in time paſt called Dan, nigh vnto which there is a Caue whence Iordan iſſueth, which hauing run three miles, receiueth the waters of Arnon, comming out of the borders of Moab. Before the Caue it ſelfe, the markes of the Altar or Statue appeared, which one Micheas dedicated, adored by the children of Dan in thoſe dayes; not farre alſo from thence, the place of the Altar is ſeene,

From whence I made two dayes iourney to the Citie of Damaſcus, the beginning of the Kingdom of Noraldinus, King of the children of Thogarma, who are commonly called Turkes. The Citie it ſelfe is exceeding great and very faire, compaſſed with walls, but the whole Countrey is wonderfully beautified with Gardens and Paradiſes, contayning fifteene miles on euery ſide. There is no Citie, elſewhere, in all the fruitfull Countrey,, ſeene like vnto this: which the two Riuers, Amna and Pharphar, falling downe from the Mountayne Hermon doe inrich. For the Citie ſtandeth vnder the Mountayne Hermon. The Riuer Amna runneth into the Citie it ſelfe the waters whereof are conueyed through Pipes, into all the houſes of the Nobilitie, and alſo into the Market places and ſtreets. And the Countrey it ſelfe is much frequented through the Affaires of all Countries. But Pharphar running by the Citie it ſelfe, doth water all the Gardens and pleaſant places. And there is a Synagogue of the Iſmaelites in the Citie, which they call Gumagh Dumeſq, that is, the * Moſche of Damaſcus, the like building whereof is no where ſeene in the World: and the Inhabitents ſay, that it was the Princely Palace of Ben-Hadad. And there is a wall of Glaſſe built by the workmanſhip of the Magicians, diſtinguiſhed with holes equall in number with the dayes of the Sun, ſo that euery day the Sun entring in at euery hole goeth thorow the twelue degrees fitted to the houres of the day, and ſo ſheweth the time of the yeare and day. But within the Palace it ſelfe there are houſes or little Bathes made of Gold and Siluer, wherein there is a Throne of the ſame matter, like vnto a great Veſſell, ſo that it may receiue three men bathing together. Within the Palace I ſaw the rib of a man hanging, of one of the Enakims, which was nine Spaniſh handfuls long, and two handfuls broad: and it is reported, that he deſcended from the moſt ancient Kings of Enak, named Abchamaz, as by the ingrauen ſtone of his Sepulchre is declared; whereon it is alſo written that he raigned ouer the whole World. But at Damaſcus there are about three thouſand Iſraelites, among whom there are the Diſciples of wiſemen, and ſuch as are rich. And the Head m of the Aſſembly of the Land of Iſrael dwelleth there, whoſe name is Eſdra, and his Brother Sar Salom the chiefe Iudge, and Ioſeph the fift of the Aſſembly, and Matſliahh the head of the order of the Readers, and Mair the Crowne and glory of the wiſe men, and Sadik the Phyſician. There are alſo, almoſt, two hundred of the Literall Expoſitors, but of the Cuthai, almoſt foure hundred: among all whom there is great concord and peace, yet notwithſtanding, theſe diuers Factions inter-marrie not each with other.

Departing from Damaſcus, in one whole dayes iourney I went to Galgad, which was ſometimes called, Gilead, a large Countrey, flowing with Riuers and Fountaines of water, repleniſhed with Gardens and Orchards, in the which there are about threeſcore Iſraelites. Halfe a dayes iourney from hence ſtandeth Salcatha, which Citie was ſometime called, Saleca. From whence the other Baghal-Beik is halfe a dayes iourney diſtant, the ancient name whereof was Baghala, ſeated in the Valley vnder Libanus, built by Salomon, for the ſake and vſe of Pharaos Daughter. And part of the building of the Palace yet remayneth, the ſtones whereof are iuſt twentie Spaniſh handfuls in length, and twelue in bredth, among which there is not one at all, that is not worne: and it is commonly reported, that that building was not made by the hand of man, but of * Aſmodey. And in the very entrance of the Citie, a great Fountaine burſteth forth, and runneth through the middeſt of the Citie. There is alſo Thadmur ſeated in the Deſart, built likewiſe by the commandement of Salomon, after the ſame manner of building and greatneſſe of the ſtones: and it is compaſſed with a wall, ſolitary, as I ſaid, and remoued from other Habitation, and ſome dayes iourney diſtant from Baghala. But, in this Citie Thadmur, there are foure thouſand Iewes, valiant, and ready and prepared for the battel: who make warre with the Children of Edom, and with the Children of Garab, or the Arabians, commonly called, ſubiect vnto the Kingdome of Noraldinus: and they helpe the bordering Iſmaelites. Among theſe, Iſaac, ſurnamed Gracus, and Nathan, and Uziel, haue the pre-eminence. Halfe a dayes iourney from thence I came to Kiriathin, called Kiriathaim in time paſt, in the which there are no Iewes, except one Dyer of woolls. From whence departing one whole dayes iourney, I entred into Hamath, retayning the ancient name, ſeated vnder the Mountaine Libanus, nigh vnto the Riuer Iabok. But, in thoſe dayes it hapned, that the Citie being ſhaken with a great Earthquake, aboue fifteene thouſand men periſhed in one day: and no more then ſeuentie men were remayning aliue, the chiefe is, Ghola the Prieſt, and old Father Galeb, and Muchtar. Siba is halfe a dayes iourney diſtant from hence, ſometimes called, Hhatſor: from the which, Lamdin is no further remoued then three leagues. In two dayes iourney from thence I went to Hhaleb, the ancient name of which Citie and Countrey was Aram Tſoba: and it is the Princely ſeat of King Noraldinus, within the which there is a very great Palace, compaſſed with a wall, and there is no Fountaine, Well, or Riuer in the whole Citie: but they drinke raine-water gathered in Ciſternes, which in the Iſmaelitiſh Language they call, Algub. There are about one thouſand fiue hundred Iſraelites here, whoſe Heads are, Moſes the Conſtantinopolitan, and Iſrael, and Seth. But trauelling two dayes iourney from hence, I came to Baalits, in time paſt Pethoran, and nigh vnto the Riuer Euphrates, where euen vntill this day, the Tower of Balaam the ſonne of Beghor, remayneth (let the name of the wicked be aboliſhed) built according to the number of the houres of the day: and in that Citie there are few Iewes. From thence, it is halfe a dayes iourney to Kelagh Geber, which the Ancients called, Selagh Midbera, the Latines, Petra Deſerti. The Arabians onely retayned this, after they fled into the Deſarts, being violently expulſed by the Turkes, from their habitations and Cities. But here there are almoſt two thouſand Iewes, and the chiefe of theſe, Sedekias, Hbaija, and Salomo.

Of Meſopotamia, Moſul, Bagdat; the Calipha; the numbers, Synagogues, and Priuiledges of the Iewes in it, and the places adioyning.

ONe dayes iourney diſtant from hence is Dakia, which was ſometime called Chalne, the beginning of the Land of Senaar (which is Meſopotamia) it lieth out in length betweene the Kingdome of the Turkes, and the Countrey Sangaſar. And there are almoſt ſeuentie Iewes there, ouer whom, Zachai, and Nedib, otherwiſe called [c] Sagi Nehor, and Ioſeph, haue the pre-eminence. And in this place ſtandeth the Synagogue built by Eſdra, returning from Babylon to Hieruſalem. Two dayes iourney from thence is ancient Hharan, in the which there is alſo a Synagogue of the like building, made by the commandement of the ſame Eſdra: but that place, where the houſe of our Father Abraham was, contayneth no building; yet is it religiouſly reſpected by the Iſmaelites, and frequented by them for the offering vp of their ſupplications. Departing from thence, we trauelled two dayes iourney to the place where a Riuer iſſueth forth, called by the Inhabitants Alchabor, the ſame alſo in time paſt being called, Hhabor, which runneth forth into the Prouince Madai or Media, and falleth into the Mountaine Gozen. And there are about two thouſand Iewes there. From hence, after two dayes iourney, is Netſibin or Niſibis, a great Citie, abounding with Riuers of water, where are, almoſt, a thouſand Iewes. From whence, trauelling two dayes iourney, we came to Gezir Ben-Ghamar, which Citie is contayned within the bankes of the Riuer Hidekel, which the people of the Weſt call Tygris, at the foot of the Mountaines Ararat or Taurus, foure miles, almoſt, diſtant from the place where the Arke of Noe reſted: but Ghamar-Ben-Alchetab hauing taken that Arke from the ridge of the Mountaine, being remoued, fitted it for the vſe of the Iſmaelites Moſche, neere vnto which, ſtandeth the Synagogue of Eſdra, euen vnto this day, whereunto, the Iewes going out of the Citie, aſſemble on feſtiuall dayes, to pray. And in that Metropolitan Citie of Gezira Gamar Ben-Alchetab, there are, almoſt, foure thouſand Iewes, Mubhhar, and Ioſeph, and Hbaija, being the chiefe.

And this Citie is the beginning of the Kingdome of Perſia, and retayneth that ancient largeneſſe and greatneſſe, ſeated vpon the Riuer Hhidekel, betweene which and the ancient Niniue, there is onely a Bridge: but Niniue is vtterly deſtroyed: yet there are ſtreets, and many Caſtles within the ſpace of the ancient circuit, from which vnto the Citie Adbael, is one leagues diſtance. But Niniue was built vpon the banke of Hhidekel. And in the Citie Aſſur there are now three Synagogues of three Prophets, of Abdia, of Ionas the ſonne of Amithai, and Nahhum the Sonne of Elcuſſeus. Departing from thence, and trauelling three dayes iourney, I came to Rababa, by the Antient, called Rehhoboth, ſeated nigh vnto the Riuer Euphrates, in the which, there are almoſt two thouſand Iewes, whereof Ezechias, Abud, and Iſaac, are accounted the chiefe. And it is a very great and goodly Citie, compaſſed about with walls, and very well fortified, and furniſhed with goodly Suburbs of Gardens, and places of delight. Vpon the banke of the ſame Riuer ſtandeth Karkeſia, ſometime called Charchamis, one dayes iourney onely, diſtant from Rababa; in the which, there dwell about fiue hundred Iewes; Iſaac, and Elhana being the chiefe. Two dayes iourney from hence, we went to Al-Iobar, the ancient name whereof, was Pumbedutha, ſeated in Nahardugha: in the which, there are about two thouſand Iewes, among whom there are many Diſciples of the Wiſemen, and the chiefe of theſe are, Great Hen, and Moſes, and Eliakim. The Sepulchres of the Maſters, Iuda, and Samuel, are there accounted memorable. Before each Sepulchre ſtand two Synagogues, built by them before their death. There alſo remayneth the Sepulchre of Beſtenai Hanaſſi, who was Head of the Tranſmigration, and Nathan, and Neheman the ſonne of Papha. Departing from hence, I trauelled fiue dayes iourney to Hharda, in the which, there are about fifteene thouſand Iewes, among whom Zachen, and Ioſeph, and Nathanael, are the chiefe. From this Citie, it is two dayes iourney to Ghukbera, the chiefe Citie, built by Iechonias the King of Iuda,

Two dayes iourney diſtant from hence ſtandeth Bagdad, a great Citie, the beginning of the Kingdome of Calipha, named * Amir Almumanin Alghabaſſi, of the Progenie of him, whom the Iſmaelites call their Prophet, who hath the chiefe authoritie ouer the whole Doctrine and Sect of the Iſmaelites: and for this cauſe he is accounted reuerent and honorable, to all the reſt of the Kings of the Iſmaelites: for hee ruleth ouer them all, as a certaine high Prieſt of them all. And within the Citie of Bagdad it ſelfe he hath a Palace, built in a plat of ground of three miles, and within the Palace, there is a Wood furniſhed with all kinds of Trees of the whole world, not onely with fruitfull Trees, but alſo barren; repleniſhed alſo with all ſorts of Beaſts, and in the middeſt of the Wood, an huge ſtanding Poole of water, conueyed from the Riuer Tigris. But the Calipha walking or ſupping in that Wood for recreation, his ſeruants exerciſe Hawking and Fiſhing, and hee goeth vnto this place accompanied with the traine of his Counſellers and Princes. And the proper name of this great King is * Al-Ghabaſſi Hhaphtſi, who loueth the Iſraelites very well, being skilfull in the tongues, ſtudious in reading the Law of Moſes, who being expert in the Hebrew Language, both readeth, and alſo writeth learnedly. But hee hath made this Religious vow vnto himſelfe, that he would receiue the vſe neither of meate, drinke, nor apparell, but through the labour of his owne hands: for he is an artificiall maker of the moſt excellent fine Mats and Couerlets, which, being marked with his owne Seale, he deliuereth to his principall ſeruants, to be ſold in the Market, but the Noble-men of the Countrey buy them, and with the money of that trade, he procureth maintenance for himſelfe: and hee is a man of an honeſt behauiour, and faithfull, and religious after his manner, and moſt curteouſly ſaluteth, and ſpeaketh vnto all men. But the Iſmaelites may not lawfully behold him. But the Pilgrims who goe vnto that famous houſe, called Meka, ſeated in the Countrey of Æliman, from the moſt remote Countries, trauell this way through an earneſt deſire they haue to ſalute Calipha; and hauing entred into the Palace, they crie out, O our Lord, the light of the Iſmaelites, and the Sunne-beame of our Law, ſhew vs the brightneſſe of thy face: to whoſe words hee inclineth not his minde. But then, the Princes his familiar friends and ſeruants ſpeake vnto him with theſe words: Our Lord, ſpread abroade thy peace vpon theſe men comming from remote Countries, whom an admirable deſire hath inforced to flye vnto the ſhadow of thy glory. In the ſelfe ſame houre therefore, taking vp the wing of his garment, hee letteth it downe out of the Window, which, the Pilgrims comming vnto it, religiouſly kiſſe. And hauing heard this anſwer from one of thoſe familiar Princes, Goe in peace, for now our Lord, the light of the Iſmaelites hath receiued, and giuen you peace: for he is ſuppoſed by them to be, as it were, he whom they call their Prophet. They therefore moſt ioyfully returne euery one into their Countrey, after they haue beene diſmiſſed in this manner with ſuch ſpeech of the Prince, and returning home, are receiued by their brethren, kinsfolke, and familiar and inward friends, with the kiſſing of their garments. And euery one of thoſe Princes who ſerue the Calipha, haue their ſeuerall Palaces within that huge Palace, yet they goe all bound with Iron Chaines, and ouer all their houſes there are watchfull keepers ſet, leſt any one ſhould attempt any ſudden innouation againſt that mightie King. For it happened once, that his brethren conſpiring againſt him, made a certaine other, one of their number, ruler ouer them; wherefore he eſtabliſhed it by decree, that all the children of his whole ſtocke and familie, ſhould be bound with Iron Chaines, leſt they ſhould againe enterprize the like attempt againſt the mightie King. But euery one liueth in a priuate Court, reuerenced with great honour, and hath Cities, Townes, and Countries, from the which he yeerely receiueth tributes and reuenues, brought vnto him by the Treſurers: and they feaſt, and giue themſelues to pleaſure all their whole life. But in that Palace of the mightie King, there are buildings of an admirable greatneſſe, the Pillars whereof are of ſiluer and gold, and the inner parts of the houſes are ouer-laide with theſe metals, and beautified with all kind of Precious ſtones and Pearles: out of the which Palace he goeth forth once only in the yeere, on that feſtiual day or Eaſter, which they cal Ramadan. And on that day, great multitudes of men from diuers and remote Countries, flocke together to ſee his face. And he is carried vpon a Mule, attired in princely garments, intermingled with gold an ſiluer, hauing his head adorned with a Myter, ſhining with ſtones of incomparable price: but he weareth a blacke Handkerchiefe vpon the Myter, by carrying whereof, he openly confeſſeth the ſhamefac'tneſſe of this world; as if he ſhould haue ſaid: This great Maieſtie which yee behold, darkeneſſe will obſcure in the day of death. Moreouer, all the Nobilitie of the Iſmaelites accompanie him, attired with very goodly and coſtly garments, and ſitting vpon Horſes, the Princes of Arabia, the Princes of Media, and Perſia, and the Princes of the Countrey of Tuboth, which is three moneths iourney diſtant from Arabia. But he commeth forth of his Palace to the great houſe (as they call it) of Prayer, built in the gate Boſra: for that is accounted their greateſt houſe of Prayer. Moreouer, as well the men as women, all who celebrate that day are cloathed with Purple and ſilken garments. You may alſo finde through all the wayes and ſtreets, all kindes of Inſtruments, Songs, and Dances, playing when he paſſeth by: and Calipha himſelfe the mightie King is ſaluted by all, in theſe words: Peace bee vpon thee our Lord the King, He, I ſay, kiſſeth his owne garment, wherewith ſometimes, but ſometimes only with his hand ſtretched forth, he ſignifieth peace and ſalutation vnto them. And thus hee goeth vnto the Court of prayer, where aſcending into a woodden Turret, he interpreteth his Law in a Sermon, from an higher place. But then the wiſe men of the Iſmaelites ariſing, hauing wiſhed all happineſſe vnto him, congratulate his greatneſſe and excellent pietie, euidently knowne by many examples, which they deſire to be perpetuall. And ſurely, all enlarge this gratulation, anſwering, Amen. And afterward he bleſſeth them all. Then preſently a Camell being brought, is killed by him, for this is accounted their Paſchall feaſt, of the fleſh whereof he commandeth ſmall pieces to be diſtributed to thoſe Princes his ſeruants, who are to taſte of the beaſt ſlaine by their ſacred King, at which preſent they greatly reioyce. And theſe things being performed after their manner, they depart from that houſe of Prayer. But the King returneth another way then hee came, by the banke of the Riuer Tigris, himſelfe alone. For the reſt of the Princes and ſeruants returne by the Riuer, being carried in Boates before him, vntill hee enter into the Palace. And that way is diligently kept all the yeere by Watchmen, leſt peraduenture any one enter into that place, which is ſacred, through the ſteps of his feete. All that whole yeere after he is conteyned within the Palace, neuer to goe forth to any other place. But he is of a faire behauiour, and according to that ſect of his, iuſt and godly. And hee hath built a Palace beyond the Riuer, on the very banke of a certaine Arme of the Riuer Euphrates, which floweth from the other ſide of the Citie, in the which he hath built great houſes and Market-places, and alſo Hoſpitals, fit for the curing of poore ſicke men, and almoſt threeſcore Phyſicians Store-houſes are reckoned there, being all abundantly furniſhed with all neceſſary kindes of Spices, Medicines, and other fit things brought from the Kings houſe: whatſoeuer therefore is thought commodious for Medicine, and food, and for the whole cure, is giuen to all the ſicke brought thither, at the Kings coſt, vntill they happen to bee recouered. Beſides, there is another Palace in the ſame place, which is called Dar Almarapthan, that is, the houſe of Mercie, for the including of all mad perſons found in the Countrey; euery one whereof are bound with Iron Chaines, vntill they returne to their wits: for then they are euery one permitted to depart vnto their houſes, the men to whom that charge is committed, looking vnto it, and examining the ſame euery moneth. All theſe things are ordained by that King, for the beſtowing of almes and benefit commonly, to all comming thither, who are either mad, or troubled with any other diſeaſe. For, as we haue ſaid, he is of a mercifull and kind diſpoſition, and of a good minde.

This is obſerued by the greateſt Mahumetans: the Great Turke himſelfe ſtill profeſſing the exerciſe of ſome trade, though perhaps more for ſhew then in ſuch ſerious reſpect as this.

And in the ſame Citie, called Bagdad, there are about a thouſand Iewes, liuing in great quietneſſe and peace, and very honeſtly vſed vnder the dominion of that King, ſurnamed, the Great, among whom there are ſome very learned men, the chiefe of the Aſſemblies, greatly conuerſant in the ſtudie of the Law of Moſes. But there are ten Aſſemblies there, the head of the greateſt whereof, is Samuel the ſonne of Heli: next, the heads of the other Aſſemblies are, Gaon Sagan the Leuite, of the ſecond: but of the third, Daniel Sod: of the fourth, Eliezer Habbaber: and Eliezer Ben Tſamahb, head of the Order, who is deſcended from the Prophet Samuel, and with his Brethren playeth cunningly vpon muſicall Inſtruments, that is, vpon the Pſalteries, with the ſame skill which was then vſed when the houſe of the Sanctuarie was yet ſtanding; hee is head of the fift Aſſembly: and of the ſixt Hbaſadias, the flower of his Companions: Haggaus Hanaſſi ruleth the ſeuenth Aſſembly: Eſdras the eight: Abraham, ſurnamed Abutahar the ninth: the tenth and laſt, Zachaus Ben Baſathnai. All theſe are called Vacant, becauſe they doe no other thing but gouerne the Societie. But they exerciſe iudgements, and execute iuſtice to all the Iewes of that Countrey all the dayes of the weeke, except the ſecond day wherein they all aſſemble before Great Samuel, the head of the Aſſembly, and honor of the Iacobides, who, together with thoſe ten Vacants, the heads of the Aſſemblies, doe iuſtice to euery one requiring the ſame. Notwithſtanding the greateſt of all theſe, is Daniel the ſonne of Hbaſdai, called the head of the Captiuitie, who hath a booke of his Genealogie, deriued euen from Dauid. The Iewes call him our Lord, and the head of the Captiuitie. And the Iſmaelites call him Sidna Ben Dauid, that is, our Lord, the ſonne of Dauid. And he hath great authoritie ouer all the Congregations of the Iſraelites, vnder the hand * of Amir Almonin, Lord of the Iſmaelites: whoſe decree was this, appertaining euen vnto his Poſteritie, adding and deliuering alſo a Seale of authoritie ouer all the Colledges of the Iſraelites, whatſoeuer contayned within the iuriſdiction of his Law, to whom for the cauſe of honor, he hath commanded all men, as well Iſmaelites as Iewes, to ariſe vp and ſalute, and Nations alſo of whatſoeuer faction; he that ſhall doe otherwiſe, let him be puniſhed with an hundred ſtripes. But when he commeth forth to viſit the Great King, he is guarded with a great number of Horſe-men, Iewes and Gentiles accompanying him, a Cryer going before him, proclayming theſe words: Prepare yee the way for the Lord the ſonne of Dauid, as it is meete; and they proclaime it in their Language. But he is carried vpon an Horſe, cloathed with ſilken and embroydered garments, he adorneth his head with a Miter, vpon the Miter he weareth a white Shaſh, and vpon the Shaſh a Chaine. And all the Colledges of the Iſraelites of the Countrey of Senaar, Perſia, Gharſan, and Seba, which is now called Aliman, and Diarbeich, and of all the Countrey of Meſopotamia, and the Prouince Kut, whoſe Inhabitants dwell in the Mountaynes

But the Gerganai are the ſame People that are called Gergaſai, now Chriſtians, and vnto the Gates of the beſt Countries and Lands, euen vnto India, I ſay, the Colledges of all theſe Countries, through the authoritie and power of this man, Prince of the Captiuitie, chuſe euery one their Head and Miniſter, who being choſen, come vnto him to receiue authoritie, and impoſition of hands: and vnto him, Gifts and Preſents are brought from all the borders of the Land. And he hath publike houſes, let for aduantage, which they call Fondaci, and hath alſo Orchards and Gardens in Babylon, and very many poſſeſſions receiued from his Anceſtors by the right of Inheritance; but no man dare violently take or carrie away any thing from him. He hath alſo houſes to be let, and of Merchandizing, for the vſe of the Iewes. He receiueth alſo a certaine tribute yeerely out of the Markets, and from the Merchants of the Land, beſides that which he receiueth, brought vnto him from remote Countries. Therefore he is exceeding rich, and diligently conuerſant and learned, as well in the ſacred as in other bookes of humane knowledge: and he feedeth many of the Iſraelites by his daily hoſpitalitie. But, at what time any man of this Familie is made Head of the Captiuitie, [a] hee bringeth forth great ſummes of money, and giueth firſt vnto the King himſelfe, and next vnto the Princes and Magiſtrates. And the ſame day wherein the King layeth his hand vpon him, to grant him authoritie and principalitie, the ſecond Chariot of the King is prepared and couered for him to aſcend into it, and to be brought from the Palace vnto his owne houſe with great pompe and ſinging, and with the ſtriking vp of Drums, and ſound of the Fluits. But he himſelfe exerciſeth the impoſition of hands towards the men of the Aſſemblie. And the Iewes Inhabitants of that Metropolitan Citie are the Diſciples of [b] Wiſe-men, and very rich: and eight and twentie Synagogues are numbred in the Citie of Bagdat it ſelfe, and in Parech, or the Suburbs which are beyond Tigris. For the Riuer runneth through the Metropolitan Citie it ſelfe. But that great Synagogue, which appertayneth to that man who is the Head of the Captiuitie, is built with marble ſtones, diuers and moſt excellent, of all colours, garniſhed with Gold and Siluer: and in the very Pillars, Verſes of the Pſalmes are read, ingrauen in golden letters. Moreouer, before the Arke, the ranks of ten ſeats are there diſtinguiſhed with marble ſteps; in the higheſt whereof, the Head of the Captiuitie ſitteth with the chiefeſt of the Familie of David. But the Metropolitan Citie it ſelfe is great, in the which alſo a Citie, like a Caſtle is contayned, fortified with a wall of three miles circuit about. The Countrey aboundeth with the moſt excellent Palme-trees, Gardens and Orchards, of all the Land of Senaar, and is frequented by the moſt gallant Merchants and Factors of all Countries, and maintayneth learned men and Philoſophers, and Students of all the Mathematicall Artes, Diuinations, and Inchantments.

The Brickes are 8. inches broad, 6. thick, 12. long, with Canes betwixt, the building is not now a mile about, ſome ſay, but a quarter: perhaps a good part carried away ſince the time of Beniamin.

Departing two dayes iourney from thence I came to Gehiaga, the ancient name whereof was Reſen, ſometimes a great and very famous Citie, in the which there are almoſt fiue thouſand Iſraelites; and they haue a great Synagogue, with a place of buriall next vnto the Synagogue: and in the burying place a Caue, famous for the Sepulchres of certaine ancient learned men. One dayes iourney diſtant from hence, ſtandeth that ancient Babel, contayning thirtie miles in compaſſe, but now vtterly deſtroyed, where the ruines of Nabuchodonoſors Palace are yet ſeene, inacceſſible to men, by reaſon of the diuers and noyſome kinds of Serpents and Dragons liuing there. Not aboue twentie miles diſtant from theſe ruines, twentie thouſand Iſraelites dwell, who powre forth their prayers in the Synagogues; the chiefe whereof is that vppermoſt ancient Floore of Daniel, built with ſquare ſtones and Brickes, and the Temple and Palace of Nabuchodonoſor of the ſame matter, and the Fornace of burning fire, into the which, Hananias, Miſael, and Azarias were caſt. And all theſe things are ſeene in the Valley well knowne to all. From thence we paſſed fiue miles to Hhilan, where are almoſt ten thouſand Iſraelites, diuided into foure Synagogues, whereof one was the Synagogue of M Aar, who lieth buried there: next vnto whom alſo, are the Sepulchres of Great Zeghirus the ſonne of Hama, and of Great M Aar: and the Iewes daily aſſemble thither to pray. From thence, are foure miles vnto the Tower which the Children of the diuiſion began to build, which was made of that kinde of Bricke, which in the Arabian Language is called, Lagzar. The length of the Foundation conteyneth almoſt two miles, but the bredth of the walls is two hundred and fortie cubits: and where it is broadeſt, it contayneth an hundred Canes. Betweene the ſpace of ten Canes, there are wayes made out at length throughout the whole building in the forme of a wreathed rundle; aſcending which from the higheſt place, the fields are beheld twentie miles off: for the Countrey it ſelfe is very broad and plaine. But this building was ſometimes ſtricken with lightning from Heauen, and deſtroyed euen vnto the loweſt part.

Naphahh.
The Synagogue of Ezechiel the Prophet.

Halfe a dayes iourney from hence is Naphahh, where are almoſt two hundred Iewes: and the Synagogue of that Great Iſaac, ſurnamed Naphhæus, is there, who lieth buried right ouer againſt it. Three leagues from thence is the Synagogue of Ezechiel the Prophet, nigh vnto the Riuer Euphrates ; and in the ſame place right ouer againſt the Synagogue, are threeſcore Towers in number, and betweene euery Tower alſo , there are ſeuerall Synagogues , and in the Court of the Synagogue there is an Arke; and behind the Synagogue, the Monument of Ezechiel the ſonne of Buz the Prieſt, vnder a great and very goodly Vault, built by Iechonias King of Iuda, together with fiue and thirtie thouſand Iewes , who followed him by Euilmerodak deliuered out of Priſon. And this place is betweene the Riuer Cobar, and the Riuer Euphrates. And Iechonias , and they who came with him , are engrauen in the very walls; Iechonias firſt, but Ezechiel laſt. And this place is holy, euen vnto this day. And vnto that place at a certaine time, many aſſemble for the cauſe of prayer, from the beginning of the yeere vnto the feaſt of Expiations : and there they liue moſt pleaſant dayes. And that principall man , whom they call the Head of the Captiuitie, with the other Heads of the Aſſemblies , come hither alſo from Bagdat, and abide all in that field for two and twentie miles together, pitching their Tents in diuers places. Moreouer, the Arabian Merchants come thither , and the greateſt and moſt frequented Faires are kept there. But at this time , a great Booke, renowmed for authoritie and antiquitie, written by Ezechiel the Prophet , is brought forth, wherein they reade on the day of Expiation. And vpon the Sepulchre of Ezechiel, a Lampe continually burneth day and night, ſince it was firſt lighted by the ſame Prophet, for the which, Oyle and Thread are ordinarily diſtributed and tempered. There is alſo a certaine great ſacred Temple there , full of bookes kept as well from the time of the firſt houſe, as of the ſecond : and it is and was the cuſtome, that they who had no children, ſhould conſecrate their Bookes in that place. Moreouer, Vowes are made in that place, to be performed by the Iewes dwelling in Media , and Perſia. The principall men alſo of the Iſmaelites reſort hither to pray, among whom the authoritie and reuerence of the Prophet Ezechiel is great, the name of which place in their Language is, Dar melibha, that is, The houſe of the Congregation: and thither all the Arabians come for cauſe of prayer. About halfe a mile diſtant from this place , the Sepulchres of Hananias , Miſael, and Azarias, are ſeene, with each of their great and goodly Arches. And although warre happen in thoſe Countries, there is no mortall man that dare violate or touch theſe places ; neither of the Iewes nor Iſmaelites, for the reuerence of the Prophet Ezechiel. From thence you trauell three miles to the Citie Alkotſonath , in the which there are almoſt three hundred Iewes, and there alſo are the Sepulchres of Great Papha, and Huna, and Maſter Ioſeph Sinaus, and of Ioſeph the ſonne of Hhama. And right ouer againſt euery one of them , there are ſeuerall Synagogues, in the which the Iewes daily aſſemble for the cauſe of prayer. From hence to Ghein Saphta are three leagues, where is the Sepulchre of Nahum the ſonne of Elcuſaus the Prophet. It is one dayes iourney from thence to Caphar le Paras, a famous place for the Sepulchres of Hhaſſidai, and Ghakiba, and Duſa. Capharmehamidbar is halfe a dayes iourney diſtant from thence , where Maſter Dauid , and Iehuda , and Kuberia, and Sehora , and Abba lie buried. One dayes iourney from thence is the Riuer Liga, where the Sepulchre of King Sedechia is, beautified with a great Arch. One dayes iourney from hence ſtandeth the Citie Kupha, famous for the monument of King Iechonias, of great workmanſhip , right ouer againſt which , a Synagogue is built ; and in this place there are almoſt ſeuen thouſand Iewes. One dayes iourney and an halfe from thence ſtandeth Suria, which the Ancient called , Matha Mahbaſia , in the which the Heads of the Captiuitie, and the chiefe of the Aſſemblies, were in the beginning : and great men are buried there , Sarica , and his ſonne Haai, and Saadias the ſonne of Piyumus, and Semuel the ſonne of Hhophin the Prieſt, and Sephanias the ſonne of Chuſſi the ſonne of Gedolia the Prophet , and very many other of the Heads of the Captiuitie, Princes of the Familie of Dauid, and principall men of the Aſſemblies, who abode there in the beginning, before the deſtruction thereof. You trauell two dayes iourney from hence to Sephiththib, ſituated in Nahardagha. But from thence to Elnachar, is one dayes iourney and an halfe , called alſo Pebeditha, ſeated vpon the banke of Euphrates, where his Synagogue is ſeene , who by the figure Antonomaſia, is called Rab, and of Samuel, nigh vnto the which alſo are their Monuments.

Strange reports, if true, of the Aliman Iewes. Of Perſia, and DAVID ELROI. Of the Niſbor Iewes, and ſome places of India.

FRom thence trauelling through the Deſart, you goe vnto the Countrey Seba, which is now called , the Land of Aliman , bordering vpon the Countrey Senaar on the North, the length whereof contayneth one and twentie dayes iourneys to be made through the Deſarts : and in this Countrey thoſe Iewes dwell , who are called , the Sonnes of Recab, otherwiſe, the men of Theima. For Theima is the beginning of their Dominion, whom now Hanan Hanaſſi gouerneth. And the Citie of Theima it ſelfe is great, and populous. Their Countrey is extended ſixteene dayes iourney, betweene the Mountaines which are called, Northerly, beautified with great and well fortified Cities, and not ſubiect to the yoke of any forraine Nation: from whence the Inhabitants going forth, ſpoyle all the bordering and alſo the remote Nations, how many ſoeuer they be, euen vnto the Arabians, who are in league with them. But the Arabians are they who dwell in Tents, and haue moueable Habitations in the Deſarts of their Countrey, and inuade ſtrange Countries for prey, in all that Countrey of Alman: and thoſe Iewes, whom we now mentioned, manure grounds and paſtures; poſſeſſe Heards and Cattell, hauing a very large and vaſt Countrey, who giue the Tenths of all their reuenues to the vſe of the Diſciples of Wiſe-men, perpetually applying their ſtudie to Doctrine and Sermons, and of the Phariſies, who lament Sion, and bewayle Hieruſalem, continually abſtayning from Fleſh, and Wine, and alwaies cloathed with mourning and poore apparell, dwelling in holes or little Cottages, and faſting euery day except the Sabbath, with continuall prayers alſo beſeeching the ſacred Maieſtie, and begging the mercy of God towards the deliuerance of the Captiuitie of Iſrael. All the Iewes alſo deſire the ſame; to wit, the men of the Countrey of Theima, and Telimaas, in the which there are almoſt an hundred thouſand Iewes: among whom Selomoh Hanaſſi, that is the chiefe, and his brother Hhanan Hanaſſi, are of the Progenie of Dauid the King: which the Booke of the Familie from age to age deriued, plainly declareth. And all theſe goe with their garments rent, and faſt fortie daies, for all the Iewes ſakes liuing in Captiuitie. But that Prouince hath about fortie Cities, two hundred Townes, and an hundred Caſtles. But the Metropolis and Head is Thenai, and the ſumme of the Iewes inhabiting in all thoſe Cities, contayneth almoſt three hundred thouſand men. Moreouer, that chiefe Citie is largely compaſſed with very wide and ample walls, ſo that it hath fields within it, and affoordeth the abilitie and commoditie of ſowing and reaping Corne. For, it contayneth fifteene miles in length, and as many alſo in bredth. And the Palace of Salomon Hanaſſi is there: and the Citie it ſelfe is very faire, and furniſhed with moſt pleaſant Gardens and Orchards. Tilmaas alſo is no leſſe goodly and great a Citie, which about an hundred thouſand Iewes inhabit, ſeated betweene two very high Mountaines, and very ſtrongly fenced, full of learned and wiſe men, of the which, many are rich. Chibar is three dayes iourney diſtant from Tilmaas: and they report, that they are Reuben, and Gad, and the Tribe of Manaſſe, taken by Salmanaſar the King of the Aſſyrians and ſent hither, and that they built theſe great and well fortified Cities, and going forth of theſe places they made warres, and yet warre with all the bordering Kingdomes; and that no man is able to come vnto them, by reaſon of the vaſt and huge Deſarts, voyd of all ſuccour for eighteene dayes iourney together. And Chibar is alſo a great Citie, where fiftie thouſand Iſraelites dwell, whereof many are learned men, and very many moſt valiant, who make warre with the children of Senaar, and with the Northerne Countries, and the bordering Inhabitants of Eliman. But this is Hodu, that is pertayning to India, from which you are to trauell fiue and twentie dayes iourney vnto the Riuer Vira, which runneth through the Countrey of Eliman, where three thouſand Iſraelites dwell. Trauelling ſeuen dayes iourney from hence, you come to Neaſat, where are ſeuen thouſand Iſraelites, among whom, Nedaian is accounted a great man. But, from thence you trauell fiue dayes iourney to Boſra, ſeated on the Riuer Tigris, in which, there are a thouſand Iſraelites, of the which very many are the Diſciples of the Wiſe-men, and many are accounted rich.

Vertomannus mentioneth Arabian Iewes potent and cruell, ſecured more by Deſarts and Hills, then any greatneſſe of theirowne: as alſo in Abaßia ſome Iewes liue in manner free, on ſteepe Hills. But this freedome is a continual ſlauery, and ſiege; the Arabians alwaies endangering the one, and as it were, beſieging them, as the Abaßines the other. Neither yet doe I thinke but their Countrey is here enlarged far, by the Iewiſh relations to our Author. For, Cities and Townes in Arabia ſeeme not to be ſo frequent and populous.

Two dayes iourney diſtant from hence, is the Riuer Samura, the beginning of the Countrey of Perſia, with a Citie of the ſame name, wherein a thouſand and fiue hundred Iewes dwell. And that place is famous for the Sepulchre of Eſdras, the Scribe & Prieſt, who comming Embaſſador from Hieruſalem to Artaxerſes the King, dyed there. But before his Sepulchre a great Synagogue is built by the ancient Fathers, and on the other ſide, the Iſmaelites haue built an Houſe of Prayer, for the great affection they bare towards that man: which alſo is the cauſe, that the Iſmaelites loue the Iewes reſorting vnto that place to pray. Foure miles diſtant from thence ſtandeth Chuzſethan, called Elam in former time, the Countrey of the Elamites, a very great Citie, but for the moſt part, now deſtroyed, waſted, and without Inhabitants: among the ruins wherof, Suſan Habira is yet to be ſeene, the huge Palace of K. Aſſuerus, built with very goodly workemanſhip, many parts and examples of Art yet remayning of that Princely and admirable building. In this Citie there are ſeuen thouſand Iewes, who are aſſembled in fourteene Synagogues; and before one of them ſtandeth the Sepulchre of Daniel: and the Riuer Tigris runneth through the Citie it ſelfe, and alſo diuideth the habitation of the Iewes: and on the one ſide of the Riuer, they are all very rich whoſoeuer dwell there, and they haue Market places very well furniſhed with Merchandizes and Trading: but on the other dwell all the meaner and poorer ſort, who haue no Markets, no Trading, nor Gardens or Orchards, ſo that vpon a certaine time they conceiued enuie againſt the other, and ſuppoſed that the riches and fertilitie happened vnto them, through the Neighbour-hood of Daniel the Prophet buried there: wherefore they required of them, that the Sepulchre of Daniel might bee permitted to bee tranſlated vnto their Senigar Saa, the Emperour of the Perſians, obeyed by forty fiue Kings.

He is called in the Arabian Language Sultan alporas alkabir, that is, The Great King of Perſia: and his Dominion is extended from the mouth of the Riuer Samura, euen vnto the Citie Semarchoth, and vnto the Riuer Gozen, and vnto the Countrey Ghiſbor, and the Cities of Media, and the Montaynes Hbaphton, and vnto thoſe excellent Countries, where beaſts are maintayned, from which diſſolued Myrrhe commeth. And all the Dominion of this Emperour contayneth foure monethes and foure dayes iourney. When therefore hauing ſometime ſtayed in this City, he had ſeene the Tombe ſtone of Daniel to bee carryed ouer from one quarter of the Citie vnto the other, and that very many of the Iewes and Iſmaelites went with it, demanding and vnderſtanding the cauſe, he thought it a ſhamefull thing, that ſuch irreuerence towards Daniel ſhould bee tolerated: but hauing diligently meaſured the ſpace betweene both parts, hee hung vp the Tombe ſtone of Daniel put into an Arke of Glaſſe, in that middle place, faſtened to an huge Beame with Brazen Chaines, and commanded a great Temple to be built, dedicated to the vſe of a Synagogue, and open for all men of the whole World, and denyed to no mortall man, whether Iew or Aramite purpoſing to enter into the ſame to pray. And that Arke hangeth vpon the Beame euen vntill this day. Moreouer, that Emperour forbade by an expreſſe Edict, that no man ſhould take fiſhes out of the Riuer for one mile downe the Riuer, and for another mile vp the Riuer, for the reuerence and honour of Daniel.

Myrrhe or Muske.

From hence to Robad-Bar are three dayes iourneyes, where alſo, almoſt twentie thouſand Iſraelites dwell: among whom there are very many Diſciples of the Wiſemen, and alſo rich; but theſe liue as Captiues vnder the power and authoritie of a ſtrange Prince. In two dayes iourney from thence you come to the Riuer Vaanath, where are foure thouſand Iewes, almoſt. But foure dayes iourney from that Riuer, lyeth the Countrey Molbhaath, the Inhabitants whereof beleeue not the Doctrine of the Iſmaelites. But they dwell in very great Mountaynes and they obey an Elder, whoſe ſeate is in the Countrey Alcheſiſin: and among theſe, there are two Colledges [a] of the Iſraelites, and they goe forth to the warres together with them. Nor are they ſubiect to the Dominion of the King of Perſia, who liue in very high Mountaynes, from whence deſcending they inuade the bordering Countries, and driue away booties; and returne againe into their Mountaynes. They feare the force and violence of no man. But the Iewes who dwell among them, are the Diſciples of the Wiſe-men, and obay the Head of the Captiuitie of Babylon. You trauell fiue dayes iourney from hence to Ghaaria, where are fiue and twentie thouſand Iſraelites. And it is the beginning of the Vniuerſities [b] of the Inhabitants of the Mountaynes Hbaphthon, which it is certainly knowne, to be more then an hundred in number. And in theſe places, the Countrey of Media beginneth: And theſe are of the firſt Captiuitie carryed away by King Salmanaſar. But they ſpeake the Chalday Language, and among them are the Diſciples of Wiſe-men. And the chiefe Citie Ghamaria pertayning to the Kingdome of Perſia is neere vnto them within one dayes iourney. But they are vnder the power and dominion of the King of Perſia, to whom they pay Tribute. And the Tribute appointed in all the Kingdome of the Iſmaelites, is, that all the Males aboue fifteene yeares old, ſhould pay yeerely, one Golden Amircus apiece. And the Golden piece of Money called Amircus, valueth one Spaniſh Morabetine piece of Gold and an halfe.

It is now twelue yeeres ſince a certayne man, named Dauid Elroi, aroſe out of the Citie Ghamaria, who was the Diſciple of Hbaſdai, the Head of that Captiuitie, and of Iacob the honourable, Head of the Aſſembly of Leui, in the Metropolitan Citie of Baghdad, and became very learned in the Law of Moſes, and in the Bookes of Doctrine, and alſo in all externall wiſedome, and in the Language and Writing of the Iſmaelites, and in the Bookes of the Magicians and Inchanters. He therefore put on this minde, that he would rayſe Armes againſt the King of Perſia, and gathering together thoſe Iewes, who dwelt in the Mountaynes Hbaphthon, making warre with all Nations, hee would goe vnto Hieruſalem to winne it by aſſault. And that hee might perſwade the Iewes thereunto, he vſed lying and deceitfull ſignes, affirming, that hee was ſent from God to vanquiſh Hieruſalem, and to free them from the yoke of the Nations; ſo that with many of the Iewes, he procured credit vnto himſelfe, and obtayned the name of their Meſſias. The King of the Perſians hearing the fame of this matter, ſent for him to talke with him, vnto whom hee went without any feare at all; and being demanded whether he were the King of the Iewes, hee boldly anſwered, that it was ſo; and forth-with he was commanded to be apprehended, and caſt in Priſon: in the which who ſo are included by the Kings ſentence, are kept there all their life. But that Priſon is in the Citie Dabaſthan, nigh adioyning to the great Riuer Gozen: Now after three dayes, a Councell of the Princes and Miniſters being gathered together by the King, in the which they determined to conſult and treate concerning this attempt of Innouation begunne by the Iewes, ſuddenly that Dauid was preſent there, looſed out of Priſon of his owne accord, no man knowing thereof; whom when the King ſaw, wondring he demanded: who hath brought thee hither, or deliuered thee out of Priſon? to whom hee anſwering: Mine owne wiſdome, ſaith he, and my induſtry. For I am nothing afraid of thee, or of thy ſeruants. Then the King crying out, Apprehend him, ſaith he. To whom the Princes and ſeruants anſwered, that ſurely, his voice was heard of all, but that his ſhape was ſeene of no man. Wherefore the King vehemently wondering at his wiſedome, was aſtoniſhed. But, hee ſaith againſt the King: Behold, I make my way, and he beganne to goe before, the King following him: but all the Nobilitie and Seruants followed the King. And when they came to the banke of the Riuer; Dauid ſpreading abroad the Napkin which he carried vpon the waters, leaping in, paſſed ouer; and at that time he was ſeene of all, wondring at the Spectacle of his paſſing ouer, whom to purſue and take with little Boates, they attempted in vaine, and all proclaimed, that no Inchanter in the World might be compared vnto him: but hauing trauelled the ſame day ten dayes iourney, comming to Elghamaraia, through the vertue of an vninterpretable name, hee declared vnto the Iewes what had hapned vnto him, they wondring at the wiſdome of the man. But the King of the Perſians ſending Meſſengers vnto Bagdad, certified Almirus Almunadinus the great Calipha of the Iſmaelites, of this matter, & requeſted that he would cauſe Dauid Elroi to be with-held from ſuch Enterprizes by the principal head of the captiuitie, and the chief Rulers of the Aſſemblies; otherwiſe vnleſſe they took order for this matter, he threatned publike deſtruction to al the Iews liuing in the Kingdome of Perſia. All the Vniuerſities of the Countrey of Perſia ſtricken with exceeding great feare of the matter, ſent letters vnto that principal man, who was accounted the head of the captiuitie & to the heads of all the Aſſemblies, whatſoeuer they were remayning in Bagdad, to this purpoſe: Why ſhall we dye in your eyes, aſwell we as all the Vniuerſities ſubiect vnto this Kingdom? reſtrayne this man, we beſeech you, leaſt innocent bloud be ſhead. Therefore the Head of the Captiuitie, and the Chiefe Rulers of the Aſſemblies wrote theſe or the like Letters vnto Dauid: We will giue you to vnderſtand, that the time of our deliuery is not yet come, and that our ſignes haue not yet beene ſeene; for a man is not made ſtrong through the wind. Wherefore, foretelling, wee enioyne you altogether to abſtayne from ſuch determinations, enterprizes, and attempts; if otherwiſe, be reiected of all Iſrael. They alſo by Meſſengers aduertized Zachai Hanaſſi, who was in the Countrey Aſſur, and Ioſeph ſurnamed the Seer, Burhan Alpelech, liuing there, that Dauid Elroi might bee repreſſed by Letters written from them; which was diligently regarded by them, but all in vaine: for he would not forſake that wicked way, wherein he perſiſted, vntill a certaine King of the Togarmim aroſe called Zinaldin, who is ſubiect vnto the King of Perſia, and hee ſending ten thouſand pieces of Gold vnto the Father in Law of Dauid Elroi, perſwaded him to end theſe troubles, by killing his Sonne in Law priuily: which when hee had vndertaken to performe, he thruſt Dauid thorow with a Sword, lying in bed at his houſe; and this was the end of his determinations, and vaine ſubtiltie. Nor yet, he being dead, was the anger of the King of the Perſians appeaſed towards thoſe people of the Mountaynes, and other Iewes ſubiect to his Dominion: wherefore the Iewes, by Meſſengers, required helpe of the Head of the Captiuitie. He therefore going vnto the King himſelfe, appeaſed him with mild and wiſe ſpeeches, and hauing preſented and giuen many Talents of Gold, he ſo confirmed him, that afterward great quietneſſe happened to the whole Countrey.

Departing from hence, I trauelled foure dayes iourney to Siaphaz, the Metropolitan Citie of Perſia, and alſo the moſt ancient, called Perſidis, from whence the name was giuen to the whole Countrey, in the which there are almoſt ten thouſand Iewes. From Siaphaz in ſeuen dayes iourney you come to the Citie Ginah, ſeated in a very large place nigh vnto the banke of the Riuer Gozen, frequented with the moſt famous Trading of all Nations and Languages, in a Plaine and very ample ſoyle, where are about eight thouſand Iewes. The furtheſt Citie of this Kingdome, great and famous Samarcheneth, ſtandeth fiue dayes iourney from Ginah, where are fiftie thouſand Iſraelites, ouer whom Maſter Abdias Hanaſſi ruleth, and among them, there are many wiſe and rich men. In foure dayes iourney from hence you come to Tubot a Metropolitan Citie, in the Woods whereof ſweet ſmelling Moſſe * is found. Trauelling continually eight and twentie dayes iourney from thence, I came vnto the Mountaynes Nisbon, which hang ouer the Riuer Gozen flowing from them, and are aſcribed vnto the Kingdome of Perſia, where are many Iſraelites.

raelites. And they ſay, * that in thoſe Cities of the Mountaynes Niſbor, foure Tribes of the Iſraelites inhabit, carried away in the firſt Captiuitie by Salmanaſar the King of the Aſſyrians, to wit, Dan, Zabulon, Aſſer, and Nephthali: as it is written. And he carryed them away into Lahhlahh and Habor, the Mountaynes Gozen. Mountaynes of Media. Their Countrey is extended twentie dayes iourney in length, with many Cities and Caſtles inhabited, all Mountaynous; almoſt by which the Riuer Gozen runneth on the one ſide. But the Inhabitants themſelues are vnder the ſubiection of no Nation, but are ruled by a certaine Gouernour; whoſe name is now, Ioſeph Amarcala a Leuite: and among them are the Diſciples of Wiſe-men. They till grounds and make warre with the Borderers, the Children of Chus, and trauell on warfare through the Deſarts. They haue amitie with Copher Althorech, worſhippers of the winds, a people who leade their liues in the Deſarts, Theſe neither eat bread, nor drinke wine: but eat the raw fleſh of beaſts, as well cleane as vncleane, and thoſe either new killed, and yet trembling through the life bloud, or alſo dry, but vnboyled, and alſo deuoure the members taken from liuing beaſts. They want a Noſe, but in ſtead thereof they haue two holes in their faces, wherewith they breathe: They are friends to the Iſraelites. But, it happened fifteene yeares ſince, that inuading the Countrey of Perſia with a great Armie, they vanquiſhed the Metropolitan Citie Rai, and hauing made a mightie ſlaughter vtterly waſted it, and ſpoyling the houſes and fields, carried away a great bootie, returning through the Deſarts, the like example whereof, for many Ages, was neuer ſeene or heard in Perſia. Wherefore the King of the Perſians being vehemently inraged, determined vtterly to aboliſh from the Earth, the name of that Nation, firſt, hatefull to him alone, not daring to attempt any ſuch matter in the times of his Anceſtors. Leuying therefore an Armie for warfare, and ſeeking ſome Guide, to whom the places of that Nation were knowne, a certaine man voluntarily offered himſelfe, who affirmed, that hee was of the ſame Nation, and knew their dwellings. But being demanded what was needfull for the performing of the Voyage, he anſwered, that they had need of prouiſion of bread and water for fifteene dayes iourney: which of neceſſitie ſhould be ſpent in a very great Wilderneſſe: following whoſe counſell, when they had ended fifteene dayes iourney, beeing deſtitute of neceſſarie food and drinke for men and beaſts, yet notwithſtanding, they neither ſaw the place whether they intended to goe, nor any tokens of habitation. The Guide therefore being called for by the King, when he was demanded, where is your word, whereby you vndertooke to ſhew vs the Enemies; anſwered, that he had gone out of the way: wherefore, at the commandement of the angry King he was put to death.

And now, part of the men and beaſts began to periſh through famine. But by the Kings Decree it was publikely commanded, that whatſoeuer prouiſion of victuall was found with any man, ſhould be imparted to the company, and that the beaſts ſhould alſo bee diuided. After this manner, therefore they wandered thirteene dayes more through the Wilderneſſe, and at length came vnto the Mountaynes Niſbor, in which the Iewes inhabit. The Armies therefore of the Perſians reſted themſelues in the Gardens and Orchards, whereof there were very many in that place, and nigh vnto the Fountaynes: for it was the ſeaſon of the yeare when fruits are ripe. They therefore eate and ſpoyled, and ſaw no man comming forth vnto them: but beheld very many Cities and Towers in the Mountaynes afarre off.

The Mountaynes Niſbor.

Therefore the King ſent two of his Seruants to demand, what Nation dwelled in thoſe Mountaynes, and that they ſhould paſſe ouer vnto them, going ouer the Riuer either by Boat or ſwimming. But they found a great Bridge, fortified with Towers furniſhed, and with a doore ſhut, but beyond the Bridge, there was a great Citie. The Spyes therefore crying out before the Bridge, a certaine man came forth, by whom being demanded, what doe you ſeeke, or of what Country are you, they vnderſtood them not, vntil a certaine Interpreter came, who vnderſtood the Perſian Language: to whom demanding, they anſwered, we are the Seruants of the King of the Perſians, ſent to demand who you are, and whom you ſerue. To whom he anſwered, we are Iewes, and ſerue no King or Prince of the Gentiles, but a certaine principall man of the Iewes. And being demanded concerning the worſhippers of the winds, the children of Chus of Cophar Althorech, they anſwered; they are a Nation ioyned in league with vs: and whoſoeuer goeth about to hurt them, wee ſuppoſe hee would harme vs. The Spyes therefore returning vnto the King, reported the whole matter vnto him; who was vehemently afraid. But the next day after, the Iewes denounced warre againſt the King of Perſia, who ſaid, that hee came not to make warre againſt them, but againſt his Enemies of Cophar Althorech. And if they would fight with him, he would reuenge that iniurie, by killing all the Iewes who dwelt in the Kingdome of Perſia: for he was very well aſſured, that they were ſtronger then hee in that place; beſides, hee intreated that they would not aſſayle him with battell, but would ſuffer him to fight it out by dint of Sword againſt Cophez Althorech, and that they would ſell him prouiſion of victuall and food conuenient for his Armie. Conſulting therefore together, it pleaſed the Iewes to conſent vnto the King of Perſia, for all the Iſraelites ſakes dwelling in his Kingdome. The King therefore being admitted with all his Armie, ſpent fifteene dayes there, beeing moſt honourably entertayned among them: but in the meane ſpace, the Iewes declared the whole matter by Meſſengers and Letters, vnto their Confederates Cophar Althorech: which being knowne, gathering their forces together, they expected the enemie at the paſſage of the Mountaynes; and in a conuenient place for their purpoſe, they gaue the Perſian ſo mightie an ouerthrow, comming vnto them, that being vanquiſhed and put to flight, they compelled him to returne into his own Countrey with a very ſmall number. But it happened, that one Iew of this Prouince named Moſes, deceitfully ſeduced by a certaine Perſian Horſeman, followed the King of Perſia, and when they came into Perſia, being brought into ſeruitude, hee was poſſeſſed by the ſame Horſe-man. But, when at a certaine time, they who exerciſed their Bowes, ſported in preſence of the King, one Moſes was ſhewed vnto him, who was moſt excellent in the dexteritie of ſhooting: who being demanded of the King by an Interpreter, openly declared the manner of his condition: and was preſently infranchiſed, clothed with Purple and Silken Garments, and inriched with Kingly Gifts: and was required, that he ſhould receiue their Religion, the hope and condition of great Riches being propounded, and alſo the gouernment of the Kings Houſe promiſed: which when he courteouſly denyed to doe, yet was he placed by the King, with great Salom the Prince of the Vniuerſitie of Achphahan; whoſe Daughter alſo he married by conſent of the Father, and the ſelfe-ſame Moſes told me all this Hiſtorie.

ANd when I departed out of theſe Countries, I went into the Countrey Chenazthaan, nigh vnto which the Riuer Tigris runneth, which falling from thence runneth downe into Hodu, that is, the Indian Sea, and compaſſeth the Iland Nekrokis about the mouth thereof, contayning the ſpace of ſixe dayes iourney, in the which there is only one Fountaine, and they drinke no other water then what is gathered from the ſhowres; for it wanteth Riuers, and that Land is neither ſowed, nor tilled: yet is it very famous through the Trading of the Indians, and Ilands ſeated in the Indian Sea, and Merchants of the Countrey of Senaar, and Æliman, and Perſia, bringing thither all ſorts of Silken and Purple Garments, Hempe and Cotton, Flaxe, and Indian Cloth, which they call Moch, Wheate, Barley, Millet, and Oats great plentie, alſo all ſorts of Meates and Pulſe, which they barter and ſell among themſelues. But the Indian Merchants bring exceeding great plentie of Spices thither. And the Ilanders execute the office of Factors and Interpreters among the reſt, and by this art only they liue. But in that place there are about fiue hundred Iewes.

Taking Ship from hence, ſayling with a proſperous winde, in ten dayes I was brought to Kathipha, where are fiue thouſand Iewes: in theſe places the ſtone called Bdellius is found, made by the wonderfull workemanſhip of Nature. For on the foure and twentieth day of the Moneth Niſan, a certaine dew falleth downe into the waters, which being gathered, the Inhabitants wrap vp together, and being faſt cloſed, they caſt it into the Sea, that it may ſinke of it owne accord into the bottome of the Sea, and in the middle of the moneth Tiſri, two men being let downe into the Sea by ropes, vnto the bottome, bring vp certaine creeping * Wormes which they haue gathered, into the open Ayre, out of the which (being broken and cleft) thoſe ſtones are taken. In ſeuen dayes iourney from thence I came to Haaulam, which is the beginning of their Kingdome who worſhip the Sunne in ſtead of God; to wit, a Starre-gazing Nation deſcended from the Children of Chus. They are men of a blacke colour, ſincere, and of very great fidelitie both in promiſes and receits, and alſo in gifts. They haue this cuſtome, that ſuch as come vnto them from other remote Countries, hauing receiued them into the Hauen, they cauſe their names to be ſet downe in writing, by three Scribes, and ſo carry their names vnto the King; and afterward bring the parties themſelues alſo vnto him, whoſe Merchandiſes being receiued into his protection, the King commandeth to be left landed in the fields, without ſetting any watchman to keepe them. Moreouer, one Gouerner ſitteth in a publike houſe, vnto whom, whatſoeuer any man in the whole Countrey hapneth to leeſe, is brought, and is eaſily receiued by the owner thereof, being there required, ſo that the certaine tokens be ſhewed, wherby the loſt thing may be knowne. And this fidelitie and honeſt dealing is common and publike in all that Kingdome. All this country from Eaſter vnto the beginning of the yeere, through all the Spring time and Summer, burneth with outragious heate: wherefore, from the third houre of the day vntill the Euening, all men lye cloſe ſhut vp in their houſes. But afterward, Candles and Lampes being lighted, and orderly ſet throughout all the ſtreetes and markets, they worke and exerciſe their Arts and Profeſſions all the night; for they cannot at all doe it in the day time by reaſon of the exceeding heate. And in this Countrey Pepper groweth vpon Trees planted by the Inhabitants in the fields of euery particular Citie. And euery one of them haue their proper Gardens, are aſſigned and knowne. The ſhrub it ſelfe is very little, and bringeth forth a white ſeede, which g gathered by them, is put into Baſons, and being ſteeped in hot water is ſet forth in the Sunne, that it might bee dryed, and being hardned, may be preſerued; and ſo it getteth a blacke colour. Cinamon and Ginger are found there, and very many other kindes of Spices. The Inhabitants of this Countrey burie not their dead, but being enbalmed with diuers Drugs and Spices, they place them in ſeates, and cloathe them with Nets, ſet in a certaine order according to their ſeuerall families, but their fleſh dryeth with the bones, and becommeth ſo ſtiffe that they ſeeme euen like vnto the liuing. And euery one of the liuing know their Anceſtors from many yeeres deſcents. But they worſhip the * Sunne, with many and great Altars euery where built, about halfe a mile without the Citie. Commonly therefore, early in the morning they run forth and goe vnto the Sunne, vnto which vpon all the Altars there are Images conſecrated, made by the Magicke Arts, according to the ſimilitude of the circle of the Sunne; and when the Sunne ariſeth, thoſe Orbes ſeeme to be inflamed, and ſound with a great crackling or ruſtling noyſe. And they haue euery one their ſeuerall Box in their hands, as well the women as the men, and all together offer Incenſe to the Sunne. This way of theirs is folly vnto them. But among this Nation, in all places, the Iewes whoſe ſumme at the moſt amounteth to a thouſand houſes in all, are of no leſſe blacke a colour then the Inhabitants themſelues, yet are they good and honeſt men, and embracers of the Commandements, who obſerue the Law of Moſes, and are not accounted altogether vnskilfull in the bookes of Doctrine and Cuſtomes.

How they embalme their dead.

* They are ſince become Mahumetans, as in all the Indian Ports vſually they are.

Departing out of their Countrey, in two and twentie dayes I ſayled vnto the Ilands Cheuerag, the Inhabitants whereof worſhip the Fire, and are called Dugbijn; but among them thirtie thouſand Iewes dwell. And the Dugbijn haue their Prieſts in euery place, conſecrated to the ſuperſtition of their Temples: But theſe Prieſts are the moſt skilful Sorcerers and Inchanters of the whole world, in euery kinde of this vanitie. And before euery Temple there is a great and large field, in the which a mightie fire burneth euery day, which they call Elbotha, and they vſe to make their Children paſſe through this fire to purge them; and alſo caſt their dead into the middeſt of the fire to be burned. Moreouer, there are ſome of the Nobilitie of the Land, who ſolemnely bequeathe or vow themſelues to the fire aliue. But when any man of theſe declareth ſuch his intended deuotion to his familiars, acquaintance, and kindred, preſently with the great reioycing of all, and with the common voyce, hee heareth theſe words: Bleſſed art thou, and it ſhall be well with thee. On what day therefore the vow is to bee performed, being firſt entertained with a great Banquet, if he be rich, he is carried on Horſe-backe, but if hee be poore, hee is brought on foote, accompanied with a multitude of his friends and others, vnto the entrance of the field, from whence beginning his race, he leapeth into the fire; but then all his familiars, couſins and kindred, reioyce with exceeding great ioy, ſtriking vp the Drum, and dancing vntill he be wholly burned. But three dayes after, two of the chiefe Prieſts going vnto his houſe, command the whole family to prepare the houſe of their Father, who would be preſent with them the ſame day, and declare vnto them what they were to doe. Calling therefore vnto them certaine witneſſes of the Citie, behold, Satan taking vpon him his ſhape, is preſent, of whom the wife and children demand how it fareth with him in that other world: to whom he anſwering, I came, ſaith he, vnto my companions, by whom I am not receiued, vntill I pay thoſe things which I owe to my familiar friends and kindred: ſo preſently, hee deſtributeth his goods to the children, and commandeth all the debts to be paid to the Creditors, and whatſoeuer is owing by the debtors, to be demanded, the witneſſes receiuing and ſetting downe in writing all his words and commandes, of whom notwithſtanding he is not ſeene: but then ſaying that he will goe his way againe, he vaniſheth.

after the manner of bruit Beaſts , and feede vpon Herbes found nigh vnto the bankes of the Riuer Piſſon, they wander naked through the fields,ſo that they ſeeme to be voyde of the ſenſe and minde of other men. They vſe the Act of Generation without difference,and with whomſoeuer they meete, hauing no regard of kindred, acquaintance or familiaritie, age or qualitie of degree : they inhabit an exceeding hot Countrey. When the reſt of the Azzuanei aſſaile theſe to make a prey of them, ſetting wheaten Bread, Rayſins, and dry Figs in the field,they take them running to the meate ; and carrying them away, they ſell them in Ægypt, and other bordering Kingdomes. And theſe bee thoſe blacke Slaues very well knowne to all , of the Poſteritie of Cham. From Azzuuan you trauell twelue dayes iourney vnto Hhalauan , where are three hundred Iewes. But from thence trauelling in troopes,you goe fiftie dayes iourney through the Wilderneſſe, called Al-Tſabhara, into the Countrey Zeuilan, which ſelfe ſame is Hhauila , to wit, that which is vpon the Coaſt of Geena, or Ginea. But in that Wilderneſſe there are many Mountaynes of Sand , which being ſometimes mooued and ſcattered through the violence of the Windes, ouerwhelmeth and killeth the whole troopes of trauelling men : but ſuch as could auoide or eſcape ſuch danger, returne laden with many things, as Iron, Braſſe , and diuers kindes of Fruites, and Pulſe, and alſo Salt : beſides, they carrie Gold , and moſt precious Pearles. And this Countrey is in the Land of Chus, named Alhhabas ,lying towards the Weſt. From Hhaluan in thirteene dayes iourney, you come to the Metropolitan Citie Kits , which is the head of the beginning of Ægypt ; in it there are about thirtie thouſand Iewes. From thence to Pium, is fiue dayes iourney : this in time paſt was called Pithon , where there are twentie Iewes , and yet at this day no ſmall Monuments are ſeene, of the workes made by our Fathers, in the building of that Citie. From thence you trauell foure dayes iourney to Miſraim, a great Citie , ſeated nigh vnto the bankes of Nilus , from which the name is giuen to all the Countrey , where are two thouſand Iewes, diuided into two * Synagogues ; the one of the Iſraelites, called the Synagogue Saamyn; and the other of the Babylonians, called the Synagogue Ghirhhakym. The one and the other obſerue diuers rites and cuſtomes in the diſtribution of the annuall readings. For the Babylonians vſe euery weeke to reade one Paraſſa , after the ſame manner which is common throughout all Spaine ; and therefore euery yeere they finiſh the Law. But the Iſraelites diuide euery Paraſſa into three orders or degrees,and ſo they reade ouer the Law in three yeeres. And both theſe after a ſolemne manner,twice in the yeere powre forth their prayers together, to wit, vpon the day of the reioycing of the Law, and on the Feſtiuall day of the Law giuen. Among all theſe Nathaniel hath the chiefe authoritie, being the greateſt of the Nobilitie, and head of the Aſſembly; who ruleth all the Vniuerſities of Ægypt, and appointeth Maſters and Church-wardens. * And he is among the chiefe and moſt familiar ſeruants of the great King, in the Palace and throne of the Princely ſeate Soan , ſetled in the Citie Mitſraim , which Citie is the Metropolitan Citie to the children of Ghereb, that is, to all the Arabians : but the Kings name is Amir Almumanin Eli the ſonne of Abitaaleb : all the Inhabitants of which Countrey are called Moredim, that is, Rebels , who haue eſtranged themſelues from Amir Almumanin Alghabazzi, remayning in Bagdad: wherefore there is great and perpetuall diſſenſion betweene both the Kings. But he hath a Throne in the Palace Soan, dedicated vnto him. And he commeth forth twice in the yeere,once at the time of their feaſt of Eaſter,and againe in thoſe dayes when the Riuer Nilus ouerfloweth. And Soan it ſelfe is compaſſed, and fortified with walls ,but Mitſraim hath no walls,but is enuironed with Nilus on the one ſide. And this is a very great citie,furniſhed with many market places & publike houſes,and hath many rich Iewes. The Country it ſelfe neuer ſaw either Raine,Ice, or Snow, but burneth with outragious heate. It is watered with Nilus, which once euery yeere vehemently ſwelling in the Moneth Elul , couereth and ouer-floweth all the Land for fifteene dayes iourney; the Waters continuing all Elul and Tiſri, and making the earth fruitfull. And the policie and diligence of the ancient was ſuch , that in an Iland which the Riuer maketh, a Pillar ſhould be erected,&c. And the Fiſhes of that Riuer are very fat,the Trane wherof being molten, is preſerued for the vſe of Candles. But whoſoeuer being abundantly glutted with thoſe Fiſhes, drinketh the water of the ſame Riuer, feeleth or ſuffereth no harme at all. For that water is both drinke and alſo medicine againſt ſuch repletions. And there hath beene a perpetuall queſtion, and a diuers opinion among men, concerning the ouerflowing of Nilus, but the Ægyptians ſuppoſe, that at the ſame time when this Riuer ouer-floweth, it vehemently raineth in the higher Countries, that is, in the Land of Hhabas, which we ſaid to be named Hhauila. At what time the Riuer doth not ouer-flow , nothing is ſowed in Ægypt ; and hereupon ſterilitie and famine follow. The fields are ſowed in the Moneth * Marhheſuan, Nilus being now receiued into his Chanell : but Barley is reaped in the Moneth [a] Adar, and Wheate the next Moneth after, that is , [b] Niſan , and in the ſame Moneth Cherries are ripe , and Almonds, and Cucumbers, Gourdes,Peaſecods,and Beanes,Lentiles,Ruches and [c] Spelt, and diuers kindes of Pot-hearbs, as Purſlane, Aſparagus, and Lettice, Corianders, Succorie, Coleworts, and Grapes. earth is moſt fruitfull, and repleniſhed with euery good thing. But the Gardens and Orchards are watered from the Lakes and Trenches, and that with the Waters of the Riuer. For the Riuer which is brought vnto the Citie Miſraim, is diuided from thence into foure heads, one whereof runneth by Damiata, ſometime called Caphtor, nigh vnto which it falleth into the Sea. The ſecond runneth downe vnto the Citie Raſir, next vnto Alexandria, and there mingleth it ſelfe with the Sea. The third floweth downe by the way of Aſmon, a very great Citie in the boundes of Ægypt; nigh vnto all thoſe heads of the Riuer, many Cities, and Caſtles, and many Townes are ſeated vpon either ſide, and men may trauell vnto them all, either by Boate or Land. No Countrey in the whole world may be compared with this, for the multitudes of habitations; and all the Countrey is plaine, and all moſt fruitfull, and well ſtored with good things. Ancient Mitſraim is two leagues diſtant from the new Mitſraim, but it is all waſted, and deſolate; yet it retayneth many tokens of the walls and houſes, and ſheweth not a few Monuments of the Treſuries and Store-houſes of Ioſeph, yet to be ſeene. In the ſame place alſo there is a moſt artificiall Pillar, built by the Art Magicke, like vnto which there is none ſeene in all the Land. But thoſe Store-houſes conſiſt of Lime and Stones, of exceeding ſtrong Workmanſhip. Without the compaſſe of the Citie ſtandeth a Synagogue, called by the name of Moſes our Teacher liuing in peace, of ancient building, which being yet remayning, a certaine old Miniſter maintaineth, a Diſciple of Wiſe-men, whom they call Alſich Abunetzer, that is, the old father of the Watch. And the Diameter of that defaced Mitſraim, containeth almoſt three miles, from whence to the Countrey of Goſſen are eight leagues; it is called Bulzzir zzalbizz, a great Citie, in the which there are about a thouſand Iewes.

From thence you make one whole dayes iourney to Al Bubijg, where are two hundred Iewes. And from hence in halfe a dayes iourney you come to Manziphtha, where are two hundred Iewes. From which Citie, Ramira is foure leagues diſtant, and in it there are ſeuen hundred Iewes; from whence it is fiue dayes iourney to Lambhala, where are fiue hundred Iſraelites. Two dayes iourney afterward, you come to Alexandria, a Citie ſo called, after the name of Alexander the Macedonian, at whoſe commandement wee reade that it was built, and ſtrongly fortifyed, with great beautie of the Walls, Houſes, and Palaces. Without the Citie, a great and goodly building is to be ſeene, which is reported to haue beene the Colledge of Ariſtotle, the Maſter of Alexander, wherein there are almoſt twentie Schooles, frequented in former times by men of the whole world, who aſſembled thither to learne the Philoſophie of Ariſtotle; and betweene euery one of them, were Marble Pillars. But the Citie it ſelfe is excellently built, as we haue ſaide, vpon the Pauement of the ground, and with Vaults and Arches vnder ground, through the hidden paſſages whereof, men may come into the Market places and not bee ſeene: of the which ſome are a whole mile in length, as from the Gate Reſid, vnto the Gate leading vnto the Sea, in which Gate a way was made and paued, vnto the very Hauen of the Citie of Alexandria, which is extended one mile within the Sea, in which place a very high Tower was built, which the Inhabitants call Magraah, but the Arabians, Magar Alecſandria, that is, the Pharos of Alexandria: on the top of which Tower, it is reported, that Alexander ſometimes ſet a glittering Looking-glaſſe, in the which all the warlike Ships which ſayled either out of Græcia, or from all the Weſt vnto Ægypt, to harme them, might bee ſeene fiftie dayes iourney by land, that is, aboue the ſpace of fiue hundred leagues off.

Nigh vnto the Sea-ſhoare at Alexandria, there is a very ancient Sepulchre to be ſeene, adorned with the ſhapes of all Beaſts and Birds cut thereon, and engrauen with ancient letters, which no man now is able to reade, or know. But there are ſome, who ſuppoſing, ſay, that a certaine very ancient King was buried there before the time of the Floud. And the length of the Sepulchre is fifteene Spaniſh ſpans, to wit, of the hand extended from the thumbe vnto the little finger: and the bredth contayneth ſixe ſuch ſpans. About three thouſand Iſraelites liue at Alexandria. From Alexandria, you make two whole dayes iourneyes to Damiata, which ſelfeſame Citie was called, Caphtor, where are two hundred Iſraelites. From thence to Sonbat, is halfe a dayes iourney, the Inhabitants whereof ſowe the beſt Flaxe, and make Nets or Canopies: and this merchandiſe is ſold throughout the whole World. From thence, in foure dayes iourney I came to Ailam, otherwiſe called Elim, now poſſeſſed and inhabited by the Arabians dwelling in the deſert. From whence to Raphidim, is two dayes iourney, where the Arabians dwell: and none of the Iſraelites. But from hence, in one day you goe to the Mountaine Sinai, on the top whereof there is a Temple of Monkes, called Suriani. And at the foot of the Mountaine ſtandeth a great Caſtle, which they call Tor Sinai, the Inhabitants hereof ſpeake the Chalday Tongue, that is, the Language of Thargum. This Mountaine is little, fiue dayes iourney diſtant from Sinai: and the Inhabitants of this place are ſubiect to the yoke of the Ægyptians. And hitherto extendeth the Kingdome of Ægypt. Departing from thence, in twentie dayes iourney by Sea, I was brought to Meſſana, which is the beginning of the Iland of Sicilia. But Meſſana, or Meſſina, as it is now called, ſtandeth vpon a Straight of the Sea, named Lunid, lying betweene Calabria and the Iland of Cicilia it ſelfe: and two hundred Iewes are there. The ſoyle of the Iland is moſt fruitfull, and repleniſhed with all good things, and beautified with Gardens, and Orchards. In this place the Pilgrims aſſemble who determine to goe to Hieruſalem; for, from hence is the beſt and moſt commodious paſſage into Syria. From hence I trauelled two dayes iourney to Panormus, a great Citie, contayning two miles in bredth, and as many in length. In this Citie a princely houſe is excellently built by King Guilielmus. One thouſand fiue hundred Iewes, or thereabouts, remayne in that place: and very many beſides of the Idumaans *, and Iſmaelites.

All the Colledges of the Iewes of Germanie are ſeated nigh vnto the great Riuer Robenus, from the Citie Colonia, which is the beginning of the Kingdome, vnto the Citie called, Keſamburk, in the borders of Germanie: which ſpace is fifteene dayes iourney long. This Countrey, in time paſt, was called, Aſchenaz. Theſe are the Countries in Germanie, in the which the Colledges of the Iſraelites are, who are all accounted worthie men, by the Riuer Moſella, and Konphelinas, and Odranchah, and Kuna, and Kotania, and Binga, and Garmezza, and Maſtheran. Therefore all the Iſraelites remayne diſperſed throughout all Countries. But whoſoeuer ſhall hinder Iſrael that it may not be gathered together, ſhall neuer ſee the good ſigne, nor liue with Iſrael. But at what time God ſhall viſite our Captiuitie, and exalt the Horne of his Chriſt, then euery one ſhall ſay: I will bring forth the Iewes, and gather them together. And in theſe Cities are the Colledges and Schollers of Wiſe-men, and they loue their brethren, and ſpeake peace vnto all that are neere and farre remoued, and ioyfully and with reioycing receiue Gueſts comming vnto them, and celebrating a feaſt for their entertaynment, ſay: O our Brethren reioyce, for the Diuine ſaluation ſhall come very ſpeedily [a], as it were, in the twinkling of an eye. And except, fearing, we doubted that the end was not yet come, ſurely, we had been alreadie gathered together: but notwithſtanding we cannot yet, vntill the time of the ſong, and the voyce of the Turtle be heard, and the Embaſſadors come, and ſay: Let God alwaies be magnified. They vſe to write Letters one vnto another, whereby they confirme each other in the Doctrine of Moſes. And bewayling Sion, and lamenting Hieruſalem, they aske mercy at the hands of God, and giue themſelues to prayer, cloathed in mourning attire, and earneſtly bent to abſtinence. Theſe Metropolitan Cities therefore which wee haue mentioned, are in Germanie, furniſhed with Colledges of the Iſraelites. Beſides, there are Aſtranburk, and Danirasburk, Mandatrach, Peſſinghes, Bamburk, Sar, and Raſenburk, which is alſo the end of the Kingdome; in which Metropolitan Cities, many of the Iſraelites are, Diſciples of the Wiſe-men, and rich. From thence and beyond, is the Kingdome of Bohemia, now called Praga, and it is the beginning of the Land of Sclauonia, the Inhabitants whereof are called Cananites, by the Iewes dwelling there. Theſe people ſell their ſonnes and daughters to all thoſe Nations: and the Ruſſes doe the like. But that Countrey is farre extended, from the gate of Praga vnto the gate of the great Citie Pin, which ſtandeth in the furtheſt end of the Kingdome. The whole Countrey is mountaynous, and very full of Woods, in the which thoſe Beaſts are found, named Veergares, and the ſame are called Sables. The weather is ſo cold in the Winter, that for that ſeaſon, no man may ſafely come forth out of the houſe. And hitherto extendeth the Kingdome of Pruſſia. Returning from hence, I came into the Kingdome of France, which Countrey was called, Sarphat, by the Ancient. Trauelling ſixe dayes iourney from the Citie Al-Sanad, I came to Paris, the greateſt Citie of the whole Kingdome of King Lodouicus, ſeated nigh vnto the Riuer Saban: in which there are Diſciples of Wiſe-men, the moſt learned of all thoſe who at this day remayne in all the Countrey, who applie themſelues day and night vnto the ſtudie of the Law, hoſpitall men, and curteous towards all the Brethren that paſſe that way, and companions of all their Brethren the Iewes. The mercifull God bee mercifull vnto them and vs, and confirme vpon vs and them, that which is written: And he ſhall bring backe, and gather thee together from all the Nations, among whom the Lord thy God hath diſperſed thee. Amen, Amen.

A Relation of a Voyage to the Eaſterne India. Obſerued by EDWARD TERRY, Maſter of Arts and Student of Chriſt-Church in Oxford.

Thoſe that goe downe to the Sea in ſhips: that doe buſineſſe in great waters: Theſe ſee the workes of the Lord, and his wonders in the deepe. Pſ. 107. Qui neſcit orare, diſcat nauigare.

TO THE READER.

MAſter Terry had found a fitter roome, if he had not comne late, and as in India, ſo here alſo had attended that Honorable Embaſſadour, Sir T. Roe. But his tardy comming hath made vs entertayne him, not with leſſe welcome in ſubſtance, but with leſſe conuenience in Seat-ceremonie; being forced to place him as he comes, in a lower meſſe, but with equall cheere. Yea himſelfe makes good cheere by his preſence, and preſents his whole meſſe, and all the Table and Attendants with rich Cates of Sea and Land varieties farre fetched and deere bought by him, and here imparted gratis; whether wee vnderſtand it of the Author, or (as I vndertake) of the Readers. How many Eare-rings and Breaſt-brooches giue (that which they take, the) place to Saint Georges Garter worne neere the vtmoſt and loweſt confines of our Microcoſme. Take this as a good fare-well draught of Engliſh-Indian liquor. And as contraries ſet neere their contraries make the beſt luſtre, ſo this our Scholer-Chriſtian-Preacher-Traueller, hauing (as Trauellers wont) lighted into companie of a Iew before; a halfe-turkiſed Chriſtian, with diuers Turkes following immediatly after; ſhineth as a Gemme in the darke, and as a Precious-ſtone amongſt a heape of ſtones. Thus here although ſome of his rayes are by the Attirer taken away to preuent reiterations of things deliuered in the former relations of Sir Tho. Roe, or others; Neither doth our Author come here altogether vnfitly to guide vs from Perſia, (where wee haue made long ſtay) by the way of India and Arabia, and laſtly, with a Portugall Vice-roy wee meane to ſhip our ſelues homewards, taking ſome Religious in companie for ſome better knowledge of Africa, and the Chriſtianitie there.

Things remarkable obſerued in his Voyage to the Indies. Sea-fight with the Portugals.

APologies very often call Truth into queſtion. Hauing therefore nothing for to countenance theſe my rude Relations but the certaintie of them; I omit all vnneceſſarie introductions: vſing no further Preface then this, that the Reader would vndoubtedly beleeue, what the Relator doth moſt faithfully deliuer.

So to make an entrie vpon the firſt beginning of our Voyage, the third of Februarie, 1615. our Fleete (conſiſting of ſixe goodly ſhips, the Charles, Vnicorne, Iames, Globe, Swan, and Roſe, all vnder the command of Captaine Beniamin Ioſeph) fell downe from Graueſend into Tilburie Hope.

The ninth of March (after a long and tyring expectation) it pleaſed God to ſend vs what we deſired, a North-eaſt wind: which day wee left that weary Road, and ſet ſayle for Eaſt India. The wind was fauourable to vs till the ſixteenth day at night, at which time a moſt fearefull ſtorme ouertooke vs, we being then in the Bay of Portugall. In this ſtorme wee loſt ſight both of the Globe, and Roſe. The Globe came againe into our Companie, the two and twentieh following; but the Roſe was no more heard of, till her arriue at Bantam, about ſixe Moneths after. This ſtorme continued violent till the one and twentieth.

Pico de Teneriſſa.

The eight and twentieth, we had ſight of the Grand Canaries, and that Mountaine which threatens the Skie, in the Iland of Teneriſſa, commonly called, The Peake, which by reaſon of its immenſe height, in a cleere day may be ſeene more then fortie leagues at Sea, (as the Mariners report.) Theſe Ilands lie in eight and twentie degrees of North latitude.

Turnadoes.

The one and thirtieth, being Eaſter day, we paſſed vnder the Tropick of Cancer; and the ſeuenth of Aprill, the Sunne was our Zenith. From that day vntill the fourteene, wee were becalmed induring extreme heate. The ſixteenth, we met with winds which the Mariners call, The Turnadoes, ſo variable and vncertaine, that ſometime within the ſpace of one houre, all the two and thirtie ſeuerall winds will blow. Theſe winds were accompanied with much thunder and lightning, and with extreme rayne, ſo noyſome that it makes mens clothes preſently to ſtinke vpon their backes. The water likewiſe of theſe ſlimy vnwholſome ſhowres, whereſoeuer it ſtands, will in ſhort time bring forth many offenſiue creatures. Theſe Turnadoes met with vs when we were about twelue degrees of North latitude, and kept vs companie ere they quitted vs, till wee were two degrees South-ward of the Equinoctiall, vnder which wee paſſed the eight and twentieth of Aprill. The nineteenth of May being Whitſunday, wee paſſed the Tropicke of Capricorne. So that we were ſeuen weekes compleat vnder the Torrid Zone.

Whales. Dolphines.

Betweene the Tropickes we ſaw almoſt euery day different kindes of fiſhes in greater abundance then elſe-where. As the great Leuiethan, whom God hath made to take his paſtime in the Seas. Dolphins, Boneetooes, Albicores, Flying fiſhes, and many others. Some Whales we ſaw of an exceeding greatneſſe, who in calme weather often ariſe and ſhew themſelues aboue the water, where they appeare like to great Rockes, in their riſing ſpowting vp into the Ayre with noyſe a great quantitie of water, which fals downe againe about them like a ſhowre. The Dolphin is a fiſh called for his ſwiftneſſe the arrow of the Sea, differing from many other in that hee hath teeth vpon the top of his tongue, he is pleaſing to the Eye, ſmell, and taſt, of a changeable colour, fin'd like a Roach, couered with very ſmall ſcales, hauing a freſh delightſome ſent aboue other fiſhes, and in taſte as good as any. Theſe Dolphines are wont often to follow our ſhips, not ſo much (I thinke) for the loue they beare vnto man as ſome write) as to feed themſelues with what they find caſt ouer-board. Whence it comes to paſſe, that many times they feed vs, for when they ſwimme cloſe to our ſhips, we ſtrike them with a broad Inſtrument, full of Barbes, called an Harping Iron faſtened to a Rope by which we hale them in. This beautifull Dolphin may bee a fit Embleme of a Race of men, who vnder ſweet countenances carrie ſharpe tongues. Boneetooes and Albicores are in colour, ſhape, and taſte much like to Mackerils, but grow to be very large. The Flying fiſhes of all other liue the moſt miſerable liues, for beeing in the water, the Dolphines, Boneetooes, and Albicores perſecute them, and when they would eſcape by their flight, are oftentimes taken by rauenous fowles, ſomewhat like our Kites which houer ouer the water. Theſe flying fiſhes are like men, profeſſing two trades, and thriue of neither.

Boneetooes and Albicores. Flying fiſhes.

But to proceed in our paſſage, the twelfth of Iune early in the morning, wee eſpyed our long wiſhed for Harbour, the Bay of Soldania, about twelue leagues ſhort of the Cape of Good Hope, wherein we came happily to an Anchor that fore-noone. Heere wee found one of the Companies ſhips, called the Lion, come from Surat, and bound for England, who hauing a faire gale put to Sea the fourteenth day at night.

Soldania.

We made our abode in this Harbour till the eight and twentieth following, on which day we being well watered and refreſhed, departed, when the Swan our fift ſhip tooke her way for Bantam. The nine and twentieth, we doubled the Cape of Good Hope, whoſe latitude is in thirtie fiue degrees South. Off this Cape there ſetteth continually a moſt violent Current Weſtward, whence it comes to paſſe, that when a ſtrong contrarie wind meets it, their impetuous oppoſition makes the Sea ſo to rage, that ſome ſhippes haue beene ſwallowed, but many endangered in thoſe Mountaynes of water. Few ſhips paſſe that way without a ſtorme. The two and twentieth of Iuly, we diſcouered the great Iland of Madagaſcar, commonly called Saint Laurence, we being then betwixt it and the Mayne: we touched not at it, but proceeding in our courſe, the fift of Auguſt following, came neere to the little Ilands of Mobilia, Gazidia, Saint Iohn de Caſtro, called in generall the Ilands of Comora, lying about twelue degrees Southward of the Equator.

Iles of Comora.

The ſixt early in the morning, our men looking out for Land, eſpyed a Sayle about three or foure leagues off, which ſtood in our courſe directly before vs. About noone, the Globe our leaſt ſhip (by reaſon of her nimbleneſſe, ſayling better then her fellowes) came vp with her on the broad ſide to wind-ward, and according to the cuſtome of the Sea hailed her, asking whence ſhe was; She * anſwered indirectly, of the Sea, calling our men Rogues, Theeues, Heretickes, Deuils, and the conclusion of her rude complement was in loud Canon Language, diſcharging ſeuen great Peeces of Artillerie at our Globe, whereof ſixe pierced her through the Hull, mayming ſome of her men, but killing none. Our Globe replyed in the ſame voyce, and after that fell off.

About three of the clocke in the after-noone, the Charles our Admirall came vp with her ſo neere, that we were within Piſtoll ſhot. Our Commander Captaine Ioſeph proceeded religiouſly, offering Treatie before hee thought of reuenge. So we ſaluted her with our Trumpets, ſhee vs with her wind Inſtruments, then we ſhewed our men on both ſides aloft; this done, Captaine Ioſeph called to them that their principall Commander might come aborad, to giue an account for the iniurie they had lately before offered vs; their anſwere was, they had neuer a Boat, our Com-

* Fight with a Portugall Carracke, mentioned before in Sir T. Roe, and M. Child: but here more fully deliuered, and therefore againe expreſſed, that it might appeare who were true cauſers of the quarrell, as alſo that it was a priuate quarrel and not of State, or Princes, but of Meneles and Ioſeph the Captaines, with the perſons vnder their commands: one offering, the other vindicating wrong. So may the Reader obſerue of former fights with Beaſt, Downton, &c. not the Spaniſh King warring with his Maieſtie of England, but the Portugall Merchants and Commanders in the Indies, enuying to others that Trade, which might leſſen their gaines there: as in Magellans Voyage they did to the Spaniards, which alſo you haue ſeene in the Dutch, and may obſerue of men of the ſame Trade in euery ſtreet of London. The old Verſe of Heſiod, Καὶ κεραμεὺς κεραμεῖ, &c. ſhewes this quarrell as old as men, at leaſt as the old man of Couetouſneſſe, and Ambition, and Enuie; the cauſe alſo why the firſt-borne of Nature ſlue the firſt Brother which Nature had ſeene. If Portugals hereby led, haue offered wrong to the Engliſh, and ſuffered right from them, it is but as in caſes twixt Engliſh Gentlemen or Merchants at home, ſauing that this bodie is more Giantly, and of greater conſequence, as the concurrence of more priuate purſes and perſons, and yet no State-warre: with which except in our Prayer, we haue nothing to doe. In like caſe of Trade, I ſuppoſe the Portugals would now quarrell with the Spaniards in their Eaſt, and theſe with them in their Weſt. I am ſure that in the Indies, Dutch haue taken Dutch, and Engliſh other Engliſh (not of that Eaſt-Indian Company) notwithſtanding ſubiection to one and the ſame Crowne or State.

mander replyed, he would ſend them one, and immediately cauſed his Barge to be manned, and ſent off to them, which brought backe one of their Officers, and two other meane fellowes with this bold meſſage from their Captaine; that he had promiſed not to leaue his ſhip, and therefore forced he might, but neuer would be commanded out of her.

Captaine Ioſeph receiued the Meſſage, and vſed them which brought it ciuilly, commanding that they ſhould be ſhewed, how we were prepared for to vindicate our ſelues, which made the poore Portugals to ſhake more then an Ague, and vpon it deſired our Commander to write a few words to theirs, which with their perſwaſion happily might make him come. Captaine Ioſeph willing to preſerue his honour, and to preuent bloud, conſented, and forth-with cauſed a few words to this effect to be wrote vnto him. That, Whereas he the Commander of the Carrack, had offered violence to our ſhip, they ſailed peaceably by him, he willed him to come ſpeedily, and giue reaſon for that wrong; or elſe at his perill, &c. So he diſcharged thoſe Portugals, ſending one of our Maſters Mates backe with them, with thoſe few words and this Meſſage; that if hee refuſed to come, he would ſinke by his ſide, but that hee would force him before hee left him. (Morientium verba ſunt Prophetica, his words came to paſſe, for he himſelfe before he ſtird, fell by a great ſhot that came not long after from the Carracke ſide.) The Captaine of the Carracke (notwithſtanding all this) was ſtill peremptorie in his firſt anſwere. So our men returning, Captaine Ioſeph himſelfe made the three firſt ſhot, which ſurely, did them great miſchiefe, as we imagined by the loud out-cry we heard from them, after they were diſcharged. This done, the Bullets began to flye on both ſides. Our Captaine cheering his company, aſcended the halfe Decke, where hee had not beene the eight part of an houre, and a great ſhot from the Carrackes Quarter, depriued him of life in the twinkling of an Eye, it hit him on the breſt, beating out of his bodie his heart, and other of his vitals, which lay round about him ſcattered in his diffuſed bloud. After Captaine Ioſeph was ſlaine, the Maſter of our ſhip continued the fight about halfe an houre, then knowing that there was another to be admitted into that prime place of command, the night approching, for that time gaue ouer; putting out a Flagge of Councell to call the Captaine of the Vice-Admirall (Captaine Henry Pepwell) who was to ſucceed, and the other Maſters aboard, for to conſult about the proſecution of this Encounter. The night beeing come, wee now proceeded no farther. The Carracke ſtood ſtill on her courſe, putting forth a light at her Poope for vs to follow her, and about midnight came to an Anchor vnder the Iland of Mobilia, which when wee perceiued let fall our Anchors too.

Reſolute Spirits of both Commanders. Captaine Ioſeph ſlaine.

The ſeuenth, early before it began to dawne, we prepared for a new aſſault, firſt commending our ſelues to God by Prayer.

The morning come, we found the Carracke ſo cloſe to the ſhoare, and the neereſt of our ſhips at the leaſt a league off, that we held our hands for that day, expecting when ſhee would weigh her Anchors and ſtand off to Sea (a fitter place to deale with her.) In the after-noone we cheſted our late ſlaine Commander, and without any ceremonie of ſhot, vſuall vpon ſuch occaſions (becauſe our Enemies ſhould take no notice) caſt him ouer-boord againſt the Iland of Mobilia.

A little before night the Carracke departed to Sea, wee all looſed our Anchors, opened our Sayles, and followed. The day now left vs, and our proud Enemie (vnwilling as it ſhould ſeeme to eſcape) put forth a light as before, for vs to follow him (as afterward we did to purpoſe) the night well nigh ſpent, we commended againe our ſelues and cauſe to God. This done, the day appeared in a red Mantle, which proued bloudie vnto many that beheld it. And now you may conceiue that our foure ſhips are reſolued to take their turnes one after the other, that they may force this proud Portugall, either to bend or breake. Our Charles playes her part firſt, and ere ſhee had beene at defiance with her Aduerſary halfe an houre, there came another ſhot from the Enemie, which hitting againſt one of our Iron Peeces, that lay on the halfe Decke, brake into ſhiuers, dangerouſly wounding our new Commander, the Maſter of our ſhip, and three other of the Mariners which ſtood by. Captaine Pepwels left Eye was beaten all to pieces; two other wounds he receiued in his head; a third in his legge, a ragged piece of this broken ſhot ſticking faſt in the bone thereof, which ſeemed by his complayning to afflict him more then all the reſt. The Maſter had a great piece of the brawne of his arme ſtrooke off, which made him likewiſe vnſeruiceable for a time. This was our new Commander welcommed to his authoritie, wee all thought his wounds mortall, but hee liued till about fourteene moneths after, when hee dyed peaceably on his bed, in his returne for England.

Captaine Pepwell wounded, with the Maſter and others. Captaine Pepwell dyeth 14. moneths after.

The Captaine and Maſter both thus diſabled, deputed their authoritie to the chiefe Maſters Mate, who behaued himſelfe reſolutely, and wiſely. So we continued, alternis vicibus, ſhooting at our Aduerſary as at a Butte; and by three of the cloke in the after-noone had beat downe her mayn-maſt, her Mizen-maſt, her foretop-maſt; and moreouer, had made ſuch wounds in her thick ſides, that her caſe was ſo deſperate, ſhee muſt either yeeld or periſh. Her Captaine (called Don Emanuel Meneſes, a braue reſolute man) thus diſtreſſed, ſtood in for the ſhoare, being not farre from the Iland of Gazidia. We purſued as farre as we durſt without hazard of ſhipwracke, then we ſent of our Barge with a Flagge of Truce to ſpeake with him, hee waued vs with another, ſo Maſter Connocke (our chiefe Merchant) employed in that buſineſſe, boldly entred his ſhip, Virtus in hoſte laudanda.

and deliuered theſe words to him, and his company; that he had brought them life and peace if they would accept it, with all telling Don Emanuel, hee had deſerued ſo well by his vndaunted valour, that if he would put himſelfe into our hands, he ſhould be entertayned with as much honour and reſpect as euer any Captiue was. But (Duris vt Ilex tonſa bipennibus-- ducit opes animumq; ferro) Hee as an Oke gathered ſtrength from his wounds, contemning the miſerie hee could not preuent, anſwering Maſter Connocke thus, that no infelicitie ſhould make him alter his firſt reſolution; how that hee would ſtand off to Sea, if poſſibly he could, and encounter with vs againe, and then if fire and Sword forced him, he might vnhappily be taken, but he would neuer yeeld, and if we tooke him aliue, he hoped that he ſhould find the reſpect of a Gentleman, and till then we had our Anſwere.

Carrack wracked and burnt. She was reported of incredible wealth, both in money and commodities.

So our Meſſenger was diſcharged, and ſhortly after this diſtreſſed ſhip wanting her wings, was forced by the wind and waues vpon the adiacent Iland Gazidia, where ſhe ſtuck faſt between two Rocks: thoſe that were left aliue in her by their Boats gat vpon the ſhoare, which when they had all recouered, willing (it ſhould ſeeme) to conſume what they could not keepe, they ſet her on fire to make her a coale, rather then we ſhould make her a Prize. The poore Portugals after they had left their ſhip, were moſt inhumanely vſed by the barbarous Ilanders, who ſpoyled them of all they brought aſhoare for their ſuccour; ſome of them beeing ſlaine in the oppoſition, and doubtleſſe, had made hauocke of them all, had they not beene relieued by two ſmall Arabian ſhips there in Trade, which in hope (I ſuppoſe) of ſome great reward, tooke them in, and conueyed them ſafely to their owne Citie Goa.

The Ilands fertilitie.

In this combate we loſt out of our foure ſhips but fiue men (too many by that number) three out of our Admirall, and two out of the Iames; beſides we had ſome twentie in our whole fleet hurt, which afterward recouered. But of ſeuen hundred which ſayled in the Carracke, there came not aboue two hundred and fiftie to Goa, as afterward we were credibly informed. In this fearefull oppoſition, our Charles made at her Aduerſarie three hundred ſeuentie and fiue great ſhot (as our Gunners reported) to theſe wee had one hundred Muſquetiers, that played their parts all the while. Neither was our enemie idle, for our ſhip receiued at the leaſt one hundred great ſhot from him, and many of them dangerous ones through the Hull. Our Fore-maſt was pierced through the middeſt; our mayne-maſt hurt, our mayne-ſtay, and many of our mayne Shrouds cut in ſunder. But I haue dwelt too long vpon a ſad Diſcourſe, I make haſte to refreſh my ſelfe vpon the pleaſant Iland.

White Paper well ſold.

After we ſaw the Carracke fired which was about mid-night, wee ſtood off and on till morning, to ſee if we might find any thing in her aſhes; of which when wee deſpayred, wee ſought about for ſuccour to comfort our wounded and ſicke men on the ſhoare. The Land was very high, againſt which the Sea is alwayes deepe, ſo that it was the tenth day following ere wee could be poſſeſſed of a good Harbour; which enioyed, we found the Iland very pleaſant, full of goodly Trees, couered all ouer with a greene Veſture and exceeding fruitfull, abounding in Beeues, Kids, Poultry, Sugar-canes, Rice, Plantens, Oranges, Coquer-nuts, and many other wholeſome things; of all which wee had ſufficient to releeue our whole company, for a ſmall quantitie of white Paper, and few glaſſe Beades, and Penie Kniues. For inſtance wee bought as many good Oranges as would fill an Hat, for halfe a quarter of a ſheet of white Paper, and ſo in proportion all other prouiſion. Much of their Fruites the Ilanders brought vnto vs in their little Canoes (which are long narrow Boates cut like Troughes out of firme Trees) but their cattell we bought on ſhoare; where I obſerued the people to bee ſtreight, well limmed, able men, their colour very tawnie, moſt of the men but all the women (I ſaw) vnclothed hauing nothing about them but to hide their ſhame. Such as were couered had long Garments like to the Arabians, whoſe Language they ſpeake, and of whoſe Religion they are, Mahometans, very ſtrict as it ſhould ſeeme, for they would not endure vs to come nigh their Churches. They haue good conuenient houſes for their liuing, and faire Sepulchres for their dead. They ſeeme to liue ſtrictly vnder the obedience of a King, whoſe place of reſidence was ſome few miles vp in the Countrey. His leaue by Meſſengers they firſt craued, before wee had libertie to buy any prouiſion. Their King aduertized of our arriuall, bade our Commander welcome with a Preſent of Beeues, and Goats, and choice Fruits of his Countrey, and was recompenſed, and well contented againe with Paper, and ſome other Engliſh Toyes. Wee ſaw ſome Spaniſh money amongſt them, of which they made ſo little reckoning, that ſome of our men had Rials of Eight in exchange for a little Paper or a few Beades. What they did with our Paper, we could not gheſſe.

The Coquer-nuts (of which this Iland hath abundance) of all the Trees in the Forreſt (in my opinion) may haue preeminence, for meerely with it, without the leaſt helpe from any other, a man may build, and furniſh a ſhip to Sea; for the heart of this Tree will make Plankes, Timbers, and Maſts, a Gumme that growes thereon, will ſerue to calke our ſhip. The Rind of the ſame Tree will make Cordage and Sailes, and the large Nut thereof beeing full of kernell, and pleaſant liquor, will for a need ſerue for thoſe that ſayle in this ſhippe for meate and drinke, and the ſtore of theſe Nuts for Merchandize.

Now, well ſtored with theſe Nuts, and other good prouiſion, after ſixe dayes abode there, the breaches our ſhip receiued in fight being repayred, and our men well refreſhed, wee put againe gaine to Sea toward Eaſt India the ſixteenth, and a proſperous winde following vs, paſſed happily vnder the Line without the leaſt heate to offend vs, the foure and twentieth day enſuing. Our courſe was for the Iland of Succotora, neere to the mouth of the Red Sea, from whence comes our Aloes Succotrina, but an aduerſe gale from the Arabian ſhoare kept vs off, that wee could by no meanes recouer it. We paſſed by it the firſt of September. The immediate yeere before our Engliſh fleet touching at this Iland, learned this Apothegme from the petie King thereof, who comming to the water ſide, and hearing ſome of our winde Inſtruments, aſked if they played Dauids Pſalmes (of which being a Mahometan, he had heard.) Hee was anſwered by one that ſtood by, they did; He replyed thus, That it was an ill inuention of him that firſt mingled Muſicke with Religion; for before (ſaid he) God was worſhipped in heart, but by this in ſound. I inſert not this relation to condemne muſick in Churches, Let him that bids vs prayſe the Lord with ſtringed Inſtruments and Organs, plead the Cauſe.

Socotora.

Preciſe Mahumetan Apophthegme.

But to returne to my diſcourſe. Miſſing our Port at Succotora, wee proceeded on our voyage, and the fourth of September kept a ſolemne funerall, in memorie of our ſlaine Commander, when after a Sermon, the ſmall ſhot and great Ordnance, made a loud peale to his remembrance. The ſixt of September at night, to our admiration and feare, the water of the Sea ſeemed as white as milke, others of our Nation, ſince paſſing on that courſe, haue obſerued the like, but I am yet to learne what ſhould be the true cauſe thereof, it being farre from any ſhoare, and ſo deepe, that wee could fetch no ground. The twentie one, wee diſcouered the mayne Land of Eaſt India: and the twentie two, had ſight of Diu and Damon, Cities lying in the skirts thereof, well fortified and inhabited by Portugals. The twentie fiue, we came happily to an Anchor in Swally Road, within the Bay of Cambaya, the harbour for our fleet while they make their ſtay in the Eaſterne India. And thus in a tedious Paſſage haue I brought my Reader as far as Eaſt India, let him now bee pleaſed for a while to repoſe himſelfe vpon the Shoare, there to take a view of the populous Court, and the no leſſe fruitful, then ſpacious Territories of the great Mogol.

Funerall for Capt. Ioſeph.

Water of the Sea in this place alway white, as in former voyages is ſeene.

Deſcription of the Mogols Empire, and the moſt remarkable things of Nature and Art therein.

THe large Empire of the great Mogol is bounded on the Eaſt with the Kingdome of Maug: Weſt with Perſia, and the mayne Ocean Southerly: North with the Mountaynes of Caucaſus, and Tartaria. South with Decan and the Gulfe of Bengala. Decan lying in the skirts of Aſia, is diuided betweene three Mahometan Kings, and ſome other Indian Rhaiaes. This ſpacious Monarchie, called by the Inhabitants Indoſtan, diuiding it ſelfe into thirtie and ſeuen ſeuerall and large Prouinces, which anciently were particular Kingdomes; whoſe names with their principall Cities, and Riuers, their Situation, and Borders, their extent in length and breadth, I firſt ſet downe beginning at the North-weſt.

First, Candahor, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyes from the heart of all his Territorie North-weſt; it confines with the King of Perſia, and was a Prouince belonging to him. 2. Cabul, the chiefe Citie ſo called, the extreameſt North-weſt part of this Emperours Dominions: it confineth with Tartaria; the Riuer Nilab hath its beginning in it, whoſe Current is Southerly, till it diſcharge it ſelfe in Indus. 3. Multan, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyes South from Cabul, and Candahor, and to the Weſt ioynes with Perſia. 4. Haiacan, the Kingdome of the Baloches (a ſtout warlike people) it hath no renowned Citie. The famous Riuer Indus (called by the Inhabitants Skind) borders it on the Eaſt; and Lar (a Prouince belonging to Sha-Abas, the preſent King of Perſia) meetes it on the Weſt. 5. Buckor, the chiefe Citie called Buckorſuccor. The Riuer Indus makes a way through it, greatly enriching it. 6. Tatta, the chiefe Citie ſo called. The Riuer Indus makes many Ilands in it, exceeding fruitfull and pleaſant. The chiefe Arme meetes with the Sea at Synde, a place very famous for curious handi-crafts. 7. Soret, the chiefe Citie is called Ianagar. It is a little Prouince but rich, lyes Weſt from Guzarat, and hath the Ocean to the South. 8. Ieſelmeere, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it ioyneth with Soret, Buckor, and Tatta, lying to the Weſt of it. 9. Attack, the chiefe Citie ſo called: it lyeth on the Eaſt ſide of Indus, which parts it from Haiacan. 10. Peniab, which ſignifieth fiue Waters, for that it is ſeated among fiue Riuers, all tributaries to Indus, which ſomewhat South of Lahor make but one Current: it is a great Kingdome, and moſt fruitfull, &c. Lahor the chiefe Citie is well built, very large, populous, and rich; the chiefe Citie of Trade in all India. 11. Chiſhmeere, the chiefe Citie is called Siranakar, the Riuer Phat paſſeth through it, and ſo creeping about many Ilands ſlides to Indus. 12. Banchiſh, the chiefe Citie is called Biſhur: it lyeth Eaſt, Southerly from Chiſhmeere, from which it is diuided by the Riuer Indus. 13. Iengapor, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyeth vpon the Riuer Kaul, one of the fiue Riuers that water Peniab. 14. Ienba, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyeth Eaſt of Peniab.

Although yee haue this deſcription before, pag. 578. with the Map alſo; yet for the differing method, and cleering of ſome things there more doubtfull, I haue here added this alſo, abbreuiating it in ſome ſuch things as are the ſame with the former, to which it may be in diuers things a kind of Gloſſe, as Sir T. Roes Map to both. The former ſeemed imperfectly written in the number of the corſes or miles which here ſeeme more exactly. The differing names may alſo helpe to further knowledge; of which I had ſought better inſtruction before the preſſe if I might, as there ſignifie.

Ganges.

15. Delli, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyeth twixt Ieuba and Agra, the Riuer Iemni (which runneth through Agra, and falleth into Ganges) begins in it. Delli is an ancient great Citie, the ſeate of the Mogols Anceſtors, where moſt of them lye interred. 16. Bando, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it confineth Agra on the Weſt. 17. Malway, a very fruitfull Prouince, Rantipore is the chiefe Citie. 18. Chitor, an ancient and great Kingdome, the chiefe Citie ſo called. 19 Guzarat, a goodly Kingdome, and exceeding rich, incloſing the Bay of Cambaya. The Riuer Tapte watereth Surat, it trades to the Red Sea, to Achin, and to diuers other places. 20. Chandis, the chiefe Citie called Brampoch, which is large and populous. Adioyning to this Prouince, is a petie Prince, called Partapſha, tributarie to the Mogol, and this is the Southermoſt part of all his Territories. 21. Berar, the chiefe Citie is called Shapore, the Southermoſt part whereof doth likewiſe bound this Empire. 22. Naruar, the chiefe Citie called Gehud, it is watered by a faire Riuer, which emptieth it ſelfe in Ganges. 23. Gwaliar, the chiefe Citie ſo called, where the King hath a great treaſury of Bullion. In this Citie likewiſe there is an exceeding ſtrong Caſtle wherein the Kings priſoners are kept. 24. Agra, a principall and great Prouince, the chiefe Citie ſo called. From Agra to Labor (the two choiſe Cities of this Empire) is about foure hundred Engliſh miles, the Countrey in all that diſtance euen without a Hill, and the high way planted on both ſides with Trees, like to a delicate walke. 25. Sanbal, the chiefe Citie ſo called, the Riuer Iemni parts it from Naruar, and after at the Citie Helabaſs falls into Ganges, called by the Inhabitants Ganga. 26. Bakar, the chiefe Citie called Bikaneer, it lyeth on the Weſt ſide of Ganges. 27. Nagracutt, the chiefe Citie ſo called, in which there is a Chappel moſt richly ſet forth, both ſeeled and paued with plate of pure gold. In this place they keepe an Idoll, which they call Matta, viſited yeerly by many thouſands of the Indians, who out of deuotion cut off part of their tongues, to make a ſacrifice for it. In this Prouince there is likewiſe another famous Pilgrimage, to a place called Iallamaka, where out of cold Springs and hard Rocks, there are dayly to be ſeene inceſſant eruptions of fire, before which the Idolatrous people fall downe and worſhip. 28. Syba, the chiefe Citie is called Hardwair, where the famous Riuer Ganges ſeemed to begin, iſſuing out of a Rocke, which the ſuperſtitious Gentiles imagine to bee like a Cowes head, which of all ſenſible Creatures they loue beſt. Thither they likewiſe goe in troopes daily for to waſh their bodies. 29. Kakares, the principall Cities are called Dankalee and Purhola, it is very large and exceeding mountaynous, diuided from Tartaria by the Mountaynes of Caucaſes: it is the fartheſt part North, vnder the Mogols ſubiection. 30. Gor, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it is full of Mountaynes. The Riuer Perſilis which diſchargeth it ſelfe in Ganges, beginnes in it. 31. Pitan, the chiefe Citie ſo called; the Riuer Kanda waters it, and falls into Ganges in the Confines thereof. 32. Kanduana, the chiefe Citie is called Karbakatenka, the Riuer Serſily parts it from Pitan; that and Gor are the North-eaſt bounds of this great Monarchie. 33. Patna, the chiefe Citie ſo called; the Riuer Ganges bounds it on the Weſt, Serſilij on the Eaſt; it is a very fertile Prouince. 34. Ieſual, the chiefe Citie called Raiapore, it lyeth Eaſt of Patna. 35. Meuat, the chiefe Citie called Narnol; it is very mountaynous. 36. Vdeſſa, the chiefe Citie called Iokanat; it is the moſt remote part Eaſt of all this Kingdome. 37. Bengala, a moſt ſpacious and fruitfull Kingdome, limited by the Gulfe of the ſame name, wherein the Riuer Ganges diuided in foure great Currents, loſeth it ſelfe.

Goez his iourny from hence to China, followeth in the next booke.
Mogols greatneſſe.

And here a great errour in our Geographers muſt not eſcape mee, who in their Globes and Maps, make India and China Neighbours, when many large Countries are interpoſed betwixt them, which great diſtance will appeare by the long trauell of the Indian Merchants, who are vſually in their iourney and returne, more then two yeeres from Agra to the walls of China. The length of thoſe forenamed Prouinces is North-weſt to South-eaſt, at the leaſt one thouſand Courſes, euery Indian Courſe being two Engliſh miles. North and South, the Extent thereof, is about fourteene hundred miles, the Southermoſt part lying in twentie degrees; the Northermoſt in fortie three of North latitude. The breadth of this Empire is North-eaſt to South-weſt, about fifteene hundred miles.

Now, to giue an exact account of all thoſe forenamed Prouinces, were more then I am able to vnder-take, yet out of that I haue obſerued in ſome few, I will aduenture to gheſſe at all, and thinke for my particular, that the great Mogol, conſidering his Territories, his Wealth, and his rich Commodities, is the greateſt knowne King of the Eaſt, if not of the World. To make my owne coniecture more apparent to others. This wide Monarchie is very rich and fertile, ſo much abounding in all neceſſaries for the vſe of man, as that it is able to ſubſiſt and flouriſh of it ſelfe, without the leaſt helpe from any Neighbour.

Plentie of victuals.

Fine bread.

Cakes & portable hearths.

To ſpeake firſt of that which Nature requires moſt, Foode; this Land abounds in ſingular good Wheate, Rice, Barley, and diuers other kindes of Graine to make bread (the ſtaffe of life) their Wheate growes like ours, but the Graine of it is ſomewhat bigger and more white, of which the Inhabitants make ſuch pure well-reliſhed bread, that I may ſpeake that of it, which one ſaid of the bread in the Biſhoprick of Leige; it is, Panis, pane melior. The common people make their bread vp in Cakes, and bake it on ſmall Iron hearths, which they carry with them when as they iourney, making vſe of them in their Tents, it ſhould ſeeme an ancient cuſtome, gaine to Sea toward Eaſt India the ſixteenth, and a proſperous winde following vs, paſſed happily vnder the Line without the leaſt heate to offend vs, the foure and twentieth day enſuing. Our courſe was for the Iland of Succotora, neere to the mouth of the Red Sea, from whence comes our Aloes Succotrina, but an aduerſe gale from the Arabian ſhoare kept vs off, that wee could by no meanes recouer it. We paſſed by it the firſt of September. The immediate yeere before our Engliſh fleet touching at this Iland, learned this Apothegme from the petie King thereof, who comming to the water ſide, and hearing ſome of our winde Inſtruments, asked if they played Dauids Pſalmes (of which, being a Mahometan, he had heard.) Hee was anſwered by one that ſtood by, they did; He replyed thus, That it was an ill inuention of him that firſt mingled Muſicke with Religion; for before (ſaid he) God was worſhipped in heart, but by this in ſound. I inſert not this relation to condemne muſick in Churches, Let him that bids vs prayſe the Lord with ſtringed Inſtruments and Organs, plead the Cauſe.

Preciſe Mahumetan Apophthegme.

But to returne to my diſcourſe. Miſſing our Port at Succotora, wee proceeded on our voyage, and the fourth of September kept a ſolemne funerall, in memorie of our ſlaine Commander, when after a Sermon, the ſmall ſhot and great Ordnance, made a loud peale to his remembrance. The ſixt of September at night, to our admiration and feare, the water of the Sea ſeemed as white as milke, others of our Nation; ſince paſſing on that courſe, haue obſerued the like, but I am yet to learne what ſhould be the true cauſe thereof, it being farre from any ſhoare, and ſo deepe, that wee could fetch no ground. The twentie one, wee diſcouered the mayne Land of Eaſt India: and the twentie two, had ſight of Diu and Damon, Cities lying in the ſkirts thereof, well fortified and inhabited by Portugals. The twentie fiue, we came happily to an Anchor in Swally Road, within the Bay of Cambaya, the harbour for our fleet while they make their ſtay in the Eaſterne India. And thus in a tedious Paſſage haue I brought my Reader as far as Eaſt India, let him now bee pleaſed for a while to repoſe himſelfe vpon the Shoare, there to take a view of the populous Court, and the no leſſe fruitful, then ſpacious Territories of the great Mogol.

Funerall for Capt. Ioſeph.

Water of the Sea in this place alway white, as in former voyages is ſeene.

Deſcription of the Mogols Empire, and the moſt remarkable things of Nature and Art therein.

THe large Empire of the great Mogol is bounded on the Eaſt with the Kingdome of Maug: Weſt with Perſia, and the mayne Ocean Southerly: North with the Mountaynes of Caucaſus, and Tartaria. South with Decan and the Gulfe of Bengala. Decan lying in the skirts of Aſia, is diuided between three Mahometan Kings, and ſome other Indian Rhaiaes. This ſpacious Monarchie, called by the Inhabitants Indoſtan, diuiding it ſelfe into thirtie and ſeuen ſeuerall and large Prouinces, which anciently were particular Kingdomes; whoſe names with their principall Cities, and Riuers, their Situation, and Borders, their extent in length and breadth, I firſt ſet downe beginning at the North-weſt.

First, Candahor, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyes from the heart of all his Territorie North-weſt; it confines with the King of Perſia, and was a Prouince belonging to him. 2. Cabul, the chiefe Citie ſo called, the extreameſt North-weſt part of this Emperours Dominions: it confineth with Tartaria; the Riuer Nilab hath its beginning in it, whoſe Current is Southerly, till it diſcharge it ſelfe in Indus. 3. Multan, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyes South from Cabul, and Candahor, and to the Weſt ioynes with Perſia. 4. Haiacan, the Kingdome of the Baloches (a ſtout warlike people) it hath no renowned Citie. The famous Riuer Indus (called by the Inhabitants Skind) borders it on the Eaſt; and Lar (a Prouince belonging to Sha-Abas, the preſent King of Perſia) meetes it on the Weſt. 5. Buckor, the chiefe Citie called Buckorſuccor. The Riuer Indus makes a way through it, greatly enriching it. 6. Tatta, the chiefe Citie ſo called. The Riuer Indus makes many Ilands in it, exceeding fruitfull and pleaſant. The chiefe Arme meetes with the Sea at Synde, a place very famous for curious handi-crafts. 7. Soret, the chiefe Citie is called Ianagar. It is a little Prouince but rich, lyes Weſt from Guzarat, and hath the Ocean to the South. 8. Ieſelmeere, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it ioyneth with Soret, Buckor, and Tatta, lying to the Weſt of it. 9. Attack, the chiefe Citie ſo called: it lyeth on the Eaſt ſide of Indus, which parts it from Haidcan. 10. Peniab, which ſignifieth fiue Waters, for that it is ſeated among fiue Riuers, all tributaries to Indus, which ſomewhat South of Lahor make but one Current: it is a great Kingdome, and moſt fruitfull, &c. Lahor the chiefe Citie is well built, very large, populous, and rich; the chiefe Citie of Trade in all India. 11. Chiſhmeere, the chiefe Citie is called Siranakar, the Riuer Phat paſſeth through it, and ſo creeping about many Ilands ſlides to Indus. 12. Banchiſh, the chiefe Citie is called Biſhur; it lyeth Eaſt, Southerly from Chiſhmeere, from which it is diuided by the Riuer Indus. 13. Iengapor, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyeth vpon the Riuer Kaul, one of the fiue Riuers that water Peniab. 14. Ienba, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyeth Eaſt of Peniab.

Although yee haue this deſcription before, pag. 578. with the Map alſo; yet for the differing method, and cleering of ſome things there more doubtfull, I haue here added this alſo, abbreuiating it in ſome ſuch things as are the ſame with the former, to which it may be in diuers things a kind of Gloſſe, as Sir T. Roes Map to both. The former ſeemed imperfectly written in the number of the corſes or miles which here ſeeme more exactly. The differing names may alſo helpe to further knowledge; of which I had ſought better inſtruction before the preſſe, if I might, as I there ſignifie.

Ganges.

15. Delli, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it lyeth twixt Ienba and Agra; the Riuer Iemni (which runneth through Agra, and falleth into Ganges) begins in it. Delli is an ancient great Citie, the ſeate of the Mogols Anceſtors, where moſt of them lye interred. 16. Bando, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it confineth Agra on the Weſt. 17. Malway, a very fruitfull Prouince, Rantipore is the chiefe Citie. 18. Chitor, an ancient and great Kingdome, the chiefe Citie ſo called. 19 Guzarat, a goodly Kingdome, and exceeding rich, incloſing the Bay of Cambaya. The Riuer Tapte watereth Surat, it trades to the Red Sea, to Achin, and to diuers other places. 20. Chandis, the chiefe Citie called Brampoch, which is large and populous. Adioyning to this Prouince, is a petie Prince, called Partapſha, tributarie to the Mogol, and this is the Southermoſt part of all his Territories. 21. Berar, the chiefe Citie is called Shapore, the Southermoſt part whereof doth likewiſe bound this Empire. 22. Naruar, the chiefe Citie called Gehud, it is watered by a faire Riuer, which emptieth it ſelfe in Ganges. 23. Gwaliar, the chiefe Citie ſo called, where the King hath a great treaſury of Bullion. In this Citie likewiſe there is an exceeding ſtrong Caſtle wherein the Kings priſoners are kept. 24. Agra, a principall and great Prouince, the chiefe Citie ſo called. From Agra to Lahor (the two choiſe Cities of this Empire) is about foure hundred Engliſh miles, the Countrey in all that diſtance euen without a Hill, and the high way planted on both ſides with Trees, like to a delicate walke. 25. Sanbal, the chiefe Citie ſo called, the Riuer Iemni parts it from Naruar, and after at the Citie Helabaſs falls into Ganges, called by the Inhabitants Ganga. 26. Bakar, the chiefe Citie called Bikaneer, it lyeth on the Weſt ſide of Ganges. 27. Nagracutt, the chiefe Citie ſo called, in which there is a Chappel moſt richly ſet forth, both ſeeled and paued with plate of pure gold. In this place they keepe an Idoll, which they call Matta, viſited yeerly by many thouſands of the Indians, who out of deuotion cut off part of their tongues, to make a ſacrifice for it. In this Prouince there is likewiſe another famous Pilgrimage, to a place called Iallamaka, where out of cold Springs and hard Rocks, there are dayly to be ſeene inceſſant eruptions of fire, before which the Idolatrous people fall downe and worſhip. 28. Syba, the chiefe Citie is called Hardwair, where the famous Riuer Ganges ſeemed to begin, iſſuing out of a Rocke, which the ſuperſtitious Gentiles imagine to bee like a Cowes head, which of all ſenſible Creatures they loue beſt. Thither they likewiſe goe in troopes daily for to waſh their bodies. 29. Kakares, the principall Cities are called Dankalee and Purhola, it is very large and exceeding mountaynous, diuided from Tartaria by the Mountaynes of Caucaſes: it is the fartheſt part North, vnder the Mogols ſubiection. 30. Gor, the chiefe Citie ſo called, it is full of Mountaynes. The Riuer Perſilis which diſchargeth it ſelfe in Ganges, beginnes in it. 31. Pitan, the chiefe Citie ſo called; the Riuer Kanda waters it, and falls into Ganges in the Confines thereof. 32. Kanduana, the chiefe Citie is called Karbakatenka, the Riuer Serſily parts it from Pitan; that and Gor are the North-eaſt bounds of this great Monarchie. 33. Patna, the chiefe Citie ſo called; the Riuer Ganges bounds it on the Weſt, Serſily on the Eaſt; it is a very fertile Prouince. 34. Ieſual, the chiefe Citie called Raiapore, it lyeth Eaſt of Patna. 35. Menat, the chiefe Citie called Narnol; it is very mountaynous. 36. Vdeſſa, the chiefe Citie called Iokanat; it is the moſt remote part Eaſt of all this Kingdome. 37. Bengala, a moſt ſpacious and fruitfull Kingdome, limited by the Gulfe of the ſame name, wherein the Riuer Ganges diuided in foure great Currents, loſeth it ſelfe.

Goez his iourny from hence to China, followeth in the next booke.

Mogols greatneſſe.

And here a great errour in our Geographers muſt not eſcape mee, who in their Globes and Maps, make India and China Neighbours, when many large Countries are interpoſed betwixt them, which great diſtance will appeare by the long trauell of the Indian Merchants, who are vſually in their iourney and returne, more then two yeeres from Agra to the walls of China. The length of thoſe forenamed Prouinces is North-weſt to South-eaſt, at the leaſt one thouſand Courſes, euery Indian Courſe being two Engliſh miles. North and South, the Extent thereof, is about fourteene hundred miles, the Southermoſt part lying in twentie degrees; the Northermoſt in fortie three of North latitude. The breadth of this Empire is North-eaſt to South-weſt, about fifteene hundred miles.

Now, to giue an exact account of all thoſe forenamed Prouinces, were more then I am able to vnder-take, yet out of that I haue obſerued in ſome few, I will aduenture to gheſſe at all, and thinke for my particular, that the great Mogol, conſidering his Territories, his Wealth, and his rich Commodities, is the greateſt knowne King of the Eaſt, if not of the World. To make my owne coniecture more apparent to others. This wide Monarchie is very rich and fertile, ſo much abounding in all neceſſaries for the vſe of man, as that it is able to ſubſiſt and flouriſh of it ſelfe, without the leaſt helpe from any Neighbour.

Plentie of victuals.

Fine bread.

Cakes & portable hearths.

To ſpeake firſt of that which Nature requires moſt, Foode; this Land abounds in ſingular good Wheate, Rice, Barley, and diuers other kindes of Graine to make bread (the ſtaffe of life) their Wheate growes like ours, but the Graine of it is ſomewhat bigger and more white, of which the Inhabitants make ſuch pure well-reliſhed bread, that I may ſpeake that of it, which one ſaid of the bread in the Biſhoprick of Leige, it is, Panis, pane melior. The common people make their bread vp in Cakes, and bake it on ſmall Iron hearths, which they carry with them when as they iourney, making vſe of them in their Tents, it ſhould ſeeme an ancient cuſtome, as may appeare by that preſident of Sarah, when ſhee entertayned the Angels, Geneſ. 18. To their Bread they haue great abundance of other good prouiſion, as Butter, and Cheeſe, by reaſon of their great number of Kine, Sheepe, and Goats. Beſides, they haue a beaſt very large, hauing a ſmooth thicke skinne without haire, called a Buffelo, which giues good Milke: the fleſh of them is like Beefe, but not ſo wholſome. They haue no want of Veniſon of diuers kinds, as red Deare, fallow Deare, Elkes, and Antelops; but no where imparked: the whole Kingdome is as it were a Forreſt, for a man can trauell no way but he ſhall ſee them, and (except it bee within a ſmall diſtance off the King) they are euery mans Game. To theſe they haue great ſtore of Hares, and further to furniſh out their feaſts, varietie of Fiſh and Fowle; it were as infinite as needleſſe to relate particulars. To write of their Geeſe, Duckes, Pigeons, Partridges, Quailes, Peacockes, and many other ſingular good Fowle, all which are bought at ſuch eaſie rates, as that I haue ſeene a good Mutton ſold for the value of one ſhilling, foure couple of Hennes at the ſame price, one Hare for the value of a penie, three Partridges for as little, and ſo in proportion all the reſt. There are no Capons amongſt them but men.

The Beeues of that Countrey differ from ours, in that they haue each of them a great Bunch of griſſelly fleſh which growes vpon the meeting of their ſhoulders. Their Sheepe exceed ours in great bob-tayles, which cut off are very ponderous, their wooll is generally very courſe, but the fleſh of them both is altogether as good as ours.

Now, to ſeaſon this good prouiſion, there is great ſtore of Salt: and to ſweeten all, abundance of Sugar growing in the Countrey, which after it is well refined, may be bought for two pence the pound, or vnder.

Salt and Sugar

Their Fruits are very anſwerable to the reſt, the Countrey full of Musk-melons, Water-melons, Pomegranats, Pome-citrons, Limons, Oranges, Dates, Figs, Grapes, Plantans (a long round yellow fruit, in taſte like to a Norwich Peare) Mangoes, in ſhape and colour like to our Apricocks, but more luſcious, and (to conclude with the beſt of all) the Ananas or Pine which ſeemes to the taſter to be a pleaſing compound, made of Strawberries, Claret-wine, Roſe-water, and Sugar, well tempered together. In the Northermoſt parts of this Empire they haue varietie of Apples and Peares. Euery where good roots, as Carrets, Potatoes, and others like them as pleaſant. They haue Onions and Garlicke, and choyce herbs for Salads. And in the Southermoſt parts, Ginger growing almoſt in euery place. And here I cannot chooſe but take notice of a pleaſant cleere liquor called Taddy, iſſuing from a ſpongie tree that growes ſtraight and tall, without boughs to the top, and there ſpreads out in branches (ſomewhat like to an Engliſh Colewort) where they make inciſions: vnder which they hang ſmall earthen Pots to preſerue the influence. That which diſtills forth in the night, is as pleaſing to the taſte as any white Wine, if drunke betimes in the morning. But in the heat of the day the Sunne alters it ſo, as that it becomes heady, ill reliſhed, and vnwholſome. It is a piercing medicinable drinke, if taken early, and moderately, as ſome haue found by happie experience, thereby eaſed from their torture inflicted by that ſhame of Phyſicians, and Tyrant of all maladies, the Stone.

Fruits.
Ginger.
Taddy.

At Surat, and to Agra and beyond, it neuer raines but one ſeaſon of the yeere, which begins neere the time that the Sunne comes to the Northerne Tropicke, and ſo continues till his returne backe to the Line. Theſe violent Raines are vſhered in, and take their leaue with moſt fearefull tempeſts of Thunder and Lightning, more terrible then I can expreſſe, yet ſeldome doe harme. The reaſon in Nature may be the ſubtiltie of the Aire, wherein there are fewer Thunder-ſtones made, then in ſuch Climates where the Aire is groſſe, and cloudy. In thoſe three moneths it raines euery day more or leſſe, ſometimes one whole quarter of the Moone ſcarce with any intermiſſion, which aboundance of Raine with the heat of the Sunne doth ſo enrich the ground; (which they neuer force) as that like Egypt by the inundation of Nilus, it makes it fruitfull all the yeere after. But when this time of Raine is paſſed ouer, the Skie is ſo cleere, as that ſcarcely one Cloud is ſeene in their Hemiſphere, the nine moneths after.

Raines and Thunders.

And here the goodneſſe of the ſoyle muſt not eſcape my Pen, moſt apparent in this, for when the ground hath beene deſtitute of Raine nine moneths, and lookes like to barren Sands, within ſeuen dayes after the Raine begins to fall, it puts on a greene Coate. And further to confirme this, amongſt many hundred acres of Corne I haue beheld in thoſe Parts, I neuer ſaw any but came vp as thicke as the Land could well beare it. They till their ground with Oxen, and foot-Ploughs. Their Seed-time is in May, and the beginning of Iune: their Haruest in Nouember, and December, the moſt temperate moneths in all their yeere. Their ground is not encloſed vnleſſe it be neere Townes and Villages, which (though not expreſſed in the Map for want of their true names) ſtand very thicke. They mowe not their Graſſe (as we) to make Hay, but cut it either greene or withered on the ground as they haue occaſion to vſe it. They ſowe Tobacco in abundance, but know not how to cure and make it ſtrong, as thoſe in the Weſterne India.

Soyle and tillage.
Townes and Villages thick.
Tobacco.

The Countrey is beautified with many Woods and great varietie of faire goodly trees, but I neuer ſaw any there of thoſe kinds which England affoords. Their Trees in generall are ſappie, which I aſcribe to the fatneſſe of the ſoyle: ſome of them haue Leaues as broad as Bucklers, others are parted ſmall as Ferne, as the Tamarine trees which beare a ſowre fruit that growes ſomewhat like our Beanes, moſt wholeſome for to coole and cleanſe the bloud. There is one Tree amongſt them of ſpeciall obſeruation, out of whoſe branches grow little ſprigs downeward till they take root, and ſo at length proue ſtrong ſupporters vnto the Armes that yeeld them, whence it comes to paſſe that theſe Trees in time grow vnto a great height, and extend themſelues to an incredible bredth. All the Trees in thoſe Southerne parts of India ſtill keepe on their greene Mantles. For their Flowres they rather delight the Eye then affect the Senſe, in colour admirable, but few of them, vnleſſe Roſes, and one or two kinds more, that are any whit fragrant.

Woods and Trees.

Indian fig-tree; See of it my Pilg. l. 1 c. 3.

Flowers.

Riuers.

Ganges water lighter then others.

Wels and Tankes.

This Region is watered with many goodly Riuers, the two principall are Indus and Ganges, where this thing remarkable muſt not paſſe, that one pinte of the Water of Ganges weigheth leſſe by an once, then any in the whole Kingdome, and therefore the Mogol whereſoeuer hee is, hath it brought to him that he may drinke it. Beſides their Riuers, they haue ſtore of Wells fed with Springs, vpon which in many places they beſtow great coſt in ſtone-worke: to theſe they haue many Ponds, which they call Tankes, ſome of them more then a mile or two in compaſſe, made round or ſquare, girt about with faire ſtone-walls, within which are ſteps of well-ſquared ſtone which encompaſſe the water, for men euery way to goe downe and take it. Theſe Tankes are filled when that abundance of Raine falls, and keepe water to relieue the Inhabitants that dwell farre from Springs or Riuers, till that wet ſeaſon come againe.

Racke and Cohha.

Beetle or Betele.

This ancient drinke of the World is the common drinke of India, it is more ſweet and pleaſant then ours, and in thoſe hot Countries, agreeth better with mens bodies, then any other Liquor. Some ſmall quantitie of Wine, but not common is made among them, they call it Raack, diſtilled from Sugar and a Spicie rinde of a Tree called Iagra. It is very wholſome if taken moderately. Many of the people who are ſtrict in their Religion drinke no Wine at all. They vſe a Liquor more healthfull then pleaſant, they call Cohha; a blacke ſeed boyled in water, which doth little alter the taſte of the water. Notwithſtanding, it is very good to helpe digeſtion, to quicken the ſpirits, and to clenſe the bloud. There is yet another helpe to comfort the ſtomacke for ſuch as forbeare Wine, an herbe called Beetle or Paune; it is in ſhape ſomewhat like an Iuie leafe but more tender; they chew it with an hard Nut ſome-what like a Nut-megge, and a little pure white Lime among the leaues, and when they haue ſucked out the Iuyce, put forth the reſt. It hath many rare qualities, for it preſerues the teeth, comforts the braine, ſtrengthens the ſtomacke, and cures or preuents a tainted breath.

Houſes and ſtreets.

No Glaſſe.

Their buildings are generally baſe, except it be in their Cities, wherein I haue obſerued many faire Piles. Many of their houſes are built high and flat on the toppe, from whence in the coole ſeaſons of the day they take in freſh ayre. They haue no Chimnies to their houſes, for they neuer vſe fire but to dreſſe their meate. In their vpper roomes they haue many lights and doores to let in the Ayre, but vſe no Glaſſe. The materials of their beſt buildings are bricke or ſtone, well ſquared and compoſed, which I haue obſerued in Amadauar (that one inſtance may ſtand for all) which is a moſt ſpacious and rich Citie, entred by twelue faire Gates, and compaſſed about with a firme ſtone wall. Both in their Villages and Cities, are vſually many faire Trees among their houſes, which are a great defence againſt the violence of the Sunne. They commonly ſtand ſo thicke that if a man behold a Citie or Towne from ſome conſpicuous place, it will ſeeme a Wood rather then a Citie.

Indico and cotton. Of Indico, ſee in Finches Iournal

The Staple Commodities of this Kingdome are Indico and Cotton-wooll. For Cotton-wooll they plant ſeedes which grow vp into ſhrubs like vnto our Roſe-buſhes. It blowes firſt into a yellow bloſſome, which falling off, there remaynes a cod about the bigneſſe of a mans thumbe, in which the ſubſtance is moyſt and yellow, but as it ripens, it ſwels bigger till it breake the couering, and ſo in ſhort time becomes white as Snow, and then they gather it. Theſe ſhrubs beare three or foure yeares ere they ſupplant them. Of this Wooll they make diuers ſorts of pure white cloth, ſome of which I haue ſeene as fine, if not purer then our beſt Lawne. Some of the courſer ſort of it they dye into Colours, or elſe ſtayne in it varietie of curious Figures.

The ſhip that vſually goeth from Surat to Moha, is of an exceeding great burthen. Some of them I beleeue at the leaſt fourteene or ſixteene hundred tunnes, but ill built, and though they haue good Ordnance cannot well defend themſelues. In theſe ſhips are yeerely abundance of Paſſengers: for inſtance in one ſhip returning thence, that yeere we left India, came ſeuenteene hundred, the moſt of which number goe not for profit, but out of Deuotion to viſite the Sepulchre of Mahomet at Medina, neere Meche, about one hundred and fiftie leagues from Moha. Thoſe which haue beene there, are euer after called Hoggeis, or holy Men. The ſhip bound from Surat to the Red Sea, beginnes her Voyage about the twentieth of March, and finiſheth it towards the end of September following, the Voyage is but ſhort, and might eaſily bee made in two moneths, but in the long ſeaſon of raine, and a little before, and after it, the winds are commonly ſo violent, that there is no comming, but with great hazard into the Indian Sea. The ſhip returning, is vſually worth two hundred thouſand pounds ſterling, moſt of it in Gold and Siluer. Beſides, for what quantitie of Monies comes out of Europe, by other meanes into India I cannot anſwere, this I am ſure of, that many Siluer ſtreames runne thither as all Riuers to the Sea, and there ſtay, it being lawfull for any Nation to bring in Siluer and fetch commodities, but a Crime not leſſe then Capitall, to carry any great ſumme thence. The Coyne or Bullion brought thither is preſently melted, and refined, and then the Mogols ſtampe (which is his Name and Title in Perſian Letters) put vpon it. This Coyne is more pure then any I know made of perfect Siluer without any allay, ſo that in the Spaniſh Riall (the pureſt money of Europe) there is ſome loſſe.

Their coynes, Roopees or Rupias.

Mamoodies.

Pices.

They call their Pieces of Money Roopees, of which there are ſome of diuers values; the meaneſt worth two ſhillings, and the beſt about two ſhillings and nine pence ſterling. By theſe they account their Eſtates and Payments. There is a Coyne of inferiour value in Guzarat, called Mamoodies, about twelue pence ſterling, both the former and theſe are made likewiſe in halfes and quarters, ſo that three pence is the leaſt piece of ſiluer currant in the Countrey. That which paſſeth vp and downe, for exchange vnder this rate is braſſe money, which they call Pices, whereof three or thereabouts counteruaile a Peny. They are made ſo maſſie, as that the Braſſe in them put to other vſes, is well worth the Siluer they are rated at. Their Siluer Coyne is made either round or ſquare, but ſo thicke, that it neuer breakes nor weares out.

Silke.

Gum-lac.

Gardens.

Now farther for commodities, the Countrey yeelds good ſtore of Silke, which they weaue curiouſly, ſometimes mingled with Siluer or Gold. They make Veluets, Sattins, and Taffataes, but not ſo rich as thoſe of Italy. Many Drugs and Gummes are found amongſt them, eſpecially Gum-lac, with which they make their hard Wax. The earth yeelds good Minerals of Lead, Iron, Copper, and Braſſe, and they ſay of Siluer, which, if true, they neede not open, being ſo enriched by other Nations. The Spices they haue come from other places, from the Ilands of Sumatra, Iaua, and the Moluccoes. For places of pleaſure they haue curious Gardens, planted with fruitfull Trees and delightfull Flowers, to which Nature daily lends ſuch a ſupply as that they ſeeme neuer to fade. In theſe places they haue pleaſant Fountaynes to bathe in, and other delights by ſundrie conueyances of water, whoſe ſilent murmure helps to lay their ſenſes with the bonds of ſleepe in the hot ſeaſons of the day.

Diſcommodities of that Countrey.

Scorpions dangerous.

Flyes troubleſome.

But leſt this remote Countrey ſhould ſeeme like an earthly Paradiſe without any diſcommodities: I muſt needes take notice there of many Lions, Tygres, Wolues, Iackals (which ſeeme to be wild Dogs) and many other harmefull beaſts. In their Riuers are many Crocodiles, and on the Land ouer-growne Snakes, with other venimous and pernicious Creatures. In our houſes there we often meete with Scorpions, whoſe ſtinging is moſt ſenſible and deadly, if the patient haue not preſently ſome Oyle that is made of them, to anoint the part affected, which is a preſent cure. The abundance of Flyes in thoſe parts doe likewiſe much annoy vs, for in the heate of the day their numberleſſe number is ſuch as that we can be quiet in no place for them, they are ready to couer our meate aſſoone as it is placed on the Table, and therefore wee haue men that ſtand on purpoſe with Napkins to fright them away when as wee are eating: in the night likewiſe we are much diſquieted with Muſquatoes, like our Gnats, but ſomewhat leſſe: and in their great Cities, there are ſuch aboundance of bigge hungrie Rats, that they often bite a man as he lyeth on his bed.

Monſons or Windes.

The Windes in thoſe parts, which they call the Monſon, blow conſtantly; altering but few Points, ſixe moneths Southerly, the other ſixe Northerly. The moneths of Aprill and May, and the beginning of Iune till the Rayne fall, are ſo extreme hot, as that the Winde blowing but gently receiues ſuch heate from the parched ground, that it much offends thoſe that receiue the breath of it. But God doth ſo prouide for thoſe parts that moſt commonly he ſends ſuch a ſtrong gale as well tempers the hot ayre. Sometimes the winde blowes very high in thoſe hot and drie ſeaſons, rayſing vp thick clouds of duſt and ſand, which appeare like darke clouds full of Rayne, they greatly annoy the people when they fall amongſt them. But there is no Countrey without ſome diſcommodities, for therefore the wiſe Diſpoſer of all things hath tempered bitter things with ſweet, to teach man that there is no true and perfect content to be found in any Kingdom, but that of God.

Horſes and Prouender.

But I will returne againe (whence I digreſſed) and looke farther into the qualitie of the Countrey; that affords very good Horſes, which the Inhabitants know well to manage. Beſides their owne, they haue many of the Perſian, Tartarian, and Arabian breede, which haue the name to be the choiſe ones of the world: they are about the bigneſſe of ours, and valued among them as deare, if not at a higher rate then we vſually eſteeme ours. They are kept daintily, euery good Horſe being allowed a man to dreſſe and feede him. Their Prouender a kind of graine, called Donna, ſomewhat like our Peaſe, which they boyle, and when it is cold giue them mingled with courſe Sugar; and twiſe or thriſe in the weeke Butter to ſcoure their bodies. Here are likewiſe a great number of Camels, Dromedaries, Mules, Aſſes, and ſome Rhynocerots, which are large beaſts as bigge as the fayreſt Oxen England affords, their skins lye platted, or as it were in wrinkles vpon their backs. They haue many Elephants, the King for his owne particular being Maſter of fourteene thouſand, and his Nobles and all men of Qualitie in the Countrey, haue more or leſſe of them, ſome to the number of one hundred. The Elephants, though they bee the largeſt of all Creatures the Earth brings forth, yet are ſo tractable (vnleſſe at times when they are mad) that a little Boy is able to rule the biggeſt of them. Some of them I haue ſeene thirteene foot high, but there are amongſt them (as I haue beene often told) fifteene at the leaſt. The colour of them all is black, their skins thick and ſmooth without haire, they take much delight to bathe themſelues in water, and ſwim better then any beaſt I know; they lye downe and ariſe againe at pleaſure, as other beaſts doe. Their pace is not ſwift, about three mile an houre, but of all Beaſts in the world are moſt ſure of foot, for they neuer fall nor ſtumble to endanger their Rider. They are moſt docile Creatures, and of all thoſe we account meerely ſenſible, come neereſt vnto Reaſon. Lipſius in his Epiſtles, 1. Cent. Epiſt. 50. out of his obſeruations from others writes more of them then I can confirme, or any (I perſwade my ſelfe) beleeue; yet many things remarkable, which ſeeme indeed acts of reaſon, rather then ſence, I haue obſerued in them. For inſtance, an Elephant will doe any thing almoſt, that his Keeper commands him: as if he would haue him affright a man, he will make towards him as if hee would tread him in pieces, and when he is come at him, doe him no hurt: if he would haue him to abuſe or diſgrace a man, he will take dirt, or kennell water in his trunke, and daſh it in his face. Their Trunks are long griſſelly ſnouts hanging downe twixt their teeth, by ſome called, their Hand, which they make vſe of vpon all occaſions.

An Engliſh Merchant of good credit, vpon his owne knowledge reported this of a great Elephant in Adſmeere (the place then of the Mogols reſidence) who being brought often through the Bazar or Market place; a woman who ſate there to ſell herbs, was wont vſually to giue him a handfull, as he paſſed by. This Elephant afterward being mad, brake his fetters, and tooke his way through the Market place; the people all affrighted made haſte to ſecure themſelues, amongſt whom was this herbe-woman, who for feare and haſte, forgat her little child. The Elephant come to the place where ſhee vſually ſate, ſtopt, and ſeeing a child lie about her herbs, tooke it vp gently with his trunke, not doing it the leaſt harme, and layed it vpon a ſtall vnder a houſe not farre off, and then proceeded in his furious courſe. Acoſta (a trauelling Ieſuite) relates the like of an Elephant in Goa, from his owne experience. Some Elephants the King keeps for execution of Malefactors, who being brought to ſuffer death by that mightie beaſt, if his Keeper bid him diſpatch the Offender ſpeedily, will preſently with his foot paſh him into pieces, if otherwiſe he would haue him tortured, this vaſt creature will breake his ioynts by degrees one after the other, as men are broken vpon the wheele.

Linſchoten hath the like. See of Elephants more in this Worke, and in my Pilg. lib. 5. cap. 12.

The Mogol takes much delight in thoſe ſtately creatures, and therefore oft when hee ſits forth in his Maieſtie calls for them, eſpecially the faireſt, who are taught to bend to him as it were in reuerence, when they firſt come into his preſence. They often fight before him, beginning their combat like Rams, by running fiercely one at the other; after, as Boares with their tusks, they fight with their teeth and trunks: in this violent oppoſition they are each ſo carefull to preſerue his Rider, as that very few of them at thoſe times receiue hurt. They are gouerned with an hook of Steele, made like the Iron end of a Boat-hook with which their keepers ſitting on their neckes put them backe, or pricke them forward at their pleaſure.

The King traines vp many of his Elephants for the warre, who carrie each of them one Iron Gunne about ſixe foot long, lying vpon a ſquare ſtrong frame of wood, faſtned with girts or ropes vpon him, which like an Harquebuſe is let into the timber with a loop of Iron; at the foure corners of this frame are Banners of Silke put vpon ſhort Poles, within ſits a Gunner to make his ſhot according to his occaſion. The Peece carrieth a Bullet about the bigneſſe of a little Tennis-ball. When the King trauels he hath many Elephants thus appointed for guard. Hee keeps many of them for State to goe before him, who are adorned with boſſes of Braſſe, and ſome of them are made of maſſie Siluer or Gold, hauing likewiſe diuers Bells about them in which they delight. They haue faire couerings either of Cloth, or Veluet, or Cloth of ſiluer or gold, and for greater ſtate, Banners of Silke carried before them in which is the Enſigne of their great King (a Lion in the Sunne) imprinted. Theſe are allowed each three or foure men at the leaſt, to waite vpon them. Hee makes vſe of others to carrie himſelfe or his women, who ſit in pretie conuenient receptacles faſtned on their backes, which our Painters deſcribe like to Caſtles, made of ſlight turn'd Pillars richly couered, that will hold foure ſitters. Others he employes for carriage of his neceſſaries. Onely he hath one faire Elephant which is content to be fettered, but would neuer indure man or other burthen on his backe.

Theſe vaſt beaſts though the Countrey be very fruitfull and all prouiſion cheape, yet by reaſon of their huge bulke are very chargeable in keeping, for ſuch as are well fed, ſtand their Maſters in foure or fiue ſhillings, each of them the day. They are kept without doores, whereby a ſollid Chaine vpon one of their hind legges, they faſten them to a Tree or ſome ſtrong poſt. As they ſtand in the Sunne the Flyes often vex them, wherefore with their feete they make duſt, the ground being very dry, and with their Truncks caſt it about their bodies to driue away the Flyes. Whenas they are mad (as vſually the Males are once a yeare for their Females, when they are luſtie, but in few dayes after, come againe in temper) they are ſo miſchieuous, that they will ſtrike any thing but their Keeper that comes in their way, and their ſtrength is ſuch, as that they will beate an Horſe or Camell dead with their Truncke at one blow. At theſe times to preuent miſchiefe, they are kept apart from company, fettered with Chaines. But if by chance in their phrenſie they get looſe, they will make after euery thing they ſee ſtirre, in which caſe there is no meanes to ſtop them in their violent courſe, but by lighting of wild-fire, prepared for that purpoſe, whoſe ſparkling and cracking makes them ſtand ſtill and tremble. The King allowes euery one of his great Elephants foure Females, which in their Language they call Wiues, the Males Teſticles lye about his fore-head, the Females Teates are betwixt her fore-legges. Shee carrieth her young one whole yeare ere ſhe bring it forth. Thirtie yeares expire ere they come to their full growth, and they fulfill the accuſtomed age of man ere they dye. Notwithſtanding, the great plentie of them, they are valued there at exceeding great rates, ſome of them prized at one thouſand pounds ſterling and more.

Of the people of Indoſtan, their Stature, Colour, Habit, Dyet, Women, Language, Learning, Arts, Riding, Games, Markets, Armes, Valour, Mahumetane Meſquits, Burials, Opinions, and Rites of Religion.

NOw, for the Inhabitants of Indoſtan, they were anciently Gentiles, or notorious Idolaters, called in generall Hindoos, but euer ſince they were ſubdued by Tamberlaine, haue beene mixed with Mahometans. There are beſides many Perſians and Tartars, many Abiſſines, and Armenians, and ſome few almoſt of euery people in Aſia, if not of Europe, that haue reſidence here. Amongſt them are ſome Iewes, but not beloued, for their very name is a Prouerbe, or word of reproch. For the ſtature of theſe Eaſterne Indians, they are like vs, but generally very ſtreight, for I neuer beheld any in thoſe parts crooked. They are of a tawnie or Oliue colour, their haire blacke as a Rauen, but not curl'd. They loue not a man or woman, that is very white or faire, becauſe that (as they ſay) is the colour of Lepers common amongſt them. Moſt of the Mahometans, but the Moolaes (which are their Prieſts) or thoſe that are very old and retyred, keepe their chinnes bare, but ſuffer the haire on their vpper lip to grow as long as Nature will feed it. They vſually ſhaue off all the haire from their heads, reſeruing onely a Locke on the Crowne for Mahomet, to pull them into Heauen. Both among the Mahometans and Gentiles are excellent Barbers. The people often waſh their bodies, and anoint themſelues with ſweet Oyles.

White in bad eſtimation.

The Habits both of the men and women are little different, made for the moſt part of white Cotton-cloth. For the faſhion they are cloſe, ſtreight to the middle, hanging looſe downward below the knee, they weare long Breeches vnderneath, made cloſe to their bodies that reach to their ankles, ruffling like boots on the ſmal of their legs. Their feet are bare in their ſhooes, which moſt commonly they weare like ſlippers, that they may the more readily put them off when they come into their houſes, whoſe floores are couered with excellent Carpets (made in that Kingdom, good as any in Turkie or Perſia) or ſomwhat elſe (according to the qualitie of the man) more baſe, vpon which they ſit, when as they conferre or eate like Taylors on their ſhop-boards. The mens heads are couered with a long thinne wreathe of Cloth, white or coloured, which goes many times about them, they call it a Shaſh. They vncouer not their heads when as they doe reuerence to their Superiours, but in ſtead of that bow their bodies, putting their right hands to the top of their heads, after that they haue touched the Earth with them, as much as to ſay, the partie they ſalute, ſhall if he pleaſe tread vpon them. Thoſe that bee equals take one the other by the Chinne or Beard, as Ioab did Amaſa, 2.Sam.20. but ſalute in Loue, not Treacherie. They haue good words to expreſſe their wel-wiſhes, as this, Greeb-a Nemoas, that is, I wiſh the Prayers of the Poore, and many other like theſe moſt ſignificant.

Attire.

Salutations.

The Mahometan women, except they bee diſhoneſt or poore, come not abroad. They are very well fauoured, though not faire, their heads couered with Veiles, their haire hangs downe behind them twiſted with Silke. Thoſe of qualitie are bedecked with many Iewels, about their neckes and wriſts, round about their Eares are holes made for Pendants, and euery woman hath one of her Noſtrils pierced, that there, when as ſhee pleaſe, ſhee may weare a Ring (it ſhould ſeeme an ancient ornament, Eſ.3.21.)

Their women.

The women in thoſe parts haue a great happineſſe aboue all I know, in their eaſie bringing forth of Children, for it is a thing common there for women great with Childe, one day to ride carrying their Infants in their bodies; the next day to ride againe, carrying them in their armes.

in priuate among his women, vpon great varietie of excellent Diſhes, which dreſſed and proued by the Taſter, are ſerued in Veſſels of Gold (as they ſay) couered and ſealed vp, and ſo by Eunuchs brought to the King. He hath meate ready at all houres, and calls for it at pleaſure. They feede not freely on full diſhes of Beefe and Mutton (as we) but much on Rice boyled with pieces of fleſh, or dreſſed many other wayes. They haue not many roaſt or baked meats, but ſtew moſt of their fleſh. Among many Diſhes of this kinde, Ile take notice but of one they call Deu Pario, made of Veniſon cut in ſlices, to which they put Onions and Herbs, ſome Rootes with a little Spice, and Butter, the moſt ſauorie meate I euer taſted, and doe almoſt thinke it that very Diſh which Iacob made ready for his Father, when he got the bleſſing.

Innes.

In this Kingdome there are no Innes to entertaine Strangers, onely in great Townes and Cities are faire houſes built for their receit, which they call Sarray, not inhabited, where any Paſſengers may haue roome freely, but muſt bring with him his Bedding, his Cooke, and other neceſſaries wherein to dreſſe his meate, which are vſually carried on Camels, or elſe in Carts drawne with Oxen, wherein they haue Tents to pitch when they meete with no Sarras.

Riding.

The inferiour ſort of people ride on Oxen, Horſes, Mules, Camels, or Dromedaries; the women like the men, or elſe in ſlight Coaches with two Wheeles, couered on the top, and backe, but the fore-part and ſides open, vnleſſe they carrie women. They will conueniently hold two perſons, beſide the Driuer, they are drawne by Oxen, one yoake in a Coach, ſuted for colour, but many of them are white, not very large: they are guided with Cords, which goe through the parting of their Noſtrils, and ſo twixt their Hornes into the Coach-mens hand. They dreſſe and keepe them clothed as their Horſes. They are naturally nimble, to which vſe makes them ſo fitting to performe that labour, as that they will goe twentie miles a day, or more with good ſpeed. The better ſort ride on Elephants, or elſe are carried vpon mens ſhoulders alone, in a ſlight thing they call a Palankee, which is like a Couch, or ſtanding Pallat, but couered with a Cannopie: This ſhould ſeeme an ancient effeminacie ſometimes vſed in Rome, Iuuenal thus deſcribing a fat Lawyer that fil'd one of them: Cauſidici noua cum veniat lectica Mathonis Plena ipſo——

Paſtimes.

For Paſtimes they delight in Hawking, hunting of Hares, Deere, or wilde Beaſts: their Dogs for Chaſe are made ſomewhat like our Gray-hounds, but much leſſe, they open not in the purſuite of the game. They hunt likewiſe with Leopards, which by leaping ſeaſe on that they purſue. They haue a cunning deuice to take wild-fowle, where a fellow goes into the water with a Fowle of that kinde he deſires to catch, whoſe skinne is ſtuffed ſo artificially, as that it appeares aliue: He keepes all his body but the face vnder water, on which he layes this Counterfeit; thus comming among them, plucks them by the legs vnder water. They ſhoote for paſtime much in Bowes, which are made curiouſly in the Countrey of Buffeloes hornes, glewed together, to which they haue Arrowes made of little Canes, excellently headed and feathered; in theſe they are ſo skilfull, that they will kill Birds flying. Others take delight in managing their Horſes on which they ride, or elſe are otherwiſe carried though they haue not one quarter of a mile to goe, the men of qualitie holding it diſhonorable to goe on foote.

Slie Fowling.

Shooting.

Cheſſe, Tables, Cardes. Mountebankes.

In their houſes they play much at that moſt ingenious game we call Cheſſe, or elſe at Tables. They haue Cardes, but quite different from ours. Sometimes they make themſelues merry with cunning Iugglers, or Mountebankes, who will ſuffer Snakes they keepe in Baskets, to bite them and preſently cure the ſwelling with Powders; or elſe they ſee the trickes of Apes and Monkeyes.

Large Apes. Cunning Birdes.

In the Southerne parts of Indoſtan, are great ſtore of large white Apes, ſome I dare boldly ſay, as tall as our biggeſt Gray-hounds: They are fearefull as it ſhould ſeeme to Birds that make their Neſts in Trees, wherefore nature hath taught them this ſubtiltie to ſecure themſelues, by building their little houſes on the twigs of the vtmoſt boughs, there hanging like Purſe-nets, to which the Apes cannot poſſibly come.

Markets twice a day.

Euery great Towne or Citie of India, hath Markets twice a day, in the coole ſeaſon preſently after the Sunne is riſen, and a little before his ſetting. They ſell almoſt euery thing by weight. In the heate of the day they keepe their houſes, where the men of better faſhion lying on Couches, or ſitting on their Carpets, haue ſeruants ſtand about them, who beating the Ayre with broade Fannes of ſtiffe Leather, or the like, make winde to coole them: And taking thus their eaſe, they often call their Barbers, who tenderly gripe and ſmite their Armes and other parts of their bodies, in ſtead of exerciſe, to ſtirre the bloud. It is a pleaſing wantonneſſe, and much vſed in thoſe hot Climes.

Fidelitie.

I muſt needes commend the Mahumetans, and Gentiles, for their good and faithfull Seruice, amongſt whom a ſtranger may trauell alone with a great charge of money or goods, quite through the Countrey, and take them for his guard, yet neuer bee neglected or iniured by them. They follow their Maſters on foote, carrying ſwords and Bucklers, or Bowes and Arrowes for their defence: and by reaſon of great plentie of Prouiſion in that Kingdome, a man may hire them vpon eaſie conditions, for they will not deſire aboue fiue ſhillings the Moone, paide the next day after the change, Quibus hinc toga, calceus hinc eſt, Et panis, fumuſq́ domi.—— to prouide themſelues all neceſſaries, and for it doe moſt diligent ſeruice. Such is their Pietie to their parents, that thoſe which haue no greater meanes, will impart halfe of it, at the leaſt, to releeue their neceſſities, chooſing rather for to famiſh themſelues, then to ſee them want.

Courage of ſome.

There are both among the Mahumetans and Gentiles, men of vndaunted courage, thoſe of note among the Mahumetans are called Baloches, inhabiting Haiacan, adioyning to the Kingdome of Perſia, or elſe Patans, taking their denomination from a Prouince in the Kingdome of Bengala. Theſe will looke an enemie boldly in the face, and maintaine with their liues their reputation of valour. Among the many ſects of Gentiles, there is but one race of Figliters called Raſbbootes, a number of which liue by ſpoyle, who in troopes ſurprize poore Paſſengers, cruelly butchering thoſe they get vnder their power, thoſe excepted; all the reſt in the Countrey are in generall Puſilaminous, and had rather quarrell then fight, hauing ſuch poore ſpirits in reſpect of vs Chriſtians, that the Mogol is pleaſed often to vſe this Prouerbe, that one Portugal will beate three of them, and one Engliſh-man three Portugals.

Munition. Vertoman tels of Portugal fugitiues, which at the Portugals firſt comming, ran to the Indians, and taught them this Art.

Touching their Munition for the warre, they haue good Ordnance, made (for ought I could gather) very anciently in thoſe parts. Iron Peeces carried vpon Elephants, before deſcribed, and leſſer Gunnes made for Foot-men, who are ſomewhat long in taking their ayme, but come as neere the marke as any I euer ſaw. They fire all their Peeces with Match, as for Gun-powder they make very good. They vſe Lances, and Swords, and Targets, Bowes and Arrowes. Their Swords are made crooked like a Faulchion, very ſharpe, but for want of skill in thoſe that temper them, will breake rather then bend, and therefore wee often ſell our Sword-blades at high prices that will bow, and become ſtreight againe. I haue ſeene Horſe-men there, who haue carried whole Armories about them thus appointed; at their ſides good Swords, vnder them Sheues of Arrowes, on their ſhoulders Bucklers, and vpon their backs Guns faſtned with Belts, at the left ſide Bowes hanging in Caſes, and Lances about two yards and a halfe long, hauing excellent Steele heads, which they carrie in their hands: yet for all this Harneſſe, the moſt of them dare not reſiſt a man of courage, though he haue for his defence but the worſt of thoſe weapons. The Armies in thoſe Easterne warres, oftentimes conſiſt of incredible multitudes, they talke of ſome which haue exceeded that mightie Hoſt which Zerah King of Ethiopia, brought againſt Aſa, 2. Chron. 14. The muſicke they haue when they goe to battell, is from Kittle-drums, and long winde Inſtruments. The Armies on both ſides vſually beginne with moſt furious onſets, but in ſhort time, for want of good Diſcipline, one ſide is routed, and the Controuerſie not without much ſlaughter decided.

Meſquits.

The Mahometans haue faire Churches, which they call Meſquits, built of ſtone, the broade ſide towards the Weſt is made vp cloſe like a Wall; that towards the Eaſt is erected on Pillars, ſo that the length of them is North and South, which way they burie their dead: At the corners of their great Churches which ſtand in Cities are high Pinacles, to whoſe tops the Moolaas aſcend certaine times of the day, and proclaime their Prophet Mahomet thus in Arabian: La Alla, illa Alla, Mahomet Reſul-Alla: that is, No God but one God, and Mahomet the Ambaſſadour of God. This in ſtead of Bells (which they endure not in their Temples) put the moſt religious in minde of their deuotion. Which words Maſter Coryat often beariug in Agra, vpon a certaine time got vp into a Turret, ouer againſt the Prieſt, and contradicted him thus in a loude voyce: La Alla, illa Alla, Hazaret-Eeſa Ebn-Alla, No God but one God, and Chriſt the Sonne of God; and further added, that Mahomet was an Impoſtor, which bold attempt in many other places of Aſia, where Mahomet is more zealouſly profeſſed, had forfetted his life with as much torture as Tyrannie could inuent. But here euery man hath libertie to profeſſe his owne Religion freely, and for any reſtriction I euer obſerued, to diſpute againſt theirs with impunitie.

Coryats Cruditie

Burials neere Tankes.

Now concerning their burials: euery Mahometan of Qualitie in his life time, prouides a faire Sepulcher for himſelfe and kindred, encompaſſing with a firme wall a good circuit of ground, neere ſome Tanke (about which they delight for to burie their dead) or elſe in a place nigh Springs of Water, that may make pleaſant Fountaynes, neere which hee erects a Tombe round or ſquare, vaulted vpon Pillars, or elſe made cloſe, to be entred with Doores, vnder which are the bodies of the dead interred. The reſt of the ground they plant with Trees and Flowers, as if they would make Elyſian fields, ſuch as the Poets dreamed of, wherein their ſoules might take their repoſe. They burie not within their Churches. There are many goodly Monuments of this kinde richly adorned, built to the memorie of ſuch as they haue eſteemed Saints, of which they haue a large Kalender. In theſe are Lamps continually burning, whither men tranſported with blinde deuotion daily reſort, there to contemplate the happines theſe Pieres (for ſo they call them) enioy. But among many faire Piles there dedicated to this vſe, the moſt excellent is at Secandra, a Village three miles from Agra. It was beganne by Achabar-ſha, this Kings Father, who there lyes buried, and finiſhed by this preſent King, who meanes to lye beſide him.

Saints Kalender.

Of this ſee before in other Iournals, Finch &c.

Moolaas or Prieſts.

Their Moolaas imploy much of their time like Scriueners, to doe buſineſſe for others, they haue libertie to marrie as well as the people, from whom they are not diſtinguiſhed in habite. Some liue retyred, that ſpend their dayes in Meditation, or elſe in giuing good morall Precepts vnto others, there are of high eſteeme, and ſo are another ſort called Seayds, who deriue themſelues from Mahomet. The Prieſts doe neither reade nor preach in their Churches, but there is a ſet forme of prayer in the Arabian tongue, not vnderſtood by moſt of the common people, yet repeated by them as well as by the Moolaas. They likewiſe rehearſe the Names of God and Mahomet certayne times euery day vpon Beads, like the miſſe-led Papiſt, who ſeemes to regard the number, rather then the weight of Prayers. Before they goe into their Churches they waſh their feete, and entring in put off their ſhooes. As they beginne their deuotions they ſtop their Eares and fixe their Eyes, that nothing may diuert their Thoughts; then in a ſoft and ſtill voyce they vtter their prayers, wherein are many words, moſt ſignificantly expreſſing the Omnipotencie, Greatneſſe, Eternitie, and other attributes of God. Many words full of humiliation, confeſſing with diuers ſubmiſſiue geſtures their owne vnworthineſſe: when they pray caſting themſelues low vpon their faces ſundrie times, and then acknowledge that they are Burthens to the Earth, and Poiſon to the Aire, and the like, and therefore dare not ſo much as looke vp to heauen, but at laſt comfort themſelues in the Mercies of God through the mediation of Mahomet; and many amongſt them, to the ſhame of vs Chriſtians, what impediment ſoeuer they haue either by pleaſure or profit, pray fiue times euery day, at ſix, nine, twelue, three and ſix of the clock. But by the way, they diſtinguiſh their time in a different manner from vs, diuiding the day into foure, and the night into as many parts, which they call Pores, theſe are againe ſubdiuided each into eight parts, which they call Grees, meaſured according to the ancient cuſtome by water dropping out of one little veſſell into another, by which there alwayes ſtand ſeruants appointed for that purpoſe, ſmiting with an hammer a Concaue piece of pure metall, like the inner part of an ordinarie platter, hanging by the brim on a wyre, the number of Grees and Pores as they paſſe. For the temperance of many both among the Mahometans and Gentiles, it is ſuch, as that they will rather die, like the Mother and her ſeuen ſonnes, 2. Mac. 7. then eate or drinke any thing their Law forbids. Such meate and drinke as their Law allowes they vſe onely to ſatisfie Nature, not Appetite; hating Gluttonie, and eſteeming Drunkenneſſe (as indeed it is) a ſecond Madneſſe, and therefore haue but one word in their language (Meſt) for a Drunkard and a Mad-man.

Prayer in vnknown tongue.

Beades.

Geſture of prayer.

Clepſydra clocks.

Temperance.

Meſt.

They keepe a ſolemne Lent, which they call the Ram-Ian, about the moneth of Auguſt, which continues one whole Moone; during which time, thoſe that bee ſtrict in their Religion forbeare their women, and will take neither meate nor drinke ſo long as the Sunne is aboue their Horizon, but after He is ſet, eate at pleaſure. Towards the end of this Lent they conſecrate a day of Mourning, to the memorie of their dead friends, when I haue beheld diuers of the meaner ſort make bitter lamentation. (Beſide this common ſadneſſe, there are many fooliſh women who often in the yeere, ſo long as they ſuruiue, moyſten the graues of their husbands or children, with affectionate teares.) But when the Night begins to couer the Day of generall mourning, they fire an innumerable companie of Lamps and Lights, which they ſet on the ſides and tops of their houſes, and all other moſt conſpicuous places, and when theſe are extinguiſhed, take foode. The Ram-Ian fully ended, the moſt deuout Mahometans aſſemble to ſome famous Miſquit, where by a Moola, ſome part of the Alcoran (which they will not touch without reuerence) is publikely read. They keepe a Feaſt in Nouember, called Buccaree, ſignifying the Ram-feaſt, when they ſolemnely kill a Ram, and roaſt him in memorie of that Ram which redeemed Iſhmael (as they ſay) when Abraham was readie to make him a ſacrifice. Many other feaſts they haue in memorie of Mahomet and their Pieres.

Faſt and feaſt.

They haue the bookes of Moſes, whom they call Mooſa Carym-Alla, Moſes the righteous of God. Ibrahim Calim-Alla, Abraham the faithfull of God. So Iſhmael, the true ſacrifice of God. Dahoode, Dauid the Prophet of God. Selimon, Salomon the wiſedome of God, all expreſſed as the former in ſhort Arabian words; to whoſe particular remembrances they daily ſing Ditties: and moreouer, there is not a man amongſt them, but thoſe of the ruder ſort, that at any time mentions the Name of our bleſſed Sauiour, called there Hazaret-Eeſa, the Lord Chriſt, without reuerence and reſpect, ſaying, that he was a good man and a iuſt, liued without ſinne, did greater miracles then euer any before or ſince him; Nay farther, they call him Rhabow-Alla, the breath of God, but how he ſhould be the Sonne of God cannot conceiue, and therefore will not beleeue. Notwithſtanding this, the Mahometans in generall thinke vs Chriſtians ſo vncleane, they will not eate with vs, nor yet of any thing is dreſſed in our veſſels.

Bookes.

The Maronite which tranſlated the Arab Geographer, alleadge this reaſon, that he was a Chriſtian, becauſe he calls Chriſt Lord: which yet you ſee the Mahumetans doe.

Among the Mahometans are many called Deruiſes, which relinquiſh the World, and ſpend their dayes in ſolitude, expecting a recompence in a better life; whoſe ſharpe and ſtrict penances they voluntarily vnder-take, farre exceede all thoſe the Romaniſts boaſt of. For inſtance, there are ſome that liue alone vpon the tops of Hills remote from companie, there paſſing their time in contemplation, and will rather famiſh then moue from theſe retyred Cells, wherefore the people that dwell neereſt to them, out of deuotion releeue them. Some againe, impoſe long times of faſting vpon themſelues til nature be almoſt quite decayed. There are many other among them they call religious men, who weare nothing about them but to hide their ſhame, and theſe like the Mendicant Friars begge for all they eate. Vſually they liue in the Suburbs of great Cities or Townes, and are like the Man our bleſſed Sauiour mentions, about the Citie of the Gadarens, which had Deuils, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any houſe but in the Tombes. They make little fires in the day, ſleeping at night in the warme aſhes, with which they beſmeare their bodies. Theſe Aſhmen ſuffer not the Raſor at any time to come vpon their heads, and ſome of them let their nayles grow like Birds clawes, as it is written of Nabuchadnezzar, when hee was driuen out from the ſocietie of men. And there are a ſort among them, called Mendee, who like the Prieſts of Baal, often cut their fleſh with Kniues and Launcers. Others I haue ſeene who out of deuotion put ſuch maſſie Fetters of Iron vpon their Legs, as that they can ſcarce ſtirre with them, and ſo as faſt as they are able, goe many miles in pilgrimage bare-foote vpon the parching ground, to viſit the Sepulchres of their deluding Saints, thus taking more paines to goe to Hell (Tantum Religio potuit ſuadere malorum) then any Chriſtian I know doth to goe to Heauen. Theſe marry not, ſuch as doe, Mahomet allowes foure wiues, beſides they take libertie to keepe as many women as they are able, only the Prieſts content themſelues with one.

Adulterie puniſhed.

Stewes.

Eunuchs.

Notwithſtanding this Polygamie, the hot iealouſies of the luſtfull Mahometans are ſuch, that they will ſcarce endure the Brothers or Fathers of their beloued Wiues or Women, to haue ſpeech with them, except in their preſence: and Time, by this reſtraint, hath made it odious for ſuch Women as haue the reputation of honeſtie, to be ſeene at any time by ſtrangers. But if they diſhonour their Husbands beds, or being vnmarried are found incontinent profeſſing chaſtitie, rather then they ſhall want puniſhment, their owne Brothers will bee their Executioners, who for ſuch vnnaturall acts ſhall be commended, rather then queſtioned. Yet there is toleration for impudent Harlots, who are as little aſhamed to entertayne, as others, openly to frequent their houſes. The Women of better faſhion haue Eunuchs in ſtead of men, to wait vpon them, who in their minoritie are depriued of all that may prouoke iealouſie.

Marriages.

Their Marriages are ſolemnized in great pompe, for after the Moola hath ioyned their hands with ſome other Ceremonie and Words of Benediction, the firſt watch of the night they begin their jollitie, the Man on horſe-backe be he poore or rich, with his friends about him, many Creſſet lightly before him, with Drums and wind Inſtruments and other paſtimes: the Woman followes with her friends in Coaches couered, and after they haue thus paſſed the moſt eminent places of the Citie or Towne they liue in, returne home and there part with a Banquet, the men and women ſeparated. They marry for the moſt part at the ages of twelue or thirteene, their Mothers moſt commonly making the matches.

Of the Gentiles Sects, Opinions, Rites; Prieſts, and other obſeruations of Religion and State in thoſe parts.

Gentiles, eighty and foure Sects.

Thoſe I ſuppoſe which our ſtories call Brachmanes.

Pagodes.

Opinions.

Now more particularly of the Gentiles, which are there diſtracted in fourſcore and foure ſeuerall Sects, all differing mainly in opinion, which had oftentimes fild me with wonder, but that I know Satan (the father of diuiſion) to be the Seducer of them all. Their illiterate Prieſts are called Bramins, who for ought I could euer gather, are ſo ſottiſh and inconſtant in their grounds, that they ſcarce know what they hold. They haue little Churches, which they call Pagodes, built round, in which are Images for worſhip made in monſtrous ſhapes. Some of them dreame of Elyſian fields, to which their ſoules muſt paſſe ouer a Styx or Acharon, and there take new bodies. Others hold, that ere long the World ſhall haue a period, after which they ſhall liue here againe on a new Earth. Some Bramins haue told me how that they acknowledge one God, whom they deſcribe with a thouſand hands, with a thouſand feete, and as many eyes, thereby expreſing his power. They talke of foure books, which about ſix thouſand yeeres ſince were ſent them from God by their Prophet Ram, whereof two were ſealed vp and might not be opened; the other to be read onely by themſelues. They ſay that there are ſeuen Orbes, aboue which is the Seate of God; that God knowes not petie things, or if he doe regards them not. They circumſcribe God vnto Place, ſaying, that he may be ſeene, but as in a Miſt afarre off, not neere. They beleeue that there are Deuils, but ſo bound in chaines that they cannot hurt them.

Tradition of Adam.

They call a man Adam, from our firſt father Adam, whoſe wife tempted with the forbidden fruit, tooke it as they ſay and eate it downe, but as her husband ſwallowed it, the Hand of God ſtopped it in his throat, whence man hath a Bunch there, which women haue not, called by them Adams Apple.

Marrying in the ſame Tribe and Trade.

As anciently among the Iewes, their Prieſthood is hereditarie; for euery Bramins ſonne is a Prieſt, and marries a Bramins daughter; and ſo among all the Gentiles, the men take the daughters of thoſe to bee their wiues which are of their Fathers Tribe, Sect, and Occupation. For inſtance, a Merchants ſonne marries a Merchants daughter. And euery mans ſonne that liues by his labour, marries the daughter of him that is of his owne profeſſion, by which meanes they neuer aduance themſelues. Theſe Gentiles take but one wife, of which they are not ſo fearefull as the Mahometans of their multitude, for they ſuffer them to goe abroad. They are married yong, at ſix or ſeuen yeeres old (their Parents making the Contracts) and about twelue come together. Their Nuptials, as thoſe of the Mahometans, are performed with much pompe and jollitie.

For

Their habit.

Eares and Eare-rings.

Waſhing.

Spots.

For their Habit it differs little from the Mahometans, but many of the women weare Rings vpon their Toes, and therefore goe barefoote. They haue likewiſe broad Rings of braſſe (or better Metall according to the qualitie of the woman) about the ſmall of the legges to take off and on, haply ſuch as the Prophet meant by the tinkling ornaments about the feete, or the ornaments of the legs, which the Iewiſh women were wont to put on, Eſay 3. And ſuch as theſe they haue about their armes. The flaps or nether part of their eares are boared, when they are yong, which hole daily ſtretched and made wider by things kept in it for that purpoſe, at laſt becomes ſo large, that it will hold a Ring (I dare boldly ſay, as large as a little Sawcer) made hollow on the ſides for the fleſh to reſt in. Both men and women waſh their bodies euery day before they eate, which done, they keepe off their clothes but the couering of modeſtie, till they haue fed. This outward waſhing appertaines, as they thinke, to their clenſing from ſinne, not vnlike the Phariſies, who would not eate with vnwaſhen hands, Mar.7. Hence they aſcribe a certaine Diuinitie to Riuers, but aboue all, to Ganges, daily flocking thither in Troopes, and there throw in pieces of gold, or ſiluer, according to their deuotion and abilitie, after which they waſh their bodies. Both men and women paint on their fore-heads or other parts of their faces red or yellow ſpots.

Burning.

Widowes.

Manner of wiues burning with their husbands.

Parcees.

Now farther for their groſſe opinions, they beleeue not the reſurrection of fleſh, and therefore burne the bodies of their dead neere ſome Riuer, if they may with conueniencie, wherein they ſowe the Aſhes. Their Widowes marrie not, but after the loſſe of their Husbands, cut their haire, and ſpend all their life following, as neglected Creatures, whence to bee free from ſhame. Many yong women are ambitious to die with honor (as they eſteeme it) when their fiery loue brings them to the flames, as they thinke, of Martyrdome, moſt willingly: Following their dead Husbands vnto the fire, and there imbracing are burnt with them; but this they doe voluntary, not compelled. The parents and friends of thoſe women will moſt ioyfully accompanie them, and when the wood is fitted for this helliſh Sacrifice, and begins to burne, all the people aſſembled ſhoute and make a noyſe, that the ſcreeches of this tortured creature may not bee heard. Not much vnlike the cuſtome of the Ammonites, who when they made their children paſſe through the fire to Moloch, cauſed certaine Tabret, or Drums to ſound, that their cry might not be heard, whence the place was called Tophet, a Tabret, 2.Kings 23.10. There is one ſect among the Gentiles, which neither burne nor interre their dead (they are called Parcees) who incircle pieces of ground with high ſtone walls, remote from houſes or Roade-wayes, and therein lay their Carkaſſes wrapped in Sheetes, thus hauing no other Tombes but the gorges of rauenous Fowles.

Gentiles induſtrie, and idlenes of Moores.

Beefe not eaten.

The Gentiles for the moſt part are very induſtrious: They till the ground or elſe ſpend their time otherwaies diligently in their vocations. There are amongſt them moſt curious Artificers, who are the beſt Apes for imitation in the world, for they will make any new thing by patterne. The Mahometans are generally idle, who are all for to morrow (a word common in their mouthes) they liue vpon the labours of the Gentiles. Some of which poore ſeduced Infidels, will eate of nothing that hath life, and theſe liue vpon Herbs, and Milke, and Butter, and Cheeſe, and Sweet-meates, of which they make diuers kindes, whereof the moſt wholſome is greene Ginger, as well preſerued there as in any part of the world. Others will eate Fiſh, and no liuing thing elſe. The Raſhbootes eate Swines-fleſh, moſt hatefull to the Mahometans. Some will eate of one kinde of fleſh, ſome of another; but all the Gentiles abſtaine from Beefe, out of the excellent eſteeme they haue of Kine, and therefore giue the King yeerly (beſide his other exactions) great ſummes of money as a ranſome for thoſe Creatures. Whence among other good prouiſion, we meete there but with little Beefe.

Banians.

Fooliſh pittie.

Thoſe moſt tender hearted Idolaters are called Banians, who hold Pithagoras his μετεμψύχωσις, as a prime Article of their Fath. They thinke that the ſoules of the beſt men and women, when their bodies let them out of Priſon, take their repoſe in Kine, which in their opinion are the beſt of all Creatures. So the ſoules of the wicked goe into viler beaſts, as the ſoules of Gluttons and Drunkards into Swine; the ſoules of the voluptuous and incontinent into Monkies, and Apes; the ſoules of the furious, cruell, and reuengefull, into Lyons, Tygers, and Wolues; the ſoules of the enuious, into Serpents; and ſo into other Creatures according to their qualitie and diſpoſition, ſucceſſiuely from one to another of the ſame kinde, ad infinitum; by conſequence, beleeuing the immortalitie of the world. So that there is not a ſilly Flie, but if they may bee credited, carries about ſome ſoules (haply they thinke of light women) and will not be perſwaded out of theſe groſſe opinions, ſo incorrigible are their ſottiſh errours. And therefore will not depriue the moſt offenſiue creatures of their life, not Snakes that will kill them, ſaying, it is their nature to doe harme, how that they haue reaſon to ſhunne, not libertie to deſtroy them.

Charitable workes.

For their workes of Charitie, many rich men build Sarraas, or make Wells, or Tankes neere to High-wayes that are much trauelled, where paſſengers may drinke, or elſe allow Penſions vnto poore men, that they may ſit by the High-way ſides and offer water vnto thoſe that paſſe.

* Thurſday Sabbath: Munday to Peguans, Thurſday in Guinæa, Friday to Moores, Saturday to Iews, Sunday to Chriſtians. In Iaua that day whereon they haue begun ſome great worke.

Tuesday.

Their day of reſt is * Thurſday, as the Mahometans Friday. Many Feſtiuals they haue which they keepe ſolemne, and Pilgrimages whereof the moſt famous are ſpecified in the briefe deſcriptions of Negracut and Cyba, where people out of deuotion cut off part of their tongues, which (if Maſter Coryat who ſtrictly obſerued it, may be beleeued) in a few daies became whole againe. It were eaſie to enlarge, but I will not caſt away Inke and Paper in a farther deſcription of their ſtupid Idolatries, the ſumme is, that both Mahometans and Gentiles ground their opinions vpon Tradition, not Reaſon, and are content to periſh with their Fore-fathers, out of a prepoſterous zeale, and louing peruerſeneſſe neuer ruminating on that they maintayne, like to vncleane beaſts which chew not the Cud.

Now both theſe Mahometans and Gentiles are vnder the ſubiection of the Great Mogoll, whoſe name ſignifieth a circumciſed man, and therefore he is called the Great Mogoll, as much to ſay, the Chiefe of the Circumciſion. He is lineally deſcended by the Father from that famous Conquerour of the Eaſt, called in our Stories Tamberlaine, in theirs Temar, who towards his end by an vnhappie fall from his Horſe, which made him halt to his Graue, was called Temar-lang, * or Temar the lame. The preſent King is the ninth in a direct Line from that his great Anceſtors.

* Lang, in the Perſian ſignifieth Lame.

Courts of Iuſtice.

The Emperour ſtiles himſelfe, The King of Iuſtice, the light of the Law of Mahomet, the Conquerour of the World. Himſelfe moderates in all matters of conſequence which happen neere his Court, for the moſt part iudging, ſecundum allegata & probata. Tryals are quicke and ſo are Executions, hangings, beheading, impaling, killing with Dogges, by Elephants, Serpents, and other like according to the nature of the Fact. The execution is commonly done in the Market place. The Gouernours in Cities and Prouinces proceed in like forme of Iuſtice. I could neuer heare of Law written amongſt them: the King and his Subſtitutes will is Law. His Vice-gerents continue not long in a place, but to preuent popularitie receiue vſually a remooue yearely. They receiue his Letters with great reſpect: They looke for Preſents from all which haue occaſion to vſe them; and if they be not often viſited will aske for them; yea, ſend them backe for better exchange. The Cadee will impriſon Debtors and Sureties, bound with hand and Seale: and men of power for payment will ſell their perſons, wiues, and children, which the cuſtome of the Land will warrant.

Bribes.
Debts.

The Durbar.

The King ſhewes himſelfe thrice a day; firſt at Sun-riſing at a Bay-window toward the Eaſt, many being there aſſembled to giue him the Salam, and crying, Padſha Salament, that is, Liue, O King; At noone he ſees his Elephants fight or other paſtimes. A little before Sun-ſet, he ſhewes himſelfe at a window to the Weſt, and the Sunne being ſet, returneth in with Drums and wind Inſtruments, the peoples acclamations adding to the conſort. At any of theſe three times, any Sutor holding vp his Petition to be ſeene, ſhall be heard. Betwixt ſeuen and nine he ſits priuately attended with his Nobles.

No Inheritance.
The Kings Penſions.
See before in Captaine Hawkins.

No Subiect in this Empire hath Land of Inheritance, nor haue other title but the Kings will, which makes ſome of the Grandes to liue at the height of their meanes; Merchants alſo to conceale their Riches leſt they ſhould be made Spunges. Some meane meanes the King allowes the Children of thoſe great Ones, which they exceed not, except they happily ſucceed in their fathers fauours. His Penſions are reckoned by Horſe, of which hee payeth a Million in his Empire, for euery Horſe allowing fiue and twentie pound yearely, raiſed from Lands thereunto deſigned. There are ſome twentie in his Court which haue pay of fiue thouſand Horſe, others of foure thouſand or three thouſand, and ſo downward. Hee which hath pay of fiue thouſand, is bound to haue two thouſand at command, and ſo in like proportion others. This abſolute dependance makes them diſſolute Paraſites. When he giueth aduancement, he addeth a new name, as Pharao did to Ioſeph, and thoſe pithily ſignificant, as Mahobet Chan, the beloued Lord; Chan Iahaun, the Lord of my Heart; Chan Allau, the Lord of the World, &c.

Principall Officers.

The Chiefe Officers of State are his Treaſurer, the Maſter of his Eunuches (who is Steward and Comptroller of his Houſe) his Secretarie, the Maſter of his Elephants, the Tent-maſter, and Keeper of his Wardrobe. Theſe are ſubordinate Titles of Honour, as Chan, Mirza, Vmbra, or Captaine, Haddee (a Souldier or Horſeman.) Gorgeous Apparell is prohibited by the Sunnes heate, the King himſelfe being commonly veſted with a Garment, as before deſcribed, of pure white Calico Lawne. Blue may not be worne in his preſence (the colour of Mourners) nor the name of death ſounded in his eares; but ſuch caſually is mollified by tearmes to this purpoſe; Such an one hath made himſelfe a Sacrifice at your Maieſties feet. That heate of the Countrey makes little ſale for Engliſh cloth, moſt vſed there for couerings of Elephants, Horſes, Coaches. Yet may this King be thought to exceed any other in glorious Thrones and rich Iewels. Hee hath a Throne in his Palace at Agra, aſcended by degrees, on the top whereof are foure Lions made of maſſie Siluer, gilded, ſet with Precious Stones, ſupporting a Canopie of maſſie Gold. By the way I may mention, a tame Lion liuing in his Court while I was there, going vp and downe without hurt like a Dogge. His Iewels wherewith hee is daily adorned about his head, necke, wriſts, and hilts of his Sword and Dagger, are inualuable. He is on his Birth-day the firſt of September, (now ſixtie times renewed) yearely weighed, and account kept thereof by his Phyſicians, thereby gheſſing at his bodily eſtate. Part of two Letters to his Maieſtie (one you haue before) is here tranſlated out of Perſian, ſent by Sir Thomas Roe, but written, one a yeare before the other.

Mogols Letters to his Maieſty.

WHen your Maieſtie ſhall open this Letter, let your Royall heart be as freſh, as a ſweet Garden; let all people make reuerence at your Gate; let your Throne be aduanced higher amongſt the greatneſſe of Kings of the Prophet Ieſus; let your Maieſtie be the greateſt of all Monarches, who may deriue their counſell and wiſedome from your breſt as from a Fountayne, that the Law of the Maieſtie of Ieſus may reuiue and flouriſh vnder your protection. The Letters of Loue and Friendſhip which you ſent me, and the Preſents (tokens of your good affection toward mee) I haue receiued by the hands of your Embaſſadour Sir Thomas Roe, who well deſerueth to be your truſted Seruant; deliuered to me in an acceptable and happie houre. Vpon which mine eyes were ſo fixed, that I could not eaſily remooue them to any other Obiect, and haue accepted them with great ioy, &c. The laſt Letter hath this beginning.

HOw gracious is your Maieſtie, whoſe greatneſſe God preſerue? As vpon a Roſe in a Garden, ſo are mine eyes fixed vpon you. God maintayne your Eſtate, that your Monarchie may proſper and be augmented, and that you may obtayne all your deſires, worthy the greatneſſe of your Renowne. And as your heart is noble and vpright, ſo let God giue you a glorious Raigne, becauſe you ſtrongly defend the Maieſtie of Ieſus, which God yet made more flouriſhing, becauſe it was confirmed by Miracles, &c.

Sealing Letters.

That which followeth in both Letters, is to teſtifie his care and loue toward the Engliſh. Theſe Letters being written, their Copies were ſent to the Lord Embaſſadour, and the originals rolled vp and couered with cloth of Gold, and ſealed vp at both ends; which is the Letter-faſhion of thoſe parts.

Kings Progreſſe and Campe.

We trauelled two yeares with the Great Mogoll in progreſſe, in the temperate moneths twixt October and April, there being no leſſe then two hundred thouſand men, women, and children in this Leskar, or Campe (I am hereof confident) beſides Elephants, Horſes, and other beaſts that eate Corne: all which notwithſtanding, wee neuer felt want of any prouiſion, no not in our nineteene dayes trauell from Mandoa to Amadauar, thorow a Wilderneſſe, the Road being cut for vs in the mayne Woods. The Tents were of diuers colours, and repreſented a ſpacious and ſpecious Citie: The Kings Tents red, reared on poles very high, and placed in the midſt of the Campe, couering a large compaſſe, incircled with Canats (made of red Calico ſtiffened with Canes at euery breadth, ſtanding vpright about nine foot high) guarded round euery night with Souldiers. He remooued ten or twelue miles a day more or leſſe according to the conuenience of water. His Wiues and Women of all ſorts (which are one thouſand at leaſt, prouided for in his Tents) are carryed in Palankas, or vpon Elephants, or elſe in Cradles, hanging on the ſides of Dromedaries, couered cloſe and attended by Eunuches. In wiuing, he reſpects fancie more then honour, not ſeeking affinitie with Neighbour Princes, but to pleaſe his eye at home. Noore-Mahal (the name of his beſt Beloued) ſignifieth the Light of the Court: Shee hath much aduanced her friends, before meane, and in manner commands the Commander of that Empire by engroſſing his affections. The King and his Great men maintayne their women, but little affect them after thirtie yeares of their age.

His Tents.

His women.

His children.

This multitude of women notwithſtanding, the Mogoll hath but ſixe Children, fiue Sonnes and a Daughter. All his Sonnes are called Sultans, or Princes, the eldeſt Sultan Curſero, the ſecond, Sultan Parueis, Sultan Caroon the third, Sultan Shahar the fourth, the laſt is Sultan Tauct, which word in the Perſian ſignifieth, A Throne: ſo named by the King, who the firſt houre of his quiet poſſeſſing the Throne, had newes of his birth, about nineteene yeares ſince. The firſt Sonne by any of his marryed Wiues, by prerogatiue of birth inherits: the elder Brother beeing there called the Great Brother. Although the younger be not put to death, as with the Turkes, yet it is obſerued, that they ſuruiue not long their Father, employed commonly in ſome dangerous expedition. Achabar-sha had threatned to diſ-herit the preſent King for abuſe of Anar-kalee, (that is, Pomegranate kernell) his moſt beloued Wife, but on his death-bed repealed it. Thus Achabars death is thus reported. He was wont vpon diſpleaſure to giue Pils to his Grandes, to purge their ſoules from their bodies; which intending againſt One, and hauing another Cordiall Pill for himſelfe, whiles hee entertayned the other with faire flatteries, by a happie-vnhappie miſtake hee tooke the Poyſon himſelfe, which with a mortall Fluxe of bloud in few dayes killed him: Neque enim lex iuſtior vlla eſt. Quàm necis artifices arte perire ſuâ.

The Mogolls diſpoſition.

This Kings diſpoſition ſeemes compoſed of extreames, very cruell, and otherwhiles very milde; often ouercome with Wine, but ſeuerely puniſhing that fault in others. His Subiects know not to diſobey, Nature forgetting her priuate bonds twixt Father and Sonne to fulfill that publike. He daily relieues many poore, and will in pietie helpe to carrie ſometimes his Mother in a Palanka on his ſhoulders. He ſpeakes reſpectiuely of our Sauiour, but is offended at his Croſſe and pouertie, thinking them incompetible to ſuch Maieſtie, though told that his humilitie was to ſubdue the Worlds pride.

Reſpect to Prieſts. Ieſuits and Conuerts.

All Religions are tolerated, and their Prieſts in good eſteeme. My ſelfe often receiued from the Mogoll himſelfe, the appellation of Father, with other many gracious words, with place amongſt his beſt Nobles. The Ieſuites haue not only admittance into his preſence, but incouragements from him by many gifts, with libertie of conuerting to them; and to the ſubiect, to be without loſſe of fauour conuerted. He made tryall of one Conuert with many threats to de-terre him from his new profeſſion, and finding him vndauntedly reſolute, he aſſayed by flatteries and promiſes to re-gaine him, but therein alſo failing, hee bade him continue, and with a Reward diſcharged him; hauing told him, that if he could haue frayed or brought him from his Religion, he would haue made him an example for all Wauerers. The chiefe Ieſuite was Franciſcus Corſi a Florentine by birth, liuing at the Mogolls Court, Agent for the Portugals, I would I were able to confirme the Reports of their Conuerſions. The truth is, they haue ſpilt the water of Baptiſme vpon ſome faces working on the neceſſities of poore men, who for want of meanes, which they giue them, are content to weare Crucifixes; but for want of inſtruction are only in name Chriſtians. (I obſerued that of the poore there, fiue haue begged in the name of Marie, for one in the Name of Chriſt) I alſo deſired to put my hand to this holy Worke, but found it difficult, both by Mahumetane libertie for women, and the debauched liues of ſome Chriſtian-vnchriſtian men amongſt them, Per quorum latera patitur Euangelium. Hee which hath the Key of Dauid, open their eyes, and in his good time ſend Labourers into this Vineyard. Amen.

Becauſe you haue the tranſcripts of Letters from the Great Mogoll, I haue added here part of a Letter from the Great Turke, to his Maieſtie, that the Reader may delight himſelfe with the ſtrangeneſſe of the ſtile.

Sultan Achmet Chan, Sonne vnto the Sultan Mehemet Chan moſt inuincible.

TO the moſt glorious of the great Lords that follow, Ieſus, elected by the great and mightie of the Chriſtian Faith: Corrector of the things of all the Nations of the Nazaritanes; endued with the brightneſſe of Lordſhip, Honour, Maieſtie, and Glorie, King Iames of the Kingdome of England, &c. whoſe end be with all happineſſe and felicitie.

At the comming of this our Imperiall Letter to your Maieſties hands, with our Imperiall ſigne, you ſhall vnderſtand of the arriuall at our Port (which Port is indeed the refuge of Iuſtice, and the Gate of Honourable ſuccour, yea, the principall place of all the Kings of the World) of one of your Maieſties Honourable and acceptable Gentlemen, Thomas Glouer, with your Maieſties moſt friendly and moſt ſincere Letter; the tenour whereof is, That by the good will and pleaſure of the ſole Creator of the World, your Maieſtie hath not only taken in poſſeſſion the Kingdom of England, but alſo as heretofore the deceaſed Queene of England hath beene in ſincere and mutuall Friendſhip and Peace with our ſublime and moſt happie Port; ſo your Maieſtie alſo conſequently vouchſafeth to manifeſt and approoue the ſame. Moreouer, your Maieſtie hath giuen vs to vnderſtand, that your will and pleaſure is, that the Subiects of your Maieſties Countries, in manner as heretofore they were wont, ſhould come and traffique in theſe our guarded Dominions, and ſo to the end accordingly at their pleaſures might continue in the ſame. Finally, all thoſe things that were by it certified vnto our Imperiall Greatneſſe, we haue ſufficiently comprehended and vnderſtood. Now your Maieſtie ſhall vnderſtand, that it being from the time of our Father and Grand-father, of moſt happie Memories, alwaies the cuſtome and vſe, and moſt excellent order, to hold our moſt high and ſublime Port open, now alſo in conformitie thereof, eſpecially we being by the Diuine grace and fauour ſeated in the Throne of Iuſtice, it is not any way prohibited nor forbidden to any perſon to enter, and to depart from the ſame. Eſpecially the Queene of England of good Memorie, being in friendſhip, from the time of our Father and Grand-father of moſt happie Memorie, it hath beene alwaies the vſe and cuſtome to ſhew vnto her Subiects, who trade and traffique within our Muſulmanicall guarded Dominions, all extraordinary fauour, grace, and aide. Now by the great fauour of the Omnipotent God, we being come and eſtabliſhed with honour, felicitie, proſperitie and greatneſſe in the Seate and Throne of happineſſe, in conformitie of the aboue ſaid fauours, before it was on your Maieſties behalfe requeſted for the renouation of the peace and entercourſe, which is betwixt vs, wee haue not only cauſed to renew the Capitulations for the ſecuritie of the traffique of the Merchants, giuing the ſame into the hands of your Maieſties Ambaſſadour, but alſo, &c.

The Trauels of Lewis Barthema or Vertoman into Egypt, Syria, Arabia, Perſia, and India, heretofore publiſhed in Engliſh by R. Eden, and here corrected according to Ramusios Copie, and contracted.

His Trauell thorow the Deſarts of Medina and Mecha, and their profane Holies.

Departing from Venice with proſperous winds, in few dayes wee arriued at the Citie of Alexandria in Egypt: where the deſire wee had to know things more ſtrange and further off, would not permit vs to tarrie long. And therefore departing from thence, and ſayling vp the Riuer of Nilus, we came to the Citie of new Babylon, commonly called, Cayro. It ſeemed to mee much inferiour to the report and fame that was thereof: for the greatneſſe thereof ſeemed nothing agreeable to the bruit, and appeared no more in circuit then the citie of Rome, although much more peopled, and better inhabited. But the large fields of the Suburbs haue deceiued many, being diſperſed with in manner innumerable Villages, which ſome haue thought to haue beene part of the Citie, which is nothing ſo. For thoſe Villages and diſperſed houſes, are two or three miles from the Citie, and round about it on euery ſide.

Cayro.

Departing from Babylon, and returning to Alexandria, where we againe entred into our Sea, we came to Barutti, a Citie on the Sea-coaſt of Syria. From hence wee ſayled to Tripoli. From thence we came to Aleppo. Departing from thence, we came to Damaſco, in ten dayes iourney.

Damaſco.

It is in manner incredible, and paſſeth all beliefe, to thinke how faire the Citie of Damaſco is, and how fertile is the ſoyle. And therefore allured by the maruellous beautie of the Citie, I remayned there many dayes, that learning their Language, I might know the manners of the People. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, and Mamalukes, with many Chriſtians, liuing after the manner of the Greekes. When it pleaſeth the Sultan to extort a certaine ſumme of Gold of his Noblemen or Merchants (for they vſe great robberies and murthers (for the Moores are vnder the Mamalukes, as Lambs to the Wolfe) he ſends two Letters to the Captaine of the Caſtle. In the one is contayned, that with an Oration he inuite to the Caſtle ſuch as pleaſeth him. In the other is declared the minde of the Soldan, what hee demandeth of his Subiects. When the Letters bee read, with all expedition they accompliſh his commandement, bee it right or wrong, without reſpect. This meanes the Soldan inuented to extort money. Yet ſometimes it commeth to paſſe, that the Noblemen are of ſuch ſtrength, that they will not come when they are commanded, knowing that the Tyrant will offer them violence. And therefore oftentimes when they know that the Captaine of the Caſtle will call them, they flee into the Dominions of the Turke. This haue we gathered as touching their manners; wee haue alſo obſerued, that the Watchmen in the Towers, doe not giue warning to the Guard with liuely voyce, but with Drummes, the one anſwering the other by courſe. But if any of the Watchmen be ſo ſleepie, that in a Pater noſter while he anſwere not to the ſound of the watch, hee is immediatly committed to priſon for one whole yeere. In euery houſe are ſeene Fountaines of curious worke emboſſed and grauen. Their houſes outwardly are not beautifull, but inwardly maruelouſly adorned with variable workes of Marble and Porphyr. Within the Towne are many Temples or Churches, which they call, Moſcheas. But that which is moſt beautifull of all other, is builded after the manner of Saint Peters Church in Rome, if you reſpect the greatneſſe, excepting this; that in the middle is no roofe or couerture, but is all open: but about the reſt of the Temple, it is altogether vaulted. There they obſerue religiouſly the bodie of the holy Prophet Zacharie. The Temple hath alſo foure great double gates of metall, very faire, and many goodly Fountaines within it.

The bodie of the Prophet Zacharias.

The Mamalukes are that kind of men, which haue forſaken our Faith, and as ſlaues are bought by the Gouernour. They are very actiue, and brought vp both in learning and warlike diſcipline, vntill they come to great perfection. As well the little as the great, without reſpect, receiue ſtipend of the Gouernour: which for euery moneth amounteth to ſix of thoſe pieces of Gold which they call Saraphos, beſide the meat and drinke for himſelfe and his ſeruant, and alſo prouiſion for his Horſe. And the more expert they be, and of greater actiuitie, they haue the greater wages. They walke not in the Citie but by two or three together, for it is counted diſhonour for any of them to walke without a companion. And if by the way they chance to meet with two or three women (for they lay waite to tarrie for them about ſuch houſes whither they know the women reſort) licence is granted them, as they by chance firſt meet with them, to bring them into certaine Tauernes, where they abuſe them. When the Mamalukes attempt to diſcouer their faces (for they goe with their faces couered) they ſtriue with them, becauſe they will not be knowne: but when the Mamalukes perſiſt wantonly to diſcouer them, they ſay thus vnto them, Is it not enough for you, that you haue abuſed our bodies as pleaſeth you, but that you will alſo diſcouer our faces? Then the Mamalukes ſuffer them to depart. But ſometime it chanceth, that when they thinke to proſtitute the daughter of ſome Gentlemen or Noblemen, they commit the fact with their owne wiues: which thing chanced whileſt I was there. The women beautifie and garniſh themſelues as much as any. They vſe ſilken apparell, and couer them with cloth of Goſſampine, in maner as fine as Silke. They weare white Buskins, and Shooes of red or purple colour. They garniſh their heads with many Iewels and Eare-rings, and weare Rings and Bracelets. They marrie as often as them liſteth: for when they are wearie of their firſt marriage, they goe to the Cady, and make requeſt to him to bee diuorced from their firſt marriage. Some thinke, that the Mahumetans haue fiue or ſixe wiues together, which I haue not obſerued: but as farre as I could perceiue, they haue but two or three. They eate openly, eſpecially in their Marts or Faires, and there dreſſe they all their meates. They eate Horſes, Camels, Buffels, Goats, and ſuch other beaſts. They haue great abundance of freſh Cheeſe. They that ſell Milke, driue about with them, fortie or fiftie Goats, which they bring into the houſes of them that will buy milke, euen vp into their chambers, although they bee three roofes high, and there milke them, to haue it freſh and new. Theſe Goats haue their eares a ſpan long, many vdders or paps, and are very fruitfull. There is great abundance of Muſhroms, for ſometimes there are ſeene, twentie or thirtie Camels laden with Muſhroms, and yet in the ſpace of three dayes they are all ſold. They are brought from the Mountaines of Armenia, and from Aſia the leſſe, which is now called, Turkia or Natolia, or Anatolia.

The Mahumetans vſe long Veſtures and looſe, both of Silke and Cloth. The moſt part vſe Hoſe of Goſſampine cloth, and white Shooes. When any of the Mahumetans by chance meeteth with any of the Mamalukes, although the Mahumetan be the worthier perſon, yet giueth he place and reuerence to the Mamaluke, who otherwiſe would giue him the Baſtonado, and beat him with a ſtaffe. The Chriſtians alſo keepe there many Ware-houſes of Merchandiſe, where they haue diuers ſorts of Silkes and Veluet: but the Chriſtians are there euill entreated.

The Arabians liue by robberie.

Houſes borne on Camels backes.

In the yeere of our Lord 1503. the eighth day of the moneth of Aprill, the Carauan being readie to goe to Mecha, I entred familiaritie and friendſhip with a certaine Captaine Mamaluke, of them that had forſaken our Faith, with whom being agreed of the price, hee prepared me apparell like vnto that which the Mamalukes vſe to weare, and giuing me alſo a good Horſe, accompanied me with the other Mamalukes. This (as I haue ſaid) I obtayned with great coſt, and many gifts which I gaue him. Thus entring to the iourney, after the ſpace of three dayes, we came to a certaine place named Mezerick, where we remayned three dayes, that the Merchants which were in our companie might prouide things neceſſarie, as ſpecially Camels, and diuers other things. There is a certaine Prince whom they call Zambei, of great power in the Countrey of Arabia: he had three brethren, and foure children. He nouriſheth fortie thouſand Horſes, ten thouſand Mares, and foure thouſand Camels. The Countrey where he keepeth the herds of theſe beaſts, is large, of two dayes iourney. This Prince Zambei, is of ſo great power, that he keepeth warre with the Soltan of Babylon, the Gouernours of Damaſco, and of Ieruſalem. In the time of Harueſt & gathering of fruits, hee is giuen wholly to prey and robbing, and with great ſubtiltie deceiueth the Arabians: for, when they thinke him to bee a mile or two off, hee is with them ſuddenly betimes in the morning: and inuading their Lands, carrieth away their fruits, Wheat, and Barley, euen as hee findeth it in the ſackes: and ſo liueth continually day and night with ſuch incurſions. When his Mares bee wearied with continuall running, hee reſteth a while: and to refreſh them, giueth them Camels Milke to drinke, to coole them after their great labour. Thoſe Mares are of ſuch maruellous ſwiftneſſe, that when I preſently ſaw them, they ſeemed rather to flye then to runne. Note alſo, that theſe Arabians ride on Horſes without Saddles, and weare none other veſture then onely an inward Coat, or Peticoat, except ſome chiefe men; for weapon, they vſe a certaine long Dart of Reeds, of the length of ten or twelue cubits, pointed with Iron (after the manner of Iauelins) and fringed with Silke. When they attempt any incurſions, they march in ſuch order, that they ſeeme to goe in troups: they are of deſpicable and little ſtature, and of colour betweene yellow and blacke. They haue the voyces of women, and the haire of their head long and blacke, and laid out at large. They are of greater multitude then a man would beleeue, and are among themſelues at continuall ſtrife and warre. They inhabite the Mountaines, and haue certaine times appointed to robberie: for this purpoſe they obſerue eſpecially the time, when they are certaine of the paſſage of the Pilgrims, and other that iourney that way to Mecha, then like Theeues they lie in the way and robbe them. When they make theſe theeuiſh inuaſions, they bring with them their Wiues, Children, Families, and all the goods they haue. Their Houſes they put vpon the Camels: for other Houſes haue they none, but liue onely in Tents and Pauilions, as doe our Souldiers.

Tents and Pauilions.

Such Tabernacles are made of blacke wooll, and that rough and filthie. But to returne to our Voyage. The eleuenth day of Aprill, departed from Mezaribe the companie of Camels (which they call the Carauan) to the number of fiue and thirtie thouſand, with fortie thouſand men. But wee were no more then threeſcore Mamalukes, which had taken the charge to guide and guard the Carauan; which was diuided into three parts, ſome in the front, other in the middeſt of the Armie, and other in the reare. Damaſco is from Mecha fortie dayes and fortie nights iourney. Departing therefore from Mezaribe, we continued our iourney that day, vntill the two and twentieth houre of the day. Then our Captaine, after hee had giuen the watch-word and ſigne, commanded that euery man ſhould reſt and remayne in the place where the ſigne ſhould be giuen them. Therefore as ſoone as they heard the ſigne, by the ſound of a Trumpet, they ſtayed, and after they had vnburdened their Camels, ſpent there two houres to victuall themſelues and their beaſts: then the Captaine giuing a new ſigne, charging their Camels againe, they departed ſpeedily from thence. Euery Camell hath at one feeding fiue Barley loaues, raw and not baked, as big as a Pomgranate. Taking horſe, they continued that iourney the day and night following, vntill two and twentie houres of the day, and at that houre they obſerue the order which we haue ſpoken off here before. Euery eighth day they draw water by digging the ground or ſand: by the way neuertheleſſe ſomwhere are found Wells and Ciſternes. After euery eighth day, they reſt their Camels one or two dayes to recouer their ſtrength. The Camels are laden with incredible burdens, and double charge: that is to meane, the burden of two great Mules. They drinke but once in three dayes. They giue them to eate fiue Barley loaues as big as a Pomgranate.

This for feare of the Arabians

The burden of the Camels.

When they tarrie and reſt them at the waters aforeſaid, they are euer enforced to conflict with a great multitude of the Arabians: but the battell is for the moſt part without bloudſhed: for although we haue oftentimes fought with them, yet was there onely one man ſlaine on our part; for theſe Arabians are ſo weake and feeble, that threeſcore Mamalukes, haue often put to the worſt, fortie or fiftie thouſand Arabians. For no Pagans are in ſtrength or force of Armes to be compared to the Mamalukes, of whoſe actiuitie I haue ſeene great experience: among the which this is one. A certaine Mamaluke layed an Apple vpon the head of his ſeruant, and at the diſtance of about twelue or fourteene paces, ſtrooke it off from his head. I ſaw likewiſe another, who riding on a ſaddled Horſe with full courſe (for they vſe Saddles as we doe) tooke off the Saddle from the Horſe ſtill running, and for a ſpace bearing it on his head, put it againe on the Horſe ſtill continuing in his full courſe.

The actiuitie of the Mamalukes.

Paſſing the iourney of twelue dayes, we came to the Valley of Sodoma and Gomorrha, where we found it to be true, that is written in holy Scripture: for there is yet to be ſeene, how they were deſtroyed by Miracle. I affirme that there are three Cities. There is yet ſeene, I wot not what, like Bloud, or rather like red Waxe mixt with Earth, three or foure yards deepe. It is eaſie to beleeue that thoſe men were infected with moſt horrible vices, as teſtifieth the barren Region, vtterly without water. Thoſe people were once fed with Manna: but when they abuſed the gift of God, they were ſore plagued. Departing twentie miles from theſe Cities, about thirtie of our companie periſhed of thirſt, and diuers other were buried in the ſand, not yet fully dead. Going ſomewhat further forward, wee found a little Mountaine, at the foot whereof we found water, and therefore made our abode there. The day following early in the morning, came vnto vs foure and twentie thouſand Arabians, asking money for the water which wee had taken. Wee anſwered, that wee would pay nothing, becauſe it was giuen vs by the goodneſſe of God. Immediatly we came to hand-ſtrokes. Wee gathering our ſelues together on the ſaid Mountaine, as in the ſafeſt place, vſed our Camels in the ſtead of a Bulwarke, and placed the Merchants in the middeſt of the Armie (that is) in the middeſt of the Camels, while we fought manfully on euery ſide. The battell continued ſo long, that water fayled both vs and our Enemies in the ſpace of two dayes. The Arabians compaſſed about the Mountaine, crying and threatning that they would breake in among the Camels: at the length, to make an end of the conflict, our Captaine aſſembling the Merchants, commanded a thouſand and two hundred pieces of Gold to be giuen to the Arabians: who when they had receiued the money, ſaid, that the ſumme of ten thouſand pieces of Gold ſhould not ſatisfie them for the water which we had drawne. Whereby we perceiued that they began further to quarrell with vs, and to demand ſome other thing then money. Whereupon incontinent our Captaine gaue commandement, that whoſoeuer in all our companie were able to beare Armes, ſhould not mount vpon the Camels, but ſhould with all expedition prepare themſelues to fight. The day following in the morning, ſending the Camels before, and encloſing our Armie, being about three hundred in number, we met with the Enemies, and gaue the onſet. In this conflict, we loſt onely a man and a woman, and had none other damage: we ſlue of the Arabians a thouſand and fiue hundred. Whereof you need not maruel, if you conſider that they are vnarmed, and weare only a thin looſe veſture, and are beſide almoſt naked: their Horſes alſo being as euill furniſhed, and without Saddles, or other furniture.

A conceit of Manna, contrarie to Scripture.

Iewes Pigmei.

Medina Talnabi, that is, the Citie of the Prophet.

The Tombe or Sepulchre of Mahumet. Mahumet was not buried in Mecha.

In the ſpace of eight dayes, wee came to a Mountayne which containeth in circuit ten or twelue miles. This is inhabited with Iewes, to the number of fiue thouſand, or thereabout. They are of very little ſtature, as of the height of fiue or ſix ſpannes, and ſome much leſſe. They haue ſmall voyces like women, and of blacke colour, yet ſome blacker then other: They feede of none other meate then Mutton. They are circumciſed, and deny not themſelues to be Iewes. If by chance any Mahumetan come into their hands, they flay him aliue. At the foote of the Mountayne, we found a certaine hole, wherein the Raine water was receiued. By finding this opportunitie, we laded ſixteene thouſand Camels, which thing greatly offended the Iewes. They wandred in that Mountayne, ſcattered like wilde Goates or Prickets, yet durſt they not come downe, partly for feare, and partly for hatred againſt the Mahumetans. Beneath the Mountayne are ſeene ſeuen or eight Thorne trees, very faire, and in them wee found a paire of Turtle Doues, which ſeemed to vs in manner a miracle, hauing before iournied fifteen dayes and nights, and ſaw neither Beaſt nor Fowle. Then proceeding two dayes iourney, wee came to a certaine Citie named Medina Talnabi: foure miles from the ſaid Citie, we found a Well. And remayning here one day, we waſhed our ſelues, and changed our Shirts, the more freſhly to enter into the Citie: it is well peopled, and contayneth about three hundred houſes, the Walls are like Bulwarkes of earth, and the houſes both of ſtone and bricke. The ſoyle about the Citie is curſed of God, and is vtterly barren, except that about two ſtones caſt from the Citie, are ſeene about fiftie or ſixtie Palme trees that beare Dates. There, by a certaine Garden, runneth a courſe of water, falling into a lower Plaine, where alſo paſſengers are accuſtomed to water their Camels. And here opportunitie now ſerueth to confute the opinion of them which thinke that the Arke or Tombe of wicked Mahumet in Mecha, to hang in the Ayre, not borne vp with any thing. I affirme this neither to be true, nor to haue any likeneſſe of truth, I preſently beheld theſe things, and ſaw the place where Mahumet is buried, in the ſaid Citie of Medina Talnabi: for we tarryed there three daies, to come to the true knowledge of all theſe things. When we were deſirous to enter into their Temple, wee could not be ſuffered to enter, without a companion, little or great, of thoſe Moores. They taking vs by the hand, brought vs to the place where, they ſay, Mahumet is buried.

The Sepulchre of Mahumet, and his fellowes.

Mahumets Librarie.

His Temple is ſquare, and is a hundred Paces in length, and foureſcore in breadth; the entrie into it, is by two Gates; from the ſides it is couered with three Vaults, it is borne vp with foure hundred Columnes, or Pillars of white Bricke, there are ſeene hanging Lampes about the number of three thouſand. From the other part of the Temple, in the firſt place of the Meſchita, is ſeene a Tower of the circuit of fiue Paces, vaulted on euery ſide, and couered with a cloth of ſilke, and is borne vp with a grate of Copper, curiouſly wrought, and diſtant from it two Paces: and of them that goe thither, is ſeene, as it were, through a Lettice. Toward the left hand, is the way to the Tower, and when you come thither, you muſt enter by a narrower Gate. On euery ſide of thoſe Gates or Doores, are ſeene many bookes, in manner of a Librarie, on the one ſide twentie, and on the other ſide fiue and twentie, which are of Mahumet and is fellowes: within the ſaid Gate is ſeene a Sepulchre, that is, a graue vnder the earth, where Mahumet was buried. There are alſo his two ſonnes in law, Hali and Othman; Hali was his brothers ſonne, and tooke to wife Fatina, the daughter of Mahumet. There are alſo his two fathers in law, Bubecher and Homer. Theſe foure were chiefe Captaines of the Armie of Mahumet. Euery of theſe haue their proper bookes of their facts and traditions. And hereof proceedeth the great diſſention and diſcord of Religion and manners among this kind of filthie men, while ſome confirme one Doctrine, and ſome another, by reaſon of their diuers ſects of Patrons, Doctors, and Saints, as they call them. By this meanes are they maruellouſly diuided among themſelues, and like beaſts kill themſelues, for ſuch quarrels of diuers opinions, and all falſe.

* Cupola.

The Deuill he was.

For declaration of the ſect of Mahumet, vnderſtand that in the higheſt part of the Tower aforeſaid, is an open round * place. Now ſhall you vnderſtand what craft they vſed to deceiue our Carauan. The firſt Euening that we came thither, our Captaine ſent for the chiefe Prieſt of the Temple, to come to him: and bid him ſhew him the body of Nabi, that is, the Prophet, and that he would giue three thouſand Seraphins of gold. Alſo that hee had no Parents, neither Brothers, Siſters, Kinsfolke, Children, or Wiues, neither that he came thither to buy Merchandize, as Spices, or any manner of precious Iewels: but onely for very zeale of Religion, and ſaluation of his ſoule, and was therefore greatly deſirous to ſee the bodie of the Prophet. To whom the Prieſt of the Temple, with proude countenance, made anſwer in this manner: Dareſt thou with thoſe eyes with the which thou haſt committed ſo many horrible ſinnes, deſire to ſee him by whoſe ſight God hath created Heauen and Earth? To whom againe our Captaine anſwered, thus: My Lord, you haue ſaid truly; neuertheleſſe I pray you that I may finde ſo much fauour with you, that I may ſee the Prophet: whom when I haue ſeene, I will immediately thruſt out mine eyes. The Side anſwered: O Sir, I will open all things vnto thee. So it is, that no man can denie but that our Prophet dyed here, who if he would, might haue dyed at Mecha: But to ſhew in himſelfe a token of humilitie, and thereby to giue vs example to follow him, he was willing rather here then elſewhere to depart out of this world, and was incontinent of Angels borne into Heauen, and abides in the preſence of God. Then our Captaine ſaid to him: Where is Ieſus Chriſt the Sonne of Marie? To whom the Side anſwered: At the feet of Mahumet. Then ſaid our Captaine againe: It ſufficeth, it ſufficeth, I will know no more. After this, our Captaine comming out of the Temple, and turning him to vs, ſaid: See (I pray you) for what goodly ſtuffe I would haue paide three thouſand Seraphs of gold? The ſame day at Euening, at almoſt three a clocke of the night, ten or twelue of the Elders of that Sect of Mahumet, entred into our Carauan, which remained not paſt a ſtones caſt from the Gate of the Citie. Theſe ran hither and thither crying like mad men, with theſe words, Mahumet the meſſenger of God ſhall riſe againe. O Prophet, O God, haue mercie on vs. Our Captaine and wee all raiſed with this crie, tooke weapon with all expedition, ſuſpecting that the Arabains were come to rob our Carauan: We asked what was the cauſe of that exclamation, and what they cryed? for they cried as doe the Chriſtians, when ſuddenly any maruellous thing chanceth. The Elders anſwered: Saw you not the lightning which ſhone out of the Sepulchre of the Prophet Mahumet. Our Captaine anſwered, that he ſaw nothing; and we alſo being demanded, anſwered in like manner. Then ſaid one of the old men, Are yee ſlaues? that is to ſay, bought men: meaning thereby Mamalukes. Then ſaid our Captaine, We are indeed Mamalukes. Then againe the old man ſaid, You my Lords, cannot ſee heauenly things, as being not yet confirmed in our Religion. To this our Captaine anſwered againe, O yee mad and inſenſate beaſts, I had thought to haue giuen you three thouſand pieces of gold, but now, O you Dogs, and progenie of Dogs, I will giue you nothing. It is therefore to be vnderſtood, that none other ſhining came out of the Sepulchre, then a certaine flame which the Prieſts cauſed to come out of the open place of the Tower ſpoken of here before, whereby they would haue deceiued vs. And therefore our Captaine commanded that thereafter none of vs ſhould enter into the Temple. Of this alſo we haue moſt true experience, and moſt certainly aſſure you, that there is neither Iron or Steele, or the Magnes ſtone that ſhould ſo make the Tombe of Mahumet to hang in the Ayre, as ſome haue falſely imagined: neither is there any Mountayne neerer then foure miles: we remayned here three dayes to refreſh our companie. To this Citie victuals and all kind of Corne is brought from Arabia Fœlix, and Babylon, or Alcayr, and alſo from Ethiopia, by the Red Sea, which is from this Citie but foure daies iourney.

Old men.

Falſe miracles to confirme falſe Religion.

The fable that Mahomets Tombe hangeth in the Ayre.

After that we were wearied with the trumperies of the Religion of Mahumet, we determined to goe forward on our iourney: and that by guiding of a Pilot, who directed our courſe with the Mariners Box, or Compaſſe and Card, euen as is vſed in ſayling on the Sea. And thus bending our iourney by the South, wee found a very faire Well or Fountayne, from the which flowed abundance of water. The Inhabitants affirme that Saint Marke the Euangeliſt was the Author of this Fountaine, by a miracle of God, when that Region was in manner burned with incredible drineſſe. Here wee and our Beaſts were ſatisfied with drinke. I may not here omit to ſpeake of the Sea of Sand, and of the dangers thereof. This was found of vs before we came to the Mountayne of the Iewes. In this Sea of Sand we trauelled the iourney of fiue daies, and fiue nights: this is a great broad Plaine, all couered with white Sand, in manner as ſmall as Floure: If the winde had blowne from the South (as it came to vs from the North) we had beene all ouer-whelmed with Sand. And although wee had proſperous winde, yet wee could ſcarcely ſee the one the other ten Paces off. And therfore the Inhabitants trauelling this way, are incloſed in Cages of wood, borne with Camels, and liue in them, ſo paſſing the iourney, guided by Pilots with Mariners Compaſſe and Card, euen as on the Sea, as we haue ſaid. In this iourney alſo many periſh for thirſt, and many by drinking too much, when they find ſuch good waters. In theſe Sands is found Momia, which is the fleſh of ſuch men as are drowned in theſe Sands, and there dried by the heate of the Sunne: So that thoſe bodies are preſerued from putrifaction by the drineſſe of the Sand: and therefore that dry fleſh is eſteemed medicinable. When the wind bloweth from the North, then the Sand riſeth, and is driuen againſt a certaine Mountayne, which is an arme of the Mount Sinai. There we found certaine Pillars artificially wrought. On the left hand of the ſaid Mountayne, in the top or ridge thereof is a Den, and the entrie into it is by an Iron Gate. Some faine that in that place Mahumet liued in contemplation. Here wee heard a certaine horrible noyſe and crye: for paſſing the ſaid Mountayne, wee were in ſo great danger, that we thought neuer to haue eſcaped. Departing therefore from the Fountayne, we continued our iourney for the ſpace of ten dayes: And twice in the way fought with fiftie thouſand Arabians, and ſo at the length came to the Citie of Mecha, where all things were troubled by reaſon of the warres betweene two brethren, contending which of them ſhould poſſeſſe the Lordſhip of Mecha.

Now the time requireth to ſpeake ſomewhat of the famous Citie of Mecha, or Mecca, what it is, how it is ſituate, and by whom it is gouerned. The Citie is very faire, and well inhabited, and contayneth in Compaſſe ſix thouſand houſes as well builded as ours, and ſome that coſt three or foure thouſand Ducats of gold: it hath no walls. About two furlongs from the Citie is a Mount, where the way is cut out, which leadeth to a Plaine beneath. It is on euery ſide fortified with Mountaynes in the ſtead of walls or Bulwarkes, and hath foure entries. The Gouernour is a Sultan, and one of the foure brethren of the Progenie of Mahumet, and is ſubiect to the Sultan of Babylon, of whom we haue ſpoken before: his other three brethren bee at continuall warre with him. The eighteenth day of May, we entred into the Citie by the North ſide: then by a declining way, we came into a Plaine. On the South ſide are two Mountaynes, the one very neere the other, diſtant onely by a little Valley, which is the way that leadeth to the Gate of Mecha. On the Eaſt ſide, is an open place betweene two Mountaynes, like vnto a Vally, and is the way to the Mountayne where they ſacrifice to the Patriarkes Abroham and Iſaac. This Mountayne is from the Citie about eight or ten miles, and of the height of three ſtones caſt: it is of ſtone as hard as Marble, yet no Marble. In the top of the Mountayne, is a Temple or Meſchita, made after their faſhion, and hath three wayes to enter into it. At the foot of the Mountayne are two Ciſternes, which conſerue waters without corruption: of theſe, the one is reſerued to miniſter water to the Camels of the Carauan of Babylon, or Alcayr; and the other, for them of Damaſco. It is raine water, and is deriued farre off.

Many Pilgrims and Strangers at Mecha.

Why ſo many Nations reſort to Mecha.

But to returne to ſpeake of the Citie: for as touching the manner of ſacrifice, which they vſe at the foote of the Mountayne, we will ſpeake hereafter. Entring therefore into the Citie, we found there the Carauan of Cayro, which preuented vs eight daies, and came not the way that we came. This Carauan contained threeſcore and foure thouſand Camels, and a hundred Mamalucks to guide them. And here ought you to conſider, that by the opinion of all men, this Citie is greatly curſed of God, as appeareth by the great barrenneſſe thereof, for it is deſtitute of all manner of Fruits and Corne. It is ſcorched with dryneſſe for lacke of water, and therefore the water is there growne to ſuch price, that you cannot for foure Quatrini buy as much water as will ſatisfie your thirſt for one day. Now therefore, I will declare what prouiſion they haue for victuals. The moſt part is brought them from the Citie of Cayros; There is brought by the Red Sea, from a certaine Port, named Ziden, diſtant from Mecha fortie miles. The reſt of their prouiſions, is brought from Arabia Fœlix (that is) the happy or bleſſed Arabia: ſo named for the fruitfulneſſe thereof, in reſpect of the other two Arabiaes, called Petrea, and Deſerta, that is, Stonie and Deſart. They haue alſo much Corne from Ethiopia. Here we found a maruellous number of ſtrangers, and Peregrines or Pilgrims: Of the which, ſome came from Syria, ſome from Perſia, ſome from Ethiopia, and other from both the Eaſt Indies, the greater and the leſſer. I neuer ſaw in any place greater aboundance and frequentation of people, foraſmuch as I could perceiue by tarrying there the ſpace of twentie daies. Theſe people reſort thither for diuers cauſes, as ſome for Merchandize, ſome to obſerue their vow of Pilgrimage, and other to haue pardon for their ſinnes: as touching the which, wee will ſpeake more hereafter.

In the middeſt of the Citie is a Temple, in faſhion like vnto the Coloſſus of Rome, the Amphitheatrum I meane, like vnto a Stage, yet not of Marble or hewed ſtones, but of burnt Bricks: For this Temple, like vnto an Amphitheater, hath foureſcore and ten or an hundred Gates, and is vaulted. The entrance is by a diſcent of twelue ſtayres or degrees on euery part, in the Church porch are ſold onely Iewels and precious ſtones. When you are paſt the entrance it is cloſe aboue, and the gilded walls ſhine on euery ſide with incomparable ſplendour. In the lower part of the Temple (that is vnder the vaulted places) is ſeene a maruellous multitude of men: for there are fiue or ſix thouſand men that ſell none other thing then ſweet Ointments, and eſpecially a certaine odoriferous and moſt ſweet Powder, wherewith dead bodies are enbalmed. And from hence, all manner of ſweet ſauours are carried in manner, into the Countries of all the Mahumetans. It paſſeth all beliefe to thinke of the exceeding ſweetneſſe of the ſauours, farre ſurmounting the ſhops of the Apothecaries. The three and twentieth day of May, the Pardons began to be granted in the Temple, and in what manner, we will now declare. The Temple in the middeſt is open, without any incloſing, and in the middeſt alſo thereof is a Turret, of the largeneſſe of ſix paces in circuit, and inuolued or hanged with cloth or Tapeſtrie of ſilke, and paſſeth not the height of a man. They enter into the Turret by a Gate of Siluer, and is on euery ſide beſet with veſſels full of Balme. On the day of Pentecoſt, licence is granted to all men to ſee theſe things. The Inhabitants affirme that Balme or Balſam, to bee part of the treaſure of the Sultan, that is Lord of Mecha. At euery Vault of the Turret, are faſtned grates of Iron, to let in light. The three and twentieth day of May, a great multitude of people began early in the morning before day, ſeuen times to walke about the Turret, kiſſing euery corner thereof, oftentimes feeling and handling them. From this Turret about ten or twelue paces, is another Turret, like a Chappell, builded after our manner. This hath three or foure entries: in the middeſt thereof is a Well of threeſcore and ten Cubits deepe: the water of this Well is infected with ſalt Peter. Eight men are thereunto appointed to draw water for all the people: and when a multitude of people haue ſeuen times gone round about the firſt Turret, they come to this Well; and touching the mouth or brim thereof, they ſay thus: Be it in the honor of God, God pardon me, and forgiue me my ſinnes. When theſe words are ſaid, they that draw the water, powre three Buckets of water on the heads of euery one of them that ſtand neere about the Well, and waſh them all wet from the head to the foot, although they be apparelled with ſilke. Then the doting fooles dreame that they are cleane from all their ſinnes, and that their ſinnes are forgiuen them. They ſay furthermore, that the firſt Turret, whereof we haue ſpoken, was the firſt houſe that euer Abra- ham builded: and therefore, while they are yet all wet of the ſaid waſhing, they goe to the Mountaine, where (as we haue ſaid before) they are accuſtomed to ſacrifice to Abraham. And remaining there two daies, they make the ſaid Sacrifice to Abraham at the foot of the Mountain. When they intend to ſacrifice, ſome of them kill three ſheepe, ſome foure, and ſome ten: So that the Butcherie ſometime ſo floweth with bloud, that in one day are ſlaine aboue thirtie thouſand ſheepe. They are ſlaine toward the riſing of the Sunne, and ſhortly after are diſtributed to the poore for Gods ſake: for I ſaw there of poore people, to the number of thirtie or fortie thouſand. Theſe make many and long Ditches in the Fields, where they keepe fire with Camels dung, and roaſt or ſeethe the fleſh that is giuen them, and eat it euen there. I beleeue that theſe poore people come thither rather for hunger then for deuotion: which I thinke by this coniecture, that great abundance of Cucumbers are brought thither from Arabia Fœlix, which they eate, caſting away the parings without their Houſes or Tabernacles, where a multitude of the ſaid poore people gather them euen out of the mire and ſand, and eate them, and are ſo greedie of theſe parings, that they fight who may gather moſt. The day following, their Cadi (which are in place with them as with vs the Preachers of Gods Word) aſcended into a high Mountaine, to preach to the people that remayned beneath: and preached to them in their Language the ſpace of an houre. The ſumme of his Sermon was, that with teares they ſhould bewaile their ſinnes, and beate their breſts, with ſighes and lamentation. And the Preacher himſelfe with loud voyce, ſpake theſe words, O Abraham beloued of God, O Iſaac choſen of God, and his Friend, pray to God for the people of Nabi. When theſe words were ſaid, ſuddenly were heard lamenting voices. When the Sermon was done, a rumour was ſpred that a great Armie of Arabians, to the number of twentie thouſand, were comming. With which newes, they that kept the Carauans being greatly feared, with all ſpeed, like mad men, fled into the Citie of Mecha, and we againe hearing newes of the Arabians approch, fled alſo into the Citie. But while wee were in the mid-way betweene the Mountaine and Mecha, we came by a deſpicable wall, of the breadth of foure Cubits: The people paſſing by this wall, had couered the way with ſtones, the cauſe whereof, they ſay to be this: When Abraham was commanded to ſacrifice his Sonne, he willed his Sonne Iſaac to follow him to the place where he ſhould execute the commandement of God. As Iſaac went to follow his Father, there appeared to him in the way a Deuill, in likeneſſe of a faire and friendly perſon, not farre from the ſaid wall, and asked him friendly whether he went. Iſaac anſwered, that he went to his Father who tarried for him. To this the Enemie of Mankind anſwered, that it was beſt for him to tarrie, and if that he went any further, his Father would ſacrifice him. But Iſaac nothing fearing this aduertiſement of the Deuill, went forward, that his Father on him might execute the commandement of God: and with this anſwere (as they ſay) the Deuill departed. Yet as Iſaac went forward, the Deuill appeared to him againe in the likeneſſe of another friendly perſon, and forbade him as before. Then Iſaac taking vp a ſtone in that place, hurlde it at the Deuill, and wounded him in the fore-head: In witneſſe and remembrance whereof, the people paſſing that way, when they come neere the wall, are accuſtomed to caſt ſtones againſt it, and from thence goe into the Citie. As we went this way, the Aire was in manner darkened with a multitude of ſtocke Doues. They ſay that theſe Doues, are of the Progenie of the Doue that ſpake in the eare of Mahumet, in likeneſſe of the Holy Ghoſt. Theſe are ſeene euery where, as in the Villages, Houſes, Tauernes, and Graniers of Corne and Rice, and are ſo tame, that one can ſcarcely driue them away. To take them or kill them, is eſteemed a thing worthy death: and therefore a certaine Penſion is giuen to nouriſh them in the Temple.

Two Vnicornes. His paſſage by the Red Sea to Aden. Impriſonment and counterfeiting himſelfe madde. Eſcape and viſiting other parts of Arabia, Zeila, Cambaia.

ON the other part of the Temple are Parkes or places incloſed, where are ſeene two Vnicornes, and are there ſhewed to the people for a wonder. The one of them, which is much higher then the other, yet not much vnlike to a Colt of thirtie moneths of age; in the fore-head groweth only one Horne, in manner right forth, of the length of three Cubits. * The other is much younger, and like a young Colt: of the age of one yeare; the horne of this, is of the length of foure ſpannes. This beaſt is of the colour of a Horſe of Weeſell colour, and hath the head like an Hart, but no long necke, a thinne mane hanging only on the one ſide: their legs are thinne and ſlender, like a Fawne or Hind: the hoofes of the fore-feet are diuided in two, much like the feet of a Goat, the outward part of the hinder feet is very full of haire. This beaſt doubtleſſe ſeemeth wild and fierce, yet tempereth that fierceneſſe with a certaine comelineſſe. Theſe Vnicornes one gaue to the Sultan of Mecha, as a moſt precious and rare gift. They were ſent him out of Ethiopia by a King of that Countrey, who deſired by that preſent to gratifie the Sultan of Mecha.

The only report that I haue found in any credible Author of Vnicornes: neither in 120. yeares which haue paſſed ſince, haue I found one Relation to ſecond it. Some mention Vnicornes, but vnderſtand the Rhinoceros.

* Braccia.

Whereas my Captaine gaue me charge to buy certaine things, as I was in the Market place, a certaine Mamaluke knew me to be a Chriſtian. And therefore in his owne Language, ſpake vnto me theſe words, Inte mename: That is, whence art thou? To whom I anſwered that I was a Mahumetan. But he ſaid, Thou ſayeſt not truly. I ſaid againe, By the head of Mahumet, I am a Mahumetan. Then he ſaid againe, Come home to my houſe. I followed him willingly. When we were there, he began to ſpeake to me in the Italian Tongue, and asked me againe from whence I was, affirming that he knew me, and that I was no Mahumetan: Alſo that he had bin ſometime in Genua and Venice. And that his words might be the better beleeued, rehearſed many things which teſtified that he ſaid truth. When I vnderſtood this, I confeſſed freely that I was a Romane, but profeſſed to the Faith of Mahumet in the Citie of Babylon, and there made one of the Mamalukes. Whereof he ſeemed greatly to reioyce, and therefore vſed me honourably. But becauſe my deſire was yet to goe further, I asked the Mahumetan whether that Citie of Mecha was ſo famous as all the World ſpake of it: and inquired of him where was the great abundance of Pearles, Precious Stones, Spices, and other rich Merchandiſe that the bruit went of to be in that Citie. Then he began with more attentiue minde, in order to declare vnto me the cauſe why that Mart was not ſo greatly frequented as it had beene before, and laid the only fault thereof on the King of Portugall. When I was well inſtructed in all things, I ſpake vnto him friendly theſe words in the Mahumets Language, Menaha Menalhabi: That is to ſay, I pray you aſſiſt me. He asked me wherein. To helpe mee (ſaid I) how I may ſecretly depart hence to thoſe Kings that were moſt enemies to the Chriſtians: Affirming furthermore, that I would giue place to no man in making of all manner of Gunnes and Artillerie. Then ſaid hee, Prayſed be Mahumet who ſent thee hither, to doe him and his Moores good ſeruice: and willed me to remayne ſecretly in his houſe with his wife, and required mee earneſtly to obtayne leaue of our Captaine, that vnder his name hee might leade from Mecha fifteene Camels laden with Spices, without paying any cuſtome: for they ordinarily pay to the Sultan thirtie Saraphes of Gold, for tranſporting of ſuch Merchandiſes for the charge of ſo many Camels. I put him in good hope of his requeſt, although he would aske for a hundred, affirming that that might eaſily be obtayned by the Priuiledges of the Mamalukes and therefore deſired him that I might ſafely remayne in his houſe. Then nothing doubting to obtaine his requeſt, hee greatly reioyced, and talking with me yet more freely, gaue me further inſtructions, and counſelled me to repaire to a certaine King of the greater India, in the Kingdome and Realme of Dechan. Therefore the day before the Carauan departed from Mecha, he willed me to lye hid in the moſt ſecret part of his houſe. The day following, early in the morning, the Trumpetter of the Carauan gaue warning to all the Mamalukes to make readie their Horſes, to direct their iourney toward Syria, with Proclamation of death to all that ſhould refuſe ſo to doe. When I heard the ſound of the Trumpet, and was aduertized of the ſtreight commandement, I was maruellouſly troubled in minde, and with heauie countenance deſired the Mahumetans wife not to bewray mee, and committed my ſelfe to the mercie of God. On the Tueſday following, our Carauan departed from Mecha, and I remayned in the Mahumetans houſe with his wife, but he followed the Carauan. Yet before he departed, he gaue commandement to his wife to bring mee to the Carauan, which ſhould depart from Ziden the Port of Mecha, to goe into India. This Port is diſtant from Mecha fortie miles. Whileſt I lay thus hid in the Mahumetans houſe, I cannot expreſſe how friendly his wife vſed mee. This alſo furthered my good entertainment, that there was in the houſe a faire young Maide, the Niece of the Mahumetan, who was greatly in loue with me. But at that time, in the middeſt of thoſe troubles and feares, the fire of Venus was almoſt extinct in me: and therefore with dalliance of faire words and promiſes, I ſtill kept my ſelfe in her fauour. Therefore the Friday following, about noon-tyde I departed, following the Carauan of India. And about mid-night, we came to a certaine Village of the Arabians, and there remayned the reſt of that night, and the next day till noone.

Why Mecha is not ſo much frequented as in time paſt.

Paying of cuſtome to the Sultan.

The Citie Ziden.

Poore Pilgrims that came from Mecha.

From hence we went forward on our iourney toward Ziden, and came thither in the ſilence of the night. This Citie hath no walls, yet faire houſes, ſome-what after the building of Italie. Heere is great abundance of all kind of Merchandiſes by reaſon of reſort in manner of all Nations thither, except Iewes and Chriſtians, to whom it is not lawfull to come thither. Aſſoone as I entred into the Citie, I went to their Temple, or Meſchita, where I ſaw a great multitude of poore people, about the number of fiue and twentie thouſand, attending a certaine Pilot who ſhould bring them into their Countrey. Here I ſuffered much trouble and affliction, being enforced to hide my ſelfe among theſe poore folkes, faining my ſelfe very ſicke, to the end that none ſhould be inquiſitiue what I was, whence I came, or whither I would. The Lord of this Citie is the Sultan of Babylon, Brother to the Sultan of Mecha, who are ſubiect to the great Soldan of Cairo. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans. The ſoyle is vnfruitfull, and lacketh freſh water. The Sea beateth againſt the Towne. There is neuertheleſſe abundance of all things: but brought thither from other places, as from Cairo, Arabia Fœlix, and diuers other places. The heate is here ſo great, that men are in manner dryed vp therewith. And therefore there is euer a great number of ſicke folkes. This Citie contayneth about fiue hundred houſes.

From Arabia to Perſia.

After fifteene dayes were paſt, I couenanted with a Pilot, who was ready to depart from thence into Perſia, and agreed on the price, to goe with him. There lay at Anchor in the Hauen almoſt a hundred Brigantines and Foyſts, with diuers Boates and Barkes of ſundry ſorts, both with Oares and without Oares. Therefore after three dayes, giuing wind to our ſayles, we ſailed in the Red Sea.

After ſixe dayes ſayling, we came to a Citie named Gezan. It hath a commodious Port, and very faire, where we found about forty fiue Brigantines and Foyſts of diuers Regions. The Citie is hard by the Sea-ſide, and the Prince thereof, is a Mahumetan. The ſoyle is fruitfull, like vnto Italie: It beareth Pomegranates, Quinces, Peaches, Apples of Aſſyria, Pepons, Melons, Oranges, Gourds, and diuers other Fruits: Alſo Roſes, and ſundry ſorts of Flowers, the faireſt that euer I ſaw: It ſeemeth an earthly Paradiſe. The moſt part of the Inhabitants goe naked. In other things, they liue after the manner of the Mahumetans. There is alſo great abundance of Fleſh, Wheate, Barley, the Graine of white Millet or Hirſe (which they call Dora) whereof they make very ſweet Bread. Departing from the Citie of Gezan, the ſpace of fiue dayes, ſayling toward the left hand, hauing euer the Coaſt of the Land in ſight, wee came to the ſight of certayne houſes, where about fourteene of vs went a-land, hoping to haue had ſome victuals of the Inhabitants. But we loſt our labour, for in the ſtead of victuals, they caſt ſtones at vs with Slings. They were about a hundred that fought with our men for the ſpace of an houre. Of them were ſlaine foure and twenty. The reſt were driuen to flight, they were naked, and had none other Weapons then Slings. After their flight, we brought away with vs certayne Hennes and Calues very good. Shortly after, a great multitude of the Inhabitants ſhewed themſelues to the number of fiue or ſixe hundred: but we departed with our prey, and returned to the ſhips.

Baduines.

The ſame day ſayling forward, we came to an Iland named Camaran, which contayneth ten miles in circuit. In it is a Towne of two hundred houſes, the Inhabitants are Mahumetans: it hath abundance of freſh water and fleſh, and the faireſt Salt that euer I ſaw. The Port is eight miles from the Continent, it is ſubiect to the Sultan of Arabia Fœlix. After wee had remayned here two dayes, we tooke our way toward the mouth of the Red Sea in the ſpace of two dayes ſayling.

The Author taken and put in Priſon.

The day after our arriuing at Aden, the Mahumetans took me, and put ſhackles on my legs, which came by occaſion of a certayn Idolater who cryed after me, ſaying, O Chriſtian Dog, borne of Dogs. When the Mahumetans heard the name of a Chriſtian, incontinent they layd hands on mee, and brought me to the Lieutenant of the Sultan of that place, who aſſembling his Councel, asked their opinion if I ſhould be put to death as a Spye of the Chriſtians. The Sultan himſelfe was out of the Citie, and therefore his Lieutenant, who had yet neuer adiudged any man to death, thought it not good to giue ſentence againſt me, before the Sultan ſhould bee aduertized hereof. And therefore I eſcaped this preſent danger, and remayned in cuſtodie fiftie and fiue dayes, with an Iron of eighteene pound weight hanging at my feet. The ſecond day after I was taken, many Mahumetans in great rage reſorted to him, whoſe Office was to make Inquiſition of Treaſon. Theſe a few dayes before, by ſwimming hardly eſcaped the hands of the Portugals, with the loſſe of their Foyſts and Barkes, and therefore deſired greatly to bee reuenged of the Chriſtians: affirming, with outragious cry, that I was a Spye of the Portugals. But God fayled not to aſſiſt me. For the Maſter of the Priſon perceiuing the outrage of the Mahumetans, and fearing that they would offer me violence, made faſt the gates of the Priſon. After that fiue and fiftie dayes were paſt, the Sultan commanded that I ſhould be brought before him: and ſo ſet vpon a Camell with my ſhackles, I came in eight dayes iourney to the place where the Sultan lay, and was brought to his preſence in a Citie named Rhada: for there the Sultan had aſſembled an Armie of thirtie thouſand men, to make warre againſt the Sultan of the Citie of Sana, which is three dayes iourney from Rhada, and ſituate partly on the declining of a Hill, and partly in a Plaine, very faire to be ſeene, well peopled, and hauing plentie of all things. When I came before the Sultan, he began to aske me what I was. I anſwered that I was a Romane, profeſſed a Mamaluke in Babylon of Alcayr, and that of Religious minde to diſcharge my conſcience of a Vow which I had made, I came to the Citie of Medinathalhabi, where Nabi (or the Prophet) is buried and after to Mecca. And that in all Cities and Countries by the way, I heard honourable report of his greatneſſe, wiſedome, and ſingular vertue, and therefore ceaſſed not vntill I entred his Dominions, moſt deſirous to ſee his face, yeelding thankes to God and Nabi, that it was now my chance to be preſented before him: truſting that the equitie of his wiſedome, would thereby conſider that I was no Spye of the Chriſtians, but a true Mahumetan, and his ſeruant and ſlaue. Then ſaid the Sultan, Say Leila illala Mahumet reſullala: which words I could neuer well pronounce, eyther that it pleaſed not God, or that for feare and ſcruple of conſcience, I durſt not. Therefore when he ſaw me hold my peace, he commited me againe to Priſon, commanding that I ſhould be ſtraightly looked vnto, where ſixteene men of the Citie were appointed, euery day foure, to watch me by courſe. So that for the ſpace of three moneths, I had not the fruition of Heauen, during which miſerable time, my Dyet was euery day a Loafe of Millet, ſo little that ſeuen of them would not haue ſatisfied my hunger for one day: But if I might haue had my fill of water, I would haue thought my ſelfe happy. Within three dayes after the Sultan marched with his Armie, in which were foure thouſand Horſemen, to beſiege the Citie of Sana. Theſe Horſemen were borne of Chriſtian Parents, and blacke like the Ethiopians, and while they were yet very young, were bought in the Kingdome of Preſter Iohn, at eight or nine yeares old. They are brought vp in Diſcipline of Warre. This Sultan hath them in great eſtimation, for they are the guard of his owne perſon, and are more valued then foure ſcore thouſand of the other; they couer their body with a ſindon, like vnto a cloke or cape, putting out onely one arme, and are beſide naked without any other apparell. In the Warres they vſe round Targets made of Buffels Hydes, with certayne little barres of Iron to ſtrengthen them. Theſe Targets are painted very faire with ſundry colours, and very commodious to reſiſt Darts, and are in largeneſſe as much as the mouth of a Barrell: the handle is made of wood, as bigge as they may well hold in their hands, and made faſt with nayles. They vſe Darts and ſhort broad Swords. At other times, they vſe alſo Veſtures of Linnen cloth of ſundry colours. In the Warres euery man beareth with him a Sling, which he caſteth, firſt ſhaking it often about his head. When they come to forty or fifty yeares of age, they make them hornes, by wreathing the haire of their heads, ſo bearing two hornes like young Goates. When they proceed to the Warres, fiue thouſand Camels follow the Army, all laden with Ropes of Bombaſine.

Hard by the Priſon was a long entry in manner of a Cloyſter, where ſometime we were permitted to walke. Yee ſhall further vnderſtand, that in the Sultans place remayned one of his three Wiues, with twelue young Maids to waite vpon her, very faire and comely, after their manner, and of colour inclining to blacke. The fauour that they bore me, helped me very much: for I with two other, being in the ſame Priſon, agreed that one of vs ſhould counterfeit himſelfe to be mad, that by this deuice, one of vs might helpe an other. In fine, it was my lot to take vpon me the mad mans part, and therefore it ſtood me in hand to doe ſuch follies as pertayne to madneſſe. Alſo the opinion which they haue of mad folkes, made greatly for my purpoſe: for they take mad men to be holy, and therefore ſuffered me to runne more at large, vntill the Eremites had giuen iudgement whether I were holy, or raging mad, as appeareth hereafter. But the firſt three dayes in which I began to ſhew my madneſſe, wearied mee ſo much, that I was neuer ſo tyred with labour or grieued with paine, for the Boyes and Raſcall people ſometime to the number of fortie or fiftie, hurled ſtones at me almoſt without ceaſing, while in the meane time againe I paid ſome of them home with like wages. The Boyes cryed euer after me, calling mee mad man. And to ſhew it the more, I carryed alwayes ſtones with mee in my ſhirt, for other apparell had I none. The Queene hearing of my follies, looked oftentimes out of the windowes to ſee me, more for a ſecret loue ſhe bore me, then for the pleaſure ſhe tooke in my follies, as afterward appeared.

Counterfeite madneſſe.

Therefore on a time, when ſome of them, much madder then I, played the Knaues with me in the ſight of the Queene (whoſe ſecret fauour towards mee I ſomewhat perceiued) that my madneſſe might ſeeme more manifeſt, I caſt off my ſhirt, and went to the place before the windowes, where the Queene might ſee me all naked: wherein I perceiued ſhe tooke great pleaſure. For ſhe euer found ſome occaſion that I might not goe out of her ſight: and would ſometimes, with all her Damoſels wayting on her, ſpend almoſt the whole day in beholding me: and in the meane ſeaſon diuers times ſent me ſecretly much good meate by her Maidens, and when ſhe ſaw the Boyes or other doe me any hurt, ſhe bad me kill them, and ſpare not, reuiling them alſo, and calling them dogges and beaſts. In the Palace was nouriſhed a great fat ſheepe: whoſe tayle weighed fortie pound weight. Vnder the colour of madneſſe, I laid hand on this ſheepe, ſaying, Leila illala Mahumet reſullala: which words the Sultan before, when I was brought to his preſence, willed me to ſay, to prooue whether I were a Mahumetan, or a profeſſed Mamaluke. But the beaſt anſwering nothing, I asked him if he were a Mahumetan, Iew, or Chriſtian. And willing to make him a Mahumetan, I rehearſed againe the ſaid words, Leila illala Mahumet reſullala (that is to ſay) there is one God, and Mahumet his chiefe Prophet: which are the words which they ſpeake in profeſſing their Faith. But when the beaſt yet anſwered nothing, I broke his legges with a ſtaffe. The Queene tooke great pleaſure in theſe my mad follies, and commanded the fleſh of the ſheepe to bee giuen mee to eate: I neuer ate meate with more pleaſure, or better appetite. Alſo three dayes after, I likewiſe killed an Aſſe, that was wont to bring water into the Palace, becauſe he refuſed to be a Mahumetan, and to ſay thoſe words. The ſame time alſo I handled a Iew ſo euill, that I had almoſt killed him, one in the meane time calling mee Chriſtian Dogge, Dogge borne. With which words beeing very angry, I caſt many ſtones at him: but he againe hurling at me, gaue me a ſtroke on the breſt, and an other on the ſide, which grieued me very ſore.

Sheepe with exceeding great tayles. A ſheepe made a Mahumetan.

And becauſe I could not follow him by reaſon of my ſhackles, I returned to the Priſon, and ſtopped the doore with a heape of ſtones, and there liued in great paine for the ſpace of two dayes without meate or drinke: And therefore the Queene and other thought me to be dead, but the doore was opened by the Queenes Commandement. Then theſe Dogges deriding me, gaue me ſtones in the ſtead of bread, and pieces of white Marble, ſaying, that it was Sugar: other gaue me cluſters of Grapes full of ſand. But partly, that they ſhould not ſuſpect that I counterfeited madneſſe, I ate the Grapes as they gaue me them. When the bruite was ſpred that I liued two dayes and nights without meate and drinke: ſome beganne to ſuſpect that I was a holy man, and ſome that I was ſtarke mad. And thus beeing diuided into diuers opinions, they conſulted to ſend for certaine men, of whom they haue ſuch opinion of holineſſe, as wee haue of Heremites: theſe dwell in the Mountaynes, and lead a contemplatiue life. When they came vnto me, to giue their iudgement what manner of man I was, certaine Merchants asked them if I were a holy man, or a mad man. Theſe were alſo of diuers opinions, ſome affirming one thing, and ſome another. While they were yet debating this matter, for the ſpace of an houre, I piſſed in my hands, and hurld it in their faces: whereby they agreed that I was no Saint, but a madde man. The Queene ſeeing all this at the window, laughed well thereat among her Maidens, and ſaid thus to them, By the goodneſſe of God, and by the head of Mahumet, this is a good man. The day following, when in the morning I found him aſleepe that had ſo ſore hurt mee with ſtones, I tooke him by the haire of the head with both hands, and with my knee ſo punched him on the ſtomacke, and battered his face, that I left him all bloudie, and halfe dead. Which thing the Queene ſeeing, cryed vnto me, ſaying, kill the Beaſt, kill the Dogge: whereupon, hee ranne his way, and came no more in ſight. When the Preſident of the Citie heard that the Queene fauoured me, and tooke pleaſure in my mad ſport, thinking alſo that I was not madde, commanded that I ſhould goe at libertie within the Palace, only wearing my ſhackles: Yet euery night was I put in another Priſon in the lower part of the Palace, and ſo remayned ſtill in the Court for the ſpace of twentie dayes. In the meane time, the Queene willed mee to goe a hunting with her, which I refuſed not, and at my returne, I fained me to be ſicke for wearineſſe. So continuing for the ſpace of eight dayes, vnder the colour of ſickneſſe, the Queene often ſent to me to know how I did. After this, finding oportunitie, I declared to the Queene that I had made a Vow to God and Mahumet, to viſit a certaine holy man in the Citie of Aden, and deſired her to giue me leaue to goe thither. Whereunto ſhe conſented: and commanded immediately a Camell and twentie fiue Sarraphes of Gold to be deliuered me. Therefore the day following, I tooke my iourney, and in the ſpace of eight dayes, came to the Citie of Aden: and ſhortly after my comming, viſited the man of whom was ſo great report of holineſſe, and whom the people honoured for a Saint. And this onely, becauſe he had euer liued in great pouertie, and without the company of women. When I had performed my Vow, I fained that I had recouered health by miracle of that holy man, and certified the Queene thereof, deſiring that I might tarrie ther a while, to viſit likewiſe certaine other men in that Countrey, of whom was the like fame of holineſſe: which excuſe I deuiſed, becauſe the fleet of India would not yet depart from thence for the ſpace of a moneth. In the meane time, I ſecretly agreed with a certaine Captaine of that Nauie to goe with him into India, and made him many faire promiſes to reward him largely. Hee anſwered, that hee would not goe into India, before hee had firſt beene in Perſia: whereunto I agreed.

The fleet of India.

The day following, mounting vpon a Camell, and making a iourney of fiue and twentie miles, I came to a certaine Citie named Lagi, ſituate in a great Plaine, well peopled, hauing abundance of Oliues, and fleſh, with alſo great plentie of Corne, after our manner: but no Vines, great ſcarceneſſe of wood. The Inhabitants are vnciuill and ruſticall people of the Nation of Vagabond and field Arabians, and therefore but poore. Departing from hence one dayes iourney, I came to another Citie named Aiaz, ſituate vpon two hils, with a great Plaine betweene them, and hath in it a notable Fountayne, and therefore diuers Nations reſort thither as to a famous Mart. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, and yet greatly differing in opinion of their Religion: inſomuch that therefore they bee at great enmitie one againſt the other, and keepe ſore warre. The cauſe whereof they ſay to be this: That the people of the North Mountayne, maintayne the Faith and Sect of Mahumet and his fellowes, of whom we haue ſpoken before: but the other of the South Mountayne affirme, that Faith ſhould be giuen onely to Mahumet Haly, ſaying, the other to be falſe Prophets.

Strife and hatred for Religion, and all worth nought.

Mortus Raly, as the Perſians cal him.

I departed hence to Dante, from thence to Almacharan, where the Aire is maruellous temperate and holeſome, and the Citie ſecond to none in all reſpects: the colour of the Inhabitants is rather inclining to white, then any other colour. And to ſpeake that I haue ſeene, the Sultan reſerueth here as much Gold as will lade a hundred Camels.

Reame is diſtant two dayes iourney from Almacaran. The colour of the Inhabitants is inclining to blacke: and they are great Merchants. The ſoyle is fruitfull of all things ſauing wood: it contayneth in the circuit two thouſand houſes: on the one ſide is a Mountayne hauing on it a very ſtrong Fortreſſe. Here I ſaw a certaine kind of ſheepe hauing their tailes of fortie and foure pound weight, and are without hornes, and alſo ſo maruellous fat, that they can ſcarcely goe for fatneſſe. There be likewiſe certaine Grapes without Graines, the ſweeteſt that euer I eate, and all manner of ſuch Fruits, as I haue ſpoken of before. It is of maruellous temperateneſſe, as witneſſeth the long life of men, for I haue ſpoken with many of them that haue paſſed the age of a hundred fiue and twentie yeares, and yet verie luſtie and well complexioned. They goe for the moſt part naked, wearing only ſhirts, or other looſe and thinne apparell, like Mantles, putting out one arme all bare. Almoſt all the Arabians make them hornes with wreathing of their owne haire, and that they thinke very comely.

An Armie of 80000. men.
Strong walls.

Departing from thence three dayes iourney, I came to a Citie named Sana *, ſituate vpon a very high Mountayne, verie ſtrong by Art and Nature. The Sultan beſieged this, with a great Armie of fourescore thouſand men for the ſpace of three moneths, but could neuer win it. Yet it was at the laſt rendred by compoſition. The wals are of eighteene cubits height, and twentie in bredth, inſomuch that eight Camels in order may well march vpon them. The Region is very fruitfull and much like vnto ours, and hath plentie of water. A Sultan is Lord of the Citie: hee hath twelue Sonnes, of the which one is named Mahumet, who by a certaine naturall tyrannie and madneſſe, delighteth to eate mans fleſh, and therefore ſecretly killeth many to eate them. He is of large and ſtrong bodie of foure Cubits high, and of the colour inclining to aſhes. The ſoyle beareth certayne Spices not farre from the Citie. It contayneth about foure thouſand houſes. The houſes are of faire building, and giue no place to ours. The Citie is ſo large, that it contayneth within the wals, Fields, Gardens, and Medowes.

Taeſſa.
Roſes.

After three daies iourney, I came to a Citie named Taeſſa, ſituate vpon a Mountaine, and very faire to ſight: it hath plentie of all delices, and eſpecially of maruellous faire Roſes, whereof they make Roſe-water. It is an ancient Citie, and hath in it a Temple built after the faſhion of Sancta Maria Rotunda in Rome. The houſes are very faire, and ſhew yet the Monuments of antiquitie: innumerable Merchants reſort hither for the trafficke of ſundrie Merchandize. In apparell they are like vnto other, and of darkiſh Aſhe colour of ſkinne, enclining to blacke. Three daies iourney from thence, I came to another Citie named Zibith, very faire and good, diſtant from the Red Sea onely halfe a daies iourney: there is great abundance of Merchandize, by reaſon of the neerneſſe of the Sea. It aboundeth with many goodly things, and eſpecially with moſt white Sugar, and ſundry kindes of pleaſant fruits. It is ſituate in a very large Plaine within two Mountaynes: it lacketh walls, and is one of the chiefeſt Marts for all ſorts of Spices. The Inhabitants are of the colour of them aforeſaid. From hence in one daies iourney, I came to the Citie of Damar: It is a fruitfull ſoyle, and hath great exerciſe of Merchandize. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, in apparel and colour like vnto the other.

A great familie.

Theſe Cities whereof we haue ſpoken here a little before, are ſubiect to a Sultan of Arabia Fœlix, named Sechamir: Secha (by interpretation) ſignifieth Holy, and Amir, a Prince, named the holy Prince, becauſe he abhorreth ſhedding of mans bloud. At the time of my being there in Priſon, hee nouriſhed ſixteene thouſand poore men and Captiues in Priſon condemned to death, allowing to euery of them daily for their diet, ſixe of their pence of the ſmalleſt valure, and at home in his Palace entertayneth as many blacke ſlaues.

Monkeys and Lions.
Danger of wilde beaſts.

Departing from hence, I returned to the Citie of Aden in three dayes iourney: in the midway, I found an exceeding high and large Mountaine, where is great plentie of wilde beaſts, and eſpecially of Monkeyes, which runne about the Mountaine euery where. There are alſo many Lions, very noyſome to men: and therefore it is not ſafe to iourney that way, but when a multitude of men goe together, at the leaſt, to the number of a hundred. I paſſed this way with a great companie, and yet were we in danger of the Lions, and other wilde beaſts which followed vs: for we were ſometimes conſtrayned to fight with them with Darts, Slings, and Bowes, vſing alſo the helpe of Dogs, and yet eſcaped hardly. When I came to the Citie, I fayned my ſelfe ſicke: and in the day time lurked in the Temple, and went forth onely in the night to ſpeake with the Pilot of the ſhip (of whom I haue made mention before) and obtayned of him a Foiſt or Barke to depart thence ſecretly.

Committing our ſelues to the Sea, we were by inconſtant fortune and ſundry tempeſts, deterred from that Voyage: for whereas we were now ſixe dayes ſayling on our way to Perſia, a ſudden contrary tempeſt droue vs out of our way, and caſt vs on the coaſt of Ethiope. Our Barkes were laden with Rubricke (that is, a certaine red earth) which is vſed to dye Cloth: for yeerely from the Citie of Aden, depart fifteene or twentie ſhips laden with Rubricke, which is brought out of Arabia Fœlix. Being therefore thus toſſed with ſtormes, we were driuen into a Port, named Zeila: where we remayned fiue dayes to ſee the Citie, and tarried vntill the Sea were more quiet.

In this Citie is great frequentation of Merchandiſe, as in a moſt famous Mart. There is maruellous abundance of Gold and Iuorie, and an innumerable number of blacke Slaues, ſold for a ſmall price: theſe are taken in Warre by the Mahumetan Moores, out of Ethiopia, of the Kingdome of Preſbyter Iohannes. In this Citie Iuſtice and good Lawes are obſerued: the ſoyle beareth Wheat, and hath abundance of Fleſh, and diuers other commodious things. It hath alſo Oyle, not of Oliues but of ſome other thing, I know not what. There is alſo plentie of Honey and Waxe: there are likewiſe certaine Sheepe, hauing their tayles of the weight of ſixteene pound, and exceeding fat; the head and necke are blacke, and all the reſt white. There are alſo Sheepe altogether white, hauing tayles of a cubit long, hanging downe like a cluſter of Grapes: and haue alſo great laps of skin hanging from their throats, as haue Bulls and Oxen, hanging downe almoſt to the ground. There are alſo certaine Kine with hornes like vnto Harts hornes, theſe are wilde: and when they be taken, are giuen to the Sultan of that Citie as a Kingly preſent. I ſaw there alſo certaine Kine, hauing onely one horne in the middeſt of the forehead, about a ſpan and halfe of length, but the horne bendeth backward: they are of bright-ſhining red colour. But they that haue Harts hornes, are enclining to blacke colour. Coney is there good cheape. The Citie hath an innumerable multitude of Merchants: the Walls are greatly decayed, and the Hauen rude and deſpicable. The King or Sultan of the Citie is a Mahumetan, and entertayneth in wages a great multitude of Foot-men and Horſe-men. They are greatly giuen to warres, and weare onely one looſe ſingle veſture, as wee haue ſaid before of other. They are of darke aſhie colour, enclining to blacke. In the warres, they are vnarmed: and are of the Sect of Mahumet.

One with onely one horne.

After that the tempeſts were appeaſed, we gaue wind to our Sayles, and in ſhort time arriued at the Iland named Barbara, the Prince whereof is a Mahumetan. The Iland is not great, but fruitfull, and well peopled: it hath abundance of fleſh. The Inhabitants are of colour enclining to blacke. All their riches is in herds of Cattell. Wee remayned here but one day, and departing from hence, ſayled into Perſia: and thence to Cambaia.

The Sultan of Cambaia, at my being there, was named Macamut, and had raigned fortie yeers, after he had expulſed the King of Guzerat. They thinke it not lawfull to kill any liuing beaſt to eate, or to eate fleſh. They are no Mahumetans, neither Idolaters. As touching their apparel, ſome of them goe naked, and other couer onely their priuities. On their heads they weare fillets of purple colour. They themſelues are of darke yellow colour, commonly called Leonell colour. This Sultan maintayneth an Armie of twentie thouſand Horſe-men. Euery morning reſort to his Palace, fiftie men, ſitting on Elephants. Their office is, with all reuerence to ſalute the King or Sultan, the Elephants alſo kneeling downe. In the morning aſſoone as the King waketh, is heard a great noyſe of Drummes, Tambarts, Timbrels, Waits, and alſo Trumpets, with diuers other Muſicall Inſtruments, in reioycing that the King liueth. The like doe they while he is at dinner: & then alſo the men ſitting on the Elephants, make him the like reuerence as before. Wee will in due place ſpeake of the wit, cuſtomes, and docilitie of theſe beaſts. The Sultan of this Citie, hath his Muſtachos ſo long that he beareth them vp with a fillet, as women doe the haire of their heads: his beard is white and long, euen vnto the nauell. He is ſo accuſtomed to poyſon from his infancy, that he daily eateth ſome to keepe it in vſe. And although he himſelfe feele no hurt thereof by reaſon of cuſtome, yet doth hee thereby ſo impoyſon himſelfe, that he is poyſon to other: for when he is diſpoſed to put any of his Noblemen to death, he cauſeth him to be brought to his preſence, and to ſtand naked before him. Incontinent hee eateth certaine fruits (which they call Choſolos) like vnto Nutmegs: and eateth alſo the leaues of herbs, which they call Tambolos, adding alſo thereto the powder of beaten Oyſter ſhells. And a while chawing all theſe together in his mouth, he ſpitteth it vpon him whom he deſireth to kill, who being ſparkled therewith, dieth by force of the poyſon within the ſpace of halfe an houre. He entertayneth about foure thouſand Concubines: for whenſoeuer he hath lyen with any of them, ſhee with whom hee hath lyen, is dead in the morning. And when hee changeth his ſhirt or other apparell, no man dare weare it: and for this cauſe he hath great change of apparell. My companion enquired diligently of the Merchants, by what meanes hee was of ſo venimous nature? They anſwered, that the Sultan his father brought him ſo vp of a child with poyſon by little and little, with preſeruatiues ſo accuſtoming him thereto.

But wee will follow our Author no further into India, hauing entertayned him for an Arabian guide: But for our Readers ſatisfaction will adde this little of Arabia, taken from an Author which liued long ſince, and was in thoſe parts better trauelled: to which wee will adde Collections out of Arabike Authors, for more full vnderſtanding of their vnholy Holies.

Collections of Aſia, eſpecially of Arabia, gathered out of an Arabike Booke of Geographie, written by a Nubian, foure hundred and ſeuentie yeeres agoe, and tranſlated into Latine by GABRIEL SIONITA, and IOHANNES HESRONITA, Maronites of Mount Libanus, the one Profeſſor, and both Interpreters to the French King, of the Arabike, and Syriake Tongues.

T*His Author is vnknowne; by ſome paſſages of his Booke eſteemed by the Tranſlators a* Nubian and a Chriſtian; by learned Caſaubon thought to be an Egyptian and Mahometan, to which later opinion I ſhould rather ſubſcribe, by reaſon of his weaker Relations of Nubia, and the next Weſterne parts of Africa, erring in the courſe of Nilus it ſelfe) then of others: and though he calls Chriſt, Lord; and the Bleſſed Virgin, Ladie, yet his phraſe and ſtile-deuotion is after the Mahumetan manner, and his Geographie beſt in thoſe parts, where was then no ſafe trauell for Chriſtians, as in Arabia, Spaine, &c. His method is by the Climats. This which we haue tranſlated, is out of the firſt, ſecond, and third Climate. The Mahumetans alſo call Chriſt, Lord; (Nazaret Eeſa) as is obſerued before in Maſter Terry.

a Iaman is South or Happie Arabia.

THe Aloe of Socotra exceedeth in goodneſſe that which is gathered in Hadhramut of the Land of Iaman, in Seger, or any where elſe. This Iland is reckoned amongſt the Regions of Iaman [a], and belongs to it. Ouer againſt it are Melinda, and Monbaſa. Alexander hauing conquered the Indians, returned by the Indian Sea to the Sea of Iaman, and ouercomming thoſe Ilands, came to Socotra, and wrote to Ariſtotle his Maſter thereof, who aduiſed him to people it with Grecians. Thus (according to the Moores Tradition) were the Natiues remoued, and Greekes there planted, which is the reaſon (in our Authors conceit) that the then Inhabitants were for the moſt part Chriſtians.

The Iles Chartan and Martan are in Giun Albaſciſc (herba Sinu, the weedy or graſſy Bay) ouer againſt the Land of Seger, in which Frankincenſe groweth. In both theſe liue a People of Arabs, which ſpeake a Language vnknowne to the Moderne. Of the Regions of Iaman is the Caſtle Alberda, the Inhabitants whereof liue a hard life. From hence to the Caſtle Galafeca are foure ſtations [b] by land. It is neere the Hauen Zabid, fiftie miles diſtant. That Citie [c] Zabid is great and rich, frequented by Merchants of Hagiaz, Habaſcia, and Metſr (or Egypt) which paſſe by the ſhips of Giodda. The Æthiopians bring thither their Merchandiſes, and thence carrie Spices, and China Diſhes. It is ſituate neere a ſmall Riuer, diſtant one hundred thirtie two miles from the Citie Sanaa, by the way which goeth to the Land of Iaman. From Zabid to Gilan is ſixe and thirtie miles; thence to Alhan, two and fortie; to Alholf, thirtie; and then to Sanaa, foure and twentie. Thoſe are ſmall Villages and Caſtles, but populous. Sanaa is rich, ſtored with buildings, and in all the Land of Iaman, the moſt ancient, large, and populous; temperate and fertile. Thence to Dhamar a ſmall Citie, is eight and fortie miles; to Aden from Sanaa is foure and twentie miles; by the way which leads to Daiar-Dabes [e]. Aden [f] is a ſmall Citie, yet of note as a Port of both Seas; from whence the ſhips of Sinda, India, and China ſet forth, and thither are brought (Vaſa Sinica) the China Diſhes.

From Aden to Mahgem [g] is eight Stations: this is a ſmall populous Citie, the border twixt the Gouerment of Tahama and Iaman, and is from Sanaa ſeuen ſtations. From Mahen to Habran are foure ſtations. From Habran to Saada are eight and fortie miles. From Aden to Abin are twelue miles Eaſtward alongſt the ſhoare; the Inhabitants are famous Magicians. It is diſtant from Laaſa, a day and nights ſayling. Betwixt Laaſa and Sciorama (two dayes ſayling by the ſhoare diſtant) is a great Towne, and therein a medicinable hot Bath. Theſe two Cities are in the Land of Hadhramut: in it are Sciabam and Tarim, and Mareb now ruined, which was Saba [h], whence was Belcqis the wife of Salomon ſonne of Dauid. From Hadhramut to Saada are two hundred and fortie miles. Hadhramut is Eaſtward from Aden fiue ſtations. In it are wide fields of Sands, called Ahcaf. In Saba dwell the People of Iaman and Oman; and there was that famous wall of the Arabians, before they were diſperſed thence. From Sciorama to the Citie Merbat are ſixe dayes ſayling. Betwixt them is Ghobbo-Icamar. In the Hills of Merbat [i] grow Trees of Frankincenſe, which is thence carried to the Eaſt and Weſt. Merbat is foure dayes iourney by Land from Haſec (and two by Sea) againſt which are Chartan and Martan.

Sarandib.

I am loth to follow our Author, as he followeth his Climate into the Indian Sea, called Harchend, where he findeth the famous Iland Sarandib (which I take to be that which is now called Zeilan, fourescore leagues long, and as much broad, with a high Hill, called Rahon, where are many precious ſtones and Spices, and in the ſhoares fiſhing for Pearles; the King whereof hath ſixteene Counſellors, foure of that Nation, foure Chriſtians, foure Muſlemans or Mahumetans, and foure Iewes, to which all of thoſe profeſſions reſort for iuſtice. Thence to the Iland Alrami, is three daies ſaile, which is ſaid to be ſeuen hundred leagues in length. (This ſeemeth Sumatra) But I will not by Mooriſh and now obſolete names loſe my ſelfe in theſe Indian Seas, better knowne to our Engliſh Sailers, then this vnknowne Geographer. Yet in Arabia we will aſcend with him more Northerly in that part of Arabia, placed in his Second Climate. He reckoneth on the Red Sea Adhab, whereto adioyneth the Deſart, trauelled by the courſe of the Sunne and Starres: the Red Sea with many Ilands inhabited, and Deſart; and chiefe Ports Serrain, Soquia, Giodda, Giobſa, and Algiar: the Mid-land Regions, Sanacan, and Mecca, Taief, Codaid, Medina, and Adhab. The Mount Mocatta extends from Metſer by Sabra, that is, the Deſart, to Aſuan: Adhab is at the top of the Deſart by the Sea, from whence they goe to Gidda. Adhab is victualled by the Gouernour vnder the King of Egypt, and by another vnder the King of Bega, out of Habaſcia, which two diuide the Reuenues thereof betwixt them. In our time they there exact tributes of the Pilgrims Moſlemans, which come from the Weſt, of each Poll eight pence weight of gold. Nor may any paſſe ouer to Giodda, without this payment, or elſe the Ship-maſter which ſets him ouer ſhall pay for him. They therefore ſhew to the Maſter this their tribute before hee admits them. This tribute goeth to Albaſemi, the Lord of Mecca. This Sea is full of Sholds and Rocks, and ſome Ilands thereof in winter are deſolate. Neaman is the greateſt in this part. Sameri is inhabited by Samaritan Iewes, whoſe word is Lameſas, if they haue offended any, by which they are knowne to deſcend of Samer, * the author of the Calfe in the time of Moſes, to whom bee peace. On the Eaſt ſide of this Sea is the Tower of Hali, a little Citie whence are two ſhort ſtations to the Citie Sancar. Fiue daies from Hali, is Serrain on the ſhoare: three ſtations from Serrain in the Port of Socquia, and as farre from Socquia to Giodda. This is one of the Ports of Mecca, and fortie miles diſtant from it.

Moſleman is a right Orthodox beleeuer, ſo the Mahometans call themſelues.

* This is but Mahumetan ignorance, for the Samaritans, or Cutheans are another ſect: of which ſee my Pilg.l.2.c.8.

Medina.

From Mecca to Medina, that is, the Citie (the name of it is Iathreb) in the right way are ten ſtations: from Mecca to Batn-Marri, a certaine Inne or Cane, in which is a Spring of water, enuironed with Palme trees ſixteene miles: thence to Offan thirtie, to Codaid foure and twentie: thence to Gioffa (a ſtation of the Pilgrims of Damaſco) ſix and twentie: thence to Alabua ſeuen and twentie: as many thence to Socquia, thence to Rouaitham ſix and thirtie, to Sabala foure and thirtie, to Malal ſeuenteene, to Sogera twelue, to Medina ſix. Hee expreſſeth another way from Mecca to Medina, by the Mountaines, which I omit. Medina is compaſſed with Palme trees, the Dates whereof ſuſtaine the Inhabitants, wanting both Corne and Cattell. Their drinke is out of a ſmall Riuer which Omar brought thither from a great Spring. It is halfe as big as Mecca. Betwixt Medina and the Sea is three daies iourney, and Algiar is the Port thereof, a Towne well inhabited: one ſtation from Medina to Choſciob, a ſecond to Ghoraib, the third to Algiar. From Algiar to Giodda, is about ten daies iourney by land neere the Coaſt: the wayes hidden by Sands moued by the winds.

On the Eaſt of Mecca ſixtie miles diſtant is Taief, the way by Badid-almortafe, which is populous, and there are wandring Arabians, then to Carn-almanazel, thence to Taief. This is the habitation of * Thacqiſi: and is celebrated for Raiſins, and moſt part of the fruits of Mecca are brought thence. Taief is ſeated on Mount Ghazuan, the coldeſt Mountaine in all Hagiar, * where water ſometime freezeth in Summer. To Mecca belongs the Caſtles Naged-Altaief, Nageran, Carnalmanazel, Acqis, Ocadz, Lia, Tarba, Maiſa, Caiſa, Gioras, and Sarat; and in Tehama, Sancan, Serain, Socqia, Ghaſin, Bais, and Aac. The Caſtles of Medina, are Taima, Daumat-Algiandel, Alfere, Dhu-linoruat, Vadi-liqora, Madian, Chaibar, Fadac, Cqere-Arina, Vahida, Saiara, Robba, Saiala, Sabana, Rahett, Adhab, Achbal, and Hamia. The way from Mecca to Sanaa, is to Serrain Carn-almanazel, then to Sofr, Caze, Rouaitha (a great Towne) Tabala, Baiſat, Iactan, Giaſda, Niab (a very great Towne frequented with people and Palmes) Singia, Caſſa, Negem, Sedum, Rab. This is a great towne ſtored with Vineyards, whence Gioras is eight miles, a Towne as big as Nageran, and in them both are ſhops for dreſſing Skinnes: From Sadum alſo to Mahgera is as farre; there is a deepe Well, and a very great Tree, called Talbat-almalec, the border betwixt the iuriſdictions of Mecca and Iaman.) Thence to Adhia, then to Saada, where are dreſſed the beſt Pelts, carryed to many places of Iaman and Hagian, and diſtant one hundred and eightie miles from Sanaa; thence to Amaſia, to the Citie Gionua, where grow huge Grapes, which are dryed, and carried to other parts farre and neere: ſeuentie two miles from Sanaa (to the weſt hereof, is the land of the Abadhites, well fortified and peopled) thence to Anafeth, to Rabda encompaſſed with Vineyards, Fields, and Fountaynes; the Inhabitants of which poſſeſſe Droues and Camels. This hath a deepe Well, and that ſtrong houſe or Temple memorable amongſt writers: and is one ſtation from Sanaa. The whole iourney is made by Carauans in twentie ſtations. The way from Mecca to Dhi-Sohaim of the land of Chaulan, is firſt to Maleca, then to Ialamla, to Caina, to Darca, and Olbob, to Habaſcia, to Canona, to Baiſat-Haran, to Hali vpon the Sea, to the Riuer Sancan, to Baiſat-Iartan, to Haran-Alcarin, and then to Chaulan-Dhi-ſohaim. All theſe Regions are in the Land of Tehama (which is a portion of Iaman) the limits of which are the Red Sea on the Weſt, Mountaynes on the Eaſt which runne from the North to the South, on which Eaſt ſide are Saada, Haus, and Nagera: On the North Mecca, and Giodda. In Tehama are wandring Arabs of all families. Mecca is the Centre of all Arabia, betwixt the Seas. For from Mecca to Sanaa is twentie ſtations, as much to Sobaid, to Iaman twentie one, to Damaſcus thirtie, to Baharain * from Mecca fiue and twentie.

And on the part of the Perſian Sea, the Iles Abron, Heber, Kis, Ben-Caüan, and Dordur; and two Mountaynes, Coſair, and Oüair. In this part alſo are of the Land of Kerman, Senaüain, and the Mountaynes Maſcan. Betwixt Gioras and Honüa are foure ſtations, and ſixe twixt Honüa and Nagera. Tabala is foure ſtations from Mecca. From Tabala to Ocadh are three:

here are Faires euery Sunday of diuers Merchandizes. Tdafar is the cheefe Citie Iahſeb: from whence to Dhamar, are ſixe and thirtie miles, and fortie from Dhamar to Sanaa: from Choud to Sanaa, one hundred and fortie: from Tdafar to Mareb, three ſtations. In this Towne is Salomons Tower, the Sonne of Dauid, to whom bee peace, called Seruah; now nothing but ruines. In the ſame Mareb, is the Tower Caſcib, which was the Tower of Belcqis, the Wife of Salomon, to whom be health. There was alſo the Fortreſſe famous amongſt all people, called Aarem. The Inhabitants of Mareb were a certaine Sect of the Hemaraite Arabians, very proud; they had a ſtrong defence againſt the courſe of the water of admirable ſtructure, and each Family had their Conduit pipes for their fields and houſes; but God ſent a great floud whiles they were aſleepe, which ouerthrew that building (hanging ouer the Citie as a Mountaine) and carried away the whole Citie and Suburbe with the people.

In Hadhramut are Teria, and Sceba foure ſtations from Mareb, a ſtrong Tower on the deſcent of Mount Sceba, a ſteepe hill, whereon you ſhall ſee many habitations, fields and water-courſes. Eaſtward is the Land of Seger, from the furtheſt end whereof to Aden, are three hundred miles. To the North of Seger is Oman, in which are two Cities, Tſur, and a ſtation thence is Cqelbat, ſituate on the Perſian Sea. Betwixt Tſur and the Promontorie Almahgiame, is fifteene daies by Land, two courſes (or fortie eight houres) ſayling. Neere to that Promontorie they fiſh for Pearles. From Cqelbat to Sabar, are two hundred miles: neere it is Dhamar. From Maſchatt to Sohar, are foure hundred and fiftie miles. Sohar is the ancienteſt Citie of Oman, on the Perſian Sea, ſomtime the Port for the China Ships: which now is ceaſed, becauſe in the midſt of the Perſian Sea lyeth the Iland Kis, of ſquare forme twelue miles ouer, two courſes from Sohar, and on the Kerman ſhoare Tairuſet is ouer againſt it. Two daies from Sohar, is Soal and Ofor, two ſmall Cities, made Ports by the Riuer Falg. Halfe a daies iourney thence is Mang, at the foote of Mount Sciorum, from whence weſt-ward to Sorooman, are two ſtations. Falg hath on it many Townes, and runneth into the Sea neere Gioloffar. Moſt of the Inhabitants of the Region Oman are Schiſmatickes. Betwixt Naged and Oman, are great Deſarts. From Sohar to Bahrain, are about twentie ſtations. The way from Oman to Mecca, is very difficult, for often Deſarts, and therefore they goe by Sea to Aden. Like difficulties are in the way thence to Albahrain North-wards, for the inuaſions of Arabs. North-weſt to Oman, confineth the Land Iamama, Cities whereof are Hagiar, (now ruined) and Barca and Salamia. The way from Iamama to Mecca, is to * Aardh, to Chodaia, to Thania, to Sofra, to Soda, to Cariatain, to Dama, to Tangia, to Sarſa, to Giadila, to Falcha, to Rocaiba, to Coba, to Maran, to Vagera, to Autas, to Dhaterc, each a ſtation, to Benamer, and thence to Mecca another ſtation. Maaden-alnocra is a great Towne, where the families of Baſra and Cufa meete, when they goe on Pilgrimage to Mecca. The Perſian Sea is annexed to the Indians, and on the ſhoare of Iaman hath two Mountaines, Coſair and Oüair, againſt which is Dordur, where the Sea is called Ghazera. Dordur is a whirlepoole which ſwalloweth ſhips, on the South of the Ile Ben-Caüan, which is from Kis fiftie two miles. The length of Ben-Caüan is fiftie two miles, the breadth nine, the Inhabitants ſchiſmaticall Abatdhite. Neere it is Dordur, a narrow place nigh to the Mountaines Coſair and Oüair, which are hidden with waters, but the waters breake on their tops. Three ſuch whirlepooles are found, this, another not farre from the Iland Comar, the third in the end of Sin betwixt Siraff, and the Promontorie called Maſcat Saif.

But to returne to the Red Sea, and the moſt Northerly parts thereof. In Calzem are made the flat bottomed ſhips, broad and ſhallow, fit for great burthen and the Sholds of that Sea. From Calzem to Faran-Abron, are fortie miles; this is in the bottome of a Bay, whence they goe to Mount Tur, trending along by the Sea. That Mountaine is high, and is aſcended by ſteps, and hath an Oratorie on the top, with a pit of Spring-water. From Tur to Maſdaf, a pleaſant place where they fiſh for pearles: from Maſdaf to Sciarm-Albait, hence to Sciarm-Albir, thence to Cape Abi-Mohammed, three Ports without water: and here beginneth the aſcent of Ayla, a ſmall Citie of Arabs. Then to Aumed a watery Port, ouer againſt the Ile Noman, tenne miles from the Continent: thence to Tanna, to Atuf, to Haura, where they make Pots, tranſported farre and neere. Not farre thence on the South, is Mount Radhua, where grow the Whetſtones hence carried Eaſt and Weſt: thence to the faire Port and Riuer Tſafra, then to Caüaiaa, to Giar, to Giohfa, Codaid, Aasfan, Giodda. On the ſhoare of the Red Sea, is the Citie Madian, and the Well where Moſes, to whom peace, watered the flocke of Scioaib: from Madian to Ayla, are fiue ſtations, from Ayla to Giar about twentie. From Madian to Tabuc by Land Eaſtward, ſixe ſtations; it is ſeated betwixt Hagiar and the beginning of Damaſcus. Hagiar is from Vadialiqora, one ſtation: they haue houſes in the Rockes. But the waies are difficult, and will leade vs backe to the hatefull Mecca and Medina, I will therefore commiſerate my Reader (ſuch as are more ſtudious, may reſort to the Author) and hauing giuen you that face of Arabia, which no Chriſtian (to my knowledge) doth ſo well, or almoſt at all, could to any purpoſe deſcribe, we will ſtay and intertaine our ſelues with ſome more pleaſing ſpectacle, the Actors being other Mahometans, produced on this ſtage by the Maronites our Tranſlators.

Ierah or Iaarob firſt Arabian: ſo before Ben. Tudel. cals the the ſonnes of Ghereb.

ARabia hath not her name of I know not what Arabus, ſonne of Apollo and Babylonia, but of the Region Araba, not farre from Medina, where Iſmael Sonne of Abraham dwelt: and that of Iaarob, ſonne of Cahhtan or Iectan, ſonne of Heber (and not as Iuſef Ben-Abdillatif ſaith, the great grand-child of Abel) who (as Mohamed Ben-Iacub Sirazita, Author of the Arabick Dictionarie, affirmeth) was firſt Inuentor of the Arabicke tongue; which Iſmael after did bring to more elegance and perfection, and is therefore called, the Father of Arabicke eloquence. Some of the Arabians dwell in Cities, ſome in the Deſarts; thoſe better ciuillized, and fit for Arts: theſe which inhabite the Deſarts, are called Bedauya, or Beduois, that is, the people of the Deſart; exceed in numbers, and wander without houſes, vſing Tents made of Cotton Wooll, or of Goats and Camels haire, alway mouing and remouing, as water and paſture moue them, carrying their Wiues, Children, and Vtenſils on their Camels. Their Horſes are leane, little, ſwift, laborious, bold; and the Horſemen actiue beyond beliefe, darting and catching with their hand, the ſame Dart in the Horſes ſwifteſt race before it commeth at the ground; and auoiding a Dart throwne at them, by ſleightie winding vnder the Horſes ſides or belly: alſo taking vp Weapons lying on the ground whiles the Horſe is running, & in like ſwift race hit the ſmalleſt mark with Arrow or ſling. Their armes are arrowes, Iauelings with Iron heads, Swords (which they vſe not to thruſts but ſtrokes) Daggers, Slings, and vſe the ſame in aduerſe fight, or in auerſe flight. They lye in waite for Carauans, pray vpon Trauellers, liue on rapine and ſpoile, and often make themſelues the great Turks Receiuers and Treaſurers, and raiſe new Impoſts on all ſuch as they can enforce, whether Trauellers or Cities; obeying neither the Ottoman, nor any other Soueraigne, but being diuided in innumerable families, obey the heads of their owne Families or Tribes. Theſe Tribes are diſtinguiſhed by the names of their firſt Parents, as Abi-helal, Abi-Riſce, Abi-Zaid, and ſixe hundred others, all eſteemed and ſaluted Gentle, and equall in rights. Their food is browne Bread, new and ſowre Milke, Cheeſe, Goats and Camels fleſh, Pulſe, Hony, Oyle and Butter. Rice is eſteemed a great delicacie, by reaſon of their Tradition, that it came of Mahomets ſweat. For, ſay they, when Mahômet compaſſed the Throne of God in Paradiſe, God turned and looked on him, which made the modeſt Prophet ſweate, and wiping it off with his finger, ſixe drops fell out of Paradiſe: one whereof produced the Roſe; the ſecond, Rice; the other foure, his foure Aſſociats. They vſe a certaine Hodge-podge, or Frumentie of boyled Wheat, laid after a drying in the Sun, then beaten and boyled with fat fleſh, till the fleſh be conſumed. This they call Heriſe, and ſay that Gabriel the Angell taught it Mahomet for ſtrengthning his reines; whereby one night he fought againſt fortie men, and in another had fortie times carnall dealing with Women. Theſe might ſeeme calumnies deuiſed by ſome Mahumetan aduerſarie, if the former Author (both learned in, and zealous of the Law of Mohamed) had not related the ſame in a Chapiter of the choiſe of meats. Mohamed or Mahomet, commended alſo the eating of Gourds, and of the Melongenæ, affirming, that he had ſeene this Plant in Paradiſe, and meaſured the quantitie of mens wits, by their eating ſtore hereof. When he was once in priſon (ſaith Ben-ſidi Aali) the Angell Gabriel came downe from heauen, and carried him into Gennet Elenaam, or the Garden of pleaſures, where amongſt others he ſaw this ſhrub, and he asking why it grew there, the Angell anſwered, becauſe it hath confeſſed the Vnitie of God, and that thou art a true Prophet. Their garments are baſe, a Cotten ſhirt with very wide ſleeues, an vpper garment of Wooll, wouen with white and blacke lines of Goats or Camels haire; their feet are bare. Their Nobler ſort go better cloathed, and vſe ſhooes, a red leather girdle, a white Tulipan of Cotton or Linnen of few folds. Their Women go almoſt naked, in a blew ſmock of Cotton, Linnen head-tire, and face vailed. They vſe Eare-rings, Chaines, Brooches, and Rings of Glaſſe, or other baſe matter, and Dye or Paint with blew markes made with a needle, their cheekes, armes and lips. Thus much of the Bednines.

Baghdad or Bagdat.
* The Deuils Ieruſalem See my Pilg. l. 3. *c.*2. §.3.
The Tartarian conqueſt is here omitted.

Baghdad (which is alſo called Dar-aſſalam, that is, The Citie of peace *) receiued that name of a Monke called Baghdad, who as Ben-Caſen writeth, ſerued a Church builded in that Medow. But Abu-Giaphar Almanſur the ſecond Abaſſean Chalifa, who wanne it, A. Heg. 150. named it Dar-aſſalam. It is the Citie Royall of Meſopotamia, now called Diarbecr, which the ſaid Almanſur, placed in a large Plaine vpon Tigris, and diuided by the Riuer into two Cities, ioyned by a Bridge of Boats. This Citie built in this place, Almanſur ruled many yeeres, and after him other Chalifas till the 339. yeere of the Hegira, in which King Aadhd-eddaule and Saif-eddaule took it, who with their Succeſſors enioyed it till Solymus the Ottoman Emperour ſubdued, and is now ruled by a Baſcia, with many Ianizaries. But hereof Ahmad Abi Bacr of Baghdad, in his Annuals, will ſhew you more. This Citie is famous for Schooles of all Sciences, both in former and the preſent time. Here Ahmad Aſſalami a famous Poet wrote his Verſes. Here Alpharabius the renowmed Philoſopher and Phyſician, borne at Farab in Turcomannia, profeſſed theſe ſtudies publikely with great applauſe, and leauing many of his Scholers in this Citie, went to Harran of Meſopotamia, where finding Ariſtotles Booke, De Auditu, hee read it fortie times, and wrote vpon the Booke, that hee was willing againe to reade it. Hence hee went to Damaſcus, and there died, A. H.[*] 339. Thus Ben-Caſem in his Booke, De viridario Electorum.

Ariſtotles books of Phyſicks admired.

Bochara the Citie of Auicenna: ſome ſay in Bochara neere Samercand.

Auicenna. His diſſimulation.

Bochara is an ancient Citie vpon Euphrates, in a Village belonging whereto Honain Ali Benſina (whom the Latines call, Auicenna) was borne, A. H. 370. Hee gaue himſelfe to Phyſicke very young, and was the firſt which became Phyſician to Kings and Princes, who before in that Countrey vſed [y] no Phyſicians. He publiſhed neere an hundred books, many of Phyſick, ſome of Philoſophie, a Dictionarie of Herbs and Stones, Verſes of the Soule, &c. He liued eight and fiftie yeeres, and died in Hamadan. Hee had runne thorow all Arts, at eighteene. Thus Ben-Caſem. But others affirme, that a certaine Phyſician flouriſhing of great note, vpon whom no praying nor paying could faſten a Diſciple, leſt the ſecrets of his Art ſhould bee made common: the mother of Auicenna offers her ſonne to doe him ſeruice in decoctions, and other meaner offices, which he could not doe himſelfe; nor was there feare of danger from him whom nature had made deafe, and therefore dumbe. He made trials, and found Auicenna deafe, as he thought, and entertayned him, who watched his times, and tranſcribed his bookes and notes, ſending them cloſely to his mother, which after his mothers death he publiſhed in his owne name.

Damaſcus.

Damaſcus is called of the Arabians, Sciam, and Demaſc, of the Syrians Darmſuc. It is luxurious in fruits of all kinds, rich in Oliues and Iron of excellent temper by nature, and ſo bettered by arte, that no Helme or Shield can withſtand it. It is ſeated in a large Plaine at the roots of Libanus, there called Hermon, ſixe miles in compaſſe; double walled, with a ſtrong ſquare Tower in the midſt, built by a Florentine, beautified with Springs, Market places, Publike buildings, Meskits, Bathes, Canes, and all ſorts of ſilke-weauing, and in all ancient times with learning and learned men. Here flouriſhed Saint Damaſcen: and here Almotannabbi excelled in Arts and Armes, emulous of Mahomet, but not with like ſucceſſe. He was called Nabion, that is, The Prophet; this Motannabbi, that is, Prophecying: he wrote the Alcoran elegantly and eloquently; this excelled in Proſe and Verſe: both had Followers, but this mans Diſciples after his death were diſperſt, which happened, A. H. 354. Ben-Caſem alſo relates, that Mohamed Abi Abdillah profeſſed Philoſophie in this Citie, and to diſpute with all commers, and wrote a huge Booke, De vnitate exiſtendi principiorum. He died there, A. H. 638.

Aleppo.

Aleppo is called of the Inhabitants, Haleb, the chiefe Mart of all the Eaſt, frequented by Perſians, Indians, Armenians, and all Europaans. The Port is Scanderone, called by the Inhabitants Eſcanderuneh. The ſoyle is very fertile, and nouriſheth abundance of Silke-wormes. A. H. 922. Sultan Selim tooke it, and found therein infinite wealth. Sciarfeddin which wrote the Victories of the Othomans in two Tomes, ſayth, that it had of Gold and ſiluer coyned 1150000. and a mightie maſſe vncoyned; Veſts of cloth of Gold, tiſſued or wrought with Gold, Silke, and Scarlet aboue 300000. beſides abundance of Gems and Pearles. And beſides other wealth innumerable, it had eight Armories well furniſhed. It now flouriſheth in the next place to Conſtantinople and Cairo, and may be called, Queene of the Eaſt: Here are ſtore of Gems, Ambar, Bengeoin, Lignum Aloes, and Muske, which is taken from a little reddiſh beaſt, beaten with many blowes on one place that the bloud may all come thither. Then is the skin ſo ſwolne and full of bloud bound ſtraight that the bloud may not iſſue: and put into one or more bladders, is dried on a beaſts backe till the bladder fall off of it ſelfe, and that bloud after a moneth becomes excellent Muske. At Aleppo was borne that great Grammarian Othoman Abu Homar, ſurnamed Ben-ellhhageb, which wrote Caſia and Sciaſia of Grammer, and died, A. H. 672.

Mount Libanus

Cedar deſcribed.

Maronites.

Libanus is called by the Arabians Lobnan, Lebnon by the Syrians, ſo called of the Syriake word Lbunto, which ſignifieth, Frankincenſe. It contayneth about ſixe hundred miles compaſſe, rich in Soyle, Waters, Groues, Vines (the Wine whereof is very wholſome, not windie; and here in a Village, called Sardania, they ſay, Noa planted a Vineyard) and hence runne Pharphar, Abana, and the Riuer of Tripolis. On this Mountaine grow Cypreſſes, Pines, Boxes, and other trees plentie: eſpecially Cedars; the forme whereof from our owne eyes wee will here relate. It groweth on the top of the Mount, higher then the Pine, ſo thicke as foure or fiue men can ioyntly fadome: the boughs not eleuated vpwards, but ſtretched out acroſſe largely diffuſed and ſtriking on each other, thickly enfolded as is were by wonderfull Art, inſomuch as we haue ſeene many both ſit and lie along on the boughs. The leaues are thicke and frequent, narrow and hard, prickly and alway greene. The wood is knotty and ſomewhat wreathed, hard, incorruptible and ſweet-ſmelling. The fruit like the Cones of Cypreſſe, gummie and maruellous fragrant. On this Mountaine dwell the Maronites, deriued from Saint Maron the holy Abbot, and his Diſciples, or as others thinke from the Land Maronia: vncertaine whether, but moſt certaine, from no Heretike ſo called, as ſome will haue it. Theſe poſſeſſe all the Mountaine, and beſides other ordinary tributes, pay great ſummes yeerely to the Lord of the Land, that no man of other Religion be permitted to dwell with them, and that no tribute children (as amongſt the Greekes) be taken from them. They onely vſe Bells, which are prohibited other Nations, becauſe in the beginning of Mahumetiſme, by the ſound of a Bell, the Chriſtians had aſſembled and done the Moſlemans great miſchiefe. The Patriarch of the Maronites (which is alſo of Antiochia) is much reuerenced of the people, and with his Clergie acknowledgeth the Roman Biſhop. Their Liturgie is in the Syriake Tongue.

The Patriarch.

Mecca chiefe Citie of Arabia Deſerta, is called alſo in the Alcoran, Becca, the holy Citie of the Moſlemans, both for Mahomeds reuelations there had, and for the Temple eſpecially, called by them Kabe, or, The ſquare Houſe, which they fable, was firſt built by Angels, and often viſited by Adam himſelfe: and leſt it ſhould be deſtroyed by the Floud, was lifted vp to the ſixth Heauen, called Dar-aſſalam (The habitation of peace) after the Floud Abraham built another houſe like to the former, by the ſhadow thereof ſent from heauen to him. Thus writeth Iaacub Ben-Sidi Aali. This is a Chappell, not very large, of ſquare figure, open with foure Gates, by one of which the Miniſters haue acceſſe; the other are opened but once in the yeere. It glittereth all with Gold, and is couered with veſts of Gold, and encompaſſed with elegant Iron-worke to keepe off neere commers. No man may enter it but certaine Elders, which haue long beards to their breaſts, and remayne there night and day. Neere to this Chapell is a large marble Floore adorned about with eight huge Lights, and ſixe and thirtie Lamps of Gold, perpetually burning. Three pathes leade thereto whereon men and women goe bare-foot to the Chapell, which they compaſſe ſeuen times with great reuerence, mumbling their deuotions; kiſſe the corners, ſigh and implore the ayde of Abraham and Mohamed. Round about all this ſpace is a ſtately building of very elegant ſtructure, as it were a wall; in which are numbred ſixteene principall Gates to goe in and out, where hang innumerable Lamps and Lights of incredible greatneſſe. Within this ſpace betwixt the rowes of Pillars are ſhops of Sellers of Gemmes, Spices, Silkes, in incredible ſtore from India, Arabia, Æthiopia: that it ſeemes rather the Mart of the World then a Temple. Here doe men kiſſe and embrace with great zeale a certaine ſtone which they call Hagiar Alaſuad, or, The blacke ſtone, which they ſay, is a Margarite of Paradiſe, the light whereof gaue luſtre to all the Territorie of Mecca. Before this, ſayth Iacub Ben-Sidi Aali, Mohamed commanded to weepe, to aske God pardon for ſinnes, and to crie with ſighs and teares for ayde againſt their enemies. After they haue viſited that Chappell and the ſtone, they goe to another large Chappell within the Temple, where is the Well, called Zam Zam; which is (ſayth the ſaid Author) the Well which flowed from the feet of Iſmael when he was thirſtie and wept: which Hagar firſt ſeeing, cried out Zam Zam, in the Coptite or old Egyptian Tongue; that is, Stay, ſtay. There are many which draw water thence and giue to the Pilgrims, who are commanded to waſh therewith their bodie and head three times, to drinke thereof, and if they can, to carrie ſome of it with them, and to pray God for health and pardon of ſinnes. To this building is added a Noble Schoole or Vniuerſitie, A. H. 949. by Solyman who adorned it by his coſts by maruellous ſtructure, and endowed it with reuenues.

After theſe viſitations, all the Pilgrims goe to a certaine Temple on a Hill, ten miles from the Citie, and flocking in great numbers buy according to their abilitie, one or more Rammes for ſacrifice. And becauſe ſome are of opinion, that the Mohamedans haue no ſacrifices, we will relate what Iacub Ben-Sidi Aali hath written of their Ceremonies. Dhabhia (ſo the Arabs call a Sacrifice) is a killing of beaſts in the worſhip, and for the offering of God, and they are Lambs of ſixe or ſeuen moneths at leaſt; Camels of fiue yeeres, Bullockes of two yeeres. The males are to be choſen before females, and thoſe cleane, white, infected by no naturall or violent defect, fat, corpulent, horned. Euery man muſt kill his owne Sacrifices, and rippe them with his owne hands, except in vrgent neceſſities, and then he may ſubſtitute others to doe it for him. For euery one before they eate any thing, are bound to eate ſome piece of the Sacrifices; the reſt, if they can, to giue cheerfully to the poore. They which are admitted to theſe Oblations, let them offer one Ramme for themſelues, another for the ſoules of the Dead, another for Mohamed, that in the day of Iudgement he deliuer them from calamities. Theſe Sacrifices are offered to God in imitation of Abraham, which would haue offered his ſonne Iſmael to God; who going out of the Citie with him to a certaine Hill, called Mena, where he would haue offered him to God: but when the ſword could not cut his necke, a white Ramme appeared betwixt his hands, fat, and horned, which he ſacrificed to God in ſtead of his ſonne.

Mahumetan Sacrifices.

Lying Tradition.

Whiles the Pilgrims are here buſied in their ſacrifices, Beduine Arabs aſſault the Carauans, and robbing them, flee to the Hils, and inacceſſible refuges, ſo ſwift as if they did flie. And although all armes are forbiden in the territorie of Mecca (which containeth on the Eaſt ſix miles, on the North twelue, on the Weſt eighteene, on the South foure and twentie, in which reſpect Mecca and Medina are called Atharamain) yet they ceaſe not to infeſt, and Pilgrims are here often forced to armes. This Territorie is barren for want of water, and raine, hath very few Herbs and Plants, or other pleaſures of Groues, Gardens, Vines, or greene obiects; but is roaſted with the Sunne, both land and people. And this haply is the cauſe that no man may breake a bough if they find any Tree. Onely the ſhrubs of Balſam, brought hither from Cairo thriue well, and are now ſo propagated, that all the ſweet liquor of Balſam is carried onely from this Citie, thorow all Regions in great plentie. Here are ſtore of Pigeons, which becauſe they are of the ſtocke of that which came to Mohameds eare (as the Moſlemans fable) no man may take or ſcarre them. A certaine Scerif enioyeth the dominion of this Citie, and all the Land of Medina by inheritance, called Alamam-Albaſcemi, that is, the Captaine or chiefe Haſcemee, deſcended of Haſcem great Grandfather of Mohamed; Who were neuer depriued of their dominion by the Ottoman or Soldan. Yea, the Ottoman calls not himſelfe the Lord of Mecca and Medina, but the humble ſeruant. Yet this Scerif notwithſtanding his reuenues and gifts by Pilgrims and Princes, through the Beduines ſpoiles, and his kindreds quarrels ſeeking the Soueraigntie, is alway poore. Therefore doth the Ottoman beſtow the third part of the reuenues of Egypt, and to protect the Pilgrims from the inuaſions of the Arabs.

His foure wiues and his children. Mother of the Moſlemans.

Medina is called the Citie by Antonomaſia, and Medina Alnabi, that is, the Citie of the prophet: becauſe Mohamed, when he was forced to forſake his Countrey Mecca, betooke himſelfe to this Citie, then called Iathreb, and was made Lord thereof. It is an error that he was borne here, for he was borne and brought vp at Mecca; and in the fourth yeere of his age, and as Ben-Caſem hath, in the nine hundred thirtie three of Alexander the Great, he began to vtter his Doctrine, firſt priuily, after that publikely; whereupon he was baniſhed the Citie in the two and fiftieth of his life; or according to Abdilatif Ben-Iuſof, the three and fiftieth, and fled to Iathreb, from which flight, which they call Hegeraton or Hegera, which happened, An. Dom. 622. or thereabouts. And although this yeere 1623. be to them 1032. Yet becauſe they reckon according to the yeeres of the Moone, which they ſay, conſiſt of three hundred fiftie foure daies, the Moones courſe hath in this ſpace exceeded that of the Sunne, ſome Moneths aboue one and thirtie yeers. Whereupon their Moneths are vncertaine. In this Citie by ſubtill hypocriſies, Mohamed became Politicall and Eccleſiaſticall Prince; and began to procure the friendſhip of many, and to promulgate his Lawes by degrees. In the ſecond yeere of his flight, he enacted his Lawes of faſting; in the third, forbad Wine and Swines-fleſh; and ſo proceeded with the reſt, that within eight yeeres, he brought into ſubiection Mecca (whence hee had beene expulſed) and Muna, and went forward with his Law and Conqueſt. As concerning his Wiues, Ben-Caſem ſaith, hee had foure: he is alſo reported to haue many Harlots and Concubines: and in his Chapiter, Suratolbaqra or de vacca, he bids them marry one, two, three, or foure wiues a man, and to take as many Concubines as they are able to keepe. Ben-Sids Aali ſaith, that he gloried that he had the power of ten Prophets in copulation giuen him by God: Yea, he aſcribed all his villanies to God, by miniſterie of the Angel Gabriel. His firſt wife was named Codaige, by whom he had two ſonnes, and foure daughters, Zainab, Fatema, (whom Aali married) Om Kalthum the third, and Rakia the fourth (both which Abu-becr married.) His ſecond wife was Aiſce Daughter of Abu-Becr, the firſt Califa, which was but ſix yeeres old (Ben-Caſem is our author) when Mohamed tooke her to wife: the Moſlemans call her the mother of the faithfull: who beſides the knowledge of tongues, peruſed diligently the Arabike Hiſtories, loued exceedingly and alway praiſed Mohamed. The third was named Mary, which brought forth to Mohamed, Ebrahim, ſurnamed Caſem (whence Mohamed is often called Abulcaſem) though Ban-Abdulatif will haue Ebrahim to be one, and Caſem another; but Ben-Caſem ſaith, he had but three ſons, of which Ebrahim Caſem dyed at eighteene Moneths, and Taiheb and Taher his ſonnes by Codaige, dyed both in their Cradles. Mohameds laſt wife was Zainab, whom alſo they call the mother of the faithfull, before the wife of Zaidi Ben-Harteh, Mohameds Maſter, who diuorced her, whereupon Mohamed gladly tooke her to wife.

His foure Aſſociates or Counſellors, Abi-Bacr.

Homar.

Othman.

Aali.

He had foure Counſellers or Companions; the firſt, Abdollah, or Abu-Bacr, his ſincereſt and moſt inward friend, a man very rich and releeuer of Mohameds neceſſities, his ſucceſſor after his death. He dyed the thirteenth yeere of the Hegira, and ſixtie three of his age, and was buried in the ſame graue with Mohamed. The ſecond was Homar the ſonne of Chattab, ſurnamed Faruq, who ſucceeded Abi-Bacr, and ruled ten yeeres and ſix moneths. He was the firſt which was called King of the faithfull, and writ the Annals of the Moſlemans, and brought the Alcoran into a Volume, and cauſed the Ramadam faſt to be obſerued. He was ſlaine the three and twentieth of the Hegira, and buried by Abi-Bacr. The third was Othman, who in his twelue yeeres raigne ſubdued Cyprus, Naiſabur, Maru, Sarchas, and Maritania, and died A.H. 35. and was buried in the buriall place of the Citie. Aali was the fourth, who is called alſo Emir Elmumenin, that is, King of the faithfull; he was ſlaine A. H. 40. in the three and ſixtieth of his age, and was buried in the Citie Kerbelai. He was his Vncles ſonne, or Couſin-german to Mohamed and his ſonne in law, and deare familiar from his youth, and receiued the Moſleman Law together with Mohamed; whereupon he was wont to ſay, I am the firſt Moſleman. And therefore the Perſians deteſt the other three Chalifas, as Heretikes; burne their Writings whereſoeuer they finde them, and perſecute their Followers, becauſe forſooth they were ſo impudent, to preferre themſelues before Aali, and ſpoyled him of the right due by Teſtament. Hence are Warres and hoſtile cruelties betwixt them and the Turkes, and Arabs. Mohamed the falſe Prophet, in the eleuenth yeere after his Hegira or flight, and the three and ſixtieth of his age, dyed at Medina and was buried there in the Graue of Aaiſce his wife. Heere is a ſtately Temple and huge, erected with elegant and munificent ſtructure, daily increaſed and adorned by the coſts of the Othomans, and gifts of other Princes. Within this building is a Chappell not perfectly ſquare, couered with a goodly Roofe, vnder which is the Vrne of ſtone, called Hagiar Monaüar, ſometimes belonging to Aaiſce aforeſaid. This is all couered with Gold and Silke, and compaſſed about with Iron grates gilded. Within this, which ſhineth with Gold and Gemmes, Mohameds carkaſſe was placed, and not lifted vp by force of Load-ſtone or other Art; but that ſtone-Vrne lyeth on the ground.

The Moſleman Pilgrimes after their returne from Mecca, viſit this Temple, becauſe Mohamed yet liuing was wont to ſay, that he would for him which ſhould viſit his Tombe, aſwell as if he had viſited him liuing, intercede with God for a life full of pleaſures. Therefore doe they throng hither, and with great Veneration kiſſe and embrace the grates (for none haue acceſſe to the Vrne of ſtone) and many for loue of this place leaue their Countrey, yea, ſome madly put out their eyes to ſee no worldly thing after, and there ſpend the reſt of their dayes.

The compaſſe of Medina is two miles, and is the circuit of the wall, which Aadhd Addaule King of Baghdad built, A. H. 364. The Territorie is barren ſcorched Sands, bringing forth nothing but a few Dates and Herbs.

Cairo.

Metſr is the name of Cairo, and all Egypt, ſo called of Meſraim the Sonne of Noa, as ſaith Mohamed Sarazita. This Citie is gouerned by a Baſcia, and fiue and twentie thouſand Spahies and Ianizaries. It is rich in Caſſia Trees, Sugar-canes and Corne, many Lands adioyning yeelding Harueſt twice a yeare, Hay foure times, Herbs and Pulſe in manner alway greene. Adde ſtore of Salt very white, the water of Nilus incloſed in Pits and by the only heate of the Sunne in three dayes beeing turned into it. In former times it was famous for Balſam Plants now remooued to Mecca by command of the Othomans; and none are found in all Egypt, but ſeuen ſhaubs * in the Baſſas Garden, kept with great diligence. The leaues are like to wild Marioram, the iuyce is taken by a little inciſion in the trunke or branch.

Salt of Nilus.

Balſam.

* M. Sandys ſaith there is now but one, l. 6. c. 8 §. 2.

Abu-Chalil-Ben-Aali writes, that from the fifteenth to the two & twentieth of Rabij Athani (Iune) there fals a dew which leaues no token thereof in the earth, yet by vulgar * experience is found by weighing the ſand or earth of Nilus bankes, and is an euident token of the increaſe of Nilus. The Aire alſo is then made more wholſome; Plagues and Feuers ceaſe, and thoſe which were ſicke * of them recouer.

Meſcuites, or Moſchees, and their Ceremonies in them.

Touching the Eaſterne Cuſtomes. Benſidt Aali hath written of the ſtructure of Meſcuites. Before them is a large floore paued with Marble, in the midſt is a ſquare Lauer, where they which come to pray vſe to waſh themſelues. After this is a great Hall without Images or Pictures, the Walls bare, not ſhining with Gold or Gemmes: the Pauement matted, on which the vulgar ſit; the Rich vſe Carpets ſpred for them by their Slaues. From the Roofe hang many Lampes, which are lighted in Prayer time, and that beeing ended, are put out. Theſe Churches are for the moſt part round and couered with lead; and haue adioyned high Towers which ſerue for Steeples with foure Windowes open to the foure winds; whereon the Prieſts at ſet-times aſcend, and with a ſtrong voyce call men to Prayers. Which being ended, and their Legall waſhing being done, all of them leauing their Shooes on a rew at the threſhold of the Gate or Porch, they enter with great ſilence. The Prieſt beginneth the Prayer and all follow, and whiles hee kneeleth they doe ſo, and riſe when hee ſtands vp, and imitate him in the eleuation or depreſſion of the voyce. None yanneth, cougheth, walketh or talketh, but in great ſilence after Prayers they reſume their Shooes and depart. No women may come to the Meſcuites at theſe ſet houres, if there bee any men, nor may haue any ſocietie of men except the Prieſt, which directeth and goeth before them with his voyce in their manner of praying, as ſaith the ſaid Author.

Moſleman women diſrepected.

Hence ſome aſcribe to the Turkes falſly, that women haue no ſouls.

They are permitted, not to enter the Meſcuites, but to ſtand at the doore, and muſt bee gone quickly before the men haue done their Prayers. Hee addes that the womens Church is the inner part of their owne houſe. Such is their diſ-repect of women, notwithſtanding Mohameds promiſes in his Alcoran, that many ſay they enter not Paradiſe but may ſtand at the doore with Chriſtians, and ſee the glorie of the men.

Eaſterne attire

The Garments of the Eaſt are commonly long, ſome ſlit on the right and left hand, ſome whole. The vpper Garment hath wide ſleeues. Their head-tire is a Tulipant but differing, of Princes white and fine, artificially wreathen, rather long then round: of their Cadies and Muftis very large of fiftie or ſixtie els of Calico round and wreathed; of Citizens leſſe, of Seriſs or Mohameds poſteritie greene: of Souldiers and Seruants long and white. Chriſtians vſe not white nor round ones: the Maronite Patriarke and his Suffragan Biſhops weare a huge Tulipant, round and blue, with a blacke hood vnder it: other Prieſts leſſe and no hood. The women are pompous, but comming abroad weare a couering made of Horſe-haire before their face, that they may ſee and not be knowne, not if their owne Husbands meete them; neither if they did know, would they ſalute, it being a ſhame for a woman to be ſeene ſpeaking with a man. Their Chaines, A note for trauellers in theſe parts, not to prouoke them with our libertie in vrine, &c a cauſe of quarrell often to Chriſtians.

Brooches and other Ornaments and Paintings of their eyes, browes, and fingers ends, I omit. Both men and women are ſo addicted to neatneſſe, that they are very carefull leſt any drop of vrine ſpot their clothes in making water or going to ſtoole, and would then thinke themſelues vncleane. They therefore then ſit downe (like women) and waſh; or if no water may be had, wipe with three ſtones, or a three cornered ſtone, as Ben-Sidi Aali in his Chapiter of waſhing warneth. They thinke it vnlawfull to ſpit or piſſe on a brute creature. In food they abſtaine from ſtrangled and bloud; and Moſelmans, from Swines fleſh. They loue Iunckets: they breake bread and cut it not. Their Table is a round piece of Leather, to which they come with waſhing and Prayers promiſed. They vſe not Forkes but Spoones of wood of diuers coulours, and where they need not them, three fingers as Ben-Sidi Aali warneth. Pewter and Porcelane is in much vſe, but other Veſſels of plate or Gold, ſaith hee, Mohamed forbade, ſaying, the Deuill vſed ſuch, the common drinke is water; the better ſort adde Sugar, ſometimes Amber and Muske, &c.

Eaſterne Languages.

There are in the Eaſt eight principall Languages, the Arabike, Perſian, Turkiſh, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriake (which little differs from Chaldees) Greeke, and Armenian. The Arabike is moſt noble and vſuall, and is extended as farre as Mohameds name as their ſacred Language, knowne to all Moſelmans of better faſhion. In this is their Alcoran and their publike Prayers, and moſt of their Lawes. Yea, ſaith Zaheri, the bleſſed in Paradiſe vſe it. In this alſo are written their Bookes of Phyſicke, Aſtrologie, Rhetorike. The Perſian hath little but Poets and Hiſtorians, the Turkiſh almoſt nothing; the Chaldee and Syriake are nigh loſt, as the Greeke. But Auerroes, Algazeles, Abu-Becer, Alfarabius (called of the Moſelmans the ſecond Philoſopher) Mohamed Ben-Iſaac, and Mohamed Ben-Abdullah adorned the Arabike: beſides very many Aſtrologers, Mathematicians, Phyſicians, and Hiſtorians. Ben-Sidi Aali reckons one hundred and fiftie, which haue written on their Law; Ben-Caſem, innumerable Grammarians and Rhetoricians.

Arabike Authours.

Moſlemans Creed.

Now for the Moſelmans Religion, Ben-Sidi Aali expreſſeth it to conſiſt herein, that they beleeue all the ſpeeches made by Gabriel the Angell to our Prophet, when hee queſtioned him of the things to be beleeued and done: which are theſe, to beleeue in one God to whom none is equall (this againſt Chriſtians) and that the Angels are the Seruants of God, to beleeue in the Scripture ſent to the Apoſtles, diuided in their opinion into one hundred and foure Bookes, of which ten were ſent to Adam, fiftie to Set, thirtie to Enoc (called Edris) ten to Abraham, the Law to Moſes, the Pſalmes to Dauid, the Goſpell to Iſa, or Ieſus Chriſt; laſtly, the Alcoran to Mohamed. That they hold theſe ſent for mens good; and beleeue in the Reſurrection after death, and that ſome are predeſtinate to fire, ſome to Paradiſe according to the will of God (for it is ſaid in the Alcoran; there is none of you which hath not his place in Paradiſe, and a place determined in Hell) that they beleeue alſo the reward of the good and puniſhment of the bad; and the interceſſion of the Saints. Alſo this is of the things to bee holden, that they firmely beleeue in the Diuine Pen, which was created by the finger of God. This Pen was made of Pearles, of that length and ſpace that a ſwift Horſe could ſcarcely paſſe in fiue hundred yeares. It performeth that office, that it writes all things paſt, preſent and to come: the Inke with which it writes is of light; the tongue by which it writes none vnderſtandeth but the Archangell Seraphael. That they beleeue alſo the puniſhment of the Sepulchres; for the dead are vſed often to be puniſhed in their Graues, as happened in a certaine Sepulcher betwixt Mecca and Medina.

Moſleman Precepts are; Circumciſion. Fiue houres Prayers.

The Precepts of the Moſlemans are, firſt Circumſion, not on the eight day as to the Iewes, but at the eight, ninth, tenth, eleuenth, twelfth yeare that they may know what they doe, and may profeſſe their Faith with vnderſtanding. And although moſt hold women free therefrom, yet in Egypt they circumciſe women at thirteene, fourteene, or fifteene yeares old (many of them till then goe ſtarke naked) and Sidi-Ben Aali ſaith, that it was commanded to men, but is vſed to women for honour.

The ſecond Commandement is Prayers hourely, which in the Church, at home, or abroad, they are bound to perform, fiue times in the day and night: firſt at break of day; the ſecond about noon; the third in the afternoon; the fourth after Sun-ſet, when the ſtars begin to appeare: the laſt in the firſt watch, or before mid-night (for after, it is vnlawfull ſaith Ben-Sidi Aali) neither may any tranſgreſſe theſe houres without ſinne; yea, ſaith hee, if one were caſt into the Sea and knew the houre of Prayer, if he be able he ought to doe it; as alſo women in trauell muſt hide the Infants head as they can and doe it. Trauellers when they perceiue that houre is come, goe out of the way and waſh; or if they haue no water, lightly digge the Earth and make ſhew of waſhing, and goe not thence till they haue finiſhed their Deuotion. Thirdly Almes is alſo commanded; and they which are ſo poore that they cannot giue to Orphans and the poore, muſt helpe in Hoſpitals, and high-wayes, by ſuch ſeruice to ſatisfie God. Fourthly, Ramahdan Faſt of thirtie dayes is commanded from morning to Sun-ſet and the Starres appearing: for then after euening Prayer they eate any food (except Wine) with Bacchanall cheere and tumults. Fiftly, Pilgrimage once in their liues to Mecca and Medina is alſo commended; and ſixtly, to fight againſt the enemies of their Faith is no leſſe commanded; not to preach by the Word and Meekeneſſe, as Chriſt, but by the Sword and Warre, to inuade and reuenge. And if by their perſons and bloud they cannot, they muſt (ſaith our Author) by their purſe and goods helpe the Prince herein. And if they die in Warre, the ſenſuall pleaſures of Paradiſe, Riuers of Milke and Honey, beautifull women and the like are their preſent purchaſe. Therefore doe they giue to Apoſtataes, which become Moſlemans, an Arrow borne vp by their fore-finger; the Arrow ſignifying Warre, and that one Finger the Vnitie of the Deitie. Their laſt Commandement is waſhing with water, which is three-fold, one before Prayers, handled in three Chapiters by Ben-Sidi Aali, thus performed; the armes ſtripped naked to the elbow, they waſh the right hand and arme, then the left, after the Noſe, Eares, Face, Necke, Crowne, Feet to the ioynts, if they be bare, or elſe their ſhooe-tops, laſtly their Priuities; mean-while mumbling their Deuotions. Theſe waſhings they thinke to waſh away their Veniall and lighter ſinnes; for their greater they vſe Bathes, and ſay all the bodie muſt be waſhed to waſh away Crimes. The third waſhing is of their ſecrets by themſelues or their Seruants after the Offices of Nature, deliuered by him in two Chapiters, too fooliſh and filthy to be related. Adde the prohibition of Images painted or carued, Thefts, Homicides, Robberies, Adulteries, Swines fleſh, Wine, ſtrangled bloud, and things dying of themſelues, and all vncleane Creatures.

Order of viſiting the ſick, of Wils, Reſtitutions, and Burials.

Hee alſo inſtructs at large of their Teſtaments and Funerals. The Moſlemans beeing ſicke preſently ſend for an Abed, Religious man or Santone to ſtrengthen them in the Faith and propound heauenly things to him, reciting ſomewhat out of the Alcoran. And if the Diſeaſe bee very dangerous, they waſh and make their Teſtament; and are bound to reſtore all ill-gotten goods, giuing the Creditors a Bill of their hand. And if they know not to whom to reſtore, they muſt bequeath a ſumme of money to publike vſes, Hoſpitals, Meſcuits, Bathes, the poore and Religious perſons: yea, for that reſpect they ſet Captiues at libertie, as is read that Auicenna did; ſome giue Bookes to publike vſes; ſome, other things. Ben-Sidi Aali ſaith, it is Mohameds precept that the third part of mens goods be beſtowed on publike vſes. And if a man die inteſtate, they ſay other dead men will chide him. When they are dead, the bodie is waſhed, the Noſe, Eyes, Mouth, and Eares ſtopped with Cotton; better apparell is put on, white ſhirts and Tulipants. Then is the bodie carryed to the buriall place without the Citie with a great troupe; the Santones or Religious going before then the men promiſcuouſly, after the Corps; followed by women howling, lamenting, ſhrieking, till they come to the Graue. There are thoſe Garments taken away, and the Corps ſhrowded in a white ſheet, and put into the Graue with the face to the South. After the couering with Earth, many Prayers are made, and much Almes is giuen to the poore to doe the ſame.

Chriſtians in the Eaſt their death & burial.

The Chriſtians in thoſe part in like caſe take the Sacrament, hauing before confeſſed and made their wils. The Prieſt ceaſeth not to exort them to hopes of a better life by Faith in Chriſt. Being dead Perfumes are burned in the Chamber, the Corps is wrapped in a white ſheet, and on a Herſe carried by foure to the buriall place, men accompanying and women following. The neerer Kindred lament, caſt aſhes on their head and face, rent their Garments, pull off their haire, ſmite their cheekes, and lift vp horrible cries to Heauen without ceaſing. When they are comne to the Graue, they bury them with their faces to the Eaſt. But Prieſts and ſpecially Biſhops are attyred in their Prieſtly Habits, ſet in a Chaire, and the mouthes of the Sepulchers cloſed with a ſtone. Then vpon the Graues they burne Frankincenſe and make many Prayers. After this the women goe round about the Graue in a ranke with mournfull laments, ſtrikes, plaints, and piteous Songs in prayſe of the dead partie. Seruice is after celebrated for the dead; which ended, the Prieſts, many Clerkes and Lay-men by the Heires are inuited to Dinner. Whiles they are ſet, the neereſt Kinſman often warnes them to pray for reſt to the deceaſed, and they with a loud voice anſwere, God haue mercy on him, for whoſe ſake we eate theſe meates. After Dinner they comfort the Heires, and praying for reſt to the deceaſed, depart.

As concerning the Moſlemans Beliefe of God and Chriſt, the Reader may reade the Dialogue, publiſhed by my learned Friend Maſter Bedwell, called Mohameds impoſture, as alſo my Pilgrimage and the quotations there, out of the Alcoran.

Don DVART* DE MENESES the Vice-roy, his tractate of the Portugall Indies, containing the Lawes, Cuſtomes, Reuenues, Expenſes, and other matters remarkable therein: heere abbreuiated.

*Of this name Meneſes or Menezes, Frier Iohn Santos reckoneth foure Vice-royes: two of which were Duartes or Edwards. One An. 1521. This was Earle of Tarouca, and ſent into India, An. 1584. and ruled there more then foure yeares. Note alſo, that Don Iohn de Caſtro, whoſe Rutter of the Red Sea ye haue in the ſeuenth Booke, was Vice-roy of India, An. 1545. famous for arts and Armes, which I mention that the Reader may obſerue our care in forreine Authors to chuſe the beſt.

A Regiſter or Collection of the Vſes, Lawes, and Cuſtomes of the Canarins, or Inhabitants of this Iland of Goa, and of the Townes thereunto belonging.

Don Iohn by the Grace of God, King of Portugall and of the Algarues, of this ſide and beyond the Seas, Lord of Guinea, and of the Conqueſt, Nauigation, and Commerce or Trafficke of Æthiopia, Arabia, Perſia, and India, &c. To all thoſe that ſhall ſee this our Bill of Rites and Cuſtomes, giuen to the Gouernors, Farmers and Inhabiters of the Townes and Ilands of our Citie of Goa, greeting. We let you vnderſtand, that by the good ordering, diligences, and examinations, which were to bee done by Iuſtification, and Declaration of that which the ſaid Farmers were bound to pay vnto vs, and did pay vnto the Kings and Lords of the Countrey before it was ours, of their inheritances, duties, rights, and other charges: and alſo the rights, vſes and cuſtomes which they had, and we ought to command, ſhould be kept vnto them, and wee found by the Declaration of the ſaid diligences, that they are bound to pay vnto vs that which is contained in this our other Bill of Cuſtomes of the ſaid payments of duties. And alſo wee finde that they ought to vſe theſe vſes, rights and cuſtomes, in manner and forme following.

It was found, that euery Towne of the ſaid Ilands haue certaine Gouernors; ſome more, ſome leſſe, according to their cuſtome, and as the Ilands and the Townes are in bigneſſe, and that the ſaid name Gançares is as much to ſay, as Gouernor, Ruler, or Benefactor, & it was thus ordained. In old time there went foure men to make profit of an Iland, and of another vnprofitable waſte place, the which they manured and fortified in ſuch manner, and ſo well, that in proceſſe of time it came to ſuch increaſe, that it became very populous. And theſe Beginners, for their good gouernment, rule and trafficke, were called Gançares; and afterward there came Lords and Conquerors vpon them, which did make them for to pay tribute, and cuſtome for to let them dwell quietly in their Lands or Inheritances and Cuſtomes, but I could not know the beginning of this.

In this Iland of Tiſoare, where the Citie of Goa ſtands ſituated, there are two and thirtie Townes and Villages, as followeth. Neura the great, Gancin, the old Goa, Cogin, Hella, A. Ioſin, Carambolin, Batin, Teleigaon, Bamolin, Curqua, Calapor, Morabrin the great, Talaulin, Galimola, Neura the leſſe, Corlin, Sirdaon, Dugnari, Murura, Morabrin the leſſe, Chumbel, Pannelin, Solecer, Mandur, Murcundin, Agaçarin, Horar, Gaudalin, Renoari, Banganin, Foleiros.

The Townes or Villages of Choram, and of Iuan, and of Diuar, are theſe that follow: Choran, Cararin, Iuan, the Peſcadores, or Fiſhers of Dabarin, Malar, Nauelin, Goltin, Diua.

And euery one of the ſaid Townes, is bound to pay vnto vs certaine rent, contained and declared in the ſaid Regiſter. Heretofore the ſaid Gouernors of euery Towne or Village, with the Notarie of the ſame, doth diuide and ceaſſe vpon the Farmers or perſons, that within the bounds of euery Towne hath Lands or Inheritance, and this according to the condition wherewith it is giuen them for their vſes and cuſtomes: and the ſaid are bound to leuie, gather, and pay the ſaid rent, whither it increaſe or decreaſe, and the loſſe or encreaſe ſhall remaine with them of the Towne, that the perſons to whom it doth appertaine by their cuſtome, may pay the loſſe, or take the increaſe, as here vnder it ſhall be declared, except the loſſe ſhould chance to come by warre, for then they ſhall be quit of that which ſhall be by the meanes thereof loſt.

The ſaid increaſe or loſſe of euery yeare, ſhall bee diuided according to euery ones ſubſtance equally, ſo that euery one doe pay the rent of the Lands or Rice-grounds that he doth occupie.

Which are 75. Reys euery one, and two pence farthing Engliſh.

Some Gardens and Palme-tree Groues, and Rice-grounds, are bound to pay euery yeare certaine Tangas: and although they doe ſuſtaine loſſes, there be in the ſaid Ilands other Palme-tree Groues, and Rice-grounds, which doe not pay but a certaine cuſtome; and beſides, they are bound to a contribution of the loſſes when there be any. And there be other Lands or Inheritances which the ſaid Gouernours may giue gratis to any perſon or perſons, whom they ſhall thinke good, without cuſtome or Obligation, to pay any thing to the contribution of the loſſes.

If any Towne or Village be ſo decayed, that they cannot pay their cuſtome and rent that appertaineth to vs, the Gouernors and Inhabiters of it, ſhall giue intelligence of it to the chiefe Maſter of the Ports, and to the Notarie of the Iland, and they ſhall goe to ſee the ſaid loſſe, and finding it for good truth that it hath ſuch a loſſe; the ſaid chiefe Maſter of the Ports ſhall command the chiefe Gouernours of the eight principall Townes aboue rehearſed, and then there may come to this other Gouernours, which ſoeuer they ſhall thinke good, although the matters of the Iland muſt be done by order with them of the eight principall Townes, and altogether with the ſaid chiefe Maſter of the Ports, and the Notarie, the Inhabitants of the decayed towne may engage or morgage their Towne vnto the Gouernours, becauſe they are bound vnto it: and they may alſo make ſale of it in the preſence of the ſaid Officers, and it ſhall be deliuered or ſurrendred to him that will giue moſt for it, and that which is wanting of the rent and cuſtome which it is bound to pay, in that which is giuen for the Towne, ſhall bee diuided and leuied of the eight principall Townes, or of all the Iland, vpon thoſe Lands which are bound to the contribution of the loſſes, in ſuch ſort, that we may haue full payment of the Cuſtome of the ſaid Towne, and that the ſaid Hirer or Hirers ſhall be bound to increaſe better, and profit the Towne or Village: and with this condition it ſhall be let or ſet vnto them. And the ſaid Hirers or Farmers of the ſaid Towne, ſhall haue the voyces of Gouernours during the time of their Leaſe or Farme.

The Gouernours of the Towne decayed, doe not loſe their Offices by that which is ſpoken. And at all times that they ſhall aske, or demand, the Towne paying the whole rent or cuſtome, it ſhall be deliuered vnto them, and the ſaid Towne ſhall be no more of the Farmers, hauing ended their time or leaſe.

The Gouernours by authoritie of their Offices, and becauſe they were Beginners, and alſo becauſe the ſaid Offices or charge doth come to them by deſcent, they doe not loſe them (to wit, the Gouernours euery one in the Towne in perſon for any error he doth commit: nor the Clerke of Common Councell, which alſo commeth to him by inheritance or deſcent: and this order was made by the Gouernours themſelues, onely the one and the other ſhall haue for the errors and hurts that they doe commit, the penaltie that they doe deſerue, in their goods and bodie. Notwithſtanding, ſuch an error they may doe, that they may dye for it: or it ſhall be conuenient that they ſhall not ſerue in their Offices, and in ſuch caſe it ſhall remaine to their Sonnes or Heires; and if the caſe be not great, the chiefe Maſter of the Ports ſhall iudge it, accounſelling himſelfe with ſome of the Gouernours. And if the facts bee greater, the ſaid chiefe Maſter of the Ports ſhall giue knowledge of it to our Captaine Generall, and Gouernour of India, or to the Captaine of our Citie of Goa, or to the ouer-ſeer of our goods, if the matter bee thereunto attaining, for to prouide in it what ſhall bee conuenient and right. And alſo the Gouernours of the ſaid Towne haue the ſaid Offices by inheritance or deſcent. And if they doe commit any error, they ſhall be puniſhed as theſe other, and ſo their Offices ſhall remaine to their Sonnes, or to their Heires.

The Gouernors may giue ſuch fields as within euery Towne are waſte or vnprofitable, to ſuch as ſhall aske or demand them, for to make them profitable in Gardens, or Palme-tree Groues, or to other good vſes, with condition that they ſhall pay a certaine rent, or cuſtome, as ſhall ſeeme good vnto them, and this ſo giuen, ſhall bee for the ſpace of fiue and twentie yeeres; for, from that time forward, they ſhall pay according to the order and cuſtome, which is euery Field or Plaine, of twelue Paces in length (which is the ſpace betweene Palme-tree and Palme-tree, reckoning one hundred Palme-trees to the field) ſome of them to pay fiue Tangas, worth foure Barganis euery Tanga. And after this rate, the greater or leſſer field ſo giuen ſhall pay. And the ſaid Gouernours may giue the waſte Fields and Plaines, for to be profited in Palme-tree Groues, and Gardens, for leſſe then fiue Tangas, and they ſhall paſſe their Warrant for this, according to their cuſtome, notwithſtanding they may not exceed aboue.

Bargani is two pence halfe peny farthing, and a ſixteenth part of a penie.

When they ſhall giue Fields or Plaines, to make Rice grounds, they ſhall be giuen in this manner, to wit, fiue Cubits in length, and fiue in breadth, which is the ſpace betweene one rew and another, reckoning in this manner one hundred rewes to euery Field. And any Field or Plaine of them, being watered with Well water, they ſhall giue it for foure Barganis, euery yeeres rent; and if they be watered with running water, their rent ſhall be ſix Barganis euery yeere; and after the ſaid Gardens bee ſo giuen vnto them by the Gouernours, they cannot bee taken away from them, for they remaine to their Sonnes, Grand-children, and Heires, and this is the generall cuſtome. Notwithſtanding, if any other cuſtome be vſed beſides this in any Towne, or Village, it ſhall be fulfilled.

Which is eleuen pence farthing Engliſh.

The Clerke of the Councell muſt be preſent at all the bargaines, and agreements (which amongſt themſelues they call Nemes) that ſhall be made by the principall Gouernours of all the Iland with the Officers of it, the chiefe Maſter of the Ports, a Portugal Notarie with him, or a Bramane, and without him or the Clerke of the Councell, no bargaines nor agreements can be made, becauſe they doe write the Caſes, for to notifie and declare the debts that might ariſe in time to come. And in the abouesaid manner, the Scriueners of the Townes muſt be with the Gouernours uernours of them, in all matters that ſhall paſſe in any one of the ſaid Townes. And the Townes of all this Iland of Tiſoare, and the other Townes of Diuar, and Choran, and Iunba, are guided by their writings.

The Gouernours euery one in his owne Towne, may giue Fields, or Plaines, freely or gratis, for to profit them: or if be profitable being voide, to the Officers of the ſaid Townes, to wit, to the * Prieſt of the * Pagode, or Church of the Idoll, and to the Scriuener, and to the Porter, and to the Rent-gatherer, and to the Magnato (which is a waſher of Cloth, or a Laundreſſe) and to the Shoomaker, and Carpenter, and to the Smith, and to the Faras (which is a ſeruant to the Pagode, or Church) and to the women of the world (which are common women or Curteſans) and to the Ieſter. And to thoſe perſons abouenamed, the Plaines, or Fields, and Gardens, are giuen gratis, for to ſerue continually in the ſaid Townes: And after they be giuen vnto them, they may not be taken away, nor other perſons be ſet in their place, becauſe they are giuen vnto them for their Sonnes, Grand-children, and Heires. And euery Towne may haue no more Officers then abouenamed, to whom they may giue the ſaid Lands gratis. Neither may they giue them any more Lands without Heires, and they being willing to leaue them, they ſhall bee giuen to other Officers of their Facultie, and the Heires of the ſame Officers are bound to ſerue in the ſaid Offices alſo.

* Which is called Bramane.
* Which is their Temple.

The Gouernour of any Towne, may not giue any Field, or Garden, to any one that is not of the Towne, gratis, but paying tribute: except they haue an order for it.

When the chiefe Maſter of the Ports ſhall ſend for the Gouernours of all the Iland, or of one Towne, they are bound for to come, or to make an aſſemblie, for to chooſe in euery Towne any one whom they thinke meete, for to ſend to the ſaid calling; and when they make the ſaid aſſemblie (which among them is called Gançaria, or an aſſemblie of Gouernours) if any Gouernour be wanting of them, which are ordained in the ſaid Towne, there can nothing be done, except they be all together, and if there be any Heire of that Gouernour that is wanting, it is ſufficient for the ſaid Aſſemblie or meeting to be made with him. And if other people doe not come, they ſhall incurre the penaltie that among themſelues they haue ordained.

If any Gouernour or any other perſon is willing to ſell any lands in any of the ſaid Townes, they may not doe it without licenſe of all the Gouernours of the ſaid Towne, and alſo no perſon may buy without the ſaid licenſe. And if any perſon ſhall make any ſale, or buy any land without the licenſe, it ſhall be in it ſelfe of no effect, and at any time when the Gouernour will, it ſhall be voide for the benefit of the duties which they are bound to pay vnto vs, and becauſe they alſo that doe buy, may bee contented and acquainted with the ſaid rights, and may haue their Letters with a declaration of theſe duties which they are to pay.

When any Bill of ſale ſhall be made of any Land or Inheritance, it ſhall not be ſufficient to be ſigned by the Letter, but alſo it muſt bee ſigned by all the Heires, and although ſome of the Heires be vnder age, declaration ſhall be made, that ſome other perſon that did appertaine vnto him, did ſigne for him, and if any one of the Heires remaine that hath not ſigned, the ſaid ſale ſhall at any time be of no effect, taking the quantitie that it was ſold for, and if the buyer ſhall be at any coſt or charges vpon the ſaid Land, he ſhall loſe it.

If any Gouernour ſhall goe or runne away becauſe he will not, or is not able to pay vs the rent that he is bound to pay, the other Gouernours of the ſaid Towne ſhall meete, and call a Court about this matter, and ſhall prefixe a time wherein he may come, and if within the ſaid time he doth not come, they ſhall require the Heires of the ſaid Gouernour ſo fled, to take the ſaid Lands, and Gouernement, ſo as they be bound to pay vnto vs our right, and the debts that he doth owe: and if he will not accept it, it ſhall remaine to the ſaid Gouernours, for the Obligation that they haue to pay the ſaid right or cuſtome, and they may giue them to whom they ſhall thinke beſt, paying beſides our right all the debts that he doth owe.

If a Gouernour or any other perſon ſhall runne away for debt, or any other matter, no man ſhall take away his Lands, and his Heires ſhall bee demanded, if they will remaine in the ſaid Lands, and be bound to pay his debts, and our right, and if there be no Heires, or being any, if they will not accept it, then the ſaid Lands ſhall remaine to the ſaid Gouernours, for want of an owner, and they ſhall pay for it the right and debts that they doe owe vnto vs, and they ſhall take the ouerplus of that which is remayning, and if any thing be wanting, they ſhall pay that which it amounteth vnto, and as touching the moueable goods, they ſhall remaine vnto vs, whenſoeuer the Heires ſhall not accept of the Inheritance or Lands.

If any perſon, Gouernour, or other, doth chance to die, or goeth out of the Countrey, and hath no Heires, the Lands that they haue which are not bound to any tribute or cuſtome, ſhall be ours, euen as the mouables, and if the Lands doe owe any debts or legacies, or if they doe not owe any thing, after we are paid ours, of the remainder ſhall be done according to right.

The Rice-lands in euery Towne ſhall be let euery yeere by the voice of a Crier, to them that will giue moſt for them, according to their cuſtome, becauſe they are not proper of any one man, as the other lands are, and therefore they muſt be giuen to ſuch men as will giue moſt for them, being Inhabitants or dwellers of the Townes, and if any Towne hath, of, or by cuſtome of old time to giue the ſaid lands, or let them to any perſon or perſons out of the Towne, which ſhall giue more for them then the men of the ſaid Towne, it ſhall be accompliſhed according to their cuſtome.

The Gouernours of this Iland of Tiſoare, and of the other Ilands of Diuar, and Choran, and Iunba, are bound to giue among the Inhabiters of the Towne certaine * labourers, at their owne coſt and charges euery yeere for to clenſe the wall, and the bottome of the trenches of this Citie, of the Weedes and Buſhes that grow in them, or alſo for other needfull or haſtie ſeruices, which ſometimes doe chance as neede doth require.

* Called Bigarins.

If there chance to bee any demand or controuerſie in any of the ſaid Townes, touching any Lands or Tenements, they may not demand them by any witneſſes, but onely by writings, or bonds, or by the Townes Regiſter, and if there be no writings, nor bonds, and the Regiſter of the Towne ſhould chance to be loſt, there ſhall another bee taken of the demander of the ſaid lands, that by it he ſhall declare that which ſhall ſeeme conuenient for to know the truth. And concerning ſuch caſes, and other of like importance, they ſhall ſweare vpon a Pagode * (which is an image of the Deuill) which ſwearing is called Vſe or Cuſtome.

*. See my Pilg. l.5.c.9.§.2.

If any perſon ſhall lend another money vpon a bond, and by negligence he did not demand it, or it was not paide vnto him within the time prefixed in the ſaid bond, in ſuch manner that when he goeth to demand the ſaid money, the debtor doth denie it, in ſuch a caſe there ſhall bee an oath taken of him that hath the bond or obligation, that hee tell truth of the caſe how it ſtandeth, and he ſhall ſweare vpon the ſaid Pagode (which is an image of the Deuill.)

There may not be lent to any man aboue fiftie Tangas, without an obligation or bond, and for one perſon or perſons to demand another or others, to the quantitie of fiftie Tangas, the demander ſhall ſhew an obligation or witneſſes, and aboue the ſumme of fiftie Tangas, one cannot demand of another without an obligation, onely the parties may come to an agreement, putting it in arbitration of two ſuch ſworne men as they ſhall like, the which ſhall ſweare after they haue heard them, that which they ſhall find to be equitie and right.

They may giue money at intereſt in this manner, that for euery ſix Tangas, they may receiue euery moneth one Bargani, and no more, and if any perſon ſhall giue money at intereſt, and doth not demand the intereſt, and ſo much time doth paſſe without demanding it, that the intereſt doth amount to ſo much or more then the principall, although long time bee paſt, the Debtor ſhall not be bound to pay to the Creditor but the principall with the double.

The perſons that can bee witneſſe are theſe, to wit, a youth vnder the age of ſixteene yeares, nor a Drunkard, nor a Blinde man, nor a Dumbe man, nor a Moore, nor a Deafe man, nor a Ruffian, nor a Iourney-man, nor a Gardiner, nor a Gamſter, nor the Daughter of a Whore, nor an infamous perſon by Record, nor a man that is in hatred with another, cannot beare witneſſe againſt him. Notwithſtanding, theſe may beare witneſſe in matters of ſmall importance.

If a man doe chance to dye without a Sonne, although he hath a Father, or other heires aſcendant, the Inheritance commeth to vs, except the ſaid Father and Sonne deceaſed hath their Inheritance commixt, or both in one Title or Cuſtome: for then the Father doth inherit of the Sonne: and if any man hath foure Sonnes, or more or leſſe, they may diuide the Inheritance in his life time, except it be by his owne good will, and the Father contented with it, they ſhall diuide it brotherly as well in his life time, as after his death; and diuiding it in his life time, the Sonnes ſhall be bound to maintaine the Father with all things neceſſary, and any of theſe Brothers dying without Heires deſcendant, the diuiſion of the brethren ſhall be viewed, either at the death, or in the life time of their Father, if it be written in the Towne-booke; and being written in the ſaid Booke, then the inheritance of euery Brother ſo dying without an Heire deſcendant commeth to vs, and if he dyeth before the ſaid diuiſion was made or written, then the Inheritance commeth to the Brethren, if they haue no Father: and if the ſaid Inheritance be not of forreine Lands, and bound to the rent of the Towne, then the Inheritance of a man ſo deceaſed ſhall remaine vnto vs, as well as the mooueable without any contradiction. And if any of theſe Brethren become a Turke, a Moore, or a Iogue (which is like to the Gipſies in our Kingdomes) in ſuch manner, that he doth alienate himſelfe from the cuſtome of his houſe, and if the goods be diuided among them, his moueable goods ſhall remaine vnto vs, and his Land alſo, except it be forreine Lands, for then it ſhall be ſold by Obligation to pay the cuſtome due, and the remainder (the debts being firſt paid) ſhall remaine vnto vs, as here is contained.

Of men deceaſed, and how they inherit one after another.

* Which is a Gyptian.

At the time of the deceaſe of ſuch a man, whoſe inheritance appertaineth to vs in ſuch manner as is declared already, the Gouernours of the Towne ſhall bee bound, before they doe burie them, or burne them (according to their cuſtome) they ſhall make it knowne to our Officers, for to goe thither to take notice of the goods, and to ſet them downe in an Inuentorie, and make ſale of them by the voyce of a Cryer, the Gouernours of the Towne being preſent: and they ſhall be giuen to the Gouernours of the Towne, or to any of their kinred that ſhall giue moſt for them, and not to any perſon out of the Towne, or to any of their kinred, notwithſtanding if the neereſt Kinſman of the man deceaſed, or any other of his Kinſmen will haue the ſaid Inheritance, with the cuſtomes belonging to it, which the Gouernours doe pay, it ſhall be giuen him.

How the goods of men deceaſed, muſt bee ſold in the Towne to the Gouernours, and they ſhall pay the debts, being due and lawfull.

him. And ſuppoſe it ſhould happen that the Kinſmen of the deceaſed did not come at the ſelling of the ſaid goods, and within fiue daies after they ſhall know of it, ſhall requeſt the ſaid Inheritance to be giuen them for the quantitie it was ſold for, it ſhall bee giuen vnto them for the ſaid price. And the ſaid fiue daies being paſt, they not requiring it, it ſhall not after bee deliuered vnto them; but they that moſt ſhall giue for it, ſhall poſſeſſe it; and the duties that doe ariſe of the ſaid goods, ſhall be for vs, and it ſhall bee charged vpon our Factor, and there ſhall paſſe a Certificate in Farme vnto the Gouernours for their diſcharge, how it is charged vpon his account, and thence forward may they not bee conſtrained, or oppreſſed for it, and therefore the lawfull and due debts that the ſaid deceaſed doth owe, ſhall of the ſaid goods firſt be paid, and the reſt that remaineth, ſhall be for vs, as aforeſaid.

The moueables of any one deceaſed hauing no heires aſcendant, or deſcendant, (as is alreadie ſaid) are without any difference to remaine to our vſe, and they ſhall bee ſold to them that will giue moſt for them, either be he Kinſman or not, of the Towne, or out of it, notwithſtanding the debts ſhall firſt be paid, as already is ſpecified.

The Inheritance is in this manner; from the Father it commeth to the Sonne, and to the Grand-child, &c. and to the Father and Grand-father: ſo that there bee heires aſcendant and deſcendant, to whom the Inheritance doth appertaine, ſo that the ſaid Inheritance come by the Male, and by the Female no perſon doth inherit, no not the Daughter, but the Brother ſhall poſſeſſe her goods in ſuch manner, as is already ſpecified.

If any Thiefe ſhall goe to ſteale any Money, or any other thing, and is taken with the ſaid ſtealth, in ſuch caſe it ſhall be prouided according to our Ordinances and Lawes; and if the ſaid thing ſo ſtollen hath an Owner, it ſhall bee giuen him, although by their vſes and cuſtomes it belongeth vnto vs, and this, becauſe ſo it is our pleaſure, and wee thinke it good to ſhew them fauour, as we doe vnto them that well and faithfully doe vs ſeruice, as we hope they will doe.

If any treaſure or goods be found or diſcouered, it belongeth and appertaineth to vs.

If any man be married with two Wiues, and haue foure Sonnes of the one and of the other, or more or leſſe, although that they bee not in number equall, whenſoeuer the ſaid Sonnes ſhall diuide the ſaid goods of the Father, they ſhall diuide it in the middeſt, and the one Sonne ſhall haue as much as the other foure, and the goods of the Father and of the Mother, ſhall not bee inherited in the Daughter, as is aboue rehearſed.

The Officers placed by vs, and by our Gouernors and Captaines, and ouer-ſeers of our goods, ſhall not take any bribes, nor Lands, of, or at the hands of the Gouernours and Townes, neither may they vſe any Merchandize within the compaſſe of their Office. And I command, that if at any time they or he ſhall be attainted with the ſame fault, that which ſhall be found he hath taken, or by his meanes any loſſe was ſuſtained, hee ſhall repay it againe, and the ſaid quantitie ſo paid, ſhall remaine vnto vs.

Or a Caſſock: Pachorins a kind of Linnen cloath.

If the Gouernors ſhall lay, or exact any demands in the Townes for Cabaga, Pachorins, or whatſoeuer profits or commodities for themſelues, or for to giue to the Captaines, or chiefe Maſter of the Ports, or to any other Officers, or perſons whatſoeuer, euery Gouernour of a Towne ſo conuicted, ſhall pay the whole ſumme of that, which they haue leuied through all the Townes; the one halfe for them that ſhall accuſe them, and the other halfe for redemption of Captiues and the Scrieuners, or Notaries of the Townes, ſhall be contributaries with them, if the ſaid tribute, ſubſidie, or tyrannie was raiſed, or leuied with their conſent.

He that ſhall conuay, or purloyne any Merchandize, of whatſoeuer ſort it be, without paying to our Officers the duties belonging to vs as they are bound: they ſhall pay after the rate of eleuen for one, of that which he hath ſo conuayed and purloyned, being thereof conuicted.

At what time ſoeuer that the chiefe Maſter of the Ports, with the Clerkes or Clerke of his charge together, or euery one of himſelfe, ſhall goe to the Iland about matters concerning our affaires, or any one whom they ſhall ſend to the ſaid Iland, or to the Townes of the ſame, they ſhall giue them their meat according to their vſe and cuſtome.

And alſo to our Factor, or Officer of that office when they ſhall goe thither, to prouide in any matters concerning our affaires, or the Towne of the Iland.

Whatſoeuer Foot-man ſhall goe with any meſſage pertaining to our ſeruice, or to the recouerie of our rents, they ſhall giue him euery day that he ſhall be there without diſpatching, two meaſures of Rice for his meat, and one Leal for Betre, which is an hearb that they vſe to eate.

A piece of Money of three farthings. Betre, an herbe that they vſe to eate.

If any Gouernours of the Iland of Choran, or of the other Ilanders annexed to the ſame of Tiſoare ſhall runne away to the Turkes out of the Land, becauſe they would not pay the rent, as it is aforeſaid alreadie, it hath beene done, the which from hence-forward wee hope they will not doe, they ſhall loſe their moueable goods, and they ſhall fall vnto vs, and their Lands and Offices ſhall bee giuen vnto them they doe appertaine to, and will giue moſt for them, being bound to pay the rights and cuſtomes that the ſaid Lands are bound to pay, and that which they ſhall giue ouer-plus for the ſaid Lands and Gouernourſhip, their cuſtome reſerued, ſhall bee to our vſe.

When they doe make any feaſt or aſſembly, wherein they are to take Betre, (which is an Herbe) or Pachorins, the principall Gouernour of euery Towne ſhall take firſt the ſaid Betre, Pachorins, or Iewell, and after him the other Gouernours by degrees, according to their authorities and cuſtomes.

Which is a piece of linnen cloath.

When any aſſembly or conuocation is to be made, and the names of the Gouernors to be named in writing; firſt ſhall begin the name of the principall in honour, and conſequently one after another in their degrees.

When in the end of any Councell that they make, there is any difference or doubt in ſetting downe that which they haue agreed vpon, it ſhall bee written by the Scriuener, or Notarie of the Towne; and hauing written it, he ſhall ſay with an high voyce, which is called Nemo, that which they haue agreed vpon, and if there be no bodie to gaine-ſay that which he hath ſaid, and declared with an high voyce, it ſhall remaine in full force and power.

When the Gouernours of the Iland do meete for any councell, agreement, or decree, the ſaid decree ſhall be ſet downe by the Clerke of the Common Councell of all the Iland, and the voyce that ſhall be giuen at the end of the ſaid decree, called Nemo (as aforeſaid) ſhall bee ſpoken by the moſt principall Gouernour that will be accepted, the ſaid Nemo ſhall be made by the Scriuener or Notarie that writ it.

The Towne of Teleigaon hath the preheminence, for it muſt bee the firſt that beginneth to ſhare their Rice, and the Gouernours of it muſt come euery yeare with a ſheafe of Rice, to preſent it before the high Altar of the Church, and the Vicar with them muſt go to the Store-houſe where our Factor is, and he ſhall haue beſtowed foure Pardous in Pachorins, and hee ſhall caſt them about the neckes of the Gouernours, ordained among them, that they may receiue honour, and from thence forward the other Townes may reape, or ſhare their Rice as hereafter ſhall be declared.

Which is a piece of Mony worth 300. Reys.

Pachorins a piece of Linnen cloath.

In the time of Tillage, the firſt Rice-ground that ſhall be ploughed, and in the time of Harueſt that firſt ſhall be reaped, muſt be the chiefe Gouernours field of euery Towne, and after him any one that will may reape his: and the ſame order ſhall be vſed in the couering, or thatching of their houſes euery yeare, the which Gouernour of the Towne ſhall couer his houſe firſt with Palme-tree leaues, and after him all the other people of the ſame.

The Men or Women Dancers, that ſhall come to feaſt to a Towne, they ſhall goe firſt to feaſt at the houſe of the principall Gouernour; and when there be two in like honour, it ſtands in the choyce of the Dancers, to goe to which of them they thinke beſt: and theſe Gouernours ſo in one degree of honour, ſhall riſe together to the Betre, or to any other honour, when they are to receiue eſtate, with their armes a croſſe, the right arme vnder the left, becauſe that he that goeth on the right hand, doth take it for more honour, and becauſe another Gouernour might ſay, that he which did take the preſent with the left hand had the preheminence, becauſe it came ouer the right hand.

Which is an herbe they vſe to eate.

The Gouernours that are in Common; to wit, which is to take Betre, (which is an Herbe) or any other honour, haue no preheminence the one of the other; and they may ſell the ſaid honour of the Betre, or Pachorins, which are certaine Linnen cloaths) to any of the ſaid Gouernours of the ſaid Towne, euery time that the ſaid honour chanceth to bee giuen, and this for a certaine price, and it muſt be diuided in the Towne: and when there is no obiection to the contrary, then the Scriuener of the Towne receiueth the ſaid honour.

Toucha, a kind of Torch or Lampe carried before them. Andor is a Chaire.

No man may carrie Tocha, Andor, or Sombreiro, without our licenſe, or of our Gouernor, except it come to him by Inheritance from his Fathers, and thoſe to whom we or our ſaid Gouernor ſhall giue the ſaid licenſe for deſert of his ſeruices, it ſhall bee giuen in two ſorts; the one, that they may carrie the ſaid Sombreiro and Andor with his Foot-men, and Tocha with the Oyle at their owne charge; and the other is, that hee doe receiue of vs the ſaid Sombreiro with the ſaid Foot-men, and the Oyle paid at our charges, and the ſaid light alſo may bee giuen without the ſhadow, and the ſhadow without the ſaid light or Tocha, euery thing by it ſelfe, or altogether in any of the manners aboue ſpecified. Therefore alſo we notifie it, as well to our Captaine Generall, and Gouernour of theſe parts of India, which now is, or hereafter ſhall bee: and alſo to the Captaines of this Citie, Iudges, Iuſtices, and Officers of the ſame, and to euery other perſon or perſons, to whom this our Letter ſhall be ſhewen, and the knowledge of it doth appertaine: We command, that in all things they keepe and fulfill the ſame, and cauſe it to bee kept and fulfilled, as in it is contained, for our meaning is the ſame. Giuen in the Citie of Goa, the ſixteenth of September, the King commanded it by Alfonſo Mexia, Ouer-ſeer of the goods in theſe parts of India, and Anthonie de Campo did write it, in the yeare of 1526. Alfonſo Mexia.

Don Philip by the Grace of God, King of Portugall, and of the Algarues, on this ſide and that ſide the Sea in Africa, Lord of Guinea, and of the Conqueſt, Nauigation and Trafficke of Æthiopia, Perſia, and India, &c. Be it knowne to you, that I ſeeing how much the good gouernment, and preſeruing of my Eſtates in thoſe parts of India, doth import, and Iuſtice to be truly adminiſtred in them to my Subiects and Vaſſals, and deſiring that in my time it may bee done with that integritie, libertie and breuitie that thereunto belongeth; I thought meete to ſend or prouide after I had ſucceeded in the Crowne of thoſe Kingdoms, Perſons of conſcience and learning, to the moſt of the Fortreſſes of thoſe parts, that ſhould adminiſter it, to the which we gaue power and authoritie according to their gouernments or charges. And being now enformed that in the Citie of Goa, principall and head of the ſaid Eſtates, the Kings my Predeceſſors of glorious memory, did ordayne there ſhould bee an houſe of Iuſtice, or place of hearing, wherein ſome Officers by them choſen (as in a ſupreme Tribunall) ſhould determine the Cauſes, giuing them for that purpoſe at ſundry times diuers charges, the which for the varietie of matters ought to be reformed, and I being willing in dutie to continue with the ſame intent, and command to prouide in thoſe Cauſes, which at this preſent were moſt neceſſarie for the good of the ſaid Houſe, commanded for that effect, learned men of my Counſell, and of experience that they ſhould determine what might be done in that caſe, as well in the ordering and gouerning of the ſaid Houſe, as in the multiplying of the Miniſters belonging to it, that matters of Iuſtice might with more eaſe and facilitie be proſecuted, and hauing heard their opinions, and neceſſary diligences being vſed, and hauing giuen mee relation of all things and account, I thought good to prouide for them in manner and forme following.

As Weſtminſter Hall.

A Copie of the order that the Vice-roy of the Eſtate of India ſhall hold in matters of Iuſtice, as alſo of the other Magiſtrates, in the diuers places holden by the Portugals in India.

THe Vice-roy ſhall goe to the houſe of Iuſtice, the times that he thinketh good, and ſhal giue no voyce, nor aſſigne or pronounce any ſentences, but he ſhall onely vſe the offices that the chiefe Iudge doth vſe in the Court of Requeſts, and of the reſt which in extraordinary matters is granted vnto him in all things whereunto his charge may bee applyed.

There ſhall be in the ſaid Houſe or Court ten Officers, to wit, one Chancellour, the which ſhall alſo ſerue for a Iudge of the Chancerie: one chiefe Iudge of facts and cauſes Criminall: one chiefe Iudge of matters or cauſes Ciuill, the which notwithſtanding ſhall ſerue for Iudges in matters of complaint, wherein any Iudge of our eſtate, goods, or reuenues hath not giuen ſentence, one Attorney for cauſes touching the Crowne goods, or reuenues: and one Prometor of Iuſtice, the which ſhall ſerue alſo for a Iudge of complaints, and wrongs in thoſe caſes wherein he is not Attorney: one chiefe Iudge for Wills and Teſtaments, the which ſhall ſerue alſo for a Iudge of Complaints, in ſuch caſes as he hath not giuen ſentence.

Or a Preferrer of Bills and Supplications.

Alſo there ſhall be in the ſaid houſe three extraordinarie Iudges, the which ſhall ſerue in abſence, and for any hindrance of the ſaid Iudges of complaints aboue named, and for the other Offices. And this by commiſſion of the Vice-roy, and in his abſence of the Chancellor, or of the moſt ancient Iudge, which doth ſerue himſelfe as Chancellor, when the Chancellor himſelfe is abſent, and they ſhall helpe the Iudges that ſit on the Bench to diſpatch the cauſes then depending, and not in any matter aforetime paſt, &c.

Euery day before they ſit or diſpatch any matters, there ſhall a Maſſe be ſaid by a Chaplaine, which the Vice-roy ſhall chooſe for that purpoſe, and he ſhall be paid at the charges and expences of the ſaid houſe, and the Maſſe being ended, they ſhall beginne to diſpatch ſuch matters as ſhall be brought vnto them, and they ſhall be foure houres at the leaſt in diſpatching matters, by an houre-glaſſe, which ſhall ſtand vpon the Table where the Vice-roy doth ſit.

The Iudges, as well in caſes Ciuill as Criminall, ſhall haue the ſame authoritie, and ſhall keepe the ſame order that is giuen vnto them, whereof the Iudges of the Court of Requeſts doe alſo vſe, and of thoſe ſentences which by mine Ordinances I command account be giuen vnto mee before they be put in execution, the ſaid account ſhall be giuen to the Vice-roy, if hee haue not beene preſent at iudgment, or if he be not abſent from the Citie of Goa: for if he be abſent, the account ſhall be giuen vnto him that ruleth in his ſtead, and when there is any iudgement Criminall of Importance, as is to put ſome perſon of qualitie to death, or other iudgement of importance in Ciuill caſes, execution ſhall not be made without giuing account to the Vice-roy thereof, although he be abſent, or out of the Citie.

The Vice-roy and Iudges may in the houſe of Iuſtice ſupply the defects, and annihilating of the acts, when he ſhall thinke that the cauſe doth require it, for the performing of Iuſtice.

And the ſaid Iudges, while they are in the ſaid houſe executing their Offices with the Vice-roy, ſhall be ſet in plaine Chayres, and the Vice-roy ſhall preſently command them to be couered, and not to ſit bare-headed.

The ſaid Iudges ſhall not enter into the ſaid houſe with any weapons, neither ſhall they weare any garments of colour, but they ſhall be apparelled in long blacke garments, in ſuch manner as it may repreſent the Authority they haue.

The Vice-roy ſhall haue a particular to command the Penſions to be payd to the ſaid Iudges at their due times, in ſuch manner as they may bee effectually payd euery quarter, without any delay to the contrarie, and their payment ſhall be giuen or payd vnto them in the ſaid houſe, at the end of euery quarter.

The Bills of pardons, Bills of aſſurance, legitimations, and ſuppliances of ages, ſhall be giuen to the Vice-roy being in the ſaid houſe, and he with the ſaid Iudges ſhall diſpatch them, and they ſhall be ſuch as he for that purpoſe ſhall chooſe, alwayes the Chancellor being one of them, if he be preſent, with the Iudge of the cauſe, and to the diſpatches of the ſaid Petitions, the ſaid Iudges with the Vice-roy ſhall ſet their hands, and the Bills ſhall paſſe in my name, with the accuſtomed cauſes, and they ſhall be ſigned by the Vice-roy, and no Bill of pardon ſhall be taken without pardon of the party offended, and in the diſpatches of the ſaid cauſes they ſhall alwayes haue a due regard and conſideration.

And becauſe of the eaſie granting of pardons, which the Vice-roy in thoſe parts doth ordinarily grant, hath ſprung that the faults are not puniſhed, and the boldneſſe to commit new hath encreaſed; Wee thought it meet and conuenient, that no pardons ſhould bee granted in matters of Apoſtacy, Sodomie, falſe coyning, treacherous murder, falſhood in the crime of any of the Heads, Læſæ Maieſtatis, wounding, or killing of any Iudge or Iuſtice, or of a Captaine of any Fortreſſe, the ſlaughter of a Maior, or Bayliffe, or any other Officer of Iuſtice, except any cauſe ſo vrgent doth concurre, that the granting of the ſaid pardon of the ſaid caſes, doth concerne the preſeruation of the eſtate of India: then the cauſes ſhall be communicated with the ſaid Iudges, as is already declared, and when any of theſe caſes ſo excepted ſhall happen, the Vice-roy ſhall take the ſaid caſes particularly in memorie, and ſhall giue me account of them in his Letters, by the firſt Fleet after the pardon were granted, with the cauſes that moued them to pardon ſuch a fault.

The ſaid Vice-roy from hence forward ſhall not grant any Warrant, that the money of Orphans ſhall be giuen to any Gentleman, or Captaine of any Fortreſſe, nor to any other perſons which are not Merchants, for the many inconueniences that thereof doe proceed.

The Vice-roy of India in the prouiding of publike Offices of Iuſtice in thoſe parts, ſhall haue a great care to prouide in my ſeruants or any other perſons, bene meritos, and apt for the ſaid Offices, preferring alwayes my ſeruants, when they haue equall deſerts with the other, and he ſhall paſſe no Warrant for any Captaihe of a Fortreſſe, that he may prouide the ſaid Offices that are voyde, for the great inconueniences that thereof doth ariſe, and becauſe it is prouided in mine Ordinances, how the Offices of the ſaid charges muſt be prouided by the Iuſtices, and Commiſſioners of thoſe Countries, in whoſe place being abſent, the Learned men that I haue ſent for Iudges of the Fortreſſes to thoſe parts doe remayne.

The ſaid Vice-roy in the Warrants of Iuſtice, or of goods that he paſſeth, ſhall not command in an Edict, that they may not paſſe by the Chancerie, for the many inconueniences that thereof doth ariſe, and being paſſed in any other forme, they ſhall be of no force, and the perſons to whom they ſhall be directed, ſhall not keepe nor conceale them, except the Warrants be of ſecreſie, or of matters of importance, the which paſſing by the Chancerie would take no effect; and if any Warrant that the Vice-roy doth grant, doe come with reſtraint or ſeizure whatſoeuer, the ſaid reſtraint or ſeizure ſhall be diſpatched ordinarily in the houſe of Iuſtice, or Hall aboue named, by the Iudges to whom it doth appertaine.

All the Warrants or Letters that the Vice-roy maketh, ſhall be written or ſubſcribed by the Secretarie of the eſtate of India, to whom it pertayneth, and not to any other perſon except he ſupply the place of a Secretarie, becauſe there is none prouided by me for that effect.

And I being willing to prouide in this matter. It is my wil & pleaſure that the Commiſſioners of the Fortreſſe of Soſola, Moſambique, Ormus, Malaca, and Macao, and in Bengala before they come to, or enter in their Offices, that euery one of them doe giue aſſurance of fiue thouſand Cruzadoes, and the other Commiſſioners of the ſaid Fortreſſes or Townes, ſhall giue euery one aſſurance of two thouſand Cruzadoes.

There ſhall be in the Court of the chiefe Commiſſioner, a Cheſt with three Keyes, of the which the ſaid chiefe Commiſſioner ſhall haue one, and the moſt ancient Scriuener or Clarke of his Court another, and the Treaſurer of the ſaid Court ſhall haue the other, in the which all the money of the men deceaſed which in the ſaid parts is to be had, ſhall be depoſited, and it ſhall be ſet downe, or entred into a Booke, with the number or ſumme thereof, according to the order of the Decree to that Caſe appertayning, the which Booke ſhall alſo be layd in the ſame Cheſt, the which ſhall not be opened, but when any Money is to be put therein, and it ſhall bee entred in the ſaid Booke, all the three Officers being preſent, aſwell at the receit as at the expences of the ſaid money, and the ſaid money which in the ſaid Cheſt ſhall be depoſited, and all the reſt which doth appertaine to the ſaid Orphans or men deceaſed, the ſaid chiefe Commiſſioner ſhall not conſent to the taking out of the Cheſt, neither that it be lent to any perſon, but only it ſhall bee ſent vnto this Realme, by Letters of exchange as the cuſtome is, or hee ſhall command it to be deliuered in India, to the parties to whom by right it doth belong or appertaine.

Viz. of Portugal

And becauſe I am enformed that ſome perſons dying, to whom there is no certaine knowne, the Vice-Royes doe giue the goods of the ſaid men deceaſed to ſome perſons, whereof there doth ariſe many inconueniences, and I being willing to prouide in the ſaid caſe, doe thinke it meete, and doe command that from hence-forward the ſaid Vice-Royes ſhall not giue the ſaid goods to any perſon with aſſurance or without, and that they ſhall command them to be kept in good ſafeguard, according to the order of mine owne goods, ſending them to the Kingdome directed to the Treaſurer of the Receit of the Captiues, according to the order giuen in this Caſe, that from his hand it may bee giuen to whom it doth appertaine, or to remayne in the Houſe of Receit, hauing no Heires according to the Decree.

The ſaid chiefe Commiſſioner ſhall haue a particular care to know when the ſhippes of this Realme ſhall come to the Citie of Goa, and alſo of the other ſhips, that come to the ſaid Citie from other parts of the Eſtate of India, and if there dyed in them any perſons, and the order that was kept and obſerued in the making of the Inuentory of their goods, cauſing it all to be ſet in good ſafeguard according to his authoritie, and the dutie of his Office.

And likewiſe in the ſame manner, he ſhall haue a particular care to ſend euery yeare by Letter of Exchange in the ſaid ſhips of this Kingdome, all the money of the ſaid deceaſed men, that is in his Office directed to the Officers to whom it appertayneth to bee deliuered by vertue of my Decrees, that in this Citie it may be giuen, and deliuered to the perſons to whom of right it doth appertaine.

And alſo he ſhall haue a ſpeciall care to make a diſcharge of the generall Regiſter of India, of the wages that the ſaid men ſo deceaſed did receiue, becauſe that alſo there may bee a note ſet in their Toll, or Regiſter, how they are dead, and of the day wherein they dyed, that they may receiue no more wages for them of my goods from that day, and to doe this, hee ſhall peruſe the ſaid Regiſter ſome dayes, that he ſhall thinke conuenient for to doe the ſaid diligences, becauſe they doe import very much to my ſeruice, and for this cauſe I command the Scriueners or Clerkes of the ſaid generall Check-roll of India, to bee very diligent, and to make all theſe Diſcharges, and to ſet Notes in the Check-rolls of the ſaid men deceaſed, as by the order of the ſaid Regiſter it is commanded them.

Of the Interlocutorie Sentences, whereof by my Ordinances may bee appealed by Petition, or by a Bill of Complaint, the parties may according to the forme of my Ordinances and Decrees appeale to the Court of Relation, and the Appeales that doe paſſe before the Iudges of the Orphans of the Citie of Goa, and fiue leagues round about the ſame, ſhall goe directly to the Court of Relation, according to the Commandement that I commanded in the new reformation of Iuſtice, and the ſaid Commiſſioner ſhall euery three yeares giue and yeeld an account for the importance that belongeth to the knowing how they doe ſerue and proceed in their Offices, and charges according to Equitie and Iuſtice.

A note of the Keeper, Receiuer, and Diſtributers charges belonging to the Court of Relation.

And becauſe it is conuenient that there be a man that haue care of the Deeds, Petitions, & of the other writings, that do remain in the ſaid houſe where the ſaid Court is kept, and alſo of the Tables, and order of the ſaid houſe; I think it meet, and do command that from hence-forward a man of truſt, and confidence be Keeper of the ſaid houſe, ſuch as the Vice-Roy ſhal think meet for that purpoſe, the which alſo ſhal be Diſtributor of all Deeds, aſwel Criminal as Ciuil, that ſhall come to the ſaid houſe of Relation, according to that order which by mine Ordinances and Decrees I haue giuen to the Diſtributor of the Court of Requeſts, and he ſhall vſe that order which I haue giuen to the Porter of the ſaid houſe, and the ſaid Keeper ſhall alſo ſerue for Receiuer of money for condemnations, for the expences of the ſaid houſe, for the which Receit he ſhall giue account euery yeare, the which acconnt ſhall be taken of him by one particular Iudge, whom the Vice-Roy ſhall nominate for that purpoſe, and the Vice-Roy ſhall nominate the perſon that ſhall ſerue in this Office, that I may confirme the ſame, and command a Patent to be made to the ſaid perſon during his life.

And it is my wil and pleaſure, and I do command that all that which is contayned in this Decree, be fully and wholy executed, as in it is contayned, and that no other be vſed, whatſoeuer Lawes, Decrees, Warrants, Patents, Vſes, and Cuſtomes to the contrarie notwithſtanding, the which ſhall be written in a Booke, the which ſhall bee alwayes vpon the Table in the ſaid houſe of Relation, and the ſame ſhall be put in a Cheſt, which ſhall bee in the ſaid houſe in very good keeping:

A note of the authoritie belonging to the Iudge of the Citie of Goa. Or in matters of late time.

The Iudge of the Citie of Goa, ſhall take notice in the ſaid Citie, and within the libertie thereof, by Auſaon noua, of Caſes Ciuill and Criminall, which eſpecially doth not appertaine to any other Iudgement, and he ſhall grant an Appeale in thoſe Caſes, that are not contayned within his authoritie directly to the houſe or Court of Relation.

And he ſhall take no notice of the Appeales and Complaints that doe paſſe before the ordinary Iudges of the ſaid Citie, and the bounds thereof, foraſmuch as I haue prouided that the ſaid Appeales ſhould goe directly to the houſe or Court of Relation.

Which is fiue pound ſterling. Which is ſeuen pound ten ſhillings ſterling.

The ſaid Iudge ſhall haue authoritie in Landed goods, to the ſumme of eight thouſand Reys; and in moueable goods, to the ſumme of twelue thouſand Reys.

And in all the reſt, which in this prouiſion is not declared, hee ſhall vſe the authoritie that the Iuſtices of Criminall and Ciuill Caſes of the Citie of Liſbon, doe vſe according to the Decree and Law of the Reformation of Iuſtice.

And he ſhall only vſe this order, and not that which is giuen to the Licentiate, George Monteyro, nor of any other.

The Iudge of the Orphans of the Citie of Goa, ſhall be a learned man, and hee ſhall vſe in all matters that order and rule, which by my Ordinances is giuen in the Title of the Iudges of the Orphans, and hee ſhall beare a white Rodde, as the Iudges of the Orphans of the * Kingdome doe beare.

* To wit of Portugall.

And of the Sentences that the ſaid Iudge doth giue, which are not contayned within his authoritie, there ſhall be an Appeale to the Iudges of the Court of Relation, and of the complaints which doe paſſe before the ſaid Iudge of the Orphans, the parties may appeale to the Court of Relation, according to the order of the new Law made for the reformation of Iuſtice.

Which is ſixe pound fiue ſhillings ſterling. Which is three pound fifteene ſhillings ſterling.

And the ſaid Iudge of the Orphans of the Citie of Goa, ſhall haue authoritie to iudge in matters touching moueable goods to the ſumme of tenne thouſand Reys, and in landed goods ſixe thouſand Reys.

The Copie of the rule or authoritie of the Learned Iudges of Mazambique, Ormus, Dyo, Malaqua, Damaon, Bazam and Chaul. Or in matter of later time.

The ſaid Iudges ſhall take notice in the places of their Iuriſdiction by Auſaon noua, of all the Cauſes, Ciuill and Criminall, and the Ciuill Cauſes which are proceſſed in their Court or Office, they ſhall iudge definitiuely by themſelues alone, giuing Appeales in thoſe Caſes which are not contayned in their authoritie to the Court of Relation, and the Bils of complaint, or Bils of teſtimonie that ſhall paſſe before them, of the Interlocutorie Sentences, whereof by authoritie of my Ordinances may bee appealed, ſhall bee paſt in the Court of Relation, and not before any chiefe Iudge as hitherto it hath beene vſed.

And the ſaid Iudges ſhall proceſſe the Criminall Caſes, till they doe conclude them by themſelues alone, and when they are concluded, they ſhall giue knowledge to the Captaines, for to appoint a day or houre certaine, wherein they may meete in the Chamber-houſe of the Citie, that they may giue a diſpatch in them, and in thoſe places where there is no ſuch Chamber, the Iudges ſhall meete the Captaines in the Fortreſſes, or Caſtles, and the ſaid Captaine being agreed with the Iudge, the Sentence ſhall be written by the Iudge, whereunto both ſhall ſet their hands, in the which ſhall be vſed due execution, if it be contayned within his authoritie, and being of ſundry opinions, the ſentence ſhall not paſſe, and they ſhal take a third man vnto them, the which ſhall be the Ouer-ſeer of the Kings goods, and if hee be not in place, then the Factor of the ſaid Fortreſſe. And if it chance that the Ouer-ſeer of the goods, nor the Factor for ſome hinderance cannot be preſent, then ſhall ſerue in their place, the eldeſt ordinary Iudge that doth ſerue that yeare, and according to that which two perſons ſhall agree vpon, the Sentence ſhall be written, whereat all three ſhall ſet their hands, that due execution ſhall bee vſed according to the Order aboue rehearſed.

And the Criminall Caſes that are not contayned within the compaſſe of the authoritie of the ſaid ordinary Iudges, they ſhall diſpatch them by themſelues alone, giuing an Appeale, according to the tenour of my Ordinances to the Court of Relation, where the chiefe Iudge of Criminall Caſes ſhall diſpatch them according to Iuſtice.

And the ſaid Iudges ſhall take notice of the Appeales that doe paſſe before the ordinary Iudges, of Cities and Fortreſſes where they are Iudges, and ſhall diſpatch them by themſelues alone, whereof they ſhall giue an Appeale to the Court of Relation, in ſuch Caſes as doe not contayne within their authoritie.

And the ſaid Iudges ſhall take knowledge of the Appeales of the ordinary Iudges, as the Iuſtices of the Borders may doe, and they may alſo plead ſuch Caſes, as the ſaid Iuſtices by the authoritie of their Offices may plead, and in all the reſt, they ſhall vſe the Orders that the Iuſtices of the Borders doe vſe, in Caſes wherein they may be applyed.

Alſo they may paſſe Letters of Protection, in ſuch caſes, as the Iuſtices of the Borders may paſſe them, and the Captaines of the Fortreſſes may not paſſe or grant them, neither may they intermeddle in the ſame by no manner of meanes, and the ſaid Iudges ſhall not grant any Letter of Protection in caſes of death, nor in other caſes which are reſerued for the chiefe Iudge of Criminall caſes, which vſeth the authoritie of the Corrigidor of the Court, except the Iudges of Maſambique, Ormus, Malaca, Moluco, and Macao, for theſe may paſſe Schedules, or Bils of Securitie, a Protection in all caſes, and in thoſe wherein the Corrigidor of the Court doth paſſe, or grant them in the Court of Relation according to his authoritie, the ſaid Iudges ſhall paſſe them with the opinion of the Captayne, and the Ouer-ſeer of the Kings goods together, and if there be no Ouer-ſeer of the goods, they ſhall diſpatch them with the Factor, and if it chanceth ſo that neither the Ouer-ſeer nor the Factor can be there, by ſome let or hinderance, then the moſt ancient ordinary Iudge that doth ſerue that yeare, ſhall be in their ſtead, and it ſhall be ſufficient that two of them doe agree in the granting or denying the ſaid Letters of Protection, and the Bils of Controuerſie, of thoſe perſons to whom they doe paſſe or grant the ſaid Letters of Protection ſhall paſſe before the ſaid Iudges, the which thus to bee done, I thinke it meete and conuenient, hauing a reſpect to the diſtance, that is, from theſe parts, to the Citie of Goa, where the Court of Relation is, and the great vexation that the parties would receiue in going to demand Iuſtice to places ſo diſtant and farre.

The ſaid Iudges ſhall haue authoritie in Criminall caſes, to the quantitie of fortie thouſand Reys in moueable goods, and in Landed goods to the quantitie of thirtie thouſand Reys, and the Iudges of the Fortreſſes of Moſambique, Ormus, Malaca, Moluco, and Macao, ſhall haue authoritie in the ſaid Caſes to the quantitie of eightie thouſand Reys in moueable goods, and Landed goods, ſeuentie thouſand Reys, and of thoſe caſes which ſhall ſurmount the ſaid ſumme, they ſhall appeale to the Court of Relation, becauſe they are not contayned within their authoritie.

Which is twentie fiue pound ſterling.

Which is ſixteene pound fifteene ſhillings ſterling.

Which is fiftie pound ſterling.

Which is forty three pound fifteene ſhillings ſterling.

And the ſaid Iudges with the Captaines ſhall haue that authoritie in Criminall caſes, which the Captaynes of my Townes or Caſtles, on the other ſide the Sea haue, as is declared in the order of the twentieth Booke tituled 27. aſwell ouer the Portugals, as ouer the men of that Countrey, and the Sentences that they ſhall giue in thoſe caſes which are contayned within their authoritie, according to this Decree, and the ſaid Ordinance ſhall bee executed effectually according to Iuſtice.

And if any caſe contayned in the ſaid Ordinance do happen or chance, ſo that by the authority of the ſame, the ſaid Iudges haue commiſſion to proſecute it vnto death, they ſhall not execute thoſe Sentences, which in any of the ſaid caſes they do pronounce, if the parties ſo condemned be Eſquires, or Gentlemen of my houſhold, or of greater qualitie: for before they doe execute the ſaid Sentences, they ſhall make it knowne to the Vice-Roy, that with his opinion execution may be giuen to the ſaid Sentences.

And the ſaid Iudges ſhall not apprehend any perſon for any complaints of whatſoeuer qualitie they be of, without Information of Witneſſes, according to the new Law of Reformation of Iuſtice, the which Law they ſhall in this and in all other matters accompliſh according to the tenure thereof.

They ſhall keepe the Court dayes that the Iuſtices of the Borders are bound to keepe, and this in the publike accuſtomed places, where the Iuſtices are wont to keepe them, and they ſhall not keepe them in their houſes.

And the ſaid Iudges ſhall examine all ſuch matters, as the Iuſtices of the Borders are bound to examine, by the authoritie of my Ordinances, Lawes, and Decrees of theſe Kingdomes vnder the penalties in them declared, in ſuch caſes as they may be applyed vnto.

They may alſo prouide the places for the Officers belonging to the Iuſtices which are void, according to the order of the Decree, vntill the Vice-Royes doe prouide them, and the Captaynes may in no wiſe prouide them, the which Seruices or Places ſhall bee prouided to my Seruants, or to other well deſeruing perſons, and their deſerts beeing equall, my Seruants ſhall be preferred.

And the ſaid Iudges ſhall bee bound to command euery one of the Scriueners, or Clerkes of their Court to make a Booke wherein they may write all the caſes as well Ciuill as Criminall, and other Bils of Appeale or Complaint, and all other Matters whereof the ſaid Iudges doth take notice, and euery one of them ſetting downe that which is committed to his charge only, as well of thoſe things which they ſhall write in proceſſe for the obſeruing of Iuſtice, as of theſe Matters that are betweene partie and partie.

And euery one of the ſaid Iudges ſhall haue a Booke noted and ſigned by them, wherein they may cauſe all the forfeitures of money that are applyed to the expences of Iuſtice, or to any other place according to the order of the Decree in that caſe prouided.

And the ſaid Iudges may ſet penalties, and condemne in them to the quantitie of two thouſand Reys, for the charges of the ſaid Iuſtice, without any Appeale or Complaint of the ſaid Sentence. The which expences ſhall bee made by the commandement of the ſaid Iudges, and not of the Captaines, and in the Accounts or Reſidencies that the Iudges doe giue, there ſhall an Account bee taken of them of the ſaid money, and of the expences of the ſaid Forfeitures, that notice may be had, if they haue commanded the ſaid Forfeitures to be deliuered to thoſe places or parties whereunto they were applyed, and the expences which by their commandement were made, if they were well and lawfully commanded.

And the ſaid Iudges may not bee impriſoned nor arreſted during the time of their charges, for any Matter whatſoeuer, Criminall or Ciuill, except it bee by the commandement of the Vice-Roy, or the Court of Relation.

And becauſe it importeth much to the keeping of good Iuſtice, and the Adminiſtration thereof, that the ſaid Iudges haue the Authoritie, that belongeth to the charges whereof wee haue giuen them Commiſſion, and becauſe that they beeing ſubiect to the Captaynes, did ariſe many inconueniences, and they were oppreſſed in ſuch manner, that they could not performe their Duties with that Integritie, and libertie that belongeth to the Seruice of God, and mine; And I beeing willing to prouide in this Caſe, doe thinke it meete, and doe command that the ſaid Captaynes may haue no Iuriſdiction, nor any Superioritie ouer the ſaid Iudges, and that they doe not intermeddle with any thing pertayning to their Offices or charges, any thing to the contrarie notwithſtanding.

And if the ſaid Iudges doe commit any crimes or exceſſes, ſo that it ſeemes to the Captaynes that they ought to aduertize the Vice-Roy thereof, they ſhall doe it by their Letters, the which the Vice-Roy ſhall command to be peruſed in the Court of Relation, that they may proceed againſt them according to Iuſtice.

And the ſaid Iudges ſhall take ſuch Fees for their Aſſignements as the Iuſtices of the Borders may take, by the Authoritie of their Offices, and according to my Ordinances.

And when the ſaid Iudges ſhall bee abſent, or hindered, ſo that by themſelues they cannot ſerue, they may nominate a perſon to ſerue in their place, and if hee chance to dye, after hee hath nominated, the perſon ſo nominated ſhall ſerue vntill the Vice-Roy doe prouide another, and if hee dyeth without nominating any perſon to ſerue in his place, the Factour of the Kings Reuenues ſhall ſerue the place, the which perſons ſhall ſerue the ſame place, all the time that the Vice-Roy doth not nominate or prouide, as it is alreadie declared, and the Vice-Roy ſhall prouide a man of Learning and Qualitie, in whom the ſaid charge may well bee employed, the which perſons in all things ſhall vſe the Order of this Decree.

And it is my will and pleaſure that touching the Suſpitions that ſhall bee layd to the ſaid Iudges in ſuch Caſes as by reaſon of their Offices they may take notice of, they ſhall keepe this Order following, to wit, when any Suſpition ſhall bee intended againſt them by any partie of what Degree or Qualitie ſoeuer he be, the Iudge not yeelding himſelfe guiltie of the Suſpition, the Acts thereof ſhall be committed to the ancienteſt ordinary Iudge that ſerued the yeare before, the which Iudge ſhall determine of the ſame, according to Iuſtice, and the ſaid Iudge ſhall proceed alwayes in the cauſe wherein the ſaid Suſpition was layd againſt him, vntill it be finally determined, taking to himſelfe for an Adiunct, one of the Iuſtices of that preſent yeare, which doe ſerue in the ſaid Fortreſſe or Garriſon where hee is Iudge, not beeing ſuſpected, but if hee bee, hee ſhall take another Iuſtice, and beeing both ſuſpected, hee ſhall take the ancienteſt Alderman, and the ſame beeing ſo, hee ſhall take the ſecond, and if hee bee ſuſpected, hee ſhall take the third, to the which no ſuſpition can bee layd, and the Acts that they two ſhall make, It is my will and pleaſure that they bee in force and power, as if the ſuſpition had not beene layd vnto the ſaid Iudge, and beeing iudged that hee is not ſuſpectiue, hee alone ſhall proceed in the Caſe, as hee ſhould haue done it, if the ſuſpition had not beene intended againſt him. And being iudged to bee ſuſpectiue, in ſuch a Caſe hee ſhall proceed no further, and there ſhall be a Iudge ſet in his place, that may take notice of the ſaid Caſe according to the forme of my Ordinances.

And it is alſo my will and pleaſure, that when a ſuſpition is thus laid to the ſaid Iudges, in whatſoeuer caſes, as well Criminall as Ciuill; and the partie that doth lay the ſaid ſuſpition, is not contented with his owne depoſition, but is willing to giue other proofe; hee ſhall depoſite foure Cruzados before any hearing be giuen to the proofe, the which he ſhall forfeit to the poore Priſoners of the Iayle of that Garriſon where he ſerueth, if it be iudged that the ſaid Iudge is not guiltie of the ſaid ſuſpition.

Which is one pound ſterling

The ſaid Iudges ſhall haue 200000. Reys ordinarie euery yeare paid, in the Factorſhips of the Garriſons where they doe ſerue by the Factors thereof, at euery quarter of the yeare, the which the Factors ſhall pay them of the firſt Money they receiue, in ſuch ſort, that they alwaies bee well paid, and this with a Certificate of the Scriuener or Clerke of his charge, how he hath ſerued the time of the quarter, and with the ſaid Certificate, and the Acquittance of euery one of the Iudges, the Money for the ſaid quarteredges, ſhall be receiued in account of the ſaid Factors that ſhall pay it them, and the Copy of this Chapter ſhall be regiſtred in the Office of the ſaid Factors, by the Clerke of the ſaid Office, the which Ordinarie the learned Iudges ſhall onely receiue.

There follow like Rules for the Iudge of Macao, and the Kingdome of China, which for breuitie I haue omitted.

And now I might eaſily haue obtayned this Vice-royes Warrant to the Captaine of the Forts of Moſambique and Sofala, running after their manner, It is my Will and Pleaſure, that &c. for my entertainment: but it is my will and pleaſure rather (as like will to like) to take a Preacher and Prieſt along with me, that though we agree not otherwiſe in Doctrine, yet as Trauellers we wil reſtraine our zeale, and without feare of Inquiſition, march like good Fellowes together: yea, with Ieſuites after, without feare of Treaſon. Onely firſt I will preſent vnto you a Letter of a Spaniſh Embaſſador, relating the Antiquities of Perſepolis, and ſome things by him obſerued in Perſia.

CHAP. XI.

A Letter from Don Garcia Silva Figveroa Embaſſador from Philip the Third King of Spaine to the Perſian, written at Spahan, or Hiſpahan, Anno 1619. to the Marqueſſe of Bedmar, tonchiug matters of Perſia.

W*Earied with trauelling both by Sea and Land, but otherwiſe well, I came at length from* Ormuz into Petſia. Which hauing wandred ouer; at the Kings appointment, I went to Hiſpahan : where I endure a tedious irkeſome delay, being euen tyred with ſo vnpleaſant a life, as I here leade. For whatſoeuer Writers report of that great and ancient Monarchie of the Achæmenides*, this is mine opinion; That there is nothing in all this Countrey to be found ſo good, but that it comes ſhort of the leaſt commoditie in our* Europe. And beſides that euery thing here is ſo croſſe to our faſhions, that I am without all conuerſe with men; here are not ſo much as any bookes (the reading whereof might ſomewhat refreſh a mans minde in ſo great ſolitarineſſe) except a few Pamphlets intreatiug of holy Confeſſion, and Navarr's Summes, which the Monkes of Saint Auguſtine vſe.

Hiſpahan.

Hiſpahan is the nobleſt Citie of this Kingdome: and, though it lye but in one and thirtie degrees and a halfe of Northerly latitude; yet, by reaſon of the ſubtile piercing ayre, the cold is ſharper, then by the climate or ſituation one would imagine. Now, in all this Kingdome you can ſcarſe ſee any print of Antiquitie: all the houſes being built of vnburned bricke, or earth rammed vp betweene two boards; too ſlight ſtuffe to laſt many dayes, much leſſe many yeeres.

No antiquities.

Notwithſtanding, there are yet remayning moſt of thoſe huge wilde buildings of the Caſtle and Palace of Perſepolis, ſo much celebrated in the monuments of ancient Writers. Theſe frames doe the Arabians and Perſians in their owne language, call Chilminara : which is as much as if you ſhould ſay in Spaniſh, Quarenta columnas, or Alcoranes : for ſo they call thoſe high narrow round ſteeples, which the Arabians haue in their Meſquites. This rare, yea and onely monument of the World (which farre exceedeth all the reſt of the Worlds miracles, that we haue ſeene or heard off) ſheweth it ſelfe to them that come to this Citie from the Towne of Xiria, and ſtandeth about a league from the Riuer Bradamir, in times paſt called Araxis (not that, that parteth Media from the greater Armenia*) whereof often mention is made by* Quintus Curtius, Diodorus and Plutarch : which Authors doe point vs out the ſituation of Perſepolis, and doe almoſt leade vs vnto it by the hand. The largeneſſe, fairneſſe, and long-laſting Matter of thoſe Pillars, appeareth by the twentie which are yet left, of alike faſhion; which with other remaynders of thoſe ſtately Piles, doe moue admiration in the minde of beholders, and cannot, but with much labour, and at leiſure, be layed open. But ſince it is your Lordſhips hap to liue now at Venice, where you may ſee ſome reſemblance of the things, which I am about to write of, I will briefly tell you, that moſt of the Pictures of men, that, ingrauen in marble, doe ſeele the front, the ſides, and ſtatelier parts of this building, are deckt with a very comely cloathing, and clad in the ſame faſhion, which the Venetian Magnifico's goe in; that is, in Gownes downe to the heeles, with wide ſleeues; with round flat caps, their haire ſpred to the ſhoulders, and notable long beards. Yee may ſee in theſe Tables ſome men ſitting, with great maieſtie, in certayne loftier chayres, ſuch as vſe to bee with vs in the Quires and Chapter-houſes of Cathedrall Churches, appointed for the ſeates of the chiefe Prelates: the feete being ſupported with a little foote-ſtoole neatly made, about a hand high. And, which is very worthy of wonder, in ſo diuers dreſſes of ſo many men; as are ingrauen in theſe Tables, none commeth neere the faſhion which is at this day, or hath beene theſe many Ages paſt in vſe through all Aſia. For though out of all Antiquitie we can gather no ſuch Arguments of the cloathing of Aſſyrians, Medes and Perſians, as we finde many of the Greekes and Romanes : yet it appeareth ſufficiently, that they vſed garments of a middle ſize for length, like the Punike veſt, vſed by the Turkes and Perſians at this day, which they call Aljuba, and theſe, Cauaia : and Shaſhes wound about their heads, diſtinguiſhed yet both by faſhion and colour from the Cidaris, which is the Royall Diademe. Yet verily in all this ſculpture (which though it be ancient, yet ſhineth as neatly, as if it were but new-done) you can ſee no picture, that is like or in the workmanſhip reſembleth any other, which the memorie of man could yet attayne to the knowledge of, from any part of the World: ſo that this worke may ſeeme to exceede all Antiquitie. Now, nothing more confirmeth this, then one notable inſcription cut in a Iaſper-table, with Characters ſtill ſo freſh and faire, that one would wonder, how it could ſcape ſo many Ages without touch of the leaſt blemiſh. The Letters themſelues are neither Chaldæan, nor Hebrew, nor Greeke, nor Arabike, nor of any other Nation, which was euer found of old, or at this day, to be extant. They are all three-cornered, but ſomewhat long, of the forme of a Pyramide, or ſuch a little Obeliske, as I haue ſet in the margine: ſo that in nothing doe they differ one from another, but in their placing and ſituation, yet ſo conformed that they are wondrous plaine diſtinct and perſpicuous. What kinde of building the whole was (whether Corinthian, Ionick, Dorick, or mixt) cannot bee gathered from the remaynder of theſe ruines: which is otherwiſe in the old broken walls at Rome, by which that may eaſily be diſcerned. Notwithſtanding the wondrous and artificiall exactneſſe of the worke, the beautie and elegancy of it, ſhining out of the proportion and ſymmetrie, doth dazle the eyes of the beholders. But nothing amazed me more, then the hardneſſe and durableneſſe of theſe Marbles and Iaſpers: for in many places there are Tables ſo ſolide, and ſo curiouſly wrought and poliſhed, that yee may ſee your face in them, as in a glaſſe. Beſides the Authors, by me alreadie commended; Arrianus and Iuſtine make ſpeciall mention of this Palace: and they report, that Alexander the Great (at the inſtigation of Thais, a famous Whore of Athens) did burne it downe. But moſt delicately of all doth Diodorus deliuer this ſtorie.

but

Caſtle.
Sepulcher.

The whole Caſtle was encompaſſed with a threefold circle of walls, the greater part whereof hath yeelded to the violence of time and weather. There ſtand alſo the Sepulchres of their Kings, placed on the ſide of that Hill, at the foote whereof the Caſtle it ſelfe is built: and the monuments ſtand iuſt ſo farre one from another, as Diodorus reporteth. In a word, all doth ſo agree with his diſcourſe of it, that he that hath ſeene this, and read that, cannot poſſibly be deceiued. More then this, there remayne not any markes of ſo huge a Citie: but that nigh about halfe a league from the Caſtle, there ſtands vp another Pillar, as bigge as the reſt: and two other ſhorter ones too, ſet a little farther off: and in them did my Seruants ſee ſome horſes of Marble, large like a Coloſſus, and ſome men alſo of Giantly ſtature. To tell you true (as neere as it was, and eaſily done, yet) I was loath to goe thither; both, becauſe all that Plaine was cut full of little Brookes, Ditches, and Sluſes drawne out of the Riuer Araxis: and alſo, becauſe I would be held there no longer, hauing alreadie ſpent two dayes in beholding the things which I haue deſcribed. Now, though that Plaine be very fruitfull, and (as I ſaid) all watered with Water-courſes; though it lye open euery way aboue ten leagues, that it might well maintayne ſo great a Citie, as Perſepolis ſometime was: yet now it is taken vp onely with one ſmall Towne of ſome foure hundreth houſes; compaſſed about with fat paſtures, fruitfull Fields, and moſt fertile and pleaſant Orchards and Cloſes, and furniſhed with all manner of foode, and ſuch pure wholſome water to drinke, that I doe not remember that euer I taſted the like any where elſe. This Towne is called Margatean, and is a little diſtant from the Caſtle. As for the King himſelfe, I had beene with him at Casbin, before I came hither.

Margatean.

Casbin.

Casbin is a towne ſome three hundred leagues diſtant from Ormuz; and from hence one hundreth long ones. There had the King leuied a mightie armie of Horſe and Foot to meete the Turkes forces, who, as enemies, inuaded the frontiers of the Perſian Empire. There I abode therefore but fortie daies, being by the King royally entertained, with cheerefull expreſſions of a louing minde. But when he was to goe to Soltania (ſome fifteene leagues from thence) to muſter his companies, which were there met; he let me plainely vnderſtand, that before his departure he would diſpatch mee for my returne to Ormuz. Soone after, hauing ſuddenly changed his mind, hee commanded mee to retire my ſelfe hither: whither he promiſed, ſo ſoone as the warre was ouer, to come himſelfe, and to ſend me away. But when the warre was quickly ended (which I foreſaw by vndoubted ſignes at Casbin) the King withdrew himſelfe to Farabat: which is a Towne of Hercania, by the Caſpian Sea, which hee loues and delights in much. Hee preſently ſent me a meſſenger to ſignifie that he would certainly come hither in the ſpring, to celebrate his birth-day. This vnwelcome newes troubled mee more then all the toyle and trouble of the whole voyage. I reſolued therefore to diſpatch to him one of my Gentlemen, with the Abbot of Saint Auguſtines: who if they ſhould perceiue that his comming were likely to be delayed long, might procure my diſpatch; though at a moſt vnſeaſonable time for ſailing, and at my great perill to venter vpon the heate at Ormuz, in ſummer inſupportable.

Soltania.

Farabat.

Concerning the peace or truce agreed vpon by theſe Princes, after a bloudy field fought betweene Tauris and Ardeuill, it is to no purpoſe to report, ſince it is publike and diuulged, though their conenants and conditions be yet kept cloſe. If the State were at more quiet in Moſcouie, I would (goe by Aſtracan and) make a iourney through that Countrey, in my returne. But it is ſtrange, what miſeries and calamities afflict that Nation: which in ancient time hath ſo flouriſhed and preuailed, that it ſcattered and put downe the Tartarians of the Eaſt, who were dreadfull to the whole world. Of which miſeries and deſtructions the ground and author was that counterfeit Demetrius, who hauing by plaine couſenage vſurped once the empire of the Ruſſians, left it in a continued line to ſix other falſe tyrants of his name after him.

Two Comets ſeene alſo here 1618.

* As we haue ſeene ſince in Turkie, Poland, Bohemia, Germanie, Griſons, France, &c. and ſtill ſee.

The concluſion of theſe my letters ſhall be the relation of two Comets, which during this time wee beheld, the one, on the tenth of Nouember, began to ſhine two houres before Sunne-riſing; whoſe appearing was obſerued betweene Eaſt and South. The colour was like to the fume which ariſeth from the flame of the fineſt Gunpowder. The head of it ſeemed to me to be in Scorpio: the bigneſſe, as much as would containe a ſixt part of the Zodiake: the forme (as ſome imagined) like a Cimiter; which ſort the Grecians call Xiphias, boding * horrible euents. This Comet (me thought) reſembled rather a yeere-old ſpring of Palme, which being not yet ſpred is a little bowed at the top: it moued toward the South.

Twelue or thirteene daies after the riſing of this Comet, another appeared with hayrie rayes, of an ordinarie faſhion, coloured like the Planet Venus, and much about that bigneſſe, or a little bigger. It aroſe directly Eaſt. And though at firſt it were farre leſſe then the former, yet increaſing daily more and more, it grew almoſt as big as the other. By the proper motion it moued it ſelfe with the Primum Mobile, not farre from the verticall Line. Moreouer, three or foure daies after the ariſing of this, that other vaniſhed. Sure they had both of them a very ſhort period, inſomuch as the latter ſcarce ſhewed it ſelfe aboue ten daies. It was obſerued, that toward the end, it looked more red. Howſoeuer it be, if theſe Comets portend miſchiefe, the miſchiefe (ſure) cannot be long-laſting, like others, whereof wee may ſee ſtore in the world.

Would God he had beene or may be a true preſage.

The Authors Voyage and Acts in thoſe parts; Sea accidents, Mooriſh fooleries, Engliſh Ships: Of Sofala, the Fort; the Fruits and Plants of thoſe parts.

THe ſaid Friar went with a Fleet from Liſbon in Aprill 1586. Iuly the firſt, they came before the Cape of good hope, and had ſuch faire weather, that they tooke great ſtore of Fiſh, till a faire gale ſet them onwards for Mozambique. Being againſt Terra do Natal (which trends betwixt thirtie two and thirtie foure degrees South) they were encountred with a great ſtorme, the Windes and Waues bellowing and billowing (in a ſeeming) conſpiracie to their ruine. The ſecond night of this tempeſt, the ninth of Iuly, they ſaw on their maine tops a Corpo ſanto in figure of a flame * of fire bright and ſhining, from thence remoouing to the Mizen-maſt; and the Pilot ſaluted it, ſaying, Salue Corpo ſanto, ſalue; Boa viagem, boa viagem: Haile Corpo ſancto, haile, a good voyage, a good voyage. And moſt of the people with many teares of ioy made the ſame anſwer, Boa viagem, boa viagem: the light hauing there long continued, vaniſhed. The Mariners beleeue that this light is S. Pero Gonçalues Telmo Naturall of Palencia a Citie in Caſtile, a Dominican, vpon whom they ordinarily call being endangered in tempeſts, and either call it Saint Peter Gonçalues, or S. Telmo, or Corpo Santo. Many times it appeareth, and ſo long they hold themſelues ſecure, and ordinarily the ſtormes are moderated when it commeth, as it happened to vs in this voyage; and therefore they held it in much deuotion, albee it be but naturall, cauſed by exhalations: which the Mariners denie, ſaying, that ſomtimes in the place where that light appeares, they haue found greene Wax, like that of a Wax-candle. And in the life of that Saint is rehearſed, that hee ſometimes appeares viſible to Mariners when they call vpon him in tempeſts, and deliuers them from Sea dangers. Whiles this light appeared, a Souldier kneeling downe in the ſhip before it, ſmote his breaſt, ſaying, with many teares. Adorovos meu Sñor S. Pero Gonçaluez, vos me ſaluay neſte perigo por voſſa miſericordia; repeating it many times. I adore thee my Lord Saint Peter Gonçaluez, O ſaue me in this danger for thy mercie. I and an other father told him, this adoration was due only to God, and that the Saints ſhould be prayed to in another manner. He anſwered worſe to the purpoſe. My God ſhall he be now which ſhall deliuer me from this danger. We then left him, but the next day the ſtorme being paſt he confeſſed his fault.

Adoration to an exhalation, ſuppoſed a Saint: and to a Saint as to God: a double Idolatrie in the Popiſh opinion, which yet lay this ſtumbling blocke before the blind in worſhip of creatures.

On the ſeuen and twentieth they came to Baixos da India in two and twentie South, and the thirteenth of Auguſt came to Mozambique: from thence by the Vicar Generals appointment, I and another Dominican were ſent for Sofala, one hundred and ſixtie leagues diſtant, for the ſeruice of Chriſtianitie in thoſe parts in Nouember following. In the yeere 1588. the Saint Thomas hauing paſſed the Cape, was wracked neere Terra do Natal, and ſome of the companie eſcaping, went on ſhoare in Terra dos Fumos, & hapned on more humane Cafres then the moſt are in thoſe parts, which had neuer ſeene white man before, called them Children of the Sunne, and gaue them to eate and drinke. Stephen Veyga the Captaine, and ſome others aduentured on a iourney thence by land (aboue eightie leagues) to Sofala, where they gaue great thankes to God and our Ladie for their deliuerie.

tugals, and ſo luke-warme in his Religion, that with them he would both eate Swines fleſh and drinke Wine. Yet was hee ſo honoured, that after his death, the Moores of Sofala erected a Meſquit in the place of his buriall, and before the Mariners made their voyage, would make prayers to him (as a Saint) for their ſucceſſe. I ſet this Meſquit on fire, to the diſcontent of thoſe Moores. Fryar Iohn Madeira and I, remained foure yeeres in Sofala, labouring the conuerſion of the Moores and Gentiles, of which we baptized 1694. perſons. After that time the Vicar Generall cauſed vs to returne to Moſambique. In the way the Cafers ſent vs victuals and Muſicians with their vnmuſicall voices and Tabers all night, entertaining vs with a feaſt worſe then a faſt. Hauing thus paſſed the Lordſhip of an Encoſſe vnder the Quiteues dominion, we came into the Countrey of Manamotapa, where in the night paſſing a deſart, wee heard terrible voices, like as if they had beene of men, which we ſuppoſed to be Cafar theeues, and durſt not ſpeake one to the other, leſt we might ſo betray our liues. The next Cafars told vs they were birds bigger then Cocks, which in the day time hide themſelues, and in the night flie, chaſe and prey on other fowles, which terrified with their voices, leaue their rooſts and ſo become a prey.

They came to the Riuer of Luabo after eighteene daies. In this Riuer are many great Ilands, where we lay in the nights, and ſayled by day becauſe of the Currents and Shelues. The two and twentieth of Auguſt we came to the Fort of Sena, where the two Churches of thoſe Riuers had neuer a Prieſt, and therefore wee ſpent two and thirtie dayes in confeſſing, baptizing, maſſing: and thence were inuited to Tete, for like cauſe, ſixtie leagues diſtant. I went and baptized there one hundred and ſeuenteene. Madeira at Sena baptized aboue two hundred perſons: and from the firſt entrie of Dominicans, they had in that Riuer Cuama baptized aboue twentie thouſand. In the Port of Quilimane were foure Pangayas of the Captayne of Mozambique, then Don Iorge de Menezes, in one of which wee embarked, in which was a Cheſt with 100000. Cruzados of gold, of powder, and peeces, which hee had made in thoſe Riuers with Souſo Coutinho the Gouernour of India: which gold is ordinarily gathered euery ſix moneths by the Portugals and Captayne. In the yeere 1592. I was ſent to Quirimba. There I ſtaid two yeeres, and made ſix hundred nintie foure Chriſtians, and vntill that yeere 1593. the Dominicans had baptized aboue ſixteene thouſand in thoſe Iles. After which I was recalled to Sofala, and in 1595. to Moſambique. In the yeere 1597. two Engliſh ſhips came in ſight of Moſambique; as alſo two others had done in the yeere 1591. The two and twentieth of Auguſt 1597. he embarked himſelfe for India, and on the twentieth of September entred the Barre of Goa. But let vs take view of Sofala, and the parts adioyning, as he hath deſcribed them in the firſt part of his workes.

Mocarangue.

The Fortreſſe of Sofala ſtands in 20. 30' Southerne degrees, ſituate on the Coaſt of Eaſterne Ethiopia, neere the Sea, and iuſt by a Riuer a league in the mouth, little more or leſſe, which riſeth higher aboue one hundred leagues, ariſing in the Countrey called Mocarangua, and paſſing by the Citie Zimbaoe where the Quitene reſides, who is King of thoſe parts, and of all the Riuer of Sofala. Vp that Riuer the Portugals trade to Manica, a land of much gold, ſeated within the land aboue ſixtie leagues. Within the Fort of Sofala is a Church, to which belong ſix hundred Communicants. The Inhabitants vſually are Merchants, ſome to Manica for gold, which they barter for Stuffes and Beades, both to the Captayne and themſelues; others to the Riuer of Sabia, and the Iles das Bocicas, and other neere Riuers, for Iuorie, Gergelim-ſpice, Pulſe, Amber, and many Slaues. There is another habitation of Moores two Caliuer ſhot from the Caſtle, poore and miſerable, which liue by ſeruing the Portugals. The women performe there the offices of Tillage and Husbandry; as alſo doe the Moores. They pay their Tithes to the Dominicans Church. The Fortreſſe was built An. 1505. by Pero da Nhaya, with conſent of the Mooriſh King Zuſe, a man blinde of both his eyes (in both ſenſes, externall and internall, religious and politike) who too late repenting, thought to ſupplant it with trecherie, which they returned vpon himſelfe and ſlew him. In old times they had many ſuch petty Mooriſh Kings on the Coaſt, few of which now remaine by reaſon of the Portugall Captaynes ſucceeding in their places, and in their amitie and commerce with the Quitene King of thoſe Countries.

In thoſe Countries of Sofala are many fruits, as Pomegranat trees which beare all the yeere, ſome greene, ſome ripe, ſome in flowers; they haue alſo Fig-trees, which yeeld blacke Figs all the yeere moſt excellent; Oranges, Limes, Vines which beare twice a yeere, in Ianuarie and Iuly; Ananas, Indian Figs, which yeeld great branches of Figs as great as Cucumbers, yellow when they are ripe, and ſweet of ſent, ſometimes ſeuentie Figges are ſeene on one cluſter, like a bunch of Grapes, and a man can ſcarcely lift them from the ground. They haue great grounds of Sugar-canes alongſt the Riuer, husbanded by the Cafres, not for Sugar, but to eate (for they want Ingenios) and are a great part of their ſuſtenance. They haue many and great Palme-trees which yeeld infinite Cocos and Wine. They haue ſtore of Guinnie Wheat, and Rice; many Inhames (a very great roote yeelding broade leaues, and better in taſte then Potatoes) Fitches, and other Pulſe in much varietie. In the fields and wild vntilled places grow ſtore of Iaſmins, and Mangericones (very ſweet plants) and they make oyle of Gergelim, which they beate in woodden Morters, as big as will reach to a mans girdle, and then ſtraine out the Oyles, and eate the reſt with their Wheate inſtead of Butter. Innumerable Hens very good and cheape;

Hogs, Goats, Kine, wild Beaſts, Deere, and wild Swine are there. Ten Hens are ſold for two Teſtons (2 s. 6d.) and vp in the Countrey eighteene at the price. They make Oile of Cocos which burnes cleerer then that of the Oliue. In the Realtie of Manica grow little Trees on the tops of Hills and Rocks, which the moſt part of the yeere are drie, without leafe and greenneſſe, but haue this propertie, that if one cut off a bough & put it into water, in the ſpace of ten houres it ſprings and flouriſheth with greene leaues; but draw it out of the water, as ſoone as it is drie, it remaynes againe as it was before. The Cafres ſay, that though this wood bee gathered ten yeeres, yet after all that time put into water, it will flouriſh and continue greene. This wood being ground, and giuen to drinke in water, is good to ſtanch fluxes of bloud. The Cafres call it Mungodao. Another wood they call Matuni, which ſignifieth the Dung of a Man, hauing the name of that ſent, ſo noyſome that none can endure it. The ſame is in India, the Tree like a Thorne tree. They ſay, it hath vertues againſt the Ayre (or Blaſtings) and therefore many perſons weare it in ſtrings like Beades, tyed to the arme next the skin, ſpecially children. Alongſt the Riuer of Sofala in two places wilde and deſart, grow Oranges and Limons, which euery one may gather that will: wherewith they lade Boats and ſell them for almoſt nothing to the Inhabitants of the Fortreſſe, which fill Barrels and Pots with the juyce, and the ſame Limons ſalted, and ſend them for India, where they are much eſteemed, and eaten with Rice. The bread ordinarily in Sofala is of their Wheate and Rice mixt together, whereof they make Cakes which they call Mocates: tollerable whiles they are hot, but cold, inſufferable. The Portugals drinke commonly Palme-wine, the Cafres Wine of their Wheate (or Mays) which they make ſtrong and tipſie.

Of QUITEUE King of that Countrey, with the ſtrange cuſtomes obſerued in thoſe parts, in Court, Citie and Countrey.

THe King of theſe parts is of curled haire, a Gentile, which worſhips nothing, nor hath any knowledge of God; yea, rather hee carries himſelfe as God of his Countries, and ſo is holden and reuerenced of his Vaſſals. Hee is called Quiteue, a title royall and no proper name, which they exchange for this ſo ſoone as they become Kings. The Quiteue hath more then one hundred women all within doores, amongſt which one or two are as his Queenes, the reſt as Concubines: many of them are his owne Aunts, Couſins, Siſters and Daughters, which he no leſſe vſeth, ſaying, that his ſonnes by them are true heires of the Kingdome without mixture of other bloud. When the Quiteue dyeth, his Queenes muſt die with him to doe him ſeruice in the other world, who accordingly at the inſtant of his death take a poyſon (which they call Lucaſſe) and die therewith. The ſucceſſor ſucceedeth as well to the women as the ſtate. None elſe but the King may vpon paine of death marry his Siſter or Daughter. This Succeſſor is commonly one of the eldeſt Sonnes of the deceſſed King, and of his great Women or Queenes; and if the eldeſt be not ſufficient, then the next, or if none of them be fit, his Brother of whole bloud. The King commonly whiles hee liueth maketh the choiſe, and traines vp him to affaires of State, to whom he deſtines the ſucceſſion. Whiles I liued there, ſaith Sanctos, the King had aboue thirtie Sonnes, and yet ſhewed more reſpect to his Brother a wiſe man, then to any of them, all honoring him as apparent heire.

The Quiteue Manner of ſucceſſion and coronation.

The ſame day the King dies, he is carried to a Hill where all the Kings are interred, and early the next morning, hee whom the deceſſed had named his Succeſſor, goeth to the Kings houſe where the Kings Women abide in expectation, and by their conſent hee enters the houſe, and ſeates himſelfe with the principall of them in a publike Hall, where the King was wont to ſit to heare Cauſes, in a place drawne with curtens or couered with a cloth, that none may ſee the King nor the Women with him. And thence he ſends his Officers, which goe thorow the Citie and proclayme Feſtiuals to the New King, who is now quietly poſſeſſed of the Kings Houſe, with the Women of the King deceſſed, and that all ſhould goe and acknowledge him for their King: which is done by all the great Men then in Court, and the Nobles of the Citie, who goe to the Palace now ſolemnely guarded, and enter into the Hall by licence of the Officers, where the new King abides with his Women; entring ſome, and ſome, creeping on the ground till they come to the middle of the Hall, and thence ſpeake to the New King, giuing him due obeyſance, without ſeeing him or his Women. The King makes anſwere from within, and accepts their ſeruice: and after that drawes the Curtens, and ſhewes himſelfe to them; whereat all of them clap their hands, and then turne behind the Curtens, and goe forth creeping on the ground as they came in; and when they are gone, others enter and doe in like ſort. In this ceremonie the greateſt part of the day is ſpent with feaſting, muſick and dancing thorow the Citie. The next day, the King ſends his Officers thorow the Kingdome to declare this his ſucceſſion, and that all ſhould come to the Court to ſee him breake the Bowe. Sometimes there are many Competitors, and then tugals, and ſo luke-warme in his Religion, that with them he would both eate Swines fleſh and drinke Wine. Yet was hee ſo honoured, that after his death, the Moores of Sofala erected a Meſquit in the place of his buriall, and before the Mariners made their voyage, would make prayers to him (as a Saint) for their ſucceſſe. I ſet this Meſquit on fire, to the diſcontent of thoſe Moores. Hauing thus paſſed the Lordſhip of an Encoſſe vnder the Quiteues dominion, we came into the Countrey of Manamotapa, where in the night paſſing a deſart, wee heard terrible voices, like as if they had beene of men, which we ſuppoſed to be Cafar theeues, and durſt not ſpeake one to the other, leſt we might ſo betray our liues. The next Cafars told vs they were birds bigger then Cocks, which in the day time hide themſelues, and in the night flie, chaſe and prey on other fowles, which terrified with their voices, leaue their rooſts and ſo become a prey.

The two and twentieth of Auguſt we came to the Fort of Sena, where the two Churches of thoſe Riuers had neuer a Prieſt, and therefore wee ſpent two and thirtie dayes in confeſſing, baptizing, maſſing: and thence were inuited to Tete, for like cauſe, ſixtie leagues diſtant. I went and baptized there one hundred and ſeuenteene. Madeira at Sena baptized aboue two hundred perſons: and from the firſt entrie of Dominicans, they had in that Riuer Cuama baptized aboue twentie thouſand. In the Port of Quilimane were foure Pangayas of the Captayne of Mozambique, then Don Iorge de Menezes, in one of which wee embarked, in which was a Cheſt with 100000. Sofala.

Mocarangue.

The Fortreſſe of Sofala ſtands in 20. 30' Southerne degrees, ſituate on the Coaſt of Eaſterne Ethiopia, neere the Sea, and iuſt by a Riuer a league in the mouth, little more or leſſe, which riſeth higher aboue one hundred leagues, ariſing in the Countrey called Mocarangua, and paſſing by the Citie Zimbaoe where the Quitene reſides, who is King of thoſe parts, and of all the Riuer of Sofala. Vp that Riuer the Portugals trade to Manica, a land of much gold, ſeated within the land aboue ſixtie leagues. Within the Fort of Sofala is a Church, to which belong ſix hundred Communicants. The Inhabitants vſually are Merchants, ſome to Manica for gold, which they barter for Stuffes and Beades, both to the Captayne and themſelues; others to the Riuer of Sabia, and the Iles das Bocicas, and other neere Riuers, for Iuorie, Gergelim-ſpice, Pulſe, Amber, and many Slaues. There is another habitation of Moores two Caliuer ſhot from the Caſtle, poore and miſerable, which liue by ſeruing the Portugals. The women performe there the offices of Tillage and Husbandry; as alſo doe the Moores. They pay their Tithes to the Dominicans Church. The Fortreſſe was built An. 1505. by Pero da Nhaya, with conſent of the Mooriſh King Zufe, a man blinde of both his eyes (in both ſenſes, externall and internall, religious and politike) who too late repenting, thought to ſupplant it with trecherie, which they returned vpon himſelfe and ſlew him. In old times they had many ſuch petty Mooriſh Kings on the Coaſt, few of which now remaine by reaſon of the Portugall Captaynes ſucceeding in their places, and in their amitie and commerce with the Quiteue King of thoſe Countries.

In thoſe Countries of Sofala are many fruits, as Pomegranat trees which beare all the yeere, ſome greene, ſome ripe, ſome in flowers; they haue alſo Fig-trees, which yeeld blacke Figs all the yeere moſt excellent; Oranges, Limes, Vines which beare twice a yeere, in Ianuarie and Iuly; Ananas, Indian Figs, which yeeld great branches of Figs as great as Cucumbers, yellow when they are ripe, and ſweet of ſent, ſometimes ſeuentie Figges are ſeene on one cluſter, like a bunch of Grapes, and a man can ſcarcely lift them from the ground. They haue great grounds of Sugar-canes alongſt the Riuer, husbanded by the Cafres, not for Sugar, but to eate (for they want Ingenios) and are a great part of their ſuſtenance. They haue many and great Palmetrees which yeeld infinite Cocos and Wine. They haue ſtore of Guinnie Wheat, and Rice; many Inhames (a very great roote yeelding broade leaues, and better in taſte then Potatoes) Fitches, and other Pulſe in much varietie. In the fields and wild vntilled places grow ſtore of Iaſmins, and Mangericones (very ſweet plants) and they make oyle of Gergelim, which they beate in woodden Morters, as big as will reach to a mans girdle, and then ſtraine out the Oyles, and eate the reſt with their Wheate inſtead of Butter. §. II.

Of QVITEVE King of that Countrey, with the ſtrange cuſtomes obſerued in thoſe parts, in Court, Citie and Countrey.

THe King of theſe parts is of curled haire, a Gentile, which worſhips nothing, nor hath any knowledge of God; yea, rather hee carries himſelfe as God of his Countries, and ſo is holden and reuerenced of his Vaſſals. Hee is called Quiteue, a title royall and no proper name, which they exchange for this ſo ſoone as they become Kings. When the Quiteue dyeth, his Queenes muſt die with him to doe him ſeruice in the other world, who accordingly at the inſtant of his death take a poyſon (which they call Lucaſſe) and die therewith. The ſucceſſor ſucceedeth as well to the women as the ſtate. None elſe but the King may vpon paine of death marry his Siſter or Daughter. This Succeſſor is commonly one of the eldeſt Sonnes of the deceſſed King, and of his great Women or Queenes; and if the eldeſt be not ſufficient, then the next, or if none of them be fit, his Brother of whole bloud. The King commonly whiles hee liueth maketh the choiſe, and traines vp him to affaires of State, to whom he deſtines the ſucceſſion. Whiles I liued there, ſaith Sanctos, the King had aboue thirtie Sonnes, and yet ſhewed more reſpect to his Brother a wiſe man, then to any of them, all honoring him as apparent heire.

The Quiteue Manner of ſucceſſion and coronation.

Sometimes there are many Competitors, and then

Women-Electors.

Hee ſucceeds whom the Women admit into the Kings Houſe: for none may enter by Law without their leaue, nor can bee King without peaceable entrance; forceable entrie forfeiting his Right and Title. By bribes therefore and other wayes; they ſeeke to make the Women on their ſide.

The Sedandas like cuſtomes.

Neere the Kingdome of Quiteue is another of Lawes and Cuſtomes like thereto, where the Sedanda raignes: both which were ſometimes but one Kingdome. Whiles I was in Sofala, the Sedanda being incurably ſick of a leproſie, declared his Succeſſor, and poyſoned himſelfe: which alſo is the cuſtome there, if any King haue any deformitie in his perſon. The named Succeſſor ſought admittance of the Women, but they much diſtaſting him, had ſecretly ſent by night for another Prince whom they better liked, as more valiant and better beloued; whom they admitted, and aſſembled themſelues with him in the publike Hall, and cauſed Proclamation to bee made to the people of his ſucceſſion. The other, whom they had reiected, fled for feare of his life, and being mightie aſſembled a great power, and by force entred the Kings Houſe. But this was ſtrange to all, who therefore forſooke him, and ſtuck to him whom the Women had choſen; whereupon the other fled, and no more lifted vp his head.

Ceremonie of breaking the Bowe.

Cruell ſeruice.

Ill cuſtom well broken.

Before the New King begins to gouerne, he ſends for all the chiefe in the Kingdome, to come to the Court and ſee him breake the Kings Bowe, which is all one with taking poſſeſſion of the Kingdome. In thoſe Courts is a cuſtome then alſo to kill ſome of thoſe Lords or great Men, ſaying, that they are neceſſarie for the ſeruice of the deceſſed King: whereupon they kill thoſe of whom they ſtand in feare or doubt, or whom they hate, in ſtead of whom they make and erect new Lords. This cuſtome cauſeth ſuch as feare themſelues to flee the Land. Anciently the Kings were wont to drinke poyſon in any grieuous diſaſters, as in a contagious diſeaſe, or naturall impotencie, lameneſſe, the loſſe of their fore-teeth, or other deformitie; ſaying, that Kings ought to haue no defect; which if it happened, it was honour for him to die, and goe to better himſelfe in that better life, in which he ſhould be wholly perfect. But the Quiteue which raigned whiles I was there, would not follow his predeceſſors herein; but hauing loſt one of his fore-teeth, ſent to proclaime thorow his whole Kingdome that one of his teeth were fallen out, and that if (that they might not be ignorant when they ſaw him want it) his predeceſſors were ſuch fooles, for ſuch cauſes to kill themſelues, he would not doe ſo, but awaite his naturall death, holding his life neceſſary to conſerue his eſtate againſt his enemies, which example hee would commend to poſteritie.

Great obſeruance: the like is vſed in Iapan, to lye proſtrate and not looke on him.

If the Cafars haue a ſuit, and ſeeke to ſpeake with the King, they creepe to the place where hee is, hauing proſtrated themſelues at the entrance, and looke not on him all the while they ſpeake, but lying on one ſide clap their hands all the time (a rite of obſequiouſneſſe in thoſe parts) and then hauing finiſhed, they creepe out of the doores as they came in. For no Cafar may enter on foot to ſpeake to the King, nor eye him in ſpeaking, except the familiars and particular friends of the King. The Portugals enter on their feet, but vnſhod, and being neere the King, proſtrate themſelues lying on one ſide almoſt ſitting, and without looking on him ſpeake to him, at euery fourth word clapping their hands according to the cuſtome. Both Cafres and Portugals are entertained by him with wine of Mays, or their wheate, called Pombe, which they muſt drinke, although againſt ſtomacke, not to contemne the Kings bountie; whence the Portugals haue had ſome trouble, and are forced to ſtay in the Towne without leaue to returne home, with great expence of time and charges.

Exequies to the dead Kings.

Pemberar, ſomwhat reſembling that which Æneas performed to Anchiſes.

Euery September the Quiteue at the change of the Moone, goeth from Zimbaohe his Citie to a high Hill to performe Obits or Exequies to his predeceſſors there buried, with great troops both of the Citie and other parts of the Kingdomes called vp therefore. As ſoone as they are aſcended, they eate and drinke their Pombe, the King beginning, till they be all drunke; continuing that eating and drinking eight dayes, one of which they call Pemberar of a kind of Tilting exerciſe then vſed. In this feaſt the King and his Nobles clothe themſelues in their beſt Silkes and Cotten clothes, which they haue with many thrummes, like Carpet fringes, wrought therein, hanging downe on the eyes and face as a horſes foretop; they tie about the head a large Ribband; and diuided into two parts, they runne one againſt another on foot with Bowes and Arrowes in their hands, which they ſhoote vpwards that none be hurt; and thus make a thouſand careeres and feates till they be tyred and cannot ſtirre, and they which hold out longeſt are accounted the propereſt valianteſt men, and are therefore rewarded with the prize propounded. Gaſpar de Mello Captayne of Sofala in my time, cauſed to make a large Ribband with great fringes of ſilke and gold, and ſent it with other pieces of price to the Quiteue, who moſt eſteemed that Ribband for this pembering purpoſe.

Deuils tyranny and Oracles.

After this eight dayes feſtiuall, they ſpend two dayes or three in mourning; and then the Deuill enters into one of the company, ſaying, he is the ſoule of the deceaſed King, father of the preſent, to whom thoſe Exequies are performed; and that he comes to ſpeake to his ſonne. The Cafar thus poſſeſſed falls downe on the ground in an ill plight and is diſtracted, the Deuill ſpeaking by his mouth all the ſtrange tongues of all the Cafar Nations about them, many of which ſome of the men preſent vnderſtand. And after this hee beginneth to behaue himſelfe, and to ſpeake like the King pretended, by which ſignes the Cafars acknowledge the comming of the deceaſed Kings ſoule. The King is now made acquainted herewith, and comes with his Grandes to the place where the Demoniake is, and doe him great reuerence. Then all the reſt goe aſide, and the King remaynes with him alone, ſpeaking friendly as with his father departed, and enquireth if hee be to make warres, whether hee ſhall ouercome his enemies, touching dearth, or troubles in his kingdom, and whatſoeuer elſe he deſireth to know: And the Deuil anſwereth his queſtions, and aduiſeth him what to doe, not without lies altogether, as he which is the enemie of mankind, and thinks it enough to hold his credit with them, and yeerely to be conſulted. After all this the Deuill departeth from that bodie, leauing it weary, and euer after ill apayd. The King returneth home with great applauſe, ſo graced with the conference of the deceaſed Kings, whom they hold to be mighty in the other World, and able to grant him whatſoeuer hee deſireth. Some Portugals haue beene eye-witneſſes hereof. The like manner the Deuill vſeth with other Gentiles in China, and the Philippinas, as ſome report.

I beleeue for certaine that this Caphar Nation is the moſt brutiſh and barbarous in the world, neither worſhipping God, nor any Idoll, nor haue Image, Church, or Sacrifice, or perſons dedicated to Religion, and are hard to be conuerted, either to Chriſtians or Moores. They hold the immortalitie of the ſoule, and haue a confuſed knowledge that there is a Great God, whom they call Molungo, but they pray not to him, nor doe commend themſelues to him. When they ſuffer any neceſſitie or ſterilitie, they haue recourſe to their King, ſtrongly beleeuing that hee is able to giue them all things which they deſire, and that he can obtaine all things of the dead, his predeceſſors with whom he ſeemeth to haue conference. Whereupon they ſue to the King for raine, if they want it, and for ſeaſonable harueſt times: and alway when they thus petition him, they bring him great Preſents, which he receiueth, and bids them returne home in a good houre; for hee will haue care of their requeſt to ſatisfie the ſame. And though they ſee themſelues often fruſtrated, yet continue they to ſpend time and coſts in ſuch petitions, till raine or other their ſuits happen, thinking that though he granted not at firſt, yet by their importunitie (as he alſo for gaine tells them) that he hath done it at laſt.

No forme of Religion.

The King in diuine reputation.

They obſerue certaine feſtiuals, reſting from labour (except dances) appointed by the King, they not knowing when, or why. They call ſuch dayes Muſimos, that is, Soules of Saints departed, in whoſe honour they keepe them. On one of theſe dayes a Portugall in that Citie Zimbaobe (which was paſſing to Manicas where the gold Mines are) cauſed a Cow to bee killed at his houſe for food to his ſlaues, and the people which hee had with him; whereof the Quiteue hearing by one of his Officers (many of which are diſperſed in the Citie, and thorow the Kingdome) he commanded the Portugall to ſuffer it to abide, and not meddle any more withall, for violating his Muſimos. And the Portugall had no remedie, but muſt either ſuffer the beaſt to ſtinke and putrifie there, or pay Empoſia, that is, The Fine, which was no leſſe then fiftie Clothes, after he had in ſtead of eating, endured much ſtinke many dayes; which to auoide, hee would haue gone forth of his houſe, and haue taken another, but the Quiteue would not ſuffer him to enforce him to his Empoſia.

Muſimos holy dayes ſtrictly kept.

Theſe Cafars know nothing of the Creation of the World, of Man, nor of Hell for the bad, or Heauen for the good: onely they beleeue the ſoules immortalitie in another World, and that they ſhall liue with their women a better life then this, but they cannot tell where, in ſome earthly Paradiſes of pleaſure. They confeſſe that there is a Deuill, which they call, Muſuca; and that he doth much harme to men. Euery new Moone is a Feſtiuall day: they ſay the Sunne when he can, goeth to ſleepe. They neither write nor reade, nor haue bookes, but all their hiſtorie is Tradition. They hold that Monkies in times paſt were men and women, and call them in their language, The old people.

Opinions of the Deuill.

Aborigines.

The Quiteue hath two or three hundred men for his Guard, which are his Officers and Executioners, called Inficis, and goe crying, Inhama, Inhama, that is, Fleſh, Fleſh. Hee hath another ſort, called Marombes, Ieſters, which haue their Songs and Proſe in praiſe of the King, whom they call, Lord of the Sunne and Moone, King of the Land and of Riuers, Conqueror of his Enemies, in euery thing Great, great Theefe, great Witch, great Lion; and all other names of greatneſſe which they can inuent, whether they ſignifie good or bad, they attribute to him. When the King goeth out of doores, theſe Marombes goe round about him with great cries of this argument. Hee hath others which are Muſicians in his Hall, and at the Court gates, with diuers Inſtruments reſounding his praiſes. Their beſt Muſicall Inſtrument is called Ambira, much like to our Organs, made of Pompions, ſome bigge, ſome ſlender, for difference of ſounds, with a mouth in the ſide nigh the bottome, which hath a hole bigger then a ſhilling, with a glaſſe in the bottome, made of certaine Copwebs ſlender and ſtrong. On the mouthes (which are equall, ſet in a rew) is a rew of keyes of wood, ſlender, ſuſtained with cords, on the tops whereof they play with ſtickes like drum ſtickes, which haue buttons or balls as big as a nut in the points, which mouing the Keyes, make a ſweet ſound, which may be heard as farre as Virginals. Another Inſtrument they haue, called alſo Ambira, all of Iron wedges, flat and narrow, a ſpan long, tempered in the fire to differing ſounds. They are but nine ſet in a rew, with the ends in a peece of wood as in the necke if a viole, and hollow, on which they play with their thumbe nailes, which they weare long therefore, as lightly as men with vs on the Virginals, and is better Muſicke then the former. They haue Cornets of a wilde beaſts horne, called Paraparas, hauing a terrible ſound, and Drummes diuerſified in ſounds. When the Quiteue ſends Embaſſadours, hee ſends theſe three ſorts of men, crying, playing, dancing, which receiue, or elſe take their prouiſion by force.

Oathes dreadfull and terrible. See before in A. Battell, l. 7. c. 3. of the like in Loango, &c.

They vſe three kinds of Oathes in Iudgement moſt terrible, in accuſations wanting iuſt euidence. The firſt is called, Lucaſſe, which is a veſſell full of poiſon, which they giue the ſuſpected, with words importing his deſtruction, and preſent death if he be guilty; his eſcape, if innocent: the terrour whereof makes the conſcious confeſſe the crime: but the innocent drinke it confidently without harme, and thereby are acquitted of the crime; and the plaintiffe is condemned to him whom he falſly had accuſed; his wife, children, and goods being forfeited, one moitie to the King, and the other to the defendant. The ſecond Oath they call, Xoqua, which is made by iron heated red hot in the fire, cauſing the accuſed to lick it being ſo hot with his tongue, ſaying, that the fire ſhall not hurt him if hee bee innocent; otherwiſe it ſhall burne his tongue and his mouth. This is more common, and is vſed by the Caſres and the Moores in thoſe parts; yea, (which worſe is) ſome Chriſtians giue the ſame Oath to their ſlaues ſuſpected of ſtealth; which one in Sofala cauſed, on ſuſpicion of a ſtollen garment, a ſlaue to doe three times without hurt. The third Oath they call, Calano, which is a veſſell of water made bitter with certaine herbs, which they put into it, whereof they giue the accuſed to drinke, ſaying, that if he be innocent, he ſhall drinke it all off at one gulp without any ſtay, and caſt it all vp againe at once without any harme: if guilty, he ſhall not be able to get downe one drop without gargling and choaking. There haue beene ſeene many experiments of all theſe, the guilty ſuffering death by the poiſon, or burning, &c. the innocent freed; hauing ſome reſemblance by Deuilliſh apiſh imitation to the curſed water of iealouſie mentioned in Moſes. Once, they are notorious and well knowne in Sofala.

Num. 5.

Haire-faſhion in hornes.

The Caſres are blacke as Pitch, curled, and weare their head full of hornes made of the ſame haire, which ſtand vp like a Diſtaffe, wearing ſlender pieces of wood within their lockes to vphold them without, bending: without, they tye them with a ribband made of the barke of an herbe, which whiles it is freſh ſticketh like glue, and dried is like a ſticke: with this they binde their haire in bundles from the bottome to the top; of each bundle making a horne, holding herein great pride and gallantrie; ſtriuing to excell each others; and mocking them which want them, ſaying, they are like women. For, as the male wilde beaſts haue hornes which the females want; ſo doe theſe ſauage beaſts alſo.

The Quiteue hath herein a faſhion which none may imitate, of foure hornes, one of a ſpanne long on the mould of the head, like an Vnicorne, and three of halfe a ſpanne, one on the necke, at each eare another, all vpright to the top. For their hornes ſakes they haue no hats, nor headcouerings amongſt them. The apparell of the King and chiefe men is fine Cotton, or Silke, girt to them, and hanging almoſt to the knees, and another greater, called Machiras, which the Caſres weaue, caſt ouer the ſhoulders like a Cloke, wherewith they goe muffled, letting it hang on the left hand to the ground, eſteeming great Grauitie and Maieſtie in a long traine. The reſt of the bodie is naked; they goe all bare-foot: and the vulgar goe naked both men and women without ſhame; the better ſort of them wearing a Monkies skinne, hanging downe from the girdle like a Smiths Apron; and the women likewiſe. But the Caſres which trade with the Portugals, weare a couering to the knees.

Occupations.

They haue no Occupations but Smiths, which make Azagays, Spades, Hatchets, Halfe-ſwords: Weauers which make Cotton clothes for Machiras. The women make them, but improperly, their office being ordinarily to digge, and weed, and ſowe, men more louing their lubberly eaſe, few helping their wiues: a Spade being as vſuall with their women, as a Rocke with our Spinſters; the men now and then hunting for wilde beaſts, other whiles dancing and ſinging, and therefore poore.

The Tartars do the like: and the Scots alſo, as I haue heard, in the furtheſt North of this Iland.

The Quiteue makes ſome Royall huntings, with three or foure thouſand men, in the Deſarts neere the Citie; encircling all the beaſts in that compaſſe, Tigres, Lions, Ounces, Elephants, Buffals, Deere, wilde Swine, and the reſt, driuing them together, and then ſetting on their Dogs, with cries, Arrowes, and Azagayes, purſue and kill what they can. Then may they kill the Lion, which at other times by the Quiteues prohibition is a deadly offence, becauſe hee is entituled, great Lion. After this they eat in the ſame place with great iollitie; but the moſt they carrie home, and * hang it for the King, and for themſelues.

* As Bacon & Martinmas Beefe in England.

Houſes of Caſars, houſhold, and food.

Their houſes are round, of vnhewne timber couered with ſtraw, like a thatched Countrey houſe, which they remoue at pleaſure. Their goods is a Panne in which they boyle their Wheat, two Spades to digge, one Bowe and Arrowes, a Mat whereon they lie, which they make of Ruſhes, and commonly they ſleepe on the ground: if it be cold, they make a fire in the midſt of the houſe, lying all about it like Cats. So beggarly and brutiſh is the life (if that be life) of the Caſres. Their food is commonly Mais, Pulſe, Fruits, Sugar-canes, Fiſh, and all kinds of Beaſts which they kill in the Deſarts, as Monkies, Dogs, Cats, Rats, Snakes, Lizards, Crocodiles, diles, all fleſh ; Rice they ſowe rather to ſell the Portugals then to eat, preferring their Mais. They ſteepe two dayes in water a pecke or thereabouts, which in that ſpace growes forth : and then the water being put out, they let it drie two or three houres, and being well dried they ſtampe it till it ſettle into a maſſe : which they doe in a great Morter as high as a mans middle, called Cuni, by them, by the Portugals, Pilano. After this they ſet a great earthen veſſell on the fire halfe full of water, whereon when it ſeeths, they put in aboue halfe the pecke of Mais-meale by little and little, ſtill ſtirring it, as when men make pottage : and after it ſeeths a little, they take the veſſell off the fire, and put in the reſt of the ſaid maſſe, ſtirring them together till their Pombe be made ; which is let ſtand two dayes, and then they drinke it, many of them neither eating nor drinking ought elſe, but liuing onely hereof. If it ſtand foure or fiue dayes it becomes Vinegar ; and the ſowrer, the more tipſie ; they ſay that it makes them ſtrong.

Mais Wine how made.

In ſome places grow certaine Reeds, which euery ſecond or third yeere haue great eares like Rie, of which they gather ſtore, and is good ſuſtenance.

In all Cafraria there growes a certaine herbe which they ſowe, called Bangue, the ſtraw and leaues whereof they cut, and being well dried, ſtampe them to powder. And hereof they eate a handfull, and then drinke water, and ſo ſuſtaine themſelues many dayes ; and if they eate much, it makes them drunken, like to Wine.

All theſe Cafres before they goe about any buſineſſe of import, as iourneying, merchandiſe, or ſowing, they caſt lots to diuine of the ſucceſſe ; a thing vſed likewiſe to enquire of things ſtolne or loſt, and in all doubtfull caſes, and there to giue credit as we doe to the Goſpell. Theſe lots are little round ſtickes, flat, and bored thorow the midſt, leſſe then Table-men, called Charatas, alway carried about them, filed on a ſtring, to vſe vpon any occaſion of doubt, caſting them like Dice ſo many times. For want of them, they diuine by ſtrokes or lines which they draw on the ground. Some are great Witches, and conſult with the Deuill ; ſo prone to it, that they are prohibited by the King, that none ſhould vſe this witch-craft without his licence, in paine of death, and confiſcation of wife, children, and goods, halfe to the King, and halfe to the Informer : and yet many are ſuch ſecretly, and all would be if they could. The ſame penaltie is to theeues and to adulterers : it being lawfull for any man to ſlay any of theſe three ſorts taken in the fact : or if any liſt not to kill him which by witch-craft, adulterie, or robberie hath wronged him, he may ſell him, or doe with him what he pleaſeth as his owne chattels, and they call the condemned, ſuch a mans Witch, Theefe, or Adulterer. The loſſe of goods to the King is common for any fault amongſt them.

Lots and diuinations.

Witches.

Puniſhments.

The Cafres buy of the parents their wiues, for Kine, Clothes, or otherwiſe according to their abilitie. And therefore they which haue many daughters are rich. If any miſlike his wife, hee may returne her to him that ſold her, but with loſſe of the price payde ; and the parent may ſell her againe to another huſband. The wife hath no libertie to forſake her huſband. The ceremonies of marriage are dances, and feaſtings of the neighbours ; euery inuited gueſt bringing his preſent of Meale, Mais, Inhames, Fitches, or other victuall for that dayes expenſes. Hee which is able, may haue two wiues, but few are able to maintayne them, except the great men which haue many, but one is principall, the reſt as hand-maids. Some of them liue like wilde beaſts, and when they are neere time of trauell, they goe to the wilderneſſe or vntilled places, and there goe vp and downe receiuing the ſauour of that wilde place, which cauſeth to them quicker deliuery. They after their deliuery waſh themſelues and their children in a Lake or Riuer, and then returne to their houſes with them in their armes without ſwadling them. Neither haue they there wherewithall to doe it, or ſuch cuſtome : nor haue any Bed to lie on, but a Mat, or locke of ſtraw.

Marriages.

Brutiſh trauell.

When any of them die, the kindred, friends, and neighbours aſſemble, and bewaile him all that day in which he dieth, and the ſame day lay him on a Mat, or Seat where hee died ; and if he had any cloth or garment, bury him therein, otherwiſe, naked. They make a hole in the Deſart (or wilde vntilled place) and ſet by him a veſſell of water and a little Mais, to eate and drinke (they ſay) in his iourney to the other life ; and without more ceremonies couer him with earth, and lay on the hole the Mat, or the Chaire in which he was brought to buriall, where they conſume without any more reſpect, although they be new. For they hold it ominous to touch that Mat or Seat in which one died, as boding death or ſome ill. The kindred and friends lament him eight dayes from morning to noone, and an houre at Sunne-ſet : which mourning they performe with dances and drerie ſongs, and ſpeeches, all together on foot in a round circle ; and now and then one of the ſtanders by enters into the middle of the circle, and makes a turne or two, and then takes his place againe : and after the mourning finiſhed, they all ſit in a round and eate and drinke for the ſoule of the deceaſed whom they mourne for, and then returne home. The next kindred are at this coſt.

Funerals.

Lamentations.

Theſe Cafars are cruell and inhumane to one another. If any of them bee ſicke, and haue no wife, kindred, or friends to looke to him, no other Cafar will giue him any thing, but let him ſtarue ; and die forlorne without taking on him any compaſſion, although he ſee him readie to periſh with hunger ; of which ſickneſſe moſt of them die, through miſerable pouertie and im-prouident and prodigality. And when they doe the moſt, ſome friend takes the forlorne man, carries him to the wilde vncultiuated place, and layes him at ſome buſh, or at the foot of a tree, with a little Veſſell of water to drinke and a little Mais to eate if he can; and ſo leaues him till he dyes without more care of him: And although ſome Cafar paſſe by, and ſee him groane or lament, yet will hee giue him no helpe. And this brutiſhneſſe is ſo naturall to them, that ſome, when they feele themſelues deadly ſicke, take order to bee ſo carryed to the Wilderneſſe, and laid at the foote of a Buſh, and their dye like beaſts.

Inhumanitie, famine, and beggarie.

White Caſres.

In Mocaranga ſome Parents as blacke as Pitch, haue white Goldi-locked children like Flemmings. Whiles I was in the Countrey, the Quiteue nouriſhed one white childe in the Court, as a ſtrange Prodigie. The Manamotapa kept two other white Cafres with like admiration. The Cafres ſay ſuch are the Children of the Deuill, begotten of blacke women by him when they are aſleepe. I ſaw at Goa a white Cafar Wench in Dom. Hieronimo Continho his Houſe, giuen him by the Vice-Roy Dom. Franciſco da Gama, and after (he returning Captayne Maior of the ſhips) at Saint Helena: and although both her Parents were Negroes, ſhee was ſo white that her Eyelids were alſo of that colour.

Numerous iſſue, & ſtrange Nurſes.

In the Riuer Inhaguea betwixt Sofala and Luabo, a Negro of ſixtie yeares brought forth and ſuckled a Child. Many Cafres haue two or three children at a Birth. One Peter a Chriſtan Cafar at Sofala, his Wife dying after trauell of a Daughter, nouriſhed the ſame with Milke of his owne breſts a whole yeare, at the end whereof it dyed of Wormes, and then the Milke dryed vp in his breſts. He told mee, that pitie of the Motherleſſe crying Infant, which his pouertie could not otherwiſe releeue, cauſed him to ſeeke to ſtill it with laying it to his breſt, and then gaue it ſomewhat to drinke, which hauing continued two or three dayes his breſt began to yeeld Milke. Perſons of credit in India told me the like of a poore Iew of Ormus, which nouriſhed his Sonne with his breſts, the Mother dying when it was young, in the Caſtle. A Cafar in the Riuer Quilimane had breſts great, and bearing out like a woman which giues ſuck, but had no Milke therein. After my returne to Portugall, I heard by eye-witneſſes of a poore man in Moura, which being ſixtie yeares old, had as much Milke as a woman Nurſe, and gaue ſucke to two children.

Barrets inuaſiõ.

King Sebaſtian ſent Francis Barret, with title of Gouernour and Captayne Generall of a great Armada, to goe to Sofala, to conquer the Golden Mines in the Kingdome of Mocaranga, and particularly thoſe of Manica. In the Conqueſt whereof he made great Warres with the Quiteue, who reigneth ouer the Countrey in the way from Sofala to Manica, the Mines beeing in the Neighbour Kingdome of Chicangua. In theſe paſſages by Land or Riuer, the Quiteue oppoſed himſelfe with many Battels; who notwithſtanding pierced the Countrey to Zimbaohe, and made the Quiteue flie to the Mountaynes, with his women and people. Hee fired the Citie and paſſed two dayes farther without oppoſition. Then the Chicanga ſent him prouiſion (whereof he had great want) intimating his ioy to ſee him in his Kingdome; which hee requited with a Preſent, and came to his Citie, where he was kindly entertayned, a peace concluded with grant of free Merchandiſing. The Portugals had conceited themſelues of ſo much Gold, that they thought they might fill ſackes, and take as much as they liſted; but when they ſaw the trouble, difficultie, and danger of life which the Cafres ſuſtayned to get it forth of the earth and ſtones, their minds were altered. They get it three wayes, one by making Mines (which ſometime fall on them) and following the veines which they know, take thence the Earth, waſhing the ſame in bolls. Another, after Raines, ſearching the Brookes of the fields and hils where they find pieces of Gold: the third, out of certayne ſtones in particular Mines, which haue veines of Gold, which they breake into poulder, and waſh the ſame in bolls, where the reſt runneth away with the water, the Gold remayning in the bottome. This third they call Matuca, and is the baſeſt, the other Dahabo.

Tribute to the Quiteue.

Barret at his returne thought of reuenge vpon the Quiteue, which he preuented with courteſies and preſents: and agreement was made betwixt them, that the Captayne of Sofala ſhould yearely giue the Quitene two hundred Clothes for free and ſecure paſſage thorow his Countrey to Chicanga, which are worth at Sofala more then one hundred Cruzados, and amongſt the Cafres, aboue one hundred thouſand Reys. For this tribute which they call Curua, the Quiteue ſends foure Embaſſadors yearely, called Mutumes; one of which repreſents his Perſon, and he alone is holden in like reſpect and reuerence in that Iourney; the ſecond is called the Kings Mouth, whoſe Office is to deliuer the Kings Meſſage; the third they call the Kings Eye, who is appointed Ouer-ſeer of all hee ſees done, to relate the ſame to him at their returne; the fourth is called the Kings Eare, and is to heare all that is ſpoken on both parts. They are all Lords, and ſometimes the Kings Sonnes, he eſpecially which repreſents his perſon; and are preſented by the Cafres in the way; and bring aboue one hundred others with them in company to carrie the Curua and their Gifts. When they are neere Sofala, the Captayne ſends principall Moores to conduct them to the Caſtle. Before them goe Labourers, and Dancers in great brauery, their heads adorned with plumes of Cockes tayles: next follow Cafres, in a ranke or file, and after them the Mutumes in their order, he being laſt which repreſents the Quiteues perſon, and with him the Xeque or Principall Moore. The Captayne entertaynes them in the Hall, accompanied with all the Portugals in the Towne, and after lodgeth them in the Moores houſes, and furniſheth them with prouiſion ſeuen or eight dayes. The Captayne ſometimes diſchargeth the Ordnance of the Caſtle to honour them; but they deſired the Quiteue, being afraid of that Thunder, to ſend to the Portugalls to hide their Inhuates or Gunnes, when they came to demand the Curua; which he did accordingly. The Cafres pay their Tribute to the Quiteue, in euery Village or Towne making one great heape of Mais for the King; and euery Inhabitant being further bound to labour in the Kings Workes certayne dayes of the yeare, in digging, ſowing, &c. The Merchants pay beſides three of twentie of their Merchandiſe. The Portugals which trade to Manica pay one cloth of twentie, and ſo of other wares.

Quiteues Tribute of the Cafres.

The Moores of Sofala haue cuſtomes no leſſe barbarous. If one of them marrie, he ſeekes out another luſtie Moore which may carrie him on his backe on the Marriage day from his owne houſe to the Brides, albeit it bee halfe a league off, without reſting by the way: for if hee reſts, that day is held vnluckie, and hee muſt ſeeke a ſtronger to performe it without reſting on another day, or elſe the Marriage is marred and broken off. They are alſo very poore, yet will haue a fine cloth to be buried in; which buriall is like that before of the Cafres, in the wild vntilled fields or woods; and in the Graue they ſet Rice, Mais, and Water. Vpon the Graue they ſet two ſtones one at the head, the other at the feet, which they anoynt with Sanders ground and ſmelling: the kindred after continuing to anoynt the ſtones and ſet Rice on the Graue. The Chriſtians there were as ſcrupulous of the Mats or Chaires of their ſlaues deceaſed: but I beſtowed them on the fire or water, and they beſought me of Charitie to forbeare, leſt ſome euils ſhould befall them from the dead. Both Moores, Cafres, and Chriſtians of Sofala are much addicted to Dreames, and giue much credit to them, notwithſtanding they often find them falſe, and are otherwiſe very ſuperſtitious.

Moores of Sofala their cuſtomes.

In the Riuer of Sofala, foure leagues from the Fort is the Iland Maroupe, eight leagues long and a league and halfe broad. The Quiteue gaue the better part of it to Roderigo Lobo, and alſo the title of his Wife, a faſhion of courteſie by him vſed to the Portugals, which he loues, intimating his reſpect no leſſe to them then to his Wife, and the Cafres do much honour to thoſe whom hee honoureth with that Title. That Iland hath excellent game for fiſhing and hunting of diuers beaſts which they take diuers wayes; by digging pits three yards long, halfe that breadth at the top and ſtraighter at the bottome of a mans height in deepneſſe couered with ſtickes, and on them boughes or ſtraw: another way is with multitudes to encompaſſe a place like a halfe Moone; and then put in Dogges which by barking ſcarre the beaſts to the Riuer, where they are prouided with Boats and Aſſagayes for that purpoſe: a third way is when the Riuer ouerfloweth, and all the beaſts betake them to ſome higher places of the Iland, where they are eaſily aſſailed with Arrowes and Aſſagaies in Boats. And there ſtand Elephants, Lions, Tygres, Eunuches, Deere, wild Kine, Swine, and other wild beaſts together, without hurting one another, as they did in Noahs Arke, all awed with the feare of the waters. It hapned that the ſaid Lobo once with other beaſts killed a Lion, which might haue endangered him the loſſe of the Ile, and of his life, had he beene a Caſar; neither dare or will the Cafres bee ſilent. Whereupon hee ſent the Quiteue a Preſent of twentie Clothes and the Lion, ſaying, that he the Kings Wife was ſowing for his Husband, and that Lion came and aſſayled him, whereupon he ſtrucke him with the end of his Spade for his Husbands honor, and hath now ſent him dead to take reuenge on him for the diſcourteſie done to his Wife. His Preſents and preſent wit excuſed him. The Cafres moſt of them haue bad and broken teeth, which (they ſay) comes by the wet and fennie ſoile, and of eating parched Pulſe hote. Moſt of them alſo haue Ruptures, ſome ſo much that thereby they cannot goe.

An honorable title to be called the Kings Wife.

§. III.

Of the Riuer Cuama, and the adiacent Countrey; the Beaſts, Fowles, Fiſhes of thoſe parts: the Hils of Lupata; of the Mongas, Rufumba, Sena, Tete, Maſſapa, and of the Kingdome of Manamotapa; Alſo of Ophir, and of the Golden Mines of Fura.

THe Riuer Cuama is by them called Zambeze; the head whereof is ſo farre within Land that none of them know it, but by tradition of their Progenitors ſay it comes from a Lake in the midſt of the Continent, which yeelds alſo other great Riuers, diuers wayes viſiting the Sea. They call it Zambeze, of a Nation of Cafres dwelling neere that Lake, which are ſo called. It hath a ſtrong current, and is in diuers places more then a league broad.

Cuama or Zambeze a great riuer deſcribed.

Riuer of good ſignes.

Twentie leagues before it enters the Sea, it diuides it ſelfe into two armes, each Daughter as great as the Mother, which thirtie leagues diſtant pay their Tribute to the Father of waters. The principall of them is called Luabo, which alſo diuides it ſelfe into two branches, one called Old Luabo, the other Old Cuama. The other leſſe principall Arme is named Quilimane, (the Riuer Dos Bons Sinaes by Vaſco di Gama, when hee diſcouered India) for the good newes which there he receiued of Moſambique, and therefore he there ſet vp a ſtone Pillar with a Croſſe, and the Armes of Portugall, and named the Countrey Terra de ſancta Raphael.) This Riuer hath alſo another great arme iſſuing from it, called the Riuer of Linde: ſo that Zambeze enters the Sea with fiue mouthes or Armes very great.

Sacumbe Falls.

Chicoua.

Luaba Iland.

Chingoma.

Luabo is ſailed all the yeere long, but Quilimane only in the Winter. They ſaile vp this Riuer Weſt North-weſt aboue two hundred leagues, to the Kingdome of Sacumbe, where it makes a great Fall from Rockes, beyond which they goe vp the Riuer twentie leagues to the Kingdome of Chicoua, in which are Mines of Siluer, which cannot be ſailed by reaſon of the ſtrong current: but from Chicoua vpwards it is Nauigable, but how farre they know not. Luabo hath its name of an Iland ſo called in the Barre thereof in nineteene degrees, which Iland diuides old Luabo on the South from Old Cuama, on the North: and in the Eaſt each ſalutes the other by entercourſe of a ſtreame fiue leagues long, which is the length and breadth of the Iland, peopled with Moores and Cafres. The Pangayos or great Barkes of Moſambique here diſcharge, being too great to paſſe higher, and carrie their goods in a Fleet of ſmall Boates to the Fort of Sena, which is ſixty leagues. The Land on the North-ſide is called Bororo, on the South Botonga. In the midſt of the Riuer are many Ilands, ſome very great; the biggeſt and beſt is called Chingoma; at the end whereof Zambeze diuides it ſelfe into Luabo and Quilimane.

The ſecond Ile of Note is Inhangoma, neere the Fort of Sena, tenne leagues long, and in ſome places a league and a halfe broad. The Portugals ſaile here by day, and faſten themſelues to the Ilands by nights, by reaſon of the Currents and Shallowes. The Cafres inhabiting by the way, come with their Boats and ſell them victuals, whereof the ouerflowing of the Riuer makes the Countrey plentifull. In March and Aprill the fields are ouer-flowne and other Riuers filled from hence; and yet haue they there in thoſe Moneths no raines, nor melting of any Snowes, whereby it appeares that thoſe Inundations come from farre Countries. In this time the Countrey is ſickly, and many Cafres dye of Diſeaſes, then bred by the groſſe Ayres, cauſed by the waters.

It ſeemes that Cuama and Nilus receiues not their waters from the ſame Lake, their increaſe being in ſo diſfering Times.

Riuer-horſe deſcribed.

In theſe Riuers are many Zouo or Zoo; ſo they call the Riuer-horſes, greater then two of our Horſes together, with thick and ſhort hinder-legs, hauing fiue clawes on each fore-foot, and foure on the hinder-foot; the footing large as it were of an Elephant; the mouth wide and ful of teeth, foure of which are remarkable, each aboue two palmes (or ſpans) long, the two lower ſtraight vp, and thoſe aboue turned like a Bores tusks, all foure being aboue a great ſpanne eminent from the mouth. The head is as big as of three Oxen. I ſaw a Skull of one of them at a Cafres doore ſo great that he made his Sonne (a Boy of ſeuen or eight yeares of age) to ſit downe in the mouth vpon the nether jaw, cloſing the jawes together. They liue commonly in the waters, but feed on the Land on graſſe and boughes, and doe much hurt to ſowed fields of Mais and Rice, both with feeding and treading. They are like to our Horſes only in face, eyes, eares, and after a ſort in neighing. They are iealous, and two Males goe not together; if two meete, they fight and ſometimes kill each other: A droue or company of the Females haue but one Male, as a Cocke amongſt Hens, the leſſe fleeing from the greater: and when the Female hath a Male Colt, ſhe keeps alone with her yongling, leſt the Sire ſhould kill it. They bring forth their yong on Land, and hauing licked them well, returne to the Riuer, and there nouriſh them with Milke of their teats like our Mares. Their Hides are much thicker then an Oxe-hide, all of one colour, aſh-coloured gray, moſt of them with a white ſtrake on the face all quite downe, and a ſtarre in the fore-head, haire rough; mane little and ſhort. They are much ſubiect to the falling ſickneſſe, in which they beate their breſts with their left fore-feet very ſtrongly bending the ſame back, and falling thereon, and in that fit are often ſeene and ſometimes ſlaine by the Cafres. They are very bold in the water, and very fearefull by Land, as I haue ſeene by experience. The Cafres take them in pits which they digge and couer with boughes and graſſe, betwixt the Riuer and the Corne-fields, where being falne they are eaſily killed: likewiſe they lay in their Corne grounds, halfe couered with earth, thicke boards of a yard long full of ſharpe Harping Irons; whereon the Horſe treading cannot free his foot, nor goe away, nor breake the boards, and ſo are expoſed to ſlaughter. They alſo ſtrike them in their Boats with Harping Irons faſtned to the Boate by a Cord, which he drawes after him, and after with Aſſagays and Arrowes, being tyred, they diſpatch him, and ſhare this their Veniſon amongſt the Hunters. In my Iourney vp the Riuer Luabo, to Sena, I ſaw ten or twelue Boats in this Horſe-chaſe. The Cafres report that a Lion purſued a Deere to the Riuer, where he without, and a Crocodile in the water, ſeaſed on her, as two Champions of the two Elements, in ſo equall force that neither preuayled, and at (laſt) many Cafres came, and with noyſe parted the Fray firſt, and then the prey.

Alongſt the Bankes runne many wilde Beaſts, Lions, Tygers, Ounces, Rhinocerotes, Elephants, Buffals very fierce, wilde Kine (like to our tame) wilde Horſes, in Mane and Neighing like ours, of cleere Cheſnut colour, ſomewhat dũnne, they haue ſmoothe ſtreight hornes like a Deare without ſnags, and clouen hoofes like an Oxe. The Cafres call it Empophos. They haue wilde Aſſes of Ruſſetiſh colour, with hornes and clouen feete, which they call Merus, the fleſh as good as of Kine. They haue great varietie of Wormes, and many Zeuras made like Mules, and like them holding their heads toward their fore-legs when they runne, clouen footed, with ſtrakes ouer all their body of white and blacke two fingers broad, the haire ſoft and ſmoothe. They haue many Nondos which are like Galician Hobbies, of darke Cheſnut colour, the haire ſoft and ſhort, the backe as if it were broken, the hinder legs ſhorter then the former. They haue Deeres, Hares, many Ciuet Cats; great Apes and Monkeys; the female Monkeys haue their monethly purgation like Women. There is a kind of Dogs, called Impumpes, which goe a companie of them together to ſeeke their prey, ſwift Runners, and ſure Biters, a middle kinde of Curre which barke not, red on the backe and white bellied, running away from men. They bite on the Legs and Rumpes, plucking out each morſell, till with weakneſſe and wearineſſe the prey be their owne. They haue a kinde of Worme, called Inhazaras, as great as Hogs and faſhioned ſomewhat like, with thin and blacke haire, fiue fingers like the fingers of a man on each hinder foot, and foure on the fore-foot, and long nailes thereon. They liue in holes vnder the ground like Conie-berries, with two or three entrances. They liue vpon Ants, putting their tongues (two ſpans and a halfe long, like a wax candle) into the Ant-holes (which they ſcrape with their clawes) whereon the Ants running they pull it in, and ſo feed and fill themſelues. One of our Slaues killed one of them and brought it home; opened it and found no dung in the belly but winde, and ſome haue thought that they liued onely on Aire, and they are often found gaping againſt the winde. The fleſh of them is good to eate, taſtes like Porke, eſpecially the inwards; but without fat. The ſnout is very long and ſlender, long eares like a Mule, without haire, the taile thick and ſtrait of a ſpanne long, faſhioned at the end like a Diſtaffe. They haue great Lizards, of which I haue ſeene one dead a yard and a halfe long, as bigge as a mans thigh: they haue great and ſharpe teeth, a blacke tongue, harped in the end. They bite venemouſly, but their poyſon is not deadly. There are Snakes of eighteene or twentie ſpannes, as bigge as a mans legge; they kill Sheepe, Goats, Swine, Hens, and are very poyſonfull. In the Kingdome of Biri neere Manica, are ſmall Snakes, called Ruca Inhanga, ſo poyſonfull that Trees or Herbs which they bite, wither: and if they bite a quick thing, it ſwels like a Bottle, and in foure and twentie houres, the haires, hoofes, hornes and teeth fall away and it dyeth, except counter-poyſon bee applyed. Of theſe Snakes that King Biri makes a confection to poyſon Arrowes, which drawing bloud cauſe the effects aforeſaid: no Subiect is permitted to vſe the ſame. A certayne Cafre bitten by one of theſe Snakes, got it in his hands, and bit it againe ſo angerly, that they both dyed the ſame day. Their Lions are dreadfull, of a darke gray or durtie aſh-colour, not ſpotted. The Ounce is ſpotted, bigger then a Gray-hound and longer, made much like our Cats, and prey on Cats, and Dogs, and Cattell, which they therefore ſhut vp euery night. There are innumerable Wormes like Beetles, whoſe tailes ſhine in the night like burning coales, and are ſo many that they enlighten all the ayre. There are Rats whoſe biting is venomous, and their ſmell very ſweet of Muske. Great Bats they haue as bigge as Pigeons, which the Cafers kill, flay, and eate as ſauourly as Hens. They haue in the wilde fields blacke Tortoiſes, as bigge as Bucklers, fleſhy and fat, which they boyle and roſt for dainties. They haue many Zangaons, Flies of a ſtrange mixture. They make a Ball of Clay, which they faſten on the Walls or Tiles made full of holes like a Bee-hiue; in each hole they put a little Worme, ſuch as breed in holes, ſome white, ſome blacke, ſome greene, or gray, of diuers kindes, whatſoeuer they finde; and then ſtop the mouth of the Ball or Hiue with new Clay. Theſe incloſed Wormes beget Zangaons with legs and wings, which eate thorow the Clay, and flie out and breede, ſo that of diuers kindes there is made one kinde very wonderfull. They haue diuers kindes of Birds, ſome of faire Colours and Notes, brought vp in Cages; Doues, ſome with golden wings very faire; Geeſe of three ſorts, one greater then thoſe of Portugal, blacke on the backe, and white on the belly, with a red Creſt on the head, hard and ſharpe like a horne; many Cranes; Pelicans as bigge as Turky-cocks, whitiſh, with feet very thick and ſhort, liuing in the Riuer on Fiſh: Rauens as bigge as Peahens, and of that faſhion, but the wings blackiſh, without feathers on the necke and head, couered there with a white ragged skin full of Dandrow; they frequent the Coaſt and Dung-hill for Carrion, and for mens dung. They haue one kinde of Fowles, called Curũanes, as bigge as Cranes, but more beautifull, the back like black Sattin, exceeding white on the belly and breaſt: the neck two ſpannes and a halfe long, couered with fine white feathers like ſilke, which are excellent for plumes: vpon the head it hath a Cap of blacke feathers, very faire (as our gold Finches haue red) and in the midſt thereof a creſt or plume almoſt a ſpan long, of white, fine, ſtrait feathers, equall on the top, and there ſpreading themſelues into a round forme, like a very white Muſhrom with a white ſtalke, and reſembling a Sombrero de Sol (or Indian Canopee to keepe off the Sunne.) The Cafars call this the King of Birds, becauſe their Kings haue ſuch a Sombreiro, and for the greatneſſe and beautie of them.

Ouiedo calls them Tomineios

A Portugall in Sofala told mee, that going to traffique for iuorie in the firme land of Mambone, ouer againſt the Iles of Boçicas, hee had a Monkie in a chaine faſtened to a Blocke or Clog (which weighed ten or twelue pounds) who one day being abroad, there came a bird of prey of a huge bigneſſe, and ſeiſing on him with his talons, carried him away together with his Clog, and not very farre off did eate him, the Chaine and Clog being after found. In thoſe parts, hee ſaid, are many of them which doe much hurt, carrying away Kids, and Pigs, and Hens. There is a kind of birds like Canarie birds, but with long tailes, which liue on wax, and ſearch in the wild vntilled places for Bee-hiues, whereof there are many in holes in the ground, and in hollow trees, and finding any, they goe to the waies to ſhew it to ſome people which paſſe by (which they doe by going before them crying and beating their wings from bough to bough, till they finde the Hiue or Bee-hole) and the people knowing their faſhion follow them, where the one ſhares the Honie, the other the Wax, and the dead Bees therein. They call theſe birds Sazu. I haue ſeene them often enter into our Church to eate the Wax, where the boyes haue catched ſome of them. There is another ſort which liues on the fruit of their owne labours: for they with their hard bills pecke holes on the tops of trees, where the armes begin to ſpread, and therein put a ſtone of a fruit which they eate, which ſprings within, and glues it ſelfe like a new graffe of that Tree (ſo that there are many Trees of two kindes, by reaſon of this foſter-plant of another leafe and fruit) and of the fruit thereof the Birds ſuſtayne themſelues: they are of the bigneſſe and faſhion of Iack-dawes, but grayiſh. There is a Bird, called Minga, greene and yellow very faire, like in forme to Pigeons, which neuer tread on the ground, their feet being ſo ſhort that they can ſcarſe be diſcerned. They ſettle on Trees of the fruits whereof they liue; and when they will flie, they fall downe with their wings cloſed, which they open in the ayre: when they drinke they flie on the tops of the waters; and if they fall on the ground they cannot riſe; they are fat and ſauorie. There are ſaid to be of thoſe Cinçoes there, which liue on Dew, like thoſe in Mexico, of whoſe fine curious feathers they make pictures.

Hiſtorie of Fiſhes.

The Torpedo ſee ſup. 1183. & inf. c. 13. §. 2.

In the Riuer of Sofala is ſtore of Fiſh fat and ſauorie, as Mullets, Needles, Dolphins, &c. One ſtrange fiſh in qualitie is common in thoſe Riuers, which the Portugals call Tremedor, and the Cafres, Thinta, of ſuch nature that no man can take it in his hand whiles it is aliue, for it filleth the hand and arme with paine, as if euery ioynt would goe aſunder; but being dead is as another fiſh, and much eſteemed for good meate. The Naturals ſay, that the skin of this fiſh is vſed to ſorceries. It is medicinable againſt the Cholick, roſted and ground to powder and drunke in Wine. The biggeſt of them is two ſpannes and halfe long, the skin blackiſh, rough and thick.

Taile eating Macone.

Red Herrings.

There is another fiſh bred in Lakes, called Macone, ſomewhat like a Lamprey with holes in the neck and in ſhape, ſpotted like a water Snake. In Summer when the Lakes are drie, he lyes a ſpanne deepe in the earth with his taile in his mouth, which he ſucketh for his ſuſtenance till the raynes come, aboue three moneths. In this manner he eates moſt of his taile, which growes againe as before, at the returne of the waters. The Cafres hunt them, digging the earth of the Lakes for them, and there finde them in this ſort. I haue often eaten of them. The Lakes in Winter are ſo filled, and ſtored from the Riuer with one kinde, called Enxauos, that the Hogs feed themſelues therewith. The Memune is of ſo ſtrong a ſent that none can endure it, but the Cafres; and they eate it, getting great ſtore in the Winter, and ſmoke them for the whole yeeres prouiſion.

Women fiſhes.

Fiſh-ſow bacon.

Pearle Oyſters.

Fiue leagues from Sofala are the Iles Boçicas towards the South, in which Sea are many Women fiſhes, which the people take with great hookes and lines, with chaines of Iron made for that purpoſe; and of the fleſh thereof they hang, and ſmoke it as it were Bacon. The fleſh is good and fat, of which we haue oft eaten, ſodden with Cabbages and dreſſed with its owne ſawce. From the belly to the neck it is very like a Woman; the Female nouriſheth her young with her breaſts which are like a Womans. From the belly downward it hath a thick and long taile with finnes like a Dolphin; the skin white on the belly, on the backe rougher then a Dolphins. It hath armes ending from the elbowes in finnes, and hath no hands. The face is plaine, round, deformed, bigger then a mans, without humane ſemblance, wide mouthed, thick hanging lips as a Hound, foure teeth hanging out almoſt a ſpan, like the tuskes of a Boare (which are accounted very good for the Piles, and againſt fluxe of bloud) their Noſtrils are like a Calfe. There are many Oyſters which breede the Pearle, which they take with diuing, faſtning a Cord to their middle, and holding ſtones in their hands (which when they are at the bottome they let goe) and fill a Basket, which is let downe from the Boat with a Cord, hauing a ſtone in it to make it ſinke, which being full is drawne vp; and then to it againe. They are ſo vſed to it that they will continue halfe a quarter of an houre vnder the water.

Ambargrice.

Ambargrice is ſaid to grow in the bottome of the Sea, and with the mouing of the Sea to bee broken and riſe to the top; wherefore after great Stormes and Tempeſts the Cafres goe ſeeking for it by the Shoares, and find many peeces which they ſell to the Moores and Portugals. They haue three ſorts of Ambar, one very white, called Ambar gris; the ſecond gray, called Mexueyra; the third blacke as pitch, which is often found ſoft, of ill ſmell, which Whales and other Fiſhes eate. The Whales doe not breede it and vomit it, as ſome ſay, for peeces haue there beene found of twentie pound. And 1596. a piece of excellent white Ambar was found neere to Braua, ſo great and high that ſet in the midſt they could not ſee one another, which were on the oppoſite ſides.

The Crocodile.

The Crocodile is fiue and twentie ſpans long, and thicker then a man; they are cowardly on Land, cruell in the water, greene with darke yellow ſpots, and gray, and blacke; they haue many rewes of Teeth, no Tongue. The Cafres call them Goma. They lay many Egges in a hole in the Sand, which the Sunne hatcheth. The Cafres oft find their Egges. They firſt drowne and then eate their prey, wetting euery bit in water, which otherwiſe they cannot ſwallow. Their Liuers are Poyſon: and the Quiteue prohibits for this cauſe to kil any vnder paine of death. Some Cafres ſay, that one Lobe of the Liuer is Poyſon, and the other Counterpoyſon. They lye Morning and Euening on the Sands, a little out of the water with their mouthes open againſt the Sunne to catch Flyes, who inuited thither by the ill ſent, ſucke away the filth, which ſtickes on their eyes and noſtrils, and deuoured for their labour at laſt betweene their teeth. The old ones haue moſſe on their heads. The Cafres catch them with fleſh bayted, on a bigge piece of wood two ſpans long and ſtrait, hidden in the fleſh, and caſt into the water, where the Crocodile deuoures both: the Cafar ſeeing his line ſtirre, drawes him to the banke with his mouth open, not able by reaſon of the wood croſſing his throat to ſhut his mouth, or byte aſunder the Cord; the water entring into his mouth chokes him; which done, they draw him to Land and eate him. They ſtinke * moſt abominably; inſomuch, that I and ſome others paſſing the Riuer from Maroupe tõ Sofala, were faine to ſtop our Noſes, the Cafars laughing, and ſaying it was the ventoſitie or wind-breaking of the Crocodile which came from forth the waters, and yeelded ſuch vnſufferable ſtinke thorow all that part of the Riuer. Alongſt the Riuer of Sofala growes a certayne herbe which they call Miciriri, wherewith the Cafres anoynt themſelues when they go a fiſhing, by vertue whereof the Crocodiles cannot hurt them; it taking away from the teeth their power and dulling them as if they were of Waxe. And for proofe before they vſe it, they put ſome of it on their owne heads, and if it diſables them to chew any thing, they account it good, and vſe the juyce, not daring otherwiſe to enter the Riuer for feare of Crocodiles.

* This ſtinke is a Muskie ſent: ſee Iobſon.

Gabriell Rebello in his Tract of the Maluccos, writes that there are ſome with foure eies, two in the Front, and two in the Throat.

Miciriri a ſtrange herbe.

Alongſt the Riuer grow Cottons and Sugar-canes, which they ſow for backe and belly. In the Countrey grow many medicinable Plants, eſpecially on the Hils of Lupata, where grow wild Douradinha, or guilt Wood, wilde Aguila, very ſweet, Cannafiſtola, and another Plant with which the Cafres purge themſelues, another to ſtanch bloud, another to cure wounds very effectually, another to prouoke mirth and Iollitie.

Lupata Hils.

Zambeze.

Theſe hils of Lupata are mid-way from Sena, to Tete, which are ſixtie leagues diſtant vp the Riuer, ninetie leagues from Sea, very high, craggie, of large extenſion, therefore by the Cafres called, The Backe-bone of the World. The Riuer Zambeze forceth their ſtonie heart to yeeld him paſſage; in ſome places as affrighted lifting themſelues ſteepe vpright in the Ayre, in others with beetle ouer-hanging browes expreſſing their frowning indignation, as if they would fall vpon that preſſing and piercing Enemie, which yet ſwiftly flyeth and lightly eſcapeth, euer continuing that breach in which it neuer continueth. Thus with menacing looks, they face & threaten the waters, and with ſtrait gripes offer in vaine to ſtay their courſe; which hereby indangered, haſte away euer to auoyde that which they euer haſte to obtayne; this mutuall ſtrife cauſing a dangerous Current-combate, not ſo much to each other, as the Boates and Merchants which paſſe this way, often feeling the furie of both till they can feele neither; both men and goods confiſcated to their furie.

Mongas.

Theſe Hils trauerſe the Kingdome of a King called Mongas, which hath this Riuer on the South, and reach to the Lands of Manamotapa. Theſe Mongas are the moſt warlike Cafres, which confine on this Riuer, and haue often fought with the Portugals. In one battell they had an old Witch which came before them, and being betwixt both Campes, tooke certayne powders out of a Pompion rinde which ſhee had brought and threw them into the Ayre againſt the Portugalls, but in the midſt of her Sorceries ſhe was ſlaine with a Falcon ſhot, which ſucceſſe followed the other Cafres which truſted in her, and peace not long after was concluded on both parts.

Rufumba.

Beneath theſe Hils is a goodly Lake called Rufumba, of three leagues circuit, with an Iland in the midſt very high, in which is a great Tamarind or Date * tree, of the bigneſſe and faſhion of a Pine; the leaues whereof open with the riſing, and cloſe with the going downe of the Sunne. In it is a Groue called Chipanga, accounted ſacred, in which the Neighbour Cafres bury their dead, conceiuing that the ſoules departed enter into the Crocodiles (whereof there are great ſtore) and therefore alſo often ſet them meate. There is in this Lake a Spring which ſwelleth out in fiue heads a yard diſtant from each other, of differing heate, and one vnſufferable. The like is in a place aboue Tete, neere the Riuer called Empongo. A ſmall Riuer neere Tete is of Salt water like the Sea, from which it is one hundred and twentie leagues diſtant. In Mocaranga are many ſuch Salt Lakes and Riuers. In the great Riuer Mangania, is a Salt Spring two hundred leagues from Sea, which turnes alſo all the Wood throwne in, into hard ſtones.

* Tamarinheiro.

Crocodile-Purgatory.

Strange Springs.

In Alenteio a Prouince of Portugall at Exuedall, is a ſpring which runs with ſtore of water all Summer, mer, making a good ſtreame which waters many Gardens, and driues many Mills from Aprill to September; and is dry in Winter; and with another greater wonder, the ſame water where it ſtands, turnes into ſtone like Pumice, which euer ſo continueth, and puts on a ſtonie Coate on euery piece of wood, which is throwne into the Spring-head or running ſtreame, and makes it like a Cane of ſtone: as it doth alſo the graſſe; and euery yeare they muſt cleere the paſſages from ſtone.

Sena.

Sena is a Fort of Lime and Stone, furniſhed with Artillery; the Captayne is placed by the Captayne of Moſambique. There were in my time eight hundred Chriſtians, of which, fiftie Portugalls. Seuen or eight leagues from hence on the other ſide of the Riuer, is the high Hill Chiri, which may be ſeene twentie leagues off, the Hill and Valleyes exceeding fertile. To this Factory of Sena, they come from Tete to buy Merchandize with their Gold.

Tete.

Tete is a ſtone Fort ſixtie leagues further vp the Riuer in the Kingdome of Inhabaze, vnder the Manamotapa, the Captayne is placed by the Captayne of Moſambique. In this place were in my time ſixe hundred Chriſtians, of them fortie Portugalls. Theſe one hundred and twentie leagues the Portugalls goe vp the Riuer, and from thence goe by Land with their Merchandize. The Countrey is very fertile, and Portugall wares are here ſold at great prizes. From Tete they goe with their wares thorow a great part of Manamotapa to three Marts, Maſſapa, Luanze Manzono, in which the Inhabitants of Sena, and Tete haue houſes and Factories, thence to ſtore all the Countrey.

Maſſapa.

Maſſapa is the chiefe, where reſides a Portugall Captayne, preſented by the Portugalls, and confirmed by the Manamotapa, which cals him his Great Wife, a name of honour, as before is obſerued. This Captayne holds juriſdiction ouer all the Cafres without Appeale, as alſo ouer the Portugalls in that Kingdome, granted by the Vice-Royes, as all other Captaynes of thoſe parts haue. This Captayne of Maſſapa treats all buſineſſe with the Manamotapa, whoſe Cuſtomer he is alſo, taking one cloth of twentie, in which reſpect the Countrey is free to them. But beyond Maſſapa, neerer the Manamotapa, one may goe without licenſe from the King or the Captayne. The Captayne hath an Azagay of blacke Wood pointed with Gold, for his Enſigne or Rod of Authoritie. The Captayne of Moſambique payes at his entrance to the Manamotapa, three thouſand Cruzados in goods for the three yeares of his Captayne-ſhip, for free Trade in his Countreyes, which they may trauell ſecurely laden with Gold; it beeing neuer knowne that Theeues aſſaile them, or any without the Kings Anthoritie. He ſends his Mutumes to Sena for his Curua, in the ſame manner and order that the Quiteue vſeth at Sofala; but at Sena the Captayne deliuers it to a Portugall (whom he ſends as Embaſſador to the Manamotapa, in the name of the Captayne of Moſambique) in the preſence of the Mutumes.

The Kingdom of Manamotapa.

This Kingdome of Manamotapa, is ſituate in Mocaranga, which in times paſt was wholly of the Manamotapan Empire, but now is diuided into foure Kingdomes, to wit, this of Manamotapa, that of Quitene, the third of Sedanda, and the fourth of Checanga. This diuiſion was made by a Manamotapan Emperour, who not willing or not able to gouerne ſo remote Countreyes, ſent his Sonne Quiteue to gouerne that part which runnes along the Riuer of Sofala, and Sedanda another Sonne, to that which Sabia waſheth, a Riuer which viſits the Sea before the Boçiças: and Chicanga a third Sonne to the Lands of Manica. Theſe three after their Fathers death would neuer acknowledge their Brother his Succeſſor: and the ſame not without yeerely warring with each other, continues to their Poſteritie. Yet is the Kingdome of the Manamotapa, bigger then the other three together. The Cafres call them all Mocarangas, becauſe they ſpeake the Mocaranga Tongue.

Manamotapa 200. leagues ſquare.

This Kingdome of Manamotapa is aboue two hundred leagues long, and as much broad. On the North-weſt he confines with the Kingdome of Abutua (the King and Kingdome haue the ſame name) which they ſay, ſtretcheth thorow the Continent to the borders of Angola. I haue ſeene in Sofala a Commoditie bought by a Portugall in Manica, brought thither by the Cafres of Abutua, which had come from Portugall by the way of Angola. In this Kingdome of Abutua is much fine Gold, but the Naturals being farre from the Portugals, doe not much ſeeke after it, but rather to multiply their cattle of which they haue abundance. On the Eaſt Manamotapa confineth with the Riuer Zambeze, which the Manamotapans call Empando, which ſignifieth Rebelling againſt his King: for ſay they, were it not for the Riuer, the Manamotapa would bee Lord of the Countrey on the other-ſide, to which he cannot paſſe his Armie for want of Boats. On the South-weſt this Kingdome extendeth to the Ocean, into which it enters with a point of Land of ten or twelue leagues large, from the Riuer Luabo, to that of Tendanculo. The reſt of the Lands Southwards to the Riuer Inhanabane, and deuided betwixt the three Kings, which rebelled as is ſaid: from Tendanculo to Sofala, the Quiteue reigneth: thence to the South is the Kingdome of Sabia, vnder the Sedanda, who is Lord alſo of Botonga to the Region Inhambane: within Land at the head of both theſe Kingdomes is Manica vnder the Chicanga, who is on the North-weſt, ſome hundreths of leagues remote from the Sea. On the North-ſide of Manica is Abutua, and on the North-eaſt is the Manamotapa, and to the South is a King called Biri. Thoſe three Kings which rebelled are great, but the Quiteue is the greateſt and richeſt by Trade with the Portugals for Stuffes and Beades (which is the Cafres wealth) and his people are the ſtrongeſt of the Mocarangas, and the beſt Archers and moſt expert at the Azagay.

Trade from the Atlantike to the Eaſt Sea.

Manica, how bounded and rounded.

Neere to Maſſapa is a great high Hill, called Fura, whence may bee diſcerned a great part of the Kingdome of Manamotapa: for which cauſe he will not ſuffer the Portugalls to goe thither, that they ſhould not couet his great Countrey and hidden Mines. On the toppe of that Hill are yet ſtanding pieces of old wals, and ancient ruines of lime and ſtone, which teſtifie that there haue beene ſtrong buildings: a thing not ſeene in all Cafraria. For the Kings houſes are of wood, daubed with clay, and couered with ſtraw. The Natiues, and ſpecially the Moores haue a Tradition from their Anceſtors, that thoſe houſes belonged to the Queene of Saba, which carryed much Gold thence downe the Cuama to the Sea, and ſo along the Coaſt of Æthiopia to the Red Sea. Others ſay that thoſe Ruines were Salomons Factorie, and that this Fura or Afura is no other then Ophir, the name not much altered in ſo long time. This is certayne, that round about that hill, there is much and fine Gold. The Nauigation might in thoſe times be longer, for want of ſo good ſhips and Pilots as now are to be had, and by reaſon of much time ſpent in trucking with the Cafars, wherein euen at this time the Merchants alway ſpend a yeare and more in that buſineſſe, although the Cafars be growne more couetous of our Wares, and the Mines better knowne. They are ſo lazie to gather the Gold that they will not doe it till neceſſitie conſtrayne them. Much time is alſo ſpent in the Voyage by the Riuers, and by that Sea which hath differing Monſons, and can be ſayled but by two winds, which blow ſixe moneths from the Eaſt, and as many from the Weſt. Salomons fleet had beſides thoſe mentioned, this let, that the Red Sea is not ſafely Nauigable, but in the day, by reaſon of many Iles and ſhoalds; likewiſe it was neceſſary often to put to harbour for freſh water and other [a] prouiſions, and to take in new Pilots and Mariners, and to make reparations: which conſidered (with their creeping by ſhoare for want of the Compaſſe and experience in thoſe Seas, and their Sabbath reſts, and their trucke with the Cafres) might extend the whole Voyage in going, ſtaying, and returning, to three yeares. Further the Iuory, Apes, Gemmes, and precious woods (which grow in the wild places of Tebe, within Sofala) whence they make Almadias or Canoas twentie yards long of one Timber; and much fine blacke wood (Ebonie) growes in that Coaſt, and is thence carryed to India and Portugall: all theſe may make the matter probable. As for Peacockes [b] I ſaw none there, but there muſt needs bee ſome within Land; for I haue ſeene ſome Cafers weare their Plumes on their heads. And as there is ſtore of fine Gold, ſo alſo is there fine ſiluer in Chicoua where are rich Mines.

Salomons Ofir.

In all the Regions of Manamotapa, or the greateſt part thereof, are many Mines of Gold; and particularly in Chiroro, where is the moſt and moſt fine. They gather it as is ſaid before of Quiteue. It is paine of death for any Moore which diſcouers a Mine to take away any, beſides his goods forfeited to the King. And if by chance any find a Mine, he is bound to cry out aloud, that ſome other Cafar may come to teſtifie that he takes none: and both are then to couer the place with Earth, and ſet a great bough thereon, to giue warning to other Cafars to auoyde the place. For if they ſhould come there, it would coſt them their liues, although there be no proofe that he tooke any thing. This ſeueritie is vſed to keep the Mines from the knowledge of the Portugals, leſt couetous deſire thereof might cauſe them to take away their Countrey. It is found in poulder like ſand; in graines like beads; in pieces ſome ſmooth as they were melted, others branched with ſnags, others mixed ſo with Earth, that the Earth being well waſhed from them, they remayne like Honiecombes; thoſe holes before full of red Earth, ſeeming as though they were alſo to be turned into Gold. As for that in ſtone, we haue alreadie ſpoken.

Golden fetters. Riches the cauſe of pouertie.

In the Lands confining with Manamotapa, on the North-weſt is the Kingdome of Chicoua, famous for ſiluer Mines. It runs alongſt the Riuer Zambeze. After that Francis Barret was at Sofala to conquer the Mines of Manica, as before is ſaid, he paſſed thence with his company to Cuama, to conquer the Mines of Chicoua, and beneath the hils of Lupata, conquered the Mongas; whereupon other Cafres fled into the Deſarts and hid themſelues. Thus partly by the Riuer, and partly by Land, he came to Chicoua, and ſet downe his Campe, and much deſired to diſcouer ſome Mines. But no Cafar durſt ſhew him for feare of loſing their Countrey, which now they had abandoned to them; neither could they take any whom they might conſtraine by force, or induce any by promiſes to that deſigne. Yet one cheating fellow hauing gotten two ſtones out of a Mine, buried them in another place, and came one Euening to the Gouernour to make ſhew of this Mine, to whom hauing made that ſhew, and receiued a Reward, with promiſe to returne the next Morning, hee left the Portugals in the lurch, and neuer came againe. Thus after much triumph, for falſe hope of a Mine, hee was forced to leaue the Countrey for want of Victuals, and returned downe the Riuer to Sena, leauing there Antonio Cardoſo d'Almeida, and two hundred men with prouiſions, fortified in a Trench of wood to procure that Diſcouerie. The Cafres fained a peace with him (by Treacherie to betray him) and after a League confirmed pretending to diſcouer the Mine, brought them into an Ambuſh, where the moſt were ſlaine, the reſt forced to their Fort, and there beſieged and ſlaine euery Mothers Sonne. The Gouernour melted thoſe two ſtones, and found them to hold three parts ſiluer, and but one of droſſe. They haue alſo Mines of Copper, and of very good Iron, of this making Inſtruments of Warre and Husbandry; of that Bracelets and Braueries for their armes and legs.

Siluer Mines. Barrets Conqueſt.

[a] This by reaſon their ſhips were ſmall, as that infancie of Nauigation required: and beſides they muſt carry the timber from one Sea to the other ouer land to build them: Neither were Hirams men expert in that Sea: and haply two Nations did not well agree to haſten the Voyage.

I will adde out of Barrius, Dec.1.l.10. this of the buildings aboue-ſaid. There are in the Prouince Toroa (called alſo Butua*) the oldeſt Mines in thoſe parts. In the midſt is a ſquare ſtone Fort well wrought of great ſtones; the wall is fiue and twentie ſpannes large, the height not anſwerable. Ouer the Gate are ſeene ſtrange Letters which ſome Learned* Moores ſaw; but could not tell what Letters they were. And about the ſame building are ſome others ſomewhat like it. The Natiues call them Simbaoni, that is, the Court: of which Palace all other the Kings Houſes tooke name: within it is the Simbacaio, a great man which there keepes ſome of the Manamotapas women. The people are barbarous and know not who was the Author of thoſe Buildings, ſaying, it was the worke of the Deuill; for (iudging other men by themſelues) they thinke them impoſſible to Men. The Moores ſaid that our Fort of Sofala was no way comparable. It is from Sofala fiue hundred and ten miles, betwixt twentie and one and twentie degrees of South latitude. In all that Countrey is no ſuch building, and it ſeemed to the Moores very ancient. We may coniecture (ſaith Barrius*) that this is* Ptolemeys Agyſimba, as the names Simbaoni and Simbacaio, ſeeme to import, &c.

Of the Manamotapa his cuſtomes and of his Vaſſals; and of the adioyning Kingdomes, (wherein other Authours haue erred) Of Moſambique, Quiloa, Mombaza, Melinde, Magadoxo: of the Mombos and Zimbas cruelties. Of Quilimane, the Ilands on the Coaſt; the Macuas, and other African Obſeruations.

Although the Manamotapa be greater then thoſe three mentioned, yet hath he not other Kings Vaſſals or Tributaries to him: only ſome of his ſubiects called Encoſſes or Fumos, are great Lords, and haue Tenants ſubiect to them. Botero therefore in his Relations, Guſman, and Oſorius, were deceiued by falſe information, giuing to the Manamotapa, ſo large a Sea-coaſt with tributary Kings; which, I doubt, whether euer there was any ſuch thing; at leſt there is now no memory thereof. Philip Pigafetta * alſo from the Relations of Lopez, hath falſly deſcribed theſe Coaſts and Kingdomes, and hath told a long Tale of Amazons in theſe parts, where neither are ſuch, nor any memoriall of them. They tell alſo of the Royall Enſignes, a Spade of Gold with an Iuorie head to intimate his Husbandry; and two Arrowes, the notes of his Iuſtice; and that he alwayes is accompanyed with Souldiers; but in all they deceiue and are deceiued. As for Bow and Arrowes, it is as ordinary with the Cafres as with the Portugalls, to weare a Sword in their Cities; none of them going out of doores without them. And in like manner when the Manamotapa goeth forth, hee carries in his hand his Bow and Arrowes, as likewiſe doe the Cafres which accompany him, as a cuſtome and not as Warriours. Before him goeth a Cafre beating with his hand on a * great Cuſhion, to giue notice that the King is at hand. When the Manamotapa will not carry his Bow, an Officer called Maſcorira (which is as a Page of the Chamber) carries it; and the King carrieth in his hand an Azagay, or Iauelin of blacke wood with the point of pure Gold, like the Iron head of a Lance, or three pieces of wood, called Fimbos, of two ſpannes and a halfe, wrought and ſlender. And when hee ſpeakes with a Cafre, whom he will haue dye, he lets fall one of theſe Fimbos, and his Infiçes (Executioners) take and kill him with an Azagay; and ſo dye condemned perſons.

* See ſup. pag. 1022. in Lopez, the deſcription of thoſe Coaſts after his forme. Let the Reader take this generall rule to beleeue our Authors in that which they ſaw; in other things receiued by Relations (as this of Lopez) to examine them with eye-witneſſes, as here. For this cauſe, and ſometime for want of eye-witneſſes, we haue briefly inſerted ſuch Relations.

* Coixa

He hath many women, and the principall, which is moſt reſpected, called Mazarira, is his entire ſiſter a great friend of the Portugals, to whom when they giue the King his Curua, they giue a Preſent of Clothes. No man ſpeakes with the King or with this Wife, but hee brings a Preſent; the Portugals giue Beades, the Cafres Kine, or Goats, or Clothes: and when they are able to giue nothing elſe, they bring a Sacke of Earth to acknowledge ſubiection, or a bundle of ſtraw to thatch the Kings Houſes; for all the Houſes in Cafraria are thatched. The Manamotapa which now reignes, is called Mambo, and his ſubiects vſe to ſweare by his life, ſaying, Xè Mambo; and when they ſpeake with him, they ſay Xè dico, as we, Pleaſe your Maieſtie. The Kings Children are called Manambo. Hee hath giuen leaue to our Religious men in his Kingdomes, to conuert and to build Churches; of which they haue built three, to wit, at Maſſapa, Luanze, Bucutu, where liue many Portugals.

The Mazarira or Queene.

As Ioſeph by the life of Pharao.

They ſpeake the Mocaranga Tongue, the beſt Language of all the Cafres; and whereas the Moores of Africa and Arabia, draw their words out of the throat as if they would vomite; theſe pronounce their words with the end of the tongue and the lips, that they ſpeake many words in a whiſtling accent, wherein they place great Elegance, as I haue heard the Courtiers of Quiteue, and Manamotapa ſpeake. Their ſtile of ſpeaking is by Metaphors: and Similitudes very proper, and fitted to their purpoſe. The Manamotapa and his ſubiects, weare a white Periwinkle in the fore-head for a Iewell, faſtned in the haire, and the King hath another great one on the breſt. They call them Andoroz, and they are odious to the Quiteue, as a deuice of the Manamotapan diſtinction. None of them cut the haire of the head or beard; yet are there very few long beards, for their haire growes little, neither doth it turne white till they are very old. They liue commonly ninetie or an hundred yeares. They vſe Auguries and Diuinations by lots, and haue often conference with the Deuill, who after his wont, lyeth often, and yet holds his credit with them. They ſay that the Manamotapa hath a houſe, wherein are hanged condemned perſons, from whom the moyſture drops downe in a Veſſell, till they ceaſe dropping, and then they are buried. Herewith they ſay is made an Oyntment, which he vſeth againſt Witchcrafts and for long life. They haue many other Superſtitions. Dom. George Meneſes, ſent to the Manamotapa a faire Grey-hound; which he much loued and kept about him, and when hee dyed, (as it were by Teſtament) he commanded that as ſoone as they ſaw his breath departed, they ſhould kill the Grey-hound, and a Coſſet Ramme which he had brought vp by hand, to doe him ſeruice in the other World: which was done accordingly, his Queene alſo drinking poyſon (after the cuſtome) for like purpoſe. The moſt of the Manamotapan cuſtomes are the ſame that are mentioned before of the Quiteue, and therefore need no further Repetition.

Grey-hound greatly eſteemed.

About Tete are eleuen Townes of Cafres which haue each their Encoſſe, or Caſar Captayne, all Vaſſals, and ſubiect to the Iuriſdiction of the Captayne of Tete. The Manamotapa hauing conquered thoſe parts, diſtributed to diuerſe diuers gouernments, and theſe to the Captayne of Tete and his Succeſſors, to whom they are ſubiect as to their King, asking his licenſe when they will ſow their grounds; the Encoſſe comming accompanied with ſome of his Cafres, and a Preſent, when they petition him. Before Tete, on the otherſide of the Riuer within Land to the Eaſt and North-eaſt, are two kinds of Man-eating Cafres, the Mumbos and Zimbas or Muzimbas, who eate thoſe they take in warre, and their ſlaues alſo when they are paſt labour, and ſell it as Beefe or Mutton. The Captayne of Tete with his eleuen Encoſſes, and their Companies ſlue ſixe hundred of the Mumbos in a Battell, not leauing one aliue, and carried away their Wiues and Children Captiues. This was at Chicoronga a Mumbos Towne, in which was a ſlaughter-houſe, where euery day they butchered their Captiues; neere which the Portugals found many Negroes, men and women, bound hand and foot, deſtined to the ſlaughter for the next dayes food, whom with many others they freed. They vndertooke this Expedition in behalfe of a friend of theirs, againſt whom theſe Mumbos led by their Captayne Quizura made warre. All the ground before Quizuras Gate was paued with mens Skuls, which he had killed in that war, vpon which they muſt paſſe which went in or out; a thing in his conceit of great Maieſtie. But now he loſt himſelfe and all his. Theſe Cafres about Tete are prone to warres, ſaying, If they dye their troubles are ended; if they liue, they ſhall enioy ſpoyles. Whiles I was there, the Captayne Pero Fernandez de Chaues, wanting Timber for a Church Doores and Porch, pretended warre, and ſummoned theſe eleuen Encoſſes, which came willingly, but were diuerted to this Timber buſineſſe.

Tete Iuriſdiction.

Mumbos and Zimbas, Maneaters. Quære, whether theſe Zimbæ bee not the Agiſimbæ. Butcheries of mans fleſh.

Skull-pauing.

Whiles I was at Sena, the Muzimbas warred on ſome of the Portugals friends, and did eate many of them, who beſought helpe of Andre de Santiago Captayne of Sena; who went and ſet vpon them in their Fort, which they had fortified round with a wall of Wood, with wings (reuezes) and port-holes, and a deepe wide ditch, inſomuch, that he was forced to ſend to Chaues for his beſt helpe, who came with aboue one hundred Portugals and Miſticos, and thoſe eleuen Encoſſes. The Muzimbas by their Eſpials had Intelligence of their comming on the otherſide the Riuer without order, and therefore ſtole out of the Fort by night, and Embuſcadoed themſelues, and ſet vpon the Portugals (which marched halfe a league before the Cafres) ſuddenly and furiouſly; killed them euery one, and cut off their armes and legges, which with their armes they carried priuily to their Fortreſſe. The Cafres arriuing at the Wood, and ſeeing the ſlaughter returned home to Tete, and related the late Tragedie. Theſe Zimbas worſhip no God, nor Idol, but their King, who (they ſay) is God of the Earth: and if it raines when hee would not, they ſhoot their Arrowes at the Skie for not obeying him; and he only eates not mans fleſh. Theſe are tall, bigge, ſtrong; and haue for Armes, ſmall Hatchets, Arrowes, Azagaies, great Bucklers, with which they couer their whole bodies of light wood, lined with wild beaſts skinnes. They eate thoſe which they kill in warred an drink, in their skuls. If any of their owne Cafres be ſicke or wounded, to ſaue labour of cure they kill and eate them.

Sena. Muzimbus.

Zimbas ſtratagem and crueltie.

Religion.

They feaſted with great iollitie that day of their Victory, and the night following; and the next morning early ſallied out of their Fortreſſe, the Captayne arrayed in a Dominicans, Caſula, or Maſſing Veſtment (Nicolas de Roſario, whom they had taken with the Portugals, and carried with them, and put to a cruell death) with a gilt Chalice in his left hand, and an Azagay in his right; and all the other Zimbas with the quarters of the Portugals at their backes, and the Captaynes head on the point of a long Lance; and drumming on the Drumme which they had taken, they preſented themſelues with great cryes to Santiago, and the Portugals, and after this muſter returned to their Fort, ſaying, they muſt goe eate their Tete friends, Santiago and his Portugals (which ſtayed wayting for Chaues, and knew nothing) now terrified with this Spectacle, reſolued (if feare be capable of that word) to haſte away aſſoone as night came, and paſſing ouer

The Portugals flye, and are ſlaine.

Ridiculous reuenge.

the Riuer was perceiued by the Muzimbas, who iſſued out vpon them with great force and ſlue many on the banke, and amongſt others Santiago. Thus of Tete and Sena were one hundred and thirtie Portugals and Miſtiços, with their two valiant Captaines ſlayne, with little loſſe on their part, comming on them with ſudden aduantage: this was done An. 1592. Don Pedro de Souſa Captaine of Mozambique the next yeere, with two hundred Portugals, and fifteene hundred Cafres paſſed the Riuer Zambeze, pitched his Tents where Santiago had done, battered the walls of their Fort with his Artillery; but to no purpoſe, becauſe they were of groſſe wood, hauing on the inſide much earth of that which was taken out of the ditch. Whereupon he reſolued to ſtop vp part of the ditch, which with much labour and perill, and ſome loſſe, he effected; ſome paſſed with hatchets to the foot of the trench, and began to cut; but the Zimbas from the walls ſcalded them with hot water and Oyle, ſpecially the naked Cafres, ſo that none durſt approch againe, as well for ſcalding, as for long Iron hookes which they put out of the port-holes, wherewith they wounded the aſſaylants, and held them faſt, pulling them to the holes, and killing them: ſo that they were forced to retire to their Tents. The next day hee cauſed rods to be gathered, and great baskets thereof to be made as high as their trenches, which were carried thither, and filled with earth, for the Souldiours to ſtand and fight vpon them, that the Zimbas might not iſſue with their ſcalding liquors. Two moneths were ſpent in this warre, when ſome of the Inhabitants of that Riuer (which liked their liuing by wares better then to endanger dying by warres) fained Letters from Sena, written from their wiues, pretending great danger from a Cafer, which came to robbe them in the Portugals abſence; which Souſa beleeuing to bee true, brake vp the ſiege, and paſſing the Riuer by night was perceiued by the Zimbas; who ſallied forth with a great crie, aſſayled the Campe, killed ſome which were behind, tooke the moſt of the ſpoiles with the Artillerie. Thus returned the Portugals with diſgrace, and the Zimbas grew prouder, and after made peace with them notwithſtanding.

The Zimbas like the Iagges, ſup. l.7.c.3. §.3 which ſome vniuſtly confound.

Reward of Traitors, Treaſon loued, the Traitor hated.

One of theſe Zimbas ambitious of that honour, which they place in killing and eating of men, to get himſelfe a name, adioyned others of his Nation to him, and went Eaſtward, killing and eating euery liuing thing, Men, Women, Children, Dogs, Cats, Rats, Snakes, Lizards, ſparing nothing but ſuch Cafres as adioyned themſelues to their companie in that deſigne. And thus fiue thouſand of them were aſſembled, and went before the Ile of Quiloa; where the Sea prohibiting their paſſage, a traiterous Moore came and offered his ſeruice to guide them ouer at the low ebbes of ſpring tides, vpon condition to ſpare his kindred, and to diuide the ſpoyles with him. The Zimba accepted it, and effected his cruell purpoſe, ſlaying and taking (for future dainties to eate at leaſure) three thouſand Moores, and tooke the Citie Quiloa, with great riches, the people eſcaping by hiding themſelues in the wilderneſſe till the Zimbas were gone; then returning to their Citie (antiently the royall Seat of the Kings of that Coaſt) and to this day are ſeene the ruines of their ſumptuous Mezquites and Houſes. Now, for reward of the Traytor, he ſentenced him with all his kindred to be caſt into the Sea, bound hand and foot, to bee food for the fiſhes; ſaying, it was not meet that one ſhould remayne of ſo wicked a generation, nor would he eate their fleſh, which could not but be venomous.

Mombaza deſtroyed.

After this he paſſed along the Coaſt, till he came againſt the Ile of Mombaza; which foure Turkiſh Galleyes of the Red Sea defended, and ſlue many of them with their Artillery: but Thome de Souſa arriuing with a fleet from India tooke the Turkes, and withall deſtroyed Mombaza in the ſight of the Muzimbas. The Captaine ſaid that the Portugals were Gods of the Sea, and hee of the Land; and ſent an Embaſſadour to Souſa, profeſſing friendſhip to them, and requeſting that ſeeing they had honourably ended their enterpriſe, he might beginne his, namely, to kill and eate euery liuing thing in the Iland, which by their conſent he did accordingly, burning the Palme-trees and Woods where many men were hidden, whom hee tooke and eate with all hee could get.

Melinde.

The Moſſegueios.

The Ieſuites call them Imby, ſee my Pilg. l.7.c.7.

Thence he returned to the Coaſt, and went to Melinde, where Matthew Mendez with thirty Portugals ayded the King, and three thouſand warlike Cafres, called Moſſegueios, came alſo to his ſuccour, which came ſuddenly on their backes when they had gotten vp the wall, and were almoſt poſſeſſed of the Bulwarke, and chaſed them with ſuch a furie, that only the Captaine with aboue one hundred others eſcaped; hauing found none in three hundred leagues march, which durſt encounter them. And thus much of the Zimbas (of whom wee haue written more in our Pilgrimage out of the Ieſuites.)

Tres Braças.

Port of Quilimane.

Macuas Cafres.

Quilimane is an arme of Zambeze, ſhallow, a league wide in the mouth, but three fathomes deepe in the barre, which was the reaſon of the loſſe of the great ſhip, Saint Luis: The Land adioyning is playne without any hill. Within the barre aboue two leagues is a Port of good refreſhing, where they reſt themſelues from the heats which are in thoſe parts extreme. Neere it is a Towne of Cafres, and poore Moores, ſubiect to the Portugals which dwell at the Port. All the Countrey within is inhabited by Macuas, Cafres ſubiect to King Gallo, a poore Prince, whoſe brother becomming a Moore, was therefore odious to the Cafres, which thinke baſely of the Moores, and more eaſily turne Chriſtians, holding of them a more honourable conceit. They are blacke and curled, and worſhip not Idols. Next neighbours to theſe are the Inhabitants on the Riuer Loranga, the mouth of which is fiue leagues from Quilimane Eaſtward; a pleaſant Riuer with a turning in, and a good barre, ſtored with fiſh. Many of theſe Cafres paint or raſe their bodies with Iron, and bore holes in their cheekes for a gallantry, as doe thoſe of Moçambique. Bano a Cafre is Lord of theſe parts. They worſhip onely one God in Heauen, beleeue the immortalitie of the Soule, the Diuine prouidence, that all good comes of God, that there are Deuils, and that they are euill; and all this notwithſtanding are great blaſphemers, ſpeaking euill of God when things croſſe them. They haue two wiues (and ſome of them haue alſo Concubines, but their children doe not inherite) on the Marriage day two or three women in the morning come and drumme, ſing, dance before the Brides doore, and others follow, till all the gueſts come with their offerings of Mais, Panike, Meale, &c. which they offer to the Bride, firſt giuing a handfull to the dancers, and lay Meale on one cheeke and the left eye. Thus they ſpend the day, and at night the Bridegroome takes home his Bride, and this is the Wedding ceremonie.

Loranga Riuer.

Gallants faſhion.

Marriages.

They haue Faſts, all day eating nothing, but drinke all the next day and night of their Mais-wine, and of the Wine of a fruit called Puto, very ſweet, like Bacchus ſeruitors. They are much addicted to ſorcerie, and when they will enquire of things loſt, they meet and dance, vſing certaine Charmes till ſome of the companie ſeeme mad and poſſeſſed, the Deuill entring into them and reuealing the thing loſt. They are exceeding full of complements, in which they ſpend much time before they will talke of the buſineſſe they come about to their neighbour. They vſe pitifull lamentation for the dead, who is wound (almoſt after our faſhion) in a blacke cloth, tyed with many liſts of the ſame, and buried with his Armes and Victuals: his Mat or Bed, and Stoole ſet ouer the Graue, and his Houſe burned withall his mouables (no great loſſe) for if any but touch any thing which belonged to the dead, he may not enter into his houſe till he haue firſt purified or waſhed himſelfe in the Riuer. The aſhes and brands left of that burning they lay on the Graue. They mourne eight dayes, beginning at midnight for an houre or two, one beginning, and the reſt following. In the day they goe to the Graue, and lay Meale on one cheeke and eye, and ſet Mais and Victuals thereon, ſaying certaine words, till the Meale be quite gone, neuer waſhing their face; ſo commending their tillage (forſooth) to the dead, which they thinke can ſend them good harueſts.

Diuination.

Funerals.

From Cuama to Moçambique (which are one hundred and thirtie leagues) there is in all the Coaſt no King potent, howſoeuer ſo ſtiled (as are alſo ſome poore Moores) in and of the places where they dwell. But within Land are great Kings of curled Cafres, moſt of them Macuas by Nation. One of theſe not farre from Moçambique is the Maurúca. Theſe Macúas are theeues, the moſt barbarous and ill diſpoſed Cafres of all that Coaſt. Their ſpeech is rough and high, as if they fought. They file their teeth aboue and below as ſharpe as Needles. They cut and raſe their fleſh, bore holes in both their cheekes, from the tips of their eares almoſt to the mouth, with three or foure holes on each ſide, each bigge enough to hold a finger, thorow which their gummes are ſeene with their teeth, the ſpitle ſlauering forth. For which, and for the more gallantry they weare bungs of Wood, one in each hole; and he which can haue them of Lead is a complete Gallant, for that metall is much eſteemed. They haue alſo two holes in the lips; in the vpper of which they put little pegs of wood as big as a Hens quill, of a finger long, ſticking right out like a Naile; in the lower lip they weare a Leaden bung, ſo cloſe and heauy that the lip falls to the beard, ſhewing the gummes and filed teeth, that they ſeeme Deuils. They weare their eares alſo bored round with many holes, in which they haue pegs of wood, ſlender like knitting needles, a finger long, which makes them looke like Hedge-hogs. This their gallantry; for if they are ſad, or croſſed with any diſaſter, they leaue all theſe holes open.

Maurúca King of Barbarous people.

Lothſome brauery; the fitteſt Glaſſe for our Gallants to view themſelues in; whoſe mindes are more deformed then theſe Blackes in bodie.

They are ſtrong, and able to indure labour. They goe naked both men and women; and when they are apparelled, it is with a Monkies skinne, or of ſome other beaſt, from the waſte to the knees. Their cuſtomes are like thoſe Cafres of Loranga. Of the Macúas of the Riuer Quizungo, when a Maide is to be married, ſhee goeth into the wilderneſſe * a whole Moone to bewayle her virginitie, viſited of her friends, and returning home euery night: betimes in the morning going to her wilde taske againe. As ſoone as the new Moone appeares, a great feaſt is made, and the next day ſhee is deliuered to her husband without any more ceremonie.

* Matos which wee tranſlate Wilderneſſe, is the vntilled wilde ground neere their dwellings, as well as the maine Deſarts.

This Maurúca vſed ſuch cruelty in warring vpon, and eating thoſe they killed or tooke in thoſe parts, that they eaſily chaſed away the antient Macúas, and enioyed their Countrey: and giuing themſelues onely to rob, and not to till the grounds (for they were lazie lubbers though ſtrong robbers) about An. 1585. they grew iniurious to the Portugals, cutting downe their Palme trees, ſtealing, begging, burning, killing, eating, as they ſaw occaſion. Inſomuch that Nuno Velho Pereira ſent from the Ile fortie Portugals and others to the number of foure hundred, which came ſuddenly on the Towne of Maurúca three or foure leagues diſtant, deſtroyed and burnt it. But the Macúas, which eſcaped, ioyned head, and lay in ambuſh for the Portugals in their returne, which was ſecure and diſordered, and ſlue them all, two or three Portugals, and a few Cafres excepted, which hiding themſelues, two or three dayes after eſcaped to Moçambique, çambique, and told of their fellowes diſaſtre, whom the Macúas had ſlaine and eaten. Many ſuch chances betide the Portugals it thoſe parts, through their ſelfe-confidence, and little accompt of the Cafres. The warres continued long, till Maurúca ſeeing the neceſſitie, made peace with the Portugals, forbad eating of mans fleſh, and enioyned his people to till the ground; which rather for feare of him they obſerued, then any wayes thereto enclined, ſtill in ſecret vſing that forbidden food, as I haue knowne particular inſtances, of ſome, which when they had ſtollen, and could not ſell at their price, they haue killed and eaten.

Two Elements wanting.

The Ile of Moçambique is in fifteene degrees to the South; aboue halfe a league long, and but a quarter broad. At the point and entrie of the Barre is the Fort with a Portugall Captaine and Garriſon. It hath foure Bulwarkes, two to the Sea, and two to the Ile, with faire Peeces of Artillery. Within is a Ciſterne which holds two thouſand Pipes of water, into which the raine runneth from the tiles and walls by Conduit-pipes. In the midſt is a Church. This is one of the chiefe Forts of India; built by a good Architect, An. 1558. There is alſo an Hoſpitall, two Hermitages, a Couent of Dominicans, a poore Towne of Moores. The Iland is drye, and without wood: the water they fetch three miles without the Barre from a Spring in a Bay called Titangone, which ſerues to water all the Indian ſhips. Their wood they fetch from the Mayneland, in which they haue Gardens of variety of fruits. It was at firſt ſickly, but now by Gods goodneſſe is proued healthfull.

Manna: this was a miracle in Moſes time, as their waters, Quailes, Garments, &c. not by procreation of new kinds, but by miraculous diſpoſition; that it ſhould follow them; breed wormes, and yet in the Tabernacle be euerlaſting, not fall on the Sabbath, &c.

The Ile of Quirimba is ſixty leagues diſtant along the Coaſt on the Indian ſide. It is halfe a league wide, and a league long, plaine, without hill, all ſowed with Mais and other grayne, whereof the Iland is fertile. It hath a walled Fort, and a faire Church of the Dominicans, which ſerues for a Pariſh Church to the Ile, and all the Coaſt as farre as Cape Del gado, who are bound there to confeſſe and communicate. In this Coaſt are the Iles of Cabras, Fumbo, Quirimba, Ibo, Matemo, which ſtill ſheweth the ruines of the former Moore-Inhabitants. Foure leagues thence is Macaloe, and from hence as farre is Xanga, and aboue two leagues from it is Malinde, betwixt which and that of Cabo del gado are two little ones. Others there are, but not ſo inhabited, one of which is called, Rolas, for the ſtore of thoſe birds which yeerely breed therein, very hurtfull to the Corne-grounds; and therefore the Ilanders of other Iles goe thither to deſtroy their egges and young. Theſe Ilands are very wholſome and of ſubtile aire, and therfore ſubiect to the diſeaſe, called The aire, which they cure with Elephants dung, Muſtard, Garleeke, and a ſeed called Ingo, fuming him therewith three or foure times a day, &c. Their Kine haue a bunch on the ſhoulder as a great Pumpion, which falls on the necke, the fleſh whereof eats like a Cowes vdder, very fat. There are ſtore of Swine, Goats which haue young twice a yeere, two or three at each burthen, Palme trees for Wine and Cocos, with other fruits, fowles, and prouiſions. There growes alſo Anil or Indico, which the Mooros vſe to dye their clothes, of which they weaue ſtore in theſe Ilands. In the wilderneſſes of the Ile Cabo de gado is ſtore of Manna, procreated of the deaw of Heauen falling on certaine trees, on which it hardens as it were Sugar candide, ſticking to the wood like Rozin, and hanging on the leaues, gathered and ſold in iarres by the Inhabitants. It taſts ſweet as Sugar, in India they vſe to purge with it. I haue often been in the place, and gathered it with my hand. It growes only on one kind, although there be many other trees in the Iland. In that Coaſt alſo blacke Corrall growes in the bottome of the Sea with ſmall roots or beards, whereby it ſeemeth faſtned. A Mariner gaue mee a piece two ſpans and a halfe long. When it comes out of the Sea it is ſoft and pliable, but by the aire hardned. In thoſe Iles they finde Cocos which are ſaid to grow in the Maldinas on ſhort trees in the Sea alway couered with water, falling off when they are ripe, and riſing to the top, carried by the windes and currents to ſome Coaſt. All the Continent is peopled with curled Cafres, ſome Macúas, others not vſing raſing, holes, or hornes, but all ſhauen on the head. In the Countrey within the Kingdome of Mongallo, a Lord of fertile Countries, and of many Vaſſals. The Ile of Saint Lawrence lyes ouer againſt this Coaſt, three hundred leagues long, and ninety broad: a Straight of ſixtie leagues running betwixt.

Foure ſcourges

Entaca.

In Ethiopia foure generall plagues haue beene obſerued in our time, the Warre of the Zimbas, An. 1589. the Graſ-hoppers, which couered the earth, and inuolued the aire in a cloude when they aroſe, which eate vp all their labours in the fields and gardens, leauing them as if they had beene burned, the trees not able to beare fruit till two yeeres after, whence many died of Famine; and this was the third plague which cauſed them to ſell themſelues onely for ſuſtenance; and one of their children for a pecke of Mais: The fourth plague was the Small poxe, which killed many; a diſeaſe in thoſe parts like the plague, killing all in the houſe where it came; their readieſt cure being to let bloud, without bleeding, or in much bleeding, none eſcaping. The plague is vnknowne and vnheard of amongſt them. The Negro women may be accounted another plague, ſpecially the Portugall ſlaues, which conceiuing will cauſe abortion with a certaine herbe, ſo poyſonfull that it conſumes and rots them, except they by copulation beſtow this diſeaſe on ſome man, who is preſently payned in his ſecrets, and hardly eſcapes death. The remedie to this Entaca (ſo they call the diſeaſe) is the iuyce of a counterpoyſon herbe taken the ſame day; both which herbes are plentifull and well knowne in thoſe parts. Another infirmitie, but without payne, befalls both Portugals and Cafres in Mozambique, which is blindneſſe by night, beginning at Sunne-ſet, and ceaſing with the Sunne-riſing, in which time they which are thus taken, ſee nothing though the Moone ſhine bright. If the belly or head ake, the Cafres bind the part affected hard with a Cord.

Night-blindneſſe.

The Cafres will take Elephants both in pits (before deſcribed) couered with boughes and graſſe; and watching where he ſleepes (ſpecially by Moone light) as he lyes on the ground, and thruſting into his belly by the genitories an Aſſagay, made purpoſely with the Iron halfe a ſpan broad and two ſpans long. They may ſteale vpon them napping, becauſe they ſteale not their naps, but make ſuch a noyſe that they at once bewray and betray themſelues to the Hunters, which hauing wounded the Beaſt, fled away, and next day ſearch by the bloud what is become of their prey. They kill them for the teeth and to eate the fleſh. Iuory is the principall commoditie of this Coaſt, aboue three thouſand Arrobas being yeerly carried to the Indies. I ſaw in Sofala two teeth of one Elephant which weighed ſixteene Arrobas, eight a peece.

Elephants ſleepe not by Trees, but on the ground.

Arroba is 32l.

The ſhipping from Cabo das Correntes to the Straight of Mecca, is made by Moores of wood, which they cleaue and ſhaue, neuer making but two Boards of one Timber, when if they could ſawe they might make many. They ſew them with threed of Cairo * and faſten them with nayles of wood: their Cordage and Cables are of Cairo. The greateſt they call Ships, the middle ſort, Pangayas; the leaſt Almadias, which are of one Timber (as the Canoas.) The Sayles are made of the leaues of Palme or wilde Date Trees. The Mariners are Moores, blacke, barbarous, wine bibbers, hauing nothing of Moores but the name and circumciſion, not knowing nor keeping the Law of Mahomet. They celebrate each new Moone with a drunken feaſt; are giuen to Diuinations; will caſt out nothing in a ſtorme although the Veſſell be ſurcharged, ſaying, the Sea is inſatiable; when they want Winde they whip the Ship with Cordes on the Poope and Sides, with crying and chafing, as if the Ships had as much ſenſe as themſelues, or as themſelues were ſenſeleſſe, ſaying, they are lazie and therefore the Winde leaues them; and they mocked me for reprouing this their foolerie. Their Wares are blacke Clothes, and earthen glaſed Beades of all colours. The Cafres ſteale children, and coozen the elder, enticing them to the Shoares, and there ſell them to the Moores and Portugals. The iuriſdiction of the Captaine of Moçambique is from Cape Correntes to Cape Delgado, three hundred leagues of Coaſt.

From this laſt Cape to the Line is the Coaſt of Melinde, which is of the iuriſdiction of the Captaine of Mombaça. The firme Land is inhabited by Cafres, differing in Language and Cuſtomes, agreeing in barbarouſneſſe. Along the Kingdome of Mongallo runnes to the North the Kingdome of Munimugi, a great Cafre which confines on the South with the Lands of Mauruca and of Embeoe, and on the North with the Abyſſine. The principall Iland of this Coaſt, Quiloa, hath beene in times paſt the Seat Royall, the King of the whole Coaſt reſiding there, who is now a pety Prince; and Mombaça is the chiefe Ile and Citie, where the Portugals haue a Fort, the reſidence of the Captaine of the Coaſt of Melinde. Pemba is an Iland about eight leagues from the Shoare, and ten long, plentifull of Rice and Kine, Fruits and Wood: ſometimes ſubiect to the Portugals till the pride and lazineſſe of ſome made the people rebell, and could neuer after be regayned. In the Ile of Pate are Pate, Sio and Ampaza, three Cities gouerned by ſo many Kings, tributarie to Portugal. Ampaza hath beene beſt builded of any Citie in thoſe parts, but deſtroyed by the Portugals, the Citie ſacked and burnt with eight thouſand Palme-trees, which grew about it, cut downe. The Ile of Lamo hath great Aſſes, but of little ſeruice. This Iland was chaſtiſed when Ampaza was deſtroyed, and Mombaça alſo, by Martin Alfonſo de Mello. The King of Ampaza was ſlaine, and his head carried on a Pole at Goa in triumph. When he was gone, Mirale Beque the Turke came with foure Galleys out of the Red Sea, and infeſted that Coaſt, till the Zimbas and the Portugals ended the buſineſſe with a new Armada, the Portugals captiuing and ſpoyling, the Zimbas eating the Turkes and Inhabitants. The King of Lamo for betraying the Portugals to the Turkes were beheaded. The Ile and Citie of Mandra which had denyed the Portugals to land, ſaying, the Sunne onely might enter there, was ſacked and two thouſand Palme-trees cut downe. In the Coaſt of Melinde they are great Witches. The Moſſegueyos liue of their Kine, which they oft let bloud both to preuent the garget, and to make therewith a kinde of pottage with milke and freſh dung of the ſame Kine, which mixed together and heat at the fire they drinke, ſaying, it makes them ſtrong. The Boyes of ſeuen or eight yeeres weare Clay faſtned on the hayre of the head, and ſtill renewed with new Clay, weighing ſometimes fiue or ſix pounds. Nor may they be free hereof till in Warre or lawfull fight hee hath killed a man, and ſhew to the Captaine ſome tokens of that fact; which only makes them free and Knights of their caſt. Hereupon they grow audacious, and proue dreadfull to others.

Zanzibar. Deuilliſh ſorcerie.

In the Ile of Zanzibar dwelt one Chande a great Sorcerer, which cauſed his Pangayo, which the Factor had taken againſt his will, to ſtand ſtill as it were in defiance of the Winde, till the Factor had ſatisfied him, and then to flye forth the Riuer after her fellowes at his words. Hee made that a Portugall which had angred him, could neuer open his mouth to ſpeake, but a Cock crowed in his belly, till he had reconciled himſelfe: with other like odious ſorceries.

Sea Monſter.

From Magaloxo to Sacotora one hundred and fiftie leagues is a deſart Coaſt, and diſhabited without Riuers. In which Deſarts breed the great birds, called Emas, which breed on the Sands, and haue but two young ones, as Pigeons. Their ſtomacks will conſume Iron and Stones, and flye not but touch the ground with their feet, running with their wings ſpread, as lightly as other Birds flye. They are white, aſh-coloured; their egges white, holding almoſt three pints. Here I may mention alſo a Sea monſter, which we ſaw neere the Riuer Tendanculo, killed by the Cafres, found by Fiſher-men on the Shoalds. Hee was aſh-coloured on the backe, and white on the belly, hayrie like an Oxe but rougher: his head and mouth like a Tygre, with great teeth, white Muſtachos a ſpan long, as bigge as briſtles which Shoo-makers vſe. He was ten ſpans long, thicker then a man; his tayle thick, a ſpan long, eares of a Dog, armes like a Man without haire, and at the elbowes great Finnes like a fiſh; two ſhort feet nigh his tayle, plaine like a great Apes, without legs, with fiue fingers a ſpan long on each foot and hand, couered with a skin like a Gooſe foot, the hinder feet hauing clawes like a Tygres; neere his tayle were the ſignes of a Male, his Liuer, Lights and Guts like a Hogs. The Cafres ſeeing our Slaues flay him, fell vpon him and eate him; which they which ſpare nothing had not done before, becauſe they thought him (they ſaid) the ſonne of the Deuill (hauing neuer ſeene the like) the rather, becauſe hee made a noyſe which might be heard halfe a league off.

A neſt of great Birds.

In the ſame journey comming to the Riuer Luâbo in Auguſt 1590. the Mariners going aſhoare for wood, brought two Birds new feathered, whitiſh, found in the neſt, like to Eagles in the eyes, bill and talons, but much greater then great Eagles, contayning nine ſpans from the end of one wing to the end of the other (I cauſed them to be meaſured) wherby it appeares that in their full maturitie they are of huge greatneſſe. They killed them, for feare the old ones ſhould come.

WHat the Ieſuites haue done for the aduancing of Chriſtian Religion with the Abaſſines, yee haue heard. In the yeere 1560. Conſaluus Sylueria a Portugall Ieſuite with two companions, went from Goa for Manamotapa, a Region abounding with gold, but deare bought by reaſon of the Ayres vnwholſomneſſe, and the want of neceſſaries for food and health. They came firſt to Inhambane, and there fell ſicke, but recouering proceeded to Tonge, and there baptiſed the King, his Wife, Siſter, Children, Kindred, and great Men, with moſt of the People in few dayes. Thence Conſaluus went to Manamotapa, leauing his Fellowes with the King, which built the Church of the Aſſumption: one of them by want of health was forced backe to India, the other ſtayed there two yeeres. Gonſaluus paſſed by Mozambique, and came to the Riuer Maſuta ninetie leagues from thence, where eſcaping a dreadfull tempeſt, hee went on ſhoare with his folding Altar, and ſaid Maſſe on the Strand, the heate being ſo vehement that the Portugals could ſcarſe indure to tread on the ground, and Conſaluus his head brake out with puſhes as he was in his Holies: which when they would haue medicined, præclaro ſui ipſius * odio incenſus, hee refuſed all, and permitted himſelfe to the cure of Nature and Time. Thence they went to the Riuer Colimane, and were well entertayned by Mingoaxanes, King of Giloa a Moore, little caring for his Mahumetrie, and giuing them leaue to preach in his Kingdom. But they haſted to Manamotapa, and ſo paſſed to Cuama, and then gaue himſelfe to priuate deuotions eight dayes, onely once a day eating a handfull of parched Corne and drinking a draught of Water.

From Sena he ſent to the Manamotapa; meane while the King of * Inhanior offered himſelfe to Chriſtianitie, but he comforted him, and refuſed till he had firſt beene with the Manamotapa. Antonie Caiado was ſent for him, who truſſed vp his Holies, carrying them on his ſhoulders. When he was comne, the Manamotapa ſent him Preſents, Gold, Kine and Seruants, which all he thankfully refuſed. When he came, he entertayned him as neuer any man, and bringing him into his inner roome, cauſed him to ſit on the Carpet by his Mother. Hee offered him his choiſe of Grounds, Kine, Gold, Women; Conſaluus anſwered, that hee would haue nothing but himſelfe; the King thereat wondring and friendly with promiſes diſmiſſing him. One had ſeene on the Altar a fayre picture of our Lady, and told the King that Conſaluus had brought with him a beautifull Laſſe, for which the King ſent, and he carried it wrapped in a precious cloth, and tels him it is the picture of the Mother of God, the King of Kings. He worſhips it and begs it; Conſaluus grants, and placeth it in the Kings houſe, and trimmes vp as it were a Chappell for it. Fiue nights, ſay the Portugals, the bleſſed Virgin appeared to the King in that forme in his ſleepe; and fiue and twentie dayes after his comming, the King was baptiſed by the name of Sebaſtian, the Queene his Mother by the name of Marie. The ſame day he ſent one hundred Kine to Conſaluo, which were diſtributed by Caiado to the poore. Three hundred of his chiefe men followed his example. Much victuall was ſent into Conſaluus, but he ate no fleſh, liuing only on wild fruits, herbs, and boyled Corne in ſmall quantitie.

But foure Moores enuying theſe proceedings, and being gracious with the King, perſwade him that Conſaluus was ſent from India to betray him, and to make way for the Portugals to take away his State; adding, that Conſaluus was a Sorcerer, and whomſoeuer hee waſhed on the head with his forme of words, he made to become his. And if Conſaluus went away in ſafetie, his Subjects would kill one another like mad men. By their perſwaſions the King cauſed Conſaluus to be murthered, his ſtrangled body being throwne into the Riuer, and fiftie others were ſlaine, which on that laſt day of his life he had baptiſed. Two dayes after repenting of this fact he ſlue two of the Moores, the other two being fled. Long after, no Ieſuites (ſaith Iarric) were ſent hither, becauſe the Dominicans had vndertaken the Conuerſion of thoſe parts, of whoſe labours yee haue heard ſomewhat before in Santos, which was one of them. Iarric hath ſince told vs of Petrus Toarius and Ludouicus Goez (in reſpect of theſe better hopes) ſent An. 1562. and to them was ioyned Andrew Fernandez the companion of Conſaluus, who had ſtayed at Inambane. Theſe three went to the Manamotapa, and ſtayed there certayne yeeres, till they were ſent for back to India, King Sebaſtian intending to warre on the Manamotapa, for the ſaid Conſaluus Syluerius his death (being the ſonne of the Count Sortellane) and for other cauſes. Thus after their returne An. 1570. Francis Barret was ſent with a ſtrong Fleet; who being dead of poyſon (with others) Fernand Monroy ſucceeded, who dying ſoone after, the Ieſuites then in the Campe could doe nothing. An. 1608. the people rebelling, the Manamotapa fled to the parts neere Tete a Portugall Fort, and by helpe of the Portugals ſubdued the Rebels. Whereupon he gaue the King of Portugall the ſiluer Mines of Achicoua, Iacobus Simoneſius taking poſſeſſion in his name. Hee gaue them leaue alſo to build Forts where they pleaſed. The Portugals thinke meete not to forget the Ieſuites in this occaſion, and Francis Gonſalues with Paulus Alexius are deſtined to that deſigne, the whole Kingdome ſeeming a field white to the Chriſtian Harueſt, and onely wanting Labourers.

Of Barrets acts in thoſe parts, you read before in Santos.

Of Angola and Congo you heard before: the ſtate of Angola (for of Congo we haue no later intelligence then that of Lopez) after the death of Panl Diaz receiued ſome alteration. It is the manner in thoſe parts that the Sobæ or Gouernours are as Princes of their Prouinces, and in the Kings Court, whom they acknowledge their ſupreme Lord, haue one of his Grandes, to whom they haue recourſe in all difficulties (like the Protectors amongſt the Cardinals) who in ſome manner diſpoſeth them and their ſtates. Thus Diaz appointed ouer the Angolan Sobæ by him ſubdued, ſome of his Portugall Gentlemen, ſometimes ſome Ieſuite at the requeſt of the ſubdued, ſeeing in what reſpect they were beld with the Generall. But ſome Courtiers in Spaine perſwaded the Catholike King, that this dependance of mediate Patrons ſhould bee taken away from them all: whereupon enſued commotions, and contempt of the Portugall name; that in the yeere 1600. Iohn Rhoderick Cotinius being ſent Gouernour, of one hundred and fiftie Sobæ ſtipendaries before to the Portugall Crowne, not one continued his allegeance. Hee reduced ſome, but (with many others running like Fates) the vnwholſomneſſe of the ayre killed him; the Succeſſor being named in a Boxe (the key whereof was kept by George Pererius a Ieſuite) Emmanuel Pererius. Hee ouerthrew Caſucheus the chiefe Soba with the Cambamban, whoſe Countrey is rich in Mines, in which he built a Fort neere the Riuer Coaxa ſeuentie leagues from Sea (all nauigable from Loanda thither in fiue dayes) and placed therein two hundred and fiftie men, being but thirteene leagues from Dongo the ſeate of the King of Angola, who confirmed to him that his Conqueſt. This Conqueſt of Mines make hope of the conqueſt of Mindes to the Chriſtian Faith (how many are by theſe Thornes choked, and reconquered from it?) and the Ieſuites are ſaid to ſtudy the language that they may preach the Goſpell to them. Anno 1606. Francis Gois, Edward Vaz, and Antonie Barrius Ieſuites, were ſent thither; their Ship was taken in the way by the Hollanders, who ſet them in the Boat which brought them to Loanda, being terrified by two Whales which riſing neere the Boat, yet paſſed without hurt. Now were new miſſions of Ieſuites; one of which comming to the next Soba, taught their children their prayers, helping their memories with knots tyed in cords. There were in that Town two thouſand baptiſed, perſons all ignorant of the Faith. There was an Idoll Temple with Images of Men and Women; with the heads of Goats and Snailes, and the feet of Elephants, and other wilde Beaſts, which the Ieſuite cauſed to be burned, the people being before made beleeue

He baptiſed thirtie and taught the reſt their Catechiſe, and proceeded to the next Soba, Lord of foure other Sobas, who had beene before baptiſed of Secular Prieſts, yet onely had the bare name of a Chriſtian. This Soba had three hundred wiues for oſtentation of his greatneſſe. No man could make the ſigne of the Croſſe. And when the Prieſt would build a Church there, the Soba ſaid he would conſult about it, but gaue no anſwer. He found two Idoll Oratories, but no Idols in them, the people hauing before hidden them in the Woods, leſt they ſhould haue like fiery fortune with the former. Hee found here alſo certayne Chibadi, which are Men attyred like Women, and behaue themſelues womanly, aſhamed to be called men; are alſo married to men, and eſteeme that vnnaturall damnation an honor.

About the ſame time, an Embaſſador from the King of Cacongo came to Loanda, with a Preſent to the Biſhop and Requeſt from the King, to ſend ſome Ieſuites to baptiſe him, and all his Kingdome. The Captaine therefore with the Biſhop, goe to the Rector of our Colledge, and obtayne Gaſpar Azeuered, and Francis Gois to bee ſent thither. Cacongo is adjoyning to Congo, and to the great Macoco King of the Anziqui, hauing alſo the Kings of Angola, Bungo and Biango Neighbours. It is a large Kingdome, and by the Towne of Pinda eightie leagues diſtant from Saint Thome, is entrance vp the Riuer Zaire in foure dayes vnto it. The King of Loango hath alſo ſent for Ieſuites, to bee by them inſtructed and baptiſed: but what is done in both theſe Kingdomes, I haue not (ſaith Iarric) receiued intelligence.

Now concerning Guinea, that name is giuen to all the Atlantike Coaſt of Africa, from Senega, called by the Ancients Stachiris, in ſixteene degrees of North latitude, to Angola in thirteene South: and is diuided into the Higher from Senega to Congo, and The lower, contayning Congo and Angola. Ouer againſt the higher Guinea are the Ilands of Cape Verd (Ptolemie calls it Arſinarium) ſinarium) which An. 1446. the Portugals firſt inhabited, twelue in number, the chiefe that of Saint Iames, in which is a fortified Citie, chiefe ouer thoſe Forts and Habitations which the Portugals hold in that higher Guinea; the Biſhop thereof ſubiect to the Archbiſhop of Lisbon. It is in fifteene degrees Mountaynous, hauing no rayne but in Auguſt, September and October, fertile of fruits, hath ſtore of Pompons (euery moneth) Sugar Canes, Horſes.

Guinea, deſcribed and diuided.

Saint Iago.

Saint Thome is of vnwholſome ayre, and Praia vnſafe againſt the enemie. In all the Coaſt of Guinea are Tangos maos, or Lancados, of Portugall originall, but degenerated into barbarous rites and cuſtomes, which trade in all thoſe parts for Hides, Iuory, Wax, Gold, Gumme, Ambargriſe: in ſome places they are alſo naked and raced like the Sauages.

King Philip the third procured by Letters to Aquauira, the Generall of the Ieſuites A. 1604. that of that Order ſhould be ſent into this Guinea, Balthaſar Barerius, Emmanuel Barrius, Emmanuel Fernandius. Theſe came to Saint Iames, and remedied the cuſtome of viſiting Wiſards and Sorcerers, which was there common, and the wicked abuſe of Baptiſme, in which three or foure hundred ſometimes, ſeuen hundred of their Slaues were at once waſhed without any Doctrine of Chriſtian dutie premiſed, and preſently tranſported to Braſile or India, ignorant of all things. Likewiſe they procured libertie to many Free-men, which had beene by the Tangos maos or Guineans ſtollen, and vniuſtly ſold, they intending and attending ſuch preyes, no leſſe then Hunters and Hawkers their game. One of them dyed of the ſickneſſe of the Countrey: Barerius was ſent to the Continent, and writ thence to Barrius that in Ianuarie hee came to Biſſan, where the Kings eldeſt ſonne profeſſed his willingneſſe to be a Chriſtian, but that he muſt then leaue off his gainfull man-ſtealing. Thence they ſayled to Guinala, where the King was ſick and dyed. The manner is to kill Wiues and Seruants, and a Royall Horſe for his ſeruice in the other World, which Barerius did what he could to hinder. Thence they ſet ſayle to Biguba a very healthfull place; but ſome Ethiopians profeſſing Mahomet were hinderance to him.

Iuly thirteene, 1605. he came to Sierra Leona, and arriuing at Pagono, the petty King thereof tributarie to Fatema, imitated in all things the Chriſtian Rites, but durſt not be ſuch (hee ſaid) except he ſaw Fatema firſt. The Portugals in theſe parts liued liker Ethnikes then Chriſtians, neither hauing Sacraments nor Word of God in many yeeres paſt, ſo that they had almoſt quite forgotten them. Paſſing by the Ile Tamarena, he came to the Kingdome of Buran, the King whereof is alſo ſubiect to Fatema: he would be preſent alſo at Maſſe, and name Ieſus; was deſirous of Baptiſme, but I thought fitteſt to begin with Fatema. I Confeſſed ſome Portugals here, which in ten, twentie, thirtie yeeres had neuer beene Confeſſed; the Chriſtians there little differing from Ethnikes.

The King of Sierra Leona deſired my ſtay there, which I doing, contrary to my former purpoſe, he ſent all the people of the Towne to cut timber for a Church, was wonderfull deſirous alſo of Baptiſme, whereto I told him the multiplicitie of wiues was impediment. Hee yeelded to this, but wiſhed he had knowne it ſooner, for then would he haue had none of theſe, but another which he ſent for. I hindred not, becauſe their marriages for the moſt part are by the law of Nature vnlawfull. When the maide came, her friends refuſed the conditions of our Baptiſme and rites: and vpon his importunitie, the King was baptiſed, and clothed now like a Portugal. Hee was named Philip, and is called Philip Leonis, for his Countrey. I baptiſed alſo the daughter of another King, and ioyned her in marriage to him. His brethren alſo and children were baptiſed. The Kings Aunt is of great authoritie, and in manner ruleth all: and ſhould but for her ſexe haue raigned. Shee leads the reare when they goe to warres, carrying a Bowe, Quiuer, and military Club, and compells them to keepe their rankes. Philips father being dead, when they would haue obſerued the Rite of killing ſome of his wiues and ſeruants, Philip interceded, and tooke away thoſe infernall Exequies. The King of Toras ſonne was preſent at Maſſe, Baptiſme, and Sermon, and relating the ſame to his father; this (ſaid he) is a Father indeed, and not thoſe (Prieſts) which hitherto haue comne into theſe parts no leſſe following the merchandiſing of Slaues and other things then the other Portugals. This King is one hundred yeeres old, originally of the Cumba (called alſo Manes) which conquered theſe parts; as freſh as if hee were but fortie. At Chriſtmas he was preſent at our ſolemnitie, the Altar adorned with faire clothes, the image of our Lady with the Child Ieſus on one ſide, the Crucifixe on the other, foure Candleſtickes with Tapers, the wall and pauement trimmed with boughes. Moued with admiration he deſired Baptiſme, and a place was deſigned for building a Church. Their building of houſes and Churches is to faſten poſts in the ground cloſe together, faſtning them with timbers layde ouerthwart, couered with clay, and then laying on a plaiſter of earth white as milke; the roofe is thatch and leaues of Palmes. I haue two of his ſonnes, and two of Philips my perpetuall companions, whom beſides the Catechiſme I teach to reade. The old King cleaues only to one of his wiues the ſiſter of Philip; and at Eaſter he is to be baptiſed.

The King of Beni, the Lord of ſeuen Kingdomes hath written to mee for Baptiſme: but I cannot forſake theſe two Kings till I haue other helpe. This Countrey is as healthfull as any I euer came in, and Sierra Leona would be a fit place for a plantation of the Society: for which King Philip wrote to the Catholike King, offering a place to erect a Fort, and commending the largeneſſe, wholſomneſſe, and fertilitie of his Countrey. An. 1607. Emanuel Aluares and his Brother went to Guinea, to Biſſan, and perſwaded the King to forſake his China, (ſo they call God, and whatſoeuer is pretious to them) to wit, a Fagot of ſtickes bound together, which they worſhip: likewiſe to leaue thoſe infernall inferies of killing at the Graue of the deceaſed, Wiues, Friends, Seruants, cutting their fingers and toes in pieces, and ſtamping the bones in a Morter; leauing the bodies meane while in torture, and when they were at the point of death thruſting a ſtake thorow their neckes, others looking on with vndaunted countenance, which were to vndergoe the ſame butchery. The Kings of Bigub and Beſegui alſo deſired Baptiſme, which both (as hee of Guinala) are Beafares. Bigub hath three Kings vaſſals, Beſequi fiue, and the Guinalan ſeuen, although the Biyagi haue taken ſixe Kingdomes from him. Theſe Biyags are fierce people, in ſeuenteene Ilands ouer againſt theſe Kingdomes, alway warring with the Beafares and the Portugals; with their boats entring the frequent Riuers, and ſpoyling all. Theſe Ilands are rich and fertile, pleaſant with Trees and Riuers, fruitfull in Palmes, Wine, Oyle; ſtored with Cattell great and ſmall, Iuorie, Fiſh, Rice, Waxe, Iron, and on the ſhoare Ambergriſe, but to them vncouth and vnkiſſed; long Pepper enough to lade yeerely two ſhips.

The King of Beni hearing of Philip and Peter (the King of Tora) that they were baptiſed, ſent his beſt beloued ſonne to be inſtructed and baptiſed. Hee is the chiefe King of all that Coaſt. To him Barerius trauelled, hardly eſcaping the treachery of another King in the way; the way was wooddy Mountaines, pleaſant Vallies, an Iron-coloured earth, the Iron exceeding that of Europe. The King entertayned him ioyfully; and firſt at his perſwaſion commanded by publike Edict, that marriageable Virgins ſhould hide Natures ſecrets. Hee was preſent (but entreated to ſtay without the Church) when Maſſe was celebrated, and heard the Sermon (for he vnderſtood the Portugall tongue) made great ſhewes of Chriſtianitie, promiſed to burne his Idols; yea, perſwaded his Vaſſall-kings to Chriſtianitie; but all on a ſudden by a Mahumetan was altered, pretended to feare the Concha (chiefe Emperour of the Souſa) and the great Bexerine would incite him to warre againſt him. The King is ſaid to haue receiued of him certaine Charmes, whereby to bewitch any that offended him. Barerius alſo ſaw him ſtroking a Serpent as big as a mans thigh, rolled vp in diuers gyres, ſo beautified with various colours, as hee neuer had ſeene any creature: this he ſtroked and dalied with. They call this the King of Serpents, and make much account of it: but Barerius thought it was the Deuill in this forme. Thus were the bloſſoms of his hopes blaſted; and he haſted away to his former friends.

The chiefe Bexerine is the high Prieſt, or Marybuck of the Mandingas, of which ſee Maſter Iobſon.

Numerous iſſue by reaſon of their Polligamie.

It will not be amiſſe to relate the funerall mournings (worthie mournings and funerall) amongſt the Manes. Farma the King of the Logui, had ſeuentie two ſons and fiftie daughters, ſo that his progenie (moſt ſuruiuing) was aboue three thouſand. The old Grandſire being dead, newes is ſent to all the kindred in their ſeuerell habitations, euery Village mourning, and the kindred viſit the corps with preſents, Gold, Clothes, and what they can, accompliſhing all with lamentable lamentations. Part of the preſents is put in the Graue, another part goeth to the King of the place, the third to the Heire: but the Kings themſelues are buried ſecretly by night, with a few friends attending, hauing all their life heaped treaſure to that funerall purpoſe, and are therefore buried in vnknowne places, as in the bottoms of Riuers, turning meane-while the ſtreame on the other ſide. They loſe much Gold this way, and if they die ſuddenly, no man knowes where they haue prepared and treaſured that treaſure. That the wiues and ſeruants are added to the Exequies, we need not repeat. They hope to finde all ready to ſerue them in the next life. Some great men haue Houſes ſet ouer their Graue couered with Cloth, and other things there left to waſte with time, and hither the kindred make recourſe to conſult with the dead, and acquaint them with their affaires. The funerall ended, they returne with ſo many ſtalkes of ſtraw as there remayne moneths to the yeeres end: againſt which time they prouide ſtore of Rice, Wine, Hennes, and (if the deceaſed were rich) of Kine, and then aſſemble to a funerall feaſt, laſting day and night with all exceſſe in eating, drinking, dancing, and ſuch a noiſe, that none in the Village can ſleepe. For which cauſe the Ieſuites which haue their Churches in the Villages, haue their houſes out of them. Their greateſt glorie is the number of Meats beyond mouthes, and of Drunkards beyond tale. King Peter was inuited to one of theſe riots, yet rioted not, but by his modeſt example wanne good opinion to his Religion. They had ſacrificed a maide, and certaine Kine with Diabolicall rites to their Anceſtors, in a Wood cloſely before hee came.

Funerall rites.

Straw-torches.

Barerius went to Fatema the King of the Boulons, and was lighted to him by night with Torches of ſtraw, which they vſe, and not wax, though the Countrey haue ſtore. Hee ſent after him a gold Chaine which he refuſed. An Ethnike Doctor, and King Peters ſonne were conuerted ſoone after. They doe not beleeue any Hell, but thinke that the deceaſed goe to Gods houſe, and there liue and vſe the ſame things they did here, and in the ſame ranke and reputation.

The Iagges: ſee l. 7. c. 3. §. 3.

This King Peter was of the Manes or Cumba, which are the ſame (ſayth the Ieſuite) which in Congo were called Giacha (Iagges,) in Angola, Ginda; that they were the ſame with the Imbia or Zimba, of which you reade in Santos, or with the Gallæ amongſt the Abiſſines, he ſayth, without my ſubſcription. Theſe left their Countries, about An. 1550. and pierced to theſe parts of Sierra Leona: of which Man-eating Nation none there remayned but this Peter, who now became a Zealous Chriſtian, and procured the commiſſion of others. They which are to be baptiſed bring firſt their Idols, and caſt them in the fire. Beſides which Statues, they haue Chinas, which are Pyramides with Cells within, wherein are kept white Ants; of ſo religious eſteeme with thoſe Guineans, that when they buy a ſlaue, they ſet him before a China-pyramide, hauing offered thereto Wine and other things, praying that if hee runne away Tigres and Serpents may deuoure him. Which threats faſten them to the cruelleſt maſters. In euery Countrey they haue a place ſacred to the Deuill. That which King Philip had, was in an Iland, where they offered Rice, Oyle, or what they carried, caſting it into the Sea. No man durſt venture on the Iland for feare of Camaſſono, the Deuill-Idoll. Once a yeere the King went and ſacrificed Hennes, and Goats, (which there liued ſecurely) on a Rocke. The cruell ſpectacle of the Selfe-whippers on Mandy thurſday was terrible to the Ethnikes, thinking them (not without cauſe) mad ſo to rage againſt their owne fleſh; and Chriſtopher ſonne of King Peter would not be behinde the reſt herein. Another thought the blood had beene onely the red ioyce of a certaine Tree. Theſe are the Ieſuiticall Relations till the yeere 1610. with other like, which I omit.

Relations of the Chriſtianitie of Africa, and eſpecially of Barbarie, and Algier; written by I. B. GRAMAYE.

THus much haue I related of the Ieſuites and Dominicans later labours in Africa. Gramaye hath lately publiſhed ten Bookes or Tractates of Africa: he ſayth that there are ſome Relikes of the antient Chriſtians after ſo many inundations of Hereſie and Mahometiſme, both in Marocco, Tunes, and Lybia, which vſe the Maſſe of the Mozarabes tranſlated into Arabike: there are alſo Greekes, and Abaſſines, and of diuers Nations Merchants with free vſe of their conſcience. At Tunes, and Tripolis, Prieſts in Gownes, Monkes in their Cowles, are permitted publike ſupplications and funerals. In the Kingdome of Feſſe their libertie is greater. But in all the Coaſt of Barbaria there is no ſecuritie of the publike exerciſe of Chriſtian Religion, nor any Monaſteries: but at Oram & in the places ſubiect or confederat to the Spaniards. In the places ſubiect to the Moors & Turks, there is publike permitted, not ſecured, both exerciſe, Churches, & places of buriall in towns; ſomtimes eclipſed or diſturbed by the Morabutes, in times of drought, at which times, as it were, to appeaſe the angry Deitie, they ſpoile Churches, inhibite Chriſtian Holies, ouerthrow Tauernes (for none elſe may ſell Wine) which after a few dayes are againe permitted. The Chriſtian Church-yard, or rather Buriall-place, is a piece of ground without the Towne, neere the Iewiſh Buriall-place, not incloſed, yea (in places) bearing Corne. But the ſandy ſoyle ſcarſly ſecures the Corpſes from Dogs. Prayers and other Rites are vſed at the Graues, but not at Algier, without ſcoffes and iniuries, ſpecially from Boyes. Prieſts adminiſter Sacraments without ſpeciall Cure, or certaine Stipend, or Order; yea, ſome without Orders. Baptiſme is often adminiſtred by the Lay-people, and without the Eccleſiaſticall Ceremonies; and whatſoeuer requires Epiſcopall benediction of long time hath there wanted. Seldom is there Sermon, neuer Catechiſing, Veſpers, or Lauds, till our Author procured.

Africa Illuſtratæ libri 10.

Chriſtianitie of Barbarie.

In the Kingdome of Argire are ſuppoſed to be two hundred thouſand Chriſtians, of which the moſt are Renegados or Apoſtatas, which profeſſe Mahometiſme: ſome, but very few, of their owne accord; ſome by force, as Boyes which they take, and Infants (neither is it lawfull for any to be freed thence till hee bee fifteene yeeres old) ſome diſſembling, yet hardly eſcaping, by reaſon of certaine death, if taken in the attempt; ſome by rewards of riches and honour; others by feare of torture, and deſpaire of libertie. Of ſuch as continue Romiſh Chriſtians are in that Kingdome ſuppoſed to be two and thirty thouſand, beſides thoſe of the Reformed or other profeſſions. And although in ten yeeres laſt paſt (till An. 1619.) 1200. Spaniards haue beene freed, yet in that ſpace eight thouſand haue ſucceeded in ſeruitude, beſides ſixe hundred dead. Some of which are in the Countrey or Gardens, and haue publike Seruice onely when they come to the Citie, where at this time were eight captiued Prieſts, not at all Graduates, and two onely which haue addicted themſelues to Diuinitie. There are foure Churches in the Priſons, in the Citie and Dioceſſe of Hippon two, in that of Cirth and Teſlen two. They haue an Oratory in the houſe of the French Conſull.

Supplications are performed in their times with deuotion and ſtore of Candles. But there is no Font, nor holy Oyle, Chriſme; nor are the Sacraments (giue me leaue to vſe our Authours words) of marriage, Extreme vnction, Orders, or Confirmation adminiſtred; Baptiſme is done with ſimple water, Penance by any Prieſt: the buriall place not conſecrated. The Authour being there captiued, did reforme things by a Viſitation, with conſent and requeſt of thoſe Chriſtians, and ſubiection to the Pope and all which might challenge any right prouided.

Numbers of Chriſtians and Iewes in a part of Barbary.

* One ſent thither in diſpleaſure from Conſtant.nople.

* Pitifull Chriſtianitie.

There are in Barbary,in the Kingdoms of Argier,Tunes,Tripoli,Feſſe, one hundred and twenty thouſand Chriſtian captiues: there are eightie ſix Families in thoſe parts of Chriſtian Merchants, Freemen; Of Greeke Chriſtians, one hundred ſeuenty nine Families; Of Iewes which haue trade with the French, are one hundred fiftie ſixe thouſand Families. Romiſh Prieſts Captiues ſixtie two. Churches permitted to Chriſtian Holies ſixteene. In ſeuen and twentie yeares paſt (1619.) there hath beene no Biſhop, but the Greeke Patriarch: * neither is there any Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline, that not one of a hundred liues like a Chriſtian, the Prieſts liuing of Almes, contenting themſelues with their Maſſe without cure of ſoules; their paritie alſo making them careleſſe each of other; ſcarſly any thing Chriſtian-likecelebrated but the * Maſſe.

Iol ſeat of Iuba.

Antiquities of Argier.

Sarſella.

* Lib.6.c.4.

Gramaye is confident that Argier is that Iol, which was the Seat Royall of Iuba, by his Sonne new built, and called Cæſarea; a Coyne of Claudius is in inſcribed IOL CÆSAREA IVBÆ REGIA. After his death Caligula brought this Kingdome of Mauritania, (which contayned thoſe of Argier, Feſſe, Marocco, and part of Tunes) into two Prouinces, Tingitana and Cæſarienſis. Claudius made this Cæſarea a Colonie, ſome few Antiquities and Inſcriptions yet remayning. Thirty miles from the Citie is Sarſella where is infinite Rubbiſh, as the Graue, with Relikes of Fabrickes, and Aquæducts, as the bones of the Carkaſſes, and Inſcriptions, as Epitaphs, ancient Coynes as Memorials (of which many were giuen him) for feare of ſuſpition hee durſt not make ſearch. And although Alger, Argel, Algiers, or Argier (the very name breeds confuſion) be deſcribed before out of * Nicolay; ſeeing we haue met with later Intelligence by almoſt ſeuentie yeares then the former (ſince that was printed in our ſixth Booke) we haue thought good to adde out of him ſome better light of this Hel-mouth, the Centre of Earthly darkneſſe.

Their were ſaid to come 60000 Moores at their laſt eiection to Algier from Spaine.

It is ſeated on the mid-land Sea, on the ſide of a hill, whereby one houſe hinders not the proſpect of the next. Cheridim Barboroſſa, fortified it with the Iland, which yet Tempeſts ſometime aſſault with great hurt to the ſhips as happened this yeare 1619. fiue and twentie ſhippes broken in the Port. The forme of the Citie is almoſt Bow-faſhion. The circumference of the old Towne is three thouſand foure hundred paces: Barbaroſſa began and after 1573. Arabamet finiſhed a Wall about the Iland, except that part which is open to the Port and Citie. Lately they haue founded a fiue cornered Towre to ſecure both. The Turrets, Fortreſſes, Bulwarkes, I omit. The houſes within are cloſe to the Wall; without, is a Ditch of ſixteene paces, ſcowred by Arabamet, but now in ſome places mired vp, and ſcarce halfe of it is cleare. Without the Towne are three Caſtles: two of which were built, Anno 1568. 1569. the third before, was finiſhed 1580. Except one the ſtreets are very narrow, and in Winter very durty. Out of their Rate or Taxebookes, I find of late yeares, by the deſtroying of the Suburbes, for feare of Don Iohn of Auſtria 1573. and ſince the Moores were expelled laſt from Spaine, it is very much increaſed in buildings, not like the deſcriptions anciently publiſhed, which leaue therein open and vacant places. And although the Houſes to the ſtreet ſide are darke, yet being inwardly built with ſquare Cloiſters as it were, the light is ſupplyed, as the Roofes ſerue them for Galleries and Proſpects; in the midſt is a Well, but the water brackiſh. They vſe no Chimneyes, but make fires of coales in Earthen Pannes in their Porches or Roofes. They white the out-ſide of their Houſes againſt great Feaſts. The Kings Palace and great mens Houſes haue Courts ſpacious, with ſpecious Pillers about, and many by-roomes ſpred with Mats or Carpets; their cuſtome beeing to put off their ſhooes when they enter. Their Houſe-hold Furniture is otherwiſe meane, the vulgar hauing nothing but a Mat, Carpet, Mattreſſe, two Veſts hanging, Pots and Diſhes of Earth, and long woodden Spoones, with a woodden Cheſt: two or three ſtaues faſtned to the Wals couered with boards ſerue for a Bed, ſitting and lying more commonly on the floore on a Mat or Carpet. Their Garments hang on lines ouer the Bed, Pelts are their Naperie, Water their Drinke, Rice their Meate with Pulſe, Meale, a little Fleſh, and ſome fruits; whence Victuals are cheape. There are no Conduits, Sewers, nor Wels of ſweet water; fiue Ciſternes from without, ſupplying that want, together with that which is fetched on mens ſhoulders out of the fields, by aboue one thouſand Slaues and Moores. Their are ſeuen faire Moſquets, ſpecially the greateſt; fiue Colledges of Ianizaries, where ſome ſixe hundred of them liue together in a Houſe; one Hoſpitall built by Aſſan Baſſa, foure faire Bathes, being Priſons for ſlaues; two for waſhing with hote or cold, paued with Marble, and furniſhed with Chambers; and Conduits for Arte-brought waters, vſed by the Moores and Turkes of both Sexes almoſt euery day; and the two Royall Porches, one of thirtie ſixe foote ſquare with Columnes, where the Duana of the Ianizaries is kept, the other before the Palace.

Within the Wals are neere thirteene thouſand Houſes, many of which are inhabited by thirtie Families; the Houſe of Iacob Abum in the lower Iewrie hath three hundred, of Abraham Ralbin, two hundred and ſixtie Families, and others likewiſe. There are aboue one hundred Moſquets, each hauing three Morabutes Curats, and ſome thirtie or fortie, beſides the Oratories of Heremites and Sepulchres; ſixty two Bathes, eighty ſixe Schooles for Children to learne to reade and write, and a few others for the Alcoran; Suburb-gardens fourteene thouſand ſixe hundred ninetie eight, each hauing one or more Chriſtians, ſome ſixe or eight to keepe them. Nor is there ſcarce a Family in the Citie, which hath not one or more Chriſtian ſlaues of both Sexes, ſome a great multitude, as Faretbey, ſeuenty two. Ali-Mami, one hundred thirty two. Ali Pizilini, ſixty three. Aripagi, thirty eight. Aſan Portuges, forty. Salomon Reis thirtie two. And in the Kings Priſon are commonly two thouſand, and two or three thouſand in the three Gallies and ſeuentie two ſhips of warre, which Anno 1619. were there, ſo that in and about the Citie their ſeeme to be of them aboue thirtie fiue thouſand.

35000. Chriſtian Slaues.

Haedo which liued here many yeares, reckons of the Naturall Moores called Baldis, freed from Tribute by Barbaroſſa, of good complexion almoſt white, liuing on their Lands, Handy-crafts, or Merchandize, two thouſand fiue hundred Families. Of Moores Cabayales or Forreners from the Mountaynes of Couko and Labeſan, called Azuages, and from other Mountaynes ſeuen hundred Families. I learned that there were aboue three thouſand Arabian Beggers. Of the Modaiares, which were expelled out of the Kingdomes of Granada, and the Tagarines out of Valentia and Arragon, Haedo numbreth one thouſand Families; I adde (ſaith Gramay) as many more, which haue brought Trades hither to the great increaſe of Argier. Of Turkes out of Aſia and Romania, beſides Ianizaries are ſixteene hundred Families, and aboue ſixe thouſand of renied Chriſtians. Of Alcaids (that is of Commanders, in the Towne and Forts) one hundred thirty ſixe Families, aboue three hundred Arraiz, which haue places of command in the Nauie: fiue hundred Families of Eſpays, ſixe thouſand Genizaries, eighty ſixe green-headed Xeriſes of Mahomets Kindred, Agi or Mecca-ſaints aboue eight hundred. Haedo reckons three thouſand Merchants Families of diuers Nations, and two thouſand ſhops. The Handi-crafts cannot eaſily bee reckoned: in the Smiths ſtreet are eightie Maſters, they ſay twelue hundred Taylors, three thouſand Weauers, three hundred Butchers, foure hundred Bakers, &c. The Iewes haue ſixe large Synagogues, not able to contayne their multitudes, reported to bee aboue eight thouſand men. All theſe in the Citie. In the Countrey, are in Garriſons at Tremeſen, Conſtantina, and the reſt ſixteene thouſand Genezaries, and Souldiers. Of Arabians, Anno 1617. when there was rumour of the Spaniards comming, ſixe Morabutes offered the King and the Duana ſixe ſcore thouſand Horſe-men, and ſixty thouſand Foot-men. Thus Argier which an old Iew of ninety an Eye-witneſſe reported to me, when Charles the Emperour intended the ſiege, had ſcarſly eight hundred men fit for reſiſtance within the Walls, and a great part of the Moore-citizens were forced to liue by Husbandry and fiſhing, is now encreaſed principally by ejection of the Moores out of Spaine, in the yeares 1492. 1567. and 1607. more to our griefe then wonder.

Moores free-men.

And Foreners. Mountayne of Couko and Labeſan, which are pettie Kingdomes. Thoſe Moores Azuages haue croſſes marked in their hands.

For the Gouernment, the King, hath a kind of freedome, yet doth nothing of import without the Duana. Hee hath his Belerbei, or chiefe Captayne, wonted to bee ſent with the Baſſa from Conſtantinople, but many yeeres ſince continued among the Argerians; his Califa or Chancellor, who repreſents the Kings perſon if he be abſent. The Cadi, one for the Moores, another for the Turkes (to whom is Appeale from the former, and from this to the Aga) are ſent from Conſtantinople, with their Notaries Aſſiſtants. In Ciuill Caſes and Criminall they are vſed, with the Mufties or Biſhops, a Turke and a Moore. All their plea is by Witneſſes, and ſeldome their ſentences are recorded, and when they are, no name ſubſcribed but a ſeale or Okered ſtampe. From theſe and from the King himſelfe lyeth an Appeale to the Aga, the chiefe of the Duana, wherein all things are handled, and vpon the rude cryes of the vulgar, ſentence is executed. Rarely is a Turke put to death, except for Mutinie and Rebellion they be ſtrangled: Adultereſſes are drowned; in other offences they are fined in the decreaſe or loſſe of pay, and place, or blowes giuen them with a Rope or Cudgell, on the backe, belly, and ſoles of the feet.

Two Mufties a Moore and a Turke.

The Iewes haue alſo their Magiſtrates and Iudges, and puniſh theirs according to the Law: ſo yet, that the King doth inflict puniſhments, ſometimes for imaginary crimes to extort reall ſummes from them. The Chriſtians ſhould alſo according to couenants with the Chriſtian King, haue judgement of their owne Conſuls, but fauour procures the contrary. As the Aga and Cadi in the Citie, ſo in the Countrey the Alcayde, and Makadi exerciſe like juriſdiction but ſubject to the former. And in Villages the Xeque doth all amongſt the Arabs, from whom ſeldome is recourſe to the King. The Sea-Common-wealth is exerciſed by the Arraez and his Balu-cobaxi. One of the Kings Pages, a youth, heareth (ſitting on a ſtone abroad before the Kings Palace) the cauſes of the Whores, and inferiour womens brawles, and the fine returneth to himſelfe. The Aga is chiefe of the Ienizeries, and poſſeſſeth his place two moneths, and ſometimes we haue ſeene foure in a fortnight, the King giuing ſo many ſilke Gownes to them after the cuſtome: which place hauing paſſed he is free from Tribute, and liues among the Eſpaijs (of whom there is ſixe or ſeuen hundred Families) He comes no more at the Duana, except hee bee called: to this, they ariſe by degrees, euery Ianizarie being capable in his order.

Iewes Officers. The Aga.

The Iewes weare a diſtinction in their clothes. The common apparell is, drawers not to hinder them in making water, a Waſt-coate with wide ſleeues not to hinder their waſhing to the elbow, a broad girdle, with goodly great Kniues in a ſheath on the left hand; breeches in Winter like the Spaniards, Zapatas or coloured ſhooes to put on and off without touch of the hand, a kind of gowne vppermoſt. Euery eight day they ſhaue their heads except on the crowne, that locke being left to draw them to Paradiſe. The head is alway couered (in ſalutation they lay the hand to the breſt and bow the head) with a Turbant, or a coloured cap with Linnen foure or fiue times wreathed about. They all weare Rings of diuers matter. The womens habit differs little from the mens, nor could a woman going in the ſtreets be knowne but by her woman-ſlaue attending. They ſit at home on Mats or Carpets prating (few except) all day long, except when they goe to the Bathes, Heremites, Wizards, Sepulchres, Gardens, Feaſts, which are common with them. They delight in blacke haire which they procure with Medicines. They haue little care of their Children, none of their Familie; too much of Superſtitions and Luſts.

Opinions fooliſh and Deuiliſh in Algier.

Mahumean Algier ſinnes. Fie on it.

Of this diuining by Books and Arrowes, a White for the Turke, a Black for the Chriſtian, ſee ſup. pag. 892.

These Algierians haue the fooliſh conceits of other Mahumetans, ſome alſo more proper, that Fooles and Dwarfes are Saints, their Morabutes to be inſpired and to conſult with God, the Viands ſet on Sepulchres weekly to be eaten by the ſoules; and if ſicke perſons offer there any thing which a beaſt eateth, that the diſeaſe is deriued to it; that the head-ach is leſſened with rolling a Goats or ſheeps head on the Roofe; that it is not lawfull to buy in May, nor to bring in at doore Garleeke or Broomes, but (if there be need of them) at the Roofe; that it is a meritorious worke to proſtitute their Wiues to the Morabutes, and that the ſame men bugger with beaſts; that ſhewing pitie to beaſts, ſhauing, waſhing (though in the Sea) clenſeth ſinnes; that (Sodomiticall) ſinnes againſt Nature are vertues. But to bedew the Garment in making vrine, to let paper lye on the ground, the Alcoran to be touched or ſeene of one not Mahumetan, to fart in Sala (or Prayer) time, or then to defend a mans ſelfe (as Mulei Abdelummi aſſaulted by his Brother and wounded in the Church 1577. would not ſtirre till Sala was done) or to bleed, or neeze, or ſpit, to wipe the buttockes except with the left finger, to drinke out of a ſmacking narrow mouthed pot, to locke the Bed-chamber by night, to ſtampe on the Earth when they play at ball, to write with a Pen (for they vſe Reeds) to eate Snailes taken out of the fields (reputed holy) to touch money before they haue ſaid their Morning Prayers, to hold the Alcoran beneath the girdle, to haue printed Bookes, or Pictures of men or beaſts; to admit Chriſtians or women to their Meſquits, to vſe Bels, to exchange a Chriſtian Captiue for a Turke, to breech children with Rods (they whip the ſole of the foot with a Whip) theſe are all ſinnes and enormities at Algier. They beleeue that on their Eaſter mid-night all waters are aſleepe, and hee which can get that ſleepe ſhall be a happie man. With their Morabutes you are ſafe in the midſt of Theeues. It is vnlawfull to goe into a new houſe, vndertake a Iourney or begin any great buſineſſe without Sacrifice of a ſheepe: vnluckie to ſayle without conſulting the Fortune-booke. They play not at Dice and Cards, nor ſweare, nor fight one with another. The King and great men let their beards grow, others ſhaue all but the Muſtachos and Crowne; they waſh before worke, Prayer, and Meales; and haue a certayne Ceremonie to take water in the hollow of the hand, powring it to the elbow.

Funerals.

Mourning.

Here and in all the Eaſt they vſe with Chriſtians the Franke Tongue, compoſed of French, Italian, Spaniſh, and thereby vnderſtand them all. They eate not bloud, or a beaſt killed by another man: and kill turning the head to the Sunne, and cutting the throate. No teſtament is auailable vnleſſe acknowledged forty dayes before the Teſtators death before the Cadi. All the Sonnes and Daughters inherit equally; if they be Moores the King hath a childes part, and if all Daughters, he hath all of a Moore, and halfe of a Turke. When any is ſicke, women aſſiſt women, and men the men, praying Eaſtward; waſh the dead Corps with hote water and Sope, clothe it and carrie it (hauing obtayned the Alcayds leaue) with the head forward to buriall: if hee depart on Friday, it ſtayeth the Prayer time in the Meſquit: they ſet a ſtone at the head of the Graue, and another at the feet with an Epitaph and Sentence out of the Alcoran. They weare no mourning, ſaue that the women are a few dayes veiled in blacke, and the men ſhaue not for a monethes ſpace, and for three dayes ſpace they haue no fire in their houſe, nor eate any thing boyled; in that ſpace they viſit the Sepulchre, giue Almes, and gathering ſtones on the ſhoare, toſſe them from the right hand to the left, and throw them into the Graue, ſaying, Selen Ala. They begin the Spring on the fourteene of February, and end it on the eighteene of May; they call the raine which fals from Aprill the fiue and twentieth, to May the fift: bleſſed of God, and keepe it religiouſly. Their Summer continues to Auguſt the ſixteenth, and is very hote, and ſometimes hath peſtilent raines which kill thouſands. Autumne to the ſixteenth of Nouember, and Winter is neuer ſo cold that they need a fire.

The treaſure.

The Kings Reuenues are ſummed by Harega at foure hundred thouſand Duckets, by Haedo foure hundred and fiftie thouſand: and payeth nothing to the Turke, but a few Boyes and gifts of no value, with ſome feeling to the Port Baſſas. Yet would his Reuenue be ſhort of expences on Officers and otherwiſe, if ſpoile helped not. Much Gold is carryed out of Chriſtendome, for redemption of ſlaues threeſcore thouſand Duckets yearely, as much perhaps to buy ſpoyles, of which little or none returneth to Chriſtendome, they taking to Sea, Bisket, Water, Tobacco, Oyle and Dates, and laughing at our Exceſſe. The treaſure of the Duana is adminiſtred by three, two of which haue beene Agas, the third is the Hoga or Secretary, who if the King payeth not the Ianizaries, by the authority of the Duana they will impriſon him and ſequeſter his Rents; as it lately hapned to Oſain Baſſa two yeares together.

The Sepulchre of Morabute Cid Butica, is ſaluted with a Peece going out and comming in, by whoſe holy prayers they ſay, Charles preuayled not againſt them An. 1541. In a hill neere, lieth Caba the daughter of Earle Iulian which Rodericus King of Spaine rauiſhed, reuenged by her wicked father, with treacherous bringing the Moores into Spaine. The Cids Sepulchres and Chappels are viſited ſome on Munday, ſome on Thurſday, or on Friday, by the deuout ſuperſtitious fooles, ſpecially (perhaps not-deuout) women. Algier is enuironed with goodly hills and dales, attended with plentie of fruits better then European. Three dayes iourney towards Bugia, is the Hill Couko, the King whereof Barbaroſſa ſlue An. 1515. and ſometimes he is tributary, ſometimes enclining to the Spaniard.

Algier were altogether vnworthy ſo long diſcourſe, were not the vnworthineſſe moſt worthy our conſideration, I meane the cruell abuſe of the Chriſtian name, which let vs for inciting our Zeale, and exciting our Charitie, and Thankfulnes more deeply weigh, to releeue thoſe there in miſeries (as we may) with our paynes, prayers, purſes, and all the beſt mediations. Thus writes he which ſaw and felt his part in thoſe miſeries. Barbarie and chiefly therein Algier, the whip of the Chriſtan World, the wall of the Barbarian, terror of Europe, the bridle of both Heſperias (Italy and Spaine) Scourge of the Ilands, Den of Pyrates, Theatre of all crueltie, and Sanctuarie of Iniquitie, holdeth captiue in miſerable ſeruitude, one hundred and twentie thouſand Chriſtians, almoſt all ſubjects of the King of Spaine: of which, partly by the Turkes riches, the Pyrates fortunes, the Ianiſaries honors, their fellowes flatteries ſeduced; partly ouercome with deſpaire of libertie and irkſomneſſe of daily calamities, euery yeere aboue fiue hundred become Mahumetan Apoſtataes; beſides, about fiftie Boyes yeerly circumciſed againſt their wills. To the Redemption of Captiues by the Orders of the Trinitie, and of Saint Marie de Mercede in Spaine and Italy, are yeerly gathered about one hundred and fiftie thouſand Duckets. There is no generall * ordinarie courſe for Redemption of Captiues of England, France, Poland, Hungarie, Germanie, and the Low Countries; whereby men of thoſe parts vtterly diſconſolate, to the loſſe and ſhame of Chriſtians, Apoſtatiſe. And to ſtirre vp compaſſion, behold Algier captiuitie, repreſented from his eyes to ours.

Epithets of Algier.

* The Author ſaith, Nullus per eleemoſinam ereptus eſt, but we know by priuate friends by publike mediation of Embaſſadors, by collection in Churches, diuers Engliſh men are redeemed: but not in the ſenſe he ſpeakes: which yet were to be wiſhed; or that Hell-centre to be by publike charge of chriſtendome demoliſhed.

Firſt, if any Ship comes into their hands, it is with huge clamors preſently inuaded by the Pyrates, and if it be an Enemie, ſpoyled; if Confederate, they take away their Armes, fill the Poope and ſtrongeſt Places with Souldiers, ſearch the lading, take meat and drinke as it were fee, ſend the Gouernours aboard their owne ſhip, and in a Pyratical counſell examine them, whether they haue any Spaniſh Wares or Men; nor content with words or letters, they force the Boyes and elder Perſons by infinite beatings to confeſſe that which is not, and to promiſe what they haue not; and one mans confeſſion is enough to make prey. Sometimes gaping after the ſhips wealth, they throw the men ouer-board, and ſo poſſeſſe the ſhip, ſaying, her men had forſaken her. Otherwhiles not ſatisfied with Truncheons, and Ropes to haue tortured the Wretches backs, binding their hands and feet, they draw them vp and whip them, almoſt ſtrayne out their braynes with a knotty Rope plucked about the head, thruſt Needles in their fingers, roſt their feet with the ſhooes on at the fire, powre forceably ſalt water into their mouthes to fill the body, and then treading on the belly with their feet, force them to belch it vp; with ſmoke of Brimſtone fill the mouth and eyes, hang them vp racked with weights at their feet, or with a Rope draw them thorow the Sea vnder the ſhip. The end of theſe torments is captiuitie, if there be any Enemie in the ſhip, and hee laden with Irons and Fetters, is thruſt into the worſt part of the ſhip, and ſcarſly hath moldy Bisket and Water to ſuſtayne life. If they receiue not ſatisfaction touching the Men and Wares, they reiterate the tortures daily; Boyes are flattered and threatned, and often compelled to turne, and without delay preſently are circumciſed. And ſuch is the courſe with them which they take in the Shoare and Ilands, chayned together or heapes, and thruſt vp like Herrings in the bottome of the ſhip, to be kept for the Butcherie or Market.

Tortures of friends to force from feare a confeſſion of what is not.

When they come home to the Hauen, with infinite ſcoffings, the wretches are led foorth in triumph, and three dayes ſet * to ſale, and laſtly ſold to him which will giue moſt. If any bee Sea-ſicke, or otherwiſe wounded, or ill at eaſe, for bemonings and medicines hee heareth blaſphemies and reuilings; and ſooner would a Turke releeue a Dogge that is ſicke, then a Chriſtian: and if his ſickneſſe continue, without hope of recouerie, they throw him into the Sea, or by Land expoſe him to the Beaſts. In the Market you may ſee them goe vp and downe naked, and with whips compelled to runne or leape, for augmenting the price. After that three dayes ended, may be ſeene a miſerable ſpectacle, Infants and Children plucked from their Parents ſight, the Husbands violently diuorced from their Wiues, Friends ſeparated, with infinite howlings and lamentations: ſome ſold to Moores to doe their drudgeries, and vſually agree with them by the day to earne ſo much; ſome ſold to the Numidians and Arabians to baſeſt ſeruitude, greaſed with fat, made to draw the plow with Aſſes, drawing forth with back and belly beating a miſerable life; ſome employed to the Gallies and Ships, there kept with chaynes, ſtripes, a little moldy Bisket and ſtinking Water: When they come on ſhoare, chayned in rewes, laid vp in priſons, ſleeping on the ground, called onely Dogs. If winde fayle, or croſſe them, they will appeaſe it with branding croſſes on the Chriſtians feet, in deteſtation of the Chriſtian name; ſometimes they will burne Arabike Characters on the cheekes, or cut off the Noſe and Eares; and ſometimes death is inflicted for ſlight ſuſpicions. Except of baſeſt labours, reuilings, ſtripes, injuries, they are in nothing liberall to them; in ſleepe, meate, drinke, clothing more then penurious. When they carry dung to their Gardens, water from the Springs, and goe by the way, euery third word they muſt crie, Balec ſidi, that is, Out of the way, or by your leaue, Sir, to euery Barbarian, or there he ſhall meet with new Deuils, by ſpittings, ſtones, ſtaues, boxes, thruſtings, throwings downe, ſcornes, tormented. If a Chriſtian commits a ſmall fault, he is burned aliue, or ſtamped in the earth * as in a Mortar, or gaunched (throwne from the wall on a hooke) or crucified, or flayed aliue: to the execution of which tortures they take vp any Chriſtian they meet, to make them their brethrens tormentors; nor doe any performe baſer offices but Chriſtians. Now for the Sodomiticall luſts to Boyes, and their damnable ſeruices, and ſending them for Preſents to the Turke or his Baſſas, I abhorre to mention.

* Set in the earth to the neck, and then ſtoned: the ganched hang on the hooke diuers dayes till they take them downe and ſtone them.

If any Maſter be milde and gentle, he incurreth ſuſpicion of fauouring the Chriſtians, a moſt odious crime in Mahometiſme; whereas to breake couenant with Chriſtians, yea leagues (vpon aduantage) is Mahumetan. They caſt their Country-men Embaſſadors of Tunes into bands againſt publike faith, the French Conſuls into priſon many moneths condemned them to the Gallies, beat them with fiue hundred ſtripes, and burnt them aliue: they impriſoned many yeeres in a lothſome priſon the Spaniſh Redeemers, and reduced to ſlauery one hundred and fortie redeemed by one of them. They ſuborne falſe witneſſes to teſtifie a man is otherwiſe then hee ſpeaks, making a Souldier a Captaine, a Mercenarie a Merchant, to heighten the price. And when the price is agreed on, they will vpon hope of more gayne flee from it. Modeſtie forbids to ſpeake of the Female ſexe abuſed to naturall, to vnnaturall luſts, their children ſoone circumciſed, their infancy trayned vp in Turkiſh blaſphemie, their childhood in luſts paſſiue, and youth in actiue, their riper age rotten in all damnations.

Thus wee maruell not that in ten yeeres paſt, the vpper and lower Germanie haue yeelded 857. Apoſtates, beſides 300. Engliſh, Hamburgers 138. Danes and Eaſterlings 160. Poles, Hungarians and Muſcouites 250. Low Country men 130. beſides French and others. Take it into your mercifull conſideration, Kings and Princes, Magiſtrates and People, and helpe, Helpe the Lord againſt the mightie.

1609. to 1619. ſince they haue beene much worſe, ſpecially to Engliſh.

If a circumciſed man would returne to Chriſt, and is thereof conuicted, hee is carried about oynted, naked, and proclamation made before him, chayned after to a poſte and burned, often beaten or diſmembred firſt. Delinquents at Sea, are ſhot, diſmembred, pulled apeeces by diuers ſhips going diuers wayes, to which they are tyed, ſet vpon the mouthes of the Ordnance, cut in peeces; to be ſewed vp in Sacks and throwne into the Sea, is a fauour. To lay hand on a Ianiſarie, imitate his habit in wearing a fringe on the necke, or to haue to doe with a Mahumetan Woman, is death: though this laſt bee negligently executed, all Luſt, Sodomie and Adulterie being expiated in their Bathes, which are therefore ſo frequented. Of theſe, of other kindes of terrible executions our Author hath diuers examples, which I for tedionſneſſe forbeare: God make vs thankefull for our ſelues, charitable to our Brethren.

An. 1607. three Townes in Calabria were ſpoyled by the Algier Pyrates, one thouſand and foure hundred carried away captiues: An. 1608. they brought two and fortie ſhips to Algier, and eight hundred and ſixtie captiues, beſides thoſe which they ſold elſewhere: the next yeere ſix and thirtie ſhips, men ſix hundred thirtie and two: the next, twentie three ſhips, three hundred and eightie foure men: the yeere 1611. twentie ſhips, men foure hundred and ſixtie foure. 1612. they entred Spaine, and carried away three thouſand eight hundred and foure, in one moneth. 1613. they tooke ſixteene ſhips and two hundred and thirtie men of Italy onely. 1614. ſhips thirtie fiue, captiues foure hundred and ſixtie ſeuen. 1616. ſhips thirtie foure, men ſeuen hundred ſixtie ſeuen. 1617. ſix and twentie ſhips, men one thouſand ſeuen hundred ſixtie three; out of Porto Santo ſix hundred ſixtie and three. 1618. nineteene ſhips, men one thouſand foure hundred ſixtie and eight, robbing Lancerotta and Cays. (And ſince mens deficit, vox ſilet: O our Engliſh Ships and Mariners! Cura leues loquuntur, ingentes ſtupent.) As for our Author, a Prouoſt Deane, Archdeacon, Counſellor to the Archdukes, and the Popes Protonotarie, hee was taken in a ſhip of Marſiles, notwithſtanding the peace and league, and therefore without fight the ninth of May 1619. and both aboard and on ſhoare felt his part of the premiſſes for ſix moneths ſpace, informing himſelfe further from others miſerable experience. Two Boyes were forced to confeſſe lyes, a Portugall condemned to three hundred blowes to make him confeſſe; himſelfe charged to be Spaniard, threatned to be taught to ſpeake Spaniſh; then ſaid to bee a Iew, robbed of his clothes vnder colour of ſearch whether he were circumciſed, at laſt they detayning ſome, ſent the ſhip to Algier, where hoping better things, they will needs haue Gramay a Spaniard and impriſon him; after that, they affirme him a Knight of Malta. After that, the detayned Portugall is brought, who by tortures forced made a falſe confeſſion, that ſome of the goods were his, and that Gramay was a Biſhop, and had brought with him a Knight of Malta and a Spaniard; and he therefore with blowes and hard vſage almoſt killed, his meate eaten vp by the Bringers; he at laſt bribed the Keeper to let him come into the light, and haue Paper and Inke to write to the Conſul, ſo that at a deare rate he obtayned vpon caution of fortie thouſand Duckets, to goe to the Conſuls houſe. Some of the priſoners lay in Ditches in Water vp to the middle, and otherwiſe vſed as before is ſpoken.

He hath written a Diarie of occurrences whiles he was at Algier, out of which a word or two. In Iune Cid Bud a Morabute, at noone day before the Church, buggered a Mule, all applauding it, and crying out that it might be luckie, which often at other times wee haue ſighed to ſee in Boyes. In the end of Auguſt. On the eight a ſhip of Spaine laden with Sugars, and fortie Captiues, was brought in. Iohn Peers a Belgian Boy refuſing to turne Turke, was beaten by Mami his Maſter till he dyed. And two Spaniſh ſhips more brought in from the ſight of Lisbon. In Iuly Letters came in my behalfe from Marſiles, but they would not read them: A Holland ſhip was taken and a French. In Auguſt two pledges of the Catholike King taken in Cuko (whoſe King was lately dead) after other villanies, were condemned, one flayed aliue, the fleſh cut at the ſmall of the leg firſt, and blowne, and ſo flayed all off, and the bodie lying on the ground, the skin ſtuffed with haire, ſewed vp, and layd on the backe of a Chriſtian which they met, and carried in pompe thorow the Towne, and ſet on the gate; the other was tyed to the Croſſe by the middle, and with foure nailes thorow his hands and feet, crucified naked (ſaue his priuities) and liued till the euening the next day. Seuenty and two Captiues were brought out of Gallicia. Two Holland ſhips complayned of breach of League, the men of one of their ſhips, and three French caſt into the Sea. But I am loth to drowne or torture the Reader any longer in theſe Tragicall ſpectacles; of takings, ſpoylings, ſellings, killings which follow in our Authour. I will recreate you with more pleaſing ſpectacles from Engliſh eyes, and ſend you home in an Engliſh bottome.

CHAP. XIII.

Larger Obſeruations of Maſter RICHARD IOBSON, touching the Riuer Gambra, with the People, Merchandiſe, and Creatures of thoſe parts, then in his Iournall is contayned, gathered out of his larger Notes.

Of the Riuer Gambra, the Raines, and Land-flouds, the cauſe and time of their contagion: the Beaſts, Fiſh, and Fowle of the Riuer; of the Portugals, Mandingos, and Fulbies there liuing.

THe Riuer Gamba, Gambia, or Gambra, is in 13. degrees 30. minutes. The Inhabitants (as farre as I could learne in my trauell vp the ſame three hundred and twenty leagues, or nine hundred and ſixtie miles) call it by no other name but Gee, a generall name in their language to all Riuers and waters. It hath one ſole entrance, which in the mouth is about foure leagues wide, and three fathome water in the channell without any barre. Foure leagues inward it ſpreads it ſelfe into ſo many Riuers, Bayes, and Creekes, that for thirtie leagues vnto Tancroually it is very intricate; the maine Channell may eaſily be diſcerned except in that limite. With a faire ſtreame from the mouth it floweth to Baraconda, or ſome little aboue, which is nigh two hundred leagues in the loweſt ſeaſon. The Land-flouds abridge this tide, rayſing the water thirty foot vpright, repelling the Seas force, and couering the flats which in the low ſeaſon cauſe impediment. Theſe Raines alwaies proceed from the South-eaſt, beginning within Land, where wee abode in the later end of May, and at the Riuers mouth in the end of Iune: continuing three moneths with great violence, with great windes, moſt terrible thunders and lightnings, in ſudden guſts and ſtormes; which violence being ouerpaſſed, the people continue their labour of tillage. They begin, and goe out with more gentleneſſe, the extremitie being from the middle of Iuly to the middle of Auguſt; in September equinoctiall the Sunne clearing: and thence till May they haue no raine, whereby the ground is hard and vncapable of tillage. In this rainy (vnſeaſonable) ſeaſon are they forced therefore to exerciſe their husbandry; as alſo to prepare their habitations ſecured from the ouerflowings of the Riuer, where the bankes cannot diſcipline it.

Gambra: they ſeemed to themſelues to trauell South-eaſt to 8. degr. they wanted inſtruments to make the true height.

Tide 200. leag. Flouds 30. foot high.

The raines.

And hence may the vnwholſomneſſe be cauſed; whatſoeuer venome commeth from Trees, Plants, Serpents (whereof are many kinds) Toads and Scorpions, contayned and continued all that time of drought in the duſt and on the earth, and waſhed in the firſt raines, yeelding venomous vapours to the Sunnes ſtrong exhaling facultie, which it vomits againe, crude and vndigeſted in the next raines; and ſo the former raines are worſe then the later, bliſtring the naked bodies bodies whereon they fall, breeding wormes in garments, therewith wetted and layd by. It were therefore fit to be prouided of water to drinke or dreſſe meat before theſe ſeaſons fall; and to preuent the hurt by keeping the Wells couered, and not to water in the open Riuer, as the Saint Iohns men did in the firſt Voyage (thereby the laſt to the moſt of them) our mens remayning there three yeeres, and returning ſound, freeing the Countrie of the imputation. The Riuer encreaſed, when no raine is ſeene where we abode, whereby the raines falling aboue, and further paſſableneſſe of the Riuer appeares. The ſhoald which ſtayed vs might in another ſeaſon bee preuented; yea, with fit men and inſtruments cut thorow, continuing ſo ſmall a ſpace; promiſing fairely beyond, ſo farre as we had occaſion to looke, the Sea-horſes and ſtore of Crocodiles proclayming deep waters vpwards. And if it ioyne aboue to Senaga (as it is vſually deſcribed) it cannot be farre aboue that place where we were, but promiſeth a farre farther ſtreame, whoſe branches are ſo great. The higher we went, the more healthfull we found our bodies.

Riuer horſes, and Crocodile.

Feare of the Crocodile.

From Baraconda forward wee ſaw no Towne or Plantation; onely wee found two or three bondles of Palmita leaues bound vp, which our Negros ſaid ſome people had vſed to paſſe the Riuer. There abound in this Riuer Sea-horſes and Crocodiles, or Alegators. This they call Bumbo, whoſe length we haue meaſured in the impreſſion made in the ſand, whence we haue driuen him, three and thirty foot, ſo feared of the Natiues that they dare not waſh their hands, wade, or ſwimme in the great Riuer, telling of many their friends by this enemie deuoured. Neither dare they paſſe ouer their Cattell; but when they paſſe ouer a Beefe, a Canoe goeth before, wherto one holds him cloſe with a rope faſtned to his hornes, another holds vp his tayle, the Prieſt or Marybuck in the midſt praying ouer the beaſt, and ſpitting on him, by whom ſtands another with Bowe and Arrowes ready; and thus they paſſe them one by one. And when wee were forced in a ſhallow place to enter the water, and force the Boat againſt the current, the Blackes would not be perſwaded, ſaying, Bumbo would haue them; till at laſt on better conſideration, at a third ſtraight, they bethought themſelues that a white man was more conſpicuous in the water, and therefore aduentured. Yet did I neuer finde them to aſſault vs in all this way, but when many of them lay on the ſands, they would auoide vs, as Snakes vſe the noiſe and ſight of men with vs; boldeſt in deepe waters. Their musky ſent made vs oft to ſtop our noſtrils. It made both the water and fiſh alſo in ſome places to taſte and relliſh of them, that wee could not eate the one, nor drinke the other. The noiſe of them in that place, whereby they call one to another (reſembling the ſound of a deepe well) might be heard a league.

See before in Santos c 12. a larger deſcription. Where our men may learne to take this Horſe, Elephant, Crocodile, &c.

The Riuer-horſe is in faſhion of body a compleat Horſe; hath round buttocks, ſhort eares, wagged to his mouth, two teeth ſtanding right before on his lower chap great & dangerous, neighing directly like a Horſe, foure legs, ſhort, the foot diuided, ſome ſo great that I haue meaſured a print twenty inches ouer. Hee doth hurt in the Rice-grounds, but generally feeds on low mariſh grounds, where the Sedge is greene in herds by night; bold in the water, ſnorting, neighing, and toſſing the water within Piſtoll ſhot, very fearefull of fire, as might appeare by a Candles end (we could not ſpare them any ſhot) ſet on a piece of wood, and let downe the ſtreame on them. They were moſt dangerous when they had their young with them, which ſometimes they leaue on the ſhoare, carried in the water by the female on her backe. I haue ſeene the Sea-horſe and Crocodile to ſwimme together without diſagreement.

Torpedo, Tremedor, or Thinta.

Embleme of a flatterer.

Running fiſh.

There is ſtore of Mullet and other fiſh: amongſt others, with a net we tooke one like an Engliſh Breme, but of great thickneſſe, which one of our Saylers putting his hand to, preſently cried out that he had loſt the vſe of his hands and armes; another bare-legged, putting thereto his foot, loſt the ſenſe of his leg; their ſenſe being ſeene to returne, the Cooke was called vp, and bidden to dreſſe it; who laying both his hands thereon, ſunke preſently on his hinder parts, making grieuous moane that he felt not his hands. Sandy a Blacke comming with his Canoe laughed, and told vs that they much feared this fiſh in the water; for he benummed whatſoeuer hee touched, which he vſed to doe, ſtroking himſelfe on other fiſh, and then deuouring them: but being dead he was good meat. At that place (neere Caſſan) the people would come boldly into the water, ſome great Marybuck hauing ſecured them from the Bumbo by his bleſſing. And wee might ſee many on the other ſide, but neuer any on this. One little fiſh there is which may bee called the Running fiſh, like our Roach, with a red tayle, enforced to runne a great way on the top of the water lightly touching it, by his aduerſary which is like a Trout, whom to auoide he hath run ſometimes into our Canoe.

Riuer fowle.

Natiues fiſhing.

There is ſtore of fowle, which we ſee ſit on the bankes, but neuer in the mayne Riuer ſwimming (it ſeemes, for feare of the Crocodile) and feeding on the Mariſhes and Ponds; Geeſe rather bigger then our tame Gooſe with a ſpurre on each pinion, large, ſharpe, and if they be not killed dead, ready for offence: Ducke, Mallard, Hernes, Curlews, Storkes, Plouer, and the like. The people fiſh their Lakes, and Ponds (which are many, broad, ſhallow) going a whole Towne or Plantation together, onely the men, each with a kinde of Basket holding the open mouth downward, cloſe one by another ouerſpreading the Pond, clapping downe their Baskets before them, and ſo returne moſt of them laden.

To ſpeake of the Inhabitants, I will beginne at the mouth of the Riuer, where dwell the

Blackes,

Blacks,called Mandingos,which ſpeake the ſame language,fearfull of any ſhipping,becauſe many haue beene ſurpriſed and carried away, except they know them: they brought to vs abundance of Bonanos (which in the Weſt Indies they call Plantanos) with Beeues, Goats, Hens, Graine, and ſome Hides. Amongſt theſe dwell,or lurke rather,a certaine way vp the Riuer,certaine Portugals, ſome of that colour, other Molatos, but the moſt,blacke, ſcattered two or three in a place, begetting children of the Blacke women; but haue neither Church, nor Frier, nor any other Religious Order. It appeareth that they are Fugitiues or Exiles from Portugall, or the Iles of that gouernment, which employ themſelues in buying Commodities, eſpecially Slaues. A few of them haue vſed one time of the yeere to goe vp the Riuer in a ſmall Barke as farre as Setico to trade, whence they haue returned much Gold, and haue not attempted further, which is not halfe the way we haue gone vp. They ſay that thoſe * which committed the treachery againſt our men are baniſhed, as detetted for that fact; how euer, it is not ſafe to truſt them too farre. Their condition vnder the blacke Kings is baſe, who after their death ſeize on all without reſpect to wife, childe, or ſeruant, except they haue before prouided; as wee haue ſeene of their poore poſteritie, retayning the language of Portugall, and name of Chriſtians loth to bee called Negros, though neuer ſo blacke. The better ſort for feare of reuenge haue remoued their dwellings thence; the Blackes baniſhing them the Towne where it was done, and ſo much compaſſionating others of our people which were aboue in the Riuer in trade, that at their returne they fed them, and conuayed them to the next with their commendations,giuing them ſafe conduct and guides till they came to Cape Verd, where the French haue continuall trade, which might ſhip them home: their commendation from one King to another, being the loſſe of their ſhip by the treachery of Portugals, and their entertaynment good in all places. What Ferambra did, when the King of Nany was perſwaded by the Portugals to deſtroy them is ſaid before. Others did animate our men, and promiſed aſſiſtance to their reuenge, which their paucity refuſing, ſtill theſe Natiues beare a ſullen diſaffection to the Portugall notwithſtanding.

Mandingos.

Portugals.

Theſe may be of the Tangosmaos before mentioned.

* Hector Nunez, &c. which vnder colour of trade waited their time to kill the Engliſh, and take their ſhip, Tomſon and others being in their trade in the Countrey, others on ſhore, and diuers ſick: after much loue and pretended kindneſſe.

There is another People dwelling amongſt the Mandingos, called Fulbies, a tawny People much like to thoſe vagrants amongſt vs, called Egyptians; the women well featured, with a long blacke haire, more looſe then that of the Blacke women, neatly apparelled in the habite of the Natiues. The men are not ſo handſome, by reaſon they liue of and with their Cattell, ſome Goats, but herds of Beeues in abundance, the keeping of which is their profeſſion. In ſome places they haue ſetled Townes, moſtly wandring, vniting themſelues in Kindreds, and driuing their herds together: where they finde good paſtures they agree with the King, and build houſes as the ſeaſon ſerues, during the raines betaking themſelues to the Mountaines and higher grounds, and then ſucceeding the Riuer, euen to his ſeuerer bankes. Their toyle is continuall, keeping their Cattell in the day from ſtraying, and from the Crocodiles hants; in the night bringing them neere their houſes, and parting them in ſeuerall herds, make fires about them; and likewiſe in the midſt, about which they lie themſelues, ready againſt the roaring aſſaylants. Thus is the poore Fulby almoſt growne beaſtial,and when we haue gone to them to buy a Beefe, he hath come forth from his beaſts with his face and hands couered with flies, as thicke as here they vſe to ſit on Horſes in Summer, and the ſame kinde of flies; but thoſe Fulbies ſeeme more ſenſeleſſe; not remouing them, as we were fayne with a bough in conference to doe, and as our beaſts vſe whisking of their tayles and other motions.

The Fulbies.

Theſe being tawny, and the others blacke, ſheweth that this colour comes from the ſeed which takes hold on the Portugals borne of Negro women, and not of the Sunne-burnd Fulby, in the ſame place.

Beaſtly life.

They liue in great ſubiection to the Mandingos, who will ſhare with them if they know of their killing of a Beefe, and in their Commodities: that when they traded with vs, they would draw vs couertly to ſee it, leſt the Negro participate in his returne. Of theſe the Countrey is full, euery where diſperſed; and higher vp they are in one part principall, holding domination, excluding the Blackes, but for the moſt part in warre. Their language is different from the Blackes. Their women would daily bring vs Milke, Curds, two ſorts of Butter (one new, ſoft and white, the other hard and of an excellent colour, as good as any we haue here, but for a little freſhneſſe) brought in Goards like Diſhes, neate and cleanly within and without, therein much vnlike the Iriſh Calios, how euer otherwiſe reſembling their courſe of life. Their returne was ſwall Beads and Kniues of ſixteene pence the dozen, with other trifles. But after they had once taſted Ramdam (ſo they call our Salt) nothing elſe could ſo well pleaſe them, were this neuer ſo little. If wee denied trade one day, wee ſhould not haue their companie in a weeke; ſo that we were willing to pleaſe them, the Blacke not applying himſelfe to Cattell.

Baſe ſtate.

The Mandingos themſelues, which are the Naturall Inhabitants, are perfectly blacke, liuing a moſt idle life, except two moneths of the yeare, in their Seed-time and harueſt; wandering vp and downe at other times from one to another, hauing little knowledge, to hunt, fiſh, or fowle, how much ſoeuer both Woods and Waters abound in Game, the Beaſts and Fowles (as Guinnie Hens and Partridges) reſorting to their very doores. In the heate of the day they paſſe the time in companies chatting vnder the ſhady Trees, hauing one Game with ſome thirtie ſtones and holes cut in a piece of Wood, performed by a kind of counting. They ordinarily make but one meale a day, ſpecially the vulgar and younger ſort; or rather none, their houre of meale being after the day light is in; and then with fires of Reeds, without the doore, they ſit round and fall to their Viands, which for the moſt part are, Rice or ſome other Graine boyled, which being brought vnto them in Goards by the women hot, they put in their hands, roll it vp in Bals, and caſt into their mouthes. Fleſh, or fiſh their want of skill to get, hath made Rarities; their Cockes, and Hennes are plentifull, but ſpared to barter with vs for ſmall pieces of Iron, Beads, and ſuch Commodities. They hold it vnwholſome to eate in the heate of the day, the heate and moyſture then exhaled to the exteriour parts, and the inward cooler and more diſabled for concoction: whereby we can in that heate eaſily drinke, yea and deſire it, that quantitie of Aquauitæ, or hote Drinkes, which here would kill vs; and there wee drinke with more Temperance and ſatisfaction in leſſe quantitie both Morning and Euening. And in my opinion it were fitter for vs to eate early, and againe, after the heate is paſt, in thoſe parts.

Their Houſes.

Strange Ant-hils.

Fortifications.

Their vſuall drinke is water, yet haue both Wine of Trees, as alſo their Dullo of Graine, like our Ale. They place their Habitations round together, and for the moſt part haue a Wall of Reed made vp together ſome ſixe foot high; (fortifying them againſt rauenous beaſts, which yet cauſe often alarmes and mighty cryes) compaſſing their Towne, with doores of the ſame ſhut in the night. Some of the houſes within are made of the ſame Reeds, but the better ſort of Loome, reddiſh and remayning very hard, likely to yeeld the beſt Brick in the World, the whole Countrey but the Mountaynes, yeelding the ſame Earth. The Ant-hils are remarkable, caſt vp in thoſe parts by Piſmires, ſome of them twentie foot in height, of compaſſe to contayne a dozen men, with the heate of the Sunne baked into that hardneſſe, that we vſed to hide our ſelues in the ragged toppes of them, when we tooke vp ſtands to ſhoot at Deere or wild beaſts. The forme of their Houſes is round, and couered with Reeds tyed faſt to Rafts that they may endure the outragious guſts and raines. Such are their meaner Townes and Villages; others they haue of force ſutable to their Warres, fortified and entrenched, of which the In-land hath ſtore, and Caſſan (againſt which the betrayed ſhip did ride) is ſuch. It is the ſeat of the King ſeated on the Riuer, encloſed round with Hurdles like thoſe which our Sheepherds vſe, but aboue tenne foote high, faſtened to ſtrong Poles which are higher then the Hurdles. On the in-ſide in diuers places they haue buildings made like Turrets whence to ſhoote Arrowes and caſt Darts againſt the Aſſailants: on the out-ſide is a Ditch or Trench of great breadth, beyond which againe the Towne is circled with poſts and pieces of Trees ſet cloſe and faſt into the ground ſome fiue foot high, ſo thicke that except in ſtiles and places made purpoſely, a ſingle man cannot get thorow; and in like manner a ſmall diſtance off is the like defence, which they ſay is to keepe off the force of Horſe.

Their Armes.
Azegeys.

Bow and Arrowes.

Their Armes are an Azegay or Iauelin, with which in their hands they walke, beeing a Reed of ſixe foot, with an Iron-pike artificially made and dangerous; they haue others to caſt like Darts with barbed heads. About the necke a Bandelier of redde or yellow cloth with a Sword hanging of ſome two foot long and an open handle; the better ſort carry a Bow in their hand, and at their backe a Caſe with many holes holding ſome foure and twentie Arrowes of Reed, as bigge as a Swans Quill, two foot long, headed with Iron poyſoned, without nocke or feather: the Bow alſo made of a Reed, with a flat ſtring or ſticke ſmoothed and faſtened, of the ſame Wood, and to a Buffe Ierkin or any ſleight Garment of defence is little offenſiue, the danger being in the Poyſon. We haue ſeene them likewiſe on Horſe-backe, their Horſes ſmall, bridled and ſadled after the Spaniſh faſhion, each man hauing an Aſſegie, and a broad Buckler hanging on the right ſide of his Horſe. The Kings Houſe is in the middle of the Towne encloſed by it ſelfe, with his Wiues ſeuerall Houſes about, to which you cannot come, but by a Court of Guard, paſſing thorow an open Houſe where ſtands his Chaire emptie, in which none but himſelfe may ſit; by which hangs his Drummes, which euery night they vſe to drumme on, hooping, ſinging, and making a wild confuſed noyſe till day breake, with fires in the Houſe and Yard: which noyſe they vſe in meaner Townes alſo to ſcarre away wild beaſts.

Their Kings.

Their State.

Deuotion in ſalutation.

I ſaw and did eate and drinke with ſixe of their Kings or Manſas, which haue reference to greater Kings liuing further; all the South-ſide of the Riuer as wee went, beeing ſubiect to the King of Cantore, of the North-ſide halfe ſubiect to the King of Burſale, the reſt to the King of Woolley. Theſe wee ſaw not, and they ſay, that they ſhew not themſelues abroad but in pompe, hunting with great numbers of Horſe, as our men ſaw the King of Burſall (when they paſſed to Cape Verde) and there are warres betwixt one ſide of the Riuer and the other, which were it not, Burſale would ſoone with his Horſe ſubdue a great part of the Countrey, or if he had meanes of tranſportation. Before theſe which we ſaw, the people preſent themſelues kneeling, and comming neerer layes his hand firſt on the ground, and then on his owne head couered, ſome laying duſt thereon; which Ceremonie he vſeth twice or thrice before he comes at him, then with much ſubmiſſion laying his hand on the Kings thigh, and ſo retyreth backe. And if a Marybuck be preſent in any company which thus come to him, after their ſalutation they all kneele downe, and he fals to praying for him and bleſſing him; to which he croſſing his armes (the right hand ouer the left ſhoulder, and the left to the right) often anſwers, Amena, Amena, which is as Amen, with vs. When the common people meet, which haue not ſeene each other in long time, if there be a Marybucke amongſt them, before ſalutation they put themſelues in a Ring and kneele to Prayer. The King anſwers the people with nodding his head. His habit is little differing from theirs, the Countrey yeelding only Cotton to both, whereof they plant great fields, where it growes like Roſe Buſhes, yeelding a Cod which being ripe breakes and is white.

Cotton trees or buſhes. In other parts are greater Cotton trees.

Their apparell is a ſhirt and a paire of breeches: the ſhirt downe to the knees, wide like a Surplice, with great ſleeues, which he rolleth vp and faſtens to his ſhoulder when hee vſeth his armes: the breeches made with ſo much ſtuffe gathered iuſt on his buttockes, that hee ſeemeth to carry a Cuſhion, and they make him ſtraddle. His legs are bare; ſome few wearing a piece of Leather vnder the foot, buttoned about the great Toe, and againe at the in-ſtep. They are for the moſt part bare-headed, ſaue that they are bedecked with Gregories, which are things of great eſteeme, vſually made of Leather of ſeuerall faſhions wondrous neatly, ſeeming hollow, with Writings in them receiued from their Marybuckes, reputed ſo holy that no euill can betyde them whiles they weare them. On their heads they weare them in manner of a Croſſe from the fore-head to the necke, and from eare to eare: about their neckes, ſhoulders, bodies, armes aboue and below the elbow, round their middles, ſeeming laden with bleſſings for each member, both men and women, and moſt of all the King. Yea, if they haue any Maladie or Sore, they apply thereto theſe Gregories; neyther could I perceiue amongſt them any other Phyſicke. Their Horſes alſo are thus bleſſed, wearing them about their neckes, and their Bowes.

Their apparel.

Gregories.

Their women.

The King for greater ſtate hath many times two of his Wiues ſit by him, laying their hands on his naked skinne aboue the waſte, ſtroking, and gently pulling the ſame. He hath an orderly allowance of ſeuen Wiues, acknowledged with ſet Ceremonie, beſides Concubines; ſometimes yet of ſo many Wiues not hauing one fit for carnall knowledge. The cauſe whereof is their membrous Monſtroſity, the woman after ſhe perceiueth conception not admitting further knowledge, leſt ſhe or it be deſtroyed. Cuſtome alſo forbids it after deliuery till the Child be weyned, each Mother being herein complete, and her Childes Nurſe. Adultery is ſeuerely puniſhed, the man and woman being both ſold (which is the puniſhment for great offences, none being put to death) the Portugals buying and tranſporting them to the Weſt Indies. Other men may haue if they are able to buy, their pluralitie alſo, firſt compounding with the King or Gouernour with ſome gratification, and then with the womans friends: which money, they ſay, remaynes in banke if he dyes, for her better mayntenance, or if ſhee pleaſe to buy a Husband. For as the Mayde is bought, the Widow buyeth.

Priapeian Stallions.

Husbands and Wiues bought.

The Wiues liue in great ſeruitude; they beate their Graine in Morters with ſtaues like Cowle-ſtaues; and dreſſe it and all manner of victuall, and bring and ſet it on the Mat before them, neuer admitted to ſit and eate with them; neyther could I euer intreat that fauour of any for the beſt accounted Wife (which vſually they haue one moſt conuerſant with the Husband, whom we called the Hand-wife) but euen ſhe alſo how euer priuiledged from ſome other labours, may not eate in ſight, but in another houſe. One ſhall not ſee kiſſing or any dalliance vſed betwixt the Husband and Wife, nor euer heare of brawling or falling out (which in this plurality and equality is ſtrange) amongſt themſelues. Each woman hath her priuate Lodging and ſeuerall Houſe for the night. When they appeare in the morning, they ſalute him kneeling, laying their hands on his thighe. Her apparell is looſe, parti-coloured, blue and white Cotton Cloth, from the waſte vpwards bare, the rather to ſhew their printed raſed bodies, whereof they are not a little proud, turning themſelues to ſhew it, and pleaſed with the handling, ſeeming to vs as the printed lids of our baked meates. Sometimes they caſt on their ſhoulders ſuch another Cloth as they weare below. Moſt of them are nice in ſhewing Natures Secrets.

Admirable ſubiection.

The Marriage Solemnitie is this: the man gets his friends with whom, and the younger ſort he comes to the Towne where the Mayde is dwelling, in the beginning of a Moone-ſhine night. Theſe by violence, as it were, carrie her away ſhriking with a great noyſe, ſeconded by the young Maydes of the ſame place; whereupon the young men of the Towne aſſemble in reſcue, the other notwithſtanding, with great ſhouts and jubilees, carrying her away to the Bridegroomes abode: where ſhe remayneth for a certayne time vnſeene; after which for ſome Moones ſhe ſhewes not her open face, but with a cloth couers all but one Eye.

Mariage rites.

Their Kings and Grandes ſtand much on their Generoſitie and Antiquitie, whereof wee had experience in a quarrell betwixt Bo Iohn and the Kings Sonne, in whoſe Land wee then reſided. Succeſſion is not to the Sonne of the deceaſed, but to his Brethren in courſe, and then to the Son of the eldeſt, the other Brethren holding ſome place, gouerned meane-while. Bo Iohn is the title of the yongeſt, Ferambra of the third, Ferran of the ſecond, and the eldeſt is ſtiled Manſa, or King, which here was the King of Cantore, whom we ſaw not. Their greateſt riches is the number of ſlaues, and from the King to the ſlaue they would all begge of vs; but ſmall matters might ſerue, except Aquauita, for which they would ſell all, the Kings alſo drinking drunke: and the Kings life with them is to eate, drinke, ſleepe, and company with their women, thus conſuming their time till time conſumes them. Our ſalutation to the King, he ſitting on his Mat, was without moouing the Hat, to lay the hand on the breſt bending the bodie (as hee alſo did) and then both take hold on the vpper part, then on the lower part of each others hands, and the third time ioyne full hand and ſhake hands : then ſitting downe by him, after a little parley touching the cauſe of our comming (the King for ſtate ſtill ſpeaking by another) out goeth our Bottle of Aquauitæ and Sacke, and calling for a ſmall gourd which is their richeſt Plate, I beginne and drinke off a Cup, then preſenting both Cup and Bottle to the King, after whom it paſſeth to the reſt, no vnkindneſſe taken if wee refuſe to drinke any more. Before hee drinkes, hee wets therewith one of his Gregories. They leaue not till all be out.

Of their Marybucks, and Religion: Merchandize; Fidlers, Inſtruments, Trades, Husbandry, with a further Hiſtorie of the Creatures in thoſe parts.

Marybuckes, or Prieſts of a Mahumetan Sect, differing from the common.

Fodee Bram. ſee ſup. 925.

It ſeemes they ſpeake ſome Arabike words: in which alſo their Law is written.

Slouenly clenlineſſe.

* To Mecca ward.

THeir Marybucks or Baſſareas, are their Prieſts or Religious perſons, ſeparated from others in their habitations and courſe of life. They tell of Adam, Eue, Noah, with other things mentioned in Scripture; like the Leuiticall Tribes, they haue their Townes and Lands proper to themſelues, wherein dwell none of the Secular but their Slaues, whoſe Iſſue is their Inheritance, they marry alſo in their owne Tribe, breeding all their Children to their owne profeſſion; haue as mhny Wiues and Women as the reſt according to their degree. In euery Marybucke Towne they haue a principall; they will put their hands to worke, and may be hired to doe ſeruice as well as others; wee agreed with them by the Moone. Their habit is as that of the vulgar. I viſited Fodee Bram, the principall in his ſickneſſe, who ſate on his Mat or Bed ſupported by three of his Wiues, to each of which I gaue a Pewter Ring, which hee tooke kindly, and cauſed a Dinner to be prouided, and ſent mee a Hide and an Elephants Tooth in recompenſe of a Preſent which I had giuen him, which here coſt eighteene pence. They worſhip one God and call him Alle, acknowledge Mahomet, are circumciſed; obſerue Friday Sabbath, but haue no Meskits or Mahumetan Churches or other Religious place, where they celebrate the ſame, following therein their occaſions without intermiſſion. They haue open round Houſes not decently ſwept, in which they teach their Children to write and reade; Paper is of great eſteeme with them; their Pen is a kind of Penſill; their Law is written in a Language differing from their vulgar. None of the Temporall people haue any vſe of Bookes or Letters. We thought they made vſe of ſome ſhadie tree in the fields for their Aſſemblies: and one day ſaw a Marybucke comming with his Slaue to the Riuer-ſide cloſe by our Wall, hee firſt with a Gourd full of water waſhed his members, without any nicety of our ſeeing him; then waſhing the emptyed Gourd, his ſlaue brought him other water wherewith he waſhed his hands, and after that a third for his face; after all which making a low reuerence with his body, and laying his hand on his breſt, his face directed toward the Eaſt, * kneeled downe and in decent forme ſeemed to vtter certayne Prayers; which ended he kiſſed the ground, roſe vp, turned his face to the Weſt, and performed like Ceremonies, and then returned to his Lodging.

Marybucke Orations or Sermons.

When Fodee Bram was dead, hee was laid in a houſe where a Graue was digged, and a great Pot of water ſet in the Roome, and after the Iriſh manner much crying (rather then mourning) being made, he was laid into the ground; the women running about in a Lunatike faſhion, with their armes ſpread made a terrible Spectacle of ſorrow. The Marybuckes aſſembled themſelues in a conuenient place to receiue the mnltitude, neere the Graue, where the people ſitting downe in a Ring, a Marybucke came forth in the midſt, who betwixt ſaying and ſinging, ſeemed to reherſe certayne Verſes in the prayſe of the deceaſed, the people interjecting their applauſes, clapping hands and running in to gratifie their Vates, (Poet or Prophet) with a Preſent. Thus one after another, euery Marybucke had his ſpeech, but the moſt popular Orator carryed only the Preſents. The principall might alſo take of the Graue, Earth, and Water in the Pot to make a Relike-ball thereof. Some dayes being thus ſpent, a great Solemnitie was made for the inſtalling of his Sonne in the Succeſſion.

Their Bookes and abſtinence

They haue great Bookes, Manuſcripts, with which we haue ſeene ſome of them laden. As the vulgar is inſatiate with hote Drinkes, theſe are abſtenious, ſtrictly deuoted to poore pure water, as alſo their Wiues and Children; nor would endure the leaſt Infant or playing Boy to taſt of our liquor, or Raiſins, Sugar, Fruits, or any ſweet thing. Nor can the greateſt Reaſons in their ſickneſſe perſwade a taſte; inſomuch that my Marybucke almoſt drowned once in a Whirle-poole, after twice ſinking recouered, ſcarſly had any ſenſe and yet ſhut his mouth to our Roſa-ſolis, whereby we ſought to reuiue him, benefited no doubt by the ſent; and being comne to himſelfe, he asked whether any had entred, ſaying, hee had rather haue dyed then any ſhould haue come within him. Hereby they are eaſily diſcerned from the vulgar, and this ſobriety makes them vſefull in their ſeruice and credible in their reports.

Marybucks trauellers.

They diſpoſe themſelues generally to trauell, together with their Families, Bookes, and Boyes; the Countrey being open to them; renewing (it ſeemes) their prouiſion when they come to ſome principall place: of vs it is moſt certayne they will begge, and a Quire of Paper is a great gift to a whole Company, which they vſe to write their Gregories; and when wee ſend any of the people any whither, he will looke to haue a ſheet or two of Paper aboue his couenant, to buy him ſuſtenance in the way. Theſe Mary-buckes by their trauels are experienced in diuers Countries: and how euer the Countries agree or haue Warres, the Mary-bucke is alway a priuiledged perſon, with both ſides; Yet doe they vſe Armes as well as others, but rather I thinke for defence againſt Mankinde-beaſts, then beaſtly vnkinde Men. Two Mary-buckes gaue vs much intelligence of Gold; one of which, when I came to take leaue of him, tooke my right hand betwixt his, vttering ouer the ſame certayne vnknowne words, and would euer and anon ſparingly ſpettle vpon it; and the like he did ouer my right ſhoulder.

Cauſe why Paper is ſo eſteemed. See Sup. 1466.

The Inhabitants of Setico are all Mary-buckes, and haue continuall Trade to the King of Burſall, and carry Slaues to buy Salt which is there by the Sea ſide, a durtie kind: like Sea-coale aſhes. This they make little vſe of among themſelues, but carrie it vp farre into the Countrey; their returne is Gold and Cola Nuts. The Gold is ſayd to bee buryed with them, or by themſelues hidden ſecretly in the ground: for their vſe in the next world. They buy alſo Bloud-ſtones long and ſquare of the Portugals, which their Women weare about their middles, to preſerue them from bloudie iſſues, the Mens membroſitie ſeeming to giue thereto much occaſion. They follow this Trade with great numbers of Aſſes. Bucker-ſano is ſayd to keepe three hundred Aſſes. They goe in Companies together, driuing their ſlow-paced Aſſes before them, beginning their dayes journey with the Sunne: and trauell three houres, the heat then enforcing their reſt; two houres before Sun-ſet ſetting forth againe, and holding on till Night, when the wilde Beaſts forbid further trauell. At ſome good Townes they will ſtay and make ſhew of their Wares, in a kinde of Market; they carry their mattes for Beds with them.

Carauans of Aſſes.

Bucker-ſanos Sword and Wiues Bracelets: ſeeming to come from theſe parts, I asked whence hee had them? He anſwered, of the Arabecks, which he deſcribed to bee tawnie Moores, comming in Companies with Camels, by which I perceiued they were of Barbarie. Some Women which had neuer ſeene white Men, were fearefull of vs, till the gift of Beads made them more daring; and they requited vs with neate Tabacco-pipe Canes: they were the deepeſt printed that euer I ſaw. Their Husbands in gallantrie weare Beaſts ſkinnes, the tayles hanging to them as to the Beaſt, betwixt their buttockes. The Women weare golden Eare-rings; the Language was differing, yet the better ſort could ſpeake the Mandingo. Wee obſerued ſome with three ſtrakes vnder the Eyes, a diſtinction of the Subjects, of a certayne King further vp the Riuer. A Mary-bucke told vs, that the Salt was ſold to a people not farre from Iayo, which were deformed, their nether Lippe hanging downe toward the breaſt and putrifying, againſt which they vſe Salt for a remedie: but conſcious of this Deformitie, trade without ſight or conference: a Day being ſet, on which the Merchants bring and lay downe their Commodities, which they leaue there one whole Day; and then returning, finde ſo much Gold layed by them as the Deformed will giue. If hee likes the price, he takes the Gold and leaues the Wares; or elſe them, and leaues the Gold, when the price contents him not. This is reported to bee the Arabeckes Trade with that people.

Deformed people, their Trade and Gold. See Sup. *pag.*872.

No people is more adicted to Muſicke, the Kings or principall perſons being accompanied with their Iuddies or Fidlers. The moſt common Inſtrument is made of a great Gourd, and a Necke therto faſtened, in ſome ſort reſembling our Bandora, the ſtrings meane, and vnfit, without frets, yet with Pinnes wound and fitted to ſome Harmonie. With this they haue a little Drum, whereon with a crooked ſticke in the right hand, and the Fingers on the left, they play wringing the mouth and gaping very Deformedly. Their Ballards are a foot aboue ground, hollow vnder, with ſome ſeuenteene Keyes on the top, on which the Player ſtrikes ſitting on the ground, with two ſtickes a foot long, with Balls faſtened on the end: the ſound may bee heard an Engliſh mile. This Inſtrument is one of their moſt ingenious Artifices. To euery one of theſe Keyes belongs a ſmall Iron a foot long, as bigge as a Quill, vpon which hangs two Gourds vnder the hollow like bottles, which cauſe the ſound. There are few of them, but not a few which reſort to them, and ſpend whole nights in Dancing, each perſon Male or Female ſingle: giuing to the Muſicians, whereby they are eſteemed Rich, and their Wiues more adorned then the Kings with Bloudſtone: but theſe, if any licentious, as their carriage imports, Theſe men are denyed Buriall, being ſet dead in a Tree, as conceiued to haue moſt familiaritie with their Ho-re Deuill, and are accounted Diuiners. Their greateſt aſſembly is at the Circumciſion, which is a ſet time yeerely. The youths which are Circumciſed haue Licence permitted to filch Hennes, and from the Fulbies a Beefe, or young Cattle, to make merry with in the time of their ſoreneſſe. It is done without religious Ceremonie, and hath no name but cutting of Prickes, the partie ſtripped naked and ſitting on the ground, and the Butcher pulling the skinne ouer very farre, and cutting it, not without terrour to the beholder. This is done in the greater Townes, to which the ſmaller ſend their Youth for this purpoſe, they being all kept in a Houſe together: ſome Knaue neuer fayling to play the Ho-re at this meeting, by the Mary-buckes pollicie, as I found by experience. Thus the Deuill may bee belyed, who yet is an Oracle to them, as appeared by one of their Iuddies, which had told one at Pompetane how many of vs, and at what houre wee ſhould arriue, which was vncertayne to our ſelues, yet fell out accordingly.

Their Trades. Smiths.

There are amongſt them three principall Trades, the Smith which of Iron brought to them (for elſe they haue none) makes their Swords, Aſſegay heads, Darts and Arrow heads barbed; and Inſtruments of Husbandry, without which they could not liue. Hee hath his Bellowes, ſmall Anuill, and Cole of a red wood, which alone will giue the true heat to our Iron; who thus cut out Iron for vs, eight inches going aboue as well as twelue inches below, at ten for one gaine. The Smith if he be not looked too, will ſteale.

Gregorie* maker

The next Trade is the Sepatero, or Gregorie maker, made artificially in all ſhapes, round and ſquare and triangle, ſo as Our men would acknowledge Art. They make alſo Bridles and Saddles, of which I haue ſeene ſome very neat, hardly to be bettered heere: whereby it ſeemes they haue skill to dreſſe and dye their Deeres skins and Goats skins.

Potters. Tabacco pipes. Mats.

A third Profeſſion is of thoſe which temper the Earth for their wals and pots, in which they boyle meats, vſing for other ſeruices the gourd. Their Tabacco Pipes alſo (without which few or none, either men or women walke, and cannot of all things want) haue their bowles and neckes about two inches long of Earth, neatly glaſed, able commonly to hold halfe an ounce of Tabacco: they put a cane about a yard long into the necke, and ſo draw the ſmoake. Theſe are peculiar Trades; other things are common to all, Mats to eate, ſit, ſleepe on, are their Staple commoditie, as at Mangegar Market, we ſaw things bought and ſold, without nominating any other price but Mats (How many Mats ſhall I giue you?) for Coyne they haue none.

Husbandry. No Bread.

But the generall Trade from which none but the Kings and principall perſons are exempted, is Husbandry whereto the Marybucke-prieſt, the people of all ſizes after their abilitie are ſubject: God hauing not giuen them wiſedome to ſerue themſelues of the beaſts to that purpoſe. They make furrowes as decently as we doe, but with handie labour, hauing a ſhort ſticke about a yard long, on the end of which is a broad Iron like to that of our Paddle-ſtaues; with which Iron ſet into the ground, one leades the way cutting the Earth before him, others following in the ſame tract with their ſeuerall Irons, ſo many as will make a ſufficient furrow thorow the length of a ſpacious field: and when they are at the end, they begin againe, many hands making lighter riddance. They haue ſixe ſeuerall graines for food, of which we know none here by name but Rice: the * other ſeeme Seeds rather then Corne, being very ſmall. Neither do they make any bread, but boyling the graine, roll it vp in Bals, as before is ſaid: in like ſort they boyle their Rice and eate it warme. This they ſet firſt in low Mariſh grounds, and after remooue them to places prepared for it, where it yeelds great increaſe: the other ſeeds they ſow, and ſpaddle ouer the ground with their Irons, and ſo leaue it. They obſerue their ſeaſons for Tabacco, which they ſet about their houſes, and for Cotton-ſeeds with which they ſet whole fields. The terribleneſſe of their ſeaſons doth further aggrauate the miſeries of their Husbandry; which might learne vs thankfulneſſe to whom God hath giuen the beaſts in ſeruice, the Heauens ſeaſonable, and beſides, and with infinite other bleſſings, his owne Sonne.

Palmita trees and Wine. Dullo-Ale. Gourds. Locuſt trees. Great trees. Cola an Embleme of the Chriſtians Croſſes.

They haue growing neere the Riuers mouth Bononos, as delicious and great as any in the Weſt Indies; likewiſe ſtore of ſmall Limons or Limes, and Orenges were brought vs farre vp in the Riuer. Of Palmita trees their are whole grounds or groues, whence they draw a ſweete Wine and wholſome, by cutting holes into the bodie of the tree, into which a Cane is put, which receiueth the ſap and conueyes it into gourds. The vulgar may not meddle with this: it taſtes like white Wine when it comes firſt ouer, and as many differences are thereof: but will not laſt aboue foure and twentie houres. Some of them beare Apples almoſt like Quinces, which the common people will eate. When they make Dullo, the King or ſome principall perſon makes a Feaſt, and hauing prouided three or foure great Gourds, they make an end of all before they part. The Gourds grow like our Pompions, in that manner placed and carried vpon their wals, of vnequall quantities from an Egge to a Buſhell, yeelding varietie of houſhold Veſſell to eate, drinke, waſh clothes: the meat is bitter and throwne away, which ſeaſons the ſhell ſo that it muſt bee ſeaſoned before it is fit for vſe. They haue Pompions alſo like ours in nature and vſe. They haue great ſtore of Locuſt trees, which yeeld cluſters of cods, ripe in May; the trees bigge and high, of which the younger ſort eate. They haue ſtore of Honey; for which they place baskets on great trees about their houſes, made of Reed and Sedge, in which the Bees will come and breed: ſo many in ſome trees that to vs afarre off, they ſeemed as the fruit thereof. In hollow trees alſo are ſtore of Bees. They haue one great ſort of trees, which on a long ſtalke yeeldeth a great and round fruit, with a pleaſing pith therein, whereon the Baboones and Monkies feed. Some are ſo bigge that ten men can hardly fathome. The Cola is much like our bigger ſort of Cheſnut, flat on both ſides, yet without a hard ſhell, the taſte very bitter, yet cauſing that which is taken immediately after to be very ſweet, water taſting like white Wine and Sugar, Tabacco alſo hauing thereby an admirable ſweetneſſe. The elder which want Teeth to chew it, haue morters to bruiſe it. Fiftie of theſe [m] preſented to the King would buy a Wife. They are brought from ſome other parts. I would haue brought ſome into England, but they would not laſt. Amongſt their Plants one is moſt admirable, a tree or buſh commonly growing on the Riuers bank, reſembling much our great Bramble-buſhes, only hauing a little ragged leafe; whereof the gentleſt ſtealing touch of a leafe [n] betwixt the finger and Thumbe, would cauſe the whole bough to cloſe vp all his leaues, as ſenſible of offence; the touch of a ſprigge, would cauſe the whole Tree to ſhut vp his leaues. It bare a yellow flowre like our Hedge-roſes.

They haue many Lions, hardly ſeene by day, eaſily knowne by night, by reaſon of his Vſhers or Fore-runners the Iackall, ſometimes two or three, which is a little blacke ſhag-haired beaſt, of the bigneſſe of a ſmall Spaniell; which when Eeuening comes hunts for his prey, and comming on the foote, followes the ſcent with open crie: to which the Lion as Chiefe Hunt, giues diligent eare, following for his aduantage. If the Iackall ſet vp his Chaſe before the Lion comes in, he howles out maynly, and then the Lion ſeiſeth on it, making a grumbling noyſe, whiles his Seruant ſtands by barking (as we not onely heard of the Countrey people, but might heare our ſelues riding at Anchor by night in our paſſing vp the Riuer) when the Lion hath done, this Attendant feeds on the Relikes.

Lions and Iackalls

Some ſay, that if the Lion faile of his prey at three iumps, he will not further toile himſelfe.

There are many Ounces and Leopards, the prints of whoſe feet wee might often ſee in the mouthes of their Dennes or Holes, and many of their skinnes were brought to vs. The Ounce is the more rauenous: I ſaw a child which the Mother hauing left on a cloth at the doore, whiles ſhe fetched water, an Ounce had gotten and being hotly purſued, let fall the childe out of the cloth which he carried away. Many times our Dogge hath beene driuen to our Bed-ſide by a hole he had thorow our ſtraw walls, not daring with any animating to goe forth, till we with Firebrands haue ſcarred away the Ounce. The Ciuet-cat and the Porcupine, are diligent Purueyors for their Poulterie.

Ounce.

Ciuet-cat and Porcupine.

Elephants.

Theſe are night-walkers: By day you may ſee the Elephants, of which the Countrey people are very fearefull: they doe much harme in their Corne and Cotton grounds, going in companies together. They feed amongſt the Sedge, halfe their bodies appearing ouer the ſame, which yet is higher then a tall man can well reach; they bruiſe alſo on trees, whereof you ſhall finde many in the Woods by them pulled downe of bigge bodies, with their two great Teeth which are not like a Bores turning vpward; but downward, ſo that with his trunke bending the top, hee haſps ouer his two Teeth and then puls, that either the Tooth or Tree muſt yeeld; whence it comes that ſo many rift and broken Teeth, and pieces of Teeth are to bee had. They ſhead not their Teeth as Stagges their Hornes, but by death looſe together themſelues. I did eate of the fleſh at Ferambras houſe, who only (that wee knew) had a man which durſt kill an Elephant, which with a poyſoned Azagay tenne foote long (the head whereof I ſaw bound vp in a cloth with poyſon) he performed, ſtealing into the Reeds behind the Elephant feeding, till hee might thruſt his Iauelin into his bodie, there leauing it and fleeing away thorow the Reedes: the Poyſon killing the beaſt, the people about from Trees watch, and when hee fals come and cut away the inflamed fleſh, eating the reſt. It ſeemed to mee good and ſauourie meate. Thus had he killed ſo many as he ſhewed me tayles hanged vp. The people elſe-where ſeeme very fearefull of them, and yet they ſeemed as fearefull as a Forreſt Stagge going from vs (which aduentured on them as wee met them) with a ſwifter pace then an able man can runne. One wee ſhot three times and loſt him; but his Teeth were after brought vs to ſell by thoſe which had found him dead. There are wild Buls, and huge wilde Boares, of a darke blue colour, armed with large tuskes, and very bold; walking from vs with his tayle vpright in a ſcornfull manner. There are great Antelopes, Deere of all ſorts, and Beaſts vnknowne. They brought vs ſtrange Hides, amongſt which, one fourteene foot long, dunne, and ſtreaked with white.

Shed not their teeth.

Their Baboones & Monkeyes may deſerue mention: they go in Herds, the Monkeyes alwayes by themſelues, as the Baboones alſo; and aſwell within the Riuer Ilands to which they ſwim, contrary to ſome mens conceit; I had a Monkey which both ſwamme and diued often to eſcape from him which purſued him. The Baboones goe three or foure thouſand in a Herd, marching in ranke, ſome of the greater being Leaders (their greateſt are as bigge as Lions) the ſmaller following; euer and anon a great one as a Commander; inſerted: the Females carrie their young vnder their bellies, and if they haue two, the other is carried aboue. In the Reare comes a great company of the bigger ſort, as a Guard againſt Purſuers. Thus doe they march along and are very bold. And as we paſſe in the Riuer, when we come neere their troopes, they will get vp into the Trees, and ſtand in gaze vpon vs; and in a kind of cholericke humour, the great ones will ſhake the Trees, and with their hands clatter the boughes, with greater ſtrength then a man is able; barking and making a noyſe at vs, as much offended: and ſo following vs, in the night when we ride at Anchor, take vp their ſtands on the Mountayne tops or trees aboue vs, where wee might heare their gouernment. For often in the night, you ſhall heare many voyces together, when inſtantly one great voyce exalts it ſelfe, and that noyſe is all huſht; that we were wont to ſay, Maſter Conſtable ſpeakes. On ſhoare when we ſuddenly meet with theſe troopes, the great ones will come forward and ſeeme to grinne in our faces, flying on the firſt offer of a Game. One of our people killed one with a Peece, but before the Boate could get aſhoare, the others had gotten it vp, and carried it away. The Countrey people will eat them heartily. We haue ſeene in Deſert haunts of theirs, Trees and Plants woond and wrought together in that artificiall Baboones and Monkeyes.

He told me, he neuer ſaw greater Lion then of them: their height (ſtanding vp) moſt admirable!

Baboones dancing Schoole.

manner, thickly folded ouer head to keepe away the Sunne, and the ground ſo ſmooth and beaten below, as might appeare an excellent Arbour, which place they haue only vſed and kept for their Dancing and Diſport. No man liuing which ſhould ſee the place, and not know of the perſons, would conceiue otherwiſe of it, then of Mans handie-worke (which wee knew it could not bee.)

Vnicornes.

We enquired aboue in the Countrey if they had any knowledge of the Vnicorne; and they haue told me that higher within the Land: is a beaſt which hath one horne only in his fore-head, but deſcribe him to be of the colour and bigneſſe of a vallow Deere, and the horne to be about the length of their arme, and no otherwiſe; not like that which we haue deſcribed, of which I doubt, whether there be any ſuch.

Land Fowle.

* Eſtriches & Emes vſe ſandie Deſerta.

For their Land Fowle, we neuer ſaw any * Eſtriches, nor had any of their Feathers brought vs by the people. The greateſt we ſaw is a Stalker, whoſe long legges and necke makes him ſtanding vpright to be taller then a man; his body is in ſubſtance more then an indifferent Lambe. Some of his Feathers are worne and well eſteemed here at home. The next is a Wake, which makes great noyſe when he flyeth; they doe much ſpoyles on their Rice grounds: they are of great ſtature, good food, carrying a beautifull ſhew on the crowne with a faire tuft. There is infinite ſtore of thoſe which we call Guinnie-hennes, as bigge and beautifull as our Pheaſant, his Feathers layd ouer him like eyes: wee haue killed eight of them at a ſhoot, excellent meate. Their Partridges are of darke feathers, and are all ouer the inhabited parts, remayning neere their houſes. The plentie of theſe and the former, ſhew that they haue no Foxes: their keeping ſo neere the houſes, is to preſerue them from the Baboones and Monkeyes which are no night-walkers, and frequent not frequented places by day.

There are ſtore of Quailes as bigge as Woodcockes; and of Pidgeons, of which I haue killed with my Stone-bow, twenty in two houres. There are Parrats, but none good but the dun with the Red tayle; of Parakitos there are very faire, ſome which come to perfection. Of ſmall Birds are many pleaſing both the Eye and Eare.

Hanging Bird.

One ſtrange Bird there is which hath no legges, but two ſtrings by which he hangs with his head downe-wards, reſembling a dead leafe hanging on the tree, and is directly of that colour, ſo that except hee light, you can hardly diſcouer him. And hee ſeemes to take pleaſure to deceiue our Eyes, hanging wondrous ſteadie without motion, till you bee neere the touching. Another ſtrange Bird there is, which flyeth with foure wings: wee ſee him not all the day, but an houre before night. His foremoſt wings are largeſt; the other two are a prettie diſtance backward; his bodie is borne vp as betwixt foure.

A Bird with foure wings.

No trees like ours.

It is remarkable, how Nature hath taught them to ſecure their Neſts from Baboones and Monkeyes, the profeſſed Enemies of Fowles. In their varietie of trees, there is none that I can call by an Engliſh name, as beeing of any of our kinds; but one there is full of prickles in the bodie and boughes; many of which grow on the Riuer bankes, hanging their tops ouer the water. On theſe trees, and on the water-ſhading ſide doe theſe Birds breed, winding their Neſts with a hollow necke made of Reedes and Sedge, ſo that the whole Neaſt hangs like a Bottle faſtned by the necke; in ſome places ſo thicke that that ſide of the tree ſeemes couered with Thatch.

Cunning building.

The Parrat ſpeedes not ſo well, making his Neaſt on the out-moſt ſmalleſt twigge of a tree on the Land, winding it about ſo that it will not beare that bodie, whoſe wit ſeeing the young growne (for he can ouer-looke) teacheth him to ſit faſt on his hinder-feet, and taking the bough as neere the Neaſt as he dares, ſhakes it in that manner with his hands, that the young fall out for his ſhare. Other Birds breed in holes, made in the ouer-hanging bankes of the Riuer: to eſcape both thoſe beaſts and the Snakes.

Hunting Hawkes.

There are Hawkes, one ſort as large as our Ger-falcon, which (the people ſay) will kill of themſelues a Deere, ſeizing on his head, hanging faſt and beating with his wings till the Deere faints, fals to his prey. There are ſmall baſtard Eagles, Buzzards, ſome with skinnes ſmelling like the Crocodile. Theſe are meanes to the people to finde out Elephants, or other beaſts dead, which become often ſharers with theſe Sharkes. They haue no Ginnes nor Deuices to take Fowle, but when the King meanes to make a Feaſt, the people are all ſummoned, and placed in ſeuerall fit diſtances, ſo that the Ginnie-hennes and Partridges are purſued without reſt, till wearineſſe deliuer them to their Enemies hands, and they to the King.

Fowling.

CHAP. XIIII.

A Letter contayning the admirable eſcape and glorious Victorie of NICHOLAS * ROBERTS Maſter, TRISTRAM STEVENS his Mate, and ROBERT SVCKSBICH Boatſon of a Ship of Douer, taken by Algier Pyrates : which three men being carryed as Slaues by eleuen Turkes in the ſame Ship, partly killed, and partly ſold them all, and returned free and ſafe home into England.

Louing Friend, I haue receiued your Letter, &c. You deſire to haue the whole proceedings of our vnfortunate Voyage, yet fortunate to vs, who are heere to relate what the Lord hath done for vs: the which, as neere as God ſhall enable mee, I will make knowne vnto you. Firſt, ten leagues to the Southward of the North Cape, wee were chaſed by a Turkiſh man of Warre: of foure and thirtie Pieces of Ordnance, and being not farre from the ſhoare, it pleaſed God wee recouered it before hee could fetch vs vp : yet hee was ſo neere to vs before hee left vs, that he was within ſhot of vs, and ſeeing that wee were bent to runne aſhoare : rather then to come into his hands, hee eſpied ten or twelue Boates vnder the Ile of Dones, Fiſher-men, where wee were chaſed in, and left vs, and put out his Boate full of ſmall Shot; and ſome of them hee tooke, and ſome got away, and ſome hee chaſed aſhoare vpon the Iland ; and there hee landed his men and tooke them all away, to the number of fiue and fiftie perſons, and one killed. So there hee kept vs the ſpace of foure dayes : at length away hee goes, and the next day wee finding the winde faire, came out and went along the ſhoare within Musket ſhot all the way, betwixt that and the Iles of Bayone.

At length wee eſpied this Sayle comming out of the Sea, and came directly in with the Iles of Bayone, *and wee being ſo neere the ſhoare did not greatly feare, becauſe wee thought what euer he was, wee ſhould get the ſhoare before him. At laſt hee comming ſomething neere to vs, wee ſaw it was no great Sayle, not paſſing one hundred Tunnes or thereabouts; and that there was no hope of running away, but that wee muſt either Fight it out, or runne aſhoare. I called vp all my Company, and asked them what they would doe, whether they would ſtand by mee and ſhew themſelues like men, and that it might neuer bee ſaid, that wee ſhould runne away from him, being not much bigger then wee, although hee had as many more Ordnance as wee. They anſwered all with one conſent, that they would liue and dye with mee : whereupon our Boate ſtanding vpon the vpper Decke, wee put her ouer-boord and fitted our ſelues; and by that time hee was come within ſhot of vs : preſently wee fired a Piece, and ſhot croſſe his Fore-foote * to ſee what hee was, and ſeeing hee would not ſtrike, wee knew then that hee was a* Turkiſh *man of Warre. And preſently wee ſhot two more, and as ſoone as they were off, hee held vp his Sprit-ſayle in the * Clewline, and ſhot two at vs.*

Then wee hauing no Portes right aft, were forced to bring our Ship vpon a winde, to bring our Pieces to beare vpon him. At length he came ſo neere that hee hald vs : I being vpon the Poope, they let flye their ſmall ſhot ſo faſt, that there was no ſtaying. For at laſt, as I was going aft, I heard the Captayne bid them ſtay their hands. With that I ſtayed and talked with him, and the Captayne in Engliſh *bad mee ſtrike my Top-ſayle, and hee would doe me no hurt : and I ſeeing what they were, told him that they were Dogges, and that I would not ſtrike nor truſt him, but hee ſhould come aboord and ſtrike it himſelfe. They hearing mee ſay ſo, let flye all their ſmall Shot at me, and ſhot the Ropes a ſunder beſides, and yet it pleaſed God, not hurt me; ſo being vpon our weather quarter, wee freed our quarter Piece, and had our Piece haled in ready to put at that Port whiles that was a lading againe : but as ſoone as that Piece was ſhot off, he hald vp his Sprit-ſayle, and bore vp his Helme, & fired his two chac'd Pieces, and came with all ſayles to top aboord of vs, and carryed ouer our ſhip : and ſhee being ſomething tender ſided, and our Ports being all open, our Lee * Ports were all vnder water, and our Chiſts and things that were betwixt our Deckes did ſwimme, and the Piece of Ordnance that was hald in, got looſe and fell to Leeward, like to carrie out the ſide and all. At which miſchance our men being much diſcomfited, they tooke our Ship; And* Richard White, which all this while was in company with vs, and ſo neere when wee began : that the Shot flew ouer him ; in the time that wee ſtroue with him hee got into Bayone.

And they put all aboord the man of Warre, and ſo wee put to Sea, and our Ship after vs as faſt as ſhee could, being hardly able to beare any ſayle. Yet that night being Munday night, and the foure and twentieth of March, it prooued faire weather, and they began to rifle vs, and the next day by two of the clocke in the after-noone, they had taken out as much things as poſſible could bee ſpared, leauing ſuch things as of neceſſitie muſt bee left for the carriage of her for Sally : and then the Captayne ſent for mee to come aboord our owne Ship. Where I was no ſooner come, but hee cauſed three men to take mee, and lay me vpon my belly vpon the Deckes, and two of them to lye vpon my legges, and one to ſit on my necke, and he himſelfe with a Rope did giue me ſo many blowes, that I did intreat him: if euer hee came of a Woman, not to vſe mee like a Dogge, but rather that hee ſhould heaue me ouer-boord: then to put me to that penurie. His anſwer was to mee againe, after that hee had vſed his pleaſure to me; Thou Dog, if I doe finde any thing more then thou haſt confeſt to mee, I will giue thee a hundred times as much, and when I haue done, I will heaue thee ouer-boord. So leauing mee aboord of our Ship: and foure of our Companie and ſeuen Turkes, he bad vs ſtay till wee heard further from him. At laſt, it was accorded among them who ſhould goe our Captayne to carry vs for Sally; and that was a Hamburger a Renegado, one that could ſpeake very good Engliſh. As ſoone as my Mate vnderſtood that hee was to goe our Captayne, hee did intreat him vpon his kneees that he might goe with him, becauſe hee did alwayes deſire that hee might goe with mee whereſoeuer I went: and one of the Moores ſeeing of him intreating ſo hard to goe with him, gaue him two or three blowes, and bad him get him downe into the hold againe. But the Captayne hauing ſomething more commiſeration on him then the other, gaue him his Plate, and bad him goe into the Boate; for hee ſhould goe with him. And they hauing a Witch aboord, told him: that hee ſhould take but three that could doe their labour well, and ſend the reſt aboord the man of Warre, and that hee ſhould haue an eſpeciall care to keepe the Weapons from vs; and ſo comming aboord, brought my Mate with him, and ſent three of them away of our company, and brought three Turkes more beſides himſelfe: ſo there were no more of vs but my ſelfe, and my Mate, and the Boatſon; and there were eleuen of them.

* Theſe three men ſerued their Apprentiſhips at Douer, but were Weſterne men borne : the Maſter in Cornwall, the other two in Deuonſhire. I haue added this to the former, as pertaining alſo to Africa; and this with the former, and all the relations of Santos, and the Ieſuits & ſome others, and ſo to the end of this Booke, as Appendix to the firſt Tome; being ſuch Relations as I had not to inſert in their due place but later come into my hands.

* Fore-foot is not a part of a Ship, but when two ſhips ſayle, one ſo much a weather the other, that ſhee will goe a head of the other, it is then called the Fore-foot : ſo that it implies one Ships ſayling a croſſe another Ships way.

* Clewline, is to the top top-gallant and ſprit-ſayle, that which the Clew garnet is to the mayn-ſayle: the Clew is the lower corner of the ſayle where the tackes & ſheats are made faſt : the Clew-garnet, a rope faſt to the Clew runing thence in a blocke to the middle of the yard, to which it hales vp the Clew, &c.

* Lee, is that which is oppoſite to the winde : chac't Pieces, are thoſe which lie right forward, or right aft-ward on : the Decke is the floore of Planks on which is the Ordnance placed.

Conſultation with a Wizard.

Eleuen Turkes and three Chriſtians.

They preſently made ſayle and went away, and the man of Warre ſtayed there behind. Being parted from the man of Warre, wee agreed together to ſee if it pleaſed God to worke ſome meanes for our deliuerie: for our vſage was ſuch aboord the man of Warre, that wee feared it would bee worſe if they got vs where they would haue vs; and therefore did reſolue by Gods helpe, either to quite our ſelues of it, or to end our miſery: and paſſing the time from Tueſday to Thurſday in this ſorrowfull manner, in that time wee did deuiſe the beſt meanes that God did enable vs; which was, that when it did pleaſe God to ſend vs a gale of winde to vndergoe our buſineſſe withall, that they ſhould alwayes haue each of them a Wedge in their pockets, to barre faſt the Cabbin doore where the Weapons were, becauſe then two did alwayes ſteere halfe the Night. But they would neuer ſuffer mee ſo much as to come into the Steeredge, (for they were ſuſpicious of vs) and would not ſuffer vs to haue a Knife; or if wee had at any time beene betwixt the Deckes, they would preſently haue ſearcht the Ship from one end to the other, to ſee if they could finde any thing that wee had layed vp. But I alwayes bad them haue a care that they ſhould lay vp nothing, but onely take notice where it lay; For there was nothing to truſt to, but onely two Pompe-brakes, and they ſtood alwayes an end in the Pompes without ſuſpicion of any of them. Other thing there was not any, ſaue one peece of Ore that lay vpon the Poupe: for they would not leaue ſo much as a Hatchet, but as ſoone as they had done with it, would ſtraight carrie it into the Cabbin againe.

Steeredge is the place where they ſteere.

Thurſday night being come, it pleaſed God to ſend vs durtie weather; but wee not ſuſpecting that wee ſhould haue an opportunitie ſo ſoone, they were vnprouided of their Wedges in their pockets. And at laſt there aroſe a great guſt of winde out of the North-weſt, and yet was neither of our mens turnes to bee at the Helme, which made vs doubtfull whether wee might giue the enterpriſe or no. At laſt, the winde did increaſe ſo much, that I did intreat the Captayne that one of our men might goe to the Helme, becauſe I told him: I thought they could better * Conne the Ship afore the Sea then his men could, and hee was very willing that hee ſhould. So the Boateſ-man being neereſt to it, ſtept vnto the ſteeredge and tooke the Helme, and hee that was at the Helme before: ſate downe in the ſteeredge beſide him, and haled the Steeredge doore too, and made it faſt in the in-ſide. Now there were foure of them vpon the Decke with vs, the Captayne and three more, and foure in the Cabbin abaft by the Weapons, and two betwixt the Deckes, and one in the Steeredge. So walking vpon the Decke with them, at laſt wee ſaw our opportunitie that all the Turkes were abaft * vs, and wee by the Maine-maſt.

* To Cunne the Ship, is the ſame with Conducere, to direct.

* Aft and abaft hath relation from any part of the Ship to things done or placed thence to the Sternward.

I tooke my Coate and heaued it from mee for a ſigne to him, and ſo wee tooke the two Pompe-brakes and runne on vpon them, and hee with one blow, and I with another killed the Captayne out-right, and the reſt were not long a diſpatching: onely one that got the Poupe, but hee was not long there, for wee got him downe; yet hee got away from vs little better then dead. Now for the Boatſon that was in the Steeredge, when the word was giuen (which was God and Saint George) putting his foot againſt the Steeredge doore, thinking it would flye open, the Turke had made it ſo faſt that it would not: and the Turke was ſo buſie with him with his Knife, that hee was forced to ſtriue with him to get it from him. And in the meane time came one of the Turkes that was betwixt the Deckes, and opened the Cabbin doore where the weapons were, and one of them with a Cutlaxe ranne him into the ſide, and bore him vp againſt the Steeredge doore, and meeting with two ribbes did not goe cleane through his body. Hee ſeeing they were come all vpon him, did ſtriue to get the Steeredge doore open, and at laſt did, but with great hurt, hauing ſixe or ſeuen bleeding wounds vpon him: and the doore being open, the Turkes durſt not for all their Weapons aduenture to come vpon the Decke. But wee being in the heate of bloud, aſſayed twice to get the Steeredge from them, but could not; for they ranne vs through the cloathes but did not hurt vs. Seeing that would not preuayle, wee got a Bucket of water to put the Candle out that was in the Bitakell, which they perceiuing: tooke it away and carried it into the Cabbin, and lighted two more.

Then they began to light their Matches to ſhoot at vs, which as ſoone as wee perceiued, wee got our Capſtone Barres, and made faſt the doore, and one of the rough trees croſſe all the Bulke head. This being done, we tooke the men that were dead: and layed them croſſe the ſight of the ſteeredge to keepe them from ſight of vs, and then tooke one of our Hatches and opened it, and went downe betwixt the Deckes to ſee if we could find any there. At laſt, it being very darke, I felt where there was one lay vnder a Cabbin, and hauing one of the Turkes *Kniues in my hand, I ſtucke it into his ſide as farre as it would goe, and he crying out, my Mate came, thinking to ſtrike him, and ſtrooke mee vpon the hand, which did mee great hurt; for after that, I had but little vſe of it when it was cold. But to proceed, that man wee killed, and ſeeking for more, I happened with another; which as ſoone as euer I did but touch his clothes, thruſt his Knife at me, and cut me croſſe the thumbe, and ranne it into my hand a little way, and ſo got away that we could find him no more. Then fearing leſt they would come all downe vpon vs, we went vp and layed our Hatches, and tooke the other rough tree, * and made them all faſt. Then wee cut our maine Hall-yards, and let our Main-ſayle runne downe to keepe them from ſight of vs when it was day: and iuſt as we had made all things faſt, it was light day, and it was betwixt twelue and one when we began.*

Capſtaine barres are ſmal pieces of timber put thorow the barrell of the Capſtaine, by which they turne it about. The vſe of the Capſtaine is to weigh anchor, to heaue any thing of weight.

* Roofe trees are Timbers of light wood, that goe from the Half-decke to the Forecaſtle, and are to beare vp the gratings, &c. But to expound all the Mariners termes in this Letter, would make a Gloſſe longer then the Text.

When it was day, we durſt not come vpon the Decke for feare of their Muskets, but went continually without boord: yet they ſhot twice at me vpon the Poupe, out of the Forecaſtle through the Main-ſayle; and yet, I thanke God, hurt me not. And thus we continued from Thurſday night till it was Saturday morning: and I askt them if they would ſteere in for the ſhoare, and ſaue their liues; or elſe they ſhould preſently die. They replied, they would not. Then we hauing an old Axe, I was minded to cut a hole in our Bowe aboue the lower Decke; and then to open a ſcuttle, and let them come vp (and ſo wee would haue diſpatcht them as faſt as they had come) and then to haue layd her by the Lee, to haue ſtopt it againe. When they ſaw that was my reſolution, and that wee had made a beginning, hee told mee that was the chiefe of them, that if I would ſaue their liues they would doe what I would haue them. I bad them beare vp the Helme, which they did, and gaue mee a Compaſſe out, and I ſet them their courſe to ſteere in by.

At laſt, I bad them giue mee their Muskets out, and hee ſware by the Sunne, that they had heaued them ouer-boord (and ſo they had) and then I bad them giue mee their weapons. They did beginne to feare, leſt when we had got them, that wee would haue killed them; and fell downe on their knees, and did entreate that I would ſaue their liues, and that they were ſorry for what they had done; thinking that they had killed him that was in the ſteeredge with them, becauſe they neuer heard him ſpeake, all the time (and Indeed, he could not helpe himſelfe but as he was lifted by vs) I promiſed them, that I would not hurt them, and then they gaue me their weapons, and fetcht vs what we would haue. So by twelue of the clocke that day we made the Rocke: and fearing to beare in with it, for feare of Men of warre, we held in two or three leagues to the Northward of it. Seeing a great Towne by the waters ſide, we were in hope to get a Boat aboord before night; and comming with it, wee went as neere to it as wee could, and lay by the lee, and put out a weaſe, and ſtayed there three houres, and no Boat would come to vs.

Then night comming on, we got our tackes aboord, and ſteered away for the Rocke againe, and the wind being at North-weſt, we were fearefull to hale off farre from the ſhoare for feare of Men of warre; but ſteered directly for the Rocke, and went not aboue halfe a mile without it, becauſe the wind was large enough: and as ſoone as we were ſhot to the South-ward of the Rocke, in a dye of raine the wind came to the Weſt South-weſt, and we running that way in hope to carrie it away, the wind Southwarded ſtill, till we had brought our ſelues ſo neere, that we had no roome to beare vp, and hauing no Afterſayle to make our ſhip ſtay, were forſt (being but we two) to put our Anchor from the Bowe, and to breake open a Scuttle, and goe downe and vered to a whole Cable, and brought vp the ſhip, and went vp and tooke in our Sayles, and got another Anchor from the Bowe, and made three or foure of the Turkes cleere the Cable to vs. This was about twelue of the clocke in the night, and when the day came on, the weather did beginne to encreaſe much, and the Sea was much growne, being ſo neere the ſhoare as wee were, that we were faine to cut our Maſts by the boord, and being not able to doe it of our ſelues (being but two of vs, and ouer-watcht for want of ſleepe; (for from Thurſday night till Sunday night, we neuer tooke winke of ſleepe) I went to the Cabbin doore, and bad them come to helpe vs. They told mee they would come, but made no great haſte; for they did feare that we would haue killed them. At laſt perceiuing that I was very angrie with them, as I was cutting at our Maine-maſt, and my Mate at the Fore-maſt, one of them came vp, and fell downe on his knees and kiſt me by the foot, and begged of mee, that I would not kill him, and I told him that I would doe none of them any hurt, but they ſhould come and helpe vs worke, and hee went and told his conſorts what I had ſaid. So vp they came all vpon the Decke, and euery one of them one after another came and kiſt vs by the feet, as well hee that lay hurt, as vs: and then we gaue them the Axes to cut the Maſts, but wee kept the weapons, and when our Mayne-maſt and Fore-maſt were cut away, the ſhip did ride pretie eaſie, and then wee went to prayer, the Turkes ſitting with vs: and I hauing no more Bookes left but a little Prayer-booke in my Pocket, one of the Turkes went to his Bagge and fetcht mine owne Bible, and brought it to me; ſaying, Maſter here is a bigger Booke for you.

After Prayer, we did eate and drinke together, and were as though we had beene altogether conſorts: there we ridde from twelue of the clocke at night, till two of the clocke in the after-noone the next day, and all this time there came not a Boat to vs, yet wee were but three miles from Caſt Cales, wee were not halfe a mile from the Point, which if we could haue weathered, we might haue gone into Lisboa without any ſayle, but it was not Gods will that it ſhould be ſo. Sunday being the ſeuenth day after we were taken, we cut our Cables, and with our ſprit-ſayle and ſprit ſayle-topſayle wee ranne into a flat place, being no more flat places there, that there was no hope of euer ſauing our liues (for the Rockes are as ſteepe as a houſe) and ſo, ſome by one meanes, and ſome by another, we got aſhoare: but we did not ſuffer one of the Turkes to goe till we were all aſhoare, and then wee went to a little Village halfe a mile from the place where we came aſhoare, and there we cauſed all the Turkes to be pinyoned (for not a man came to the waters ſide all this time) and ſo two or three of the men of the Village went with vs to Caſt Cales, and there the Turkes were put in priſon, and we were very well vſed, and they that were hurt were dreſt, and had a Chirurgeon to looke to vs for the ſpace of two dayes, till we had a little refreſht our ſelues, and then a Boat prouided for vs, and the Turkes to carrie vs to Lisboa, where after examination both of vs and them, the Gouernours gaue them freely to vs, and told vs we did deſerue a great deale more.

Thus haue I related vnto you the whole truth of our proceedings, and no more but what is truth, not for that I deſire to bee applauded of men, but that whoſoeuer ſhall heare this diſcourſe, may not thinke that of our owne power we could doe this, but that it is the hand of the Lord hath done it: and the Lord grant that I and euery of vs may neuer be vnmindfull of that the Lord hath done for vs. Amen.

Homo homini lupus: homo homini dæmon.

This Letter was written to Maſter Iohn Moulton, to whom alſo he wrote another, which I haue, demanding his aduice about that which ſeemed to mee a ſtrange immanitie (that I ſay not inhumanitie and vnchriſtianitie alone) of men; as the other was the vnſpeakable grace and bountie of God: namely, that the owners of the ſhip ſo taken (being alſo the Maſters kinſmen) demanded, and by Law threatned to wring from him part of the Moneyes which they made by ſale of the Turkes at Liſbon; where yet they were not in their poſſeſſion, but as the Kings ſlaues; and the Kings Officers (for encouragement of others in like caſe) gaue them that money as Almes, howſoeuer it was reckoned alſo as their iuſt price. Neither would they giue them wages, which yet demanded this money; as if their eye had beene euill becauſe Gods was good and gracious, like Ionas in his mad anger for the Niniuites ſpared. But I hope they better bethought them afterwards, or elſe I would here name them to their euerlaſting reproach: which I now forbeare, as Dauid did Shimeis puniſhment, in regard of ſo great and preſent an eſcape, victorie, triumph, which euen then had happened.

A Preface to the enſuing Treatiſe.

AND becauſe theſe Algier Pirats haue brought vs into the thoughts of Turkiſh power, the rather obſeruing that laſt Turkiſh buſineſſe, rather then Chriſtian charitie: and of Turkie we haue deliuered already diuers things remarkable; yet hauing ſince met with a piece of worth, I thought good alſo to communicate it vnto thee. It is a Royall preſent worth the receiuing: namely, to ſet thee in poſſeſſion, and make thee Maſter of the Grand Signiors Serraglio: a ſight hitherto prohibited, in manner, to Chriſtian eyes. I doe not promiſe thee the ſtones and edifices, but a ſecurer and quieter Title (for how lately hath the Maſter beene diſpoſſeſſed of them and his life together, that I mention not the inſtabilitie of the preſent, who once before held, and after was holden of the ſame?) Here thou haſt the Rarities of that Great Palace for the Matter and Arte, with the repreſentation of the Turkiſh Court; the Rites prophane and deuout, ſolemne and priuate of the Grand Signior and all his Grandes: the Sultanas, the Women and Virgins, the Sonnes and Daughters Royall, the Great Officers of State, and of the Houſhold, their Courts, their admirable Diſcipline, with other Obſeruations ſuch as I thinke (for a great part of them) haue not yet ſeene the publike light in any Language. Theſe hath Maſter Robert Withers collected: after his ten yeeres obſeruation at Conſtantinople, where he was educated by the care and coſt of that late Honourable Embaſſadour from his Maieſtie, Sir Paul Pindar, and well inſtructed by Turkiſh Schoolemaſters in the Language, and admitted alſo to further ſight of their vnholy Holies then is vſuall. But why doe I hold thee longer from the Author himſelfe; yea, from this promiſed Serraglio?

Chap. XV.

The Grand Signiors Serraglio: written by Maſter Robert Withers.

Deſcription of the place, partitions, and manifold conueniences.

The ſituation.

THe Serraglio wherein the Grand Signior dwelleth, with all his Court of Seruants, is wonderfully well ſituated; being built directly in that place where Bizantium ſtood, vpon a great point of the Mayne, which looketh towards the mouth of the Blacke Sea, and is in forme triangle; two ſides whereof are circumpaſſed with Mare Egeum, and the third ioyneth to the reſt of the Citie of Conſtantinople; It is encloſed with a very high and ſtrong wall, vpon which there are diuers Watch-towers, and is by computation, about three Italian miles in compaſſe. It hath many Gates, ſome of which open towards the Sea ſide, and the reſt into the Citie; but the chiefeſt Gate (which indeed is a very ſtately one) is one of thoſe towards the Citie, and by it euery one goeth in and out daily; the others being kept ſhut till ſuch times as the King, or ſome of the principall Officers of the Serraglio ſhall cauſe any of them to bee opened, either for their pleaſure to ſit by the Sea ſide: where they haue a very dainty proſpect, and may behold the ſhips ſayling to and fro) or for any other occaſion: likewiſe, if any other of the Land-gates be opened, it is either when the King ſendeth priuatly to put ſome Great man to death, or for the execution of ſome other ſecret buſineſſe; but they are all locked faſt in the night againe.

The compaſſe. Gates.

The aforeſaid chiefe and common Gate, is in the day time guarded by a great companie of Capoochees, which change their watch by turnes; and in the night likewiſe by others; all which Capoochees are vnder the command of a Capoochee-Baſhee, which Capoochee-Baſhees being ſixe in number, are bound that euery weeke one of them lie within the Serraglio, for the ſecuritie and ſafeguard of the ſame. And without the Gate, about ten or twelue paces off, there ſtands a little Houſe made of boords, vpon wheeles, in which euery night a Companie of Ianizaries doe watch, who vpon any occaſion are ready to awake thoſe within, and to giue them notice of whatſoeuer ſudden accident may happen without.

Chiefe Gate. Capoochee Baſhees, ſixe. Watch-houſe.

It is alſo well guarded, by the Sea ſide, in the night, for in the Watch-towers which are vpon the wall there lies diuers Agiamoglans, which are to watch, and ſee that none come neere; and leſt any ſhipping ſhould dare to attempt ſome miſchiefe, they haue Ordnance ready charged, and the Gunners lying hard by them.

Agiamoglans. Ordnance.

In this Serraglio there are many ſtately Roomes, being appropriated to the ſeaſons of the yeere; the greateſt part whereof are built vpon plaine ground, ſome vpon the hills which are there; and ſome alſo vpon the Sea ſide, which are called Kiosks, that is, Roomes of faire proſpect, or (as we terme them) banquetting Houſes, into which the King oftentimes goeth alone, but moſt commonly with his Concubines, for his recreation.

Set roomes ſuted to the ſeaſon. Kiosks or Banquetting houſes.

There is amongſt the aforeſaid Roomes, the Chamber into which the Grand Signior repaireth, when he is to giue audience to Ambaſſadors; to the Baſhawes on the dayes of publique Diuan, and to thoſe who being to depart vpon any weighty ſeruice or employment, are to take their leaue of him; as alſo to ſuch as are returned from their places of gouernment and charge which was before giuen vnto them: This Roome ſtandeth in a fine little Court adorned with many very delicate Fountaines, and hath within it a Sofa ſpread with very ſumptuous Carpets of Gold, and of crimſon Veluet embroydered with very coſtly Pearles, vpon which the Grand Signior ſitteth; and about the Chamber in ſtead of hangings, the walls are couered with very fine white ſtones, which hauing diuers ſorts of leaues and flowers artificially wrought vpon them, doe make a glorious ſhew. There is alſo a little Roome adioyning vnto it, the whole inſide whereof is couered with Siluer plate hatcht with Gold, and the ground is ſpread with very rich Perſian Carpets of Silke and Gold.

Chamber of Audience. Sofa ſpred. Leaues and Flowers; contrary to their vſuall Carpet-ſuperſtition.

There are belonging to the ſaid Roomes and Lodgings of the King, very faire Gardens of all the ſorts of Flowers and Fruits that are to bee found in thoſe parts; with many very pleaſant Walkes, encloſed with high Cypreſſe trees on each ſide; and Fountaines in ſuch abundance that almoſt in euery Walke there are ſome, ſuch great delight doth the Grand Signior, and all Turkes in generall take in them.

Gardens. Cypreſſe-walkes.

Beſides the aforeſaid Roomes (which are very many and ſerue onely for the Kings owne perſon) there is alſo the womens lodging, which is in a manner like a Nunnerie, wherein the Queene, the other Sultanaes, and all the Kings women and ſlaues doe dwell: and it hath within it all the commoditie that may be, of Bed-chambers, Dining-roomes, Withdrawing-roomes, Bagnoes, and all other kinds of building, neceſſarie for the vſe and ſeruice of the women which dwell therein.

Womens Lodging.

There are likewiſe diuers Roomes and Lodgings built apart from all thoſe afore-ſaid, which ſerue both for the principall Officers, thoſe of a meane degree, and alſo for the baſeſt ſort; and are ſo well furniſhed, that not any wanteth whatſoeuer is fit and neceſſary. Amongſt which there are two large buildings; one of which is the Hazineh or priuate Treaſurie, and the other the Kings Wardrobe. Theſe are two very handſome buildings, and ſecure, by reaſon of the thickneſſe of their walls, and ſtrong Iron windowes, and haue each of them an Iron doore, both which are alwaies kept ſhut, and that of the Hazineh ſealed with the Kings Seale.

Roomes for Officers. Two large; the Treaſurie (Hazineh) and Wardrobe. Sealed doores.

In the ſaid Serraglio there are Roomes for prayer, Bagnoes, Schooles, Buttries, Kitchins, Stillatories, ſwimming places, places to runne Horſes in, places to wreſtle, Buts to ſhoot at, and to conclude, all the commoditie that may be had in a Princes Palace for things of that nature.

Roomes for many other vſes.

At the firſt entrance into the Serraglio, there is a very large and ſtately Gate, in the Porch whereof, there is alwaies a Guard of about fiftie men with their weapons by them; as Peeces, Bowes, and Swords: and hauing paſſed this Gate (through the which the Baſhawes, and other Great men may ride on horſe-backe) there is a very Spacious Court-yard about a quarter of an Italian mile in length, and almoſt as much in bredth; and on the left hand of the Court neere vnto the gate there is a place to ſhelter the people and horſes in raynie weather: and on the right hand there is an Hoſpital for ſuch as fal ſick in the Serraglio, in which there are al things neceſſary, and it is kept by an Eunuch, who hath many ſeruants vnder him to attend vpon the diſeaſed: And likewiſe on the other ſide on the left hand, there is a very large place where they keepe Timber and Carts, and ſuch like things, to haue them neere hand for the vſe and ſeruice of the Serraglio; ouer which there is a great Hall, where are hanged vp many Weapons of Antiquity, as Cimitars, Iauelins, Bowes, Head-peeces, Gauntlets, &c. which they keepe to lend the Souldiers and others, for to accompany the Grand Signior, or the Chiefe Vizier, when they make any ſolemne entry into the Citie of Conſtantinople.

Leſſe Court, of greater beauty

Gazells.

Gallerie.

And hauing paſſed through the aforeſaid Court, their is a ſecond gate (at which the Baſhawes alight) ſomewhat leſſe then the former, but more faire and coſtly; vnder which there is alſo a ſtately Porch, where there is likewiſe a guard of Capoochees, prouided with weapons as they are at the firſt gate; and then there is another Court, leſſe then the former, but farre more beautifull, by reaſon of the delicate Fountaynes, and walkes encloſed with Cipreſſe Trees, and the fine greene graſſe plots in which the Gazells doe feed and bring forth young; inſomuch, as it is an exceeding pleaſant place; and in this Court (the Grand Signior only excepted) euery one muſt goe on foot: On both ſides of the ſaid Gate, there is an open Gallerie vnder ſet with very ſtately Pillars, without the which the Chiauſhes, the Ianizaries, and the Spahees, doe vſe to ſtand all along in rankes very wel apparelled, at ſuch times as there is a great Diuan held for the comming of any Ambaſſador, to kiſſe the Grand Signiors hand.

Nine Kitchins with their Larders.

Kings Stable.

Horſes Furniture admirable

In the ſaid Court on the right hand are all the Kitchins, beeing in number nine, all which haue their Larders, and ſeuerall Officers for their ſeruice. The firſt, and greateſt is the Kings; The ſecond, the Qeenes; The third, the Sultanaes; The fourth, the Capi Agha's; The fift, for the Diuan; The ſixt, for the Aghaes, the Kings Gentlemen; The ſeuenth, for the meaner ſort of ſeruants; The eighth, for the women; The ninth, for the vnder Officers of the Diuan, and ſuch as attend there to doe what belongeth vnto them in their ſeueral callings. And on the left ſide of the Court, there is the Kings Stable of about thirtie, or thirtie fiue very braue Horſes, which his Highneſſe keepeth for his exerciſe, when he pleaſeth to runne or ſport with his Gentlemen the Aghaes in the Serraglio: ouer which Stable there is a row of Roomes, wherein is kept all the Furniture of the Horſes, the which I hauing ſeene I can affirme, that they are of an extraordinary value; for, the Bridles, Pettoralls, and Cruppers, are ſet ſo thicke with Iewels of diuers ſorts, that the beholders are amazed to ſee them, they doe ſo farre exceed all imagination.

Queenes gate and guard of blacke Eunuches.

Neere adioyning to the ſaid Stable, are certayne buildings for the ſeruice of the Officers of the Diuan; and hauing paſſed two thirds of the Court, there is the Roome wherein the Diuan is kept; vnto which joyneth the Hazineh, called the outward Hazineh, the which the Diuan being ended, is ſealed with the chiefe Viziers Seale: And euen with the Diuan but ſomewhat behind it towards the left hand, is the Gate which leadeth into the womens Lodgings, called the Queenes gate, which is kept and guarded by a company of blacke Eunuches.

Third (or Kings) gate.

Who may enter.

Capi Agha, chief Chamberlaine.

White Eunuches.

The aforeſaid Court endeth at a third Gate, called the Kings Gate which leadeth into the Roomes and Lodgings kept apart for himſelfe, and ſuch Gentlemen as attend vpon him continually; neither may any one enter therein, but by an abſolute leaue from the Grand Signior (ſpeaking of men of great qualitie) but ſuch as are belonging to the Butterie or Kitchin, and Phiſicians, Caters and Sewers, may goe in and out with leaue only of the Capi Agha, who is the Chiefe Chamberlaine of the Serraglio, and to him is committed the keeping of that Gate; and he is alwayes at hand (by reaſon his Lodging is neere) with a Company of white Eunuches about him like himſelfe. So that, what is reported of things within this Gate, is for the moſt part by relation; for, either one may not ſee them, or if hee doe ſee them, it muſt bee when the King is abſent; and hee muſt bee brought in by ſome man of qualitie and command, by one of the Gates at the Sea ſide: the which alſo cannot be obtayned but with great difficultie, and ſome charge too, for a gratification to the guide; they hauing not onely great reſpect to their Kings perſon, but alſo to his roomes in his abſence.

Audience Chamber.

Faire Court.

And hauing paſſed the third Gate (the which hath alſo a very faire Porch) immediatly is ſeene the aforeſaid Roome appointed for publique audience; into which the Grand Signior repaireth to giue audience to Ambaſſadors, and to the Baſhaws: and there is alſo another very faire Court, paued with very fine Marble wrought with Moſaicall worke, wherein there are many delicate Fountaines, and ſumptuous Buildings on all ſides, in which (commonly) the King vſeth to eate, and paſſe the time in ſome recreation.

Summer Roomes.

It happened, that I taking hold of a fit time, the King being abroad a hunting, through the great friendſhip which was twixt my ſelfe and the Kahiyah of the Buſtangi Baſhee; had the opportunitie (he being my guide) to goe into the Serraglio, entring in at a Gate by the Sea ſide; where he ſhewed me many of the Kings backward roomes, diuers Bagnoes, and many other very curious and delightfull things, both for the excellencie of their gilding, and the abundance of Fountaynes that were in them. In particular, I ſaw a row of Sommer Roomes built vpon the top of a little Hill, ſo well contriued with Hals and Chambers, and ſo pleaſantly ſeated and richly furniſhed, that it might very well be the Habitation of ſo great a Prince. Amongſt which there was a Hall that was open towards the Eaſt, but vnder-ſet with very faire Pillars, which Hall looked into an artificiall foure ſquare Lake (which they call Hawooz,) proceeding from about thirtie Fountaynes: which were built vpon a kind of Terraſe or high foundation of very fine Marble, which compaſſed the ſaid Lake, ſo the water ranne from the Fountaynes aboue, downe into the Lake, and from the Lake it ranne through diuers Gutters into certayne Gardens: there might two men walke abreaſt vpon the Terraſe, where they ſhould heare the continuall and ſweet Harmonie which the Fountaynes made with their Leaden Pipes, inſomuch that it was a moſt delightfull place. And in the Lake there was a little Boat, the which (as I was enformed) the Grand Signior did oftentimes goe into with his Mutes and Buffones, to make them row vp and downe, and to ſport with them, making them leape into the water; and many times as he walked with them aboue vpon the ſides of the Lake, he would throw them downe into it, and plunge them ouer head and eares.

I looked alſo through a window which was in the wall of the ſaid Hall, and ſaw his Highneſſe Bed-chamber; the wals whereof were couered with ſtones of the fineſt China Metall, ſpotted with flowers of diuers colours, which made a very daintie ſhew: The Anteportaes were of cloth of Gold of Burſia, and their borders of Crimſon Veluet, embroydered with Gold and Pearles: the poſts of the Bed-ſtead were of ſiluer, hollow; and in ſtead of knobs on the tops of them there were ſet Lions made of Chryſtall; the Canopie ouer it was of Cloth of Gold, and ſo were the Bolſters and the Mattereſſes. The floore of this Chamber (as of the other Roomes alſo) and the Sofaes, were couered with very coſtly Perſian Carpets of ſilke and Gold, and the Pallets to ſit on, with the Cuſhions to leane vpon, were of very rich cloth of Gold.

There was hanging in the middeſt of the aforeſaid Hall a very great Lanthorne, the forme whereof was round, and the barres of ſiluer gilt, and ſet very thicke with Rubies, Emeralds, and Turkeſſes; the panes likewiſe were of very fine Chryſtall, which made a very ſplendent ſhew. I ſaw alſo a Baſon and Ewre to waſh with, of maſſie Gold, ſet with Rubies and Turkeſſes, which did beautifie the Roome exceedingly.

Behind the Hall there was a place to ſhoot in, where I ſaw many very ſtately Bowes and Arrowes; and there were ſhowne vnto mee, ſuch ſtrange paſſages made with Arrowes by the King himſelfe through Braſſe and Iron, that me thonght it was almoſt vnpoſſible to bee done by the arme of any man.

The Roome which is called the publike Diuan, hath beene built of late yeeres; it is foure ſquare, and about eight or nine paces euery way from ſide to ſide; it hath behind it another Roome for the ſeruice thereof, and one alſo at the comming into the Diuan, on the right hand, diuided only by a woodden rayle, with many other Roomes ſomewhat diſtant from it, which ſerue for the expedition of ſundry buſineſſes: This Diuan is called publike, becauſe any kinde of perſon whatſoeuer publiquely and indifferently, may haue free acceſſe vnto it to require Iuſtice, to procure grants, and to end their Cauſes and Controuerſies, of what nature, condition, or import ſo euer they bee.

Of the Diuan Dayes, Iudges, Seßion, Iudicature, Dyet, Accounts.

THe Diuan dayes are foure in the Weeke; viz. Saturday, Sunday, Munday, and Tueſday, vpon which dayes, the Chiefe Vizir, with all the reſt of the Vizirs; the two Cadileſchers of Gracia and Natolia (which are the Chiefe ouer all the Cadies of thoſe two Prouinces; which Cadees are men of the Law, who by priuiledge doe gouerne in all places and Cities of the Ottoman Empire, as Iuſtices of Peace doe with vs, but with a little greater domination) the three Defterdars (whoſe charge is to gather in the Kings Reuenues, and likewiſe to pay all the Souldiers, and others which haue any ſtipend due vnto them:) The Reiskitarob (which is the Chancellor.) The Niſhawngee, (that is, hee which ſigneth the Commandements and Letters with the Grand Signiors marke.) The Secretaries of all the Baſhawes, and other great men; a great number of Clerkes or Scriueners, which are alwayes at hand attending at the doore of the Diuan; The Chiauſh Baſhee, who all that while that he is in the Serraglio, carrieth a ſiluer ſtaffe in his hand; and many Chiauſhes alſo to attend, that at the command of the Vizir they may bee readie to bee diſpatched with ſuch order as ſhall bee giuen them by him, to what place, or to whom ſoeuer; For, they are thoſe which are employed in Ambaſſies, in ordinary Meſſages, to ſummon men to appeare before the Iuſtice, to keepe cloſe Priſoners, and in fine to performe all buſineſſes of that nature. All which aforeſaid Officers, from the higheſt to the loweſt are to be at the Diuan by breake of day.

The Vizirs being come into Diuan, doe ſit within at the further end thereof, with their faces towards the doore, vpon a bench which ioyneth to the wall, euery one in his place as hee is in degree, ſitting all at the right hand of the chiefe Vizir (for with them the left is counted the vpper hand) and on his left hand vpon the ſame bench doe ſit the two Cadileſchers, firſt hee of Grecia, as being the more noble and famous Prouince, and then hee of Natolia. And on the right ſide at the comming in at the doore: doe ſit the three Deſterdars, who haue behind them (in the aforeſayd roome which is deuided with a woodden rayle) all the ſayd Clerkes or Scriueners who ſit vpon the ground, with Paper and Pennes in their hands, being ready to write whatſoeuer is commanded them. And on the other ſide (ouer againſt the Deſterdars) doth ſit the Niſhawngee, with his Pen in his hand: hauing his Officers round about him. And in the middeſt of the roome doe ſtand all ſuch as require audience of the Bench.

Now being all come together, and euery man ſet in his owne place, forthwith the Petitioners begin their ſuites, one by one (who haue no need of Attorneyes, for euery one is to ſpeake for himſelfe) referring themſelues to the iudgement and ſentence of the Chiefe Vizir, who (if hee pleaſe) may end all; for the other Baſhawes doe not ſpeake, but attend till ſuch time as hee ſhall referre any thing to their arbitriment, as oftentimes hee doth, for hee hauing once vnderſtood the ſubſtance onely of the Cauſe; (to free himſelfe from too much trouble) remits the deciding of the greateſt part to others; As for example, if it bee appertayning to the Ciuill Law, hee remits it to the Cadeleſchers. If it bee of Accounts, to the Deſterdars. If of Falſhood, (as counterfeiting the Marke or ſuch like) to the Niſhawngee. If concerning Merchants, or Merchandizes (wherein there may bee any great difficultie) to ſome one of the other Baſhawes which ſit by him; ſo that after this manner he doth exceedingly eaſe himſelfe of ſo great a burthen, which otherwiſe hee alone ſhould bee enforced to vndergoe; reſeruing onely to himſelfe that which hee thinketh to bee of greateſt import and conſequence. And on this wiſe they ſpend the time vntill it bee Noone: at which houre (one of the Sewers being appointed to bee there preſent) the Chiefe Vizir commands that the Dinner bee brought in, and immediately all the common people depart. So the roome being free, the Tables are made readie after this manner before the Chiefe Vizir, there is ſet vpon a ſtoole a thinne round plate of Copper tinned, about the bigneſſe of the bottome of a Barrell, at which hee with one or two at the moſt of the other Baſhawes, doe eate; the like is prepared for the reſt of the Baſhawes which doe eate together: And another for the Cadileſchers; one for the Deſterdars; and one likewiſe for the Niſhawngee. And hauing euery one a Napkin ſpread vpon his knees to keepe his Garments cleane; and a great quantitie of Bread being layd readie round about the ſayd Copper plates, immediately the Meate is brought in, and ſet before them vpon the Plates in great Diſhes (which they call Tepſee) and ſtill as they haue eaten of one Diſh, the Sewer takes off that and ſets on another. Their dyet is ordinarily Mutton, Hennes, Pigeons, Geeſe, Lambe, Chickens, broath of Rice and Pulſe, dreſſed in diuers manners, and ſome Tarts or ſuch like at the laſt; ſo in very ſhort ſpace they make an end of their Dinner. That which remayneth of the ſayd Tables, the Officers of the Diuan doe eate, but they haue more alſo allowed and brought them from their Kitchin. The Baſhawes and other Great men, haue Drinke brought vnto them, which is Sherbet, in great Porcelaine Diſhes; but the others doe either not drinke at all, if they doe drinke, it is faire Water brought them from the Fountaines. And the ſame time, when the Vizirs of the Bench and others of the Diuan are at Dinner, the vnder Officers, Waiters, and Keepers, doe dine alſo; the which are not leſſe ordinarily then foure or fiue hundred perſons, but their food is nothing but Bread and Pottage, which they call Churua.

Giuing account to the King.
By the Cadileſchers.

Dinner being ended, the chiefe Vizir attendeth onely publique Affaires, and taking Counſell together (if hee pleaſeth and thinketh it fit) with the other Baſhawes; at laſt, hee determineth and reſolueth of all within himſelfe, and prepareth to goe in vnto the King; It being the ordinarie cuſtome ſo to doe in two of the foure Diuan dayes, that is, vpon Sunday, and vpon Tueſday; to render an account vnto his Maieſtie, of all ſuch buſineſſes as hee hath diſpatched. And to this end the Grand Signior (after hee hath dined alſo) repayreth vnto his Chamber of Audience, and being ſet downe vpon a Sofa, ſendeth the Capi Agha (which hath in his hand a Siluer ſtaffe) to call firſt the Cadileſchers, who immediately riſe vp out of their places, and hauing bowed to the chiefe Vizir, they depart, being accompanied with the ſayd Capi Agha, and Chiauſh Baſhee, who goe before them with their Siluer ſtaues in their hands, and ſo they goe in vnto the King, to giue account and make him acquainted with what hath paſſed concerning their Charge, and ſo they being diſmiſſed, (for that day) they goe directly home to their owne Houſes.

Reuerence.

Next after them are called the Deſterdars, who in the ſame manner are brought vnto the King, and hauing diſpatched, they take leaue, and giue place to the Vizirs who are called laſt of all, and goe together in a ranke one after another, the Chiefe Vizir being formoſt, vſhered along by the two aforeſayd Siluer ſtaues. And being come before the preſence of the Grand Signior, they ſtand with their hands before them, holding downe their heads, in token of Humilitie; and ſo none but the Chiefe Vizir ſpeaketh, and giues an account of what hee thinketh fit, deliuering his Memorials or Arzes one by one, the which the King hauing read, the Vizier taketh them, and hauing put them into a little crimſon Sattin bagge, hee moſt humbly layeth them downe againe before his Maieſtie: and ſo if the Grand Signior demand no further of him (the other Baſhawes not hauing ſpoken one word all this while) they all depart and take horſe at the ſecond Gate; and being accompanied by their owne people, and by diuers others (eſpecially the chiefe Vizier) who is brought euen into his owne houſe by a great companie of Chiauſhes and others all for the moſt part on horſe-backe) they goe euery one to his owne Serraglio, and ſo the Diuan is ended for that day, it being about two houres after noone.

Departure.

It is to be noted that ſometimes alſo the Agha of the Ianizaries, and the Captaine Baſhaw come to the Diuan, when they are at home in Conſtantinople, and haue buſineſſe to doe there: but the Captaine Baſhaw onely doth goe in vnto the King (which alſo may not be but in companie of the other Baſhawes) to acquaint his Highneſſe with the ſtate and affaires of the Arſenal and Armado; his place in the Diuan is vpon the ſame Bench, but yet hee ſitteth laſt of all the Baſhawes, vnleſſe he bee one of the Viziers (as it is often ſeene) and then hee ſitteth ſecond, or third, as he is in degree by election: but the Agha of the Ianizaries doth not ſit in Diuan, but ſitteth vnder the open Gallerie on the right hand, within the ſecond Gate; and if ſo bee it ſo fall out, vpon ſome extraordinarie buſineſſe, that hee be to goe in vnto the King, then he goeth firſt of all others; and being come out againe from him, he ſitteth downe againe in his place, vntill the Diuan be ended; and he is the laſt that departeth of all the great men.

Captaine Baſhaw.

Agha of the Ianizaries.

The Grand Signiors Predeceſſors were alwaies wont, and this man ſometimes commeth priuately by an vpper way to a certaine little window which looketh into the Diuan, right ouer the head of the chiefe Vizier, and there ſitteth with a Lattice before him, that he may not be ſeene, to heare and ſee what is done in the Diuan; and eſpecially at ſuch times when he is to giue audience to any Ambaſſadour from a great Prince, to ſee him eate, and heare him reaſon with the Baſhawes: and by this his comming to that window, the chiefe Vizier (who alwaies ſtandeth in ieopardy of loſing his head, vpon any diſpleaſure of the Grand Signior) is enforced to carrie himſelfe very vprightly, and circumſpectly in the managing of his affaires.

§. III.

Of Ambaſſadours entertaynment and audience.

WHen it falleth out that an Ambaſſadour from any great King is to kiſſe the Grand Signiors hand, it muſt bee either vpon a Sunday or vpon a Tueſday; for thoſe are the dayes appointed for his Highneſſe to giue audience, to the end he may not bee troubled at other times: and then the Vizier commandeth that there be a great Diuan, which is, by calling together all the Great men of the Port, all the Chiauſhees, all the Mutaferakaes, all the Spahees, and all the Ianizaries; who are euery one of them commanded by their Captaines to apparell themſelues in the beſt manner that they are able; and to goe euery one to his ordinary place in the ſecond Court, and there to ſtand in orderly rankes; who indeed make a very goodly ſhowe, for they are very well clothed, and are moſt of them of comely perſonage.

Ambaſſadors audience.

The Diuan being all in order (in which at that time there are very few or no particular cauſes at all handled) the chiefe Vizier ſendeth the Chiauſh Baſhee, with many of his Chiauches on horſe-backe to fetch the Ambaſſadour, who being come to the Diuan, is ſet face to face cloſe before the chiefe Vizier vpon a ſtoole couered with cloth of Gold; and hauing for a while complimented and vſed ſome pleaſant diſcourſe together; the Baſhaw commandeth that the dinner bee brought, the which is done after the aforeſaid manner, (only the round plate Table, on which the meate is ſet is of Siluer, and the victuals are more delicate and in greater abundance.) And ſo the Ambaſſadour, and the chiefe Vizier, with one or two of the other Baſhawes doe eate together: and for euery ſuch Banquet at ſuch times, the Grand Signior alloweth the Steward a thouſand Crownes to ſpend.

Ambaſſador entertayned at the Diuan.

They hauing dined, the Vizier entertayneth the Ambaſſadour: with ſome diſcourſe till ſuch time as the Ambaſſadours people haue alſo dined; and then the Ambaſſadour together with his owne attendants retire into a certaine place neere the Grand Signiors Gate, where hee ſtayeth till ſuch time as all the orders of the Diuan haue had audience of the King, who being diſmiſſed, doe all depart (except the Baſhawes onely, who for the Grand Signiors honour are to ſtay and attend in the Roome vpon his Maieſtie.) And then the Ambaſſadour is called by the Maſter of the Ceremonies, by whom hee is brought to the Gate, whereat the Capi Agha ſtandeth with a ranke of Eunuches, which Capi Agha leadeth him to the doore of the Roome, where there doe ſtand two Capoochee Baſhees ready, who take the Ambaſſadour, the one by one arme, and the other by the other, and ſo leade him to kiſſe his Highneſſe hand, which he hauing done, they leade him backe in the ſame manner to the wall of the Roome, where hee ſtandeth till ſuch time as the ſaid Capoochee Baſhees, haue alſo led ſuch of the Ambaſſadours Gentlemen as are appointed Maſter of the Ceremonies.

His admiſſion to the Preſence.

Departure.

to kiſſe the Kings hand: and then the Druggaman declareth the Ambaſſadours Commiſſion, to which the Grand Signior maketh no anſwer, but only ſpeaketh a word or two to the chiefe Vizir to licence him; and ſo the Ambaſſadour departeth, doing reuerence to the King, bowing downe his head, and not pulling of his Hat or Cap at all.

Veſting.

Recompence.

This one particular is worthie the obſeruation, and that is this; There is not any perſon whatſoeuer, as well Ambaſſadour as other, which being to kiſſe the Grand Signiors hand, that is not veſted with a Veſt giuen him by the Grand Signior. And to this end, before the Ambaſſadour goeth in to the King, the chiefe Vizir ſendeth him ſo many Veſts as are appointed in the Canon, for him and his Gentlemen, who put them on the place where the Ambaſſadour ſtayeth till the King ſends for him to haue his audience. The ſaid Veſts are of diuers ſorts, of which there is one or two for the Ambaſſadors owne perſon of cloth of Gold of Burſia; the other being of lowe price worth little or nothing. But in lieu of thoſe Veſts, there is not any Ambaſſadour (which is to goe to the King for his audience;) or Baſhaw (which at his returne from ſome employment abroad, is to kiſſe his hand;) but they preſent him to the full of what the Canon requireth, inſomuch that the Grand Signior receiueth farre more then he giueth. Beſides, the Baſhawes (ouer and aboue the ordinarie Canon) doe giue him exceeding great and rich Preſents; together with great ſummes of money; ſometimes, to the end they may continue in his grace and fauour.

Other Ambaſſadours which come from petie Princes or States, howbeit they are veſted alſo with Veſts giuen them by the Grand Signior; yet they goe not to the Diuan in that pompe, neither are they feaſted as the others are, but goe priuatly, carrying their Preſent with them; howſoeuer they are lead in vnto the King after the aforeſaid manner.

All Ambaſſadors but the Venetian, at the Kings charge.

It is to be noted, that all Ambaſſadours from abſolute Princes, as well ordinary as extraordinary, (except thoſe from the Signioria of Venice, to whom from their firſt introduction it was denied) all, I ſay, lie at the charges of the Grand Signior; for, from his owne ſtore they haue allowed them Wheat, Barlie, Pulſe, Wood, Coles, Hay, the cuſtome of their Wine, and all other neceſſaries to ſpend in their houſes, and from the Defterdar ſo many Aſpars per diem; which prouiſion, though now of late it be ſomewhat hard to be gotten in; yet by gifts and importunitie, in the end they receiue the greateſt part of it, though the Officers will ſhare with them.

Hauing thus farre made deſcription of the Serraglio, and the Buildings which are therein; with ſome other particulars belonging vnto it, according to that which I haue ſeene and heard by relation. It followeth that I ſpeake ſomewhat touching thoſe which dwell in it, and concerning their miniſterie and functions.

Of the perſons which liue in the Serraglio: and firſt of the Women and Virgins, their manner of life there.

One Lord, the reſt Slaues.

FIrſt, I ſay that all they which are in the Serraglio, both men and women, are the Grand Signiors ſlaues, and ſo are all they which are ſubiect to his Empire: for, as hee is their onely Soueraigne, ſo they doe all of them acknowledge, that whatſoeuer they doe poſſeſſe or enioy, proceedeth meerely and ſimply from his goodwill and fauour.

This Serraglio may rightly bee termed the Seminarie or Nurcerie of Subiects; for, in it all they haue their bringing vp, which afterward become the principall Officers, and ſubordinate Rulers of the ſtate and affaires of the whole Empire.

2000. within the Kings gate.

11. or 1200. women.

Virgins.

They which are within the third Gate, called the Kings gate, are about two thouſand perſons men and women, whereof the women (old and young one with another, what with the Kings Concubines, old women, and women ſeruants) may bee about eleuen or twelue hundred. Now, thoſe which are kept vp for their beauties, are all young Virgins taken and ſtollen from forren Nations, who after they haue beene nurtured in good manners, and can play on Inſtruments, ſing, dance, and ſew curiouſly, they are giuen to the Grand Signior as Preſents of exceeding great value; and the number of theſe encreaſeth daily, according as they are ſent and preſented by the Tartars, by the Baſhawes, and other great men, to the King and Queene: they doe likewiſe decreaſe ſometimes, according as the Grand Signior ſeeth fit, who vpon ſome occaſions and accidents, cauſeth many of them to be ſent out of this Serraglio into the old Serraglio, which is alſo a very goodly and ſpacious place, as hereafter I ſhall take occaſion to make mention of.

Virgins made Turkes, and how.

Kabiyah Cadun the Mother of the Maides.

Theſe Virgins, immediatly after their comming into the Serraglio are made Turkes, which is done by vſing this ceremonie onely, to hold vp their fore-finger, and ſay, Law illaw-heh il Allawh Muhamed reſull Allawh, that is, there is no God but God alone, and Mahomet is the Meſſenger of God: and according as they are in age and diſpoſition, (being proued and examined by an old woman called Cahiyah Cadun, that is, as wee ſay, the Mother of the Maides) ſo they are placed in a Roome with the others of the ſame age, ſpirit, and inclination, to dwell and liue together. Now, in the Womens lodgings, they liue iuſt as the Nunnes doe in their great Monaſteries; for, theſe Virgins haue very large Roomes to liue in, and their Bed-chambers will hold almoſt a hundred of them a piece: they ſleepe vpon Sofaes, which are built long wiſe on both ſides of the Roome, ſo that there is a large ſpace in the midſt for to walke in. Their Beds are very courſe and hard, and by euery ten Virgins there lies an old woman: and all the night long there are many lights burning, ſo that one may ſee very plainely throughout the whole Roome; which doth both keepe the yong Wenches from wantonneſſe, and ſerue vpon any occaſion which may happen in the night: neere vnto the ſaid Bed-chambers they haue their Bagnoes, and Kitchins for their vſe at all times, with a great abundance of Fountaines of which they are ſerued with water. Aboue ouer the ſaid Bed-chambers there are diuers Roomes, where they ſit and ſew, and keepe their Chiſts in which they lay vp their apparell. They feed by whole Camaradaes, and are ſerued and waited vpon by other women; ſo that they doe not want any thing whatſoeuer which is neceſſary for them. They haue other places likewiſe where they goe to ſchoole, to learne to ſpeake and reade the Turkiſh tongue, to ſew, and play on Inſtruments; and ſo they ſpend the day with their Miſtreſſes which are ancient women: ſome houres notwithſtanding being allowed them for their recreation, to walke in their Gardens, and vſe ſuch ſports as they familiarly exerciſe themſelues withall.

The King doth not at all frequent or ſee theſe Virgins, vnleſſe it be at the inſtant when they are firſt giuen him, or elſe in caſe that he deſire one of them for his bed-fellow, or to ſhew him ſome paſtime with Muſike and tumbling trickes: and then hee giueth notice to the aforeſaid Cahiyah Cadun of his purpoſe, who immediatly chooſeth out ſuch as ſhee thinketh to bee the moſt amiable and faireſt, and hauing placed them in good order in a Roome, in two rankes, halfe on the one ſide and halfe on the other, ſhee forthwith brings in the King, who walking foure or fiue turnes in the midſt of them, and hauing viewed them well, taketh good notice of her which he beſt liketh, but ſayeth nothing, onely as he goeth out againe, he throweth a Hand-kerchiefe into that Virgins hand, by which ſhee knoweth that ſhee is to lie with him that night; and ſhe being wondrous glad of ſo good a fortune, to be choſen out from among ſo many to enioy the ſocietie of an Emperour, hath all the art that poſſible may bee ſhewen vpon her by the Cadun, in attiring, painting, and perfuming her, and ſo at night ſhee is brought to ſleepe with the Grand Signior in the womens lodgings: (there being diuers Chambers appropriated for that buſineſſe onely: and being in bed they haue two great Waxe lights burning by them all night, one at the beds feet, and the other by the doore; and there are appointed (by the Cadun) diuers old Blacke-moore women, which watch by turnes that night in the Chamber, two at a time, one to ſit by the ſaid light at the Beds feet, and the other by the doore, and when they will they change, and other two ſupply their roomes, without making the leaſt noiſe imaginable, ſo that the King is not any wiſe diſturbed. And in the morning when his Highneſſe riſeth (for he riſeth firſt) he changeth all his apparell from top to toe, leauing thoſe which hee wore to her that he lay withall, and all the money that was in his pockets were it neuer ſo much; and ſo departeth to his owne lodgings, from whence alſo he ſendeth her immediatly a Preſent of Iewels, Veſts and Money of great value, according to the ſatisfaction and content which hee receiued from her that night: in the ſame manner hee is to deale with all the others which hee maketh vſe of in that kind, but with ſome he continueth longer, and enlargeth his bounty more towards ſome then to others, according as his humour and affection to them encreaſeth; by their fulfilling his luſtfull deſires. And if it ſo fall out, that any one of them doe conceiue by him and bring forth his firſt begotten child, ſhe is called by the name of Sultana Queene, and if the child bee a ſonne, then ſhee is confirmed and eſtabliſhed by great Feaſts and Solemnities; and hath a dwelling apart aſſigned vnto her, of many ſtately Roomes well furniſhed, and many ſeruants to attend vpon her: The King likewiſe alloweth her a very ſufficient Reuenue, that ſhee may giue away and ſpend at her pleaſure, in whatſoeuer ſhee may haue occaſion; and all they of the Seraglio doe acknowledge her for Queene, ſhewing all the reſpect and dutie that may bee, both to her and hers.

The other women (howſoeuer they bring forth iſſue) are not called Queenes; yet they are called Sultanaes, becauſe they haue had carnall commerce with the King. And ſhee onely is called Queene, which is the Mother of the firſt begotten Sonne, Heire to the Empire: the which Sultanaes being frequented by the King at his pleaſure, haue alſo this prerogatiue, to be immediatly remoued from the common ſort, and to liue in Roomes apart, exceeding well ſerued and attended, and haue no want either of Money, or of Apparell, in conformitie of their degree. All theſe Sultanaes doe reſort together very familiarly, when they pleaſe; but not without great diſſimulation and inward malice, fearing leſt the one ſhould be better beloued of the King then the other; howbeit in outward ſhew they vſe all kind of curteſie one towards another.

Other Sultanaes.

And if it happen that the firſt begotten ſonne of the Queene (Heire to the Empire) ſhould die, and another of the Sultanaes ſhould haue a ſecond ſonne; then her ſonne being to ſucceed the deceaſed Heire, ſhee is immediatly made Queene, and the former ſhall remayne a Sultana onely: and ſo the title of Queene runneth from one Sultana to another, by vertue of the ſonnes ſucceſſion.

Queen changed.

Nuptiall rites.

Sometimes the Queene was wont to bee wedded to the King, but now ſhee paſſeth without the Kebin, that is, without an aſſignment of any Ioynture, or celebrating the Nuptiall rites; which is nothing elſe, but in the preſence of the Muftee, to giue each of them their aſſent to Matrimonie, of which the Muftee maketh Hoget, that is, an authenticall Writing or Teſtification, not onely of the Conſent of the two parties contracted, but alſo of the Dowrie which the King is to allow her.

Ioynture.

Guard of black Eunuches.

Canuaſſe-way.

The reaſon why the Queenes are not now (nor haue not beene of late) eſpouſed; is, not to diſmember the Kings Patrimonie of fiue hundred thouſand Chicquins a yeere: For, Sultan Selim hauing allowed ſo much to the Empreſſe his Wife, (to the end ſhe might ſpend freely, and build Churches and Hoſpitals, ſo that by all meanes ſhe might bee honoured and eſteemed) left order by Canon, that all his Succeſſours ſhould doe the like, if ſo bee they determined to be marryed to their Queenes. But now the ſayd reuenues being otherwiſe imployed, the Baſhawes doe what in them lyeth to diſſwade the Grand Signior from marrying: and ſo much the rather, becauſe they would haue none but the King alone to rule: yet howſoeuer, (married or not married) the Mother of the Heyre is by euery one called and acknowledged for Queene, and preſented with rich Preſents from all great Perſonages, and hath continually at her Gate, a Guard of thirtie or fortie blacke Eunuches, together with the Kuzlar Aga their Maſter, whom ſhee commandeth and imployeth in all her occaſions, and ſo doe all the other Sultanaes, the which neuer ſtirre out of the Serraglio, but in companie of the King himſelfe, who oftentimes carrieth either all or moſt of them, abroad by water to his other Serraglio's of pleaſure. And in thoſe wayes through which they paſſe to goe to and fro their Kaiks, their is Canuaſſe pitched on both ſides, and none are by them but blacke Eunuches, till they are ſetled cloſe in the roome at the ſterne of the Kaik; then goe in the Barge-men: ſo that in fine, they are neuer ſeene by any men, but onely by the Grand Signior and the Eunuches.

Kings Daughters and Siſters

Portion-Cheſt

Slaues and Eunuches.

The Kings Daughters, Siſters, and Aunts, haue their lodgings alſo in the ſame Serraglio, being roially ſerued, and ſumptuouſly Apparelled, and liue together by themſelues in continuall pleaſures; vntill ſuch time as the King ſhall bee pleaſed to giue them in Marriage, and then they come out of that Serraglio, and carry each of them along with them a Cheſt which the King giues them, full of Gownes of Cloath of Gold, rich Iewels, and Chicquins, to the value of at leaſt thirtie thouſand pounds ſterling per Cheſt; and that is (as wee call it) their Portion. They carrie likewiſe along with them, all that which they hid from time to time, things of great price which haue beene giuen them, which ſometimes amounteth to a great matter, and ſtands them in ſtead all their liues time. And if ſo bee that the Grand Signior loues them, and is willing to further them, and deale roially with them; then they are ſuffered to carry out of the Serraglio, as many Slaues with them as they will, (prouided they exceed not the number of twentie a piece) and ſuch Eunuches as they like beſt for their ſeruice. Theſe alſo being named Sultanaes, reſerue ſtill (during their liues) the ſtipend which they had within the Serraglio, ſome a thouſand, and ſome a thouſand fiue hundred Aſpers per Diem, the Slaues alſo and the Eunuches doe likewiſe enioy their former allowance. Their Houſes are furniſhed, both with houſholdſtuffe and other neceſſarie prouiſion from the Kings Haſineh and Begglick, that they may liue Alla grande, like Sultanaes; ſo that in concluſion, they liue farre better without the Serraglio then they did within.

Bill of Dowrie.

Priuatneſſe.

Viſitings.

And if ſo bee, that a Baſhaw hauing marryed one of them, bee not prouided of a Houſe fit for her, then the King giueth her one of his (for hee hath many) that her Houſe may bee correſpondent with her Greatneſſe and qualitie. Now for the Husbands part, hee is on the contrarie to make her a Bill of Dowrie, which is called Kebin, as aforeſayd, of at leaſt a hundred thouſand Chicquins in money, beſides Veſts, Iewels, Brooches, and other Ornaments, amounting to a great ſumme. For although the faſhion of a Sultanaes habite bee common, and nothing different from other Womens, yet the ſubſtance is farre more proud and coſtly; the which redounds to the great charge and loſſe of their Husbands. They being thus marryed, doe not at all conuerſe with any men, more then they did when they liued in the Kings Serraglio, (except with their owne Husbands) but with women onely; and that is commonly when they goe vpon viſits to ſee their old acquaintance in the Serraglio: but hauing themſelues come foorth of the ſame (as I ſayd before) they may not come in againe without the Grand Signiors leaue and ſufferance.

They are their Husbands maſters.

Their Dagger.

Diuorce.

Theſe Sultanaes (the Baſhawes wiues) are for the moſt part their Husbands Maſters, and command them as they pleaſe: they alwayes weare a Haniar (that is, a Dagger) ſet with rich Stones, in token of their predomination, and call their Husbands Slaues, doing good or euill for them, as they receiue content & ſatisfaction from them, or as they find them powerfull with the King. And ſometimes they put their Husbands away and take others, but not without the Grand Signiors leaue, which would proue to bee the death and ruyne of the poore Husbands.

What becomes of the other Women.

Now the other women, which neuer were ſo fortunate as to bee beloued of the King, liue together and dyet with the reſt, waſting their youthfull dayes amongſt themſelues in euill thoughts, (for they are too well lookt vnto to offend in Act,) and when they are growne old, they ſerue for Miſtreſſes and Ouer-ſeers of the young ones, which daily are brought into the Serraglio: but hold it their beſt fortune (their former hopes of being Bed-fellowes to an Emperour: being now fruſtrated) through ſome accident, to bee ſent forth from thence into the old Serraglio, for from thence they may bee married (if the Miſtreſſe of that place giue her conſent) and take with them ſuch money, as they through their frugallitie haue ſaued and ſpared of their former allowance in the Kings Serraglio, and ſuch things as haue beene giuen them, which may amount to a reaſonable value. For in the Serraglio they get many things from the Sultanaes, beſides their currant pay out of the Kings Hazaneb, of fifteene or twentie Aſpers per diem. For the middle ſort, and foure or fiue for the baſer ſort, the which is payed at euery three moneths end, without any deferring or contradiction: In that manner alſo are the Sultanaes paide, viz. quarterly, hauiug for their allowance from a thouſand to a thouſand fiue hundred Aſpers a piece, per diem. Beſides, as many cloathes as they will, and Iewels in great abundance, giuen them from the Kings owne hands.

Manner of their pay.

Cloathes and Iewels.

The women Seruants alſo haue two Gownes of Cloath a piece, per annum, and a piece of fine Linnen for Smocks, of twentie Pikes long, and a piece more fine for Hankerchiefes, of ten Pikes, and at the Byram one ſilke Gowne a piece, and ſomewhat elſe, according to the pleaſure and liberalitie of the Grand Signior, who at that time hath commonly a bountifull hand towards the Women. And giueth to the Sultanaes, Gownes with very rich Furres, Eare-rings, Brooches, Bodkins, Bracelets for their armes and legges, and ſuch like things ſet with Stones of great worth; of which the King hath an abundance, by reaſon of the vnſpeakable number of Preſents which are giuen him. The Sultanaes are likewiſe preſented at ſuch times, by the Baſhawes and their Wiues (that by their meanes they may continue in grace and fauour with the Grand Signior) with moſt ſtately and rich Gifts, and with money alſo which indeed is more acceptable to them then any other kinde of Preſent. For, they being very couetous, doe hoord vp and ſpend very ſparingly, abandoning all manner of prodigalitie (in what may concerne their owne priuate purſes) but witilie prouide againſt diſaſtrous times which may betide them, and eſpecially againſt the Kings death: for then (excepting the Queene which remayneth ſtill in the Serraglio, Mother to the ſucceeding King) all the other poore deſolate Ladies (loſing the title of Sultanaes) are immediatly ſent to the old Serraglio, leauing behind them their Sonnes and Daughters (if they haue any liuing) in the Kings Serraglio, there to bee kept vnder the gouernment of other Women appointed for that ſeruice.

Byram-gifts.

Sultanaes Preſents.

Frugalitie.

Old Seraglio.

And in ſuch caſe, finding themſelues wealthy, they may Marrie with men of reaſonable good qualitie, according to the meaſure of their portion or eſtate, and according to the good-will of the Miſtreſſe of the old Serraglio, but with the Grand Signiors conſent. Notwithſtanding, who will (for the moſt part) not onely know the condition of their Husbands, but alſo what Dowrie they will bee content to make them ſure of, in caſe their Husbands ſhould put them away without their conſents, or otherwiſe leaue them Widdowes: So that by meanes of their being turned out of the Kings Serraglio, it is often ſeene, that though the Daughter of the King bee married to a Baſhaw, yet the Mother of that Daughter muſt bee content with a Husband of ſmall account, farre vnequall and much inferiour, both in Title, wealth, and reputation, to her Sonne in Law.

Daughter preferred to the Mother.

The Sultanaes haue leaue of the King, that certayne Iewes women may at any time come into the Serraglio vnto them, who being extraordinary ſubtill Queanes, and comming in vnder colour of teaching them ſome fine Needle-worke, or to ſhew them ſecrets in making Waters, Oiles and Painting ſtuffes for their Faces; (hauing once made friendſhip with the Eunuches which keepe the Doores, by often bribing them) doe make themſelues by their craftie inſinuation, ſo familiar with the Kings women, that they rule them as they pleaſe, and doe carrie out any thing to ſell for them, or buy and bring in whatſoeuer the Sultanaes ſhall haue a will to. And hence it is, that all ſuch Iewes women as frequent the Serraglio, doe become very rich. For, whatſoeuer they bring in they buy it cheape, and ſell it deare to them; and then on the contrary, when they haue Iewels to ſell for the Sultanaes, (which are to bee conueighed out by ſtealth) they receiue their true value for them of Strangers, and then tell the ſimple Ladies who know not the worth of them, (and are afraid to bee diſcouered) that they ſold them peraduenture for halfe that which they had for them.

Iewiſh women.

Their Arts.

And by this meanes, there come things of great price out of the Serraglio, to bee ſold at very eaſie rates: yet in the end the Iewes haue but a bad market of it, for being diſcouered to be rich, and their wealth to be gotten by deceit, they oftentimes loſe both Goods and life too. The Baſhawes and Defterdar altogether ayming at ſuch as they are, thinking by that meanes to reſtore to the Grand Signior, that which hath beene from time to time ſtollen from him, and the rather for that they themſelues, ſeldome want their ſhares in the eſtates of ſuch delinquents.

Ill ſucceſſe.

The Women of the Serraglio, are puniſhed for their faults very ſeuerely, and extreamely beaten by their Ouer-ſeers: and if they proue diſobedient, incorrigible and inſolent, they are by the Kings order and expreſſe commandment, turned out and ſent into the old Serraglio, as being reiected and caſt off, and moſt part of that they haue is taken from them. But if they ſhall be found culpable for Witchcraft: or any ſuch hainous offence, then are they tyed and put into a Sacke, and Puniſhments of the Women.

Death.

in the Night caſt into the Sea: ſo that by all meanes it behooueth them to bee very obedient, and containe themſelues within the bounds of honeſtie and modeſtie, if they meane to come to a good end.

Preuention of Luſt.

Now it is not lawfull for any one to bring ought in vnto them, with which they may commit the deeds of beaſtly vncleanneſſe; ſo that if they haue a will to eate Cucumbers, Gourds, or ſuch like meates, they are ſent in vnto them ſliced, to depriue them of the meanes of playing the wantons; for, they being all young, luſtie, and laſciuious Wenches, and wanting the ſocietie of Men (which would better inſtruct them) are doubtleſſe of themſelues inclined to that which is naught, and will be poſſeſt with vnchaſt thoughts.

Of the Agiamoglans, how taken, diſtributed and employed.

Agiamoglans 700.

Renegado Children. How taken.

HAuing already ſpoken of the Women, I now will ſay ſomewhat of the Agiamoglans which ſerue in the Serraglio, and of their employments. They are in number about ſeuen hundred, from twelue to fiue and twentie, or thirtie yeeres of age at the moſt, being all of them Chriſtian Renegadoes, as all Agiamoglans are, which are gathered euery three yeeres in Morea, and in all the Prouinces of Albania; the which tythe Children are diſpoſed of in this wiſe. They are ſometimes more, and ſometimes fewer, according to the diſcretion of the Capichees, appointed for that ſeruice, but a whole harueſt of them, ſeldome or neuer exceeds the ſumme of two thouſand, and are taken from ſuch Families as are thought to bee of a more warlike diſpoſition; they may not bee (when they are gathered) of aboue twelue or fourteene yeeres of age, leaſt they ſhould bee vnfit for a new courſe, and too well ſetled in Chriſtianitie: and being kept faſt for a while by the Capichees, they are then forthwith ſent to Conſtantinople, to bee diſtributed and ſhared out as followeth.

How vſed.

Apparell.

Election of the beſt.

Circumciſion.

Schooling.

So ſoone as they are arriued at the Port, they are all cloathed in Salonichi Cloath, it skilleth not of what colour, and yellow Caps of Felt on their heads, in the forme of a Sugar-loafe. And being brought before the Chiefe Vizir (who at that time is accompanied with the other Baſhawes and Officers of the Serraglio) hee maketh choiſe of as many, as he ſeeth to bee well-fauoured and iudgeth to bee likely to proue Souldiers. Then this choiſe being made, the Youthes choſen by the Chiefe Vizir, are carried by the Buſtangee Baſhee into the Kings owne Serraglio, and there diſtributed to ſuch Companies as want their compleat number: then are they Circumciſed and made Turkes, and put to learne the Turkiſh Tongue; and according as their inclination is diſcouered by their Ouer-ſeers, ſo are they encouraged, and ſuffered to proceed (if it bee in goodneſſe) and are taught to Write and Read: but they are in a manner all of them taught to Wreſtle, to Leape, to Runne, to ſhoote in a Bow, and to conclude, all ſuch Exerciſes, as are beſeeming a Souldier.

The reſt how diſpoſed.

Otooracks, militer Emeriti.

Now part of the reſidue of them are diſtributed by the Chiefe Vizir, into all the Grand Signiors Gardens and Houſes of pleaſure, and into ſuch Ships as ſayle for the Kings account, and which goe to lade Wood and ſuch like prouiſion for the Serraglio; conſigning them to the Maſters of the ſayd Veſſels, with this Condition, to reſtore them againe when hee ſhall require them: And ſo hee doth with the chiefe Arts-men of all ſorts of Occupations, to the intent the Youths may learne and practice the ſayd Arts in their Lodgings at home; when they are become Ianizaries, or elſe if they pleaſe abroad at the Warres alſo. Hee giueth likewiſe to all the Baſhawes, and Great men of the Court, as many as they pleaſe, to ſerue them deliuering them by Name vnto them, and writing them downe in a Booke, that hee may haue them againe when there ſhall be occaſion to make them Ianizaries. Now theſe which are giuen to the Baſhawes, are the ſcumme and refuſall of all the reſt; and are employed onely in the ſeruice of Stables, Kitchins, and ſuch baſe Offices. But the other are put into diuers Serraglio's, vnder the cuſtodie and diſcipline of certayne Eunuches, who are appointed to bee their Ouer-ſeers, and take care that they bee brought vp and trayned in Militarie exerciſes, vntill ſuch time as they become fit to bee accepted into the number of the Ianizaries, in the roomes of the Dead, or of Old ones, which are no longer fit for the Warre, but are made Otooracks, and haue leaue to ſtay at home. So that I may ſay, all theſe are in a manner kept in a Seminarie, to ſerue at all hands. The King, Queene, and Chiefe Vizir, employing them alſo many times in their Buildings, and other very laborious Offices, without exception.

Booke and Penſion.

Theſe Agiamoglans being thus diſtributed, the Chiefe Vizir preſents a Booke of all their Names to the Grand Signior, who hauing ſeene it, appointeth to euery one his Penſion, according to the ordinary Canon, which is of two or three, or at the moſt, fiue Aſpers per diem. And the ſayd Booke in which their ſeuerall Penſions are diſtinctly ſet downe, being vnder-written by the Kings owne hand, is forth-with conſigned into the cuſtodie of the Chiefe Defterdar, that euery one may duely receiue his pay. Now this Defterdar is bound, when hee giueth out their pay, (that is, once in three moneths) to viſit them; enquiring who is dead, and taking good notice how the others liue and ſpend their times, whither they profit or not by their Tutors and Ouer-ſeers.

I will now returne to ſpeake of the Agiamoglans of the Serraglio, hauing not thought it ſuperfluous to haue digreſſed a little; for although it hath not beene to that purpoſe, yet it may prooue delightſome to thoſe who haue not as yet heard of thoſe paſſages ſo diſtinctly.

These Agiamoglans of the Serraglio, albeit they were choſen out of the reſt by the Chiefe Vizir, yet are their firſt employments but very baſe and ſlauiſh, for they ſerue in the Stables, Kitchins, Gardens, for digging, for cleauing of wood, and are made to row in Kaiks, and to lead the Grey-hounds a courſing; and indeed any thing, which is commanded them to doe by their Oda Baſhees, who are Decurions and Centurions, and haue about fifteene Aſpars per diem, two Veſts of Cloth per annum, two pieces of Linnen Cloth for Shirts and Handkerchiefes, and ſo much Satten or fine Cloth, as may make each of them a paire of Chiakshirs, or Breeches after their faſhion downe to the heeles, and ruffled in the ſmall of the legge like our Boots: Neuertheleſſe, theſe Oda Baſhees are all vnder command of the Kahiyah, who is the Buſtangee Baſhees Steward; now the Buſtangee Baſhee himſelfe may haue about three hundred Aſpars per diem, for hee is their Patrone, Iudge, and Protector. And to the end that the Oda Baſhees, and Bulook Baſhees may bee knowne from the common ſort of Agiamoglans; they weare great broad ſilken Girdles of diuers colours about their middles, and are allowed a larger ſtipend; who by authoritie giuen them from the Kahiyah, doe bring the Vnderlings to ſuch an extraordinary ſubjection by their often beating them, that they doe not only, not refuſe all manner of paines taking, but patiently vndergoe whatſoeuer is done vnto them.

Agiamoglans of the Serraglio how vſed.

Their wages.

Gouernment.

Gouernours.

Slauerie.

They haue their Tearmes and Prerogatiues amongſt themſelues, ſucceeding or preceding one another, according to the length of time which they haue ſpent in the Serraglio; ſo that in Proceſſe of time (if they ſtill continue there, and are not ſent out vpon other occaſions) they may aſpire to the degrees of Chiefe Steward to the Buſtangee Baſhee, or of Buſtangee Baſhee himſelfe, which is a very eminent place; for hee ſteeres the Kings Kaick, and weareth a Telbent vpon his head in the Serraglio, although he were but lately an Agiamoglan, and did weare one of the aforeſaid felt Caps, who alſo (if the King loue him, as commonly hee doth) may riſe to greater dignities; as to be Captaine Baſhaw, &c. nay, ſometimes to be Chiefe Vizir.

Poſſibilitie of preferment.

Theſe Agiamoglans are not altogether forbidden to goe abroad, but may vpon vrgent occaſions be licenſed: And the Buſtangee Baſhee alwayes takes good ſtore of them along with him, when by the Kings order hee goeth to ſee ſome great man put to death, the which is commonly done by the hands of three or foure of the chiefeſt and ſtrongeſt of the ſaid Agiamoglans.

There are brought in amongſt them ſometimes, (but indeed very ſeldome) naturall borne Turkes, by meanes made to the Buſtangee Baſhee, who therein doth greatly pleaſure ſuch poore folkes as are willing to bee rid of their children; but it muſt firſt bee made knowne to the Grand Signior, and done with his conſent.

Some Turkes.

Their Roomes, Bagno's, and Kitchins, are about the wals of the Serraglio, on the out ſide, diuided ſeuerally to each company of them, and built for the more commoditie of ſuch Offices and Seruices, as the ſaid Agiamoglans are appointed vnto.

Their Roomes.

And as for their Diet, they order it as they pleaſe, hauing their fleſh and Pulſe for their Pottage, their Bread and euery thing for Food, deliuered them euery day, and the dreſſing of it left to themſelues: And in that they lye neere the Sea-ſide by the wals of the Serraglio, they take good ſtore of fiſh, part of which they ſell, and reſcue the reſt to themſelues.

Dyet.

They ſleepe alwayes in their clothes (taking only off their vppermoſt coat, and their ſhooes) according to the ordinarie cuſtome of the poorer ſort of Turkes, betweene a couple of Rugges in the Winter, and thinne Blankets in Summer. They neuer ſee King, vnleſſe it be when he paſſeth through the Gardens to ſome Sport, or when he taketh Boat, or elſe when he goeth a hunting, for he makes them ſerue in ſtead of Hounds to hunt wild beaſts.

Sleepe.

But when his Highneſſe will be in the Gardens to take his pleaſure with his women, all the Agiamoglans being warned by Heluet, get them out with all ſpeed at the Gates by the Sea ſide, where they may walke vpon the Bankes and Cauſeyes, but muſt not goe in againe vntill the King be departed: For there muſt none come neere the women but himſelfe, and his blacke Eunuches: Nay, if any other ſhould but attempt (by ſome tricke in conueighing himſelfe into ſome priuate corner) to ſee the women, and ſhould bee diſcouered, hee ſhould immediately bee put to death. Euery one therefore (ſo ſoone as they haue notice of the Kings comming into the Gardens with his women) runnes out of ſight, as farre as they can, to bee free from all feare, and ſuſpition.

None may ſee the Kings women.

Now of this Ranke of Agiamoglans, which are in the Kings Serraglio, they doe not make Ianizaries, as they doe of thoſe which are put into the other Serraglio's and Nurſeries to bee brought vp; and of ſuch as are lent to diuers of the Kings ſubjects, as Tradeſmen and ſuch like, and to the Baſhawes. But his Highneſſe turne is ſerued of theſe, to beſtow vpon his Gentlemen, when he employes them abroad in ſome principall Gouernment, that they may be as Aſſiſtants Ianizaries made of Agiamoglans in other Seminaries. Other vſes of them.

vnto them in their buſineſſes; who alſo in time become men of reaſonable eſtate and condition themſelues. The Grand Signior likewiſe maketh vſe of them when he intendeth a journey to any place; as when he goeth to the Wars, or any whither farre from Conſtantinople, for the pitching of his Tents, for remouing and carrying of Chiſts and Baskets, and many other ſuch like Manuall Seruices, as happen, in thoſe times. For which employment the King neuer carrieth with him leſſe then foure or fiue hundred.

§. VI.

The choiſe Agiamoglans, ſeuere Diſcipline and Education in foure Subordinate Schooles, and their after-aduancements.

IT now remayneth, that I ſay ſomewhat of thoſe Youths which are kept in better faſhion in the Serraglio, for the King and Countreyes Seruice, brought vp in Learning, in the knowledge of the Lawes, and in Military Exerciſes, that they may bee able to performe thoſe things which belong to the Gouernment of the whole Empire. And albeit for the moſt part theſe are Chriſtian Captiues and Renegado's, yet there are ſome Naturall borne Turkes amongſt them, (youths of very comely aſpect, whoſe out-ſides muſt promiſe a great deale of goodneſſe;) brought in by the Capee Agha's meanes (who is the great Chamberlaine) with the Kings conſent; but this hapneth but very ſeldome, and that with great difficultie: For, the ancient Inſtitution was, that they ſhould alwayes be of Chriſtian Renegado's, of the moſt Ciuill and Nobleſt that could be found.

Turkes hardly admitted.

Noble Captiues.

And when in the Warres, either by Sea or Land it ſhall ſo happen, that any youth bee taken, who is of Noble Parents, he is preſently appointed and markt for the Grand Signior, and is inſtructed in matters of Gouernment, being as it were ordayned for great Employments. Now ſuch are of great eſteeme, for the Turkes themſelues affirme, that Nobleneſſe of Birth cannot but produce the moſt vertuous and generous ſpirits; eſpecially, when they are well nurtured and tutered, as it is profeſſed in the Serraglio; where there is great ſeueritie vſed in all the Orders of Diſcipline, the Gouernment of them being in the hands of the Maſters, who are all for the moſt part white Eunuches, which are very rough and cruell in all their Actions; Inſomuch, that their Prouerbe ſaith, that when one commeth out of that Serraglio, and hath runne through all the Orders of it, he is, without all queſtion, the moſt mortified and patient man in the World. For the blowes which they ſuffer, and the faſtings which are commanded them for euery ſmall fault, is a thing of great admiration: Nay, ſome of them are ſo ſeuerely handled, that although their time of being in the Serraglio be almoſt expired, and that they ſhould in few yeeres come forth to bee made great men, yet not being able to ſuffer ſuch crueltie any longer, they procure to bee turned out, contenting themſelues with the Title and ſmall pay of a Spahee, or a Mutaferaka, rather then be ſo often puniſhed, and made weary of their liues.

Eunuches cruell.
Mortification Turkiſh.

Their number.

The number of theſe youths is not prefixed, but there are of them ſometimes more, and ſomtimes leſſe; for the King entertaynes very willingly all ſuch as are giuen him of the aforeſaid qualitie (if ſo be that they be young) and as I haue heard, they are commonly about an hundred.

The courſe that is taken with them, ſo ſoone as they come into the Serraglio, is admirable, and nothing reſembling the Barbariſme of Turkes, but beſeeming Subjects of ſingular Vertue and Diſcipline. For they are exceeding well entred, and daily taught aſwell good faſhion and comely behauiour, as they are inſtructed in the Rites and Ceremonies of the Mahometan Law, or in Military Diſcipline. And for this purpoſe they haue Roomes, which the Turkes call Oda's, but we may more properly (in regard of the vſe they are put vnto) call them Schooles; of which there are foure, the one taking Degrees from the other. Now into the firſt they all come, when they are but childden, where the Primarie Precept they learne is Silence; then their perſonall Poſitures, betokening ſingular Reuerence to the King; which is, that they hold downe their heads and looke downwards, holding their hands before them joyned a croſſe.

Diſcipline in Religion and Ciuilitie.

Foure Oda'h Schooles.
Silence firſt Leſſon.
2. Reuerence.

Booke or Check-roll.

They are ſeene of the King, and regiſtred in a Booke by their Turkiſh Names, and the Names of their Natiue Countreyes ſet downe with them; they receiue Penſions from the Grand Signior, which is ordinarily from three to fiue Aſpars per diem. The Copie of the Booke is ſent to the great Defterdar, that euery one of them, may in due time haue the aforeſaid Penſion ſent vnto them. Then (by a white Eunuch who is chiefe ouer all the other Maſters and Vſhers) they are ſet to learne to write and reade, and to practiſe the Turkiſh Tongue; and are taught their Prayers, with all Reuerence to the Religion in the Arabian Tongue. And in this Oda'h, they are both Morning and Eeuening ſo diligently followed, and carefully lookt vnto, that by report it is a thing of admiration: Now, for the moſt part, they all ſtay at the leaſt ſix yeeres in this Schoole, and ſuch as are dull and hard of apprehenſion ſtay longer.

3. Grammer and Religion to write, reade, and ſpeake Turkiſh and Arabian Praiers.

Second Shoole.

From this Oda'h they are remoued to the ſecond, where (by more Learned Tutors then the former) they are taught the Perſian, Arabian, and Tartarian Tongues; and take great paines in reading diuers Authors, that they may be the better able to ſpeake the Turkiſh Elegantly; which cannot be done without ſome knowledge in thoſe three Tongues, vpon which the Turkiſh chiefly doth depend: So that there is found a great difference betweene their ſpeech, and that of the vulgar ſort.

4. Rhetorike & Languages. Perſian, Arabian Tartarian.

Here alſo they begin to learne to wreſtle, to ſhoot in a Bow, to throw the Mace, to toſſe the Pike, to handle their Weapons, to runne, &c. And in theſe Exerciſes in their ſeuerall Orders and ſeuerall Places, they ſpend whole houres, being ſeuerely puniſhed if they ſhall in any wiſe ſeeme to grow negligent.

5. Bodily Exerciſes.

They ſpend other fiue or ſixe yeere likewiſe in this Odah, from the which (being become men, ſtrong, and fit for any thing) they are remoued to the third Odah, where (forgetting nothing of what they haue learned before, but rather bettering themſelues) they alſo learne to ſit a Horſe, and to be quicke and nimble in the Warres: Moreouer, euery one of them (according to his inclination and diſpoſition) ſhall learne a Trade, neceſſary for the Seruice of the Kings perſon, viz. to make vp a Telbent, to ſhaue, to paire nayles, to fold vp Apparell handſomely, to keepe Land-ſpaniels, to keepe Hawkes, to be Sewers, to be Quiries of the Stable, to be Target-bearers, and to waite at the Grand Signiors Table, and the like Seruices, as it is alſo vſed in the Courts of other Kings and Emperours. So that hauing beene in theſe Offices foure or fiue yeeres, they become men able to teach others.

6. Horſmanſhip and Actiuitie.

7. Trades

And whilſt they are in theſe three Schooles, they are but indifferently apparelled, hauing their two Veſts of Cloth per annum, ſomewhat fine, but their Linnen is ſuch as the others weare, and ſo they muſt be contented to be vnder the correction of their Maſters, who are ſo ſeuere, that for euery fault, or for ſuſpition only of Diſhoneſtie, cauſe them to bee puniſhed with an hundred blowes on the ſoles of the feet, and on the Buttocks, inſomuch that they leaue them oftentimes for dead. Neither are they permitted whilſt they remayne in theſe three Oda's, to bee familiar with any but themſelues, and that with great modeſtie too: ſo that it is a matter of great difficultie for any Stranger to ſpeake with them or ſee them; which if it be obtayned, it muſt be by expreſſe leaue from the Capee Agha, who cauſeth an Eunuch to bee there preſent, ſo long as any Stranger ſhall bee in the company of any of the ſaid youths. Nay, when they haue occaſion to goe to the Bagno, or the like neceſſary buſineſſe, they are very narrowly lookt vnto by the Eunuches, to keepe them by all meanes from any filthy Actions: And if they ſhall be found guiltie, or accuſed of any fault, they are moſt ſeuerely puniſhed for it: And in their Bed-chambers (which are long Roomes, and hold about fortie or fiftie in each of them; for they ſleepe neere one another vpon the Sofas) there are euery night Lampes lighted, and Eunuches lying by them to keep them in awe, and from lewd and wanton behauiour.

Puniſhments.

Some of them alſo doe learne Mechanicke Arts, as ſewing in Leather (which is in great eſteeme amongſt the Turkes) to mend Guns, to make Bowes and Arrowes, and Quiuers, and the like; from which Trades they often haue both their Sir-name and their Reputation too; For they are exceedingly beloued, who are diligent and flye Idleneſſe.

Sewing in Leather, &c.

And the Eunuches make great tryall of their conſtancie in Religion, ſearching (as farre as in them lyes) their hearts, to ſee how they ſtand affected to Turciſme: For the time growing neere, wherein they are to paſſe to the fourth Odah, which is the chiefeſt and laſt, and from which they are called to buſineſſe of great import; they would not then haue them at all remember that they were formerly Chriſtians, or to haue any deſire imaginable to turne to their firſt beliefe; leaſt they ſhould by ſome ſtratagems and politike carriage, proue diſaduantageous to the Turkiſh Empire. So then, all poſſible proofe and triall being made, and they found to bee moſt ſtrongly perſwaded in themſelues of the truth of that Religion, they then are preferred to the fourth Odah, where they are once more regiſtred: For all they which are of the third Odah are not tranſlated to the fourth at one and the ſame time, but only ſuch as haue gone through all the Degrees in the three former, and are become fit for Seruice: And there is an Account kept apart of them which come into this fourth Odah, for they are immediately ordayned for the Grand Signiors owne Seruice, and haue their pay encreaſed, ſome more and ſome leſſe, vnto eight Aſpers per diem, and their Habits changed from Cloth to Silke, and Cloth of Gold of great price: but continue ſtill with their heads and beards ſhauen, only they ſuffer ſome lockes to grow on each ſide from their temples, which hang downe below their eares, for a ſigne that they are they which are neereſt to the preferment of comming into the Kings Chamber.

Preferments.

They muſt be very cleanly and neat in their Apparell before they come about the Grand Signiors perſon; many of them accompanying him euer when he goeth abroad vpon pleaſure: And they may freely conuerſe with all the great men of the Serraglio, and with the Baſhawes alſo, and are often preſented with great gifts by men of great qualitie, to keepe in their fauour, hoping that they may become men of great command, and bee able to ſtand them in ſtead vpon diuers occaſions. Now out of theſe young men (after they haue finiſhed the appointed terme of yeeres, and haue beene well inſtructed in all things as aforeſaid) the Grand Signior chooſeth his Agha's, which are his Gentlemen and ſerue him only; whoſe names and places are as followeth.

All which are of the eldeſt ſort of them; and are alwayes in his Maieſties preſence, holding downe their heads, for they may not be ſo bold as to loooke him in the face, and ſtanding with their hands acroſſe before them, in token of the greateſt Humilitie and Reuerence that may bee imagined; Neither are they permitted to ſpeake at all to the Grand Signior, nor in his preſence to one another; but if the King ſhall command or call for any thing, they are wonderfull ſpeedie, and readie to obey. Theſe all doe execute their Offices diſtinctly as aforeſaid, and attend in places appointed for them; that they may bee the better able to performe their Seruices, and the more readie to obey at euery becke; and at the houres of Dinner and Supper they waite in the Roome, taking the meate from the hands of the Vnder-ſewer at the doore, and ſo his Majeſties Table being made readie (which is of a Bulgar Hide) vpon a Sofa, they bring in the meate which is ſet thereon orderly, diſh by diſh, by the chiefe Sewer before the King, and is taken off againe as his Maieſtie ſhall appoint.

Exerciſes.
Gifts.

Ambaſſages. conferred.

The Grand Signior is very well pleaſed, and takes great delight in their Seruice and company, making them ride on Horſebacke, and playing with them at ſeuerall Sports, at ſuch time as hee is well diſpoſed, euer gracing them with the beſtowing gifts on them, of Veſts, Chicquines, Swords, and other ſuch like Preſents, as come to the hands of the King before, by way of gift: And beſides thoſe fauours, his Majeſtie vſeth to beſtow vpon them the diſpatching of Ambaſſies for other Countries, which is a Merchandize held by them to be of a great price, and bringeth in a great profit with it: For one of them hauing his Commiſſion from the Grand Signior, for ſuch or ſuch a Prince, preſently thinketh with himſelfe, what that Prince vſually doth preſent the Ambaſſadour withall, and ſo accordingly agreeth with a Chiauſh, or one of ſuch like qualitie, to vndertake the Ambaſſie, who muſt giue for the ſame as they can agree betwixt themſelues, either in readie Money, or otherwiſe at his returne, as he ſhall thinke beſt for his profit, and ſo he forthwith giueth expedition to the partie choſen.

Vaſſall Princes

Theſe ſorts of Preſents, proue wonderfull beneficiall; for, in the eſtabliſhing of the Princes of Valachia, Bugdania, Tranſiluania, and of the King of Tartarie (to all which Princes the Grand Signior, ſendeth Ambaſſadors for confirming their Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Dominions) they reape great benefit, it being ſpecified in the Canon, how much euery one is to disburſe for being honored with that Solemnitie.

Their going forth of the Serraglio to the chiefe Offices.
Muſabib.

And this the Grand Signior doth of policie, to the end his Agha's may become rich, laying vp Money by them to ſerue for neceſſary Expenſes for themſelues, furniſhing them with diuers things by that meanes againſt ſuch time as they ſhall goe forth of the Serraglio: which is only when his Majeſtie thinkes fit, and that moſt commonly on a ſudden; either to be Generall at Sea, Baſhaw of Cairo, Aleppo, Damaſcus, Babylon, or of ſome other Prouinces; giuing alſo to ſome of them a Muſahib, that is, as it were a Companion, who hath liberty freely to talke with him, and to goe out and in vnto him when he pleaſeth; The which Title and fauour (of Muſahib) proues to be of ſo great Reputation, that it is eſteemed aboue any other ſort of employment, for it is very rare, and only beſtowed on ſuch Subjects as haue deſerued well of the Emperour.

Other Officers

And this hath beene a courſe vſed of old by the Grand Signiors Progenitors, that ſo they may haue ſome truſtie Subjects abroad, that may giue notice of the carriage of the Baſhawes in their ſeuerall Regiments, or of any other, if ſo be they ſhould attempt any thing that might bee prejudiciall to the Crowne; that ſo the King by cutting off their prouiſion and the like meanes, may anticipate their Plots and Deſignes. But if his Majeſtie be not pleaſed, ſo highly to exault ſome one of the aforeſaid Agha's, as to be of the Degrees alreadie named; he then makes him Beglerbegh of Grecia, or of Natolia; Agha of the Ianizaries, Spaheeler Agaſee, which is Head ouer all the Spahees, Imrohor Baſhee, which is Maſter of the Horſe; or at leaſt a Capigee Baſhee, which is Head ouer the Capigees.

Now, the Grand Signior hauing beſtowed any of the ſaid places vpon them, they leaue the Serraglio, and carrie with them all their eſtates, both money and goods: and oftentimes other young men of the other Odahs, which are let goe through their owne haſtineſſe, and great importunitie, not willing to ſtay out their times but loſing the Kings fauour are content with ſmall pay and leſſer reputation, to goe along with the ſaid Aghas.

Such as goe out vpon the greateſt employments, are accompanied forth of the Serraglio by the chiefe Vizir, who alſo preſenteth them, and giueth them entertaynment for three or foure dayes in his houſe, vntill ſuch time as they can bee prouided of houſes of their owne, whither afterwards they repaire, and ſet their families in order, taking alſo vnto them ſuch as are come out of the Serraglio, with them for Aſſiſtants and Miniſters in the charge aſſigned vnto them; they alſo accept of the ſeruice of others which come in by gifts, which likewiſe redounds to the benefit and aduantage of the great ones.

Now, they which ſucceed in preferment, thoſe that are gone out of the Serraglio vpon the aforeſaid employments; are (as the cuſtome commandeth) ſuch as are next in yeeres vnto them, and of the longeſt ſtanding; neither can this courſe be altered, vnleſſe by ſome ſiniſter accident, or euill behauiour they faile thereof: So that it is alwaies knowne amongſt themſelues, who is next capable of publique employment; nay, the buſineſſe is ſo orderly carried, and their courſe ſo regular, that euen they of the third Odah doe know what their future fortunes will bee, if they liue to enioy them: And indeed all of them liue in hope, and deſire that the Grand Signior would often be pleaſed to ſend them abroad, that they may the ſooner be out of their hard ſeruice in the Serraglio, and enter into the ſtate of ample gouernment.

Order in ſucceſſion.

They are moſt commonly of fiue and thirtie, or fortie yeeres of age before they are ſent abroad. And becauſe they come out of the Serraglio with their Beards ſhauen, they are faine to ſtay within doores for ſome few dayes to let them growe, that they may be fit to come amongſt other great men, with which ſtaying at home they are very well contented, for that in that time they receiue the Preſents which are ſent them from all the Sultanaes, of Veſts, Shirts, Linnen-breeches, and Hand-kerchiefs of all ſorts richly wrought, and of great worth: and from the Baſhawes and other Great men; Horſes, Carpets, Veſts, Slaues, and other things fit for the erecting of a Houſe and Familie. The which Preſents are made the greater and richer, by ſo much the more as the partie to whom they are giuen, is knowne to bee fauoured and beloued of the King. Now, ſo ſoone as their beards are growne, they goe abroad, and beginne their viſits; Firſt, to the chiefe Vizir, and then in order to the other Great ones, till they haue beene with them all, and laſt of all, offer their ſeruice to the Capee Agha, in all humble manner, acknowledging that all their beſt fortunes and honours haue beene conferred vpon them by his meanes; and promiſing for euer, all dutifull reſpect vnto him for the ſame; but this complement with the Capee Agha is performed without that Gate on the Kings ſide, which is kept by the Eunuches; for they may not come no more within that Gate, vnleſſe they be called for by the King, for to treate of things belonging to their employments before their departure.

Preſents from great perſons whiles they ſtay.

Comming abroad, and viſitings. Capee Agha.

They all ſtriue to gaine the loue of the Capee Agha; that he may bee a Protector and Patron vnto them, to poſſeſſe the Grand Signior with a good opinion of them in their abſence; he being the chiefeſt in the Serraglio, and alwaies neereſt to the King.

§. VII.

Of inferiour perſons, as Buffons, Mutes, Muſicians; of white Eunuches, and of the Grand Officers of the Serraglio.

BEſides the Women, and Aiamoglans of this Serraglio, and the aforeſaid Youths laſt ſpoken of; there are many and diuers Miniſters for all manner of neceſſarie ſeruices, and particular functions: there are alſo Buffons of all ſorts, and ſuch as ſhew trickes, Muſicians, Wreſtlers, many dumbe men both old and young, who haue libertie to goe in and out with leaue of the Capee Agha; And this is worthie the obſeruation, that in the Serraglio, both the King and others can reaſon and diſcourſe of any thing as well and as diſtinctly, alla muteſca, by nods and ſignes, as they can with words: a thing well befitting the grauitie of the better ſort of Turkes, who care not for much babling. The ſame is alſo vſed amongſt the Sultanaes, and other the Kings Women: for with them likewiſe there are diuers dumbe women, both old and young. And this hath beene an ancient cuſtome in the Serraglio: wherefore they get as many Mutes as they can poſſibly find: and chiefly for this one reaſon; that they hold it not a thing befitting the Grand Signior. Neither ſtands it with his greatneſſe, to ſpeake to any about him familiarly: but he may in that manner more tractably and domeſtically ieſt and ſport with the Mutes, then with others that are about him.

Buffons, Mutes, &c.

Diſcourſe by ſignes.

It followeth now, that I ſpeake of the White Eunuches; who, as the Blacke ones are for the Seruice and Attendance of the Sultanaes, and for the keeping of their Gate; ſo are the White Eunuches

White Eunuchs.

The Chiefe of them Capee Agha, or Chamberlaine

Preſents.

Eunuches appointed for the King and his Gate; And the chiefe and moſt ancient of theſe, attend only the moſt truſty and important employments, both about the Kings Perſon and his Houſhold: of which the firſt is the Capee Agha, for he is the Chiefe of all the Eunuches; and is High Chamberlaine. The ſecond, is the Hazinehdar Baſhee, who is the Chiefe Treaſurer for the Houſe. The third, is the Keelergee Baſhee, who is the Chiefe Butler and Maſter of the Wardrobe. The fourth, is the Sarai Agaſee, who is the Keeper of the Serraglio. Now of theſe foure olde Eunuches, the Capee Aga (as I ſaid) is principall in Authority, and in greateſt eſteeeme with the Grand Signior, for, none but he can of himſelfe ſpeake with his Majeſtie, neyther can any Meſſages, Writings, or Petitions, be ſent in (ordinarily) but by his hand and meanes; He likewiſe doth alwayes accompany the Kings Perſon whither ſo euer he goeth, both without and within the Serraglio. And when he goeth to his Women, alſo he accompanieth him to the very doore, which leadeth in vnto them, and there he ſtoppeth, and ſo returnes to his owne Lodgings againe; alwayes leauing ſome bodie to wayte at the ſaid doore, that when the King is ready to come away againe, they may call him. This Capee Agha hath for his ordinary Penſion eight Sultaneens per diem, beſides Veſts and other neceſſaries as many as he will; he getteth great ſtore of Money, and (indeed) more then befits a man that hath ſo ſmall occaſion of expence as he hath, by vertue of his place; for that both they of the Serraglio, and thoſe abroad of what condition or degree ſoeuer they bee, to obtayne his fauour and furtherance in any buſineſſe, doe preſent him with all that they can imagine may giue him content, whatſoeuer it coſt.

Treaſurer.
Treaſure.
Outward Treaſurie.
Houſhold-Treaſurers Office.

The ſecond, is the Hazinehdar Baſhee; and he hath the charge of the Treaſurie, which is within the Serraglio, he hauing one Key of it and the King another, the doore being likewiſe ſealed with the Kings Seale, which is neuer taken off, but when the King himſelfe giues order for the opening of the ſame. In this Hazineh are all the Treaſures which haue beene layd vp by the deceaſed Emperors; and into this commeth no other Reuenue of the Crowne, ſauing that from Egypt of ſixe hundred thouſand Crownes per annum; all the other Reuenewes going into the outward Hazineh, out of which all Expences are borne, both ordinary and extraordinary. But there is not any thing taken out of the aforeſaid inward Hazineh, vnleſſe it bee vpon extreame neceſſitie, when the Grand Signior is not otherwiſe prouided, to appeaſe the out-cries of the Souldiers for their pay; or for ſome other the like occaſion: Notwithſtanding, it is done with this Prouiſo, that the Defterdar bee bound to make it good againe to the vtmoſt Aſpar. This Agha's charge is to keepe an exact Accompt of all the Treaſure that is brought in or taken out of the ſame: nor may any goe into the ſaid Hazineh, but only the Hazinehdar, and ſuch as hee ſhall take in with him when occaſion ſhall require. And when there is any Gold or Siluer taken out, it is all put into Leather Bags, and ſo brought before the King, who diſpoſeth thereof as he thinketh fit. He hath alſo the charge of all the Kings Iewels, of which he keepeth a Book by himſelfe, that hee may know what Iewels the King giues away, what Iewels are giuen to the King, and what are likewiſe for his Majeſties owne wearing; And the Capee Agha dying, hee ſucceeds him in his place.

Wardrobe.
Buſie employment.
Penſion.

The third, which is the Keelergee Baſhee, keepes the account of the Kings Wardrobe (viz. of all his Houſhold-ſtuffe.) Into which Wardrobe are all the Preſents brought, which are giuen to the Grand Signior, as Cloth of Gold, Silkes, Woollen Clothes, Furres of all ſorts, Swords, Feathers, Raw Silke, Carpets, and whatſoeuer elſe may ſerue for his Majeſties owne vſe. Of all which things he keepes particular Notes, to the end he may at any time ſee what is giuen to the King, and what the King giues away to others: The which is a very painfull employment, inaſmuch as his Majeſty doth euery day, aſwell take as giue a great number of Veſts, and other the like things: But the buſineſſe is ſo well ordered and carefully lookt vnto, that there doth not follow any confuſion at all. This Eunuch hath diuers Seruants vnder him; and ſtayes alwayes (for the moſt part) within the Serraglio; his Penſion is a thouſand Aſpars per diem, beſides Veſts, and other ſuch Preſents which are giuen him in abundance from time to time; hee alſo is much fauoured and graced by the King, for that he is to ſucceed the Hazinehdar Baſhee, in caſe hee the ſaid Hazinehdar ſhould dye; and is well eſteemed of and reuerenced by all, aſwell without as within the Serraglio.

Keeper of the Serraglio.
Riding liberty.

The fourth, which is the Sarai Agaſee (who is an Eunuch as the former are) hath the care and looking vnto the Serraglio, nor doth he euer goe out of it in the Kings abſence; but is very vigilant, not only in ſeeing all things readie for the daily Seruice of the ſame; but alſo to looke ouer all the Roomes and to eye the Officers, marking whither they exerciſe themſelues in their ſeuerall Functions, as befits them to doe. And becauſe he is old, and his buſineſſe great, he hath liberty to ride within the wals of the Serraglio, as the three former Agha's are alſo permitted to doe; for which purpoſe they haue a Stable of Horſes within the Garden for their vſe alone; his Penſion is eight hundred Aſpars per diem, beſides Veſts and Furres, as many as hee can well haue occaſion to weare; and is to ſucceed the Keelergee Baſhee, and ſo curſiuely the Capee Agha if he out-liue the reſt.

Differing Priuiledges.

And although all theſe foure Eunuches may weare Telbents in the Serraglio, and ride, (being the chiefe next the King himſelfe in authoritie, within the Serraglio) and are reuerenced and reſpected of all men; yet the three laſt viz. Hazinehdar Baſhee, Keelergoe Baſhee, and Sarai Agaſee, may not of themſelues ſpeake to the Grand Signior, but onely anſwer when any thing is aſked of them: howbeit they alwayes attend (with the Capee Agha) the perſon and ſeruice of the King, with all the other Eunuches vnder them, and the aforeſayd Aghàs; And they foure onely gouerne the Kings Houſhold affaires, giuing order for all things needfull and neceſſarie, as well for the Dayes as for the Nights prouiſion.

Eunuches guelding.

All the Eunuches in the Serraglio may bee about hundred in number, what with old ones, middle-aged, and young ones: they are all guelt and cut cleane off, and are choſen of thoſe Renegado youthes which are preſented from time to time to the Grand Signior as aforeſayd: few or none at all are guelt and cut againſt their will, for then (as the Maſter workman in that buſineſſe ſayth) they would bee in great danger of Death; wherefore, to get their conſent thereto, they ſhew vnto them the aſſurance they may haue (in time) to become Great men, all which muſt bee done at their firſt comming into the Serraglio, for it is a worke not to bee wrought vpon men of yeeres.

Education in the foure Odahs

They are brought vp with the others, and are taken out by turnes of the fourth Odah, for the Grand Signiors ſeruice, as well as thoſe which are not Eunuches.

Other Seminaries.

His Majeſtie alſo employes ſome of theſe his white Eunuches in the gouernment of all the other Serraglios and Nurſeries of young Lads, as well in Conſtantinople, as in Adrianople, Burſia, and in diuers other places, (in each of which there are commonly two or three hundred Schollers) that by their ouerlooking them (together with the helpe of other Miniſters) they may bee brought to an excellent Diſcipline, by which they may proue men of good manners and reaſonable Learning.

Their aduancement.

And it ſo falleth out oftentimes, that the Grand Signior (to giue way to the other inferiour and younger Eunuches, who expect that they ſhall ſucceed in order the aforeſayd Officers) ſendeth forth ſome of the ancienteſt and of the higheſt ranke, into great employments, as to bee Baſhaw of Cairo, or of ſome Prouinces in Aſia, and ſometimes Vizirs of the Port; for the Eunuches generally proue Subiects of greateſt iugdement and fidelitie; their mindes being ſet on buſineſſe rather then pleaſure. And for that they are more truſtie then any other ſeruants of the Serraglio, the Capee Agha committeth ſuch things as the Grand Signior would haue kept for curioſitie, vnto their cuſtodie; who for that end haue places made of purpoſe to lay vp ſuch delicacies as are preſented to the King; as great peeces of Amber Greece, ſent from the Baſhawes of the Morea, Muske, Treacle, Mithridate of Cairo, Terra ſigillata, Balſami, Boloarmeno, and other things of great value; Cups alſo of Agat, Chryſtall, and Iaſper, Turkeſſes, and other precious Stones; all which are ſo neatly and orderly kept, that indeed it is admirable; they likewiſe lay vp his Indian Preſents of Zeua and Ciuet, of all which things his Majeſtie and his Sultanaes make daily vſe, the Eunuches who are the keepers of the ſayd Dainties, being firſt made acquainted therewithall.

Fidelitie.

Goods of the Deceaſed.

There is in the Serraglio a very large place, in which are kept all the goods which fall to the King, as well by them which are put to death, as by thoſe which dye of naturall Diſeaſes, of which the King will bee Maſter. And the goods being brought into the ſayd place by the chiefe Defterdar (whoſe particular charge it is to ſee them brought thither) and the King in preſence of his Aſſiſtants hauing ſeene and viewed it all; maketh choiſe of what he thinkes fit to reſerue, and for to giue away; the reſt is cryed in the Serraglio, to the end if any one there haue a will to buy, hee may haue a good penniworth: and the ſurpluſage is carryed into the publique Beziſten, a place ſomewhat reſembling the Paune in our royall Exchange: where it is cryed vp and downe, the Cryer ſtill naming the moſt that hath beene alreadie offered; and is at laſt ſold to him that bids moſt, nor may hee that bids money goe from his word, at leaſt if hee bee able to performe and ſtand to it. Now the money is deliuered to the Hazinehdar Baſhee, and is put into the outward Hazineh: And although the goods did come from out of the Houſes of ſuch as dyed but the day before of the Peſtilence; the Turkes neuertheleſſe buy them, and vſe them as if the Diſeaſe were not infectious at all; affirming that their end is written in their Forehead, and it cannot bee auoyded by any humaine Rule or Policie.

The Beziſten.

No feare of Peſtilence.

Of blacke Eunuches and Black-moore Girles and Women: of Phyſicians, and of the Kings Children.

Their Education.

NOw as concerning the Blacke Eunuches, and Black-moore Wenches, which ſerue the Sultanaes and the Kings Women; It is to bee noted that the Blacke Eunuches, whilſt they are Boyes, are for the moſt part kept and taught among the other youthes of the Serraglio, vntill they bee come to age and made fit for ſeruice; and being taken from thence they are appointed for the Women, and ſet to ſerue with others at the Sultanaes Gate (all vnder command of the Kuzlar Agha, that is to ſay, the Maſter of the Virgins) being allowed a Penſion of fiftie or ſixtie Aſpers per Diem, and two Veſts of Silke per Annum, with Linnen and other neceſſaries ſufficient for their vſe, beſides diuers gifts they receiue from Women ſtrangers at ſuch times as they let them goe in to the Kings women: they are named by the names of Flowers, as Hiacynth, Narciſſus, Roſe, Gilly-flower, and the like; for that, ſeruing the Women, their names may bee anſwerable to their Virginitie, ſweet and vndefiled.

Kuzlar Agha.

Penſion.

Names.

Negro Girles.

Eſteemed moſt for vglineſſe.

The Black-moore Girles, are no ſooner brought into the Serraglio after their arriuall at Conſtantinople, (for they come by Ship from Cairo and from thereabouts) but they are carryed to the Womens lodgings, where they are brought vp and made fit for all ſeruices; and by how much the more vglie and deformed they are, by ſo much the more they are eſteemed of, by the Sultanaes; wherefore the Baſhaw of Cairo (who for the moſt part ſends them all) is alwayes diligent to get the moſt il-fauoured, cole-blacke, flat-noſed Girles that may bee had throughout all Ægypt, or the bordering Countries, to ſend them for Preſents to the Grand Signior, who beſtowes them vpon his Women. Now after their comming, if they ſhall bee diſliked by reaſon of ſome Infirmitie, then are they ſent into the old Serraglio, as the white Women are, when they are vnfit for ſeruice or misbehaue themſelues; all which is done by the Kings order and conſent.

Priuiledges.

No White man may come amongſt the Women.

Phyſicians viſiting the ſicke women.

The aforeſayd blacke Eunuches, by occaſion of being ſent with Meſſages to the Grand Signior from the Sultanaes, may paſſe through the Mens lodgings to carrie little Notes to the Capee Agha, that hee may deliuer them to the King; or for to fetch any thing from any of the Officers of the Serraglio, or to ſpeake with a friend at the Gate; but otherwiſe they may not goe forth of the Serraglio from the Kuzlar Agha, without expreſſe licence from the Queene. They likewiſe are to goe about and doe all other buſineſſe for the Sultanaes in the Womens lodgings, which White Eunuches cannot performe, for they are not permitted to come there; nor any man that is White (but the King onely) may ſee and come amongſt the Women. Inſomuch, as when by reaſon of ſome one of them being fallen ſicke, it is required that the Hekim Baſhee (who is the Kings Phyſician) ſhould come thither; they muſt neceſſarily firſt haue leaue of the King for his entrance, and being admitted to enter by the Sultanaes doore, hee ſeeth none but the Blacke Eunuches (all the other Women being retired into ſome withdrawing roomes) who bring him into the Sicke womans Chamber; and ſhee being cloſely couered from head to foote with Quilts and Blankets, holdeth out her Arme onely, ſo as the Doctor may touch her pulſe, who when hee hath giuen order what ſhall bee done, goes his way immediatly by the ſame way that hee came.

Phyſicke meane.

But if ſhe which is ſicke be the Queene or one of the Sultanaes, then her arme and hand which ſhee holdeth out of the Bed for the Phyſician to feele her pulſe, is couered with a fine piece of white Silke or taffata Sarcenet, for her fleſh may not be ſeene; neither may the Doctor ſay any thing in her hearing, but being gone out of her chamber, preſcribeth what medicine hee thinkes fit; which for the moſt part (according to the common cuſtome of the Turkes) is but onely ſome kinde of looſening Sherbet, for they ſeldome vſe any other Phyſicke; neither doe I hold their skill ſufficient to prepare Medicines for euery Maladie. But in caſe that ſhee ſhould need a Chyrurgeon, ſhee muſt then doe as ſhee may without any ſcruple; for there is no remedie to conceale her skinne from him. And as for the other Women which are not Sultanaes, or at leaſt which are not well beloued of the Grand Signior for ſome peculiar vertues; they needing a Chirurgion are ſent into the old Serraglio to bee cured.

The Kings Sonnes by the Queene.

Mothers care.

Circumciſions ſolemnitie.

The Kings Sonnes which are borne vnto him by his Queene, are Nurſed and brought vp together by themſelues, by choiſe Nurſes which are found abroad without the Serraglio, But if hee haue alſo Sonnes by other Sultanaes (as commonly euery Grand Signior hath) then thoſe are brought vp apart and not with the Queenes, ſo that euery Mother careth for her owne Children, and that with great jealouſie; yet they may play together till they come to bee of ſixe or ſeuen yeeres of Age; being much made of, ſumptuouſly maintayned, and Apparelled all alike at the Kings charge, and their Nurſes are well rewarded for their paines. They liue among the Women till they come to bee of nine or ten yeeres of age; and about fourteene they are Circumciſed with a great deale of pompe (eſpecially the eldeſt Sonne) and ſolemnities throughout the whole Citie; for the Circumciſion of the Turkes Children, are like the Chriſtian Weddings, there being vſed at them, great Feaſting, Banquetting, Muſicke, and bringing of Preſents.

Hoiah or Schoolemaſter

From fiue yeeres of age vntill ten (during which time they liue amongſt the Women) they haue their Hoiah (that is, their Schoole-maſter) appointed them by the King to teach them; which Hoiah comes into the Womens Serraglio euery day, and is brought into a Chamber by the Blacke Eunuches, (without euer ſeeing the Women at all) whither the Children come accompanied with two old Black-moore women Slaues, and are taught for ſo many howers as their Tutor is permitted to ſtay, and ſo hee departeth.

Kings Daughters.

As for the Daughters, they are but ſleightly looked after; nor is the King ſo tender ouer them; for, as they are not ſuſpected for any thing that may concerne the State in future times, ſo likewiſe are they not much reſpected; yet they are well prouided for by the Grand Signior their Father, in caſe they liue to bee fit for Husbands.

After the Prince (next Heire to the Crowne) is circumciſed; if his Father thinke it vnfit to keepe him any longer with him at home in the Serraglio, hee prouides all things fitting to ſend him abroad that he may ſee the World the better to enable him for to gouerne the Empire after his Fathers deceaſe; and ſends along with him one of his principall Eunuches for to be his Ouer-ſeer and a helpe vnto him, beſides many Seruants to attend vpon him, all which hee chuſeth out of his owne Serraglio: hee allowes him likewiſe ſufficient meanes to maintayne him like a Prince (as he doth alſo by the reſt of his Sonnes if he haue a purpoſe to ſend any of them abroad) and ſo all things being well ordered for him, hauing taken his leaue of his Father and Mother (who preſent him with many gifts; as alſo the Sultana's, and all the Baſhawes, and great men of the Port doe) he departs for Magneſia, a Citie in Aſia, there to reſide in the Gouernment of that Prouince; in which hee hath not the Supreame Authoritie, but gouernes only as his Fathers Deputie. And ſhould hee paſſe the limits of his Commiſſion, hee would quickly fall into diſgrace, and ſuſpition of Rebellion; as heretofore it hath hapned vnto diuers: wherefore the Eunuch which was appointed for to bee his Ouer-ſeer, is bound to giue continuall aduice to the Grand Signior and the Vizirs, of all Occurrences according to the Canon: and likewiſe to receiue from Conſtantinople ſuch Commandements as are to bee obeyed in thoſe parts where the Prince reſideth; ſo that all things in a manner, are ſwayed by the diſcretion of the Eunuch.

The Prince ſent abroad.

Prouiſions of Victuals, Cookes, Kitchins, Diet of the King, Queene, and others, and of their manner of Seruice.

ALL the victuals in the Serraglio, (for the moſt part) are dreſſed by Agiamoglans, brought vp to Cookerie; howbeit there are belonging more then two hundred Vnder-cookes and Scullions to the Kitchins that are therein, beſides their principall Officers, as Sewers, Caters, and ſuch like: all which are carefully to looke to their ſeuerall Kitchins, and not any one to truſt another with his buſineſſe.

Victuals and Cookes.

The Kings Kitchin beginnes to worke ordinarily before day, for, his Highneſſe riſing betimes, there muſt be alwayes ſomething readie for him, and oftentimes he eateth three or foure times a day. Hee dines commonly at ten of the clocke in the fore-noone, and ſups about ſixe at night, aſwell in the Summer as in the Winter. Now when hee hath a will to eate, hee tels the Capee Agha of it, who forth-with ſends an Eunuch to giue notice of the ſame to the Chiefe Sewer; and he hauing diſhed the meate, brings it in diſh by diſh to the Kings Table; and ſo his Majeſtie ſits downe after the common Turkiſh faſhion with his legges acroſſe, hauing a very rich embroydered Towell caſt before him vpon his knees to ſaue his Clothes; and another hanging vpon his left arme which he vſeth for his Napkin to wipe his mouth and fingers. He is not carued vnto, as other Princes are, but helps himſelfe; hauing before him vpon a piece of Bulgar leather (which is in ſtead of a Table-cloth) fine white Bread, of three or foure ſorts, very new and well reliſhed. He neither vſeth Knife nor Forke, but only a wooden Spoone, of which there are two layed before him, the one ſeruing him to eate his Pottage, and the other to ſup vp certaine delicate Sirrups withall; made of all ſorts of Fruits, compounded with the Iuice of Limons and Sugar, to quench his thirſt: he taſteth of his diſhes one by one, and as hee hath done with them, they are taken off againe: his meate is ſo tender and delicately dreſſed, that (as I ſaid before) he needs no Knife, but puls the fleſh from the bones very eaſily with his fingers: He vſeth no Salt at his Table, neither hath he any Antipaſto; but immediately fals aboord the fleſh, and concludes with a Tart or ſome ſuch like thing: And ſo his Dinner or Supper being ended, hee waſheth his hands in a Baſon of Gold, with the Ewer all ſet with precious ſtones.

Kings Kitchin and meales.

His ſitting at meate.

Not carued.
No Knife nor Forke.
Two Spoones.

No Salt nor Antipaſt.

His Majeſties ordinary Diet (as I haue beene told by ſome of the Aſchees) is halfe a ſcore roſted Pidgeons in a diſh, two or three Geeſe in a diſh, Lambe, Hens, Chickens, Mutton, and ſometimes Wild-fowle, but very ſeldome: and looke what hee hath roſted for him, ſo hee hath the ſame quantitie boyled, almoſt of euery thing; there being very good ſawce for euery diſh, and other ingredients very pleaſing to the pallat. He hath likewiſe Broths of all ſorts, and diuers Purcelaine diſhes of Preſerues and Sirrups, and ſome Tarts and Pyes, after their faſhion made of fleſh: and hauing made an end of eating, hee drinkes one draught of Sherbet, (not drinking aboue once at a Meale) which is brought vnto him in a deepe Purcelaine diſh couered, ſtanding vpon a flat vnder diſh, of the ſame Metall.

His diet.

Drinking once.

All the while that he is at Table, he very ſeldome or neuer ſpeakes to any man, albeit there ſtand afore him diuers Mutes and Ieſters, to make him merrie, playing trickes and ſporting one with another Alla Muteſcha, which the King vnderſtands very well, for by ſignes their meaning is eaſily conceiued. And if peraduenture he doe chance to ſpeake a word or two; it is to grace

No words.
Mutes and Ieſts

His fauour.

ſome one of his Agha's ſtanding by him whom hee highly fauoureth, throwing him a Loafe of Bread from his owne Table, and this is held for a ſingular grace and ſpeciall fauour: and hee diuiding it amongſt his companions, they accept of it at a ſecond hand, as a great honour done vnto them, in regard it came from their Lord and King.

Diſhes and couers of Gold. Yellow Purcelaine for Ramazan, or Lent

The diſhes for his Highneſſe Table are all of Gold, and ſo likewiſe are their couers; they are in the cuſtodie of the Keelergee, who attends at the Kitchin; and ſo are all the yellow Purcelaine diſhes (which are very coſtly and ſcarcely to bee had for money) in which the King eates in the Ramazan time, which is their Lent, and laſteth a whole Moone, and the Moneth it ſelfe is ſo called: In which time they neuer eate in the day, but only in the night, not making any difference in meates (excepting Swines fleſh and things ſtrangled, of which they are forbidden by their Law to eate at any time.) The King ſeldome eates fiſh, vnleſſe it be when he is abroad at ſome Garden Houſe by the Sea-ſide with his Women.

Remainders.

The meate which remaynes of that which was at the Grand Signiors Table, is immediately carried to the Agha's Table which waite vpon him; ſo that they (what with that and their own diet together) are wondrous well to paſſe. Now whilſt the Agha's are eating, the King paſſeth away the time with his Mutes and Buffones, not ſpeaking (as I ſaid) at all with his Tongue, but only by ſignes: and now and then he kicks and buffeteth them in ſport, but forth-with makes them amends by giuing them Money; for which purpoſe his pockets are alwayes furniſhed.

Capee Aghas diet.

In the meane time alſo the Capee Agha eates in a Roome apart, ſuch meate as is prepared for him in his Kitchin, being farre inferiour to the Kings diet, and with him doe eate the Hazinehdar Baſhee, the Sarai Agaſce, and ſometimes ſome of the Kings Phyſicians, whom hee cals in for to beare him company; and ſuch other Eunuchs which are Keepers of the Serraglioes abroad, as doe come to viſit him. And the remainder of his diet, with a freſh ſupply from the Kitchins, ſerues Di man' in mano, all the other white Eunuchs.

Diet for the Odah youths.

In this Interim likewiſe, is meate ſent to all the other Odahs, for the youths there; which is two Loaues apiece per diem, and a little boyled Mutton, and Pottage of Rice mingled with Butter and Honey, which conſiſts more of Broth then ſubſtance, it being but thinne of Rice, and ſo little fleſh put in it, that it is well if it giue but a taſte thereof when they ſoppe their bread therein.

Queene and Sultanas diet.

On the other ſide is meate carried in by blacke Eunuchs, to the Queene, to the Sultanas, and to all the other women, wherein is obſerued the ſame order as is aforeſaid with the King. Inſomuch as that in the ſpace of an houre and halfe all is diſpatched.

Queenes Seruice in Copper.

King with his women.

Snow mixed with Sherbet, at a deere rate.

The Queenes Seruice is in Copper diſhes tinned ouer, but kept very bright and cleane, and ſome alſo of white Purcelaine: howſoeuer it is to bee vnderſtood, that for her owne mouth ſhee may be ſerued as ſhe pleaſeth, and ſo queſtionleſſe may all the Sultanas, although their ordinarie allowance be no other then Copper. For oftentimes the King is amongſt them a whole day together, eating, ſporting, and ſleeping; of which there is no notice taken, nor may any one looke into his actions; where amongſt themſelues they make him delicate and ſumptuous Banquets (ouer and aboue the ordinary meales of Dinner and Supper) of ſweet Meats and Fruits of all ſorts; hauing daily an abundance preſented vnto them. They drinke their Sherbet mingled with Snow in the Summer, of which there is a great quantitie preſerued yeerely for to ſerue the Serraglio, but at a very great charge. For the Snow doth ſtand the Port in more then twentie thouſand Chicquines per annum, in Gifts and Ceremonies, and other Expenſes, at the fetching it in from the Hils; and in putting it vnder ground in Houſes made of purpoſe for that vſe.

Comfets and Cheeſe not vſed.

They doe not ordinarily vſe Comfets, nor Cheeſe, for the Turkes doe hardly know how to make them; eſpecially Cheeſe (which although they doe make of it) it neuer prooues good: So that the Sultanas, and all great Perſonages eate none but Parmezan, of which the Bailo of Venice doth alwayes furniſh them, and that very plentifully, for they loue it well, and eate heartily of it when they goe abroad vpon pleaſure or a hunting.

Order.

For the prouiſion of the ſaid Serraglio, all things are prepared in great abundance, and euery particular prouiſion is aſſigned to particular perſons to take care therefore, ſo that there is neuer any want of things neceſſary.

Bread of three ſorts.

The firſt and beſt ſort of Bread (which indeed is very white and ſauourie) is for the King, the Sultanas, the Baſhawes, and other great ones. The ſecond ſort for them of a middle ranke. The third and laſt ſort (which indeed is very blacke and courſe) for the Agiamoglans and others of baſe qualitie.

Meale from Burſia. Quantitie.

The meale whereof the beſt ſort of bread is made for the Grand Signior and the Sultanas, is brought from Burſia, made of the Wheate of that Prouince of Bithinia, growing in the Kings owne ground. And the yeerely prouiſion thereof is about ſeuen or eight thouſand Keeloes, which makes almoſt ſo many Buſhels of ours here in London: the which Wheat makes the beſt flower that comes to Conſtantinople, for that it is alſo ground at Burſia, and thoſe Mils are far better then any that are neere Stanbol.

Volo wheat.

Now for the other Wheate which they ſpend, it all comes (for the moſt part) from Volo in Grecia, where there is a great deale of Land belonging to the Crowne; a great part of which Corne is yeerely ſpent in the Armado, made into Bisket at Negroponte: and ſome part of it is ſold to the Raguſeans and others, who come with their ſhipping to lade it thence, but they muſt bring their Authoritie with them from Conſtantinople. There is likewiſe brought yeerely to Stanboll of the aforeſaid Wheate, thirtie fiue, or fortie thouſand Keeloes, which is laid vp in Magaſins that ſerue for that vſe, and is afterwards ground, and ſpent in the Serraglio, for the ſeruice of the ſame. Nor is it any wonder that the Serraglio conſumes ſo much Corne; for, beſides the Seruants as aforeſaid; all the Sultanas and great Perſonages, with diuers others, haue their daily allowance of bread from the Keeler (that is) the Pantrie, or from his Highneſſe Bakehouſe; ſcilicet, euery Sultana, twentie Loaues: euery Baſhaw ten: to the Muftee eight: and ſo to diuers others a ſeuerall proportion, euen to one Loafe a man. All which is by the Commandement and diſcretion of the Chiefe Vizir: the ſeuerall allowances beeing ſet downe in the Chiefe Butlers Bookes, or elſe in his who is the Ouerſeer of the Bake-houſes: Euery Loafe being as bigge as three penie Loaues of ours here in London, but very light and ſpungie, and eaſie of digeſtion.

Quantitie.

Pantry allowance.

The Rice and Lentils, and all other ſorts of Pulſe (of which there is a great quantitie ſpent) is brought yeerely from Alexandria in the Galeons, which make two Voyages per annum; and bring out of Egypt, not only the ſaid Pulſe, but alſo all ſorts of Spice and Sugar, and a great quantitie of Preſerues, and pickled meates, which the Turkes much delight in. And as for Sugar, there is ſpent an vnſpeakeable deale in making of Sherbets, and Tarts; which not only the Serraglio vſeth, but are alſo ordinary Preſents from one Baſhaw to another, and from one friend to another; inſomuch that it is a thing to be admired, to ſee ſo great a quantitie ſo ſuddenly conſumed. True it is, that there is but little Spice ſpent in the Serraglio, nor indeed any great ſtore among the Turkes (Pepper only excepted) for inaſmuch as Wine is not an ordinary drink amongſt them, they therefore auoide ſuch things as prouoke a deſire thereunto. Howſoeuer in the Store-houſes of the Port, there is prouiſion of all ſorts of Spices and Drugges for whatſoeuer occaſion ſhould happen, that may require the vſe of them.

Rice, Lentils, Pulſe from Alexandria.

Spice and Sweet meates.

Expence of Sugar.

Little Spice.

There likewiſe comes from Egypt great ſtore of Dates, Prunes, and other dryed Plummes of diuers ſorts, which the Cookes vſe in their dreſſing of meate, aſwell for roſt as boyled, and indeed they make delicate diſhes of them. The Hony (of which the Port ſpends a great quantitie, both in their Broths, boyled meates and Sherbets alſo for the common ſort of people) is brought from Valachia, from Tranſiluania, and from Moldania, aſwell that which is preſented to the King, as that which comes for particular mens Accounts; yet that which is vſed in the Kings Kitchin comes from Candie, and is farre better and purer then the other.

Egyptian fruits.

Hony whence.

The Oyle (of which there is an vnſpeakable conſumption made) is brought from Modon and Coron in Grecia, the Saniackbegh of that Prouince being bound to ſee the Port ſufficiently furniſhed therewith: howbeit that which is ſpent in the Kings Kitchin is brought from Candie, it being ſweeter, cleerer, and in euery reſpect better then that of the Morea.

Oyle of Grecia.

Of Candie.

The Butter (of which there is alſo ſpent a very great quantitie, in that it is vſed almoſt in all their meates; eſpecially in Pillawe) comes out of the Blacke Sea, from Bogdania and from Caffa, being put into great Oxe-hides and Buffalo-hides, and ſo laid vp in Magazines, for the yeerely prouiſion of the Kings Court, but commonly they haue ſo much that they ſell part of it into the Citie, as they doe likewiſe the Oyle, Honey, &c. which is Beggleek (that is, for the Grand Signiors Account) when they haue more of them then they thinke they ſhall ſpend; and make a great benefit of it. The Turkes know not what belongs to freſh Butter, there being little or none at all made about Conſtantinople; neither doe they eate much Milke, except it bee made ſower, which they call Yoghurd, for that it being ſo turned ſower it doth quench the thirſt; and of that both they and the Chriſtians doe eate a great quantitie. They eate alſo ſome ſtore of Kaymack (that is, clouted or cloded Creame) but that is only for the better ſort, for it is a meate of too high a price for the vulgar.

Butter from Bogdania, &c.

No freſh Butter.

Little Milke eaten.

Now as for fleſh, euery yeere in the Autumne, Winter drawing nigh; the Baſhaw cauſeth the Prouiſion of Baſturma to be made for the Kings Kitchins; and they make it of Kowes great with Calfe, for then ſay they, the fleſh is moſt tender and ſauourie: they vſe it in the ſame manner as Chriſtians vſe Swines fleſh, for they make Puddings and Sauceages of it, and the reſt they boyle and dreſſe after other faſhions.

Prouiſion of fleſh.

Kow Beefe.

This ſort of dryed fleſh, after that it is ſufficiently dryed with hanging a moneth or better in a Roome, and little or no Salt vſed about it, will laſt the whole yeare, and eate very ſauourly: and it is in ſuch vſe amongſt the Turkes, that there is ſcarce a houſe of any faſhion or account, but doth yeerely make prouiſion of it, and it is held a very thriftie and ſparing courſe; but they doe not all make their Baſturma of Kowes great with Calfe, for there are ſome which loue the other better, which is made of Oxen and Bullocks; and they can buy it farre cheaper.

Dryed and hanged.

The Baſhaw hath the ouerſight of that which is prepared for the Kings Kitchins; and there are ordinarily ſpent foure hundred Kowes per annum, for the ſaid prouiſion of Baſturma. The other fleſh which is daily ſpent in the Kitchins of the Serraglio (as I was told by one of the Aſchees) is as followeth: Sheepe, 200. Lambes, or Kids when they are in ſeaſon, 100. Calues, 10.

Fiſh.

Geeſe, 50. Hennes, 200. Chickens, 100. Pigeons, 200. There is but very little ſtore of Fiſh ſpent in the Serraglio: yet ſometimes the Aghaes for dainties will eate ſome; the Seas thereabouts doe exceedingly abound with diuers kinds, and they may eaſily take as many as they pleaſe: but the Chriſtians are well ſerued with Fiſh in the Markets, and at reaſonable prices; and the common ſort of Turkes doe beare them Companie.

Fruits.

The Grand Signior (nor any of the Serraglio) cannot want for Fruit; there being in time of yeere ſo many Preſents thereof brought thither continually; beſides what comes from the Kings owne Gardens (which are many, and neere the Citie) euery morning in great abundance, and excellent good; the Gardeners ſelling the remainder at a place in Conſtantinople, where onely the Kings Fruit is ſold; and bring the money weekely to the Buſtangee Baſhee, who afterwards giues it to his Maieſtie, and it is called the Kings Pocket-money; for he giues it away by handfuls, as he ſees occaſion, to his Mutes and Buffons.

Skullery.

The furniture of the Kitchins in the Serraglio, as Ketles, Cauldrons, and Skillets, &c. are almoſt all of Braſſe, and they are ſo neatly kept, and of ſuch a largeneſſe, that there cannot bee a brauer ſight of that nature. And as for the Diſhes, they are of Copper tinned ouer, but ſo often new forbiſhed and trimmed, that (they being daily vſed) it is wonderfull to behold their continuall brightneſſe; and of theſe they haue a great number, but the King ſuſtaynes great loſſe by them: for, there being ſuch a companie of people ſerued daily from the Kitchins with meate both within and without (eſpecially vpon the foure Diuan dayes) there are ſo many of them ſtolne, that the Deſterdars (weighing the loſſe and charge of thoſe Diſhes) haue often beene almoſt reſolued to make them all of Siluer, and ſo to conſigne them to the cuſtodie of the Sewers and Butlers, who ſhould from time to time giue account of them, and looke the better to them: but finding it a thing ſo coſtly, not any Deſterdar (as yet) hath performed it, nor aduentured to beginne.

Loſſe by pilfeing.

Wood and Fewell.

The Wood which is ſpent in the aforeſaid Kitchins and in all the Serraglio, are almoſt an infinite number of weights, (for at Conſtantinople the Wood is all bought and ſold by weight) there being for the account of the Serraglio (which they call Begleek) aboue thirtie great Caramuſals, which doe nothing elſe at one time of the yeere, but ſayle into the Blacke Sea, there to lade at the Kings Woods: It is a buſineſſe which coſts but little (in reſpect of the worth of it) for they haue it for the cutting downe; and the bringing and vnlading of it requires little or no charge at all; for they are to make ſo many returnes per annum for the King, but receiue no fraight: and the Maſters are to ſee it vnladen at their owne coſts and charges, receiuing only a diſcharge, but no recompence at all.

Faſhion of Kings apparell.

THe Grand Signiors Apparell, is nothing different in faſhion from other mens, ſauing in the length of his Veſts, and the richneſſe thereof; nor are his ſhooes ſhod with Iron at the heeles, as other Turkes weare them, but are raſed and painted like childrens ſhooes, with knots and flowers.

His bedding.

And as for his Lodging; he ſleepes vpon Mattereſſes of Veluet and Cloth of gold: In the Summer in Sheets of Shaſh embroydered with Silke ſowen to the quilts: and in the Winter betwixt Couerlets of Lucernes or of Sables, wearing all night a little Telbent on his head; And when he lies alone in his owne Lodgings, he is alwaies watched by his Pages of his Chamber, by two and two at a time, changing euery three houres; one of them ſtanding at the Chamber doore, and the other by the Bed ſide to couer him, in caſe the clothes ſhould ſlide off, and to be neere hand, if his Maieſtie ſhould want any thing: And in the ſame Chamber where he lies, there are alwaies two women that attend with burning Torches in their hands; nor may they put them out till ſuch time as the King is riſen out of his Bed.

Pages watch.

Two Torch-women.

Womens habit.

The habite of the women is much like to that of the men, for they weare Chackſirs, and Buſkins, and haue their Shooes ſhod with Iron at the heeles. They ſleepe as the men doe, in linnen Breeches, and in quilted Waſt-coats; hauing thinne and light ones for the Summer, and more thicke and warme ones for the Winter.

No Cloſe-ſtooles.

The Turkes neuer haue any Cloſe-ſtooles, or ſuch like inplements in their Chambers; but hauing a will to that buſineſſe, they riſe and goe to their Priuies, made in places apart, where there doe alwaies ſtand Water-pots ready, that they may waſh when they haue done; nor may they vſe Paper in that ſeruice, as we doe.

No Paper, &c.

Stipends.

The ſeuerall ſtipends which the Grand Signior alloweth to thoſe of the Serraglio, (of what degree or condition ſoeuer they be) are payd out of the outmoſt Hazneh, and the chiefe Deſterdar (who hath a Booke as well of the names of the Stipendaries, as of their ſtipends) is bound to ſend once euery three moneths, to all the Odahs in ſeuerall bagges, ſo much money as their pay imports, and there they ſhare it amongſt them: The like hee doth alſo by the women, and the Agiamoglans, paying them in good money. And againſt the Biram, which is their Carneual, hee ſends them their Veſts, their Linnen, and ſuch like neceſſaries, of which he neuer fayles them; for, they wanting them, if he ſhould diſappoint them, they would ſo complaine againſt the ſaid Defterdar, that it would bee his vtter ouerthrow; for hee ſhould bee ſure (at the leaſt) to loſe his place.

Serraglio. Heires.

When any one dieth in the Serraglio, his Chamber-fellowes are made his Heires, and that which he left is diuided amongſt them. And if any great Eunuch die, all comes to the King; for they are alwaies very rich, by reaſon of the manifold gifts which come to their hands: But if any Eunuch of the Serraglios abroad, or in places of other gouernment ſhould die, then two thirds of his eſtate falls to the King by Canon, the other third part being to bee diſpoſed of according to the Teſtators will; and that is onely when the King giues way vnto it, and will not out of his ſupreme authoritie take all to himſelfe, as he vſeth to doe by all great rich ones, the Kings perſon being held the principall and moſt lawfull Heire of all; they being accounted as ſlaues which haue receiued their liuelihood, goods, eſtates, and all that they haue enioyed, meerly from his greatneſſe, and bountie. And to this end there is an Officer, called the Beytiimawlgee, who ſo ſoone as any one dies, makes inquiſition for their eſtates, and ſo certifies the Defterdar thereof, leauing the execution to him, if it be in matters of import. But the Beytilmalgee for his owne priuate gayne, doth oftentimes conceale a great part of the eſtate of the deceaſed, parting the ſame betwixt the kindred and himſelfe.

Teſtaments.

Beytilmaw'gee.

When any ordinary perſon falls ſicke in the Serraglio, he is carried from his chamber in a Cart which is couered and drawne with hands; and is put into the aforeſaid Hoſpitall or Lazaretta, where he is lookt vnto after the Turkiſh faſhion; and kept ſo cloſely, that none may come to the ſpeech of him but with great difficultie; and growing well againe, he is carried backe in the ſame manner to his owne chamber where he was at the firſt.

Hoſpitall.

The expences of the Serraglio are very great, as any one may gather by what hath beene already ſaid; beſides, there are other charges of great conſideration which the King is at, by reaſon of the Queene, the chiefe Vizirs, the Generals of his ſeuerall forces, and the great Defterdars: All whom he doth preſent according as he ſeeth fit vpon diuers occaſions; as at the times of their going forth, or at their returnes from their employments abroad; The which Preſents are of Veſts, ſome vnlined, and ſome lined with very coſtly Furs; Swords, Bowes, Plumes and Brooches, Girdles all ſet with rich Stones, and in fine many other things of great value; and ſome but of lowe price, according to the qualitie and deſert of the partie to whom hee is pleaſed to ſhew his liberalitie. Nay, the Hazinehdar Baſhee without (who hath the keeping of the Cloth of gold and ſiluer of Burſia) doth affirme, that in that one commoditie, to make Veſts of, there is ſpent yeerely two hundred thouſand Sultanines; Beſides what he disburſeth for the buying of Venetian Silkes and Wollen clothes, of which the Serraglio conſumes a great quantitie, they not wearing (for the moſt part) any other.

200000. Sultanines ſpent in Veſts of Cloth of gold and ſiluer.

Neither would this alone ſerue the turne, for beſides all this, the Gr. Signior giues away all that which is giuen him by ſtrangers, and a great part of that which comes to him of the ſpoyle of the dead, of which he is Maſter, as hath bene ſhewed before. And ſurely, ſhould he want theſe helps, the King could not continue in that humour of giuing Preſents, long, as he doth, to his wenches, to his Baſhawes, and to all ſuch as are at any time to kiſſe his hand. Neuertheleſſe, true it is that the greateſt part of things of great value, in time, come againe to his hands; for, his Sultanaes, Baſhawes, or other rich men dying, hee becomes Maſter of all, or (at leaſt) of the greateſt part of their eſtate. And ſo much of ſuch things, there is a continuall ebbing and flowing in the Serraglio.

Ebbing and flowing from and to this Ocean.

The Queene alſo giues much away; for, as ſhee is preſented by many, ſo is it fit, that ſhee ſhould in part make ſome compenſation: and to that end, ſhee hath an allowance of Veſts, and other things in abundance; beſides, ſhee hath libertie to diſpoſe of many of thoſe which haue beene worne by the King.

Queenes expences.

Vizirs Veſts.

The chiefe Vizir is likewiſe a giuer, as well whileſt hee is in Conſtantinople, as when he is vpon departure as Generall of the Armie: and to that end, before he departeth, hee hath allowed him from the Hazinehdar Baſhee, a great number of Veſts and other things, that he may be prouided when he is in the field with Preſents; according to the Turkiſh cuſtome, which (in all buſineſſes, and vpon euery occaſion) is, to giue and take.

Kings Kaik.

The King (if he pleaſe) may at any time goe abroad either by water or by land: when hee goes by water, he hath his Kaik of ſixteene or eighteene bankes; with a very ſumptuous Poope, couered ouer with rich embroydered crimſon Veluet, vnder which he himſelfe ſits, and none but he, on cuſhions of Veluet and Cloth of gold; his Aghaes ſtanding all on their feete, and onely the Buſtangee Baſhee, who ſteeres the Kaik, may now and then ſit downe, that he may handle the Helme the better. Now the Buſtangee Baſhee, by reaſon the King talkes much with him in the Barge, (at which time leaſt any one ſhould heare what they ſay, the Mutes fall a howling like little Dogs) may benefit or preiudice whom he pleaſeth; the King being ignorant of diuers paſſages, and apt to beleeue any information, either with or againſt any Subiect whatſoeuer. His Kaik is rowed by Agiamoglans, which are brought vp to that exerciſe, and indeed they manage the buſineſſe with a great deale of dexteritie.

His going out by land.

When he goeth forth by land, hee alwaies rides on horſe-backe, and goes out (for the moſt part) at the greateſt Gate, eſpecially, at ſuch times as he goes to the Moſchea which is vpon the Friday (it being their Sabboth) and is accompanied into the Citie by the Baſhawes, and other great men of the Port, beſides many of his owne ſeruants which goe by his ſtirrop, and diuers Solacks with their Bowes and Arrowes, for his Guard. And as he rides along the ſtreets, he ſalutes the people with nodding his head, who againe ſalute him with loude ſhouts and prayers of proſperitie and happineſſe; and for recompence, hee oftentimes puts his hand into his Pocket, and throwes whole handfuls of money amongſt them.

Gratulations and gratifications.

Petitions.

Now, they of the Serraglio, which goe by his ſtirrop, haue charge to receiue ſuch Petitions as are preferred to his Maieſtie, as he rides along: and many poore folkes, who dare not to approach nigh him, ſtand afarre off with fire vpon their heads, holding vp their Petitions in their hands; the which the King ſeeing, ſends immediatly to take the ſaid Petitions, and being returned home into his Serraglio, reades them all, and then giues order for redreſſe as he thinks fit. By reaſon of which complaints, the King oftentimes takes occaſion to execute Iuſtice, euen againſt the moſt eminent in place, before they are aware, without taking any courſe in Law againſt them; but cauſing a ſudden execution of what puniſhment he pleaſeth vpon them. Which makes the Baſhawes that they care not how ſeldome the Grand Signior ſtirres abroad in publike, for feare leaſt in that manner their vniuſt proceedings and bad Iuſtice ſhould come to his eare. And indeed, they alwaies liue in great feare, through the multiplicitie of buſineſſe that paſſeth through their hands, and in danger of loſing their liues at a ſhort warning; which makes them, vſe the Prouerbe; that, He that is greateſt in Office, is but a ſtatue of Glaſſe.

His great Stable.

The Grand Signior, for the vſe of his houſhold, hath in Conſtantinople neere vnto the Serraglio; an exceeding large Stable of a thouſand Horſes and vpward: And the Imrohor Baſhee, which is Maſter of the Horſe, hath the charge of them, together with an Vnder-Imrohor for his aſſiſtant; beſides many ordinary Groomes, which are to looke to them and ſee that they be kept in good caſe. Now, the ſaid Imrohor Baſhee and his Deputie, are to ſee the Kings ſeruants prouided of Horſes, at ſuch times as they accompanie his Maieſtie abroad, either a hunting, or for other ſports.

Other Stables.

Beſides this Stable, hee hath diuers others in other places, for his owne ſeruice, and for the vſe of his Gentlemen, at ſuch times as he or they ſhall come thither; namely, at his Gardens, and Houſes of pleaſure abroad in the Countrey, to which his Maieſtie vſeth to goe very often: but theſe Stables haue not aboue eight or ten Horſes a piece in them, for to thoſe houſes hee carrieth but few followers with him.

Hee hath alſo Stables for his Stallions for race, in Burſia, Adrianopoli, and in diuers other places; from which are brought very ſtately Horſes; beſides ſuch as are continually ſent him for Preſents, from Cairo, Bagdat, Arabia, and from other places from the Baſhawes, and alſo ſuch as fall to his ſhare by the death of great perſons; all which are Horſes of great price, and kept for his owne vſe. And becauſe there muſt bee a great number of Horſes for ordinary ſeruices for the baſer ſort of his ſeruants; he is therefore furniſhed with lowe priced Nags out of Valachia.

Mules.

Beſides theſe Stables of Horſes, the Grand Signior is prouided of fiue thouſand Mules which ſerue to carrie Pauilions, Chiſts, Water, and all other neceſſaries for trauell: but becauſe the Vizir (going out Generall) makes vſe of a great part of them, there is ſeldome that number complete at home. And ſhould the King himſelfe goe out to the Warres, his very houſhold would vſe a thouſand of them, beſides their riding Horſes; for, the Emperours of Turkie are alwaies almoſt as well accommodated in their Voyages abroad, as they are at home in the Citie: and indeed, the generalitie of the Turkes are very well fitted againſt ſuch times as they are to goe forth, eſpecially for long iourneyes.

Publike appearing at Ramazan.

The Grand Signior is bound by Canon of the Empire, that vpon the firſt day of the Byram, which is their Carneuall, the Ramazan being ended, which is their Lent, hee ſhew himſelfe publikely, and let all the great men, and the better ſort of his owne ſeruants, kiſſe his Veſt: wherefore vpon that day, early in the morning, being richly clad and ſet forth with his beſt Iewels, he comes out at his Serraglio Gate, that is, out of the Eunuches Gate, in the third Court; and ſets him downe vpon a Perſian Carpet of ſilke and gold, in a certaine place (cloſe by the aforeſaid Gate) which is onely for that ſeruice, and doth not ſtirre thence vntill all haue kiſſed his Veſt in token of their reuerence and dutie; The chiefe Vizir ſtanding cloſe by him, and telling him the names of ſuch as hee thinkes fit, to the end the Grand Signior may take notice of them: Now, to ſome of the Doctors of the Law which are of high degree, the King raiſeth himſelfe vp a little, to honour and receiue them; and to ſome he ſhewes more grace and affection, then to other ſome, and indeed more then ordinary.

His honour to ſome.

Going to Santa Sophia.

Now, this Ceremonie being ended he goeth to the Moſchea of Santa Sophia, accompanied by them all; and at his returne taking his leaue, hee retires himſelfe to his owne Lodgings, where he dines alone, as he doth vpon other dayes; notwithſtanding vpon that day he maketh a very ſolemne Banquet in the Diuan for the Baſhawes and other Great ones; and a very great Dinner in the Court yard, for all ſuch as did accompanie him, and are there preſent. Then his Maieſtie obſeruing the ordinarie Cuſtome, ſends to preſent the Chiefe Vizir with a very rich Veſt, lined with a very coſtly Furre, and doing the like by the other great ones of the Port, (though with Veſts of farre lower price) hee alſo extends his bountie to all his Aghas, giuing them Swords and ſuch like things; and to the Sultanaes coſtly Iewels, and other Gifts to many others of the Serraglio, giuing (as wee ſay) New-yeeres Gifts, to all.

Gifts to the Grandes.

Euery night during the three dayes of the Byram (for it is but for three dayes and ſo it ends) hee cauſeth Shewes to bee made of Fire-workes, and ſuch like, which continue vntill Morning, and that the Sultanaes may ſee them, the King comes of purpoſe into their companie to be merrie with them, and is more free and familiar then at other times; and hee giues free libertie for mirth and ſports Day and Night throughout the Citie, during thoſe three dayes.

Three dayes Solemnitie. Fire workes and Shewes.

To theſe Feſtiuals, all the Sultanaes which liue out of the Serraglio, are alſo inuited, who both giue Preſents to the King, and take Preſents from him. Likewiſe in theſe three dayes the King is preſented by the Baſhawes and Great men, and indeed with Gifts of great value, for euery one ſtriues to exceed another, thinking thereby to winne fauour. The Sultanaes alſo are not behinde hand, for they preſent him, with Shirts, Handkirchiefes, Linnen breeches, and ſuch like things of good conſideration, the which the Grand Signior afterwards makes vſe of for his owne wearing.

Preſents to him.

The ſame Byram of three dayes is kept in all his Dominions, and throughout the Citie of Conſtantinople, euen in euery Turkes houſe; the Streets being at almoſt euery corner ſet out with Deuiſes, and Swings of diuers ſorts very artificially made; where old and young are ſolaced, and giuing two or three Aſpers to them which owe the Swings, they may haue ſport ſufficient. But during this Feaſt, it is ſomewhat dangerous for the poore Chriſtians and Iewes to walke the ſtreets; for, the Turkes being then ſomewhat inſolent and full of Wine, doe put them in great feare of doing them ſome miſchiefe, if they deny them money when they demand it of them; And ſo they doe likewiſe in another Byram, which is called the little Byram, and comes three Moneths after the other.

Chriſtians awed

Little Byram.

The Old Serraglio, and Womens liues therein: Of their Marriages and Children, Slaue-ſelling, Witneſſes.

HAuing oftentimes mentioned the old Serraglio, which is as it were a dependent of the Kings Serraglio, it will not bee amiſſe briefely to make ſome kinde of relation of it.

The Old Serraglio.

This is a very large Serraglio, immured with a very high Wall; the Buildings are faire, it hath many Inhabitants, and is about an Italian mile in Compaſſe, being ſeated in the nobleſt part of the Citie. It was the firſt Serraglio, which Mahomet the ſecond built for to dwell in with all his Court, when hee tooke Conſtantinople; It hath but one Gate (which is of Iron) belonging vnto it, the which Gate is kept by a Companie of white Eunuches, and no men may come in thereat, vnleſſe it bee to bring in ſuch neceſſaries as they want, at which times they cannot ſee any of the Women. Now the Women which are therein, are thoſe which are put out of the Kings Serraglio, viz. ſuch Sultanaes as haue belonged to the deceaſed Grand Signior, thoſe Women likewiſe which through their euill behauiour and conditions are fallen into diſgrace with the King, and ſuch as are Infirme or Defectiue, in what ſhould belong to Women fit for the companie of a King; and none elſe are there, but for ſome of the aforeſaid cauſes. All which are gouerned, and lookt vnto by an old Woman which is made their Ouer-ſeer, and taketh care to ſee them vſed according to the Cuſtome of the Houſe, and that they haue their Food and Cloathing, with their ſeuerall ſtipends; all which is farre ſhort of what they had when they were in the Kings Serraglio; howbeit ſuch as haue beene Queenes and Sultanaes, liue out of the common ranke, in their Lodgings apart; and although they are out of the Kings ſight and (as it were) out of fauour, yet they are reaſonably well ſerued.

Who are therein.

Woman Ouer-ſeer.

Now the greateſt part of the ſayd Sultanaes (Queenes excepted) if they bee any thing rich, may (with the Kings leaue by the old Womans ſolicitation) goe foorth and marrie, and carrie with them all that which they haue kept and ſtollen. For at their comming forth of the Kings Serraglio, if they haue ought of any great worth or value that is knowne, the Cadun takes it from them, and reſtores it to the Grand Signior. So that I ſay, if they haue any thing to beſtow themſelues withall, they cunningly make it knowne abroad, to the end that ſome men of qualitie may become Suitors for them, and make them a good Ioynter.

In the ſaid Serraglio, they haue all the commoditie of neceſſaries that may bee, as Gardens, Fountaines, and faire Bognoes, and the King hath ſome roomes alſo therein readie furniſhed: for ſome-ſometimes hee goeth thither to viſite his kindred, as his Grandmother, Mother, Aunts, Siſters, &c. who for ſome of the aforeſaid occaſions were put out of his Serraglio.

Hard ſtate.

The other Women of this old Serraglio, haue but meane allowance; and had they not ſomewhat of their owne to helpe ſometimes, they would paſſe but courſly; ſo that they are faine to betake themſelues to their Needles, by which they reape a reaſonable benefite, and haue diuers Iewes women who frequent their companies, and ſell their labours for them.

Seuen Wiues, Slaues vnlimited.

Baſhawes Sons kept vnder, if of royal Bloud

A Turke (if hee pleaſe) may take ſeuen Wiues at Kebin: beſides hee may haue as many Slaues as hee will, and the Children of the Slaues are held as truely begotten and legitimate, as thoſe of the Wiues, and haue as much right to the Inheritance of what the Father leaues behind him: Nay, a Baſhaw hauing married a Siſter or a Daughter to the King, and hauing Sonnes by them; thoſe Sonnes may not riſe aboue the Degree of a Saniack Begh or a Capoogee Baſhee, to the end they may bee kept vnder, being allyed to the Crowne, that ſo being but in meane places, they may not bee apt for reuolution. But their Brothers which their Fathers beget of Slaues, may come to bee Baſhawes, for they are free from ſuſpition, in regard they are not of the Bloud Royall: And hence it is, that thoſe Children which had a Sultana to their Mother, are ſo often ſeene to bee in lower Degree then the others; for hee which is borne of the Slaue, is aboue him which is borne of the Sultana; yet with the Children of the other Subjects it is otherwiſe, for they are equals.

Diuorces.

The parties Married, may vpon diuers occaſions ſpecified in their Law, leaue one another, eſpecially when they cannot agree together. And if the man put away the Woman, hee is bound to allow her the Ioynter or Dowrie, which hee promiſed her when they were Contracted: but if the Woman forſake the Man, ſhee can recouer nothing, but departs onely with a ſmall Portion, ſuch as ſhee brought with her into her Husbands houſe.

Slaues ſold if barren.

Now in caſe a Turke take Slaues for his vſe, hee may not ſell them againe, but they become members of the Familie, in which they are to remaine till they die; but if they prooue barren, they may bee ſold from hand to hand, as often as their fortune ſo betides them.

The Turkes may buy of all ſorts of Slaues of euery Religion, and vſe them as they pleaſe (killing onely excepted) which the Chriſtians and Iewes there may not doe; for they haue libertie onely to buy Chriſtians and Iewes.

Beziſten.

There is for this purpoſe in Conſtantinople a Beziſten, that is, a common publike Market, where euery Wedneſday there are bought and ſold Slaues of all ſorts, and euery one comes freely, to buy for their ſeuerall vſes; ſome for Nurſes, ſome for Seruants, and ſome for their Luſtfull appetites; for they which make vſe of Slaues for their ſenſualitie cannot bee puniſhed by the Iuſtice, as they ſhould bee if they were taken with Free women, and with Turkiſh women eſpecially.

Manner of ſelling Slaues.

Reſtitution if not a Virgin.

Theſe Slaues are bought and ſold, as Beaſts and Cattle are; they being viewed and reuiewed, and felt all about their Limmes and Bodies, as if they were ſo many Horſes, then they are examined of what Countrey they are, and what they are good for; either for Sewing, Spinning, Weauing, and the like: buying ſometimes the Mother with the Children, and ſometimes the Children without the Mother, ſometimes two or three Brothers together, and againe, ſometimes taking the one and leauing the reſt, vſing no tearmes of loue, regard, or honeſtie, but euen as the Buyer or the Seller ſhall thinke, will beſt turne them to profit. Now when there is a Virgin that is beautifull and faire, ſhee is held at a high rate, and is ſold for farre more then any other; and for ſecuritie of her Virginitie, the ſeller is not onely bound to the reſtitution of the money (if ſhe proue otherwiſe) to him that bought her: but is for his fraud fined at a ſumme of money. In the Beziſten there ſitteth an Emeen, that is, a Cuſtomer, who receiues Cuſtome of the buyers and ſellers; which amounteth to a reaſonable ſumme in the ſpace of a yeere.

No benefit by Affinitie to the King.

Loſſe by it.

The Baſhawes and other Subiects, though by Marriage they become Vncles Sonnes in law, or Couſens to the Grand Signior, may not by vertue of their Affinitie, challenge any more familiaritie or freedome with his Majeſtie, then if there were no ſuch matter of Kindred betwixt them, but onely what may well befit their Office and Dignitie, they remayning ſtill Slaues as the others doe: nay, their ſeruitude is thereby increaſed, and they looſe a great part of their former Libertie; for they muſt be very obſequious to the Sultanaes whom they haue Married, and turne away the greateſt part of their other Women and Slaues (if they haue any) and muſt with patience ſupport all their imperfections: ſo that for this reaſon, few Baſhawes of worth and iudgement ſeeke after ſuch Marriages, for they are both chargeable and bring Diſcontent: but when the King commands, they (as his Slaues) muſt ſubmit and obey, though their vexation and charge increaſe neuer ſo much thereby.

Rites of Marriage.

Who may bee Witneſſes.

The Ceremonie of Turkiſh Marrying, is nothing elſe, but in the preſence of the Cadee (who is the Iuſtice) to make Hoget, that is, a Writing expreſſing the Vow and good liking of the parties to bee Married, with a ſpecification of the Dowrie which the Husband is to make to the Wife; all which is done in preſence alſo of Witneſſes, which are true and honeſt, and not to bee denyed. For in Turkie it is not permitted that euery one that will, ſhould beare Witneſſe; but onely ſuch men as are Free, of a good Age, that can ſay the Namaz, and haue ſome knowledge in the Law, knowne to bee men of ciuill life, and which drinke no Wine: for the Witneſſe of a Turke which drinkes Wine is nothing worth, and thus their Law commandeth; But for all this, Corruption is ſo crept in amongſt them, that now in Turkie (eſpecially in Conſtantinople) there are (to the outward appearance Graue and Honeſt men) more falſe Witneſſes, then in any other part of the world beſides; and who are they? (at leaſt the Chiefe of them) but a certayne ſort of Emeers, that is, ſuch as pretend to come of the Race and Stocke of Mahomet, which weare greene Telbents: and certayne poore Cadees out of Office, and theſe are they which for money doe vſe that deteſtable Trade, which our Knights of the Poſt doe practiſe heere with vs. And hence it is that Auanias are ſo commonly framed, for they can ſtoutly (and that with eaſe) out-face the poore Chriſtians and Iewes: nay, for a Bribe they will not ſpare their owne generation, in bearing falſe witneſſe, or rayſing calumnies againſt them: For the Turkes being naturally giuen to Couetouſneſſe, not fearing God, but altogether inclined to Rapine (although without queſtion there are many very honeſt men amongſt them) when they meete with a fit opportunitie, they will play the Rogues with any man, bee hee of what condition ſoeuer; wherefore it proues dangerous to haue any dealing with them, for that they with that tricke will eaſily free themſelues from any Obligation or Agreement before made; for, Iudgement there, conſiſts onely of the force of proofe by Witneſſes, ſo that a man had need to be wondrous circumſpect in his proceedings with Turkes, eſpecially in matters of Couenant.

Emirs falſe Witneſſes.

Turkes couetous and dangerous.

Force of Euidence.

Of their Religion, Opinions, Perſons, Times, Places and Rites ſacred.

THe Turkes beleeue in Almightie God, that hee is the Creator of the whole Vniuerſe, and the gracious Redeemer of all good men in the day of Iudgement, that hee is in the higheſt Heauen, ſerued with eſpeciall Angels, hauing from the beginning caſt out the Diſobedient ones; for whom as alſo for Wicked men hee made Hell. And as they affirme, euerlaſting Life to bee in theſe two places, viz. Heauen and Hell: So they confeſſe and wayte for the Reſurrection of the Bodie to bee re-vnited with the Soule, at ſuch time as the fearefull Trumpet ſhall bee ſounded by Mahomet, at the commandement of the Great GOD of the Iudgement.

Reſurrection.

They beleeue alſo, that Life euerlaſting in Paradiſe, is ſuch a happineſſe, that it conſiſts onely in the delighting and pleaſing of the Sences; and that they ſhall haue there, the vſe of Naturall things in all perfection, without making any difference, inioying perfect health, and free from all manner of trouble. And on the contrarie, that in Hell, the vſe of the aforeſayd things ſhall bee in vnquenchable Fire, and ſhall haue a moſt bitter and loathſome taſte. And this is all that they attribute vnto them, either for the reward of the Bleſſed, or the puniſhment of the Reprobate.

Senſuall Paradiſe.

They ſay moreouer, that the Power of God is ſuch, that hauing at Mans Creation prefixed and appointed a ſet time for his end, it is impoſſible that the wit or deuice of mortall Man, ſhould bee able to diuert or preuent it. Wherefore in the warres, or in other occaſions, they are ſo much the more bold, reſolute and couragious; ſaying, that their End is written in their Fore-heads, and it is not for them to goe about to auoyd it, ſo that if they dye, they dye.

Fate.

They alſo affirme Gods Power to bee ſuch, that after mens Bodies are riſen againe, hee will giue them ſuch an agilitie, that they ſhall bee able in a moment to paſſe from one Heauen to another, euen to the fartheſt parts of them, to viſite and imbrace their Wiues, Mothers, Brothers, and others of their Kindred, the Heauens being all tranſparent, being of Diamonds, Rubies, Turkeſſes and Chriſtall.

Agilitie in the next Life.

Tranſparent Heauens.

As concerning Gods Throne or Seate of Majeſtie; they affirme, that euery one cannot behold it, by reaſon of the brightneſſe of the beames which comes from his Eyes, and by reaſon of the vnſpeakeable ſplendour proceeding from his glorious Face, and that the Angels and Prophets onely, haue the grace to inioy that ſight.

Gods Throne.

Theſe are the principall foundations of their Religion, vpon which they build the courſe of this their preſent temporall Life, and by which they hope to obtaine a Life euerlaſting and happie; affirmed by their Prophet, to bee full of the delights and pleaſures of this World, but enioyed in all perfection and excellencie, in a Supernaturall and Incorruptible manner.

They ſay, that Almightie God ſent foure Prophets into the World, to inſtruct, gouerne, and ſaue Mankind; each of them being holy, pure, and vndefiled, to wit, Moſes, Dauid, Chriſt, and Mahomet; and that God ſent to euery one of them by his Angell Gabriell a Booke, that they themſelues being firſt perfected, might the better know how to inſtruct the people. To Moſes he ſent the Teurat, that is, the Old Law; to Dauid the Zebur, that is, the Pſalmes; to Chriſt the Ingil, that is, the Goſpell; and to Mahomet the Kurawn, that is, the Alcoran, (as wee call it.) And that the three firſt Prophets with their people, did faile ſomewhat in the Lawes giuen them by God: But Mahomet comming laſt, brought a Law, more true, plaine, cleere, and ſincere, in which all ſuch as beleeue ſhould obtayne the loue of God; but they ſay that other Nations continue ſtill in their errours, and hauing ſucked of their Mothers Milke, doe not embrace the Truth; For which fault being (by right) depriued of Heauen, they haue no other meanes to recouer, and to come thither at the Day of Iudgement, but by Mahomets protection, who is the only Interceſſor and Mediator vnto the Almightie God: And ſtanding in the dreadfull Day of Iudgement at the gate of Paradiſe, he ſhall be ſought vnto and entreated by the other Prophets to ſaue their people alſo, and his clemencie ſhall be ſuch, as to make Interceſſion for them, ſo that the good Chriſtians and the good Iewes ſhall by his meanes obtayne euerlaſting Life, with perpetuitie of ſenſuall delights as aforeſaid, but in a place apart and inferiour to the Turkes, they being beloued of God, and more deare vnto him then others. The women alſo ſhall come into Heauen, but ſhall be in a place farre inferiour to men, and be leſſe glorified.

Womens Heauen.

All the Prophets are held in great honour amongſt them. They call Moſes, Muſahib Alloh, that is, a talker with God; and Chriſt, Meſeeh, Roob-ulloh, and Hazrettee Iſaw, that is, Meſſias, the Spirit of God, and venerable Ieſus: and Mahomet, Reſul Alloh, that is, the Meſſenger of God. When they talke of Chriſt Ieſus, they ſpeake very reuerently of him; and confeſſe that the Iewes through Enuie apprehended him, and maliciouſly condemned him, and led him along to put him to death; but the Angels being ſent from God, tooke him away from them in a Cloud, and carried him into Heauen, at which the Iewes being aſtoniſhed and vexed, tooke one that was there preſent, and crucified him in his ſtead; not being willing to haue it knowne that Ieſus was the Meſſias; he being in Heauen in company of his Brethren the Prophets, beloued of God, and ſeruing him, as the other Prophets doe.

The Muftee.

The Miniſterie of their Religion (or rather their confuſed Sect) is as followeth. They haue firſt a Muftee, that is to ſay, an Expounder or Declarer of Caſes in Law; who amongſt them is as an Archbiſhop is with vs, for he is alſo the Primate ouer the Church; and muſt be a man very expert in the Lawes, and one accuſtomed to Iuſtice, choſen by the Grand Signior himſelfe, the which Muftees charge is to ouerſee, and heare ſuch things as are belonging to the Law, or to the Church. And although he hath not an abſolute command ouer the Muftees of the other Prouinces, yet with his ſubtiltie he preuailes with the King, and effecteth what he liſt, eſpecially when he hath the Chiefe Vizir to friend, who in degree, dignitie, and authoritie is his Superiour. Vnder the ſaid Muftee there are two Cadeleſhers, that is to ſay, Iudges of the Armies, one of Grecia and the other of Natolia, who alſo being men of the Law, and they which alwayes ſucceed the Muftee, haue the ouerſight of all the other Cadees, who are Iuſtices; of which there is one in euery Citie and Towne, to doe Iuſtice and end Controuerſies betwixt man and man, and to puniſh Offendors. But they are changed euery three yeeres, and others put into their places by the Cadileſchers, with order from the Grand Signior.

Cadeeleſchers.
Cadees and their orders.

Amongſt the ſaid Cadees, they haue alſo their orders; ſcilicet, thoſe of the firſt ranke, and they are called Meulaws, which ſignifieth Lords, and they are employed in the principall Cities, the other are but Cadees, and they get employment as they can by their vertues: and good carriage in former places. Now the Cadeeleſchers haue Bookes lying by them, wherein are exactly ſet downe the Reuenewes of euery Cadeelick, ſo that by that meanes they know the better how to furniſh them; none of them ſurmounting aboue fiue hundred Aſpers per diem.

Bookes.

Priuiledge.

This order of Turkes amongſt the reſt, hath only this Priuiledge, which is, that they cannot be put to death; ſo that if any of them by committing ſome notorious crime againſt the Law, ſhould deſerue death, it muſt be done by abſolute command from the Grand Signior, and that very warily and ſecretly, but this hapneth very ſeldome or neuer.

Their continuance.

The Muftee and Cadeeleſchers are changed at the Kings pleaſure (for there is no Office in Turkie during life) howbeit their ordinary Reſidence is three yeeres; their chiefe Fortune depending wholy in their continuance in the grace and fauour of the Chiefe Vizir.

Turbants.

All the aforeſaid men of the Law, that is, the Muftee, the Cadeeleſchers, Mulaes, and Cadees, weare their Turbants farre bigger then any other Turkes, and made vp after another faſhion, in token that they ought to be reuerenced aboue others. And although their habit be in faſhion like other mens: yet in this there is a difference, for they weare much white Chamblet, and the fineſt cloth, but no ſilke at all.

Muftees office.

The principall charge of the Muftee, is to Anſwere to all ſuch Propoſitions as are made vnto him, of matters in generall, vpon Caſes concerning conſcience, and the Rites of Turkiſh Iuſtice and Law, the which Anſweres are of few words, very briefe, and they are called Fetfa's, that is, Declarations, or Iudgements of the Muftee; with which he may compell not only the Cadees and Baſhawes to the performance of the Contents thereof, but the Kings owne perſon is alſo bound to ſee them executed: for in concluſion, they ſeeke altogether to amplifie their Sect in honour of their Prophet; the Muftees Fetfa being in high eſtimation, in aſmuch as it is vpheld very ſtoutly by the whole order of the Cadees.

Prieſts and Clerkes.

Then next they haue a Gouernour of the Moſcheas, called the Mooteuelee, and Eemawms, which are Pariſh Prieſts, and next to them Muyezins, which are as our Church Clerkes; all which are employed in the Seruice of the Moſcheas, calling the people to Prayers, burying the dead, reading vpon the graues of the dead, and to conclude, performing all ſuch Offices as are any way belonging to the Church, for the good of the people.

Prayers fiue times a day.

They pray fiue times a day (aſwell in the Moſcheas, as in their Houſes, or whereſoeuer they are) that is, at foure of the clocke in the morning; at noone; betweene three and foure in the afternoone; betweene ſeuen and eight at night; and at mid-night: and vpon the Friday which is their Sabbath, at nine of the clocke in the fore-noone alſo which makes ſixe times, and vpon that day there are more Muyezins which cry in the Steeples, then vpon other dayes: for at all thoſe houres, in ſtead of Bels, the people are called to Prayer by the voice of one or two men in the Steeples or Turrets adjoyning to the Moſcheas, of a reaſonable height, by which voices they are ſtirred vp to the prayſe of God and Mahomet: and may prepare themſelues for their Prayers. And becauſe the Muyezins which cry, can heare no Clockes (for they haue none in their Churches) they vſe Houre-glaſſes, by which they are directed aſwell in this Seruice, as in other ordinary matters.

Hower-glaſſes.

In euery great Moſchea there are Mudereeſes, which are Readers; that teach diuers Schollers the common Prayers, and inſtruct them in the Seruice belonging to the Moſcheas, being paid for their paines out of the Reuenues of the ſaid Churches.

Readers.

Cleaneneſſe & purifyings.

The condition of them which are to pray, is only to be corporally cleane; it being vnlawfull for any one to enter into the Moſcheas, or to pray, if he find that he hath any naturall pollution or carnal vncleanenes about him, be it of what condition ſoeuer, or of neuer ſo ſmall moment: wherefore for their clenſing, euery one is bound either to waſh himſelfe in the Bagno, if it bee for carnall commerce, or elſe for other ſorts of vncleaneneſſe with cold water, euery Citie and place abounding with Bagnoes, both publike and priuate, and euery Church-yard with very faire Fountaynes for the vſe of the common ſort. Now immediately after euery one is clenſed and come into the Moſchea, the Eemawm, which is the Pariſh Prieſt, beginnes, to pray, and all they which are preſent imitate him in geſture: for, of themſelues a great part of them would not elſe know how to performe that buſineſſe. For their Prayers conſiſt chiefly in riſing vp, falling downe, kiſſing the ground, and ſometimes ſitting ſtill, one while touching their eyes, ſometimes their faces, then their beards, then their heads; ſaying ſome few words in the prayſe of God and Mahomet, the Churches being all matted vnder-foot, and in ſome places there are Woollen Carpets ſpread for the better ſort of people.

Manner of their Prayers. Their geſtures

Their length.

The ſaid Prayers according to the houres, are diuers; ſome longer, and ſome ſhorter, none of them being aboue an houre long, only that Prayer of the Euening in the time of the Ramazan, which is their Lent, which is longer then the other Prayers: they pray after their Eemawm, for he is their Guide, and eſteemed of if hee haue a good voice, as wee eſteeme of our Singing men. They alſo vſe preaching vpon euery Friday in the Ramazan: And when they will pray for any good ſucceſſe in the Warres, or curſe any Rebell; they haue a cuſtome then to goe a Proceſſion along the ſtreets by two and two, but without any Lights or any ſuch thing in their hands; and as they goe along they prayſe the Name of God, and reade very long Prayers which they haue for thoſe purpoſes, the people ſtill crying Amen, making one whole dayes worke of it, and then they hold that Rebell or Enemie, whoſoeuer he be, to be without all doubt, accurſed.

Preaching.

Proceſſion and Curſing.

Other Conuocations and Prayers.

In the time of trouble or affliction, They publiſh in the moſt eminent places a Conuocation of all the chiefe men in the Citie (and of the common people alſo, ſuch as will come, may) to pray in the fields which are for that vſe, therein imitating the Iewes, and being all come together, diuers of their Santons of eſteeme for their Holineſſe, make Sermons of exhortation, to Fortitude, Patience, and to the loue and feare of God: But if thoſe troubles continue ſtill, they then vſe the Prayers of forty houres, and of fortie dayes in the chiefeſt Moſcheas built by the Emperours; the which Prayers are made by a company of men, who are belonging to the ſaid Moſcheas.

Muftees Reuenew.

The Muftee hath his Entrada apart, in Land of about ſixe thouſand Sultanines per annum: but being put out of his place, falling into diſgrace with the King, and leauing the Entrada to his Succeſſor, he hath then but a thouſand Aſpars per diem pay: as the Cadeeleſchers haue when they are in Office.

Ramazan Ceremonies.

All the Ceremonie which they vſe in the Ramazan, which is their Lent, is no other but to abſtayne from eating and drinking in the day time, they hauing leaue to eate all the night long, (that is, from ſeuen a clocke at night to foure in the mourning) and what they pleaſe without making any difference of meates; At twilight they light the Lampes in the Steeples, which burne till morning: the Eemawm of euery Pariſh taking eſpeciall notice who is often wanting from Church, eſpecially in the Euening, and who drinkes Wine, or eates in the day time; for, beſides, that they ſhould bee held deſpiſers of the Law, they ſhould bee moſt ſeuerely puniſhed if they were found in any ſuch fault. I remember once that Naſooh Baſhaw being Vizir Azam, and riding through the ſtreets in the Ramazan, eſpied a Turke that was drunke with Wine; ſo forthwith he cauſed him to be brought vnto him, and without giuing him any reſpite to recouer his wits; cauſed a Ladle full of boyling Lead to bee powred downe his throate, and the Wretch periſhed immediately.

Example of ſeueritie.

Sacrifices. The King vſeth in the Ramazan aſwell as in the times of troubles and afflictions, and ſo doe the Baſhawes and other great men, to ſacrifice diuers ſorts of beaſts, aſwell at the Sepulchres of ſuch as haue beene holy men, as at the Moſcheas. Now ſome were wont to doe it priuately, but the Kings haue ſtill commanded that their Sacrifices be done publikely in the ſtreets, and at the gates of the Citie, diuiding the fleſh of the beaſts amongſt the people, giuing ſome alſo to the Baſhawes themſelues, and to the other great men of the Port. The ſaid Sacrifices are vſed very often, for by that meanes they thinke to appeaſe Gods wrath, and regaine his loue and fauour.

Beads. Thoſe Turkes which are profeſſors of Humilitie and Deuotion, haue their Beades longer then other men, and carrie them in their hands into the Moſcheas, and as they walke vp and downe the ſtreets: but paſſe them ouer very quickly, for, whereas the Papiſts ſay the Aue Maria, ſo they ſay only Subhawn Alloh, that is, God is pure and true, and ſometimes Alloh Ekber, that is, God is great.

Pilgrimage. Mecca Temple. They goe alſo many of them to Meccha on Pilgrimage, and to Hieruſalem alſo, which they call, Gudds' il Shereef, to Meccha, to viſit the Temple which they ſay was built by Abraham, in the which Temple Mahomet in the time of Idolatry did hide himſelfe: And they affirme, that when he was almoſt fortie yeeres of age, he receiued the Alcoran from God, and that from that time the Muſſulmanlick beganne, that is, the true Beliefe: and ſhortly after hee dyed; and his Sepulchre is viſited by all ſuch as goe the ſaid Pilgrimage. And when they goe to Ieruſalem, they goe not to viſit Chriſts Sepulchre, for, they ſay hee did not dye, but they goe only to ſee the places which he moſt frequented, as being a miraculous Prophet, who rayſed the dead to life, healed the ſicke, and wrought ſuch like Wonders. They goe likewiſe to the Valley of Iehoſhaphat, for they ſay that in that place ſhall bee the Reſurrection at the Day of Iudgement. Now ſuch as haue gone the ſaid Pilgrimage, and returne home againe to their Houſes, are euer after called Hagees, that is, Pilgrimes, and are much reuerenced and eſteemed of. There are alſo diuers Turkes, who forſaking the World, leaue all that they haue, and goe to liue neere to the aforeſaid Valley for deuotion, and for that they would be the neerer to the place of Reſurrection, ſuppoſing thereby to get a great aduantage to themſelues aboue the reſt at that day.

Circumciſion. The greateſt Ceremonie (for Pompe and Solemnitie) which is vſed amongſt the Turkes, is that of the circumciſing their children; wherein they differ from the Iewes in this one particular; for the Turkes neuer circumciſe them till they be paſt ten yeeres of age, following the example of Iſmael whom they imitate, alleadging that Abraham loued and eſteemed him and not Iſaac, and would haue ſacrificed him. This Circumciſion is done without the Church, becauſe of the ſhedding of bloud; all the Kindred and Friends being inuited vnto it, in token of joy and gladneſſe: They vſe the like to thoſe which turne from any other Religion and become Turkes, who in token that they imbrace the Religion of Mahomet, hold vp their fore-finger, ſaying theſe words, La illaheh il Alloh Mukamet reſull Alloh, that is, there is but onely one God, and Mahomet is his Meſſenger.

There are in the Cities, and by the High-wayes alſo, in moſt places of the Grand Signiors Dominions, for the benefit of the Inhabitants and Trauellers, diuers Hawnes with their Fountaynes. There are Hoſpitals alſo in the Cities, and Colledges for the bringing vp of youth, where they may learne to reade and write, all the Moſcheas built by the Emperours, and other great Moſcheas alſo, hauing great Reuenewes for the mayntayning of the ſaid Colledges and Hoſpitals: For the Emperours by Canon may not build Moſcheas, but in memory of ſome notable Conqueſt, or memorable Enterprize, by which the Church may bee prouided for; nor Sultanas neither, vnleſſe it be the Mother to that Emperour who reignes at that time when ſhee goes about it; for the building of which, they are at an infinite charge, and they dedicate them with great Solemnities, to the ſaid Enterprize, be it what it will be.

Moſcheas and Hoſpitals. Limited.

Magnificence. In the Moſcheas there are ſome very coſtly pieces of worke, and frames of great beautie; aſwell for the largeneſſe and neatneſſe of the places for Prayer, as alſo for the beautifull Porches and large paued Courts which compaſſe the ſaid Moſcheas; adorned with very ſtately Pillars, and Fountaynes built all of curious Marble; beſides their Colledges and Hoſpitals to which belong very large Reuenewes; Inſomuch that ſome of thoſe Moſcheas may be well compared with the richeſt Churches in the World: They are built all of wonderfull faire ſtone, with their Cabiloes couered all ouer with Lead, the Pillers being of Porphir or ſome ſuch coſtly ſtones, and the Baſis thereof all whited: the Pillers ſhine extraordinarily in time of Prayer, by reaſon of the abundance of Lampes which are burning; the which Lampes are curiouſly faſtned into round Iron hoopes in compaſſe as bigge as the hoope of a But, vpon which there are diuers rounds of Lampes one aboue another, and are let downe by Copper chaines from the Roofe of the Church; and in euery Moſchea there are three or foure ſuch cluſters of Lampes, according to the greatnes of the Church.

There are no Benches, nor any thing to ſit vpon; only a little place raiſed from the ground for the Prieſt; and another right ouer againſt it (but ſomewhat lower) for the King at ſuch times as he comes to Prayer; all the reſt ſitting vpon the ground, as ordinarily they vſe to ſit in other places: wherefore the Pauements (although they are of very bright and cleane ſtone) are couered with very fine Cairo Mats, which are kept very cleane: for, beſides the Grand Signior, no man may come into the Church with his ſhooes on; but muſt leaue them at the doore, or elſe giue them to one of their ſeruants to keepe.

Sickneſſe fatall, and death.

When any one is extremely ſicke, and as they thinke, paſt hope of recouery; then the Imawm comes to vſe comfortable words vnto him, and prayes by him: and being dead, they waſh him all ouer, and then hauing wound him vp in a Sheete, and layed him in his Coffin with his face downward, they carrie him to his Graue, with his head foremoſt. If the partie bee a Man or a Man-child, they ſet a Turbant vpon the Coffin: and if it bee a Woman, then they ſet a Filiawn takya vpon the Coffin, that is, ſuch a Cap as the women weare, with a Brooch and Feather in it. They are accompanied to the Graue by the Church-men, and their owne kindred, (but no women) vſing no lights at all: but the Muyezins ſing all along as they goe, calling vpon the Name of God, and their Prophet Mahomet, and pray for the health of the Soule departed; and at their returne there is a Banquet made for the companie for their paines.

Funerall.

Tombes of the Emperours.

The Tombes of the Emperours moſt commonly are built vpon the ground, cloſe by their Graues which are couered either with extraordinary fine Cloth, or with Veluet; hauing Turbants ſet vpon them of the faſhion of thoſe which the Emperours weare, with Brooches and ſprigs of Feathers in them: and there ſtand Candleſtickes both at the head and at the feet of the ſaid Graues, and two Lampes burning continually both day and night. Now, theſe Tombes are for the moſt part built in little Chappels cloſe by, but not adjoyning to the Moſcheas of the ſaid Emperours. And in the ſaid Chappels there are Muyezins, who by turnes, doe continually read in the Alcoran, and pray with their Beades, for the glorie of the Emperours deceaſed. The Vizirs, Baſhawes, and other Great men alſo (imitating the Kings) doe the like; but with leſſe pompe and charge: And they which haue not burying places neere the Moſcheas, may make them neere their houſes and be buried there, or elſe in any part of the Citie, prouided that the ground be their owne.

Common Tombes.

The common ſort are carried out of the Citie, and buried in the fields which ſerue for that purpoſe; hauing one ſtone ſet vp an end at the one end of their Graue, and another at the other end; vpon which is grauen the Name, Countrey, and Degree, and any thing elſe that they pleaſe, of the parties deceaſed.

Religious Turkes.

Amongſt the Turkes there are no Religious houſes, nor Monaſteries: onely the Teckehs of the Meuleuees, (which are an order of Derueeſhees, that turne round with Muſike in their Diuine Seruice:) for, for the moſt part, they are all bred vp to Armes, and very few can reade and write: Nay, it hath beene ſometime ſeene, that a Baſhaw (which had not his education in the Kings Serraglio) hath ſate in the Deeuan, and hath not knowne either to write or reade; but hath beene enforced to learne to write a few words of courſe, to vnder-write Commandements, and the like. And amongſt the Turkes, he that can but reade and write, is held a learned fellow, and eſteemed of farre aboue others.

There are alſo diuers which profeſſe a kinde of liuing, out of the common cuſtome of the world; being clothed wonderfull poorely and raggedly, with a kind of Felt caps on their heads; they begge for their liuing, and lie in the courts of the Moſcheas, and in ſuch like places; and theſe are accounted very holy; for they pray much in the view of the world, and liue alwaies (in outward appearance) in the loue of honeſtie; preaching this doctrine, that it is vnpoſſible perfectly to arriue vnto and gayne the Loue of God, but by the ladder of humane Loue and Innocency: and for this cauſe they betake themſelues to that courſe of life, that they may be in charitie with all the world, and bee accepted for it of God, in Heauen. Vnder which colour of holineſſe they liue at eaſe, and deceiue the World (euery one being bountifull vnto them) and play the Villaines in ſecret, as well as any other. Beſides them, there are alſo ſome, who like Hermites, liue in ſolitary places, neglecting the World; conceiuing that courſe of life to excell all other, for Innocency and Holineſſe.

Womens Religion.

As for the women, there is no heed or reckoning made of their Religion at all; for they neuer goe to Church: ſo that, if they happily haue a will to pray, at the houre of Prayer, they doe it in their owne houſes. But their honeſtie is much looked after, the Imawms of euery Pariſh being bound to hearken diligently after their deportment: who if they diſcouer any thing that is amiſſe, they muſt reueale it to their Husbands, that they may put them away: or elſe, to their Fathers or Kindred, if they bee vnmarried, that they may take ſome courſe for their amendment.

And although the Women may not bee conuerſant with other Men then with their Fathers, Husbands, or Brothers; and liue in Lodgings apart by themſelues, and goe alwaies with their faces couered: yet, they being extraordinarily giuen to the ſport, and very diſhoneſt; taking the opportunitie of their Husbands abſence at the Warres, or in ſome long Iourney; vnder colour of going to the Bagnoes, and going couered withall; they goe whither, and to whom they liſt; knowing, that the worſt of it is, but to bee put away, if ſo bee it ſhould bee at any time diſcouered.

I haue hereunto added a Letter, ſent by Sultan Oſman the late murdered Emperour, to his Maieſtie, by Huſein Chiaus; and tranſlated into Engliſh, by Maſter Robert Withers.

Although in this tranſitorie world, the King or the Beggar ſhould enioy the longeſt terme of life that might bee, and obtayne all that his heart could wiſh; yet it is moſt certaine, that in the end hee muſt depart, and be tranſported to the World eternall: and it is well knowne vnto the Wiſe, that it is vnpoſſible for Man to abide for euer in this World.

The occaſion of this Prologue is, that the immortall, omnipotent, and onely God, hath through his Diuine will and pleaſure, called vnto himſelfe Our glorious Father of bleſſed memorie, Sultan Achmet Kan, who in Life was happie, and in Death laudable, and departing out of this momentany World, to be neere the mercifull Creator, being changed into perfect glorie and eternall bliſſe, hath his habitation on high, and his reſt in Paradiſe.

This paternall Empire and Monarchicall Kingdome hath almoſt vntill this preſent bleſſed time beene alwaies hereditarie, from Grand-father to Father, from Father to Sonne, and ſo curſiuely in that manner: but hauing regard vnto the age and yeeres of Our Great and Noble Vncle, Sultan Muſtafa, hee was preferred and honoured to ſit on the Ottoman Throne, and being ſettled for ſome time, tooke care for the affaires of the Empire, and for all that might concerne the people both in generall and particular.

But he hauing beene many yeeres retired in ſolitarineſſe, and giuen to Deuotion and Diuine obedience; being alſo as it were wearied with the cares of the Empire; of his owne accord with-drew himſelfe from the Gouernment: for that the Diadem and Scepter of the Empire of the ſeuen Climates, was the true Right and Inheritance of Our moſt Excellent Maieſtie, of the which (with the meeting and conſent of all the Vizirs, and other Deputies of State, of the Primate of the Muſſulman Law, and of the other honourable Doctors, of the Souldiers, and of all Subiects both publike and priuate) the almightie God hath made a high Preſent and worthie gift vnto vs. And in the happie day in the beginning of the Moone Rebea il-euel, of this preſent yeere 1027. in an expected time, and in an acceptable houre, was Our bleſſed and happie ſitting eſtabliſhed vpon the moſt fortunate Ottoman Throne (the Seate and Wiſedome of Salomon) In the Pulpits of all the Moſchees (the Congregations of the Faithfull, and deuotion of the Muſſulmen) throughout all Our Dominions, is read to Our Imperiall Name, the Hutbeh. And in the Mints where innumerable ſummes of money are coyned, as well vpon the Siluer as the Gold, Our happie name and marke is ſtamped.

And Our moſt powerfull Commandements are obeyed in all the Parts and Dominions of the World: And the brightneſſe of the light of the Sunne of Our Iuſtice and Equitie, hath cauſed the darkeneſſe of Iniuries and Moleſtations to vaniſh away.

Now, ſeeing it hath beene an ancient cuſtome of Our moſt famous Predeceſſors to giue notice of the ſame to ſuch Princes as are in ſincere friendſhip, and that doe continue it with the Houſe of great Maieſtie, and our Imperiall Court: Wee alſo haue written theſe our Princely Letters, and appointed for their Bearer, the choyce amongſt his equals, Huſein Chiaus, (whoſe power be great) one of the honoured and reſpected Seruants of Our magnificent Port, the refuge of the World; to the end that ſuch newes might cauſe great ioy of Our moſt honourable Aſſumption. And We doe hope, that when they ſhall come to your hands (in conformitie of the well grounded friendſhip vpon the ſure League, Articles, and Writings, which hath beene eſtabliſhed of old with Our moſt Royall Race, and permanent Empire) you will manifeſt infinite ioy and gladneſſe, and certifie as much to the Rulers and Gouernours of the Dominions and Countries vnder you, that they may know, that the Articles of Peace and League, and the points of the Oath which are firme, and to be deſired on both parts, from the time of Our Grand-fathers and Predeceſſors of Royall Stocke, now in Paradiſe (whoſe ſoules God enlighten) Vndoubtedly during the time of Our Raigne ſhall be obſerued with all reſpect. And let there not be the leaſt imagination of any want of due obſeruance of the ſignes of friendſhip on Our part, or by any manner of meanes on your part, for the violating the foundation of the Peace and League.

The enſuing Letter was written by Halil Baſhaw, Chiefe Vizir and Generall in the Perſian Expedition, at his returne in Aprill, 1618. to Sir Paul Pinder, Ambaſſadour for his Majeſtie. Engliſhed by Maſter Robert Withers.

To the Courteous Lord of the Nation of the Meſſias; both Great and Honourable among the people of Iesvs, and the true Determiner of Chriſtian Affaires: Our good Friend the Engliſh Ambaſſadour, whoſe latter dayes bee with all felicitie, to whoſe Noble preſence (after our many kinde Salutations tending to all good affection and manifeſtation of Ioy, worthy and beſeeming our Friendſhip:) our louing aduice is this. That if you deſire to heare of our State and beeing, you ſhall vnderſtand, that after wee departed from the happie Port, with the Armie for the Warres of Aſia, wee arriued and wintered red in Meſopotamia, and remoouing thence in the Spring with all the Muſſulman Hoſt (alwayes victorious) wee went to Van, from which place vntill wee came to Tauris, the Muſſulman Armie went on alwayes ſacking and deſtroying all thoſe places and Townes of the Perſians, which wee met withall by the way in thoſe parts, where were burnt, pillaged, and ruined, ſome thouſands of Villages; and tormenting all thoſe people that came to hand. And when wee were come neere to Tauris, the Generall of the Perſian Forces (of peruerſe Religion) called Carcighai Han, (the accurſed) retyred himſelfe into the ſayd Tauris, where beating vp his Drummes in euery Quarter, made a ſhew that hee had a will to Fight; ſo wee ſent a little before vs, ſome Tartars and others of our Armie, to hearken out and take notice of the Enemie, who meeting with ſeuen or eight hundred Perſians of note, put them to the Sword, very few eſcaping, and that with great difficultie and hazard. By which, the ſayd Generall finding himſelfe vnable to reſiſt the power and furie of the Muſſulman Hoſt, or to ſtay any longer in the ſayd place; the very ſame day that wee arriued there, the ſayd Generall hauing ſpoyled all the Citie, fled away; So wee tooke the place, ranſackt it, and burned all the Buildings, Towers, Gardens, and whatſoeuer elſe wee found within it: And thus the great Citie Tauris by Diuine fauour and Grace became ours. Then forthwith wee ſent after the Enemie, the Tartar, with ſome Beglerbeghs, who ouertaking them gaue them Battell, and albeit ſome of ours did fall, yet they which fell of the Enemies ſide were innumerable. And ſo going forward towards Erdeuil (their obſcure reſidence) about ten dayes Iourney of Countrey, wee went burning and ſpoyling it, and killing all the Perſians that wee met. That indeed there was ſo much Honour and Glorie wonne, as that all the ancient men of the Countrey doe affirme, there neuer was ſeene the like; Inſomuch, that from the Confines vnto Erdeuile, twentie dayes Iourney of Countrey, was on that manner by vs deſtroyed. Thus afterward, the King cauſed to emptie the ſayd place of Erdeuile, and fled into a place called Hulchal, and cauſed his Armie to goe to the top of a high Mountayne, from whence hauing ſent three or foure times Men of qualitie vnto vs, ſeeking and intreating for Peace, with promiſe to giue yearely to our Emperour, a hundred Somes of Silke, and all ſuch Places as are vpon the Confines, made in the time of Sultan Solyman, except Derne, and Der Tink; and wee were contented with the Peace, and his Ambaſſadour is vpon the way comming toward vs. And ſo wee returning the ſame way againe alwayes ſpoyling, wee came to Erzerum. And this our preſent Letter is written vnto you, for the reſpect and preſeruation of our Friendſhip: And euen as our Amitie hath euer beene hitherto ſincere and firme, ſo likewiſe by the Grace of God at our arriuall in the happie Port, it ſhall bee in like manner maintayned and continued, that more cannot poſſibly bee. And ſo God keepe you in health.

To the Reader.

I Heere preſent thee Reader, many Voyages and Obſeruations of Maſter Iohn Sanderſon Merchant; worthy of good welcome, though not in ſo due place as wee could haue wiſhed. But this, and the former, and all in this Booke from the tenth Chapter forward (enough to haue made another large Booke) thou haſt as I could, and not as I would; who could not order them before I had them. I haue therefore preſented them to thee as an Appendix to the former Worke, and a Reuiew of Africa and Aſia, (ſome freſh Drops after a great Shower, and faire Gleanings after a goodly Harueſt) all intended to entertaine thee with varietie of Speculation and Diſcourſe, as thou returneſt thorow thoſe long Seas, from the Indian to the Engliſh ſhoares. In which reſpect there is ſome Methodicall correſpondence hitherto, and eſpecially of this laſt with the former, both hauing Conſtantinople for their Centre, and diuerſly repreſenting the ſame to thy view: that giuing thee the Court, this the Citie; that the Gouernment, this the Places and Countries gouerned. And if Ieruſalem come often in our way, remember our intended worke is of Pilgrimes, which (bee they Iewes, Turkes, or Chriſtians,) haue conſpired in the acknowledgement of her Antiquities and Holies. Neither doe wee much trouble thee with repetitions of the ſame things which others haue before deliuered; preſent Pilgrime by reaſon of his Iewiſh Aſſociates, his Greeke Guides, and Quarrels with Father Guardian and his Popiſh Friers, preſenting many notable rarities. I haue not ſhortned him (as ſome others) both for his requeſt, and for his owne breuitie and pithie Paſſages. The Letters following will (I hope) giue thee good content, as the teſtimonies of many Engliſh Trauellers in thoſe parts, ſome of which thou mayeſt finde elſwhere mentioned in this Worke.

Chap. XVI.

By the permiſſion of Almightie God.

Sundrie the perſonall Voyages performed by Iohn Sanderson of London, Merchant, begun in October 1584. Ended in October 1602. With an hiſtoricall Deſcription of Conſtantinople.

His firſt Voyage to Conſtantinople, and thence to Cairo, and to Tripoli.

IN the good Ship called the Merchant Royall, wee ſet ſayle from Graueſend vpon Friday the ninth day of October, 1584. The fifteenth to Harwich. The eighteenth to the Ile of Wight. The fifteenth of Nouember wee arriued at Cape Saint Vincent in Portugall, and [a] went there aſhoare. The foure and twentieth, wee paſſed the Straights of Ieberalter, at the Ingenies wee ſtayed and watered. The next day arriued at Grand Maliga, where we were three dayes. The nine and twentieth, wee paſſed by Motrill, and beheld the Mountayne Salabrenna, which is continually couered with Snow: of the ſame they carrie to Liſhbourne to mixe with their Wine, which Citie is eſteemed to be three hundred miles from thence. The thirteenth of Nouember, we paſſed Cape de Gate. The third of December, wee came to Cape de Faro; heere the Ship Charitie ouertooke vs.

The tenth of December wee came to Sardinia. The thirteenth, wee came to Maritina, and in ſight of Cape Bona in Barbarie. The fifteenth to Sicilia, wee ſaw Mount Etna and Mongebella [b], which then flamed out of the top, although vpon the ſame was alſo Snow: then to Cape Paſſara. The foure and twentieth of December, wee arriued at Cefalonia, and ſtayed there three dayes. The nine and twentieth, wee were in Zant Road, and went aſhoare the firſt of Ianuarie. The ſeuenth, wee put from thence, and the eighth at mid-night the Ship came a ground, ſo that for halfe an houre we were in great danger. The twelfth, wee arriued at Petras in Morea, where wee ſtayed a few dayes; and at that time onely I noted of memorie Saint Andrews Chappell, wherein the Greekes ſay, his Bodie lyeth buried.

The nine and twentieth, I tooke Shipping in the Charitie, and came the firſt of Februarie backe to Cefalonia: and paſſed Serigo (where faire Hellen was borne) and Cape Angelo. The fourth, the winde being contrarie, wee anchored betweene the Ilands of Milo and Argentiera: ſet ſayle and with contrarie weather and calmes, came to the Iland Pattynos. The eleuenth, from thence driuen a little backe againe, yet we arriued in [c] Sio. The fourteenth, there ſtayed foure dayes: the weather yet vnproſperous, wee put into Port Dolphin, which is in the ſame Iland three leagues diſtant from the Towne of Sio, there we went vp to a Mountayne (hard by a Towne called Gardamulo;) where the Poet Homer lyeth buried.

The three and twentieth, wee put out; and the ſeuen and twentieth, wee paſſed by old Troy; ſome of the ruinated Walls yet ſtanding. Then wee paſſed two great Caſtles which are called the [d] Dardinelli, a little within them is a very old ruine of a Towne called Heritho, which is reported to bee the place where the Turkes firſt planted themſelues in Europe; then to Galipoli, ſo to Rodeſto; and the ninth day of March wee arriued in Conſtantinople.

In the time of my there being, I went to ſee the chiefe Monuments which are deſcribed at large in a Booke I tranſlated out of Italian, preſented me by a Iew Doctor. Amongſt the Beaſts I did at that time ſee three Elephants: alſo the Great Turkes Dogges, and manner of [e] keeping them are worth the ſight, for they haue their ſeuerall attendants as if they were great Horſes, and haue their clothing of cloth of Gold, Veluet, Scarlet, and other colours of Cloth, their ſundry Couches, and the place where they are kept, moſt cleanely; It is in Aſia ſome foure miles off by water toward the Blacke Sea.

I was likewiſe, at the mouth [f] of the Blacke Sea, where vpon a Rocke ſtandeth a white Marble pillar, as is reported, ſet vp by Pompey. On the mayne on Europe ſide within little of the ſayd Pillar is a Lanthorne, which ſtandeth high and is ſo great, that fortie men may ſtand in it: it is Glaſed, and they light in it many Lamps euery night, that the Shipping bound from the Blacke Sea, may know where they are.

In a Gallie with the Beg of Alexandria, I departed from Conſtantinople the ninth day of

---

[a] We were ſhewed the Monaſtery and fine adorned Chappell, a decked Altar; and the golden Image of Saint Vincent, which ſtood on the right hand below the ſteps of the Altar. About fiue or ſixe yeeres after as is ſayd, Sir Francis Drake did throw that Image ouer the Rocke.

[b] Then flamed, and ſince I haue diuers times paſſed by it, but onely now the ſmoke is ſeene on the top of that Mount Mongebella.

[c] Sio for the pleaſantneſſe is called the Great Turkes Garden, in that Iland, are many tame Partridges, and there groweth Maſtick, the bodies of thoſe Trees are crooked, and cragged, not much thicker then very old Vine bodies, the leaues are ſomewhat like Mirtle leaues, rather longer and narrower, there are no Maſticke trees in all the world, but thoſe in Sio, as ſome doe ſay.

[d] The Dardinelli. Theſe two Caſtles, our Schollers will haue to bee thoſe of Hero and Leander, yet ſure they are eightie leagues, before you come to the mouth of the Blacke Sea. Theſe are very formall and very ſtrongly built Caſtles, double furniſhed with excellent good and great Ordnance, the one ſtanding on Troy ſide, the other right oppoſite, on Europe ſide, the paſſage is about a league, little more or leſſe.

[e] My Lord South when hee was there, as Maſter Barton ſayd, did like exceeding well of this place and attendance of the Dogs.

October, 1585. we put into Galipoli, Troy, Lemnos, Mitelin, Sio, Samos, and diuers other Ilands in the Archi-pelago, and came [g] to Rhodes, a moſt ſtrong place, and much exceeding great Ordnance there, vpon the two Rocks where the Colloſſes (one of the ſeuen Wonders) ſtood, are now two high Turrets; the Towne double ditched, and triple walled on the land ſide.

From thence we croſſed the Seas in ſixe dayes very proſperouſly, and arriued in Alexandria of Egypt, the ſecond day of Nouember. That Citie and Land ſtandeth ſo lowe, that were it not for the Pharos, and ſome ſight of the tops of Palme trees, you may bee vpon it before you bee aware; which is very dangerous for the ſhips that come thither: for in my time diuers were caſt away; amongſt other, a great Arguſie of Venice, called the Gallion Bon [h]: and an other Venetian ſhip leaped ouer a Rocke, very miraculouſly eſcaped, hauing ouer-ſhot the Port of Alexandria. That ſaid ledge of Rockes lieth out into the Sea a little beyond Bickier.

From Alexandria I went the nineteenth, and came to Grand Cairo the nine and twentieth; paſſing by land a day and an halfe and a night to Roſetto; and there embarked vp the Riuer Nilus, our Boat being drawne along the ſhoare by the Water-men Moores, we paſſed many Towns and Villages. Very pleaſant is that trauell, onely the heate troubleth, and ſome feare of Theeues which continually robbe on that Riuer, and alike on the Land. Many famous matters I was ſhewed in the way, as the old ruines of Conducts of Nilus to the Citie of Alexandria: for, there are no Springs, nor prouiſion of freſh water but what commeth from Nilus, which I ſay, hath in time paſt beene conducted fiue and twentie or thirtie miles to fill the Ciſternes vnder the Citie. For Alexandria is built vpon admirable marble Pillars all vaulted vnderneath, euery Houſe hauing his ſundry Ciſternes, the water formerly hauing come in; and now is vpon Camels backs in Leatherne Budgets brought thither: they fill them in the moneth of Auguſt, when Nilus is at the higheſt; and that water they drinke of all the yeere.

The ſame remayneth, though ſtanding, yet ſweet, one whole yeere: towards the end of the yeere it is heauier then at the firſt, cleare as Cryſtall, and not ſo vnwholſome to drinke, as when it is but few moneths old, ſo againe towards Auguſt they cleanſe their Ciſternes to take in freſh. There are ſtore of diuers Fruits: ſmall Fig-trees I haue ſeene not aboue a foot and halfe from the ground, hauing diuers ripe Figs vpon them. There are alſo ſome few Caſſia trees, Locuſts, and Capers; but very many about Cairo; all the whole Land full of Date trees. In Alexandria is Saint [i] Markes Church, a Church at this day of Chriſtians, and there is a noted place at the entrance of the ſaid Church, where Saint Marke preached. There are diuers Pillars of Name within and without the Citie. Within the walls is an old ruine of the Caſtle where Cleopatra was ſtung to death: there is alſo a ruine of a high Caſtle, called the Pharos, one of the ſeuen Wonders.

In the way as I paſſed, wee rode ouer the Plaine where Pharo pitched his Tent, the ſpaciouſneſſe whereof was admirable, being marked out to this day with foure great ſtones: eight dayes wee were going vp Nilus, and arriued at Bollacco, the Port Towne of Cairo; which is [k] a mile and a halfe from the Citie, from whence alſo they fetch all the water that ſerueth that great Citie.

Cairo is much bigger then Conſtantinople; many things notable are within and about this Citie, which others no doubt report, and are not beleeued; as are the twelue Store-houſes, where they ſay, Ioſeph kept the Corne the ſeuen deare Yeeres: ſome ſay, the ſame was reſerued in the Vaults of the Pyramides. I went twice to a place ten miles from Cairo, called the Matarea, being yet ſolemnely viſited by Chriſtians; it is where Ioſeph and Mary remayned with our Sauiour. There is a Spring of water, which, as they report, hath beene euer ſince; and likewiſe a plot in a Garden, where growe ſprigs that yeeld Balſam. The Papiſts come often to this Houſe a Maſſing, in great deuotion; and obſerue a place like a Cupboord, where they ſay our Sauiour was laid, and alike a great croſ-bodied wilde Fig-tree in the Garden, with the water wherein our Ladie waſhed our Sauiours clouts.

At Cairo I was ſhewed how, and of what ſorts of Serpents, the Moores doe make their Treacle: I did there alſo ſee both wilde and tame Gattie Pardie (Cats of Mountaine, as wee call them) little and great Monkies, Bragons, Muske Kats, Gaſels (which are a kind of Roe-bucke) bodies of Momia, and liue Crocodiles both of land and water, which haue beene offered at my gate to be ſold. Some I haue bought at ſome times for my recreation of moſt of theſe ſorts; for there I remayned eighteene moneths. Once I cauſed a [m] Villaine to rippe a Crocodile, which was of ſome two yards and a quarter long, the ſame was a female, which had in her panch aboue an hundred Egges, yellow like the yelkes of Egges, and iuſt of ſuch bigneſſe: out of the ſaid Crocodile he tooke a piece of thicke round skinne about the bigneſſe of a Cockes ſtone; wiſhed mee to lay the ſame vp vntill it was dry; which I did, and the dryer it was, the ſweeter it ſauo-

[g] At Rhodes I did fall ouer-boord: a Flemming taking mee by the hand, out of a little ſhel-boat, a Blackmoore Sculler, by meanes of the Turkes, and the helpe of God, I was taken againe into the Gally, after I had beene in the bottom of the Sea. The Beg came by as I was ſhifting, & laughingly ſaid, that now God had waſht me; becauſe I would not waſh in the Banias as we came by the way.

[h] There dwelt in Cairo, a Iew called Emanuel Seroluo; who euer much ioyed at all miſhap that he heard of. And did eate Swines fleſh: much giuen to mirth, and many times vſing to our houſe, I queſtioned him of his Religion, at a collation of Bacon; he ſaid, that hee was of all Religions: that if any entred Heauen, them hee would follow. I asked, why he did ſo reioyce at the loſſes and croſſes of other men. Why, Signor Giouanni, ſayth he, I loſt 60000. Chequins in good Gold at the third baſtinado vpon my feet, taken from me by the Deuill Baſha, after the deceaſe of my companion; and 60000. more, if I had ſo many, I would loſe, before I would ſuffer three ſuch other blows; and better then Gold it is to my heart, when I heare that others with my fortune take part.

[i] There lieth one Iohn, a Chriſtian, which the Cuſtes do make account of. Hee was long ſince carried about Cairo, vpon a Camels backe, bound with his armes ſpred abroad vpon a Croſſe of wood and on the top of his ſhoulders neere his necke, were two Lamps burning in his fleſh, yet for all this torment, he all the way cried, Chriſtos, Chriſtos, Chriſtos: ſum Chriſtiano, & moro Chriſtiano. This was to mee related by an old Cuſtie Prieſt, whoſe name was Comicus; and a Scriuan alſo hee was of the Cuſtome-houſe in Alexandria.

[k] There are euer Boyes ready with Aſſes to let for Cairo; ſo that, wee hire them, and preſently pay the hire, about a penie matter: and when we come to Cairo turne off our Aſſe without more care; for the Aſſe knowes his place and home: the like we doe when we ride to the Caſtle, to the Baſhaw and Cadieleſquiers, who doe thereabout inhabit.

[l] The land Crocodiles are about three quarters of a yard in length, ſcaly, and of a fiery Dragons colour. Some of the Moores doe make Purſſes of their skinnes, after they are dried and tawed.

[m] A poore fellow, a Chriſtian of Egypt, called Hawai.

red; no Ciuet had euer better ſmell: ſuch he ſaid was in all thoſe old female Crocodiles; yet being flayed, the fleſh before it be cold, ſauoreth badly. More I could ſay of Beaſts and Fowles of that place, but I will not talke how [n] they hatch thouſands of Chickens, and ſell them by meaſure; neither of the Doues that carrie Letters from Alexandria to Cairo; neither of the Eſtridge Henne, when ſhe layeth, how ſhee goeth round twice or thrice looking vp into the aire, and in a moment deliuereth her Egge: this I [o] did ſee in the middeſt of the Cadileſquiers yard.

There is a place called Iſbichia, adioyning to Cairo, ſome ſixe or eight acres in bigneſſe, as I take it; it hath in former times beene compaſſed with very faire houſes. The yeere that I was there, at the cutting in of Nilus (which was in Auguſt, 1586.) it is ouerflowen; wherein they fiſh the firſt two moneths or more, that the water is ſinking into the ground: then in the mudde they ſowe their Wheate, and reape it at three or foure moneths end; then groweth it with Graſſe, wherewith they feed their cattell three moneths: and the laſt ſeaſon of the yeere, vntill they againe let in Nilus, they a little labour it, by reaſon of making channels for the water; and ſowe and ſet Radice, Carrots, Turnep, Lettice, and ſuch like. They reſerue of the water for the laſt encreaſe, in a great Well which is built in the middeſt of the ſaid place. This ſhould bee admirable for ſuch as haue not ſeene nor heard of the like.

There is alſo a great Plaine of ſand, going to the Matarea, (this Matarea is the place where Mary and Ioſeph kept the Child Ieſus, when Herod ſought his life) wherein are many [p] pieces ſeeming to be of rotten Wood, as of wracked Ships or Boats, and taking them vp, they are very weighty Stones, which alſo is maruellous.

The eight and twentieth of Aprill, 1586. I went to ſee the Pyramides and Momia, being of three Gentlemen of Germanie entreated to accompanie them. The next day wee returned. Theſe Pyramides (one of the ſeuen Wonders) are diuers, but eſpecially two of a like bigneſſe, at the bottome each a thouſand paces about; one of them open, that in wee went with Waxecandles lighted, and vp to the top, where ſtandeth in a ſquare roome, a Tombe hewed out of blacke Marble or Iet, wherein they report, that Pharo ſhould haue beene buried, which purſued the Children of Iſrael: it is aboue a [q] mans length and vncouered: I ſay the Iet Coffin. The roofe of the ſaid Pyramides is of fiue ſtones, fiue and twenty foot long and fiue broad, each ſtone: the ſtones on each ſide are of admirable greatneſſe, and impoſſible to thinke how they were carried vp ſo high. It is alſo maruelous in the foundations, which are vpon mightie Pillars, they are well called one of the ſeuen Wonders. There is likewiſe a huge Figure [r] of a Head of ſtone, ſtanding vpright to the necke out of the ground.

The Momia, which is ſome fiue or ſixe miles beyond, are thouſands of imbalmed bodies; which were buried thouſands of yeeres paſt in a ſandy Caue; at which there ſeemeth to haue bin ſome Citie in times paſt: we were let downe by ropes, as into a Well, with Waxe candles burning in our hands, and ſo walked vpon the bodies of all ſorts and ſizes, great and ſmall, and ſome imbalmed in little earthen Pots, which neuer had forme: theſe are ſet at the feet of the greater bodies: they gaue no noyſome ſmell at all, but are like Pitch, being broken; for I broke of all the parts of the bodies to ſee how the fleſh was turned to drugge, and brought home diuers heads, hands, armes, and feet, for a ſhew: wee brought alſo 600. pounds for the Turkie Companie in Pieces; and brought into England in the Hercules: together with a whole [s] body: they are lapped in aboue an hundred double of cloth, which rotting and pilling off, you may ſee the skin, fleſh, fingers and nayles firme, onely altered blacke. One little hand I brought into England, to ſhew; and preſented it my brother [t], who gaue the ſame to a Doctor in Oxford.

The three and twentieth of September, the Emir Hagge, which is the Captaine of the Carauan, goeth out of Cairo towards Mecca, with very great ſhew; all the Citie comming out to ſee him and the rich couering which is carried with great pompe, to couer the Sepulchre of Mahumet their Prophet; all or moſt of the Rogues of Cairo (which they call Saints [u]) attending it out with great deuotion, and ſome goe with it to Medina; and they are the holieſt men of all, who haue beene twice or thrice there.

One graue old man, who had a long grey beard, I ſaw led with great ceremonie at that time out of the Citie, who had but one eye: and I likewiſe did ſee the ſame man returne backe againe with the aforeſaid Emire, and had left his other eye there, hauing had it pluckt out, after he had ſeene their Prophets Sepulchre, becauſe he would ſee no more ſinne. Many of the Turkes and Moores Women, and other, came about him, to bid him welcome, reioycing of his returne to Cairo; and they who had kiſſed his hand, arme, or garment, thought themſelues very happy.

Another of their Saints went about the Citie continually ſtarke naked, couering neither head, foot, nor any part of his foule fat body, no nor his moſt filthie foule circumciſed member: yet haue I ſeene diuers, as hee paſſed along, at diuers times (yea women) kiſſe his naked armes and hands. On a time at Bullaco, going ouer Nilus, he going in a paſſage Boat, in which I with others went ouer; a Moore in the companie ſeeing him come, layed him a piece of an old coat to ſit on; but when he felt it vnder him, he layd it aſide, and ſate on the bare boords: ſo hee euer did on the ſtones, earth, and ſands. This man was in Cairo before I came thither, and I know not how long after.

[o] And 100. others, Turkes, Moores, Iewes, and Chriſtians; wee ſtood a diſtance off, in a round ring: the Eſtridge; in the midſt did before vs all lay her Egg, and did preſently riſe vp and left her Egge; which was taken vp, and preſently carried to the Cadylesker, and deliuered to him in his Iudgement Hall: he ſitting on his banke of Iudgement.

[p] I brought, to Tripoly from Cairo, a Libber; of about a cubits length; for a muſter; but in time of my ſickneſſe, it was ſtolne from mee.

[q] The two Germane Gentlemen and my ſelfe, did in ſport ſpread our ſelues in that Tombe at that time.

[s] A whole body as it was taken vp from the other bodies: It is contra banda, to ſell of them, but by friendſhip, which William Shales had amongſt the Moores, he hauing their language as perfect as Engliſh, with words and money the Moors will be entreated to any thing. This body of Momia, after our arriuall was carried to the houſe of Sir Edward Osborne in Filpot lane in London, and there it was with the 600. pounds till they were ſold to the London Apothecaries.

[u] Theſe Saints, in certaine companies doe goe before the Veſture, in a round ring, leapingly lifting vp their legs, and wagging vp and downe their heads, crying, Holloh, Holloh, Holloh, Holloh; euen till their mouthes bee of a white fome, with breathing out onely, Holloh, Holloh, Holloh, &c. Foul-foole Saints.

This great fat lubberly beaſt would goe through the ſtreetes, and take off the ſtalles to eate, bread, little baked meates, and fruit and roots, and no bodie denied him, but counted them ſelues happie that he would ſo doe. He would not touch money of any ſort, a very kinde of ſcorched Bacon hogge, hee was as fat as he could goe. Other of thoſe Saints of Cairo goe but halfe naked, and ſome of them very leane Raſcals.

The ſaid Carauan of ſome foure or fiue thouſand Camels, meeteth with the Carauan of Aleppo, Damaſco, and Ieruſalem; ſo that when they are all ioyned, it is thought they paſſe aboue twentie thouſand, but I thinke not ſo.

The laſt day of May I departed from Cairo to Bullacco, the fourth of Iune arriued in Roſſetto, and the ſixt in Alexandria: From thence the tenth of Auguſt, 1586. beeing Tueſday, we had fraighted with Wine, Wood and other Prouiſion, a Barke called a Iermi, and purpoſed for Cairo by Sea. We ſet ſaile and came in ſight of the ruines of the Moſſolia, [l] this was a huge Sepulchre, built by a great Queene for her Husband, which is held to bee one of the Wonders; then to Bicbier, where are the ruines of a Towne, and is at this preſent a very ſtrong Caſtle planted with Braſſe Ordinance, ſo we arriued to the mouth of Roſſetto, where Nilus and the Sea meeteth together and mingleth, raiſing bankes of ſand vnder water. We miſſed [m] the channell and ſtrooke and broke our Barke, we were maruellouſly ſaued, holding faſt by the Barkes Boate; leaping into the ſame after a Turke had cut the ſhippes ſhrouds (my ſelfe, my companion William Shales, our Cooke and the ſaid Turke with my two Roe Buckes, our two Ianizaries, and our other Seruant a Chriſtian ſwamme to ſhoare, and by ſwimming many were ſaued, and ſome vpon plankes of the ſhips and chiſts, fiue only drowned: vpon the Iland, wet as we were, we repoſed badly all night. In the morning came to ſhoare diuers of the Turkes luggage, and a Sapetta of mine, wherein were our Bookes, and my Apparell recouered by a Moore an excellent Swimmer, and our Wine wee ſaued which boyed to the ſhoare ſome ſeuen Buts, all elſe whatſoeuer loſt. That morning came Barkes out of Roſſetto, to take in all that was recouered, ſo to Roſſetto wee came, houſed our Wine to be ſent after vs; and vp along Nilus to Cairo we went, where we arriued the eighteenth day.

The firſt of December I departed from Bullaco, and ſo vpon an arme of the Riuer to Damiatta, where I arriued the third day, recouered the goods which was ſent vs from Tripoly, and came thence the fift day in my company one [n] Engliſhman, and my Ianizarie, Drogman Iew, and other Attendants. That morning comming along by a little Iland, wee eſpied eight Sea-horſes, which were in bigneſſe like great Swine, rather bigger; headed like a Horſe, only their eares round like a Camels, they aroſe one by one as we came neere them; and plunged into the water. A Spahi, which is a Caualiere Turke, tooke his Bow and ſhot at them, did hit one vpon the head, and he ſnuffed vp out of the water, making a great noyſe. But we ſet eye no more vpon them.

Other matter [o] at Damiatta worth the noting, I remember not: only that there are great gardens, full of Adams figs, ſome doe ſo call them, theſe are alſo called [p] Mouſes; their growing is vpon a great huge ſtalke, no wood of bodie, but the fruit comming out amongſt the leaues in great bunches, ſome eighteene or twentie more, and ſeure on a ſhort ſtalke. Theſe figs are commonly fiue or ſixe inches long, ioyning cloſe to one another in the bunch, and formed like a little Cowcumber: when they are ripe they are blackiſh greene on the out-ſide, and within yellowiſh mellow, they eate like a kind of a ripe mellow Peare, but more luſhious and a little drier, not Sugarie ſweet. They peele eaſily, the leaues are of diuers lengthes and bigneſſe; the bigger ſort longer then a man, and about a yard in breadth: ſome leſſer and ſome bigger; this is very true.

There are about Cairo, a kind of tree called Pharohs figge trees, the hugeſt ſort of all others in Egypt, yet yeeld worſt fruit, and weighed worth nothing, neither for [q] firing nor other to my remembrance, though ſome of the trees as bigge, and more ſpreading then our Engliſh Okes; the figs or fruit thereof very ſmall ones and wild: euery yeere the poore Villaines climbe the trees, and with ſmall Kniues cut euery figge on the tops, I ſay a little round piece away when they are greene, ſo afterward becomming ripe, the poore people eateth of them. The Caſſia tree is alſo great and ſpreading, and very goodly to behold, thoſe long blacke Truncheons among the greene leaues, aloft the Timber, ſeemes all threddie, as it were, and corkie; but they doe lay the logs at length, mingled with ſtone for the ſtrengthening of their wals and buildings.

But of all in Egypt, the Palme tree is to be preferred, which yeeldeth Dates to eate alone, and in Cheeſes, as it were, and a kind of drinke that they call Sherbet, Sea-fatches, of the branches, ſtalkes, frames to lay their Beds vpon, and to incloſe bailes of Spices and other goods in ſtead of chiſts, Serons, and Baskets for many vſes, and Fannes to coole and to keepe off the flyes and duſt: Mats, Hoops, and coards of diuers ſorts, timber, ſtraw and ſtubble.

The Moores in thoſe Orchards of Date Trees, tye a Rope about the bodie of the Tree, and their middle, for it is all body from the Root to the toppe branches. (Knobbed by the meanes of the yeerely breaking off of the old branches, except the branches and fruit that ſpring at the top) they yeerely goe vp to pare and breake of the out-ſide branches. The fruit being young, ſpringeth out in a long codde, at opening of which, the Moores takes of the Male Seedes, and puts in-

[m] That iolly Turke who had ſaued himſelf in the Boat with vs. As we were going vp Nilus towards Cairo, talking of the danger which we had eſcaped, to me he ſaid, Affetum Affetrum Chelibie; twas wel done Gentleman, I heard you pray aloud, but you ſaith he, to William Shales oldie were halfe dead, why ſaid I, we did not pray as you did to Mahumet, but we payed to Chriſt, Guſel, Guſel, Wel, wel twas wel done (ſaith he) for euery man to pray aloud, as (bolloh) God hath taught him, this was a wel mannered, manly and ciuil Turke, who tooke our kindneſſe (for his paſſage) thankfully although he had ſuffred ſhipwrack in our company.

[o] Hippopotamie. Thoſe of Damiatta doe ſay, that theſe Sea-horſes doe for a ſeaſon keep thereabouts, and in the night time doe come in and eate of thoſe Mouſes, Lettice, & other hearbes.

[p] They are ordinarily ſold in Cairo, and we commonly did eat of them, as of other fruit after, or rather toward the end of our meales.

[q] Wood in Grand Cairo, is extraordinary deere, that and the Wine we ſpent ſtood vs in more then all our other Expences, and houſe rent, & Seruants wages.

to the Females; ſo it commeth to perfect fruit: otherwayes of themſelues, they ſay, they yeeld but wild Dates; this I haue beene told, and I doe beleeue it. I doe beleeue alſo that as they ſay, the Plague comming into ſome of their Orchards of Date Trees, that one infects another: and many doe dye of the Plague.

Nilus water I thinke alſo to be the profitableſt and wholſomeſt in the World, by being both Bread and Drinke to them: for Bread there could be none without it; no Rayne falling in Egypt to that purpoſe: yet I haue ſeene it rayne there, but it hath beene very little, as it were a ſmall ſhowre, at a time this Riuer doth couer the Land, and fatten it, whereby it fructifieth abundantly. It breedeth no manner of diſeaſe in the bodie, as diuers other waters doe: it hurteth not to drinke thereof either troubled or cleere; for being brought to our Houſes one mile and halfe or two miles off, it commeth in warmer then bloud, and troubled ſeeming ſandy; ſtanding all night in our Iarres of Earth, it is very cleere and coole in the morning, and ſo continueth in the Houſe be the weather neuer ſo hot.

We were there much troubled, * alike, with flyes and duſt: for the ſtreets of Cairo are all vnpaued, except on each ſide ſome two or three foot broad before their Houſes (the middle way about a foot lower then thoſe Pauements) and the Horſes, Camels, Aſſes, Mules, Men and Monſters, make ſuch a ſtirre paſſing to and fro, that what ſtranger ſoeuer commeth thither, in ſhort time will wiſh himſelfe further off. So much by the way.

* Moſt part of the yeere at the hotteſt time, wee haue a Seruant all the while we doe ſit at meate, to fan away the flyes from the diſhes. and our Trenchers.

Now I ſay, from Damiatta, I arriued againe in Cairo the thirteenth. The nineteenth, I went being inuited by the Venetian Conſul once more to the Pyramides, where wee were feaſted and returned home at night. The twentieth of March 1586. we ſet from Cairo being three Engliſh, and our Seruants, a Iew, a Turke, and Chriſtians, arriued in Roſſetto the three and twentieth; fraighted a Carmiſale the eighteenth of Aprill 1587. came to Bichier the eight and twentieth of Aprill. I went to Alexandria to ſee what newes the ſhip Tiger had brought, who arriued there two dayes before. Backe to our Carmiſale I returned the next day.

We ſet ſayle the ſeuenth of May, calmely coaſting all the Paleſtine Sea; and arriued in * Tripoly, the thirteenth being Saturday. The ſhip Hercules arriued the twelfth of Nouember, being Munday. Three dayes we were in a great ſtorme, and like to haue periſhed in the Bay. To Tripoly we came againe on the Friday. On Saturday came the Tobie of London. Friday the two and twentieth of December, wee departed from thence in company with the Tobie: wee went by Cyprus the foure and twentieth.

* In Tripoly ſtanding vpon the Tarras, Iohn Eldred, W. Shales, Nicholas Salter, Samuel Stone, W. Lawnder, Robert Gald and others, wee did at two ſundry times ſee two ſpouts: one of them appeared at firſt ſight little bigger then a great Conger, but comming from the cloudes downwards did, to our ſight appeare, watering as through a ſpout of Glaſſe, and fel with great force vpon the Sea in the Ports before vs: the other did ſo come downe and ſuckt vp the ſand on Tripoly banke, that to our eyes appeared in the Skies a cloud of ſand. All the whole time of ſhips being in the Port, I had a very great ſickneſſe, & departed in her for England, before I had thorowly recouered. Many deceaſed at that time in Tripoly, as I haue elſewhere at large related.

The three and twentieth of Ianuarie, we were aſhoare at an Iland by Candie, called Chriſtiana; The fiue and twentieth, we caſt Anchor at Caldarona. The eleuenth and twelfth of February, we paſſed betweene Sicilia and Malta. The thirteenth, to Pantalerea. The fourteenth, we were in the ſight of Cape Bon on Barbarie ſide. The fifteenth, we ſaw Goletta, a Rocke a little off of Carthage, The laſt of February we arriued in Argier, ſet ſaile from thence the ſecond of March. The ſixt, came in ſight of Cape de Gat. The ſeuenth, at night we paſſed by Gibberaltare, and ſo through the Streights; From Suta wee were eſpied, they ſhot twice; In the morning wee had Cape Sprat, about ſixe leagues a ſterne. The eleuenth, wee were as high as Cape Saint Vincent. The nineteenth, wee were euen with Cape Finiſter, from thence caped North North-weſt. The two and twentieth being Friday, we came to the Soundings, threw the Lead at night and found ninetie two fathome; then we caped North-eaſt and by Eaſt. The next day in the morning we found ſeuentie fathome, and at noone fiftie fiue.

Where we found ſuch a fall, that ſtaggerd the Mariners, Maſter and all.

The next day we fell with Portland, which was the firſt of England we had ſight of, then to the Downes, and ſo to Graueſend, from thence in a Wherrie to Black-wall, ſo by land to London, the nine and twentieth of March 1588.

His ſecond Voyage to Conſtantinople, with other his Trauells.

THe fourth of Iune being Saturday, I departed from London in company of Deputie Edgerton and others. Sunday we paſſed from Graueſend in a Hamborough Barke fraighted by the Ladie Drurie, who in the ſame was bound ouer with her two Daughters and diuers Attendants to Sir William Gouernour of Bargen vp Zone. Sir Henry Palmer in a ſhip of the Queenes guarded the Barke to Fluſhing, where wee arriued vpon Munday; to Middleborough with the Deputie and others went preſently, and two dayes after had a Court called one purpoſe to make free my ſelfe and my companion Thomas Calthorpe. Vpon Thurſday we departed thence and came to Fluſhing; went aboard a ſmall Barke that Euening. And in the Morning were at Sandwidge, lodged at Knowlton, Maſter Calthorpe being ſicke, yet departed in the morning, and were in London on Saturday night. Thus were wee eight dayes on this Voyage, and eight dayes after Thomas Calthorpe departed this life.

In September, 1590. we ſet ſayle in the Samaritan of Dartmouth, bound for the Eaſt India, victualled for thirteene moneths at the leaſt, and well manned; Iohn Dauis Captayne and Pilot, Edward Reue f Maſter. About the Maderas we were ouertaken with a great ſtorme; in which extremitie we loſt our Pinnaſſe conſort, but afterward met with an Engliſh ſhip who had ſaued our men. We had before that ſtorme been in diuers fights with Spaniards, and braued by a couple of French at vnawares; in that Voyage of one hundred and fiue men and boyes we loſt only one: a very hot fight we had with an Armado of Spaine, ſhee gaue vs ſeuenteene great ſhot ouer night, and in the morning fought ſome foure or fiue houres, ſhee ſhot downe our top-maſt, and thorow our ſailes and ſhips fortie times, yet no hurt to any of vs in perſon, except a poore fellow which was touched on the legge with a great ſtone ſhot, which ſhot reſted in the ſhip: the next day an ill Surgeon cut off the legge aboue the knee, in which torment of cutting, ſawing and ſearing, the poore Wretch died in his armes. This ioly Spaniard left vs; for if he had durſt he might haue laid vs aboord: with this fight and the extreame ſtorme we had before paſſed, our Samaritan was ſo craſie and leake, that all in generall tooke our turnes at the Pumpe, made foure or fiue hundred ſtrokes in a Glaſſe for many dayes and nights together. With the ſaid water we watered our fiſh, ſo were we forced to returne for England, where at Famouth we arriued in February, and ſo to Dartmouth, in that Voyage we went aſhoare only at Safia, Santa Cruz, and the Maderas, as I remember.

The thirteenth of September, 1591. I went out in the l Tobie, the firſt of October to Tilburie, then to Lee. The fourth to Gorend, wee departed thence the eighth, and arriued at Dartmouth, Munday the eleuenth. From thence we ſet ſaile the ſixteenth, being Saturday the laſt day of October, wee arriued at the Streights mouth. The eleuenth of Nouember, m we entred the Streights. The thirteenth and fourteenth, we ſaw Grand Maliga, Velis Maliga, Salabrica, Cape Negro. The fiue and twentieth, we came in ſight of Maritima, the next day of Sicilia and Malta. The twentieth of December, we arriued in Cephalania, there remayned ſix dayes, and came to Zant the thirtieth. The firſt of Ianuarie, we were at Patras in the Moria, thence the Tobie went the thirteenth to Zant for her lading. Thurſday the foure and twentieth of Febrarie, by land we departed Petras, that night to Poſtigia, Sunday Vaſilago and n Corinth. Tueſday at a Caſale, and ſo to Thebes, which they now call Tiua.

There grow abundance of Aniſeeds, it hath a moſt delectable ſituation, ſo doth Corinth ſtand moſt glorioully where we abode two dayes: wee alſo were in ſight of Athens. Then wee came to Negroponto, where we fraighted a little Turkiſh Veſſell, imbarked o our ſelues and goods, and on Friday departed for Conſtantinople, ſailed by Macedonia, but had no ſight of the Citie Theſſalonica, it is vp in the Gulfe now called Salonica, it was the chiefe Citie of Macedonian Philip, Father of Great Alexander: then we paſſed diuers Ilands in the Arches, as Taradano and others; were aſhoare at Troy, paſſed two great Caſtles, called the Dardanelli, and came to Galipoli, the ſeuenth of March. Vpon Palme Sunday we arriued in Conſtantinople, where then I remayned ſixe or ſeuen yeeres, in which time I had the view of many Animals, as Elephants, tame Lions, tame ſpotted Cats as big as little Maſtiffes, great and ſmall Deere, Ro-bucks tame; but theſe are brought out of Egypt. The admirableſt and faireſt beaſt that euer I ſaw, was a Iarraff, as tame as a Domeſticall Deere, and of a reddiſh Deere colour, white breſted and clouen footed; he was of a very great heigth, his fore-legges longer then the hinder, a very long necke, and headed like a Camell, except two ſtumps of horne on his head. This faireſt Animall was ſent out of Ethiopia, to this Great Turkes Father for a Preſent; two Turkes the keepers of him, would make him kneele, but not before any Chriſtian for any money. An Elephant that ſtood where this faire beaſt was, the keepers would make to ſtand with all his foure legges, his feet cloſe together vpon a round ſtone, and alike to vs to bend his fore-legges. Many things paſſed alſo worth the noting, as the depoſing and placing great Rulers, the contention of the Souldiers many times, once for their pay which the Spahies demanded in the Court, that the Vice-Royes were glad to hide themſelues in the Turkes Lodgings for feare of their liues; and moſt of the Houſhold Seruants of the meaner ſort, came out with Spits, Tongs, and other Kitchin tooles to end the fray, who cleered the Serraglio of the Spahies: at that broyle were ſlaine of all ſorts p ſome two hundred or more. Not long before they had the Beglerbegs head (whom the Great Turke eſpecially loued) giuen them, which they ſpurned about the Court.

Other ſtrange actions I could ſpeake of, and of their cruelties, but I am loth to wearie you with many particulars. Only the crueltie of that gouernment may be marked in this, for at this Great Turke his taking poſſeſſion of the Empire, were ſtrangled all his liuing Brethren, which were in number nineteene. They are brought one by one before him, and hee ſeeth them both f A little rich Reue, Dier, and others of Dartmouth were Owners, victualers, & voluntaries, were Randall Cotton, Io. Arundell, Thomas Moore, Edward Riuers, I my ſelfe and others, who all came home by croſſe and loſſe, for which our God Almighties mercies, his holy Name be euer magnified.

l A ſtrong and good old ſhip.

m Off and on 11. dayes at the mouth of the Streights of Gibeltaltar before wee could enter. The next yeere after a younger Maſter making more ſpeed, imbayed the ſhip & broke her, and drowned himſelfe with griefe and anger.

n Corinth where we lodged three nights by reaſon of ſome miſrule committed going betweene Vaſiligo and that place, by Ieffer our Chaouſe, R. Gold the Conſul and Will. Aldridge, I went before with the goods for feare of the worſt, and was in Corinth fiue houres before they came, Robert Gold came firſt into the Caruaſara with his Giamberlake all to bee flaſhed, then in came the Chaouſe cut in the arme a deepe wound, and Will. Aldridge with his forehead wounded; which in the ſaid William was dreſſed for the preſent by a Surgeon of Corinth, ſo with ſome ſatiſfaction to the Cadie, we were permitted to paſſe on our Voyage.

o Conſul R. Gold, W. Aldridge, Ioh. Sanderſon, our goods our Chaouſe, two other Seruants Turkes, and two or three Chriſtians, Greekes, our Attendants. Memorandum, that many Engliſhmen old and young, haue in my remembrance turned Turkes, as Beniamin Biſhop, George Butler Iohn Ambroſe, and others, but to turne Greeke I neuer heard of any except that Conſul at Petras, who did cauſe the Greeke Prieſts newly to baptize him, which they performed, and did name him Iohn Gold, being at the very inſtant demanded (by an honeſt Engliſhman) his meaning, his anſwere was, that as he had liued in credit amongſt thoſe Greekes, ſo his purpoſe was to be carried to his Graue with credit, a very notable Whoremaſter, one of the cutters of the Cabina in Turkie.

p This was at my being there in M. Harbornes time, before I was ſent to Caire.

e One Maſter Winckfield an ancient Engliſh Gentleman, being then in my company with others.

aliue and dead. I did ſee e them carried to buriall, the next day after their dead Father. That Great Turke Sultan Morat left alſo foure or fiue Women with Child, two of which brought Sonnes; who alſo at their Birth were depriued of life; the Daughters all liue. It was crediblie reported, that hee had buried thirtie Children in his Life time, and had at his Death ſeuen and twentie Daughters liuing, ſo it appeareth hee was Father of eightie one Children.

This new King Sultan Mahomet, went to the Warres in Hungarie againſt the Chriſtian Emperour, the firſt yeere of his Raigne, our Ambaſſadour worthy Edward Barton, attended him (with alſo an ancient Greeke, a Galatean called Signior Matteo, who had many yeeres beene Seruant and chiefe Interpreter for the Emperours Ambaſſadours,) to whom the Great Turke had before his going preſented two and twentie Chriſtians, which had layne in Priſon in Conſtantinople three yeeres: they were the late Ambaſſadours Houſhold, who had beene reſident there for the Chriſtian Emperour when the Peace was broken. The Great Turke alſo gaue Commandement that through his Countrey, their charges ſhould bee defrayed, and alike allowed foure Coaches and a Chaouſe, to conduct them to the Emperours Court. The chiefeſt cauſe of our Ambaſſadour his accompanying the Great Turke, was, to haue concluded a Peace betwixt thoſe two Great Potentates, as formerly hee had done, betweene the Poles and the Great Turke deceaſed; which had beene moſt eaſily performed, had it pleaſed her excellent Majeſtie ſo to haue commanded. The Ambaſſadours abſence was ſixe moneths, from Iuly to Ianuary, which ſpace I remayned his Deputie in Conſtantinople.

After the Ambaſſadour was fully reſolued to goe with the Grand Signior, ſome few dayes before his departure, hee went with me Iohn Sanderſon to Haſſan Baſſa, Eunuch, who gouerned the Citie of Conſtantinople in the Great Turkes abſence. And taking his leaue of the ſayd Haſſan Baſſa Vice-roy, hee recommended mee vnto him, as his Deputie; praying him ſo to reſpect me in his abſence. The Vizier promiſed all kinde reſpect and regard of mee; ſaying, Volo volo hoſh Geduet, Welcome welcome, Hoſh Geldie, I will, I will, Elchee Ambaſſiater, and ſo I kiſt his Hand, and then the Ambaſſadour kiſt his hand, and wee departed his preſence.

g Cloth of Gold. Veluet, Scarlet and Purple cloth.

When the Great Turke went out of the Citie towards the warres, it was with wonderfull great ſolemnitie and notable order, too long to deſcribe particularly; but I remember a great number of Dogs led afore him well manned, and in their beſt g Apparell; his Hawkes by Horſemen alſo carryed in great number. Tame Lyons and Elephants, with other Beaſts of many ſorts, but eſpecially, the Iarraff before ſpoken of, being Prince of all the Beaſts, was led by three chaynes of three ſundry men ſtalking before him. For it is the cuſtome, that the Great Turke in perſon going on Warfare, moſt or all in generall, the chiefe Men and Beaſts, attend him out of the Citie: and at his returne, it is lawfull for all their Women both of high and low degree, meane and great, to meet him without the Walls: at other times the Women of any account or credit, neuer come in multitudes among Men. By a Letter dated in October 1596. the Ambaſſadour aduiſed me of all paſſed that imported the taking of the Citie Agria, and after ouerthrow of the Chriſtians Campe. Copie of which Letter I ſent for England, to the Right Honourable her Majeſties chiefe Secretarie Sir Robert Cecill.

See Sup. l. 8.

The Turke returned with great Triumph, entred at Adrianople Gate, three or foure miles without which Gate, and ſo along within the Citie to the Gate of the Serraglio, which is at leaſt foure or fiue miles further, all on both ſides the way as hee ſhould paſſe through, the people his Subjects (Turkes, Iewes, and Chriſtians) held in length whole peeces of cloath of Gold, Veluet, Sattin and Damaske, of all ſorts and colours, and for three dayes together Feaſting, keeping open Shops and Houſes day and night, in Ioy of his Victories and ſafe Returne. Two or three miles before his entrance, I did meete our Ambaſſadour with a freſh Horſe, and about twelue or thirteene attendants: the Ambaſſadour by Ebrehim Baſſa, the Vice-royes appointment, did ſtay in the way to take his leaue of the Grand Signior, which was thus performed: Sultan Mahomet made a ſtand with his Horſe, and vpon Horſebacke, Hee, and the Ambaſſadour ſaluted, hee ſate ſtill, our Ambaſſadour did alight and kiſt his Hand; then got vpon his Horſe, hee ſaluted; the Great Turke re-ſaluted him, ſaluted me alſo, and all our Ambaſſadours trayne, and ſo turned his Horſe: and ouer the Fields we came to the Vines of Pera, before he was come into Conſtantinople.

For the whole full and fine diſcourſe of the Citie Conſtantinople, I referre to a little Pamphlet that was preſented mee by a Doctor Iew Poet, which ſayd Diſcourſe hee gaue me in Italian, I immediatly tranſlated the ſame into Engliſh, the ſeuenteenth and eighteenth of Auguſt, 1594. I gaue it at that time both in Italian and Engliſh to a friend Maſter Edward Riuers, ſince which, the Copies haue beene diſperſed, and it may bee ſome fantaſticall will attribute it to himſelfe both Author and tranſlater. For fiue yeeres paſt, one in England required it of mee, but I had left the Copie amongſt my papers at Conſtantinople, where at my laſt beeing I found that ſcribled originall in Engliſh, but the Italian was common amongſt them, it hath beginning on this manner. Pauſſania a Captayne of the Lacedimonians, &c. I haue written it againe in the end of this Diſcourſe, and alike followeth a true Relation of my three Moneths trauell, from Conſtantinople to the Holy Land, and backe againe to Tripoli Sirria, ouer the higheſt Mount of Libanon. Many worthy things paſſed in this my long abode at Conſtantinople. Amongſt other I note the extraordinarie eſteeme was had of the Ambaſſadour afore named, with them all in generall, both Chriſtians, Turkes, and Iewes. By meanes chiefly of the Turkes Mothers fauour, and ſome money: hee made and diſplaced both Princes and Patriarches, befriended Vice-royes, and preferred the ſuites of Cadies who are their chiefe Prieſts and ſpirituall Iuſtices. The Hoggie, a very comely, graue and wiſe Turke, who was Sultan Mahomets Schoole-maſter, (and I may well ſay Counſeller) was a very true friend, and an aſſiſter of Maſter Barton, in all his buſineſſe with the Grand Signior, and had a Catholike Roman Chriſtian Corrupter about him, a Conſull, by name Paulo Mariani, who was hanged by the necke in his Conſuls Robes at Grand Cairo, vnder the chiefe Gate of the Citie; vpon whom the Moores in the morning had great pitie. For Monſieur de Brenis the French Ambaſſadour, had procured the Execution to bee performed in the night, to preuent the Moores who euer fauoured Mallem Paulo (Maſter Paul) as they commonly called him.

From Conſtantinople, I departed the three and twentieth of September, 1597. hauing in my time there remayning, beene at diuers notableſt places within the Citie, and on all the confines of the ſame, as when I accompanied the Ambaſſadour towards the Warres, rid on the way with him ſome thirtie or fortie miles. And alike was often at the Blacke Sea, which is eighteene or twentie miles off. At the entrance of the ſaid Sea, are remayning ruines of the old Caſtles Seſtus and Abidus; but the Schollers of our Age affirme, thoſe neere Troy ruines, to bee they, time hauing eaten out the ruines; and ſo the true remembrance of the other too at the very mouth of the Blacke Sea, though I was ſhewed a marke of a peece of a Rocke vpon Aſia ſide, where the Louer was Drowned in ſwimming from Europe ſide to his beloued. And then I ſay, in Anno 1585. was there to bee ſeene on each ſide, ſome very old appearance of Caſtles foundation walls, though in a kinde as it were couered with Earth and Graſſe, which remembreth to vs the Storie of Hero and Leander. And other two great Caſtles at halfe way, one eſteemed the chiefe Priſon in Turkie, except the ſeuen Towers within the Citie wall. I was alſo at Colcos Ile, and other Ilands thereabout. And alike diuers times wee went ouer into Aſia to Calcedon, &c. At Calcedon now called Scutari [e], my ſelfe and attendants being fiue, well Horſed and a ſumpter Horſe, there wee remayned two dayes, at Curtall one, Gibs one, Dill one, Giourkie one, Iſnike two, Gini Shar two, Auc Biuke one, Boſuke one, Eſchi Sheer one, Sidie Batal one, Baiat one, Buluadin two, Auke Shar fiue, Ilgin two, Guarchi one, Caſal one, Conia (Iconiam where Barnabas and Paul preached) I remayned two dayes, Siml one, Caribonar one, Regli one, Vluckiſlia one, Cadengighen one, Sareſhik one, Caſale di Turkie one, Adina two, Miſſis, Tharſo one, where Paul was borne; Court Colacke one, Bellan one, Curdi Caſall one, Iuni one, to Alepo one. Dayes foure and fortie, in companie of Court Vizeir, who went to Gouerne in Alepo, where I remayned ſome three moneths. The one and twentieth of Februarie, wee were in Antiochia, where wee beheld an admirable Wall, edging vp vpon the Mountayne hauing very many Turrets, ſome ſay as many as there are dayes in the yeere, the Riuer Orantes is at the bottome of this Hill, and runneth cloſe along the nether part of the Citie wall. Entring in at one of the by gates, there is a place of excellent Spring water, where many were Baptiſed that became Chriſtians at the [f] Apoſtles Preaching.

The fourteenth, wee came to Alexandretta, there are the ruines of an old Citie built by Great Alexander, the Turkes call it Scandarone.

The three and twentieth, wee departed thence in a great Venetian Ship called Naui Ragazoxa, and arriued in Ciprus the ſixe and twentieth of the ſaid February. At my being in Ciprus, I went to the chiefe Cities, Nicoſia which is in the middeſt of the Iland, and Famaguſta a very ſtrong Citie and Port for their Gallies: before a Towne called Larnica, we rode with our Ship. At the Salinos *, there is the Church that Lazarus built, and likewiſe the Greekes ſay, that the Mother of Conſtantine lyeth buried in a Mountayne in that Iland, which is called Santa Elena.

The tenth of Aprill, 1598. wee ſet ſayle from Ciprus in the ſayd Ship, and arriued in Venice the two and twentieth of the ſame.

The foure and twentieth of May, I departed from Venice, to Traſino Caſtle, Franco, Siſmon, Grinio, Lienico, Trent, Alauis, Enia, Boldax, Cluſa, Maols, Luke es Bruke, Sefield, Patakerk, Ambrega, Sanga, Lansberg, Auguſta, now called Osburge, Danower, Fetling, Dinkſelſpill, Perte, Herbtſhouſon, Martigall, Piſſiche, Miltiburgh, Riuer of Maine, Valſtat, Oſtum, Pobohouſon, Franckford, Ments, Elfni, an Almes houſe Eruels. Miſtorne a little Caſtle vpon a Rocke, where at this day they report that the Biſhop of Ments was deuoured of Rats, for hoording vp Corne when the Poore ſtarued with want thereof. Snikwere, Geſinan, Roderſen, Bubard, Andernough, Bon, Cullen the thirteenth of Iune, in their chiefe Church they reſerue a Monument of the [g] Three Kings, ſo much talked on. Sons, Nues, Druſelthorp, Keſerſwert, Ruer Wert, Berk, Weſell, Emrick, Sniks Sconce, Nemingham, Tele, Wercam, Kercam, Dort, Viana, Camſire, Middleborough, Fluſhing. The eight and twentieth, from thence imbarked in a man of Warre a Fluſhinger, who ſet vs aſhoare in the Downes the nine and twentieth of Iune, the ſame day arriued in England, and ſo from Sandwich to London by Land.

[g] There they are within a double Grate beyond the quier behind a battlement, where alſo I did ſee the Picture of Chriſt drawne naked, ſtripped ſo artificially and iuſt the bigneſſe of a man, that it made mee to weepe. Our Lady was more lower in the Church, an Image in a blacke ſattin Gowne.

§. III.

The third Voyage of Maſter IOHN SANDERSON to Conſtantinople.

From London to Graueſend, the eleuenth of Februarie, 1598. The fourteenth, tooke ſhipping in the Hector, lay at Tilburie two dayes. To the Downes the ſeuenteenth, lay there eight dayes, came to Dartmouth the third of March, rid there foure dayes, and came to Plimouth the eighth. Set ſayle three or foure dayes after, and in May, 1599. arriued in Alexandretta, hauing touched at Argier and Zant by the way. In the ſayd moneth of May wee departed, coaſted all along the North-ſide of Ciprus, paſſed cloſe by the ſeuen Capes, came and caſt Anchor at Roades, I went alſo at this time aſhoare there. Thence wee went and came with the Ship a ground at Samos, the Iland where Eſop was borne; ſo ſayled by Sio and Metelin; were alſo a ground about Cape Ianeſarie in ſome danger, and with much adoe wee came off at laſt, pulling the Ship off with our Boate and skiffe at the ſterne, by ſtrength and labour of the Marriners. Hauing doubled that Cape, I tooke a ſmall Barke and went to Galipoli, and thence to Conſtantinople, where the Hector arriued about the fifth of September. At her entrance the Port in tryumph diſcharging the Ordnance, they loſt a Man who was parted in the middle, being buſie about cleanſing a Peece in the fore-caſtle. At this my third and laſt being in Conſtantinople, of one of the Coens, an ancient and very learned Iew Prieſt, I did with much intreatie and my money, get a very old Booke: it was the fiue Bookes of Moſes in foure Languages. I preſented it to my Brother, Doctor Sanderſon, hee lent it Doctor Barlow, hee to Doctor Andrewes: They vſed it in their Tranſlation at Cambridge, and did returne it to Biſhop Barlow. The Biſhop dyed, and I thinke one Iohnſon his Siſters ſonne hath it, who as I heard had the reſidue of the Biſhops bookes.

I went to viſite the Sepulcher of that fore-named Maſter Edward Barton late Ambaſſadour, who lyeth Interred (according to his alwayes deſire) vnder an Oliue Tree, before the entrance into the Monaſterie on the top of Calcos Ile; a Stone of white Marble is layd vpon him, Letters thereon engrauen of his Title and Deceaſe. Other places I went to alſo, which I had beene at in former times. And ſome ſtrange actions, other then formerly the like had happened in their moſt cruell Executions, I note not.

Yet can I not let paſſe to relate, that a Iewiſh woman of the greateſt credit and wealth in Conſtantinople, was brought out of her Houſe and ſtabbed to Death in the Vice-royes yard, thence by a window in the Serraglio wall where the Grand Signior, Sultan Mahomet ſtood to ſee; ſhee was drawne with Ropes to the publikeſt place in the Citie, and there (betweene a Pyramed piller erected by Theodoſius, and the Braſen tripled Serpent) layd for the Dogges to eate, who did deuoure her all ſaue her bones, ſinewes of her legges, and ſoales of her feet. Her head [a] had been carryed vpon a pike through the Citie, and alike her ſhamefull part; alſo many ſmall peeces of her Fleſh, which the Turkes Ianizaries and others carried about tyed in a little Pack-thred, ſhewing to the Iewes and others, and in deriſion ſayd, Behold the Whoores fleſh; one ſlice of her I did ſo ſee paſſe by our doore in Galata. Her [b] eldeſt Sonne the next day in like manner cruelly ſtabbed and murthered in the ſayd Vice-royes court; dragged thence and layd by his Mother, but was ſo fat and ranke that the Dogges would not ſeaze vpon him, or elſe they were ſatiate with the Womans fleſh the day before, who was a ſhort fat trubkin. So together with his Mothers bones the next day was this body burned in that place. Her ſecond Sonne became Turke to ſaue his life; ſo would his dead Brother, if hee could haue had the fauour. The third Sonne a young youth, their wrath being appeaſed, they permitted to liue. This was an act of the Spahies in ſpite of the Great Turkes Mother; for by the hands of this Iew woman ſhee tooke all her Bribes, and her Sonnes were chiefe Cuſtomers of Conſtantinople; who tooke all the gainefull buſineſſe into their owne hands, doing what they liſted. The Mother and Children were worth Millions, which all went into the Great Turkes Cofers. After this their Mala Paſqua, for it was at their time of Paſſeouer, the chiefeſt Feaſt of the Iewes.

[a] Maſter Henry Lillo, the Ambaſſadour and my ſelfe went of purpoſe and thus did ſee theſe two, Mother and Sonne.

[b] He was a goodly Gentleman Iew, ſome few dayes before, I had ſhewed him our Ship, and had talked with him at his Mothers houſe, and Maſter Paul Pinder and my ſelfe, were with his Mother, to whom ſhee deliuered for the Ambaſſadour, to ſend the Queene a Stalana, of Rabines from the Sultana, and another of Diamonds from her ſelfe, with teares in her eyes I well remember.

After this, the Spahies had a great fling at the Head of the Capie Agha, who was the Great Turkes chiefe Seruant and Fauourite, but by meanes partly of the Admirall Sigallogli, alias Sinan Baſſa, Vizerr, and fiftie thouſand Duckets of money amongſt them, they were for that time pacified. But ſince my comming away it is written mee, that they haue got his Head and the Heads of one two or three more, and forced the Grand Signior to come foorth and ſee the Execution done. I thinke not good heere as I ſaid before, to note their Crueltie in ſundrie ſorts of Executions, yet ſome I cannot let paſſe. Their vſuall puniſhment for Adulterous women, is binding in a Sacke and ſo throw them into the Sea. Seuen I haue ſeene ſo vſed one Morning, in the time that the Eunuch Haſſan Baſſa gouerned Conſtantinople, when the Great Turke was at the Warres. But for ſuch crueltie and other actions, the [c] Queene Mother got his Head at her Sonnes returne.

[c] The Queene Mother, with the Grand Sultana, and other of the Grand Signiors women, walking in their Serraglio, eſpyed a number of Boates vpon the Riuer hurrying together. The Queene Mother ſent to enquire of the matter; who was told that the Vizir did Iuſtice vpon certaine Chabies, that is Whoores. Shee taking diſpleaſure ſent word, and aduiſed the Eunuch Baſſa, that her Sonne had left him to Gouerne the Citie, and not to deuoure the Women; commanding him to looke well to the other buſineſſe, and not to meddle any more with the Women, till his Maſters returne.

The commoneſt Death for men is Gaunſhing; which is, to be ſtripped into their Linnen breeches, with their hands & feet bound all foure together at their backs, and ſo drawne vp with a rope by a pullie vpon the Gallowes, and let fall vpon a great Iron hooke faſtned to a lower croſſe Barre of the Gallowes, moſt commonly lighting vpon their flanke and ſo through their thigh, there they hang ſometimes talking a day or two together, but if they bee Gaunched through the belly and backe, then are they dead in two or three houres. Thus they vſe their common Theeues at Conſtantinople. In Cairo and other parts, they doe Stake them, a moſt cruell Death, yet ſpeedie or lingring as they liſt to execute. But Hanging by the necke they vſe in a fauour to any offender who meriteth Death, yet ſometimes cutting downe for Dogges to eate. They ſtrangle with a Bow-ſtring their Brethren, Baſſaes and other Great men. But for their Religious men falſe Iudges, their Law is to paſh them all to peeces in a ſtone Morter with woodden Mallets. And for their falſe Witneſſes, they are ſet vpon an Aſſe, with their faces towards the tayle which they hold in their hands, and the Inwards of a Bullocke, powred vpon and bound about them, and ſo ride they through the Citie. And for any found Drunke in the time of their Ramaſan (which is a Faſt they haue one whole Moone in the yeere) their Law is, to melt a Ladle full of Lead and powre it downe their throats; (Their manner of Faſt, is to eate nor drinke any thing, neither Water nor other, vntill they ſee a Starre appeare in the Euening, and then they may begin and eate till Morning.) Any chiefe Officer belonging to their Artilerie if hee bee a Thiefe, is bound to the mouth of a braſſe Piece and ſo ſhot into the Sea; thus I ſaw one vſed [d] at Tophana. And alike in my time, a Iamoglaine, found Drunke in their Faſt, was vſed as I haue reported. I did ſee vpon the Gaunch Vſſine Baſſa, the Traytor that firſt roſe in Aſia; but hee for a more crueltie had from each ſhoulder bone a muskell taken out, in preſence of the Bench of Vizeirs, the Great Turke alſo looking out at a Lattice ouer their heads. By reaſon of that torment he died preſently vpon the Gaunch, being led from the Serraglio halfe a mile or more before hee was put thereon [e]. Not long before that, a Chriſtian Tributarie Prince called Stephano Viuoyda, being depoſed of the Great Turke, after hee had enioyed the Princedome a yeere; by malice of ſome Great men who preuayled with the Grand Signior, was brought to the Gaunch, ledde of the Buſtangi Baſſi.

This Buſtangi Baſſi is a man of account about the Turke, and the great, but not the common Executioner (for the Turke imployes him in ſtrangling [f] Vice-royes; throwing by night rebellious Souldiers into the Sea, and ſuch like. Chiefe Gardner is his Office, hauing thouſands Iamoglans and their Gouernours at his command: hee keepeth the Caiks, and alwayes ſteereth when the Great Turke goeth vpon the water, whoſe Caikes are moſt rich and beautifull to behold, the poope all Iuorie, Ebonie, or Sea-horſe teeth, mother of Pearle and Gold, ſet with all manner of precious Stones. To row him hee hath eightie choſen men, two and two at an Oare, twentie Oares on a ſide, all in white Shirts and red Caps, coloured Cloath ſhackſhers Breeches, Cordiuan leather coloured ſhooes, who often in their rowing barke like [g] Dogges; the reaſon I know not, except it bee when they heare him talke (to the Buſtangi Baſſi who ſits at the rudder) that they dare not hearken to his talke. His Court of Dwarfes and Dumme men, alwayes follow (except the very principall who are with him) in another Caike; and many times alſo his Women.

Now to the Prince I ſpoke of; this poore Prince intreated for life at the place of Execution. The Buſtangi Baſſi told him, that if hee would become Turke, hee ſhould ſee what hee would doe for him. Whereupon hee turned, and vttered to ſuch effect the words [h]; being content rather then dye, to bee Turke; which they call Muſſulman. Which done, this cruell Dog told him, that hee was glad hee would dye in the right Beliefe, and therefore, whereas hee ſhould haue beene Gaunched, now he ſhall bee but Hanged by the necke. Whereat the poore ſoule preſently repented, and cryed often and aloud vpon CHRIST, and bad all witneſſe that hee dyed a Chriſtian.

Here I leaue them to their cruelty. Now, the fourteenth of May, 1601. I departed from Sidon, in the ſhip Mermaid, with my Voyage to Damaſcus, and the holy Land, and ſo ouer the higheſt Mount of Libanus, to Tripoly; being iuſt three moneths. I leaue to bee ſeene in that my diſcourſe: At Tripoly for paſſage I remayned vntill the ſixteenth of Februarie; in which time our people of the Troian paſſed ſome trouble in that bad gouerned place. Our men of the ſhip Troian, were moſt of them impriſoned in Tripoly Iayle the Caſtle; and fiue were in great hazard to haue beene executed: for the Emiers people accuſed them to haue robbed a Caramiſall of the Emers, of Sope and other merchandiſe: but as God would haue it, the Cadie of Tripoly being a Green-head, that is one (a holy man) of the Parentage of Mahomet their Prophet: who came Paſſenger with me to Sidon (in the Mermaid) from Conſtantinople, he and his hauing beene well entreated in that Voyage, together with my very often and earneſt ſolicitation, did to his vtmoſt power fauour our people ſo effectually, that euery one of them were freed, without further harme, from thoſe falſe accuſing Moores.

The tenth day, the ſhip Trogian was caſt away vpon the Rockes in the Road of Tripoly by boyſterous billowes, that broke her anchors, and ſhou'd her on the ſhoare. The ſixteenth I departed in the Edward Bonauenture, came to Scandaron the nineteenth; from thence the four-[d] Tophana, is their Artillerie yard, where is a great Wharfe to take Boate at, it is betweene Raphaghmak and Garlata.

[e] To ſee this, Maſter Lillo the Ambaſſadour, and my ſelfe, went purpoſely and did ſee him on the Gaunch, being ſtarke dead.

[f] Hee ſtrangled Ferrat Baſſa, in the ſeuen Towers, firſt, after hee had wakened the Baſſa, he ſhewed a little teſtimony of his authoritie, then turnes the wrong ſide of the Carpet vpwards, ſo the Baſſa ſayes his Salah, then with a boxe on the eare hee aſtoniſhes him, and the Iemoglans come in preſently and ſtrangle him, the Buſtangi Baſſi found but fiftie Chequins in his pocket, and ſo thence departed.

[g] I haue often heard them vpon the water, now and then betweene times, many of them ſay, Bough, boughwohe, bough, bough, boughwohe, &c. and then pull ſome few ſtrokes, and cut againe.

teenth of May, 1602. to Limiſo in Ciprus, the ſeuen and twentieth; the one and thirtieth wee parlied with two great Ships Spaniards, and two Frigots; they durſt not fight, but ſaid they were of Malta. The ſeuenth of Iune, we eſpied ſeuen Gallies, which we imagined to be Spaniards bound for Scandaron: now, we were as high as the ſeuen Capes the eighth, and met thereabouts the Samuel. The tenth, wee paſſed by Rhodes: Scarpanto, the eleuenth: Candia, the twelfth: Cape Sapientia in the Moria, the fiue and twentieth: Stranalia an Iland, the ſixth of Iuly: at Zant the eighth wee arriued: from thence the fifth of Auguſt in the Cherubin, to Corfu the fourteenth: from thence the ſixe and twentieth in Iſtria: the one and thirtieth Ottrenta: the ſeuenth of September, Ronina, Ptrenſa, Citta noua, an old walled Towne at the end of the Gulfe: the eighth of September in Venice.

The fifteenth, I departed to Caſtle Franco, Carpanet, Grenio, Burgo, Riuer Trent, Neus, Nimarke, paſſed Ladiſe the Riuer, Bulſano, Cluſa, Sterching, Matara, Churla, Riuer Tine, Mitebant, Ambergam, Sandar, Stadell, Riuer Ligh, Oſburgh, alias Auguſta, Suſmerhauſen, Leibham, Olme, Getſingen, Blochenu, Stuchert, Dieſen brunt, Almatingen, Ratſtat, Litſtinhal, Stroſburge, Galſenburch, Cauſman, Blanhenburch, Luncuil, Portadi, Saint Nicolo-Nantes, Tull, Saint Tobin, Barloducke, Tanhuer, Ruſſemaſon, Salon, Fonte, Effael, Momil, Butchier, Fuerti, Sant Giouan, Marne, Meaw, Paris. Dico Paris the nineteenth of October. From Paris to Saint Denis, to Puntoys, the Riuer Alnais. The twentieth, to Maine, Equie. The one and twentieth, to Roan, to Deepe, the two and twentieth. The three and twentieth, from thence in the Vantgard of the Queenes. The foure and twentieth, to Douer; from thence at eleuen a clocke in the night. In London the fiue and twentieth being Monday, at foure a clocke in the after-noone. For all which the Almightie God bee magnified.

A Diſcourſe of the moſt notable things of the famous Citie Conſtantinople: both in ancient and late time.

Read hereof Strabo lib. 7.

PAuſania a Captaine of the Lacedemonians, wandring through the world with his people, ſeeking where he might ſettle himſelfe, of the Oracle of Apollo in Delfos it was anſwered, that they ſhould make their abode ouer againſt the blinde, vnderſtanding thereby the Magares, who had not the fore-ſight to take ſo faire a ſituation as they had in Europe, fertile and good; but built in Aſia Calcedonia, that now is called Scutari; heere then ſtayed Pauſania with his Calcedonians, 663. yeeres before the comming of Chriſt. (Tullio Hoſtillio remayning in Rome) building at that time a little Citie, which hee named Bizantio; whether it were as ſome ſay, for the two Seas it hath, or according to others, of a Captaine ſo named. In the beginning, this was a very ſmall thing, as others of ſmall time were wont to be, ſubiect once to the Lacedemonians, founders thereof; and another time to the Athenians: it flouriſhed in ſhort time with the felicitie of the Countrey in ſuch ſort, that Philip King of Macedon, Father of Alexander the Great, being in loue with her beauty and riches, reſolued with himſelfe to conquere the ſame: laying ſiege thereto many dayes, and could not take it: notwithſtanding that hee enterpriſed it with a great and choſen Hoaſt; with whom encountred Leon Sophiſta, a man of Bizantio, who ſaid vnto him: Tell mee, Philip, what iniurie haſt thou receiued of Bizantio, that in ſuch fury thou art moued to warre againſt it? I haue not (anſwered Philip) of thy Citie had any iniurie that prouoketh mee, but becauſe it is the faireſt Citie of Thracia, being enamoured therewith, moued me to conquere it. Thoſe that be in loue (anſwered Leon) and would of their Beloued bee loued, with ſweet Muſike, Gifts, and ſuch like, doe ſeeke to obtayne; and not with their Armies and Warre to damnifie them. Philip in concluſion departed without taking it.

The ſame went forward proſperouſly, and in proceſſe of time was augmented with buildings and riches, in ſuch ſort, that then it paſſed all the Cities of Aſia, and in fertilitie was equall to the faireſt of Europe. Amongſt the beautifulleſt things, it had goodly to be ſeene, and moſt worthie to be praiſed were the walls, the ſtones whereof they brought from Mileſio, not any of which were carued or grauen, but ſawed in manner of plankes. This cauſed that the walls being of many ſtones, notwithſtanding appeared to be but one. And the Citie increaſed vntill the time of Seuero the Emperour, that hauing poſſeſſion thereof the Tyrant Peſenio (the Blackmoore his mortall enemie) the ſayd Emperour was moued to goe and beſiege it: hee kept ſiege thereto three yeeres, in the end they were conſtrayned through hunger to render to the diſcretion of the Romanes, which was ſuch, that after they had ſlayne all the Men of warre and Magiſtrates, they ruinated the famous walls from the top to the bottome.

Conſtantine the Great.

It remayned in this calamitie vntill the yeere 315: that Conſtantine the Emperour (ſurnamed, the Great) was minded to tranſport the Seat of the Empire of Rome to the Eaſt, to the end that with the more facilitie he might bridle the vntamed Perſians and Parthians, that hourely ly rebelled: and for that Rome was ſo farre off, the Emperours could not come ſo ſpeedily, to force them to order. After they had ſearched diuers places to this effect, and in ſome began to build: they were ſtill diſwaded by dreames, vntill in the end they came to Calcedonia (which as before I haue ſaid is Scntary) who hauing now choſen and deſigned the place, certaine Egles (as writeth Zonora a Greeke Author) flying thereabout tooke in their bills pieces of the wood of the builders, and houering about the Streight of Helliſpont: they let them fall neere to the ruinated Bizantio, of the which Conſtantine being aduiſed tranſlated the builders from Calcedonia: and taking it tobe the will of the Diuine power, and for good lucke, well liking alſo the maruellous ſituation, hee compaſſed and encloſed in one circuit ſeuen moſt pleaſant Hills, imitating Rome which hath ſo many) building a wall about, of length, thickneſſe, and faireneſſe, one of the famouſeſt in the world, with all things needfull, adorned and furniſhed like vnto a Fortreſſe; the forme thereof Triangle, two parts waſhed on with the Sea, and the other compaſſed with Land.

Seuen Hils.

Hee erected alſo many high Towers, built many ſumptuous Temples, and adorned it with infinite other magnificall buildings publike and priuate, commanding by publike Edict all Princes of the Empire, that euery one ſhould build either Palace, or ſome ſumptuous and ſplendent other Monument, after which for the greater adornment, hee cauſed to bee brought from Rome diuers memorable Antiquities, and amongſt the reſt the moſt famous Palladius of old Troy, which hee cauſed to be ſet in an open place that was called Placote, and the high Piller of Porſido (which is a kinde of hard Stone) in the ſame place was erected. At the ſide whereof was planted an Image of Braſſe in likeneſſe of Apollo, which was of vnmeaſurable greatneſſe, in whoſe ſtead hee would haue his name written thereon. So greatly was increaſed the adornment and beautie therof, that not without merit it might haue beene called another Rome. The old Writers which ſaw it in the flower, rather Iudged it a dwelling for the Gods, then an habitation for earthly Emperours.

Conſtantine named it New Rome, but the peoples voyce preuayled, which called it alwayes after the Emperors name Conſtantinople, the which his Succeſſors daily adorned, and amongſt the ſightlieſt Ornaments, was the moſt proud Palace of the pulike Librarie, which contayned aboue 120000. choſen written Bookes. In the middeſt of which Librarie, there was the Guts of a Dragon in length aboue one hundred and twentie foote, vpon them written in Letters of Gold Homers Iliads. There were many other worthy things in diuers places of the Citie; as the Nimphs Groue, the Market-place of Metall, with infinite others. There was alſo moſt famous Images, as of Iuno, Samo, Minerua, Lindo, Venus, Gnido, in ſuch ſort that all Strangers who came to it, full of admiration were aſtonied at the beautie thereof, reputing it a cœleſtiall thing.

It ſuffered diuers fortunes vnder the Greekiſh Emperours many yeeres, inſomuch that through their diſgraces it went by little & little declining; ſo that it came to be ſubiect to the French and Venetian, in company, the ſpace of fiue and fiftie yeers, and in the end by the Illuſtrious familie Palealoga Genoneſi, was brought out of their hands. Vntill long after by a long Siege, in the yeere 1453. the nine and twentieth of May, it came into the hands of the moſt mightie Houſe of Ottaman, and was taken by the Great Sultan Mahomet the ſecond, the eight Lord of Turkes, 1190. yeeres, little more or leſſe from the time that it was built of Great Conſtantine.

Ottaman.

It is obſerued of the Writers, that the firſt founder was called Conſtantine, and his Mother Hellen. Likewiſe hee that loſt it Conſtantine, the Sonne of Hellen. Within the which, Time, the deſtroyer with his true Teeth, one, Mars with his Sword another, the ordinary Peſtilence and continuall Fires, diuers Earthquakes, and many ouer-flowings which it hath alwayes had, hath brought it to ſuch a paſſe, that now there is not remayning of ſo many Antiquities, other then ſcarce the name of Conſtantinople. And for concluſion, to ſay thereof that which remayneth, the Citie is ſcituate in the Prouince of Thracia, being fertile and mightie in Armes. Inſomuch, that it hath of Old time beene called the Conntrey of Mars. It is in the Straight of Heleſpont in Europe, which is diſtant fourteene miles from Calcidonia (now Scutarie) built ouer againſt Aſia. At the Point or Sea Euxina, called the Great or Blacke Sea, where Ouid named it Port of the two Seas, being in 45. degrees of Latitude, and in 56. of Longitude.

The mightie Princes of the Houſe of Ottaman, who wanne it of the Greekes, hauing deſtroyed all the Temples and famous Buildings, with their Churches, Sepulchers, &c. They haue giuen it another ſort of ornament building, them on the top of the ſeuen Hills within the Citie. On the firſt Hill is to bee ſeene, beginning from the Weſt towards the Port of Andranople, a fragment ſtanding in memorie of the old Emperiall Palace with certayne Galaries, waſt roomes, and pillers within it ſelfe, doth well ſhew the great power of Time, the deſtroyer and ouerthrower of all, that a Prince of the world, his Palace is now become a Lodge for Elephants, Panthars, and other Beaſts. Hard by that Gate in the South ſtreet, is a Church newly built by the Queene, Mother of this preſent Sultan Murat, the ſame is little but faire and finely contriued.

Latitude 45. degrees Longitude 56.

Firſt Hill.

On the ſecond Hill, was the Temple and Palace of the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, a thing worthy the memorie, where was buryed in Cheſts of fine Marble, moſt of the Chriſtian Emperours; but about foure or fiue yeeres ſince, it is reduced into a Church as now may be ſeene.

Second Hill.

Third Hill. Mahomets Sepulchre and Hoſpitall.

The third and higheſt Hill, hath vpon it the Church and magnificate Sepulcher of the Great Sultan Mahomet the ſecond, that tooke the Citie from the laſt and vnfortunate Greeke Conſtantine, a building worthy of admiration chiefly at theſe times, in which the Turkes are more practique, then in thoſe times when matters were more groſſe and ruſticall. Maruellous is the greatneſſe and magnificence of it being made in ſimilitude of the Sophia, and hath about it one hundred Houſes couered with Lead (of a round cube faſhion) ordayned to receiue Strangers and Trauellers of what Nation or Religion ſoeuer they be, where they may reſt (as alike at other Churches) with their Horſes and Seruants, three dayes together if they pleaſe, and haue their charges borne, not paying any thing for their owne and ſeruant dyet. Beſides, there are without the circuit of the Church, other one hundred and fiftie Lodgings for the poore of the Citie, vnto whom they giue to eate, and to euery one of them in money one Aſper a day. It hath alſo a place where they giue Sirrop and Medicines of free coſt to all that demand, & another for gouernment of the Mad people. The ſayd Sultan Mahomet left for the maintenance hereof ſixtie thouſand Duckets yeerely rent in that time, which now doth import aboue two hundred thouſand, for they haue allowance of the rents of Sofia; to which alſo beſides other reuenue belongeth the Baſiſtans and in a manner all the principall ſhops of the Citie, euen vntill yee come to the Serraglio of the Great Turke, which payeth Rent thereto 1001. Aſpers per diem.

Fourth Hill.

Fifth Hill.

Sixth Hill.

The fourth Hill hath vpon it the Church and Sepulchre of Sultan Selim, Father of Sultan Soliman, in the ſame forme and order as the others are; a Building rather firmer then other wayes. The fift Hill hath the Church and Sepulchre of Sultan Baiazet, Father of the aboue named Selim, with a great Piaza (a void place) which is the ſpaciouſeſt belonging to any their Churches, and moſt frequented by the Turkes. The ſixt Hill hath the maruellous Church and Sepulchre of the Triumphant and Inuincible Sultan Soliman, a Building worthy of ſuch a Monarch, in the beſt and moſt traffiqued place of the Citie; which paſſeth in greatneſſe, workmanſhip, Marble Pillars, and Riches more then Kingly, all the other Churches of the Emperous his Predeceſſors; a Worke which meriteth to be matched with the ſeuen Wonders of the World.

Seuenth Hill. Temple of Sancta Sophia deſcribed.

The ſeuenth and laſt Hill hath the ſumptuous Temple of Santa Sophia, founded by Iuſtinian the fifteenth Emperour of the Eaſt, in the yeere fiue hundred and thirtie. It was a Building of greatneſſe, workmanſhip, beautie, and riches incomparable, which it is ſaid hee made to match the Building of the Temple of Salomon. In time paſt this tooke a great part of the Citie, the centre of which Temple is made round in a Cube, like the Pantheo of Rome, which Agrippa built; as that was, ſo this top is round, but much more large and high, and there are two rankes of very great Marble Pillars, all of one colour and of ſuch thickneſſe, that two men can ſcarce fathome one. Then there are another order more higher, and not ſo long nor thicke, that holdeth vp the Cube, the which is made within with great Art, after the Moſaicall reſemblance with Gold and Azure, the inſide of the Temple is all implaſtered, and ouer wrought with great Tables of Porfido, Serpentino, and Marble of diuers colours; and the cloyſters round about are of like vaulting and workmanſhip, all ſingular faire, and beautifull, more then ordinary, but of the Pictures of all ſorts (as the painted Images) the Turkes haue ſcraped out the eyes. The couering on the out-ſide is of Lead, the gates (which haue beene the faireſt in the World) of fine Metall of Corinth.

The quondam glorie.

It was in the time of the Greekiſh Emperors, the moſt rich, perfect, and ſumptuous Temple, not only of the Eaſt, but of all the World; for there were one hundred gates, and it was more then a mile about, compaſſing the houſes of the Canons, Prieſts, and others; it had 300000. Duckets yeerely Rent. There is now the Sepulchre of Sultan Selim the Second, Father of this preſent Sultan Morat, his Church for want of place he cauſed to be made in Adrianopoli, which is alſo a ſumptuous thing.

Selims Sepulchre and Church.

Seraglio. Of it ſee the former Treatiſe.

Vpon one of the corners of the Citie (a point at the mouth of the ſtreight that diuideth Europe and Aſia) on the Promontorio, called of the Ancients Chriſtopheri, (which is as much to ſay, Lord of Gold) a name that whoſoeuer gaue it, peraduenture did foreſee as much as now is incloſed in the boſome thereof, and of the Greekes called (Saint Demetrio) is the admirable Habitation (Seraglio) of the Grand Signior, that hath beene in time paſt a Monaſterie of Monkes of the ſaid Sophia, and is foure miles about compaſſed round with a high Vault, and very faire Towres built by great Mahumet the Second, amplified and decked by all his Succeſſors; it is ſo repleniſhed with braue Palaces, faire Gardens, Marble Ciſternes, fine Fountaynes, ſumptuous Banias; that it were an vnwiſe part to deſcribe them, eſpecially in regard that this preſent Sultan Morat, hath begunne ſo magnifically to repleniſh it, for he alone hath built therein more then all his Predeceſſors together, and particularly he hath beautified with two faire Lodgings, or as we may ſay Banqueting Houſes, which they call Chouskes, the top couerings of Lead, but vnder wrought with curious Worke of Boſſing, Painting, and Gilding, built of fine Marble Pillars of Porfido, and Serpentino, richly laid with Gold and ineſtimable expence.

Without the great Seraglio, neere to the point thereof is a little Fountayne, but rich, of white Marble, laid on with Gold of very fine workmanſhip, (abounding with excellent water) built by this preſent Sultan Morat, in memory that there he went a Land diſmounting the Caike, when he came to take poſſeſſion of the Empire; as may be read therevpon written in Turkiſh Letters. In the chiefeſt place of the Citie, betweene the Piazza of Sultan Baiazet, and that of Sultan Solyman, there is another Seraglio called of the Turkes Eſchi Serrai, as much to ſay, the old Seraglio. The ſame was firſt builded and inhabited by Great Mahomet the Second (I meane before the aboue named) it was two thouſand paces about, before that the triumphant Sultan Soliman to make his Church tooke away the halfe. It is compaſſed with a Vault of fifteene yards high without any Turrets, the Virgins of the Grand Signiors remayne there. Thither hee goeth many times vpon pleaſure, for within it are faire Lodgings, great Orchards, many Banes, cleere Fountaynes, and of old time the deceaſed Emperours were wont there to hunt.

Old Seraglio.

Many other faire Churches are diſperſed through the Citie of great coſt and goodly proſpect, built with Royall magnificence, as that which Sultan Soliman cauſed to be made at the death of one of his Sonnes, called Iegni Sultan Mehemet, as much to ſay, as new Sultan Mahomet, (different from the other of the Great aboueſaid) neere thereby are Lodgings of the Ianizaries, who are houſed in manner of Friers, Guimas, Moſches. And other places for Prayer are there likewiſe built by many Baſſaes, and other great Perſonages (but not of ſuch importance as thoſe afore nominated) as that of Mahomet Baſſa, Daunt Baſſa, Roſtan Baſſa, Mahomet Baſſa, and of Meſſih Baſſa the Eunuch, and now they are a building two new ones, better then the others, one for the excellent Sinan Baſſa neere the red Pillar which is by the Lodging of the Emperours Ambaſſadors, the other very faire in Aurat Bazar (hard by the Pillar which they ſay to bee of Pompey) of the excellent Girabe, Maher Baſſa, and diuers others very many.

The Iew the preſenter of this Pamphlet, ſaith without number, ſome Turkes to me haue named the number to be 18000. great and ſmall Churches of Turkes. The Patriarch of Greekes, Meleteo, who had formerly beene of Alexandria, and there dyed, told me that there is in Conſtantinople one hundred Chriſtian Churches, moſt aſſuredly within the Citie and Suburbs, I take it there are more: For at Galata, ouer the water, as may bee compared to Southwarke from London, there are of Popiſh Churches (wherein are grauen Images) foure or fiue, and two or three Monaſteries of Romane Friers; of Greekiſh Churches and Friers many more, in whoſe Churches are no grauen Images; yet they whip themſelues there, as the Papiſts doe. This I haue ſeene vpon a Good Friday as I remember: Bels [m] the Christians are not permitted to haue in their Churches. Thus much from the matter of the Iewes Diſcourſe, which is not from the purpoſe of that therein handled.

[m] In the Monaſtery at Caleos Iland (where Maſter Edward Barton the Ambaſſador lies buried, I did ſee, which they vſe to knocke vpon, with a barre of Iron of a Cubit length: Tinge, Tange; Firſt, vpon one ſide then on the other ſide, a long piece of flat Iron; halfe a foot broad, an inch and halfe thicke, ſet edgeling one yard and an halfe from the ground: this they vſe in ſtead of a Bell, to call the Friers together in that Greekiſh Monaſterie.

The greateſt and moſt famous ſpacious place of the Citie is that which in time paſt of the Greeks was called Hippodromo, and now of the Turkes Atmaidan, which is as much to ſay, both in the one and the other Language, running of Horſes, for there they did and doe runne them. In time paſt it hath beene much more greater, but the many Palaces (that diuers great men in proceſſe of time haue built) hath leſſened it; as the Great Ebrim Baſſa, who builded in the time of Sultan Soliman, that faire Palace which is to bee ſeene; now the Lodging of this other Ebrim Baſſa, giuen him when he married the Emperours Daughter.

Right ouer againſt it is another Seraglio, that, alſo built in my time by the excellent Roſtan Baſſa, when he married his Daughter vnto Ahmat Baſſa. In the middeſt of this great Piazza is to be ſeene rayſed vpon foure Dice of fine Metall, a very faire Pyramide of mingled ſtone, all of one piece, fiftie Cubits high, carued with Heroycall Letters, reſembling the Agulia of Rome, in whoſe top were incloſed the aſhes of the vnconquered Iulius Caſar, that now Pope Sixtus hath reduced into the middeſt of the place of Saint Peter: this Monument Theodoſius the three and fortieth Emperour of Rome, (by Nation a Spaniard) and eightie of Conſtantinople, cauſed to bee erected in memory, that he had conquered the Gothes, the Alani, the Hunnes, and ſo many Tyrants that vſurped the Empires of the Eaſt and Weſt, as by the Greeke and Latine Verſes there ingrauen, yet after ſo many yeeres is to be read, although a wheele hath carried away ſome part of the Latine: His foot that is double in the foundation which is two Cubits high, is carued the manner and way they tooke to ſet vp this Pyramide or Obeliske, the which was there rayſed by Theodoſius in the yeere 390. ſo that it paſſeth 1200. yeeres, ſince it was erected; now that it is in the yeere 1594, and ſeuentie ſixe yeeres after that the Great Conſtantine built the Citie. In the ſecond foundation which is foure Cubits high, are carued the Tyrants round about, who to the ſaid Emperour Theodoſius (he alſo being carued in the middeſt) on euery ſide bring Preſents and render obedience. This Piazza hath alſo another Pillar very high of ſquared ſtone in manner all lineated with the time, and likewiſe one of Braſſe made with maruellous art in forme of three Serpents wreathed together with their mouthes vpwards, which is ſaid, was made to inchant the Serpents that on a time moleſted the Citie. There was betweene the Agulia and the Braſſe Pillar, foure very high Pillars equally diſtant with their foundation and top ornament, the which Sultan Selim, Father of this preſent Sultan Morat, remoued & ſent to Adrianople for the Church which he there built. This place had alſo before the place of Ebrim Baſſa ſome yeeres paſt three faire Images of Braſſe, that the victorious Sultan Soliman, after he had taken Buda, brought and no other thing, in teſtimonie of his Victorie; they were of the great Mathia Coruino, the moſt famous King of Hungarie. The ſaid Image, when the named Ebrim Baſſa was ſlaine, were by the furie of the people throwne to the ground.

An Obeliske.

The Verſes were added, ſo imperfect, that I thought fitter to omit them.

At the end of this place towards the Sofia, are alſo to be ſeene certaine ruines of a great circle of a Theator which was there, where the people ſate to ſee the Playes and Paſtimes that there were ſhewed; now it is a place wherein the Lions and other Animals of the Great Turkes are kept, one thing reſteth in my Iudgement) to be maruelled at, and the moſt notable in this place which is, that it is all hollow vnderneath, and holden vp with Pillars of rich Marble with their foundation, and top garniſhing all wrought in branches. They are ſaid to paſſe the number of one thouſand, and vnderneath it is light and freſh water, there are alſo Inſtruments or great wheeles that they vſe to ſpinne Silke with, and not only vnder this void place, but it is held for certayne that vnder all the Citie they may walke, as may be perceiued by many other ruinated places; this was very faire to behold ſome yeeres paſt, 'when the preſent Sultan Morat for the ſpace of three or foure moneths made there in Paſtimes at the Circumciſiou of his firſt begotten Sonne Sultan Mahomet, it was a maruellous incredible thing, the Shewes and Playes they had at that time.

Admirable Vaults.

In another large and ſpacious place farre from this towards the Port of Selimbria, called by the Turkes Aurat Bazar (which is as much to ſay, the Market place of women, for thither they come to ſell their Workes and Wares) is to be ſeene a very high great Pillar, written vpon round about on the out-ſide, made hollow within, which they commonly call of Pompey, perhaps, becauſe it reſembleth another that is of Pompey in Rome of the like Faſhion; but I beleeue that neither Pompey nor other for him, euer cauſed this to be ſet vp. Another high Pillar of red Marble bound about with Iron hoopes, is to be ſeene neere to the Lodging of the Emperours Ambaſſadour, with certayne Greeke Letters, which time hath conſumed and often fires many times burned it, in ſuch ſort that they cannot be vnderſtood or read.

Naumachia.

There are to bee ſeene alſo in the Citie of Conſtantinople certayne very great places of the Ancients called Naumachia, which they filled with water, and ſhewed thereon the battailes of their Nauie to delight the people, which at this time is full of Orchards. There is in the chiefeſt places for Traffique of the Citie, two Baſiſtans, which are certayne Buildings foure ſquare high, and made round at the top, in the forme of great Lodges couered, each of which haue foure Gates, opening vpon foure ſtretes, round about garniſhed, with ſhops ſtuffed with all rare and exquiſite Merchandize, as of ineſtimable value, Precious Stones and Pearles, (Zebulini) Sables, and other rich Furres of all ſorts, Silkes and Cloth of Gold, Bowes, Arrowes, Bucklers, and Swords: here likewiſe they ſell many Chriſtian Slaues of all Sects and Ages, in manner as they ſell their Horſes, looking them in the eyes, mouth and all other parts; this they doe euery forenoone, except Friday, which the Turkes hold for their day of reſt.

There is alſo to be noted the Sarachiana, which is a ſtreet of Sadlers, & of them that work in Leather, a thing ſo worthy and rich that the more part of ſtrangers, who come thither, maruell more at this place then at all the reſt of the moſt worthy and rich that are to be ſeene in Conſtantinople. The Citie is alſo full of a number of very faire Banias, as well publike as priuate, which in imitation of the Ancient Greekes and Romanes, are built and contriued with great induſtry, ſumptiouſneſſe and expence almoſt incredible, beſides thoſe of the Great Turkes Seraglio, his women, and Baſſaes, the moſt of the common ſorts are beautified with Pillars, Bankes and Pauements of diuers and rare coloured Marble: faire they are and very great with plentie of water.

Bathes.

I let paſſe the diuers Seraglioes, faire Houſes of many Vice-royes, old and new, ſo great and compaſſed with ſuch high wals, that they rather appeare to bee Cities then Seraglioes, which without make no beautifull ſhew; but within are full of all Riches and Pleaſure the World affords; for the Turkes are wont to ſay, that they build not to pleaſure the ſight of thoſe that paſſe by the way, but for their owne commoditie: deriding the goodly ſhewes that our Palaces in Chriſtendome make outwardly, and that within they are not agreeable to their minds.

Great mens Seraglioes.

Heare I would make an end, but I cannot forget the goodly Arches and Conducts of water, which Sultan Soliman of good memory brought with incredible expences ſo many miles by Land, and in ſo great quantitie; that ouer and aboue ſo many old Fountaynes, he increaſed many more with faire Marble ſo magnificall, and with ſuch quantitie of water that is moſt notable; being a very neceſſary ornament to the Citie. There are ſo many that there is not in a manner a ſtreet which hath not one of his, and the greateſt prayſe in my opinion which he meriteth for ſo worthy a worke, is that ſetting a part the expences which he made in conducting this water, and in making the Fountaynes; all the places where he built, he cauſed to be bought with ready money of the Ownors without forcing any; and oftentimes changed the places appointed, becauſe he would not haue the people lament, who were vnwilling to ſell them, and tooke not one Aſpar towards the charge. Alſo being broken, ſome of the Conduits after they were finiſhed. Sultan Soliman ſaid, that he thanked God they were decayed in his time, that he might repaire them without exacting on the people, or that there ſhould haue come another Prince that would not haue regarded them.

Conducts.

The Citie of Conſtantinople in time paſt had eleuen Gates, euery one for ſome purpoſe called Aurea, Pagea, Roma, Carthaſeo, Regia, Caligaria, Xilina, Haringa, Phara, Theodoſia, and Syliaca. But the continuall fires, the many Earth-quakes, and particularly that which hapned in the time of Sultan Baiazet Father of Selim the moneth of September, Anno 1509. which laſted eighteene dayes together (letting paſſe the other Buildings in which aboue 13000. perſons periſhed) it ouerthrew the famous ancient wall; the ſaid Sultan Baiazet gathered together more then 60000. men to rebuild it, making new Gates which are at this day fiue and twentie. They were one leſſe, but the Sultana Mother of this Emperour made a faire publike Bania, few yeeres ſince, and for the more magnificence opened a new Gate; theſe following are the names at this preſent, beginning at the Eaſt Gate of the Citie hard by the great Seraglio.

Fiue and twentie Gates.

The firſt, Giebud Capaſi. The Iewes Gate, for thereabout they dwell.
The ſecond, Baluc Bazar. The Fiſh Gate, for there they ſell their Fiſh.
The third, Yemis Eſcheleſſii. The Fruit Gate, for to that Scale comes their Fruit.
The fourth. Odun Capi. The Wood Gate, there they weigh and ſell their Wood.
The fift, Tegni Capi. New Gate.
The ſixt, Vn Capan. The Corne Gate, there they ſell their Corne.
The ſeuenth, Giubali Capi. The Moone Gate.
The eighth, Aya Capi. The Holy Gate.
The ninth, Tegni Capi. New Gate: which the Empreſſe cauſed to be made.
The tenth, Petri Capi. Saint Peeters Gate.
The eleuenth, Tener Capi. The Lanthorne Gate, where Mahomet the Second entred, when he tooke Conſtantinople.
The twelfth, Balat Capi. The Palace Gate, for it was the chiefe Gate in time of the Greekiſh Emperours.
The thirteenth, Ayuanſari Capi. Iobs Gate, for there they ſay, hee lyeth buried: it is a little Church, to which the Great Turke goeth often in Deuotion.
The fourteenth, Egri Capi. The Eye Gate.
The fifteenth, Ænderne Capi. The Gate of Andranople.
The ſixteenth, Top Capeſi. The Artillerie Gate.
The ſeuenteenth, Celebri Capi. The Gate of Selembria.
The eighteenth, Tegni Capi. New Gate.
The nineteenth, Yedi Cula. The Gate of the ſeuen Towres: for ſo many there are together, neere thereunto, built of the Ottoman Princes, where it is ſaid, they haue in time paſt put their Treaſure.
The twentieth, Narli Capi. Gate of the Pomegranates.
The one and twentieth Semati Capi. Saint Matthewes Gate.
The two and twentieth, Tegni Capi. New Gate.
The three and twentieth, Cum Capi, Gate of the Sands.
The foure and twentieth, Chiatladi Capi. The cracked Gate.
The fiue and twentieth, Ahircapi. The Gate of the Stables, where the Grand Signiors Horſes are kept.

This is all which at this time commeth to my purpoſe to ſay (A. V. S. Illſtre) hauing ſpoken only of the bodie of the Citie Conſtantinople, with the moſt breuitie and veritie that I could poſſible; not touching the matters of the Ayuanſaria, (where the Turkes ſay, is buried patient Iob) and where are many Sepulchres of much importance, of the chiefeſt Baſſaes and other great men, holden of them for holy ground, neither touch I the Citie Pera (a Colonie in time paſt of the Genueſes) Tophana, or Scutari; for it would bee needfull of them to make a long Diſcourſe, leauing the ſame vntill ſome other occaſion that you pleaſe to command me, and if herein be any errour; let the ſmall time I had to write it excuſe me, and ſupply the ſame with the good will I haue to ſerue you. And ſeeing this Diſcourſe accepted, I will preſent you alſo with a Summarie of the Liues and Deeds of the Ottoman Princes; which I am gathering together with the greateſt breuitie and veritie that I can poſſible. At Conſtantinople preſented me, written by a Iew Doctor, an ancient dweller in that Citie, which when I had read, I preſently out of Italian tranſlated it, the ſeuenteenth and eighteenth dayes of Auguſt, 1594.

Sepulchres.

The Pilgrimage of IOHN SANDERSON from Conſtantinople, to the Holy Land, and ſo to Tripoly in Syria, begunne the fourteenth day of May, 1601. ended the fourteenth of Auguſt.

THe fourteenth day of May, 1601. we ſet ſaile in the good ſhip called the Mermaid from Conſtantinople, ſo to Galipoly, Troy, Sio, Rhodes, and the firſt day of Iune arriued at Zur, which is Tyrus: paſſed by Sarfanta, in time paſt Sarepta, anchored and went aſhoare at Sidon, now called Saiet, where the third day of the ſame we viſited the Sepulchre of Zebulon. Sophani the Prophet, and Baſaleel which built the Arke, buried halfe a dayes iourney from Sidon.

Iobar Aſladi.

Iewes Bookes.

The ninth, I departed in company of Iewes, and arriued in Damaſco, the twelfth, paſſing by Samcania, Baruck, Hermiſton, Libiton, foure Mountaynes ſo called. The nineteenth, I went to a Towne within three miles of Damaſco, now called Iobar Aſladi, where Elias did anoint Azael, Iehu, and Eliſha; the Iewes hold that like as in Mount Horeb, ſo heere Elias hid himſelfe in a Rocke from Ieſabel, where alſo they ſay the Rauens fed him. Here is built a Synagogue of the Iewes, in which is ſolemnely reſerued their chiefeſt ancient written Books, and thither they go to worſhip with great deuotion. The ſumptuouſeſt matter to be noted is the Church which hath twelue Gates of Braſſe, excellent Corinthian Metall, the middle one of each three being bigger and higher then the two on each ſide) curiouſly wrought, (it is now called Bedremon. Here it was that the Idoll Rimmon was worſhipped, it is iuſt ſquare, three doores on each ſide. Any man may paſſe by the doores (being they are open to foure publike places) but not any enter other then are of the Mahumetan Religion, many Pillars there are, but two eſpecially noted aboue the reſt in reſpect of ſome paſſed matter. Hither it was that Naaman the Aſſyrian deſired the Prophet Eliſha, after hee had beene healed of his Leproſie, to licenſe him to bring from Samaria, which at this day is called Shomrom (the ſaid Prophets Country) two Mules lading of Holy Land to build an Altar vnto God; which the Prophet denied him not, and there are alſo foure Riuers called Barada, Towra, Yeſed, Cananat, two of which are Abana and Pharpar: which Naaman ſaid (murmuring) were fairer then all the Riuers of Iſrael, when the Prophet bad him goe waſh him-himſelfe in Iordan, to heale his diſeaſe.

Silke Girdles, Shaſhes, Bodkins, &c. fit to ſell in Sio and Natolia.

I remayned ten dayes in Damaſco, by reaſon that my rich Companion Iew, beſpake much Merchandize to be readie at his returne, left there tenne or twelue thouſand Duckets of Gold; which for ſurer conueyance he had carried quilted in his owne and Seruants vnder-garments: all he left in a friends hands, except two or three thouſand which he ſpent of Almes, and diſburſed for Bookes in the Holy Land; that money he reſerued ſtill in their quilted Coats, fearing theeues which abound in theſe Countries.

This Bridge as I doe remember, is ſtrong built of ſtone, ſome Bricke, & hath ſeuen or eleuen Arches as I remember.

From Damaſcus to Saſa, the two and twentieth, ſo to Conetra, neere Mount Hermon, whoſe Eaſtermoſt part confineth the Countries of Reuben and Gad, then to Naube the Countrey, where was borne the Virgin Ebrew, whom Naaman had taken Captiue, ſhee counſelled that her Maſter ſhould goe and be cured of the Prophet in Shomrom. Here likewiſe I ſaw the Lake I could not be certified the Name, it is in the Country of the Gergeſites where the Legion of Deuils entred in to the Swine. Then to the Bridge vpon Iordan, on the right hand is the little Sea Cadis, on the left Genazeret, a little on this ſide that Bridge, as the Iewes to mee reported, the Angell wreſtled with Iacob, had paſſed ouer his Wiues, Children, Family, and Cattel, fearefully he meeting his Brother Eſau, who receiued him kindly; then wee came to a Mountayne which they called Mount Canaan, and on the backe ſide of that Mountayne towards the right hand, came to the high Countrey of Galilee, paſſed by ſome Townes, and ſo to a Citie called Safet, the foure and twentieth of Iune: here the Iewes look for their Meſſias to appeare vpon a moſt high Mountaine adioyning, which as I remember they called Mount Caram. Heere on this Mount Canan, Mahaleel a Iew Prieſt that had beene about in gathering (he told me he had got but fiue hundred Chequins in Gold, and had them about him) for the Iewes of the Holy Land did bid mee marke the current of the Riuer Iordan, which ſeemed to ſtand and ſlowly beare towards Tiberias and Sodome, but withall a forceable current, did runne in the middeſt backe againe towards the Bridge, and ſo to fall into Cades, toward Ior and Dan, from whence the whole Riuer of Iordan doth take his increaſe.

In this Citie of Safet are all the moſt learned and deuout Iewes: and here are ſixe Colledges or Schooles of Learning, this they call the Houſe of God, and many aged goe purpoſely to dye there: this is Bethel where Iacob ſlept and dreamed in the way he went to ſerue his Vncle Laban, afterward returned, dwelt there and built an Altar to the Lord, the Citie of old was called Lus. Built it is on the top of a high Mountayne; and compaſſed about with many Mountaynes, which are both high and ſteepe, but the higheſt is that adioyning, where I ſay (they affirme) the Meſſias wil come; on the top of the Mountain where this Citie is, is the exceedingeſt old Caſtle that I haue ſeene or heard off, except a part of that at Hebron, and alike the ruines of Tiberias, where I was at my returne from Ieruſalem. At the foot of the ſaid Citie Safet, is interred the Prophet Oſea, Sonne of Beeri, firſt of the twelue Prophets (ſo ſay the Iewes) ouer his Sepulchre is built a Cube not very old, and the Iewes now doe bury their dead at that place.

Then we paſſed by a little Village, where dwelt and is buried the Prophet Abakuke, ſo ſaid the Iewes, and that the Towne was called Teacoke; thence wee came to a Village called Sefferbittim, where they ſay is buried Iethro the Father in Law of Moſes: then wee came to Aiontoſar at the foot of Mount Tabor, on the top of which Mount our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt transfigured himſelfe talking with Elias and Moſes; with him was Peter, Iames and Iohn: (leaning on the right hand, the place where was the Warres with Siſera and Debora; and on the left, the Riuer Chiſon: Siſera fled to Sefferbittim, where Iael killed him, and from thence by a Village called

At Sefferbittim we repoſed the heate of that day.

Zarni, the place is called Iſarel, ſo wee paſſed the Valley of Ieſſerell; here Iehu fought the bat-ell with Ahabs ſonne. So we came to Ienin, of old time Ingenin, interpreted, is Paradiſe ſo pleaſant, that is the place and ſituation that well may be called Paradiſe; it may be aſſuredly compared to the Citie of Palme trees ſpoken of in Scripture, ſo pleaſant and proſpectiue, it is with alſo Woods of very many Palme trees repleniſhed.

The twentie ſixe, we paſſed by Dotana, in Scripture called Dotan, or Dothan, the place where Ioſephs brethren caſt him into the pit. From thence wee paſſed the Mountaines of Gilboa, where Saul and his ſonnes were ſlaine: on the right hand a farre off wee ſaw the Sea Paleſtine, thence we paſſed a place now called Sabaſtia, in Scripture Shomron, that is, Samaria, a Citie of Ahab, a pleaſant ſituation on the top of the Mountaine, but not very high. From thence to Sichem the twentie eight of the ſame, which is [z] ſituate betweene two Mountaines, Mount Gerezin, that is the Mount of Bleſſing, and Mount Ebal, that is, the Mount of Curſing; euen betweene theſe two Mountaines, a little before wee came to the Citie, is a great Conduit of very good water, twentie paces before, which is a piece of ground marked out by two ſhort Pillers of plaine white Marble: There was ſome notable thing done in Moſes or Ioſias time, elſe I ſuppoſe there ſtood the ſtone whereon the ſeuentie heads of Gedeons ſonnes, Abimelecks brothers were piled.

Betweene the ſaid Mountaines at the Eaſter-moſt of them was interred Ioſephs bones, where the Iewes prayed as alike at all the Sepulchers they went to viſit, and about fiue miles off, neere to a Village called Awarta, are buryed vpon a Hill on the Mount, [a] amongſt the Mountaines of Ephraim, the two ſonnes of Aaron, Eleazar and Ithamar, and Phineas, the ſonne of Eliazar: and hard by vpon another Hill are the [b] ſeuentie antients buried all in one plot, one Caue, one Sepulcher, theſe ancients of Iſrael are ſpoken of in Scripture. Alſo ſome two miles further neere the tops of one of the higheſt ſaid Mountains of Ephraim, is the Sepulcher of Ioſua, kept by the Moores as the others are, this we did very wel diſcerne. The Iewes at all pay pole pence, ſome more, ſome leſſe to the Moores, before they be permitted to ſay their Ceremonies.

The thirtieth of Iune, wee came to Biera [c], in Scripture called Beroth, in the Countrie of Beniamin; this Citie is fiue miles ſhort of Ieruſalem, Rama is to bee diſcerned three or foure miles, on the right hand going to Ieruſalem. This day we arriued in Ieruſalem; vpon high ground we had trauelled when we drew neere the Citie, though moſt of the way were rockie and ſtony, yet now wee might euidently ſee a ſigne of a long broad high way all cragged, with cornered diffuſed ſtones that no beaſt could trauell ouer, ſo that along hard by the ſaid way through the fields all trauellers paſſe, yet that alſo very ſtony and cragged, but they are not ſo big as thoſe on the foreſaid high way. Then being within a mile we had ſight of Ieruſalem, which to our view was moſt excellently ſituated on Hills, and compaſſed with other huge Hils round about, ſome neere, ſome many miles off. The adornement of waters it wanteth, for there are not any beautifull neere it: Iordan onely we might ſee a great way off, which Iordan is North-eaſt of Ieruſalem about nine or ten miles. The neereſt part Eaſtward Iordan paſſeth the Lake of Sodome and Gomorra, and ſo commeth along towards Ieruſalem, which is ſome fifteene or ſixteene miles off; ſo we entred at the gate opening to Damaſco, which I take to be South, and to the Weſtward.

The ſecond of Iuly [d], we went to Rama, to the Prophet Samuel his houſe, vvhere the Iewes ſay he was buried; vpon the top of the ſaid houſe is the place where the children of Iſrael had their haire cut off, at vvhich time they made vowes, gaue great ſums to the Sanctorum: at this day there are of the Iewes that vow & performe, carrying their children to haue their haire cut there for deuotion; on the right hand is a Well vvhich is called Samuels Well, other matters here I obſerued not. Many and ſundry ruinated both great and ſmall Townes, I paſſed in the Holy Land, both outward and backe againe, vvhich to my deſire I could not be informed the names of: as may bee imagined by theſe nominated in the tedious [e] iourney I made.

In Ieruſalem is a little part of the wall of Salomons Temple (ſo ſay the Iewes) vnder the ſaid piece of wall is the place vvhere the high Prieſt went to waſh himſelfe, within is a ſtone of twentie ſixe braces long, and twelue broad; in that Temple the Greekes ſay the holy Ghoſt came to the Apoſtles: in theſe times no Chriſtian nor Iew is ſuffered to enter that Church on paine of death; a broad going vp alſo there is of Marble ſteps, and on the tops of the ſtayres two white Marble pillars, not very big; vpon theſe ſteps none dare come except Turkes and Moores of the beſt account, this is there held by Chriſtians of the place to bee Salomons Porch. The mount on which the Temple is built, is called in Greeke Thuſia tou Abram, where Abraham would haue ſacrificed his ſonne: this is mount Moria; where to this day I ſay is curiouſly kept part of Salomons Temple, the Turkes hauing beſtowed very great coſt in re building and leading it all ouer. It is formed, one part a round Cube, cloſe to which cube goeth, as it were aſcending a long bridge of building leaded, comparable to the Eaſter-moſt part of Pauls, but ſeemeth ſome-

But the Valley wherein Damaſcus is built, is much more fairer to the eye, pleaſanter and larger.

Samaria.

[b] As the Iew to me reported.

[c] Here we reſted two or three houres. Old great ſtony ruines of a Citie. No Inhabitants there, and many other ruined places wee trauelled ouer, where had beene Townes, but now were cragged ſtones, and here and there ſome plots of ground where they ſowed Corne: bread very plentie and cheape in the Citie of Ieruſalem, and all places that we came at in the holy Land; and alſo at Damaſcus and all Sirria ouer.

[e] Tedious iourney I made, yea a very chargeable and dangerous iourney; for had not Rabby Abraham, Coen, the principalls, and the other Iewes alſo fauoured and much regarded me: I had beene ſingled out by ſome villanous Moores of our owne company, who grudged at me, and at laſt one of them that we had hired our Mules of, did punch at me with a ſtaffe, reuiling me with Bre hanzier Gouer, ſaying that I had beene the cauſe that Maronits, the Chriſtians of Mount Libanus had broke the head of a Ianizarie, who by the way fell into our company hauing beene at Mecca. Of this Ianizarie ouer night they had asked a little gun-powder, which he deeming, they met him on the Hill in the morning and did ſore wound him: the Turkes did marke that thoſe Chriſtians had been kinde to me, therefore by that one old collericke fellow I did with patience pocket ſome abuſe, though no great hurt. Abuſe for the preſent, but at Tripoly the Iewes ſo handled this buſineſſe, putting the Moore in a great feare that I would complaine to the Baſſa, ſo that in their preſence the Moore prayed mee of pardon, and withall did bow downe and kiſt my hand, ſeeming ſorry he had ſo abuſed me; nay very ſure I am that he did repent, ſo I forgaue him, and hee afterward did bring me a preſent of fruit and flowers.

what flatter and broad,with the leads more cheuerend and of a deeper worke,and at the end a proportionate forme ſeeming higher then the reſt of the leaded worke.

Ieruſalem hath only foure gates,at one of which is the Tower of Dauid,where he fell enamoured with Berſheba,as thoſe fondlings ſay. Without the ſaid gate, a ſtones caſt from the corner of the wall on the top of Mount Sion are buried Dauid, Salomon,and moſt of the Kings of Iuda; here neither Iewes nor Chriſtians are ſuffered to enter, neither permitted to come neere the walls in ſight of Turkes and Moores; ſuch as paraduenture doe, are forced to pay ſummes of money to their vttermoſt abilitie. On the out-ſide of the aforeſaid piece of the Cities wall appeareth apart, as the Iewes to mee reported,of the old wall of the ſtudie of Salomon, vpon one of the ſtones whereof is written in Hebrew letters carued בתי that is Bitti,which interpreted is to ſay,my houſe: here for two dayes I left the company of my great companion Iew, and had attendant on mee a Coloiero, a Greekiſh Prieſt, which the Patriarke commanded, to ſhew me all the notable places in and about Ieruſalem and Bethelem. This holy Prieſt had continued one whole yeere in the Church where they ſay our Sauiour was buried,and for that ſpace neuer came out night nor day, ſo doing of his owne will onely in deuotion; he chiefly attended me, with other Greeke Friers at my pleaſure: likewiſe alſo a poore Iew of Ieruſalem whom I hired to bee ſtill with mee, partly to interprete,for the Frier Greekes ſpeake but meane Italian, and my ſelfe vnderſtood but little Greeke.

Firſt, the Coloiero went and ſhewed mee the gate where our Sauiour entred when they cryed Hoſanna, efſemati, after which wee viewed Caiphas Palace, Pilats Palace (the ruines, remaining as now they ſay) and alike the Marble pillar of diuers colours at which Chriſt was whipped; it ſtandeth diſtant from the houſe: ouer the way wee paſſe through ſomewhat high, a place neere to that where was a water called pronatichi, colinithra, a maruellous great dry ditch which came to the priſon or deepe durty dungeon, wherein the Iewes Princes in Zedechias time cauſed Ieremie the Prophet to be put. He found fauour of the Kings chiefe Eunuch a Blacke-moore, who drew him out, hee ſtanding halfe way in the mud, as by the Scripture appeareth: theſe Greekes hold that hee was throwne amongſt Lions, who licked him in ſtead of deuouring, and that at laſt the Iewes cauſed him to be ſawed in ſunder.

Then went wee to the Virgin Maries Sepulchre, a ſpace without the walls of the Citie, in a little Chappel going down many ſteps,the ſtayres very broad;on the right hand,as it were, halfe the ſteps down lieth buried her father and her mother,the Virgin below in a roome a part,wherin were only ſeuen Lampes burning; her ſtone is of ſtreaked Marble of diuers colours,her Tombe not ſo high as a mans waſte from the ground. My Greeke Prieſt ſhewed great deuotion at this Sepulchre (ſo did hee at the place where our Sauiour ſweat water and bloud, and at the aſcenſion place on top of Mount Oliuet.) A Well of good water is alſo at the foot of the ſtayres: then to the place where Saint Steuen was ſtoned; (the Greekes ſay our Sauiour had made him an Arch-deacon) ſo to Ieſami where Chriſt was in a bloudy ſweat (here I prayed)and likewiſe I ſaw the place where the Apoſtles ſlept; then to the place where hee taught his diſciples the Pater noſter, the Greekes call it Pater emos: and where he ſtood when hee wept ouer Ieruſalem,and the place where hee was betrayed by that reprobate ſeruant Iudas.

Theſe Lamps did hang,burning ouer the Virgins tombe.

Then walking further on the ſide of this Mount Oliuet, wee ſaw the Garden where Mary met our Sauiour after his reſurrection. From this part of the Mountaine is ſeene a farre off the Lake of Sodome, through the which runneth the Riuer Iordan. Then to Oroſtoelo, the place of Chriſts aſcenſion, which is on the very top of this Mount Oliuet, a ſtone yet remaining wherein is the print of a foot: all thoſe Chriſtians hold aſſuredly, that it is the ſigne of our Sauiours foot, moſt formall and proportionably it is to bee perceiued, but worne much by the touching and kiſſing of Chriſtians: here I prayed and hope my Sauiour beheld mee. The like ſquare ſtone white Marble, wherein is the print of the other foot, was ſtolne from hence and carried to Rome; ſo ſay theſe Greekes.

Then to Bethſage, the Village where the Colt was loſed; ſo along ouer againſt it wee came to Bethania,the Greekes call it Vithania. In this Towne they alſo affirme, that our Sauiour eate the Paſſeouer with his diſciples; here was Lazarus raiſed,who had beene dead foure dayes, in whoſe Sepulchre I was, wherein I writ my name on the [f] wall, and not in any other place all my pilgrimage. This Lazarus, as the Greekes hold, was afterward Biſhop of Larnaca, in Cyprus thirtie three yeeres, where at a Church ſo named, they ſay, hee lyeth buried; truth it is of ſuch a faire Church ſo called in ſuch a Towne of Cyprus,where foure yeeres paſt I was; but of the bones of Lazarus to be there it is vncertaine to mee. Alſo the Greekes affirme,that Saint Ellen, the mother of Conſtantine the Great, is likewiſe buryed in the ſaid Iland of Cyprus, on a mountaine, which at this day is called after her name: ſhee was erector of all theſe Churches, alike repairer and obſeruer of all theſe holy places in the holy Land.

[f] Hauing read the name of Ieſſerie Kerby, vpon the wall written by himſelfe in that Sepulcher, for he had been a thither traueller in company of Edward Abbot, M. Bidulfe a preacher, and one Ieſytent a Ieweller.

Then returned we backe againe to the water of Siloam, where our Sauiour commanded a blind man to waſh his eyes, after hee had with earth and ſpittle touched them, this is at the foot of Mount Sion. Vpon the ſide of Mount Oliuet is buried Hulda the Propheteſſe, there in the middeſt of Mount Oliuet was the Altar where they burnt the Red Cow: In a Caue on the right hand are the Sepulchers of Haggi,and Malachi, Zacharia is buryed below. Neere to the Sepulchre of Zacharia is the tombe of Abſolom, made of ſeuen ſtones, and a ſharpe pinacle on the top: at which Monument the Moores of the Countrie when they paſſe by at this day, throw ſtones, with reuiling ſpeeches at him for rebelling againſt his father. Betweene the places of Zacharia and Abſalom, is a plot where in old time they put the vncleane apart to purge themſelues; this was the Poole of Betheſda, into which the Angel deſcended at certaine times and troubled the waters. The Scripture ſpeaketh of fiue Porches; but I noted not when I was there, neither to me by my Greekes was mentioned, as I remember, any ſuch matter. And there is the Valley of Ioſaphat, betweene Mount Morea and Mount Oliuet, where the Iewes ſay the world muſt bee iudged; moſt huge ſtone of incredible bigneſſe is here to be ſeene, out of ſome of which are carued whole houſes, two or three I did ſee, one of which had diuers parted roomes all hewed out of one ſtone: theſe in reſpect of the painfull workemanſhip I thought notable; as alike a mile off from Ieruſalem is a place of buriall, out of a rocke of one Marble ſtone hewed, with foure doores to foure ſundry roomes, and foure coffins of the ſaid ſtone, but the bodies turned to duſt, and the bones not any remaining, except very ſmall pieces. This place or rocke is called Celbaſabua; this may well bee the Caue wherein the fiue Kings hid themſelues. Then went I to Eſaia the Prophet his Sepulcher, where I beheld the fig-tree, vnder which the Greekes ſay that the ſonnes of Ieremie ſlept ſixtie three yeeres: their names were Varuh and Abdimeleck; this may be thought a fallacy in reſpect of the fig-tree which cannot be of that age; but they ſay, it is and hath bin euer ſince replanted of the branches in that ſelfe place.

Then went I to the Sepulcher of good old Simeon, from thence to a place (neere vnto the Church and Sepulcher where the Chriſtians affirme the bodie of our Sauiour was layd) a place, I ſay, called Anaſtaſia, where Mary met our Sauiour after his reſurrection, ſaying, If thou bee the Gardener, tell mee where thou haſt layd him. Ouer againſt the Church doore, in a place where Ieſus our Redeemer and Sauiour ſhed his moſt precious bloud, paying the ranſome of our ſinnes was cruelly crucified, I ſay where the Croſſe ſtood, is at this day a priſon [g] in the Church, whoſe diſtance is twentie or twentie fiue paces, are diuers Altars of diuers ſorts of Chriſtians; but firſt I noted in the Church doore two great holes, at which is daily giuen in the victualls to all the ſorts of religious perſons which keepe continually in the ſaid Church; for the Turkes neuer open the doore, except for ſome Pilgrime, who firſt payeth to the Cadie, which is the chiefe Iuſtice, the Great Turkes due, vpon euery one vnder the Popes banner, which they call Franks, nine [h] Chequins in gold, and Greekes vnder the Patriarke foure and a halfe, with other Chriſtians alike, ſome leſſe. Six officers of the Turks at leaſt comes to open the doore, which houſe being opened, all Chriſtians that are of that ſort who hath payed, may enter the Church with that one, if it be regiſtred that they formerly had payed; but Turkes and Moores may at all times goe in when the doores are opened for any ſort of Chriſtian, but muſt preſently come out againe; the Chriſtian for whom the gate was opened, may at his pleaſure lye all night, or two or three nights in the Church if he will, and the Turkes Officers returne to open and let them out.

At this day a priſon, in this priſon M. Henry Timberly, alias Captaine Timberly was, as by this digreſſing paper appeareth, which he himſelfe recordeth in a printed booke; but thus much I had copied from his owne hand.

More M. Timberly relateth that from Grand Cairo to Ieruſalem all the way by land he performed thither, and backe againe to Cairo in fewer then fiftie dayes.

[h] I had paied theſe nine Chequins, and had by the Turkes the Church doore opened for me, was within, & entring the Sepulcher, the Roman Friers and others fell in an vproare, ſaying that I was a Iew; the Turkes bad me goe in in deſpight of them, but the brabble was ſo terrible that I returned to the Cadie, with the Friers: the Padre Gardiano ſent his Drudgeman and accuſed me to be a Iew, becauſe I came in company of Iewes: diuers Turkes followed to heare the matter, one old Turke came & earneſtly exhorted me to become a Muſſelman in preſence of the Cady, I gaue him the hearing, and told him that I was a Chriſtian, and no Iew; then he ſaid in the hearing of all the Iewes, Turkes, and Chriſtians, let him bee ſearcht: but the Cadie, before whom we were (being a very diſcreet man) did reproue that Turke, & alſo the Drugman and Friers my accuſers, and ſo did diſmiſſe me; but (as I was afterwards told) it coſt my aduerſaries aboue 100. Chequins, I ſpent not paſt ſome twentie in that buſineſſe.

Diuers little Bell-ſtrings there are at the inſide of their doores, which rung euery ſort of Friers to come downe into the Church to receiue their victuall, or take out pitchers of water to poore folkes, or other actions that may happen. Some eight or nine paces in, is the Sepulcher vpon which they haue made a formall round worke of twelue white Marble Pillers, two and two together, and leaded with a round Cube on the top; open ouer is the Church, with a kind of round building, open I ſay ouer the ſaid inward proportionate matter, that alike is leaded on the outſide very ſubſtantially: within the Church I ſay about that part where the Tombe is, are twelue other coloured great Marble Pillers; thoſe Pillers vpon it formerly ſpoken of, ſtand about a Brace from the ground, and a woodden foot-pace vp equall with it ſome fiue paces diſtant. At the end towards the Altars are on each corner one white little Marble ſtone ſquared ſmooth, but not made like Pillers, and are ſome two foot high; in the middeſt of the white Marble Pillers ouer the Tombe is three holes made of ſtone, out of which once a yeere the Popiſh Friers make artificiall fire to appeare, perſwading the Chriſtians that it hath beene euer ſince the bodie of Chriſt was there layd.

Right afore vp in the Church is a great white Canopie, vnder which are diuers pictures and lamps, but in the middeſt hangs a moſt ſtately white Croſſe of ſiluer curiouſly made; the Altars are more vp in the Church aboue that Canopy: many Idolatrous Chriſtians haue their Altars euery ſort apart, to ſay an Altar for the Romaniſts, for the Greekes, for the Cuſties of Cairo, Georgians about the Blacke Sea, Armenians of Perſia, Abbaſies of Ethiopia, Neſtorians of Bagdat, Iacobites of Aleppo, Merdi, and Babylon, Maronites of Mount Libanus, Shemſi in Siria and Cilicia a kind of Family of Loue. In the Sepulcher theſe ſorts of Chriſtians haue their Lamps continually burning, to the number (as ſay the Greeke Friers) of ſixtie ſixe, and alike haue their ſuperſtitious Croſſes apart; I went not downe into the Sepulchre, by reaſon I had a great controuerſie with the Popiſh Friers, but might haue done in their deſpight, had I not beene entreated by the Greeke Patriarke and others to auoyd an vproare at that time; yet made I thoſe fooliſh Idolaters ſpend much money, and at laſt they ſent to intreat mee: but then I would not, hauing to my content ſeene enough when the doores were opened for mee, and alike out of the Patriarkes houſe which ioyneth to the Church, in whoſe poſſeſſion the whole ſteeple and halfe the Tarras is (halfe I ſay of one ſide the Church) where are three great grates of Iron open, ſeruing to giue light into the Church, and where they let downe daily baskets of victuals for the Greeke Friers there abiding; thoſe grates are aboue a mans length, and fiue or ſixe foot broad, at which I did ſee as much as if I had ſtood in the Church, and drew with my pen the forme of the inſide, and alike the outſide. More lower in a roome, at a window out of the Patriarkes houſe, I ſtood and drew the forme of that which is erected right ouer the Sepulchre, as I haue deſcribed it.

From Ieruſalem halfe way to Bethelem, is a Greeke Chappell (built by Brittiſh Hellen, the mother of Conſtantine; who found, they ſay, the Croſſe of Chriſt; and erected all the Monuments in the Holy Land) in place where Elias his houſe ſtood; ouer againſt which there is a ſtone in the high way that ſheweth an old Monument print of a man leaning ſleeping, with his arme vnder his head. The Greekes affirme it moſt certainely to be the print of Elias bodie, when the Angel bad him eate and make himſelfe ſtrong to goe fortie dayes iourney to Mount Oreb, where for a time hee remained fed of Rauens, and after at Gods command aroſe and went to Damaſco to anoint Hazael, Iehu, and Eliſha. No remembrance at this place of the Iuniper tree the Scripture ſpeakes of, but a Fig tree there is betweene Ieruſalem and Bethelem, which the Friers ſhewed mee, ſaying that the Virgin reſted her ſelfe againſt it, when ſhee fled into Egypt with the child Ieſus, and her husband Ioſeph. They cut thereof little pieces for relikes, and alike in deuotion they at this day make many formall carued Croſſes wherein are relikes, and Beads, [k] they make Pater noſters as they call them of the Oliue trees which grow vpon Mount Oliuet. Likewiſe there they told mee (an vnlikely thing it was) that the withered Figge tree which Chriſt accurſed, is yet ſtanding vpon Mount Oliuet.

From the Figge tree before ſpoken of, one halfe mile, is Rachels Tombe [l] in the middeſt of the high way, in ſight whereof on a great Banke ſide, is finely ſituate a pretty Towne on the right hand as we went to Bethelem, and two miles off is Bethelem, being on a Hill ſide ſituate very pleaſantly: the high way and land chaulkie the ſpace of halfe a mile euery way round about it. A Church the mother of Conſtantine hath built ouer the place where our Sauiour was borne, and firſt worſhipped of the Shepheards, and then of the Wiſe-men, before Ioſeph and Mary fled with him into Egypt, where alſo I haue beene ſome ſeuenteene yeeres ſince, as in diſcourſe of my former trauells is recorded. The Romaniſt Friers haue a Chappel going downe vnder this Church, where they haue continually Maſſe, and ceremoniouſly keepe the very place of his birth. The Church hath fortie or fiftie very faire Marble Pillers all of one forme and bigneſſe (I counted them [m] not) it hath beene a very ſumptuous Church, Greeke pictured Saints yet remayning in the vpper end of it, which is in forme round, with large ſteps to goe vp to the Altar, and on both ſides vnderneath halfe round ſteps to goe downe to the Popes Friers perſinqute, who haue the cuſtodie of the very place of birth, and where the Manger ſtood. By a gray-headed Greeke Prieſt and Frier Gretian my attendant, I was brought vp a payre of ſtayres, going vp at the vpper end of this great Church aloft to a little Chappell, where are many pictures according to the Greekes manner, but eſpecially a large Saint George; before whom they had a Lampe burning, expecting of mee great deuotion, they vnto it making many croſſes, and told me he was Saint George. I anſwered, that I had neuer ſeene a bigger: they fixed earneſt lookes vpon me at that anſwere, ſeeing I regarded it not, and the old man told the other in Greeke he thought I was no Christian, becauſe I made no croſſe nor reuerence neither, as hee ſaid, to our Ladies, Chriſts, Saint George, or to other Saints pictures; his fellow, a fooliſh Frier, told him that thoſe of my Countrey were Chriſtians of the worlds end: I preſently turned them both out of their talke, by haſting to bee gone thence.

But they led me vp to the top of the Church which is leaded, & many Chriſtians had there ingrauen [n] their names, ſo did not I, then they offered mee kindly to ſtay and dine with them, but I refuſed. The old Prieſt required of me almes towards their Lamps, which I did, giuing to them foure Chequins, and came downe the ſame way I went vp, through the Chappell full of painted (moſt ſorts and ſizes) Saints. In which Chappell alſo is a Well where ordinarily the Chriſtians draw water, and it is, they ſay, the beſt in Bethelem: they draw of it in that place, being neere the top of the Church: but that within the Church (it ſtands at the very entrance within) I take to be the Well that Dauid deſired to drinke of from the hands of his valiant men: The Papiſts hold neither of both, but ſay it is another neere Bethelem.

So we returned to Ieruſalem the ſame afternoone, and in Ieruſalem my holy Coloyro led mee to a Monaſtery of Greeke Nuns, where I beſtowed ſome mony in trifles of needle-worke wrought by them, and there the Nuns required my beneuolence, I gaue them ſeuen Chequins; then preſently not farre from that, he had me to another Monaſtery of Nuns, where I ſaw their Chappell full of very fine pictures, and they told me that a man comes daily to doe their ſeruice; there I did as at the other and more I beſtowed in buying, for there they graced me with the ſight of a very faire young Virgin Nun, that ſo much beautie and youth I could doe no leſſe then praiſe, and pittie her eſtate to my Coloyro, who was readie the next day to attend mee thither againe, if ſo had beene my pleaſure to haue bought more new workes of the old Nuns, &c.

With Gold and thankes I rewarded his paſſed paines, leauing him at that time: and to my Pil-

[k] Of theſe Croſſes & Pater-noſter Beades, Roſaries, I did bring from thence, and at my returne preſented my brother and ſome others, hauing onely reſerued for my ſelfe one Croſſe, two paire of Beads, and two Girdles, which are the length of the Sepulcher. Theſe Croſſes, Beades, and Girdles are brought to vs by poore Chriſtians to ſel, they ſaying that they are holy things, for that they had been put into the Sepulcher: I, as the cuſtome was, and as other Chriſtians did, did buy of them & brought from thence.

[l] When I was there, Anno 1601. ouer the graue of Rachel, there was a Cube raiſed vpon foure Pillers made of ſtone and morter, and open it was on all ſides.

[m] And yet it comes in my mind that I did tell them, and I thinke they were in number fortie of verie ſmooth whitiſh Marble, the vpper end of this Church, the halfe round mounting ſteps I meane, are much like thoſe at the Church of Rocheſter.

[n] Amongſt which names I did ſee Huet Stapers, who (as ſome ſaid) had trauelled from Grand Cairo thither in Friers weeds, and (as I haue heard) was made a Knight of the Sepulcher, by the Padre Guardiano and the other Romiſh, &c. Thoſe, whoſoeuer Engliſh or others, who are ſo knighted, are made to take a mad kind of oath.

grime mates the Iewes I returned; and proſecuting my purpoſe deſired, I againe further traced the Holy Land, where two miles from Bethelem are to bee ſeene two Vallies, then Riuers, now Drie; which the Iewes ſay Salomon digged to water the Woods. A little way off on the left hand is buryed Gad, one of the twelue Patriarchs, and halfe a mile on this ſide Hebron is the Valley Eſcol, where the twelue Spies ſent by Moſes were, they returned with good newes. At this day there are Grapes * in that Valley growing, one bunch of them weigh eight or nine Okes, as thoſe of the Countrey affirmed, which may be of our weight twentie or one and twentie pound. I ſaw none ſuch, though ſome there were very great ſprung out, but not neare ripe. This was the fifth of Iuly, 1601. At the end of this Valley Eſcoll is Hebron the Citie, the Valley is a long mile before you come to it, all planted with Vines and many Trees. In this Citie is the Sepulcher of Abraham, the Iewes hold that there alſo are buryed Adam and Eue, Sara, Iſaac and Rebecca, Iacob and Lea. Into this Tombe not any are ſuffred to enter, but at a ſquare hole through a thicke wall: they may diſcerne a little light of a Lampe. The Iewes doe their Ceremonies of Prayer, there without. The Moores and Turkes are permitted to haue a little more ſight, which is at the top where they let downe the Oyle for the Lampe, the Lampe is a very great one continually burning. An exceeding old Caſtle (but of late time ſomewhat repaired) ioyneth to it on the one ſide: a Moſchea that is a Church of Moores on the other, and it ſeemeth to bee within part of the Moſchea. At the right ſide of Hebron on the Mount, is the Sepulcher of Ieſſe, the Father of Dauid, and in the Citie alſo is the Tombe of Abner. On the North ſide of Hebron is the Playne of Mamre, where hee receiued the Angels into his Tent.

This we went not to, but might perceiue it a pretie way off; and riding backe to Ieruſalem alſo wee ſaw the Lake of Sodom, and all the Countrey thereabouts: but thither wee went not. From thence the length of the Riuer Iordan, moſt pleaſant to behold in the way wee trauelled through the Countrey, yet was I not that I know of, at that very place where Iohn baptiſed our Sauiour Chriſt: notwithſtanding I waſhed my hands and head, and dranke of the Riuer in diuers places, as if you haue and doe marke this Diſcourſe, may bee perceiued.

Vpon thurſday the eight of Iuly, 1601. wee departed Ieruſalem; came backe to Beera or Beroth, then to Sichem the ninth day; but our Horſes, Camels, Mules and Aſſes, being very hot and wearie, wee ſtayed and refreſhed our ſelues and them at Iacobs * Well, which is about halfe or three quarters of a mile before yee come to Sichem. The Iewes are there alſo ſomewhat ceremonious, the water is excellent good & abundant, being hard by the high-way. There it was that our Sauiour talked with the Woman of Samaria. In ſight of this Well, two ſtones caſts off, are Ioſephs bones buried, where I had beene with the Iewes at my laſt being in Sichem, as I went to Ieruſalem.

The eleuenth, wee came to Ienin Paradiſe. The twelfth, to the ancient Citie * Tiberias, this is built cloſe by the ſhoare ſide. From thence wee might ſee moſt excellent pleaſantly, appearing aboue the tops of other high Mountaynes, the Citie Bethel vpon his Mountayne, the higheſt Mountayne neare vnto it, whereas I ſay they affirme, that the Meſſias will come; thoſe for the pleaſurableſt Mountaynes which in my life time I haue ſeene, and Libanus for the hugeſt; ouer top of which Libanus I haue paſſed, (the Playne of Baalgad at the bottome of Mount Libanus towords Damaſcus, is the ſpaciouſeſt; but the Playne wherein Damaſcus is built, is the pleaſanteſt that any eye can in earth behold.) The Sea Tiberias, is in my iudgement at the moſt fiue or ſixe miles * ouer in the broadeſt place. Heere it was that our Sauiour and Peter fiſhed, and went ouer when hee fed the fiue thouſand. Wee onely remayned heere foure houres, in which time we caſt crummes of Bread into that little Sea, and diuers Fiſh like Carps (but like Carps in ſcales and of colour, but they were ſomewhat longer and thinner bellied) came in abundance to the ſhoare, ſome ſmall, ſome great: thence wee paſſed for * feare of Arabian Theeues, which are in troupes about thoſe Countries, pitching their Tents at diuers times in diuers Playnes and fruitfull places; liuing a little Common-wealth amongſt themſelues, ſubiect to no Law, begetting Children, and breeding vp all ſorts of Cattle for their vſe. They are of diuers Trades, as Smiths, Shoomakers, Weauers and ſuch like, and amongſt them haue excellent running Horſes, wherewith they often ride a Theeuing.

We came to Almenia, which hath beene a great Citie alſo, ſeuen or eight miles off, cloſe built by the Sea ſide, along through which runneth a Channell of Iordan; this vndoubtedly is Capernaum, for that it is ouer the point of the Land, there wee lodged. So riding vp the higher part of the Countrey, wee came to a reaſonable great Towne, which may well bee Nazareth, from thence to Cana. Wee ſaw the Riuer Arnon, ſo called as ſome ſayd, being a Riuer it ſeemed to vs a Poole, apart from this Iordan; which Iordan, as I haue ſayd before, runneth through the Lake of Sodome, and alike through the Sea Tiberias, which is Genezaret, paſſeth a Bridge and falleth into another little Sea or rather great Poole called Cadis. Then progreſſed we through another excellent ſcituation where had beene ſome famous Citie, like to be Gilgall or Nazaret. For the Patriarch * of Ieruſalem told me, that comming from Damaſcus ward, we muſt

* Eſhcol Grapes ſtill great bunches.

* Iacobs Well is iuſt ſquare, about foure yards euery way, built of ſome ſquared ſtones and not very deepe, but excellent cleere and coole, ſo flat at the top that we did ſit vpon it for our eaſe, recreation and refreſhment, the ſpace of one houre parlying.

* Memorandum, that my honourable and moſt honeſt Iew, in a kind ſort to doe mee pleaſure, was content to goe out of the ſtraight way ſixe miles, to ſhew me the Citie Tiberias, and Capernaum, where wee lodged that night.

* And yet by reaſon of the very high Land on the other ſide, I may well imagine the breadth to bee three or foure leagues.

* And yet in the foure houres that wee there repoſed, we fell to the prouant wee brought, and we got foure or fiue of thoſe Fiſhes freſh out of that Riuer Iordan, and did broyle them vpon hot coales, that of wood wee had quickly made for that purpoſe, and I did eate my part of them ſo broyled.

* Of this Patriarch I had to his power moſt louing and kinde entertaynment: out of his Librarie I had a very old and torne as it was, old new Teſtament Manuſcript Greeke, for which I gaue him ſixe Chequins in Gold, and I gaue it to my Brother Doctor Sanderſon, yet they the Tranſlaters of Pauls Epiſtles at his houſe in Saint Laurence Pariſh, did make ſome vſe thereof in their Tranſlation. D. Barlo, Biſhop. D. Hutchinſon. D. Spencer. D. Felton. D. Tighe. Maſter Rabbet. Maſter Fenton, &c.

needs goe through Nazaret. So that I ſay, either this was Nazareth, or that formerly ſpoken of; but my Iewes, neither Turkes, could directly aduiſe me which it was.

So by diuers Townes wee came againe to Safet, which is Bethel, before ſpoken of, this was the thirteenth of Iuly, heere the Iewes ſtayed to keepe a ſolemne Sabbath, were viſited of all the Prieſts in generall, who are cloathed in an outward habit of White, but made of Goates hayre, as are our Grogerains, and ſome of them in white Grogeraine. With great modeſtie and holy ſhew they came one by one to ſalute, imbracing and conferring ſome ſmall time, and ſo departing. Theſe my companions ſtranger Iewes, bought many Bookes, ſome two or three Mules ladings, which were holy Bookes of the declaration of their Law. To Chriſtians they will not ſell of ſome of them for any money, I imagine they thinke it a ſinne ſo to doe. Here they gaue almes, much money, and likewiſe ſod meate, great Caldrons full for the Poore, to euery one a peece at a time, with a loafe of Bread and Pottage, with alſo at other times money; this they did three times in the ſixe dayes wee there remayned. I thinke they ſpent, I ſay the chiefeſt Iew called Abraham Coen, hee I ſay, gaue away heere at leaſt two thouſand Dollers, and one thouſand at Ieruſalem, others in his company according to their abilitie reaſonable ſummes. This all to the poorer ſort with their owne hands; but to the greater Doctors and Schooles, they allow yeerely ſtipend, moſt or all Iewes of abilitie whereſoeuer they remayne, although they goe not to the Holy Land, yet ſuch as haue beene there and ſafely returned, giue great voluntary Almes. For once in their life time, the Iewes ſay, they are bound by the Law of Moſes to goe thither, if they can or bee able, and the Bones of many dead [a] Iewes are carryed to the Holy Land and there buryed. Wee were fraughted with Wools from Conſtantinople to Sidon, in which Sackes as moſt certaynly was told to mee, were many Iewes bones put into little Cheſts, but vnknowne to any of the ſhip. The Iewes our Merchants told mee of them at my returne from Ieruſalem to Saphet; but earneſtly intreated mee not to tell it, for feare of preuenting them another time.

[b] Wee trauelling betweene Saſa and Conetra, I was told by ſome, that about this very place it was where Saint Paul was ſtrooken off of his Horſe, but I could not tell how to beleeue them, yet ſure I am, that wee did twice paſſe ouer that very way.

The nineteenth, wee came to [b] Conetra, the twentieth to Saſa, and the one and twentieth wee arriued at Damaſco; entring in at the Gate called Toma, which leadeth to Iobar. From Damaſcus the eleuenth of Auguſt, going out at the Gate called Amara. Without the ſayd Gate are two great Mountaynes, one of them wee mounted, it is called Dobonet, where on the top there is vnder a Cube not leaded, a great huge Foote of ſtone ſet vp, in ſigne (as the Turkes ſay) that Mahomet was there, and viewed the Valley wherein the Citie of Damaſcus is built, calling it Paradiſe, moſt aſſuredly thence to ſee the ſame all along the lly plaine Valley, being rarely mixed with many Trees, moſt gliſtering ſiluer ſided ſhaking leaues, eye cannot behold a more pleaſanter ſight, the Citie being long and cloſe as it were to the ſide of the right hand Mountayne. As wee came towards the ſame from Sidon, ſeemed at our view ſo mingled amongſt the branches all alongſt the Valley, that out of doubt branched Damaske tooke the name thereof, if not patternd by it. The other Mountayne is called Dora, ſo wee came to Seraglio a Village.

Pleaſantneſſe of Damaſcus.

Branched Damaske.

The one and twentieth, we paſſed the Mountaynes now called Haghbet and Romani, in Scripture called Halacke, where a farre off wee ſaw the end of Hermon. Cloſe vnder the ſide of this Mountayne Halacke, open to the very midſt of the Playne which is betweene it and the Mountayne Libanon, is a very great and moſt ancient Citie, called now Balbarka, in which at this day ſtandeth a row of very great Pillers, ſet vp as is ſaid in Salomons time. This Citie in Scripture is called Baalgad, old, ruined and vninhabited it is as I remember. An old Piller alſo there is in the middeſt of the Plaine built of ſquared Stones, yet doubtleſſe of much later time then the other Pillers that wee beheld from the Citie. This ſurely is the Valley of Gad. The flat Playne from hill to hill, may bee in bredth ſome ten, eleuen or twelue miles; the length double: it ſeemes the pleaſanteſt leuell (as it were a * Sea of Land) that I haue euer ſeene, it farre paſſeth the Playne of Antioch.

* Sea of Land, the Hils a farre off, riſing aboue this Playne to our appearance as if we ſhould deſcrie land, we ſayling as it were vpon the Sea, the Valley is ſo very plain and ſpacious, moſt pleaſant to behold.

The thirteenth, wee came to a Village called Ainat, at the foote (or rather ſome fiue miles aſcended) of Mount Libanus, which ſaid Mountaines the tedioueſt and I thinke the higheſt trauelled in the world: being the hotteſt time of the yeere wee paſſed the very higheſt * top, the foureteenth day of Auguſt, 1601. yet ſome Snow was there remayning, and ſo extreame cold that my hands were benumd and ſeemed white all ouer, like vnto a kinde of Froſt, but being deſcended three or foure miles, were againe reuiued as formerly.

* There is a more common way and lower road-way, but that makes more miles before we come to Tripoly.

At after-noone, wee came to a Village ſome ſeuen or eight miles from Tripoli, called Aigdel, there wee repoſed halfe an houre, and ſo paſſed ſome old Townes, among the which is Acon, a very ſtrong Fort and Caſtle full of great Ordnance, heere the Emier of Tripoli hath his abode. And then wee had ſight of one plot of ground in thoſe Mountaines, wherein are growing diuers Cedar [c] Trees: theſe are of indifferent bigneſſe but not very huge, the bodie ſtreight, and branches ſpreading of very excellent ſhew, the broadeſt row of them loweſt, and ſo rowes of branches going vp narrower & narrower, vntill at the top they do ſeeme in a manner ſharpe, the fruit growing vpright, vpon the very branches (very finely) the leaues in forme of Roſemary, but rather ſlenderer and ſharper, yet doe they grow in pretie little bunches pert vpright together with the Fruit, but the fruit beareth vp aboue the leaues, with a very ſmall wrie ſtalke, as it were ſet into the ſide of the branch. That ſame night very late wee came to Tripoly ſafely, the Lord bee euer praiſed.

[c] Being at Tripoly, in Anno 1586. I went diuers times vpon pleaſure vp thoſe Libanus Mountayns and gathered of thoſe Cedar branches before I fell ſicke.

Memorandum, that, I noted that in all my Pilgrimage, the grauer and better ſort of Iewes, in whoſe companie I trauelled, would neuer reaſon with mee of Chriſt, for offending or being diſpleaſant vnto me, for without ſcoffing they neuer talke of him or his followers. Yet one day I had from the mouthes of the meaner ſort (aged men who profeſſed knowledge in their Iewiſh Religion) an Argument wherein is conſideration, and in my opinion a kinde of acknowledgement and confeſſion.

They ſaid that there was a Stone in the Lords Houſe at Ieruſalem, in the middeſt of the world, called Euenaſediya, vpon which there was written the Name of God, and that whoſoeuer could get in thither, and returne with it written, might haue what he required and doe what he would. Which they ſaid, IESVS, Ioſeph the Carpenters Sonne by extraordinary meanes got vnto, and wrote it, and cutting his owne thigh, ſo hid it, and eſcaped out of the Temple and ſayd, Yea aſdoni anni. But was preſently anſwered, Mamzer bemitadah. Which interpreted as the Iewes told mee, is, ſaith CHRIST, Let the people ſerue mee. The Oracle anſwered, After death not in life. Then ſay they, at firſt hee began to flie, and make of Earth Birds, with many more ſuch like workes, as theſe Iewes to mee confeſſed, in an opprobrious and very ſcornfull manner; adding further, that they maruelled how wee Chriſtians could bee ſo led, by one Peter, and Paul, Iohn, Marie, &c. Further adding, that it was not poſſible for the beſt Learned amongſt all Chriſtians, to expound the meaning of the Letter A. and that their Doctors could, onely vpon that firſt letter write whole Volumes, to be ſtudied in vntill the end of the world. And they knew they ſaid, that Ieruſalem ſhould bee built againe, and their Meſſias come to make them Princes, as they haue beene in times paſt: but then to Gouerne all the world, and that the other diſperſed Tribes who at this day they ſay, doe liue in Ethiopia but cannot come out thence, by reaſon of a Sea of Sand, which parts Egypt and Ethiopia, the ſaid Sea flowiug and is continually troubled, except euery ſeuenth day, (which is their Sabbath) ſo that they cannot paſſe it, vntill the time appointed by Adonai (God Almightie.) Many other opinions they haue, as that God ſends their ſoules if they haue not at firſt forgiueneſſe, twice more into other new Bodies in the world, to amend and become better, and then either receiueth or rejecteth them according to their deſerts; and that in what part ſoeuer of the world they dye and are buryed, their Bodies muſt all riſe to Iudgement in the Holy Land, out of the Valley of Iehoſophat, which cauſeth that the greater and richer ſort of them, haue their Bones conuayed to ſome part thereof by their kindred or friends. By which meanes, they are freed of a labour to ſcrape thither through the ground, which with their nayles they (ſay they) hold they muſt, who are not there buried nor conuayed thither by others. Other talke I had from them, offering as little taſte of truth, as this laſt reaſonleſſe likelihood, So I them left to become wiſer and better, it Goodneſſe will, who in all bee euer glorified; and wee Chriſtians, by our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt ſanctified and ſaued, our ſinnes being drowned in his Blood, by the ſpirit of true Beliefe in his powerfull Predeſtination; Glory, glory, glory, for euer and euer and euer. Amen.

Iewiſh blaſphemies, which yet argue that they beleeue hee wrought Miracles, &c.

Iewiſh boaſting and vaine hopes.

Iewiſh dreams: themſelues are a ſandie Sea.

Tranſmigration of Soules.

Thus haue I giuen thee the Voyages of Maſter Iohn Sanderſon. Touching the difficulties of entrance into Ieruſalem, I thought good to adde this which followeth; the rather that my Countreymen may be aduiſed, before they aduenture this Ieroſolymitan Pilgrimage; Superſtition on the one ſide and Tyrannie on the other endangering the beſt Pilgrimage, which is the peaceable way of a good Conſcience to that Ieruſalem which is aboue. For if a man doth not giue content to the Friers, which a good Conſcience cannot doe (except ſome of their Patrons and Benefactors letters, or other extraordinary prouiſion helpe) you ſee theſe ſuperſtitious Friers to proue malicious lyers, as here they ſlandred Maſter Sanderſon to bee a Iew, and Maſter Timberlie to bee a Spie; that I mention not foure other Engliſhmen not long before, ſeene to enter their Monaſterie but neuer ſeene to come foorth, as the Patriarch of Ieruſalem confidently affirmed to Maſter Sanderſon. Hence it is that Maſter Timberlie affirmeth, that none enter the Citie but protected by them, which others hauing otherwiſe entred by extraordinary courſe diſauow, and yet may that ſpeech (vnderſtood of ordinarie entrance) bee true. For Maſter Timberlies paſſage wee will adde it to the end: for Maſter Sanderſon, thus hee writeth.

Now Maſter Purchas, take a memorandum of mee, that my firſt dayes entertaynment into Ieruſalem was ſomewhat croſſe, in that I croſſed two Friers which came to bid mee welcome. I ſaid that I had not to vſe of their kindneſſe, becauſe I was recommended to the Greeke Patriarch, ſo in ſome colour they left mee, but a Turke preſently after came in the Name of the Baſſa, and tooke my Sword from my ſide, which had coſt me thirtie Dollers in Damaſco, alleadging that no Chriſtian ought to enter the Citie Gates, with his Sword girt about him, but that I might haue borne it in my hand. And yet their Cuſtome is, to priuiledge the Iewes in that caſe. Thus I loſt my Sword and after was ledde to the Caia of the Baſſa, who related to mee the errour I had committed, and further demanded of me a Preſent for his Maſter, and another for himſelfe: then I ſhewed him the Great Turkes Letter, which imported a command to vſe mee reſpectiuely whereſoeuer I came in his Dominions: he read the Letter with great regard, and ſaid that he had not, neither would he offer me any abuſe, nor any in Hieruſalem ſhould doe me wrong, and that he would paſſe ouer my errour, concerning the preſumption to enter the Citie Gate with my Sword by my ſide, if in courteſie I would beſtow a Veſture of Veluet vpon the Baſſa his Maſter, and a Garment of Satten vpon himſelfe: which I denied to doe, hee then preſently commited me to the Subbaſſie againe and griſly Turke, and his raſcally terrible Attendants to bee laid in Priſon: but the Iewes in whoſe company I had trauelled fell downe at his feet, and entreated for me, often kiſſing his hand & Garment, praying him to pardon my bold behauiour and words of diſpleaſure with much whiſpering; they agreed for mee that I ſhould giue him twelue Chickquines in Gold; wherewith, together alſo the loſſe of my Sword, I eſcaped at that time. But two dayes after the Friers ſet vpon mee againe, and feed the Turkes luſtily and largely, thinking to doe me ſome diſpleaſure, but effected not their purpoſe, for I ſtill defied them and their Padre Guardian, which in a manner broke their very galls, only they did put mee to ſome trouble and charge. And I in their deſpight kept company with the Patriarke of the Greekes and his Coloyros, (I meane Prieſts and Friers) and I went not at all to the Romiſh Clergie, nor viſited their Padre Guardian (though the poore Greeke Patriarke did very much, and often intreate mee to it) at which they were ſo exceedingly diſtempered, that that my ſcorne of them was written of to Tripoly, they certifying an old Frier thereof, all paſt on my part in Hieruſalem, which Tripoly Frier at my comming ducked very kindly, and came to our Houſe to bid mee welcome from the Holy Land: yet he with a Fowling-peece ſhot made at me two ſundry times, out of an Italians Houſe where he kept, I being trayned abroad by a Iew, a Broker an old acquaintance of mine, whoſe name was Daniell Gallana, but as God would haue it, miſſed both the times: the firſt time I ſuſpected nothing, although the Bullet fell within my length, and ſlapt againſt a Tree about the Root; the Iew taking occaſion to goe ſomewhat before me; we hearing the report, I told him how neere the bullet fell: hee ſaid that it was Signior Franciſco, ſhooting at ſome Bird from the Tarras, or out of the Window, and I then imagined no other. Some few dayes after walking abroad againe the ſecond time, about the very ſame place, another bullet whirlde very neere before me, when on a ſudden the Iew lingered behind me; then I miſtruſted, and walked no more that way, nor at all againe with that Iew, And prayſed God in my heart for that eſcape, as for many other former Deliuerances, from Murthering, Poyſoning, Shipwrack, &c. with intolerable agrieuances and terrible temptations, in the courſe of my Pilgrimage.

I Haue in my hands three originall Certificates or Letters of commendations written in behalfe of the ſaid Maſter Iohn Sanderſon, two in Moderne Greeke, the third in Talmudicall Ebrew. The firſt, from the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, to the Patriarke of Ieruſalem, commending him to his care; the ſecond, a Teſtimoniall of the Patriarke of Ieruſalem, to this ſenſe.

Sophronius by the mercy of God, Patriarke of the holy Citie Ieruſalem. Maſter Iohn Sanderſon, Engliſhman, hath come to the holy Citie of Ieruſalem, hath there done his Deuotion, hath viſited the Sepulchre, Bethlehem, and Gethſemani, Mount Oliuet, the Aſcention, Bethania, the Sepulchre of Lazarus, Iordan, Hebron, and the reſt of the holy places where Ieſus Chriſt walked: and this preſent Writing is made to teſtifie the truth. Amen. Dated the Yeere of the World 7111. The eleuenth of Iuly. Sophronius by the mercie of God Patriarke of Ieruſalem.

This was written, ſayth our Author, by the Patriarke his owne hand. Hee was a graue man with a grey beard, had eight or ten Attendants: at the firſt meeting in his Monaſterie, offered his hand to kiſſe after their faſhion; Maſter Sanderſon vſing his owne, kiſſing his hand, and touching therewith the Patriarkes, wherewith he ſeemed well pleaſed. The occaſion of his Iewiſh ſocietie he thus deliuereth.

When it was determined, that Maſter Beſt the Captaine and Maſter of the Mermaid, at our arriuall at Sidon, with three other and my ſelfe ſhould haue gone for Ioppa, and ſo to Ieruſalem, but the Maſter, by danger of Rockes, and riſing of Winde, thought not good to leaue the ſhip, and the other three paſſingers would not; ſo that I was faine (holding my determination) to poſt alone without fellow Chriſtian, in company of Honourable Iewes; in which iourney by the Principall, named Abraham Coen, who went to accompany his Wifes Father to Saphet, which is at Bethel; and there to end his dayes, after two thouſand Dollors at leaſt diſtributed in charity to thoſe Colledges of Iewes; We went to Ieruſalem, and in our returne wee tooke Tiberias and Capernaum in our way, which was ſomewhat out of the way, direct to Damaſcus. But this my companion Iew Merchant, and a dweller in Sio and Smirna, was ſo reſpectiue kind and courteous, that neuer in any Chriſtians company of what degree ſoeuer I euer did receiue better content: for morall carriage towards all, vnderſtanding and honeſtie; this Iew was without company, I kept his company three moneths together by reaſon that from Sidon wee went to Damaſcus, to diſburthen him and ſome of his, of at leaſt ten thouſand Chequins, which he left there to be employed in commodities till our returne thither againe: So ouer Libanus to Tripoly wee went, and there the Gentile Iew with his Damaſco commodities and Attendants, departed by Sea to Sio, not without moiſt eyes betweene Iew and Chriſtian, when wee parted company. A moſt deuout, zealous, and ſoft hearted man he was; I cannot ſpeake too much good of him in regard of his great humanitie and extraordinary charitie, his meaſure being more in thoſe performances, then is to be found in many of vs Chriſtians.

The Iewiſh Teſtimonie written in Hebrew, and ſubſcribed by diuers Iewes, I haue here added.

THeſe are to declare the Iourney of the Worſhipfull Maſter Iohn Sandeiſon Engliſh Gentleman, who came hither vnto Ieruſalem the holy Citie (may it ſhortly bee built) with the Carauan and company of honourable Iewes, vpon Tueſday the tenth of the Moone Tamas, Anno 5361. of the Creation of the World; and went with them vnto many holy places, and hath brought with him alſo Letters of fauour from the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, for the Patriarke of this place; and he hath ſent together with him of his men; and they haue ſhewed him all the places of their Deuotion, and they brought him to Bethelem. And to declare the truth I haue written, and vnder-written this with my owne hand, for to giue knowledge thereof vnto all the people of his Citie, & the Gentlemen of his places: and all the places which he went to, he hath kept a true note of vnder his owne hand. I that write this in Ieruſalem the holy Citie (may it be ſhortly built) The ſeuenteenth of the nominated Moone and Yeere. I Gedelia Cordoero (he was the Hacham * or Prieſt) Abraham Coen, the ſonne of Iſack Coen, an Inhabitant in Sio (this * was Rabbi Abraham, the chiefe Iew of the company) Salomon Marabi, an Inhabitant of Tirria. Iacob the Sonne of Dauid, a dweller in Smirna, Abram Aluo, a dweller in Conſtantinople; this ancient Iew was their Cooke all the iourney. Moſe Raſimo, a dweller in Damaſco, who of deuotion went with vs to the Holy Land, and in whoſe Houſe in Damaſco, wee did remayne and lodge both at our going and comming, and thence we went to Tripoly ouer the higheſt top of Libanus, where was ſome Snow remayning, though it were in the heate of Summer, namely, the fourteenth day of Auguſt, 1601. from the bottome to the top, they accounted it to be at the leaſt eight miles vp: and about ten miles downe to the Towne of Tripoly. Salomon di Vrbino, a dweller in Conſtantinople. Iſack; he was the ſonne of the aboue named Iacob, he was of yeeres one or two and twentie, and yet his Father had much feare of him; in trauelling thoſe Sodomiticall places, becauſe as he ſaid, the Boy was beardleſſe. The old Iew Father in Law to Rabbi Abraham, we left to die at Bethel; which they do call Saphet Caſa di Dios. At our firſt entrance thither, the Iewiſh women cried from the tops of their Houſes; Sei ben venito à la caſa di Dios Rabbi Abraham.

I haue this Certificate in Rabbinicall Hebrew, with the Iewiſh Subſcriptions, and the Italian tranſlation thereof.

MEletus, by the mercie of God, Pope and Patriarke of Alexandria: Moſt Illuſtrious Ambaſſador of the Renowned Queene of England, my beloued ſonne, theſe dayes are ſo peruerſe by the iniquitie of our times, that if our Lord preuent not, there is no hope at all of any good. The Archbiſhop of Efaſus, hath attempted to get alſo the Archbiſhopricke of Smirna, from the Biſhop that holds it, hee being abſent, to me it appeares vniuſt, neither is it iuſt, and it is alſo prohibited by the Vniuerſall Councels, that one be conſecrated in two Chaires, though hee ſhould be worthy; not ſuch a one as he is. The matter is alſo to be conſidered of, in preſence of the other both Actor and accuſed; it appeares that theſe Muſſelmen Turkes doe the contrary, they came to mee that I ſhould vnder write a matter that is not iudged of; a thing alſo which they cannot iudge of: I denied once, twice, aud diuers times; euen now a gallant fellow came to me with the ſame writing, and ſaid that your Lordſhips Neighbour Signior Mahomet Aga, by one of his Capogies, ſent alſo a command that I ſhould vnder-write. I haue abſtayned purpoſing to come this Euening for to haue likewiſe the opinion of your moſt Illuſtrous Lordſhip; for I am reſolued to depart hence, rather then to haue to doe with men void of all conſcience. Let your Lordſhips write vnto me, and if you find the diſtaſte of this miſerable time of ours; bewaile you alſo that wee haue beene borne in ſuch an Age, worſe then the World of Iron ſtormie.

Hauing mentioned two Eaſterne Patriarkes Letters, I thought fit to adde this alſo, though of another ſubiect.

Our Lord bleſſe you and ſaue you, this ſixe and twentieth of May, 1593. From the Cell of the Patriarke of Alexandria.

This holy Patriarke Padre Melete, was a very comely blacke long bearded man. He neuer did eate any ſort of fleſh in all his life time. He often frequented, and was very inward with our Ambaſſadour Maſter Edward Barton; I haue heard him reaſon often, and ſeene him pray one time, in the Ambaſſadors chamber together with vs: he ſpake in Greeke, which Maſter Barton did little vnderſtand; my ſelfe nothing at all except Theos, &c. When he hath eaten with the Ambaſſador, our Table was euer furniſhed with the beſt fiſh, and not the weakeſt Wine; yet euer he had a young Prieſt for his Taſter of all the Wine he dranke; and all the while that the cup was at the Patriarkes mouth, the ſixe other Coloyros that waited on him at Meales, did euer pray in a ſoft kind of voice. This man was very meeke in the ſhew of his behauiour towards all ſorts and manner of men, which amongſt his Greekes made him to be much reſpected and beloued. Yet did he aſpire and got by Maſter Bartons meanes and his money, to be Patriarke of Conſtantinople, which ſoone he was weary of. The Turkes Miniſters did ſo much and extraordinarily exact vpon him, ſo that before his death hee reſigned it; and went from Conſtantinople, and did deceaſe at his old Patriarkado Alexandria, and there lyeth buried. Of all theſe Moderne Greekes, I haue not heard of a better man; moſt certainly he was a true Chriſtian Profeſſor, although the times permitted not that he might declare it, except in priuate, to ſome of Learning and vnderſtanding. Maſter Edward Barton the Ambaſſador, as Maſter Henry Lillo did tell mee, who did ſee it, ſaid, that few dayes before his deceaſe, the Patriarke and he did weepe vpon one anothers neckes, he kiſſed the dying man, who had ſeriouſly recommended a Kinſman, and other his Seruants vnto him, pretending (that of the monies which by his promiſes he was behind with him) his deſire was that he would be good vnto his ſaid Seruants, and ſo they parted.

Aged 45: M. Sanderſons report of P. Melete.

I haue here added alſo a Letter from Maſter Biddulphe, or Biddle; dated, Aleppo, October the two and twentieth, Anno Dom. 1601. I could alſo haue added other notes with M. Sandersons Charts and Delineations of the Citie and Temple of Hieruſalem; but I dare not be too tedious, for which cauſe I alſo omit diuers Letters written in thoſe parts to and from him.

IN right heartie manner I commend mee vnto you (good friend Maſter Sanderſon) with heartie thankes for all your former kindneſſe towards mee, and lately towards my poore Brother who hath written to me of your kindneſſe towards him. I pray you impute it not vnto mee for vngratefulneſſe, or forgetfulneſſe that I haue not ſaluted you with my Letters all this time. The laſt newes I heard of you was, that you were gone from Tripoly to Cyprus, and from thence to Zante, otherwiſe you had heard from me ſooner, and ſo much the rather becauſe we haue both commenced Hogies in Hierusalem, which Degree no Vniuerſitie in the World can giue beſides. But if your Hogiſhip hath beene as chargeable to you, as mine hath beene to mee, you will take as little delight to remember it as I doe, for mine coſt mee two hundred and ſeuentie Dollers. And at my returne to Aleppo, I heard of the loſſe of the Rebecca, wherein I had a bale of Nutmegs, beſides a Carpet, and other Tokens which I ſent to my friends.

I haue beene ſundry times ſorrie that euer I came out of England, or that I had not gone with you to Conſtantinople. For I haue had here no profit beſides my bare wages, and ſcarce that. But great diſcontentment ſundry wayes, eſpecially of late by that (.) Wherefore as you haue beene my friend euer ſince our firſt acquaintance vndeſeruedly, ſo I pray you continue. And I, although I bee no other wayes able to pleaſure you, yet I will not be vnmindfull of you in my Prayers, that God would grant you continuall health, long life and much happineſſe in this life, and euerlaſting felicitie in the life to come.

Yours in the Lord wholy to command,

William Biddle.

I pray commend me to Maſter Timberley, Iohn Brochurſt, William Pate, &c.

AFter ſo often mention of Maſter Timberley, I haue here giuen you ſome Extracts of his Iournall, (the whole the Reader may ſee printed) Before the Impreſſion I writ out of a Manuſcript many yeers agoe the whole Iournall, of which thus much I haue here preſented in memorie of him and Maſter Burrell.

Chap. XVII.

A Report of the Voyage of Maſter Henrie Timberley * from Cairo in Egypt, to Ieruſalem in fiftie dayes 1601.

* Or Timberlake.

M. Burrell.

I Departed from Grand Cairo, the ninth of March 1600. which day I came to the place where the Virgin Mary ſtayed with our Sauiour when ſhee fledde into Egypt. From thence with my fellow Traueller Maſter Burrell in our Pilgrimes Weed, came that night to a Towne named Canko, where wee lodged that night in a yard vpon the bare ground, wanting no Fleas nor Lice. The next day we came into the Land of Goſhen, and here wee found a company of Turkes Iewes, and Chriſtians, about ſeuen hundred and fiftie, which were all bound ouer the Deſerts of Arabia for Damaſco. Among which were ſome two and twentie Greekes and Armenians, bound for Hieruſalem, of which company I was right glad. Here at this Towne wee ſtayed two dayes and one night, called in their Language Philbits, at which Towne I went into the Houſes where I ſaw the ſecret of hatching Chickens [m] by heate artificiall in greater abundance then I had beforе ſeene at Cairo.

[m] If Thunder or troubled Aire happen, all die. They all haue a claw too much or too little. The Hitcher hath the tenth for his Fornace & paines.

The thirteenth of March, we departed from Philbits, and trauelled all night in company of the Carauan of Damaſco. And the fourteenth, at nine of the clocke we pitched our Tents at Bohaire, in the Land of Goſhen. From thence that night, and pitched at (   ) on the Eaſt of Goſhen, on the edge of the Deſerts. Here we ſtayed two dayes for feare of the wild Arabians, departed the ſeuenteenth: and that night paſſed ouer a great Bridge, vnder the which the ſalt water ſtandeth. This water commeth out of the Sea from the parts of Damiata, and was cut out of that place by mens hand ſome one hundred and fiftie miles into the Land by Ptolomeus King of Egypt, intending to bring the Mediterranean and Red Seas together: but foreſeeing hereby the drowning of all the Countrey, hee left and built this Bridge which is the parting of Egypt and Arabia. We were no ſooner paſt this place, but we were ſet vpon by the Arabians. Notwithſtanding we were aboue 1000, wee had a Camell laden with Callicoes taken away, and foure men ſore hurt, and one of the foure mortally. Thus they ranne away with their prey, and wee could not remedie it becauſe it was in the night. So the eighteenth in the morning we pitched at a Well of brackiſh waters. In this vprore in the night paſt my fellow Maſter Burrell eſcaped very hardly. Here wee repoſed our ſelues till three of the clocke in the afternoone called Lazera. For the Arabians and Egyptians diuide the day but into foure parts. And then we departed, and the next morning pitched at a Caſtle, in the Deſerts called Cattay. This is one of the three Caſtles which the Turkes keepe in the Deſerts to defend the Trauellers from the Arabians, and therefore here we pay a certayne taxe, that is to ſay, ſixtie pieces of ſiluer, and two pence the piece for the head of man or boy, and ſeuentie ſixe for a laden Camell, and fourteene for a Mule. Hence we departed and pitched at another brackiſh Well, thence at another. The twentieth of March at the ſecond Caſtle called Arris, here our taxe was twentie pieces of ſiluer by the head, a Camell thirtie. From hence with many Souldiers to conduct vs to the third Caſtle: and ſo making a long Iourney of foure and twentie houres, we arriued at a Caſtle called Raphael, here we payd tenne pieces of Siluer, and a beaſt twentie. In the one and twentieth we pitched our Tents at Gaza in Paleſtina, a goodly fruitfull Countrey, beeing now cleere of the Deſerts. Here did I ſee the place, as they ſay, where Samſon pulled downe the two Pillars. Here we paid two and twentie for the beaſt, and tenne for the head. The two and twentieth we pitched at a place called of the Arabians, Canny, of the Chriſtians Berſheba. Here we paid two for the head, and foure for the beaſt. The three and twentieth we pitched vpon a Greene vnder the wals of Ramoth Gilead. Hence the next morning, I with the other Chriſtians departed toward Hieruſalem, the Carauan to Damaſco, yet we pitcht ſhort that night at a place in Arabia, called Cude chelaneb, being fifteene miles from Hebron, from Hieruſalem fiue little miles. Hence wee departed in the morning being our Lady day, and at nine of the clocke I ſaw Hieruſalem, kneeling ſaid the Lords Prayer, ſinging we went to the Weſt Gate, and then ſtayed. For it is not lawfull for any Chriſtian to enter not admitted. Then Maſter Burrell requeſted mee to ſay that I was a Greeke, only to auoid going to Maſſe: but I not hauing the Greeke Tongue, refuſed abſolutely ſo to doe; affirming to him, euen at the Gates, that I would neither deny my Countrey nor Religion, ſo that when they asked what we were, Maſter Burrell anſwered in the Greeke Tongue that hee was a Greeke, and I an Engliſhman, ſo hee was admitted to the Greeke Patriarch, and I was taken and caſt into Priſon, after that I had ſtayed an houre at the Gate, for the Turkes did all denie that they had heard either of my Queene or Countrey, or that ſhee paid them any tribute. Then the Pater Guardian, who is their defender of all the Chriſtians Pilgrimes, and the principall actor of my impriſonment, becauſe I would not offer my ſelfe vnder his protection, but ſaid I would rather bee protected vnder the Turke then vnder him, made the Turke ſo much my foe, that they ſuppoſed I was a ſpie, and ſo would not let mee out of the dungeon. Now for my deliuerance you ſhall vnderſtand, that being at Ramoth Gilead I went to a Fountaine to waſh my foule linnen, in which time one came and called me by my name, and tooke my linnen from mee to helpe me. Whereat I maruelling: What Captaine, quoth hee, in the Frank tongue, I hope you haue not forgotten me. It is not yet fortie dayes ſince you landed mee at Alexandria among the paſſengers, which you brought from Argier in your Ship called the Troian. Here is alſo another that you brought. I asked if he dwelt there, hee anſwered no, but that hee and his fellow were going in the Carauan to Damaſko, which they call Sham: and from thence to Bagdet, which wee call Babylon, and ſo to Mecha to make a Hadge, for ſo they are called when they haue beene at Mecha. He dwelt in Fez in Barbary. After better view I ſomewhat remembred him to haue beene of thoſe three hundred and ſixtie I brought to thoſe parts. This brought me to the other, which both agreed that the other ſhould goe in the Carauan, and this with me to Ieruſalem.

This Moore accompanying me, when he ſaw that I was in priſon, wept, and bid me be of good comfort, and away he went to the Baſſa of the Citie, and to the Saniack, and tooke his oath that I was a Mariner in a Ship that had brought two hundred and fiftie, or three hundred Moores into Egypt, from Argeir and Tunis which came to go for Mecha. The Moore, becauſe he was a Muſſelman ſo preuailed, that hee came that night to the priſon with ſixe Turkes, and called mee to the doore, and there told me, that if I would go to the houſe of the Pater Guardian, and reſt in his protection, I ſhould onely hold a Waxe candle, to which I conſented, and ſo paying the charges of the priſon departed, and went to the Pater Guardians Monaſtery. He bad mee very welcome, and ſaid, hee maruelled that I ſhould ſo much erre from Chriſtianitie, as to put my ſelfe rather vnder the Turkes protection, then vnder his. I told him I did it becauſe I would not goe to Maſſe; here hath beene, ſaith hee, many Engliſh, but Catholikes, and told the Turke at the gate they were French-men or Britons; for the Turke vnderſtandeth not the word Engliſh-men. About twilight came Maſter Burrell, although hee profeſſed himſelfe a Greeke, for all Chriſtians muſt here haue the Popiſh protection. We being thus together in the Court of the Monaſtery, there came to vs ſome ten or twelue fat Friers, with each a Waxe candle burning, and two to ſpare for mee and M. Burrel. Then another Frier brought a baſon of hot water, with Roſes and other flowers therein, and ſo there was a carpet ſpread, and chayres ſet with cuſhions in them. Then the Pater Guardian ſet vs downe, and gaue each of vs a candle in our hands. Then came a Frier and pulled off our hoſe and ſet the water on the carpet, and when hee began to waſh our feet, twelue Friers began to ſing, and ſo continued till our feet were waſhed: then they altogether brought vs ſinging to a Chappell in the ſaid Monaſtery: where one preached how meritorious a thing it was to come into the Holy Land. Hence they brought vs into a chamber to ſupper, which we for feare of poyſon doubted to eat. Thence to bed.

His obſeruations here are omitted, hauing before ſo largely out of others giuen you the ſight of theſe holies.

The ſixe and twentieth, we roſe early, and hauing ſaluted the Pater Guardian, hee appointed vs ſeuen Friers and a Trudgeman, and forth wee went to ſee the holy places within the Citie, except the Sepulchre, and at euery place where wee came we kneeled downe and ſaid the Lords Prayer, &c.

To conclude, it was propheſied that Ieruſalem ſhould bee an heape of ſtones: ſo is it come to paſſe that I could ſee no ground neere to the Citie by fifteene or ſixteene miles, the Plaine of Iericho excepted, but it is all a heape of ſtones, in ſuch abundance as may bee wondred at how the Inhabitants can liue: for proofe, we being within fiue miles of the Citie lodged in the field. I ſent my Moore to a place not farre hence to buy ſome bread, who returned with this anſwere, That he and his did neuer eat bread in all their liues. A man may goe twentie miles before hee finde a place to feed a horſe or a cow. But the countries about Paleſtina, Galilee, and Syria are all goodly plentifull countries, and Ieruſalem it ſelfe is the moſt barren that I ſaw in all my trauells, the deſarts excepted. I cannot compare any place in England to it, except the barreneſt place in Cornewal, where is nothing but rocks & ſtones, and daily by the report of the Inhabitants, the ſtones grow more and more: that Ieruſalem, and fifteene miles round about is but a heape of ſtones, and I am of opinion that it is quite forſaken of God; for the more ſort of Turkes there inhabiting vſe all filthineſſe, that the Chriſtians are forced to marry their children very young, yea euen at tenne yeeres of age; boyes they keepe openly, and ſhew them at their doores which hath the faireſt. Thus hauing my Patent ſealed with the great ſeale of the Guardian, and a Letter Patent that did ſhew I had waſht in the water of Iordan, the thirty one of March I departed from Ieruſalem in my Moores company, the ſame night I came to Ram. April 1. to Askalon, ſo to Gaza, where I hired two wilde Arabians, with two Dromedaries to carry me to Cayro; wee rode two vpon a beaſt: by the breaking away of one of our Dromedaries at our lighting, being left alone we were ſeazed by foure other Arabians, who would haue made prey of vs, had not the other their fellow theeues returned. I had nothing to loſe but my clothes, but promiſed to pay them twentie foure pieces of gold. The fourth, at night we came to theſe theeues Tents, where we had Camels milke. The next night to Salhia, where being ouerſhaken I hyred horſe. The Dromedarie is like a Camel, but that his head is leſſe, his legs longer, and a very ſmall necke, the difference being as betweene a Grey-hound and a Maſtiffe. In this foure dayes trauell I neuer ſaw them eat nor drinke, from which they ſay they will abſtaine ten dayes, but not ſo long from meat. Yet I thinke a good horſe will runne faſter but not continue with this beaſt. Their pace harder then a trot. I paid them, gaue my Moore ſixe pieces of gold, and ſent him to Mecha with the Carauan; ſo I came to Bolack, to Roſhetta, thence with a Ianizarie to the walls of Alexandria, in the eleuenth of April, 1601. I came aboord my Ship, hauing ended my Pilgrimage in fiftie dayes.

RIght Worſhipfull, my heartie commendations premiſed, &c. My laſt I ſent you was of the thirtieth day of May laſt paſt from Aleppo, and the next day after came from thence. And the ninteenth day of the laſt moneth arriued at Feloge, the which is one dayes iourney from hence; notwithſtanding ſome of our company came not thither vntill the laſt day of the laſt month, which was for want of camels to carry our goods, & ſince the goods came hither, as yet haue found but ſmall ſales; but towardes Winter I hope it will be better, notwithſtanding if I had mony to put away with the Carſie, we might haue very good Spices, for with mony there is here great good to be done, and without mony there is no great profit made. To morrow I meane to goe, with Gods helpe, from hence to Balſara, and ſo to Ormus, but my going to Ormus is more of neceſſitie, then for any good will I haue to the place: for I want a man to goe with me that hath the Indian tongue, the which is the onely cauſe of my going thither for to take one there: I was minded to haue gone from Balſara by Sea, to a place called Abowſher, and from thence by Land into the Indies; but the want of one to ſpeake for mee forceth me to leaue that way. In Aleppo I hired two Naſtraynes, and one of them them hath the Indian tongue, and hath beene twice there, but hee and the other are ſo lewdly giuen, that it is not for mee to truſt to either of them: one of them I leaue here with Raphe Aleyne aud William Skinner, and the other at Balſara with Iohn Eldred and William Shales, and forced ſo to doe for that here is no other to be had; although I am in great doubt they will be a thouſand Crownes hinderance to the Voyage, for that in diuers matters of ſmall valew they haue manifeſtly deceiued vs, but wee put no more truſt in them ſauing to ſpeake for vs. I was enforced to take them in Aleppo but two or three dayes before my comming from thence, or to haue had none at all. Here followeth the prices of Spices, as they are worth here at this preſent; Cloues and Maces the Batman, fiue duckets Synnamon, ſixe duckets and none to be had, Nutmegs fortie fiue Madynes, Ginger the Batman, one ducket Pepper ſeuentie fiue Madaynes, and Silke which is much better then that which commeth out of Perſia, Duckets eleuen and a halfe the Batman. And ſo God preſerue you. In Babylon this fifteenth day of Iuly, 1583.

Your Worſhips at command,

Iohn Nevvbery.

Right Worſhipfull, my heartie commendations premiſed, &c. My laſt I ſent you was from Bagdet of the ſixteenth day of the laſt moneth, and the two & twentieth day of the ſame came from thence but by reaſon that our Barke was great and the water very low, halfe a dayes iourney from thence came a ground, and in a long time could not get her off againe. Whereupon doubting that further below in the Riuer we might be put to more trouble, I returned to the City, and hired a ſmaller Boat, and the twentie ſeuen day embarked our goods in the ſame Boat, and the ſixth day of this preſent arriued here: ſince whcih time I haue hired a Barke to goe to Ormus, and within a day or two I mind with Gods helpe to depart from hence. About the beginning of this moneth arriued here foure Venetians from Ormus, whereof three are for the account of Michaell Stroopenny, and the other for himſelfe. Their Conducts are twentie Bales of Turbith Cloues, and Synnamon and Long-pepper, and Muske, Pearles, and Feathers, which Feathers come from a Citie called Syndye, about one hundred and ſixtie leagues from Ormus, and are very much eſteemed in Italy. The Baſhaw here hath taken away of their Feathers 84000. the which they ſay are worth a thouſand duckets, and he would haue giuen them for the ſame 501. duckets. So they ſay that they will certifie of it to Conſtantinople, and hope to haue ſome remedie from thence. And if it were not ſometimes for this kind of dealings by the Baſhaw towards the Frankes, here were in theſe Countries verie much good to be done: for the exchange from Ormus to Aleppo is ſixtie per cento, and commonly they make their voyage in fiue or ſixe moneths, and if it were but onely for the profit of the exchange it ſhall bee good to haue one remaining here, and one at Ormus, and another at Bagdett. And to auoid all troubles that may happen either here or at Bagdett, you ſhall doe well to procure a commandement from the Grand Signior, both to the Baſhaw of Bagdett, and the Baſhaw of this place, that and if any of our folkes ſhould die in this Countrie (the which God forbid) that the Baſhaw, neither any other Officer ſhall meddle with the goods, but that it may be kept in a Magoſine within ſome Caue or Crauancera, vntill ſuch time as the owners ſhall ſend for it, except there bee more in company to take charge of the ſame: for here hath chanced Venetians to dye; and although hee were one that had nothing, and hee bee in company with thoſe that haue great ſtore of goods, the Baſhaw will take the goods, and ſay that the goods did belong vnto him that is dead, and by this meanes they ſhall be in great trouble, and leeſe halfe their goods, if they can eſcape ſo. And if any of our company ſhould die here, as God defend, the reſt ſhould bee in great trouble about it; as alſo that it may be in your commandement, that it ſhall not be lawfull for the Baſhaw, or any other for to take away from vs any of our goods, except hee will pay for the ſame to our content, for many times there are fine things brought out of the Indies, and the Baſhawes man ſitteth alwayes in the Cuſtome-houſe, eſpecially at the comming of the Frankes, and if there bee any thing that liketh him hee taketh it, and payeth for that which is worth a hundred pound, ten pound, and ſo the Baſhaw hath dealt with many. But if you ſend this commandement, that it may bee regiſtred both heere and at Bagdett, it will for euer hereafter preuent thoſe troubles that now wee are in danger of, and this is a thing very needfull to be ſent with thoſe that ſhall next come hither. There is as yet no Spaniards come into the Indies, and by report of one that is here, who came from Ormus, there was a Spaniard ſent out of Spaine to Goa to haue had ſome authoritie there, and the Vice Roy cauſed him to bee put to death, and will ſuffer none for to come thither. As yet they alter not the keeping of their Chriſtmaſſe, as the Spaniards and others haue done, but continue in keeping of their old reckoning of the Feaſts and Moneths, neither will they alter vntill commandement come from the Pope to the contrary. And ſo I commit your Worſhip to God. From Balſara this fifteenth day of Auguſt, 1583.

A Letter of Maſter John Eldred, to G. S. Written in Bagdet the fourteenth day of Iuly, 1583.

Theſe Letters I had of Maſter Sanderſon and were found amongſt Maſter William Harborne (Ambaſſadour from her Maieſtie to the Grand Signior) his papers endorſed with the ſaid Ambaſſadour his owne hand. Maſter Eldred yet liueth, a graue, rich and principall Citizen. Some of theſe heere mentioned I haue knowen and diſcourſed with of theſe parts.

R*ight Warſhipfull, my humble and heartie Commendations remembred, wiſhing your health, and deſiring to heare of your proſperitie, the which God increaſe and long continue. &c. My laſt to you was in* Aleppo the nine and twentieth of May, wherein I certified our arriuall in the Tigre, and the determining of this Voyage, how there was appointed to take at Aleppo for the ſumme of two thouſand pounds ſterling, in Carſies, Cloathes, Tinne, and other Commodities, and with the ſame Maſter Newberie, Raph Fitch, Raph Allen, William Skinner, William Shales, and my ſelfe, to goe with the ſame goods to this place, there to leaue two, and part of the goods. At Balſara, there leaue two and part of the goods, and Maſter Newberie and Raph Fitch, to take for three or foure hundred pounds ſterling at Balſara of theſe goods, and to goe for the Indies.

Since which time, it may pleaſe you to vnderſtand wee all in company haue come to this place, and heere arriued the nine and twentieth day of the laſt, hauing paſt the hands of many bribing Dogges, wee arriued heere all in ſafetie thankes bee to God, and whereas wee had thought to haue ſold in this place, great ſtore of our Commodities, wee cannot ſell, nor haue not ſold this ſixteene dayes for thirtie Duckets, nor no likelihood of ſales there vntill the Winter, this Towne is ſo full of Carſies and Tinne, moſt bought at Aleppo of William Baret, which were the Tinne and Cloath that came in the Emanuel. Tinne is heere as good cheape as it is in Aleppo, and Cloath alſo, God ſend it to mend, or otherwiſe this Voyage of ours will make no profit, but in hope wee reſt the ſame will mend.

Wee haue at this preſent imbaled and laden aboard a Barke for Balſara, one hundred and twentie peeces of Carſies halfe, ſome Tinne, three Scarlets, eight & twentie Rotellos of this place, of Tinne and Amber, with diuers ſmall Haberdaſh wares, which is for the ſumme of ſeuen hundred ſixtie foure pounds ſterling, and heere wee leaue the reſt, which is about one thouſand pounds, and with the ſame in this place we leaue William Skinner, and Raph Allen, and all the reſt of vs goe forward, and at Balſara, William Shales and my ſelfe, doe determine to ſtay to make ſales and imployment as the Market will giue vs leaue: and Maſter Newberie, and Raph Fitch, with the Ieweller and Painter, are determined to proceed for the Indies, and out of this wee carrie to Balſara, hee will take out his foure hundred pounds in Commodities for the Indies. Thus the Lord bleſſe our doings, and ſend vs a merrie meeting in our Countrey Norfolke; and that I may bee your Seruant, &c.

In Balſara the ſixth of Nouember. 1583.

R*ight Honourable, our humble duties conſidered, &c. Our laſt vnto your Lordſhip was from* Babylon of the nineteenth of Iuly, wherein wee ſignified our ſafe arriuall there, and euill ſales which wee found, that in twentie dayes ſtaying there, we ſold not for thirtie Duckets. Inſomuch as by direction of Maſter Newberie, wee tooke of our Commodities for ſeuen hundred pounds ſterling, and came to this place Balſara, out of which, Maſter Newberie tooke for the value of foure hundred pounds, and departed for Ormus, where hee arriued the fourth of September, and the ninth of the ſame, was committed to Priſon with all his Company, accuſed for Spies from Don Antonie, and that his Painter was to draw the plats of Caſtles and Fortreſſes, in the behalfe of Don Antonie. Whereupon the Captayne of Ormus hath determined to ſend them with the remayner of their goods which is vnſpent, Priſoners to Goa, there to bee at the will and pleaſure of the Vizrea, what ſhall become of them God knoweth. Hee hath written to our worſhipfull Maſters, to procure the King of Spaine his Letters to the Vizrea of Goa for his deliuerie, which Letters wee haue ſent by meſſe expreſſe to Aleppo. This his falſe accuſation was by meanes of Venetians Letters written from Aleppo, and directed to Michaell Stropennie in Ormus, who as Maſter Newberie writeth, hath beene the onely cauſe of his trouble. Concerning our eſtate, wee haue not ſold neither can ſell of all our Commodities for two hundred Duckets. Our Carſies heere are not worne, neither come there any Merchants to make imployments heere, being this place onely as a thorowfare for Merchants which come from Ormus to diſcharge their goods and pay Cuſtome, and ſo to paſſe for Babylon. Before wee came hither, Maſter Newberie told vs, wee ſhould finde to make Bazar for any kinde of Spices, which wee haue found cleane contrarie, for neither are there Merchants reſident heere, or Commodities to bee found to make Bazar for two hundred Duckets, they which come from Ormus mindeth neuer to make Bazar here, but departeth preſently after his Cuſtome payd, for Babylon. Wee haue offered to giue our Commodities at price very reaſonable, with as much money to haue taken vp the ſame by Exchange for Aleppo, but no man would deale with vs. Whereupon wee imbarked our goods to haue gone for Perſia, but before our Ships departure there arriued heere two Venetians with diuers ſorts of Spices, who had taken vp ten thouſand Duckets by exchange to bee payed heere in Balſara, this money their credits will not ſerue to take vp for Babylon. Inſomuch as beeing in ſome diſtreſſe for money, they offered to barter with vs halfe money halfe commoditie, whereupon wee haue diſbarked our goods, and hope within theſe few dayes to make Bazar with them. Thus humbly taking our leaues, we ceaſe to trouble your Lordſhip any further.

Your Lordſhips moſt readie at Commandment,

In Balſara the two and twentieth of Ianuary 1583.

RIght Honourable, our duties humbly conſidered vnto your Lordſhip, &c. Our laſt was of the tenth of Nouember ſent by the Cadie of this place, wherein wee ſignified vnto your Lordſhip the alteration of our mindes for going into Perſia, and how wee were returned with our goods backe againe to this place. Wee alſo wrote you the hope which wee had to make Bazar with a French-man, which was at that time newly come from Ormus, the which is now come to paſſe and finiſhed, although with ſome trouble. Wee deliuered all our goods, which amounted vnto 2000. Duckets; and gaue him more in money two thouſand eight hundred and thirtie Duckets, which wee tooke vp by exchange for Bagdet at fifteene per Cento, and to pay more two per fiftie per Moneth, during the time of our ſtaying heere, which God knoweth how long it will bee, the way betweene this place and Bagdet is full of Theeues, and no Merchants dare venture to depart till the wayes be cleare. There haue gone no Barkes from hence this foure moneths and more. We haue imbaled all our goods for Camels being of them as followeth, foure ſomes of large Cynamon, fourteen ſomes and an halfe of middle Cynamon, three ſomes and an halfe of Nutmegs, one ſome & an halfe of Ginger, one ſome and a third part of Cloues, foure ſomes & a halfe Fuſſes of Cloues, 197. Turbands fine, and one Cheſt of guilded Puſillanes; all theſe goods haue beene in readineſſe this moneth wiſhing euery day our departure, which God grant may be ſhortly, for here wee ſpend, and our money eateth, and that which is worſe, wee feare wee ſhall looſe our paſſage from Bagdet to Aleppo, except wee depart very ſhortly. We receiued no Letters from Maſter Newberie ſince the firſt newes of his trouble: but we heare by others that hee and his Companie are ſent Priſoners to Goa, and the remayner of his goods is left in the hands of the Kings Factor. Thus not hauing others to trouble your Lordſhip with at this preſent, wee reſt, humbly taking our leaue, and commending you and all your Lordſhips affaires, to Gods mightie protection.

Your Lordſhips moſt readie at commandment till death,

IOHN ELDRED.
WILLIAM SHALES.

Maſter Hakluit hath deliuered Maſter Fitches Indian Peregrination, with notes alſo of Maſter Eldred and Maſter Barret, to whom I referre the more deſirous Reader. Linſchoten alſo hath mentioned the troubles at Goa (whereof he was eye-witneſſe) of Maſter Fitch and Maſter Newberie. I haue added hereto three Commands from the Great Turke, in behalfe of the Engliſh.

To the Cadileſquire of Egypt.

KNow that the Ambaſſadour for the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, reſident in our moſt famous Port, by Supplication certified, how that our Vice-roy Ebrahim Baſſa, then Beglerbie of Egypt, did giue the Cuſtome of Caſſia to a certaine Iew called Abraham Ripollo, with expreſſe and ſtraight commandement, that whoſoeuer brought Caſſia to Cairo, ſhould ſell it to him and none other, and what Merchant ſoeuer would buy Caſſia, ſhould buy it of him and of no other. Whereupon certaine of the Engliſh Merchants, buying of the foreſayd Iew three and thirtie Kintals, to the value of foure hundred and fiftie duckets of Gold, and hauing before iuſtice payd to the ſaid Iew the whole ſumme, and receiued Hogetta from the Cady, the Beglerbie that now is Synan Baſſa, caſting the ſaid Iew in Priſon, and ſeazing on all his goods in the behalfe of the Grand Signior, did alſo take from the Engliſh Merchants all the Caſſia they had bought of the Iew, and for which they had fully payed, not reſtoring to them one Aſper, and thereby did them great harme and iniurie. Wherefore wee charge thee, that this our Commandment comming to thee, thou doe examine this matter according to Iuſtice; that if the Engliſh Merchants haue bought of the ſayd Iew ſo much Caſſia, and haue payed to the ſayd Iew the full price, and haue receiued thereupon Hogetta from the Cadie, and if the Beglerbie haue taken the ſayd Caſſia into his hands, that then you cauſe the ſayd Caſſia to be reſtored to the Engliſh Merchants, ſuffering nothing to bee done againſt Law and Iuſtice.

To the Beglerbie of Cairo.

KNow that the Ambaſſadour for the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie of England, by Supplication certified in our moſt famous Court, that for default of their Conſull in Egypt, the French Conſull that there is Vento, alledging that they are vnder his Banner, doth violently vſurpe authoritie ouer them; and that heretofore hauing ſent our Commandment to the contrarie, yet hee hath not abſtayned, nor ceaſed from moleſting and troubling the Engliſh Nation. Wherefore know, that to the Queene of England our Priuiledge is granted, by which priuiledge it is by no meanes permitted, that the French ſhould bee Conſull ouer them, or intermeddle with them. Wherefore wee Command, that againſt our Priuiledge, the French Conſull doe them no iniurie, nor vſurpe the Conſulſhip ouer them. Wee haue ſent our Letters to the Cadileſker of Egypt, according to which, and contrarie to our Priuiledge, wee command him alſo, that the French beare not the Conſulſhip ouer the Engliſh Nation.

To the Cadileſquire of Egypt.

K*Now that the Ambaſſadour for the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie of* England, by Supplication certified vs, that for default of their Conſull in Egypt, the French Conſull there reſident called Vento, alledging that they bee vnder his banner, doth trouble and moleſt the Engliſh men, contrarie to our priuiledge: our commandement was formerly giuen that hee ſhould abſtaine from moleſting the Engliſh Nation, but hee did not onely not leaue off, but did more arrogantly perſiſt to trouble and iniurie them. And therefore the Ambaſſadour required our commandement, that according to their Priuiledge, the French Conſull might not intermeddle with their Nation, nor beare the office of Conſull ouer them. Know thou therefore that our Priuiledge is granted to the Queene of England, and wee command thee, that the French Conſull reſident in Egypt, doe not hereafter beare the office of Conſull ouer them. Wee command thee againe, that our commandement comming to thee, according to our Priuiledge giuen the Queene of England, and this our commandement, thou neuer permit the French, to exerciſe the office of Conſull ouer the Engliſh Nation, nor ſuffer them by the French to bee moleſted and troubled.

To the Reader.

From the tenth Chapter to the end of this Booke, all is of later Intelligence, and added by way of an Appendix.

O*Vr Countrey-men, in loue with the wealth of* India, haue brought vs (I know not how) backe thorow Turkie to Bagdet and Balſara; neither can wee now returne without ſome reuiew of India: eſpecially of the parts and Ports there before leaſt viſited; and whereof later intelligence hath come to our hands. Such are the Maldiues Ilands, of which hitherto wee haue taken ſmall notice in our multiforme Peregrinations. Loe heere therefore wee preſent you them in a French-Engliſh Chart (that I may ſo ſpeake) both for the tranſlation from the French, and becauſe our Author was Piloted by an Engliſhman, whoſe name I finde not; who ſeeking to eſcape with ſome others of his wracked Companie, was done to death by the Maldiuians. Thus our Author learning the Language, with long and deare experience learned this which heere hee freely teacheth, and many many more Obſeruations of theſe and other places in India; out of which I haue gathered what I deemed fitteſt for our purpoſe.

CHAP. XIX.

The Voyage of FRANCOIS PYRARD de Laual, to the Eaſt Indies (an Engliſh-man being Pilot) and eſpecially his Obſeruations of the Maldiues, where being Ship-wracked hee liued fiue yeares. Tranſlated out of French, and abbreuiated.

An Dom. 1601.

A Company of Merchants of Saint Malo, Laual and Vitre, in the yere 1601. ſet forth two ſhips to the Indies; one was of the burthen of foure hundred tunne called the Croiſſant, the other of two hundred, called the Corbin, ſent vnder the command of the Lord of Bardeliere Burgeſſe of Saint Malo & Francis Grout, Lord of Cloſ-neuf, Conſtable of Saint Malo, his Lieutenant or Vice-admirall, Captayne of the Corbin. Wee ſet ſayle from Saint Malo with a North-eaſt winde to begin our Voyage the eighteenth of May, 1601. Being not aboue nine or ten leagues out in the Sea, our Miſſen maſt broke and ſplit in the middle: this was the beginning of our misfortunes. The third of Iune, we coaſted the Iles of the Canaries. The twelfth and thirteenth of the ſame month, wee came to the Ilands of Cape Verd. The nine and twentieth of Iune, wee found our ſelues in the height of 5. degrees, and ſaw the North-ſtarre very low: and at the ſame time, wee perceiued the South-ſtarre. In the ſame place and height, we ſaw great quantities of flying Fiſhes, with wings like to Bats.

Flying Fiſhes.

The foure and twentieth of Auguſt, wee paſſed the Equinoctiall line, where are very violent heates, and vnconſtant weather, in an inſtant a maruellous calme, and halfe an houre after very fearefull Thundrings and Lightnings, and impetuous windes. Often they ſee come afarre off great whirle-winds, which the Marriners call Dragons: If this paſſeth ouer their ſhip it bruiſeth them and ouerwhelmeth them in the waues. When the Marriners ſee one come they take new Swords and beate one againſt the other in a croſſe vpon the Prow, or toward the

The nine and twentieth of Auguſt, our Pilot who was an Engliſh-man, from the tops ſaw land ten leagues off: this was the Ile of Anabon, whither we came the day following, and were there a while courteouſly entertayned by the Portugals Lords of the Ilands, but after had treacherouſly fiue of our men ſurpriſed by them, and one ſlaine. The ſixteenth of October, we went out of the road of this Ile, and on the ſeuenteenth of Nouember, came to the Iland of Saint Helena. The nine and twentieth of the ſame moneth, wee doubled the Abroilles.

The ſeuen and twentieth of December, wee paſſed the Cape of Good Hope. The nineteenth of Februarie, 1602. wee caſt anchor in the Bay of Saint Auguſtine, in the Ile of Saint Laurence, where we abode to refreſh our ſelues, vntill the fifteenth of May. The three and twentieth of the ſame moneth, wee came to the Iles of Comorro, where all that had the Scorbuto or other diſeaſes recouered their health, as well becauſe of the good ayre, as of good water and fruits.

Saint Laurence

The one and twentieth of Iune, wee paſſed the Equinoctiall toward the North Pole. The ſecond of Iuly in the night, wee were miſerably ſhip-wrackt vpon the Bankes of the Maldiues, where we lay till the day following, when we imbarked our ſelues in our Gallion: hauing taken our Swords, Harquebuſhes, and halfe Pikes, to goe to Land: after great labour wee attayned one of the Iles called Pouladou, but the Inhabitants would not let vs land, before they had diſarmed vs.

Pouladou.

They ledde vs all together into a Houſe in the middeſt of the Ile, where they gaue vs Fruits, Cocos, and Limons. Then the Gouernour of the Ile came to vs called Ibrahim, who ſeemed very aged, he could ſpeake ſome words of Portuguiſe, by the meanes whereof he asked vs many things: after his people rifled vs, and tooke away all that wee brought, ſaying that it did belong vnto the King. Hauing beene in this Lodging the ſpace of a day, they tooke the Maſter of our Ship with two Marriners, and conuayed them to the King fortie leagues diſtant in the Iland of Male. The King ſent his Brother in law with many Souldiers to our ſhip-wrackt Veſſell, to get what they could.

Male chiefe of the Maldiues.

The Kings Brother in law when hee went away, ledde me and two others into the Iland of Paindoüe, where at our firſt comming the Inhabitants gaue vs a little food, but when they ſaw that our companions had money (this money was about fiue hundred Crownes, which we tooke while wee were in the ſhip and the firſt night we came on Land wee buryed in the ground, which they after digged vp wanting neceſſaries, but wee that were in the Ile of Paindoüe had none of it) they tryed by extremitie of famine to make vs to giue them ſome alſo, for they beleeued we had ſome. By reaſon of this euill reſolution of the Ilanders to giue vs nothing without money, wee were brought into great miſerie. All that wee could doe, was to gather Petiwinckles on the Sea ſhoare to eate, and ſometimes to meet with a dead Fiſh. This extremitie endured a long time, till that the Inhabitants ſeeing wee had no money, began to haue a little more commiſeration on vs; we offered our ſeruice to them, to doe what they would imploy vs about.

Paindoüe.
Miſerable famine.

I went often with them to the neighbouring Ilands to get Cocos, and ſometimes on Fiſhing, and in recompence of my labour they gaue me part of the Fiſh or Cocos. While wee liued thus, I endeauoured my ſelfe to learne the Language, which my companions deſpiſed. The Commander of the Ile ſeeing mee ſo ſtudious of their Language, began to eſteeme and fauour me. Then there came one called Aſſaul Ocaounas Calogue, a Grand Signior, to fetch the reſt of the Lead of our ſhip and ſome Iron Ordnance, and to make ſearch for the Money which the inhabitants of the Ilands had of our men. The Signior of the Ile of Paindoue and the Catibe, with thoſe that affectioned me, preſented me to this Signior that came from the King, and commended me to him: this commendation was the cauſe that the Signior began to fauour me: and alſo becauſe hee ſaw I could expreſſe my ſelfe in their Language, and daily ſtudied to learne it, hee tooke me with him to carrie me to the King.

He learnes the Language.

When wee arriued at Male, hee went preſently to the King to render him an account of the Voyage, and among other things failed not to ſpeake of mee to him. In the euening I went into a Court, whither the King was come to ſee that which was brought from our Ship. I ſaluted him in the Language, and after the faſhion of the Countrey, which pleaſed him, and gaue him occaſion to enquire much concerning thoſe things which were brought from the Ship: hee commanded the Signior that brought me, to lodge and entertaine me. The day following, I was buſied with relating to the King, the manners and faſhions of our people of Europe and of France. Hee made me ſee the Queenes, who imployed me diuers dayes in giuing anſwers to that which they asked me; being curious to vnderſtand the Habits, Manners, Marriages, and faſhion of our French Dames.

He is preſented to the King.

I was about foure or fiue moneths in good health, and wanted nothing but the exerciſe of my Religion and my libertie, hauing all things elſe to my content. After this, I fell ſicke of a hot burning Feauer. There paſſed not a day but the King and Queenes ſent to know how I did, and euery houre ſent mee delicious viands to eate, and thus I continued a great while. But afterward the King ſent me to the Ile of Bandos (a little Ile in ſight of Male) which hath a better ayre then Male, where an experienced man by the Kings appointment recouered mee. Afterward the King gaue me a lodging neere him, and euery day riſe out of his owne houſe, and neceſſarie prouiſions for my ſuſtenance, hee gaue me alſo a ſeruant and money, and other preſents, ſo that I became ſomewhat wealthy after the manner of the Countrey. While I thus continued heere (deſpairing euer to returne into France) I was diligent to enquire of the people, their manners and cuſtomes, which heere I haue written and particulariſed.

Deſcription of the Maldiues, their thirteene Cantons, twelue thouſand Iles, Sea-changes, ſtrange Currents, Monſons, Maine-Inlets, blacke boyling Sea, Heate, Seaſons, Ciuilitie, and haire Ceremonionſneſſe.

Scituation.

Their diſtance

THe Ilands of the Maldiues, begin in eight degrees of the Equinoctial line, on the North-ſide and end in foure degrees on the South-ſide. They are of an extraordinarie length, about two hundred leagues, but not aboue thirtie or fiue & thirtie leagues in Latitude. They are diſtant from the firme land, that is to ſay, from Cape Comorin, from Coulan and Cochin, one hundred and fiftie leagues. The Portugals reckon that there are foure thouſand and fiue hundred leagues by Sea, to goe thither from Spaine.

Diuiſion into 13 Atollons.

Force of the Sea.

They are diuided into thirteene Prouinces, which they call Atollons, which is a naturall partition according to the ſcituation of the places. Foraſmuch as euery Atollon is ſeperated from others, and contaynes in it ſelfe a great multitude of ſmall Iles; It is admirable to behold, how that each of theſe Atollons are inuironed round with a huge ledge of Rockes. The Atollons are all after a ſort circular or ouall, hauing each of them thirtie leagues, ſome a little more, ſome a little leſſe, and lye all one at the end of the other: from the North to Suſans, they almoſt touch one another: there are betweene two channels of the Sea, the one large the other exceeding narrow. Being in the middeſt of an Atollon, you ſhall ſee about you a great ledge of Rockes which impale and defend the Iles, againſt the impetuouſneſſe of the Sea. But it is a very fearefull thing euen to the moſt couragious to approach to this ledge, and ſee the waues come afarre off and breake furiouſly on euery ſide. For I aſſure you, as a thing which I haue ſeene a thouſand times, that the ſurge or billow is greater then a Houſe, and as white as Cotton: ſo that you ſhall view round about you as it were a very white Wall, eſpecially when the Sea is loftie.

12000. Ilands.

Kings Title.

Now within each of theſe Cantons, is almoſt an infinit number of Ilands, both ſmal and great. The Inhabitants told me, that there are about twelue thouſand. But I conjecture that there appeare not ſo many, and that they ſay twelue thouſand, to note an incredible number, and which they cannot count. It is true that there are an innumerable multitude of ſmall ones, which are as it were Hillockes of ſand, all vnpeopled. And moreouer the King of the Maldiues puts this number in his Titles, for hee is called Sultan Ibrahim dolos aſſa ral tera Atholon; that is to ſay, Ibrahim Sultan, King of thirteene Prouinces and twelue thouſand Iles.

Sea makes daily alteration.

Which notwithſtanding, the currents and daily flowing of the Sea diminiſh that number, as the Inhabitants informed me, who ſaid alſo that a proportion of the number of the people are conſumed, and that there are not ſo many as were accuſtomed to be anciently. Alſo they reported that within one of the Atollons, all the little Iles and Sea which part them, was one continued ground, and that it was in former times but one only Ile, cut and diuided after into many. And ſurely they which nauigate neere the Maldiues, diſcerne all within white, by reaſon of the ſand which is of this colour, vpon all the Flats and Rocks. The Sea thereabonts is very quiet and of a meane depth, inſomuch that the deepeſt entrance is not twentie fathomes; and yet heere are very few entrances: for a man may almoſt ſee the bottome euery where.

Danger by Sharkes and ſharpe ſtones.

A kind of Currall.

All the ſhallowes are ſtone, Rocke and ſand, ſo that when the tide is out, it reacheth not to ones waſte, and for the moſt part to the mid-legge; ſo that it were very eaſie to goe without a Boate throughout all the Iles of the ſame Atollon, if it were not for two cauſes. The one great fiſhes called Paimones, which deuoure men and breake their legges and armes, when they encounter them; the other is that the depths of the Sea are generally very keene and ſharpe Rockes which hurt them wonderfully that goe into it. And moreouer, they meete with many branches of a certaine thing which I know not whether to terme Tree or Rocke, it is not much vnlike white Corall, which is alſo branched and piercing, but altogether poliſhed; on the contrary, this is rugged, all hollow and pierced with little holes and paſſages, yet abides hard and ponderous as a ſtone. They call it in their Language Aquiry, they keepe it to make their Honey and Sugar of Cocos, hauing bruiſed them with little ſtones, and putting them to boyle with the water of Cocos, this is that which faſhions their Honey and their Sugar. It greatly hinders thoſe which waſh themſelues in the Sea, it was very difficult to me to gee ſo from Ile to Ile without a Boate, but they which are accuſtomed goe often.

Amongſt theſe Ilands there are very many, and as I beleeue the greateſt number, which are wholly vnhabited, and which haue neither Trees nor Herbs; others which haue no greene thing, and are but a moueable ſand: yet there are ſome which are for the moſt part ouerflowne at ſpring tides, and are diſcouered when the Sea is out, the reſidue are all couered with great Crabs (which they call Cacoune) and Cray-fiſhes.

Many of the Ilands are not inhabited.

There are great ſtore of Fowles called Pinguy, which heere lay and hatch, and here is ſuch a prodigious multitude of them, that a man knowes not (I haue often made triall) where to ſet his foot without touching their Egges, or young ones, or the old Birds, which flye not farre when they ſee men. The Ilanders eate them not, and yet they are very good meate, and as bigge as Pidgeons, their Feathers white and blacke. Theſe Iles which I haue ſaid to bee vnhabited, appeare afarre off white, as if they were couered with Snow, by reaſon of the great whiteneſſe of the Sand which is fine and ſubtle, as that of an Houre-glaſſe, and ſo hot and burning, that the Egges of thoſe Birds are hatched with great facilitie.

Prodigious numbers of the Pinguy Fowles.

Heat of ſands.

They haue great ſcarcitie of freſh water, ſome Ilands are well woodded and inhabited which haue not any; except ſome few, whither the Inhabitants are conſtrayned to go and ſeeke it from the confining Iles; alſo they haue inuentions to receiue raine water: and although they haue water in the Iles, they are not like one another, being better in one reſpect then another. All their Pit-water is neither very ſweet nor wholſome. They make their Pits in this manner, digging three or foure foot in the Earth, a little more or leſſe, they find freſh-water in abundance, and (that which is very ſtrange) not aboue foure feet from the Sea-ſhore, in places alſo which are often ouer-flowne. I haue obſerued that their waters are very cold in the day, principally at noone, and in the night very hot.

Want of water.

Pits how made.

Hot at night and cold at noone.

But to returne to the thirteene Atollons, here are their names beginning at the North Point, which is in the head, which the Portugals call for that cauſe Cabexadel las ilhas, and in the Maldiues Tongue, Tilla dou matis, in the ſame ſignification, that is to ſay, the high Point, which is vnder eight degrees of the Line on the North-ſide, in the ſame height that Cochin is. Now the firſt Atollon is called Tilla dou matis. The ſecond Milla doue madoue. The third, Padypolo. The fourth, Malos madou. The fift, Ariatollon. The ſixt, Male Atollon, which is the principall where is the Iland of Malé, chiefe ouer the others. The ſeuenth, Pouliſdous. The eighth, Molucque. The ninth, Nillandous. The tenth, Collo madous. The eleuenth, Adou matis. The twelfth, Souadou. The thirteenth, Addou and Poua Molucque, which are diſtinguiſhed into two little ones, and ſeparated, as the others, but are very ſmall, and therefore are accounted as one. Notwithſtanding, Addou, as the better giues name to the other.

Names of the Atollons.

Euery Atollon is ſeparated from his Neighbour by a channell of the Sea, which paſſeth betweene them. But although they cannot paſſe with great ſhips without periſhing, yet there are foure which are farre larger then the others, and may eaſily paſſe for great ſhips, notwithſtanding, it is very dangerous, and perillous to goe there, and eſpecially in the night: for it is certaine to bee ſhipwrackt (as we were) becauſe they ceaſe not to encounter certaine Shoalds and Rockes, which they ought to ſhunne. I haue ſeene amongſt the Maldiues many Sea-cards, where theſe were exquiſitely deciphered. Theſe people alſo are maruellous cunning to auoide them, and to ſaile through paſſages very dangerous without periſhing. I haue ſeene them often paſſe in the middle of the Bankes, Sands, and Rockes, through little channels ſo narrow, that they had roome only for their Barke, and ſometimes ſo euenly that they grated the Rockes on both ſides; and neuertheleſſe they went ſecurely in the middeſt of thoſe perils, and with a high ſaile. Once being with ſome of the Ilanders in a little Boate, which was not aboue foure fathome long, the Sea was higher then the two Pikes length, and ſo outragious and turbulent as could not be more. I thought euery moment that the billow would haue carried mee out of the Boat; where I had great labor to hold my ſelfe, and they were not a whit perplexed, nor did feare any thing. For they feare not the Sea, and are very skilfull to conduct Barkes and Boats, being made and accuſtomed to this from their youth, aſwell the Gentlemen as poore people, and it ſhould be a diſgrace to them to be ignorant in it. For this cauſe it is impoſſible to ſumme vp the number of Barkes and Boates which are throughout all the Iles, for as much as the pooreſt will haue one, the rich many. They neuer ſaile by night, but take Land euery euening, they ſaile not neither without ſight of Land without a Compaſſe, except when they goe out of their Iles, and goe ſome long Voyage. They carrie therefore little prouiſion, but buy daily whatſoeuer they need in diuers Ilands.

Foure principall channels.

The Natiues dexteritie in ſayling.

Numberleſſe numbers of Barkes.

No ſayling by night.

The greateſt part alſo of the Iles which are within the circuite of one Atollon, are ſurrounded with a ſhoald, and there are but one or two open places which are very ſtrait and difficult to heed: wherefore it is neceſſary that they vnderſtand well the manner actiuely to guide their Barkes, otherwiſe if they be defectiue the leaſt thing in the World, their Barke will bee ouerthrowne, and their Merchandize periſh. As for the men they can ſwimme well within thoſe parts of the Sea preſerues them daily, and to ſpeake truly, they are as it were halfe fiſhes, they are ſo vſed to the Sea, whither they goe daily either ſwimming, or roading or ſailing. I haue ſeene them many times within the ledge of Rockes where the Sea is calme, runne ſwimming

Shoalds.

Good Swimmers.

after the fiſhes, which they haue ſuddenly perceiued bathing themſelues, and haue taken them in their courſe. And this is vſuall. And yet they faile not often to loſe their Barkes, notwithſtanding all their dexteritie.

Strange Sea-currents.

The Monſons.

Inlets oppoſite.

The greateſt diſcommoditie is the current Pyuarou, which run aſwell to the Eaſt as the Weſt, in the channels of the Iles, and in diuers in-draughts of the Sea, ſix moneths on one Coaſt, and ſix months on another; yet not certainly, but ſometimes more, ſomeimes leſſe. This is that which deceiues them, and ordinarily caſts them away. The winds are alwel fixed as the currents, from the Eaſt quarter or the Weſt, but they vary ſometimes, and are not ſo ruled, fetching their Compaſſe toward the North or the South, and the current goes perpetuall his accuſtomed courſe, till the ſeaſon alter. It is a very remarkable thing, that whereas the Atollons are continued one at the end of the other, and ſeparated by channels of the Sea which goe thorow them, they haue open places and entrances oppoſite one to the other two on one ſide, and two on the other, by which meanes men may goe and come from Atollon to Atollon, and alway communicate together. Wherein may be obſerued an effect of the prouidence of God, which hath left nothing vnperfect. For if there were but two open places in euery Atollon, that is, one on one ſide, and another on the other; it were not poſſible to paſſe from Atollon to Atollon, nor from entrance to entrance, becauſe of the boyſterouſneſſe of the currents; which runne ſixe moneths to the Eaſt, and ſixe to the Weſt, and permit not to croſſe ouer, but force them downe. And when the two entrances are not aduerſe, but one on the Eaſt Coaſt, the other on the Weſt, men may eaſily enter, but not returne, except the ſixe monethes are ended, and the current changed. Now as theſe entries are diſpoſed, men may notwithſtanding the currents goe from one Atollon to another, in euery ſeaſon, and Traffique, and Merchandize freely together, as they doe; for as much as euery Atollon is open with foure entrances which are in oppoſition to their two Neighbours.

Forme of the Entrances and their danger.

The firſt. The ſecond, third, and fourth.

The entrances of theſe Atollons are vnlike, ſome competently broad, others very narrow, the largeſt is not more then two hundred paces or thereabouts; ſome are but thirtie, nay leſſe. On both the ſides of each of theſe paſſages are two Iles, on each ſide one; you would ſay that it were to guard the comming in, which ſurely were eaſie to doe, if they would, with Ordnance hinder the ſhips to enter, becauſe the largeſt hath not aboue two hundred paces. Now concerning the channels (which they call Candou) which diuide the Atollons, foure are Nauigable, where the great ſhips may goe to paſſe through the Maldiues, many ſtrangers ſhips of all ſorts paſſe often there, but not without perill, for there are a great number yeerely caſt away. It is not that they affect this paſſage (for all on the contrary ſhunne it, as much as may be) but they are ſituated in ſuch ſort in the middeſt of the Sea, and ſo long, that it is not eaſie to eſcape them, principally the currents carrie the ſhips thither againſt their wils, when the calmes or contrary winds take them, and that they cannot helpe themſelues with their ſailes, to make way againſt the currents. The firſt beginnes on the North-ſide, and is that where wee were ſhipwrackt at the entry of the ſhelfe of the Atollon of Malos madou. The ſecond approacheth very neere Malé, called Caridou, in the middeſt whereof is the greateſt of all the Iles, ſo hemmed in with Rocks as I haue ſaid. The third, is by Malé, ſtretching toward the South, and is called Addou. The fourth, is called Souadou, which is directly vnder the Equinoctiall Line: this is greateſt of all, hauing more then twentie leagues in wideneſſe.

No Compaſſe but in long Voyages.

Sea blacke as Inke; the water not.

The Ilanders going by the Iles and Atollons, helpe not themſelues with a Compaſſe, except in farre Voyages, but when they paſſe through the great channell they vſe it. All the other channels betweene the Atollons are very ſtraite, and full of Rockes and Shoalds, they cannot goe but in ſmall Barkes, and yet it is requiſite to haue great knowledge of the places to ſaile without danger. I found it ſtrange ſayling with the Ilanders in the channell, which ſeparates Malé and Poliſdou, and which beares the name of Poliſdou, and is ſeuen leagues broad or thereabouts, that the Sea appeares there blacke as Inke, notwithſtanding beeing taken vp in a Pot, it differs not from other water; I ſaw it daily boyle in bigge blacke billowes, as if it had beene water on the fire. In this entrance the Sea runnes not as in other places, which is fearefull to behold: I thought I was in the nethermoſt depths perceiuing not that the water mooued on one ſide or the other. I know not the reaſon, but I know well that the Natiues are greatly afraid of it: they very often encounter ſuch tortures.

Heat.

Dewes.

Winter,

Winds.

Seeing theſe Iles are ſo neere the Equinoctiall on both ſides, it may bee judged what is the qualitie of the Aire, which is very intemperate, and the heate exceſſiue. Notwithſtanding the day and night are alwayes equall, the nights are very coole, and bring abundance of dew. This cooleneſſe is a cauſe that the Countrey may bee more commodiouſly inhabited, and that the Herbs and Trees are fruitfull, notwithſtanding the heate of the Sunne. The Winter beginnes in the moneth of Aprill, and continues ſixe monethes and the Summer in the moneth of October, which endures ſixe other moneths. The Winter is without Froſt, but alwayes rainie. The Winds are violent from the Weſt Coaſt; on the contrary the Eaſt is extreame hot, and neuer cauſeth Raine.

Whence peopled.

They affirme, that the Maldiues haue beene heretofore peopled by the Cingala, (ſo they call the Inhabitants of the Iland of Ceylan.) But I finde that the Maldiues reſemble not at all the Cingala, which are blacke, and very euill featured, and theſe are well ſhaped and proportioned, and little differ from vs, except their colour, which is Oliue. But it is out of doubt, that the place and the length of time haue made them more gracefull then thoſe which firſt inhabited the Iles. Adde alſo that there are ſeated a great number of ſtrangers of all parts, which inhabit there, (beſides the Indians) who from time to time haue been ſhipwrackt as we were. Wherefore the people which inhabit Malé, and round about to the North point are found more orderly, honeſt and ciuill: and they which are on the South-ſide toward the low point, are more rude in their Language and Faſhions, and not ſo well featured; and blacker, and alſo many women of the poorer ſort are naked without any ſhame, hauing only a little cloth to couer their Priuities: And for as much as the North-coaſt is daily more haunted and frequented with ſtrangers who ordinarily marrie there: Alſo that it is the paſſage of all the ſhips, which enrich the Countrey, and ciuilize it more and more, which is the cauſe that perſons of ranke and qualitie ſeate themſelues there more willingly, and not toward the South, whither the King ſends in Exile thoſe which he will puniſh with baniſhment. And yet the people which inhabit the South parts, are not inferiour in capacitie or Religion to the others, if it be not more for other things, but all their Gentry inhabit on the North Coaſt, where alſo they take their Souldiers.

Ciuilitie of the North parts. South barbarous.

The people is very Religious, greatly addicted to Manufactures of all kindes of Workes, wherein they excell, alſo in Letters and Sciences after their manner, principally in Aſtrologie, whereof they make great eſteeme. They are a wiſe and circumſpect Nation, very fraudulent in their Merchandizing, and their liuing in the World. They are valiant and hardie, and well ſeene in Armes, and liue in great order and policie. The women are faire, but that they are of an Oliue colour: and ſome are found as white as they be in Europe, yet they haue all blacke haire: but they eſteeme that beautie, and many make it to come ſo, wherefore they keep their Daughters heads ſhauen, till the age of eight or nine yeeres, not leauing them till then any haire but a little on their fore-heads, to diſtinguiſh them from Boyes, who haue none at all, yet this comes not lower then their Eye-browes, and after that the children are borne, they ſhaue them from eight dayes to eight dayes, which makes their haire very blacke, that would not be ſo elſe, for I haue ſeene little children with halfe flaxen haire.

Religion.

Women.

Haire-ceremonies.

The beautie and ornament of the women is to haue their haire very long, thicke, and blacke, which they accommodate and waſh often, and purifie with water and Lye made of purpoſe: hauing well waſhed and clenſed their heads and haire, they abide in the wind all diſheuelled, but within the compaſſe of their houſe, vntill it bee throughly dry; after they rub and oyle their haire with odoriferous Oyle, which cauſeth that their heads are alwayes moyſt and Oily. For they neuer wet their bodies men nor women, but after they oyle them, two or three times in the weeke for their haire, but for their bodie, oftener then there are dayes. As for their haire they are not obliged to waſh it, but when they haue accompanied together, and they are bound particularly euery Friday, which is their Sabbath, and in all their great Feaſts; the men on their Fridayes, the women on their ſeuerall Feaſts only, but ſleepe after it when they ſhall thinke good and according to their neceſſitie. The women alſo perfume their heads for a little reaſon which they haue, and ſo waſhed, oyled, and perfumed they attire themſelues, which is to bring all their haire from before backward, and draw it out as much as may be, that one haire may not moue nor wauer this way nor that way: after they tye them behind, or they make a great tuft bound on, for which greatneſſe, they hane a counterfeite Locke of mans haire, but as long as the womens, in faſhion of a Horſe taile; and to hold it, they garniſh it at the great end after the manner of a ([l]) and all the reſt of their haire is put in order: after the ([m]) of Gold or Siluer is couered with Pearles and Iewels according to their abilities: and ſome weare two of theſe falſe haires, becauſe it ſerueth to tye their haire behind, and make the tuft greater. They put alſo odoriferous flowers of the Countrey, which is not thereof defectiue.

Bathing and Oyling.

[m] Dez.

It is not permitted the men, but onely the Souldiers and Officers of the King, and Gentlemen to weare their haire long, who doe ſo for the moſt part, and as long as the womens, yea take as much paines as they to waſh, clenſe, and oyle and ſweeten it with flowers: and there is no other diffrence, but that the men bind their haire on one of their ſides, or right vp, or vpon the head, and not behinde as the women: alſo they neuer weare any falſe Periwigs: they are not compelled to weare their haire ſo, but ſhort or long, as they thinke good. I haue ſeene the King and the Princes, and greateſt part of the Grandes and Souldiers, who weare their haire ſhort, and they which weare them long, for the moſt part, when they are weary, or when they grow no more, cut them off to giue or ſell to women, for they haue no counterfeit haire, but mens, becauſe they neuer ſhaue the womens haire liuing or dead: the moſt part of theſe falſe haires come from the Continent, as from Cochin, Calicut and all the coaſt of Malabar, where all the men weare their haire long, which after they cut and ſell for women, as wel of the Countrey as Aliants. Their haire increaſeth there a great deale faſter then here, becauſe, as I coniecture, they ſo often waſh and oyle them, alſo by reaſon of the extraordinary heate, which cauſeth their haire to be thicker and harder, but neuer curled as with vs. Commonly alſo the men are hairy ouer all the bodie, yea ſo thicke as more cannot be imagined; hereof they boaſt, as if it were the ſtrength of nature; which Increaſe of haire.

Hairie on their bodies.

yet they finde not alwayes true, and if a man bee not ſo hairy, they ſay, that hee rather reſembles a woman then a man, and deſpiſe him for it: but the women are not ſo hairy, and haue no haire but in ordinary places.

All Barbers and none.

There is no common Barbers, but euery one hath skill to ſhaue, as well men as women, and vſe no razor for it, nor any combe; but they haue ſizers of caſt copper, and looking-glaſſes alſo of copper, which they vſe inſtead of razors of ſteele, but not made as ours. They ſhaue themſelues after our faſhion: for the King and Peeres, there are men which account themſelues honoured to ſerue in this office, not for gaine, but for affection, being men of faſhion; the King ſends them preſents at the yeeres end. Alſo throughout all the Ilands there is neither man nor woman, rich nor poore, great nor little, which after the age of fifteene yeeres hath not all their furniture and inſtruments ſo to order their head: and they are very curious to take them off when it neuer ſo little grieues or troubles them.

Boyes and girles.

The maidens weare no coats till the age of eight or nine yeeres, but onely a cloth which reacheth from the girdle to the knee, which they weare from the time they begin to goe: but the boyes weare nothing till they are ſeuen yeeres olde and are circumciſed: they ſay that it is not neceſſary that their daughters ſhould weare any other robe the time aforeſaid, for that then their breaſts begin to beare out & increaſe, and it is needfull to couer them, as a thing which they hold as great a ſhame to ſhow, as here their priueties; and then they let their haire increaſe without any more cutting, but adorne and trim it, being then in the time to finde ſome to marry with; for before that they hold them as children, and permit not men nor boyes to ſpeake of loue to them, for that they are not acknowledged nor arrayed as maidens. Now the men being very old and couered with haire, as I haue ſaid, and not clothing their bodies from the girdle vpwards, they ſhaue not the haire on the breaſt and ſtomacke, but in ſuch a faſhion as they cut the haire in one place, and leaue it in another, to the end that it may appeare and bee like the faſhion of a caſed doublet.

Shame to let the breaſts be ſeene.

Beards of two ſorts.

The men weare their beards in two faſhions: one which is permitted to the Pandiares, Naibes, and Catibes, and other Eccleſiaſticall perſons, and thoſe which haue gone on pilgrimage to Mecca, and Medinatalnaby in Arabia, where is the Sepulchre of Mahomet, to weare their beard ſo long as they will, and not to ſhaue it but vnder the throat, and their vpper and lower lips, becauſe they would not for any thing being eating or drinking touch a haire, being the greateſt naſtineſſe and filthineſſe in the world: wherefore they haue no haire about their mouth; and I haue often ſeene that for finding onely one haire in a platter of meat, they would not touch it, and remained rather without eating, giuing it to the birds and other creatures, except any bodie would haue it. The other ſort of beards for the reſt of the nation, and the commoneſt is to weare a little one after the Spaniſh cuſtome, ſhauen about their mouth and vnder their throat, but without muſtaches, and in the cheekes they make like holes and faſhions with the ſizers, and they ſhaue them very cloſe, yet ſo that it may appeare. Their chin as we vſe now.

Neat ſuperſtition. Curioſitie.

Very niggards

In the meane while they curiouſly keepe the ſhauings of their haire and nailes, without loſing or letting fall any, and are carefull to interre it in there Church-yards with a little water: for they would not for any thing in the world goe vpon it, or caſt the leſt part into the fire; becauſe, they ſay, being part of the bodie it requires burying as wel as the bodie; and they incloſe it neatly in a little cotton, and the moſt of them wil be ſhauen in the porches of their temples or Moſchees. They are verie hardie and inſenſible in all this, and vſe no hot water in ſhauing them; their razors cut verie naughtily, and they doe nothing but poure a little cold water vpon it; and whatſoeuer hurt they doe, they complaine not, and ſay that it paines them not: this comes of cuſtome to them, for elſe they would be as ſenſible as we.

§. III.

Their Cocos and other fruits and food, their Trades and trading, Creatures profitable and hurtfull. Of Male the principall Iland. Their Houſes, Candou, Languages, Apparell.

Their food Millet.

THE Maldiues are very fertill fruit, and other commodities neceſſarie for the life of man. They haue abundance of Millet, which they call Oura, alſo of another little graine called Bimby, which is like to Millet, but that it is blacke as Rape-ſeed. Theſe graines ſow themſelues, and are reaped twice in a yeere. They make a kinde of meale, whereof they make pottage with milke and hony of Cocos, and alſo of Torteaux and Bignets, and many other ſorts of food. There grow alſo rootes of many kindes, one called Itelpoul, which growes in abundance without ſowing, and is round, and two handfulls in greatneſſe, like more or leſſe. Now they bruiſe it by rubbing it on a rugged ſtone, after they lay it in a cloth in the Sunne to dry, this is like our Amidon or wheate-flower, which they keepe as long as they wil, whereof they make pottage, and Torteaux and Galletus, which is a verie delicate meat, but that it a little ſurchargeth the ſtomacke, it muſt bee eaten while it is new. They haue plentie of another ſort of root, called Alas, of a very good taſte, which they ſow and cultivate, one ſort red, like red-parſnip, another white like nauews, and are ordinarily bigger then a mans thigh. They boile and dreſſe them in diuers faſhions, and keepe them a great part of the yeere; alſo they order them with hony and ſugar of Cocos, and it is a great part of the nouriſhment of theſe people. They call wheat Godame & rice Andoue, which grows not there, but is brought in great quantitie from the firme land. They eat and prepare it in diuers manners, boyling it only with water, and eat it with other viands in ſtead of bread. They boyle it alſo, after dry it and bray it, and of this bran, with egges, hony, milke, and butter of Cocos, they make Florentines, and verie good belly-timber.

Roots.

Hearbes and trees grow plentifully in all the Iles; many that beare fruit, others that beare none, whereof notwithſtanding they eate the leaues which are ſweet and daintie. There are Citrons, Pomgranets, Orenges in abundance; Bannanes, which the Portugalls call figges of India, and the Maldiues Quella, which is a great fruit, and multiplies exceedingly, delicious and of great nouriſhment; ſo that they nouriſh their infants with it in ſtead of broth. There is none more profitable then the Cocos or nut of India, which they call Roul, and the fruit Cate: they abound more in the Maldiues then in any place of the world: this onely tree ſerues for all neceſſaries of life, furniſhing them in great quantitie with wine, hony, ſugar, milke, and butter; and moreouer the pith or kernell ſerues to eate, with all ſorts of meate in ſtead of bread. Adde alſo the wood, barke, leaues, and ſhells make the greateſt parts of their moueables and vtenſills.

Hearbs, trees, and fruits.

Cocos.

There is ſuch ſtore of fire-wood, that they buy it not, for as much as the countrie is couered with all ſorts of trees: it is lawfull to goe and cut thoſe trees at any time when they haue need, which ſerue for nothing but to burne. Alſo there are whole Ilands full, whither euerie one ſend their ſeruants and ſlaues daily to fetch for their vſe. It is admirable that each of the thirteene Atollons produce ſundry fruits, although they are all vnder the ſame climate; yet euery one hath not that which is neceſſarie. You would ſay, that God would that theſe people ſhould viſite one another, here is ſuch diuerſitie: for what is plentifull in one place is rare in another. Although euery thing growes particularly in each place, yet it is little, and not ſo good and naturall as that which comes from the Atollons and Iles proper to it, becauſe it is brought from other places.

Trees common.

The people alſo haue followed in their habitations a like order, for the crafts-men are aſſembled in Iles apart, as the Weauers in one, the Gold-ſmiths in another, and ſo all the reſt. In briefe, none of their mechanick Arts are mingled, but each hath his Ile, yet they communicate one with another in this ſort: they haue cloſe boates, with a little deck, and goe from Ile to Ile trauelling and retayling their merchandize, and ſometimes are more then a yeere before they returne to their Ile and ordinarie reſidence. They carrie with them their male children, from foure or fiue yeere old, to learne and be accuſtomed to it. They lye alwayes in their Barkes, and drinke and eate there, and often worke alſo. Where I was on the Maldiues, there was found a Bird (which landed in an Iland) of prodigious ſhape and greatneſſe. It was three foot high, the body exceeding great, more then a man could fathom: the feathers all white as a Swan, the feet broad like Fowles that ſwim, the necke halfe a fathom long, the beake halfe an ell; on the vpper part at the end a kinde of crooked claw, vnderneth larger then aboue, whence hung a very great and capable bagge of a yellow gilded colour reſembling parchment. The King was much aſtoniſhed whence this creature ſhould come, and what was the nature of it: and enquiring of all men which came from other regions, at the laſt hee happened on certaine ſtrangers, who told him that this creature was particular to China, and that it was bred no where elſe, and that the Chinois vſe them to take fiſh, for this creature ſwimmeth on the water as other riuer Birds, and very long. It takes fiſh with great dexteritie, and fills the great purſe or bagge which hangs from the beake vnderneath, which is ſo great and capable, that it will hold many fiſhes each two feet long, which the King handling hard, wondred greatly how it was poſſible that this Bird ſhould come ſo alone from China, being diſtant more then a thouſand and two hundred leagues. The King made triall, cauſing them to tye and faſten his throat, onely giuing it leaue to breath, that it might not ſwallow the fiſh, but bring vp the poke full. I haue ſeene it often goe ſo on the Sea, and come with it full of fiſh. It goeth a long time on the Sea, and tarries there ſometimes a day, which makes me beleeue that it is not impoſſible that it ſhould come from China.

Crafts differing with the Ilands.

They haue Hens in ſuch plentie, that it is ſtrange, and coſt them nothing but the taking, for they are wild: in the Market they ſell them but for one Sou apiece, and thirtie ſixe Egges at the ſame price; this is the meate they vſe moſt next to fiſh. They haue ſtore of Pidgeons, of Duckes, of Rayles, and of certayne Birds which altogether reſemble Sparrow-hawkes, Muskets blacke and gray, which liue not of prey, but of fruits and many other differing kinds, all wilde and none domeſticke. The Crowes greatly indanger the Inhabitants; for they are ſo bold, that they will come into the Houſes; and take any thing, although men be preſent, of whom they are not awhit afraid. At the firſt, I thought they had beene tame and domeſticall, they are in ſo great abundance that they cannot be numbered, becauſe they kill them not. The Bats are as great as Rauens. They are greatly annoyed by the Muskitos or Gnats, which pricke very ſorely. But that which troubles them moſt are the Rats, Dormice, and Piſmires which are found euery where, with other ſorts of Creatures and Vermine which enter into their Houſes, and eate and ſpoyle their Graine, Prouiſion, Fruits, and tender Commodities, ſo that they are forced for to reſiſt them, to build their Lodges and Granaries on piles in the Sea two and three hundred paces from the Land, whither they goe in Boates, and there lay vp their graine and fruits to keepe them. The moſt part of the Magazines of the King are builded after this manner.

Sea-ſnakes.

Dogs dreadful and vncleane.

In the Sea there is a kinde of Snakes which are very dangerous. There are great ſtore of Cats, Foines, and Ferrets. There are no beaſts for riding; there are few great beaſts, wilde or tame. It is true that there are about foure or fiue hundred Cowes and Bulls: but they appertaine to the King onely who breedes them in the Ile of Male: whither they are brought from the firme land for curioſitie to multiply to that number; They eate them not, but in foure or fiue months in the yeere, and at great feaſts when the King cauſeth to kill one, and ſometimes he giueth one to the ſtrangers ſhips, whom hee will gratifie. There are alſo ſome Weathers which are the Kings. They haue no Dogges, yea are greatly afraid of them. While that I was there, the Portugalls of Cochin ſent two to the King for a raritie, who cauſed them incontinently to be drowned. If any touch a Dogge, he preſently goes to bath, as to purifie himſelfe.

Fiſh.

Sharkes.

Cheape victuall.

* Note.

The Sea is very full of fiſh, of all ſorts great and ſmall, principally becauſe it is ſhallow and calme within the Atollons. It is their chiefe ſuſtenance, either freſh with Rice or other meate, or fried with Oyle of Cocos, or ſod in ſea-water and dryed to keepe it. They ſend many ſhips daily laden to Achen in Sumatra and other places. There is one great kinde of fiſh which greatly vexeth them, for it deuoures the men when they bath or go a fiſhing. I eſcaped very hardly from being deuoured. A man may ſee a great number of perſons which haue loſt their armes or legges, or otherwiſe are lamed by this misfortune. The great abundance of all things cauſeth that victuall coſts little, and that euery thing is good cheape. Foure hundred Cocos may bee bought for one Larin, which is eight ſouſes: fiue hundred Bannanes for one Larin: in like manner after the ſame price an hundred great fiſhes, or a dozen of good Hens, or three hundred pound of Roots, and ſo of other things: ſo that there is no * Country in India where ſtrangers grow rich ſo ſoone, becauſe trading is good, and victualls cheape.

Male the principall Iland.

Vnhealthfull.

No walled Townes.

Their houſes.

The principall Iland is called Male, which giues name to all others: for the word Diues ſignifieth a number of ſmall Iles heaped together: it is very neere the middeſt of all other Iles, and is in circuit about a league and a halfe. It is fruitfuller then all the reſt, and the Staple and Mart of them, and of ſtrangers; the ſeat of the King and of the Court. By reaſon whereof it is beſt peopled, but vnhealthfulleſt; there dye many, whom they interre each a part, ſo that all the Ile is full; the Sunne, which is very hot, draweth vp noyſome and peſtilent vapours. The waters alſo are naught, the King therefore is compelled to ſend, for him and his houſe, to another Ile, where the water is better, and where they bury no bodie; ſo doe alſo the principall and men of abilitie in the Ile. Throughout all the Ilands they haue no encloſed Townes, no not in the Ile of Male. But all the Ile is repleniſhed here and there with houſes and buildings, either of Lords and Gentlemen, or of the common people, and alſo of others. Notwithſtanding the houſes are diſtinguiſhed by Streets and Wards, in a faire order, and all know their owne diuiſion. The houſes and edifices of the common people are of Wood of the Cocos, which they cut from the trunke of the Tree, they couer them with leaues of the ſame Tree, ſowed double one within another.

Sea-ſtones how drawne thence.

Candou ſtrange wood.

The Signiors and rich men build with ſtone, which they draw forth of the Sea, from vnder the Shelfs and Rockes, where they find as much as they will, of good length and greatneſſe. It is ſmooth and good merchandiſe, verie white, ſomewhat hard to cut and faſhion: but aſſoone as it raines on it, it loſeth its naturall hardneſſe and whiteneſſe, and becomes all blacke when it is beaten with the raine, or wet with freſh water: the manner of drawing them forth of the Sea is remarkable. There groweth in that Countrey a kind of Wood which they call Candou, which is as great as the Wall-nut tree here, like in the ſhaking leafe, and whiteneſſe, but wonderfull ſoft. It beares not any fruit, and is fit onely to burne: being dry they cut it into Plankes, which they vſe as we doe fire. This Wood is lighter then Corke. Hauing noted the ſtone within the water which they will haue, they faſten it with a great Cable. This is ordinary, for as I ſaid before, they are halfe fiſhes, very expert in ſwimming, their women ſwim as well or better then the men of theſe parts: ſo that they will goe on euery occaſion to the bottome of the Sea, fifteene or twenty fathoms deepe, and ſtay there a long time and marke the depths very often, to ſee where it is good laying their anchor. Sometimes alſo in ſtead of an anchor they chooſe ſome great rocke in the bottome of the Sea, and there faſten their Cable. Then after that they haue ſelected the ſtone, which they will draw vp, & that they haue bound it to their Cable, they take a piece of the wood of Candou, & tie or thruſt through (after they haue bored it) their cable right oppoſite to the ſtone, and after aloft adde a certaine number of theſe pieces, as many as ſhall be neceſſary, ſo that which is maruellous light, and fleeting aboue the water, pulls vp with it the ſtone and draweth it aloft, whatſoeuer weightie or ponderous a thing it bee, euen to a thouſand pounds. The Cannons and Anchors of our ouerwhelmed Ship were drawne vp thus. I haue ſeene that the Hauen of the Ile of Male, being full of great Rocks, ſo that the Ships could not ride nor anchor in ſafetie, clenſed and made nauigable thus in leſſe then fiue dayes.

They vſe alſo to take fiue or ſixe great pieces of this kind of wood, and binde them faſt in a row, and aboue ſet ſawed Plankes of the ſame Tree after the faſhion of a Hurdle, after eleuate it with little boords round, before, and behinde, and on the ſides, and in the middle to ſit. This ſerues them to goe to Sea, and paſſe from Ile to Ile: they principally fiſh in ſuch, euery man hath one, for they need but one to guide and conduct them. Another propertie of this Tree is, that rubbing pieces one againſt another, fire comes forth, and this is their kindling of fire. For chaulke they vſe ſhells found on the Sea ſide, which ioynes and conglutinats their buildings very well together.

Fire how kindled.

They haue two languages in vſe. The firſt, which is particular to the Maldiues and is very ample. The ſecond is the Arabick, which they greatly eſteeme and learne as wee doe Latine. Alſo it ſerueth them daily for their holies. In the Atollon of Souadou, and toward the South of the Maldiues they ſpeake a language hard to vnderſtand, and very clouniſh and rude.

Languages.

They apparell themſelues thus. Firſt the men tye about their priuities a great ſwath-band of cloth, which comes round about them, for feare that going or comming, or in doing any worke, they might be diſcouered. After, they put a little cloth of cotton died blew, or red, or ſome other colour, which goes no lower then their knees. Vpon that they put a great piece of cloth of cotton or ſilk (if they are a little rich and wealthy) which reacheth to their ankles, and gird it with a faire ſquare handkerchiefe imbroidered with gold and ſilke, which they fold in three corners, and ſpreading it vpon their backes make it faſt before; after for greater ornament they adde a little piece of ſilke of diuers colours, tranſparent as cobweb-laune, which is ſhort and extends no further then the middle of their thighes: and after all that they incompaſſe themſelues in a great girdle of ſilke, which is like to their turbant, and is well fringed; they let the ends hang before. Within this girdle, which ſerues them for a purſe, they put their money, and their bettele on the left ſide; and on the right ſide they weare their knife, which they eſteeme very honourable, and there is no bodie but weares one, no not the King. Theſe kniues are very well made, all of excellent ſteele, for they haue no inuention to mingle yron with ſteele. They which haue any meanes, weare the haft and ſheath all of ſiluer wrought and faſhioned. In the end of the ſheath on the top they haue a buckle of ſiluer, whereat hangs a little chaine alſo of ſiluer, whereto are tyed their tooth-pickers and eare-pickers, and other little inſtruments. Others, which haue not meanes to haue them ſo coſtly, weare the ſheath of wood wrought, the haft of a fiſhes bone, as of a Whale or other Sea creature, for they will not weare bone of any Land creature. They are very curious of their kniues, and thinke themſelues not well clothed, except they haue them at their girdle.

Their apparell.

Girdle.

Knife.

No land-bone worne.

They are not ſuffered to carry other Armes, except the Souldiers and Officers of the King, and they onely while they are in ſeruice of the King in the Ile of Male, or elſewhere ſent by him. They haue commonly at their ſide a waued dagger, which they call a Cris; they come from Achen, Iaua, and China. And moreouer when they goe in the ſtreet, they alwayes carry their ſword naked in one hand, and their buckler in the other, or elſe a iauelin. Their principall brauerie, is to weare about their girdle many chaines of ſiluer. There is not one man nor woman, boy nor girle, little or great, which will not haue of them according to the proportion of their goods and ſubſtance. Thereon they put their Treaſure, and ordinarily deſigne it to defray the expences of their Funerals. But none except the Grand Lords and Strangers weare them vpon their clothes to be ſeene: the other weare them hid vnderneath: and yet they will haue them to ſpeake of them, and ſhew priuately. The reſidue of their bodie from the Girdle vpward is naked; I vnderſtand of the common people, for the Signiors of qualitie are not ſo. Yet in their Feaſt dayes they couer themſelues with Ierkins and Caſſocks of Cotton or Silke which they faſten with Buttons of gilt Copper. Theſe Ierkins are of all ſorts of colours, but the edges are welted with white and blue. The ſleeues come but to their elbow; they ſay, if they ſhould deſcend to the wriſt, as ours, they ſhould not haue the free mannaging of their armes. They put on alſo coloured linings, which are very ſtrait, and reach from the ankles to the waſt, which they faſten alſo on the bottome with gilded buttons.

No Armes ordinarie.

Siluer chaines.

Nakedneſſe.

Ierkins.

The chiefe men array themſelues ordinarily with Ierkins and Caſſockes. A great number on Feaſt dayes vſe another kind of gallantry: they bruiſe Sanders and Camphire on very ſlicke and ſmooth ſtones (which they bring from the firme Land) and ſometimes other ſorts of odoriferous wood; after they compound it with water diſtilled of flowres, and ouerſpread their bodies with this paſte, from the Girdle vpwards, adding many formes with their finger, ſuch as they imagine: it is ſomewhat like cut and pinked Doublets, and of an excellent ſauour. Sometimes they bind together faire flowres, and of the beſt ſent. They dreſſe their Wiues or Lemmons in this ſort, and make vpon their backes workes and ſhadowes, as they pleaſe. This is one kind of brauery which is much vſed, but they dare not preſent themſelues ſo trimmed before the King, nor within the Palace. Vpon their heads they weare red Turbants, or diuerſified into various colours, the richer ſort of Silke, the poorer of fine Cotton. The Souldiers and Officers of the King attire themſelues after one faſhion, which is not permitted to others, putting often on their heads imbroydered Hand-kerchiefes, which others may not. All the people goe naked on their feet, and often on their legges, yet within their Houſes they vſe a kind of Slippers or Sandals dals made of wood, but when any of their Superiours come to viſit them, they pull off their Sandals, and remaine with bare feet.

Womens habit.

Bracelets heauie.

Chaines.

Eare-tires.

The women haue a great cloth of Cotton, or of coloured Silke which comes about them from their middle to their ankles, and ſerues them for a Coate. Vpon that they put a Robe of Taffata, or very light Cotton, but very long: It deſcends to their feet, the borders are blue and white; it is very like the Smocks which women weare in theſe parts. It is a little open on the necke, and faſtned with two little gilded Buttons, and ſo before in the Throate, without any more opening in the boſome: ſo that when they will giue their children ſucke, they are conſtrayned to pull vp their Garments, yet without any indecencie, by reaſon of the cloth which they vſe in ſtead of a Coate. Their Armes are laden with great Bracelets of Siluer, ſometimes from the wriſt to the elbow; the poorer ſort weare them mixed with Braſſe, others of fine and maſſie Siluer, ſo that there are ſome found with three or foure pound of Siluer on their Armes: and moreouer they haue Chaines of Siluer on their Girdles vnder their clothes, which are not ſeene, but ſometimes when their Garments are very lightſome. They haue many Chaines of Gold about their neckes if they be women of ranke and faſhion, or they knit together pieces of Gold Coine, which comes thither from Arabia, or elſewhere from the Continent. In their eares they weare very rich pendants according to their wealth, but they weare them not after the ſame faſhion we doe heere. For the Mothers pierce the eares of their Daughters when they are young, not only in the lap or fat of the eare, but all along the griſtle in many places, and put there threeds of Cotton to encreaſe and keepe the holes, that they may put when they are greater little gilded nailes, to the number of twentie foure in both eares. The head of the naile is commonly adorned with a precious Stone or Pearle, alſo in the lap of the eare they haue an earing faſhioned after their manner. When the women goe in the ſtreets either in the night or day, (although they go ſeldome in the day) they weare a Veile vpon their heads; but they put it downe going with the Queenes or great Ladies, or with their betters, but not at all before men, no, not before the King; but on the contrary they will hide themſelues more when they imagine that men eye them.

It is obſeruable, that none neither man nor woman, except the Prince or Grand Signior dare weare any Rings ſet with Stones, nor Iewels, nor Bracelets, Carkanets, or Earings, nor Chaines of Gold without permiſſion from the King, if they bee men, or from the Queenes, if they bee women. This permiſſion they buy, except they conferre this benefit on them, as they doe often to the women.

Gold prohibited.

Strangers priuiledged.

None, neither Queenes nor Princeſſes may weare Bracelets and Rings of Gold on their Armes and Legs: but for any other ornament it is permitted them to haue Gold; but although the Rings of their Feet and Legges are of Siluer, they may not weare what quantitie they will, if they be not of great Birth and Originall, nor put Rings on their fore-fingers, except the Queenes, the Princeſſes and great Ladies on the middle-fingers; all other women with permiſſion on the two other fingers, the men only on their thumbe. So euery one knowes his ranke and degree, and what ornaments he muſt haue aſwell for himſelfe as his Wife, and there is no confuſion in it, If the Wife of any one which hath not accuſtomed to goe braue before, beginne to goe more gay, or if a man weare Rings ſet with Iewels on his finger, although in ſo doing hee exceeds not that which is permitted him; yet they impoſe on him a greater Taxe for this: except the Officers of the King and of the Queenes, which pay no Taxes, nor the Inhabitants of the Ile of Malé, yet they are burthened with other charges, and pay many extraordinary expences. The Strangers and their Wiues haue priuiledge to attire themſelues as they wil, to weare what ornaments and coſtlineſſe they will, without permiſſion, euen as the great Princes, or the King himſelfe. In briefe I obſerued, that the Strangers haue more Priuiledges and Immunities then the Naturals. Alſo the Pandiare, the Naybes and Catibes of the Ile of Malé, and other Ilands may dreſſe and array themſelues as they pleaſe, without being bound to the Lawes for this thing as others.

Womens cuſtomes.

The women are curious to tricke and trimme themſelues handſomely. They haue a cuſtome to make the nailes of their feet and hands red. This is the beautie of the Countrey: they make it with the juice and moyſture of a certayne Tree, and it endures as long as their nailes. Certainly they appeare very faire and beautifull, aſwell becauſe they attire themſelues neatly, as becauſe they are wel-fauoured, of a good proportion, and very prettie.

Rites of Meate and Drinke, Bathing, Superſtitious Obſeruations: Diſeaſes. Education of Children. Fiſhing, Faſhions, Luſts.

Feaſting.

THey neuer eate together, but with men of their owne Ranke and Qualitie; counting it a diſhonour to eate with their inferiour: Alſo they feaſt ſeldome, except at their Feſtiuals and Solemnities. If they wil at other times entertaine their friends, they prepare a Seruice of many Diſhes, and ſet it on a great round Table couered with Taffata, and ſend it into his Houſe whom they will feaſt: which they hold a great honour.

Feeding.

Being in their owne houſe they loue not the others ſhould ſee them eate, and goe therefore to the furtheſt ſide of their houſe, letting downe all the clothes and Tapiſtrie which are before them, that ſo they may be vnſeene. Before they eate, they ſay their Prayers. They haue no other Table then the floore of their Lodgings, which is couered with a little fine Mat, whereon they ſit croſſe-legged.

Neatneſſe.

They vſe no Naperie, but for feare of waſting their Mats they vſe great leaues of the Bannanes whereon they ſet their Diſhes, and others before them in ſtead of Trenchers: they are ſo neat in their feeding, that they ſhed nothing in the place where they eate, no not one drop of water, although they waſh their mouth before and after their repaſt.

Diſhes.

Their diſhes are of Earth, figured after the maner of the Country, and come from Cambaya; as good as China Porcelane, and ſo common that all vſe them. But they haue no Platter of Earth or Porcelane, which is not after the faſhion of a Box round, varniſhed and nealed, and a couer of the ſame matter. The poorer ſort haue couered Platters in ſtead of theſe Boxes, which coſt little.

Piſmires troubleſome.

The reaſon is becauſe of the Ants, which in great numbers fill euery place, ſo that it is very difficult to keepe any thing without a couer.

Nicetie.

They are alſo ſo nice in their Diet, that they will not taſte of any meate wherein hath fallen a Flye or an Emit, or any little creature, or the leaſt filthineſſe, ſo that they will giue it to the Birds when they come: for they haue no minde to giue it to the poore, to whom they neuer giue any thing which they would not haue, or which is not aſwell dreſſed as for themſelues.

Charitie.

Wherefore when the poore come to their doores, they make them come in, and make them as good cheere as for themſelues; ſaying, that they are the Seruants of God aſwell as themſelues. The Grand Signiors and rich men haue no other Veſſels then other men, although they might haue them of Gold and Siluer, yet their Law forbids it. If a diſh happen to be a little riuen or crackt, they eate no more in it; ſaying, that it is polluted.

No Plate. Finger-ſpoons.

They vſe no Spoones neither to eate Rice nor Honey, nor any liquid thing, but take them with their fingers, which they doe neatly and nimbly without loſing any thing, for they account it the greateſt inciuilitie in the World to let any thing fall in eating. In the meane while alſo, none dare ſpit nor cough, but muſt riſe and goe forth.

Dexteritie.

In eating they neuer vſe the left hand, becauſe therewith they waſh their Priuities. They willingly eate at the beginning of their feeding a Cocos halfe ripe, and drinke the water of it; ſaying, that it is healthfull, and looſeth their belly.

Quicke at meate.

They eate all greedily and in haſte, holding it mannerlineſſe not to be long in eating: and in the meane while, though they be in company, they ſpeake not a word.

Drinking rites.

To drinke while they are eating, is reckond clowniſhneſſe, but after they haue eaten their fill, they drinke once. Their drinke is commonly of water, or of Wine of Cocos drawne forth the ſame day: they haue alſo other ſorts of drinkes for the King and Nobles, or at their great Solemnities. They drinke in Copper Cups well wrought, with couers on them.

Bettell.

After their repaſt, and when they haue waſhed, they preſent a Platter of Bettell, in ſtead of ſweet meates. For the moſt part they haue no ordinarie houre of eating, but eate at all houres when they are hungry.

No man cooke.

Their Wiues and Daughters prepare and dreſſe their meate, and not men. It is the greateſt iniurie that a man can doe to one, to call him Ciſday, that is to ſay Cooke: and if any bee found to addict themſelues to this, they are mocked and deſpiſed euery where, in ſuch ſort that they eſteeme them not for men but women: and they dare not accompany with any but women, nor doe any other exerciſe; alſo they make it no difficultie to leaue them with them.

Butcher-rites.

When they kill any creature for their food, they haue many Myſteries. They cut the throat turning themſelues toward Mahomets Sepulchre, and ſay their Prayers, and all ſpeedily let it goe, or goe forth, not touching it till it be thoroughly dead. If any touch it before, they caſt away the fleſh, and eate it not. Alſo they cut it not euery-where, but in a certaine place of the throat, otherwiſe they eat it not, and euery one vnderſtands not this, but principally their Prieſts or Mondius know it: they which enterprize it muſt bee ancient and not yong, and ſuch as haue had children.

Superſtition.

In all their actions they are very ſcrupulous and ſuperſtitious. After they haue ſlept, whether in the night or day, they faile not preſently after they are awake, to waſh their eyes and face, and rub them with Oyle, and put alſo a certaine blackneſſe vpon their eye-lids and eye-browes: they dare not ſpeake nor bid any good morrow till they haue done thus; they are carefull to rub their Teeth, and to waſh and clenſe them, ſaying furthermore, that the Red colour of Bettell and Arecka, which they chawe continually takes the better: ſo that they haue all red Teeth, by reaſon of champing of Bettell, & they account this brauerie. They carrie it alſo alwaies about in the pleats of their Girdle, and it ſhould be a diſhonor to be found without it; it is the cuſtome when they encounter one another by the way interchangeably each to giue the other ſome of his. They bathe often in the day, not only for pleaſure and commoditie, but for Religion, or entrance into the Moſche: they waſh their Extreems after they haue made vrine, or done their neceſſities, they waſh their Priuities with the left hand, or they waſh all their bodie, which they call Iunan, according to their Feaſts with diuerſities of formes and ceremonies. So that when they waſh in publike, as they doe, a man may know wherefore they bathe, as if they haue accompanied with their Wiues whether by night or by day, they plunge their head three times vnder the water. When they are to goe any Voyage, they deſire not to meet or touch any body, and if any diſaſterous thing chance to them, they attribute it to him who toucht them. Aboue al when they goe on fiſhing, they muſt not ſalute any, nor bid them good morrow. From the going downe of the Sunne on Thurſday in the Euening, till the day ſollowing about three or foure of the clocke, they will not permit any thing to be carried out of their Houſes, although their deereſt Loue, or their Father would borrow any thing, they would not giue it them, neither will they render that which ſhall be ſent for, although it bee not theirs: yet they will receiue any thing, and let it enter into their houſes in the meane-while without any ſcruple. They wrangle not nor quarrell together, although there be enmitie betweene them; aboue all take heed of reproaching.

Superſtitious neatneſſe.

In ſailing, if they be ſurprized with contrarie winds, of calmes or ſtormes, they make Vowes to him which commands the winds, whom they call not God, but King. There is no Ile where is not found a Siare, as they call it, which is a place dedicated to the winds, in a deſolate corner of the Ile, where they which haue eſcaped danger, make Offerings daily of little Boates and ſhips made purpoſely, full of Perfumes, Gummes, Flowres, and odoriferous Woods. They burne the Perfumes, and caſt the little Boats into the Sea which goe floting till they be burned, for they put fire in them; to the end, they ſay, that the King of the Winds may accept them. Alſo they ſet not willingly their ſhips and Gallies afloate, but they kill Hens and Cockes, and caſt them in the Sea before the ſhip or Boat which they will vſe. They beleeue alſo that there is a King of the Sea, to whom in like ſort they make Praiers and Ceremonies in their Nauigation, and when they goe on fiſhing, fearing vpon euerie errour and offence, the Kings of the Winds and of the Sea. So that being on the Sea they dare not ſpit on the windie ſide, nor caſt any thing ouerboord, for feare that they ſhould be angrie with them: alſo they neuer looke behind them. All the Boates, Barkes, and ſhips are deuoted to the powers of the Winds and of the Sea: and ſurely they reſpect them as if they were their Temple, keeping them neate, and neuer committing any filthy and diſhoneſt thing in them. They haue alſo the Kings of the other Elements (as they call them) and eſpecially that of Warre, but all with great Ceremonies.

Characters. See the like in Iobſons Notes of Gambra.

Magicians.

Deuil inuoked.

They greatly eſteeme certaine Characters, which they call Tanide, which they weare vnder their Garments, incloſed in little Boxes, which the Rich make of Gold or Siluer. They weare them often on their armes, on their necke, or at their Girdle, or elſe at their foot, according to the ſubiect of the Diſeaſe; for they weare them for all things as well offenſiue as defenſiue, that they ſhould loue or be loued, or hate, or to heale or cure any Maladie. The Magicians and Sorcerers ſell them theſe for monie, and tell them that it brings them good lucke, and heales their Diſeaſes. They haue few remedies for their Maladies, but haue recourſe to the Magicians and Sorcerers, who are their only Phyſicians. They beleeue alſo that all their euill is cauſed by the Deuill to vexe them, who is the only cauſe of their Deaths and Diſeaſes. Therefore they call vpon him, and offer Flowres to him, and prepare Banquets of all ſorts of Viands and Beuerages, which they ſet in a certaine ſecret place, where they let them conſume, if no poore people happen to take them away. For the ſame purpoſe they kill Cockes or Hennes, turning them towards the Sepulchre of Mahomet, after leauing them there, praying the Deuill to accept of them.

Decenniall Diſeaſe.

Blindneſſe.

Tetters.

The Feuer is common among them; but moſt dangerous to ſtrangers. From ten yeeres to ten yeeres, here comes a Diſeaſe called Curinadiri, for which they abandon one another, as if it were the Plague. It is like the ſmall Pockes, and kils many. The diſeaſes of the Eyes are very common, I haue ſeene a great number blind, and the moſt part haue little Eyes. It happens alſo often that hauing beene long in the Sunne in the height of the day, after the Sunne is downe, they ſee not at all, whatſoeuer fire or light be put neere them, although it were a hundred Torches, yet without feeling any other euill. To heale it, they boyle the Liuer of a Cocke, and write words and Charmes, and ſet it toward the point of the ſetting of the Sunne. My Companions and I were ſometimes vexed with this Maladie: but hauing learned the Receit, wee tooke the Liuer of a Cocke, rejecting their Charmes, to ſee if that would ſerue, and wee found that it healed vs as well as them, without obſeruing their Sorceries. They are much ſubject to the Icch, which they heale with Oyle of Cocos. Remedileſſe Tetters terrifie them much: ſome haue almoſt their whole bodies ouer-runne with them. Theſe euils come by reaſon of the quantitie of Salt-fiſh which they eate, and alſo becauſe they ſeldome ſalt their meates, but powre Sea-water to it.

In the Winter, although the Raines are continuall, yet they goe bare-foot, they haue vnder their feet and betweene their toes, a kind of hand-worme, which breeds in the fleſh, it maketh Wheales and Puſhes full of water, which after they increaſe ingender Vlcers, which greatly hinders their going. They are alſo troubled all ouer the bodie with theſe Wormes. They haue all commonly great Spleenes, and are ſubject to obſtructions, and endure much euill. They haue ſome Receits and Compoſitions of Herbes and Drugges for diuers Maladies, and principally for wounds, which they heale very cunningly.

Bare-foot.
Feet wormes.
Splenetike.

They vſe no bindings nor linnen to their Soares, but only Ointments. Cathaires and Fluxes ſometimes tronble them, and aches in the bones. The Neapolitan diſeaſe is not very frequent: they heale it with China wood, without ſweating or any other thing, they call it Farangui Baeſreur, this Maladie came from Europe, whoſe Inhabitants they call it Farangui or Frangui. They are neuer troubled with the Tooth-ache; it ſeemes their ordinary chawing of Bettell is the cauſe hereof. As ſoone as their Infants are borne, they waſh them in cold water ſixe times a day, and after they chafe them with Oyle, and continue this waſhing a great while: and moreouer, when they make Vrine, or doe Natures Office, they waſh their Priuities with water.

The Mothers nouriſh their owne Children, and dare not put them forth to nurſe to others, no not the Queenes, ſaying ordinarily that the beaſts bring vp their young, but they haue Seruants to tend, carrie, and gouerne them. Beſides the breſt they make a kind of Pappe, of Rice or Honey, brayed and macerated, after boiled with Milke and Sugar of Cocos. The moſt part (eſpecially the pooreſt) giue them Bananes. They neuer ſwaddle their Children, but let them goe free, and yet I neuer ſaw any deformed. Now their Couch hangs in the Aire, within little Beds of coard, or little Chaires, where they ſhogge and rocke them. At the age of nine moneths they begin to goe.

Nurſerie of Infants.

At nine yeeres old they bring them vp in the ſtudies and exerciſes of the Countrey. Theſe ſtudies are to learne to write and to reade, and to vnderſtand their Alcoran, and know what they are bound to doe. Their Letters are of diuers ſorts, the Arabicke with ſome Letters and Points which they haue added to expreſſe their Language: another whereof the Character is peculiar to the Language of the Maldiues, and moreouer, a third which is the vulgar of Ceylan, and of the greateſt part of the Indies. They write their Leſſons on little Tables of wood, which are white, and when they can ſay their Leſſon by heart, they blot it out, and white it againe. If the writing bee to abide and remaine perpetually, they write vpon Parchment which is made of the leafe of the Tree called Macore Queau, which is a fathome and an halfe in length, and a foot broad. To teach their Children to write, they haue Boards made of wood purpoſely, very ſmooth and plaine, whereon they ſpread very fine and thinne Sand, after with a Bodkin they make the Letters, and make them imitate them, blotting out the Rule which they haue written, and neuer vſe herein any Paper.

They carrie as great reſpect and reuerence to their Tutors as to their Fathers: ſo that they may not contract Marriage together, as being allied in Affinitie. There are ſome found among them who follow their ſtudies, who are very skilfull in the Alcoran, and Ceremonies of their Law; they are principally the Modins, Catibes, or Naybes. Theſe two Offices are compatible, for a Catibe may be a Naybe, and a Naybe a Catibe.

New Kindred of Teachers.

The Mathematickes are there taught, and are greatly eſteemed, eſpecially Aſtrologie, which many ſtudie; for they conſult with the Aſtrologers about euery thing: They will enterprize nothing without their aduice. They will not only know their Natiuities and time of their Births, but alſo if they build, whether with wood or ſtone, they muſt enquire of the Aſtrologer, what houre will bee beſt to beginne, that it may bee vnder a good Conſtellation: or if they employ a Boate, although they doe it diuerſly, taking a different day or houre for a ſhip of Warre, or of Merchanchize, or a fiſhing Barke. If they vndertake any Voyage, or any thing elſe, they enquire of the Aſtrologer what ſhall be the iſſue, and whether the day bee good or euill, if the Planet be fauourable or vnfortunate. Whatſoeuer ſiniſter accident happens to them, they attribute the cauſe to the day, and take it patiently, ſaying, it is the will of God that hath brought it to paſſe.

Diuinations.

The Ilanders are much exerciſed in Armes, either to ſerue with a Sword and Buckler, or readily to bend the Bow, or vſe the Harquebuſe, or mannage the Pike: they haue Schooles, the Maſters whereof are greatly honoured and reſpected, and ordinarily the Grand Signiors vſe this exerciſe. They haue no plaies but the Ball and Tennice, which they receiue and caſt forth with great agilitie, although it be not but with their feet.

Armes.

Their greateſt exerciſe is fiſhing, which all in all places of the Maldiues vſe indifferently, without hauing any (as in other places) certaine perſons of this vocation, or certaine places proper to it, which are not publike. This exerciſe they account honeſt and honorable, wherein alſo the Gentlemen exerciſe themſelues as they doe heere in hunting. The King hath twelue perſons appointed to guide and conduct his Boat when he goeth on fiſhing, and to prepare all things neceſſarie for it.

Fiſhing.

Strange formes of taking fiſh.

They haue an admirable quantitie of great Fiſh, as Bonitos, Albachores, guilt-heads and others which are very like one another, and of the ſame taſte, and haue no more skales then the Mackrell. They take them in the deepe Sea, on this faſhion, with a line of a fathom and a halfe of great round Cotton thred made faſt to a great Cane. Their hooke, is not ſo much bowed as ours, but more ſtretched out, & is pointed in the end like a Pin, without hauing any other beard or tongue. They faſten not on their Bait, but the day before prouide a quantitie of ſmall Fiſh, as great as our little Bleaks, or Roches, which they find in great number on the Banks and Sands, and keep them aliue incloſed in little purſnets (made of the Thred of Cocos) with little Maſhes, and let them hang in the Sea at the Sterne of their Barkes. When they come into the deepe Sea, they ſow about their little Fiſhes, and let their Line hang downe. The great Fiſh ſeeing the little Fiſh, which is not frequent in the deepe Sea, runne together in great ſhoales, and by the ſame meanes they faſten them to their hookes, which they white and trim ouer; ſo that being a rauenous and fooliſh Fiſh, it takes the whited Hook, thinking it is a white little Fiſh. They doe nothing but lift their Line into their Boat, and the Fiſh falls off preſently (being not ſtrongly faſtened) and then they put it into the Sea againe; thus they take a ſtrange quantitie, ſo that in three or foure houres their Boates are in a manner full; and that which is remarkable, they go alwayes with full ſayle. The Fiſh which they take thus they generally cal in their language Cobolly Maſſe, that is to ſay, the Blacke Fiſh, for they are all blacke.

King of the Sea.

Generall fiſhing.

They haue another ſort of fiſhing on their bankes, when the Moone is in the change, and when it is at the full, three daies each time. This they doe on Rafts made of the Wood, called Camdou. They haue great Lines of fiftie or ſixtie fathome pitched ouer. In the end they hang hookes whereon they faſten the baite as we doe, and thus take great quantitie of fiſh, one kinde very delicious, which they call the King of the Sea. They haue all ſorts of Nets and Toiles made of Cotton twine, Weeles and other Inſtruments of fiſhing. Neere the Sea ſhoare, and where it is ſhallow, they paſſe their time, and take delight in fiſhing for ſmall fiſh, like Pilchards with caſting Nets. Twice in the Yeere at the Equinoctials, they make a generall fiſhing, a great number of perſons aſſemble together in certaine indraughts of the Sea. The Sea at that time ariſeth higher then all the times of the Yeere, and paſſeth the limits of other Tides, the Ebbe after the ſame proportion recoiles and retires, diſcouering the Rockes and Shoalds, which at other times appeare not. In theſe places while the Sea is going out, they obſerue ſome fit corner, and ſet about it great ſtones, one vpon another to a great height, ſo that it reſembles a round Wall or Raueling. This incloſure hath fortie paces in circuit or compaſſe: but the entrance is but two or three paces large. They gather together thirtie or fortie men, and euery one carrieth fiftie or ſixtie fathome of great coard of Cocos, where from fathome to fathome they tie a piece of the Barke of dried Cocos, to make it float on the water, as we vſe Corke: after, they tye them together, and ſtretch them out in a round vpon the flats. It is ſtrange, that all the fiſh which is within the coard, finding themſelues taken, although there bee no other Nets nor Inſtruments, but the Coard which ſwimmeth on the water, but the fiſh fearing the Line and ſhadow of the Line; ſo that they dare not paſſe vnder to eſcape, but flye from the Line, thinking that it hath a Net vnderneath: The men goe all driuing them to the incloſure of ſtone, drawing vp the coard by little and little ſome in Boates, and ſome in the water (for vpon theſe flats the Sea is ſhallow, and not aboue necke high for the moſt part leſſe) ſo moderately drawing vp the Line, the fiſh flye from it, and are locked vp in the incloſure, ſo that in the end the Line being all drawne vp, all the fiſhes enter in: and they ſpeedily ſtop the entrie with Faggots of boughes and leaues of Cocos, bound end to end, twentie or thirtie fathome, and compacted together about the greatneſſe of a man, and ſo when the Sea is out, the fiſh remaine taken on the dry Land. They often take thus of all ſorts ten and twelue thouſand or more. This fiſhing they make but once in ſixe monethes, vpon euery flat, and euery time continues fiue daies, and they change daily their diuiſions, and returne not often into the ſame place to fiſh in this manner, except at another Equinoctiall.

Lecherie.

The people are aboue meaſure ſuperſtitious, and addicted to their Religion: but yet extreamly giuen to women, wanton and riotous. There is nothing commoner then Adulteries, Inceſt and Sodomie, notwithſtanding the rigour of their Lawes and Penalties: As for ſimple Fornication, there is nothing more ordinarie: they count it not a ſinne, neither their Wiues, nor Daughters which are not married, make it no great matter to yeeld themſelues to their Friends, and after (which is very execrable) to euacuate their Fruit by making an abortion, or deſtroy their children which are not legitimate. The women are ſtrangely impudent, and the men are not leſſe vitious (but they cannot be more) and very effeminate. All their deſire is to procure (if they can) ſome Receit, that they may better content their Wiues, and be more ſtrong to exerciſe their Fornications. I thinke they ſpend all their goods on this; hereof they continually ſpeake, and are very diſſolute in their words, and almoſt neuer ſtirre from their Wiues, of whom they haue pluralitie, to three, which is the cauſe that they cannot ſatisfie each of them: alſo the Aire of the Countrey is hot, and exhales part of their ſpirits and courage: and alſo their continually ſoftening their fleſh in the water, and that the moſt part eate Opium, or Aphion, as they call it, which tipples, intoxicates and duls them. The women (as I haue ſaid) carefully hide their breſts: to ſpeake of them, they account very laſciuious and diſhoneſt. To kiſſe, they make as great a matter as to lye together, although they be diſſolute in their conuerſation, yet they containe themſelues before their Parents, and reſpect their preſence. But if a man happen to ſpeake a word (ſuch as I haue ſaid) to a woman, before one or any of her Kindred, they will goe hide themſelues, and be greatly offended againſt him; he muſt therefore make them excuſes, and ſay that hee knew not that they were neere of kin; otherwiſe they will thinke that he did purpoſely, and therefore complaine to the Iuſtice, that hee may manifeſt which ſaid theſe laſciuious words in their preſence, that he holds them for good and honeſt people. A man dare not enter into the place where a woman bathes her ſelfe, or where ſhe is retired (her Robe being off) although they neuer take off the cloth which enuirons them, and ſerues them for a Coat; but (as I haue ſaid) they eſteeme the breſts as ſhamefull parts.

Breaſts not to be ſpoken of.

When a man and a woman is together, and another perſon meet with him, hee muſt not demand of this man if ſhe be his Wife, or Daughter, or Siſter: for if it were his Daughter, and hee ſhould aske if it were his Wife, he ſhould offend as if he accuſed him of Inceſt; only he muſt demand if ſhe be his Kinſwoman, & he tels the degree of Parentage or Affinitie. As long as the women haue their tearmes, they bathe not, and waſh only their hands and mouth, they change not their Garments, nor lie with their Husbands; nor eate nor conuerſe with any bodie. When the women goe a viſiting in the night, they muſt haue a man to accompany them who goeth before, and when hee perceiues that any body comes, hee ſaith three times Gas, that is, take heede: the men aduertiſed by this, quite the ſide of the way where the women goes, making no ſemblance of ſeeing them, nor of knowing them, with great reſpect: and if they bee other women, they take each her ſide of the way, and ſalute not, except they bee very familiar. They neuer knocke at the Gate (for there is no Ring or Hammer) nor call to bee let into the houſe, for the great Gate of the Court is alwayes open till eleuen of the clocke in the euening: wherefore they enter into the Court, which is neere the doore of the houſe, which is alſo open and ſpread onely with Tapeſtrie of Cotton cloth, or other ſtuffe, and as they approach to this Gate, they cough once, which they hearing within, go forth and ſee if any one would ſpeake with them. Alſo the men going in the night through the ſtreet, cough often determinately, that they may aduertiſe one the other, for feare of hurting, or wounding, for they carry their weapons naked: I vnderſtand the Souldiers and Officers of the King in the Ile of Male.

Viſitations.

Their Gouernment deſcribed. The Iudges, Officers, Gentry, Communaltie. The King his Palace, Guard, Nobilitie, Robes, Attire, Attendance, Exercises, Riches; ſlaine by the Bengalans.

THe gouernment of the eſtate of the Maldiues is royall and very abſolute and ancient; the King is feared and reuerenced, and all depend of him. In each of the thirteene Cantons is one principall, whom they call Naybe. Theſe Naybes or principalls of the Prouinces are Prieſts and Doctors of their Law, and haue the ouerſight of all that concernes Religion, and inſtruction of the people therein, and exerciſe of Iuſtice, and command the Prieſts which are vnder them. Theſe Atollons are ſubdiuided into many Ilands, in each of which, where there is not aboue fortie and one men, is a Doctor called Catibe, ſuperior in the Religion of that Ile, who hath vnder him the particular Prieſts of the Moſchees, all which haue care to nouriſh and inſtruct the people in the Law; and liue of a certaine portion of fruits which euery one is bound to giue them, and of certaine rents which the King giues them according to their degree. But particularly the Naybes, beſides the exerciſe of Religion, and authoritie which they haue, are inſtituted to execute and doe iuſtice, each in his gouernment. They are the onely Iudges of the Country as well in matters ciuill as criminall, and if any one will haue iuſtice hee muſt goe finde out the Naybe, or attend his comming to the place. For the Naybes foure times in the yeere, go in circuit about the Ilands, each in his Iuriſdiction, and make Viſitations, as wel for the religion of the Prieſts, as for iuſtice. This is their greateſt reuenue, for then their duties are paid them: moreouer they receiue ſtore of Preſents from many perſons, whereof they are very greedie. In all the Maldiues there are no Iudges but the thirteene Naybes; for the Catibes of the Ilands, and the Prieſts of the Moſchees are but for a ſhew.

Ouer theſe Naybes there is a ſuperiour, which reſides in the Ile of Male (and is euer neere his perſon) which is called Pandiare, who is not onely chiefe of the Religion throughout all the Realme, but alſo ſoueraigne Iudge. So that after they haue pleaded before the Naybe, if they will not ſtand to his ſentence, whether in matters ciuill or criminall, they may appeale to the Pandiare: who diſcides all affaires that offer themſelues, taking aduiſe of ſome Naybes which are neere him, of the Catibes, graue men called Moucouris, that is Doctors and experienced men, which which are not Officers : they giue no iudgement if they be not aſſiſted with foure or fiue of theſe perſons at the leaſt. Theſe Moucouris can ſay all the Alcoran by heart (and all the others read it onely) beſides diuers other Sciences which they know. They ſolemnely inuite them to all their Feaſts, Sermons, and Ceremonies ; and are greatly honoured and reſpected by all. There are not aboue fifteene of them in all the Ilands. The Pandiare is called Cady in the Arabick language.

Alſo after the iudgement of the Pandiare, one may complaine to the King, who commands, and makes iuſtice to be executed : and this is by ſix Signiors his principall Officers, who manage the moſt importune affaires of ſtate. The Pandiare being aſſiſted with two Catibes of the Ile of Malé, and by Naybe of the Attollon, beſides ſome of thoſe Doctors, goeth alſo to make his viſitation through the Ile of Malê, as euery Naybe in his Atollon ; and hee is attended with his Officers which carry a long whip to correct delinquents. Hee makes all (without exception) that meet him, to ſay their creed, and ſome prayers in the Arabick tongue, and after demands the interpretation in the Maldiue language ; and if they are ignorant, he cauſeth them to be whipt and ſcourged in the open field by his Officers. The women dare not ſhew themſelues when hee goeth through the ſtreet, and if hee encounter any vnuailed, hee cauſeth her haire to be ſhauen.

Caſes de facto & de iure.

Beſides the Naybes, there is in euery Atollon a man delegated and appointed by the King to receiue and leuie his rents and reuenues. All the Iles haue each their order by Diuiſion and Cantons, as that of Malé ; there are fiue diuiſions which they call Auares, and each hath a principall called Mouſcouly Auare : the ancient of the diuiſion, and nothing is done there for the King or the people, but they come to him. Iuſtice (which they call in their language Saconeſt) is exerciſed in the houſe of the Naybe, or elſe in the Ile of Malé in the houſe of the Pandiare, and ſometimes in the Kings Palace when the matter is of weight or moment. When they will begin a ſuit, they goe to the Iudge or Naybe, who ſends one of the Sergeants (of whom there are a certaine number, called Deuanits) to make the accuſed partie come ; and if he bee in the ſame Iland, hee muſt haue to make him come, a letter of the Naybe, by the meanes whereof he muſt notifie the place where he is, ſeeing that he is in the Iuriſdiction of the Naybe. Or elſe if hee be of another Iuriſdiction, the Naybe can doe nothing, but in this caſe he muſt haue letters of the Pandiare, who can make him come from any part of the Realme into the Kings Iland, where he abideth. Now they giue this letter to the Calibe, ſuperior of the Ile, who in preſence of them all giues it to the partie accuſed, expreſly charging him to goe thither : hereof they dare not faile, for they which diſobey this iuſtice, cannot aſſociate with any, nor goe to the Moſche, nor eate nor drinke with them, and they hold them not of their Law. If it bee ſo that any will not obey, or if hee be ſome Grande, the King ſends his Souldiers to conſtraine him to come. But if hee will not plead before the Naybe, either becauſe hee beares him ill will, or becauſe that his partie hath too much fauour againſt him, then the plaintiffe or the defendant, who is accuſed, goeth to find out the King, who commands that hee doe Iuſtice by Iudges not ſuſpected. This they execute in the Kings houſe, in the preſence of all the chiefe of the Iland. The parties plead their owne cauſes themſelues. If the cauſe bee of fact, each bring three witneſſes, and if they haue them not, the defendant is beleeued on his oath only, which they take in touching with the hand the book of their law, which the Iudge preſents ; and then the plaintiffe if hee bee a little verſed in affaires, markes ſcrupulouſly if the partie touched the booke really, and the place where he did it. If the difference bee in matter of right, they are iudged by the Law.

Slaues.
Debtors.

The Iudges take nothing for their iudgements, for nothing is due, except that the Deuonits or Sergeants haue the twelfth part of that which is due or adiudged. The Slaues cannot bee witneſſes, nor plead, nor make triall in iudgement ; likewiſe in ſuch a cauſe they receiue three women for one man. The Slaues are ſuch as make themſelues ſo, or ſuch as they bring from other places and ſell ; for ſhipwrackt ſtrangers loſe not the libertie which they had, if they were Slaues they remaine ſo. The Slaues which they call Allo, are of worſt conditions. They can haue but one wife although all others haue three. Beating of a Slaue is puniſhed with halfe that which they inflict for beating a Free-man. Debtors are conſtrained, if they haue nothing to pay, to yeeld themſelues Seruants and not Slaues, and are not vſed as ſuch, but as naturalls of the Countrie, and ſerue onely their Creditors or other perſons which lend them mony to diſcharge them, theſe are called Pemouſere, which is to ſay, ſeruant by borrowing, and they continue thus till they are acquitted, yea their children are Slaues perpetually if they pay it not. Yet when they are ill intreated, they may diſcharge them, ingaging themſelues in the ſame ſort to another, that lends it them: for all their ſeruice they are nouriſhed and maintained, and when they die their Maſters takes all that they had, and if there be not enough to ſatisfie him, the children muſt ſerue till hee bee paid. There are many which ſeeke (to bee theſe Pemouſſere) to great perſons and men of authoritie, to haue ſupport and fauour : for when they belong to no body, they are troubled by one or other.

Children.

The wife cannot purſue in iuſtice the death of her husband : but onely the children or the kindred. If the children be young, they ſtay till they be ſixteene yeeres old, to know if they will reuenge the death of their father. While they thus ſtay, the Iudge commands him which is appeached of murther to bring vp the children of the deceaſed, and teach them ſome Trade or Myſterie. When they are come to age, they demand Iuſtice, or remit and pardon the Murtherer, without any after examination. In matters of iniury committed on the perſon of any particular, the wronged muſt complaine, or otherwiſe the crime is aboliſhed: except the King will make iuſtice to be executed, without the other partie, but this is ſeldome.

Puniſhments.

Terrible whips.

Adultery.
Rape.
Theft.

Few executed.

The ordinary puniſhments are baniſhment into the deſart Ilands towards the South; cutting off a principall member; or the whip, which is the commoneſt puniſhment, but extraordinarily cruell. They are thongs of great thicke leather, a fathom in length, foure fingers in breadth, and two in thickneſſe: hereof there are fiue or ſixe tied together, in a ſtocke and handle of Wood. With this they chaſtice malefactors, and beat them ſo ſeuerely that they die often. This is the ordinary puniſhment (for the moſt part) of the greateſt crimes, as Sodomy, Inceſt, and Adultery. Beſides this puniſhment, they cut off the womens hayre that are taken in adultery. Falſe witneſſes, and periured perſons are thus puniſhed, and moreouer condemned in a pecuniary mulct, which is diſpoſed of to the poore. A rape is puniſhed as adultery, and (for the moſt part) the rauiſher is condemned to endow the woman or mayd. The ſtealing of any thing of valew, with the cutting off the hand. If they commit any thing againſt the Law, they muſt make a kinde of publike penance. They thinke they ſhall neuer come in Paradice if they pay not, and accompliſh that which the Law hath appointed. For the execution and chaſtiſing of malefactors, they haue no hangmen, but the Deuanits or Sergeants doe it. For puniſhment with death, although their Law ordaines it for Homicide, yet the Iudges neuer condemne them to it. All the while I was in the Maldiues I ſaw none condemned to death by the ordinary Iudges: they dare not doe it, except the King expreſly commands it, which is ſeldome. They ſay commonly, that they muſt not put men to death ſo; and if they ſhould execute all that merit death, it would bee a long time before the Ilands ſhould bee inhabited. Yet the King ſends his Souldiers, and condemnes and executes thoſe as haue deſerued it. For although iuſtice be in the power of the Doctors of the Law, yet the King is the onely arbitrator, and alone hath power of life and death. Among others the King vſeth one particular puniſhment on thoſe which haue offended him; hee maketh them lye on the ground vpon their belly, and their armes and legs to bee held by foure men, and after to be beaten on their backe, with a ſtaffe or kinde of cane, called Rotan, which comes from Bengala; this pulls off the skin, and the marke or brand endures perpetually.

No writings for euidence.

They neuer put in writing their ſuits and differences, nor their accuſations, nor depoſitions, nor iudgements, for they are all very readie and compendious; neither in ciuill matters, except it be about grounds of inheritance, or Cocos trees which are immoueable, and that the Pandiare or Naybes giue iudgement. For in this caſe, they giue their letters ſealed with their ſeale of Inke, for I neuer ſaw them vſe any Waxe, and this ſerues for a teſtimony to their offſpring, that hereafter, neither hee which hath obtained the cauſe, nor his heyres may be diſquieted.

Degrees and ſorts of men. Rites, & rights of Nobilitie.

There are foure ſorts of perſons: in the firſt is comprehended the King called Raſquan, and the Queene called Renequillague, with thoſe which are of their race, and precedent Kings, Princes, called Calans, Princeſſes or Camenaz, and Grand Signiors. The ſecond order is that of Dignities, Offices, and Degrees, which the King diſtributes, wherein likewiſe the rankes is very carefully obſerued. The third is the Gentrie. The fourth, the common People. I will begin at the third, which is the ranke which birth giues to euery one ſeparate from the common people. There are many Noble men diſperſed heere and there among the Iles. They which are not Nobles dare not ſit with them, nor in their preſence, although it bee at the further end, and as farre as they ſee a greater then they comming behind, they muſt attend and let him goe before. If alſo they haue any piece of cloath vpon their ſhoulder, or any thing, they put it downe. The Noble women, although they marrie with men of inferiour condition and not Noble, looſe not their ranke. Yea the Children which iſſue from them are Noble, by reaſon of the Mother. Alſo the women of low eſtate marrying to Noble men, are not ennobled by their Husbands, but retayne their firſt ranke. Beſides the Nobles by birth, the King ennobles whom hee will. Then when this happens, the King beſides his Letters wherewith hee priuiledgeth him, ſends one of his Officers appointed for this, who makes publication throughout all the Ile, or ſounds a kinde of Bell which is of caſt mettall, whereon hee ſtrikes with a Hammer. After the King, are the Princes of the bloud, and they which are deſcended of other Kings his predeceſſours, who although they be of diuers Houſes, yet are all much honoured and reſpected.

Kings Lieutenant and other Officers.

Next are the great Officers of the Kingdome: that is to ſay, the Quilague, which wee may call the Kings Lieutenant generall: becauſe next to the King and in his abſence, hee is moſt mightie in the Gouernment of the State, ſo that nothing is done without his aduiſe. Alſo if the King will haue any thing obſerued or executed, hee is the firſt whom the King deputes, and to whom hee addreſſeth his commands. Next him, another called Parenas which is of great authoritie: An Endequery, whoſe Office is to bee alwayes neere the King, and to counſell him in all his occaſions and affaires. Another hath charge of Sea matters, which wee may tearme Admirall, hee is called Velannas, hee lookes to the Ships which arriue, and their Merchandize; and hath care of entertaining Strangers and ſoliciting for them, hee vſeth to come to the ſhips which arriue, euen the ſmalleſt Barkes, although they bee of the Countrey, and takes away the rudder, and cauſeth it to bee carried into the Kings houſe, for feare they ſhould goe away without taking leaue. He hath vnder him two Sergeants which looke to the Ships that arriue, and make him account, and obey his beheſts. There is a Generall ouer the Souldiers, called Dorimenaz, who hath alſo a Lieutenant, called Acouraz. Moreouer there is a Chanceller, called Manpas, who ſets to all letters the Kings ſeale, which is nothing elſe but his name in Arabick, ingrauen in Siluer, which hee dips in Inke and imprints on the paper. The Secretarie is called Carans, the Controller of the Exchequer Musbandery, and the Treaſurer Ransbandery: with diuers other leſſer Officers. All theſe Grandes abouenamed are often called to giue the King counſell when he pleaſeth, with ſixe ancient and experienced men, called Mouſcoulis. Beſides the rents and reuenues of certaine Ilands giuen to theſe Officers, the King giues them Rice for their prouiſion, as alſo to the Souldiers, with Tributes and Tolls of Barkes and Ships which come to trafficke in the Maldiues. All the honour in this Countrie is to eate of the Kings Rice, and be of the number of his Officers: without this a man is not eſteemed noble, although he be.

Souldiers and Gentlemen.

Next to the Officers the Souldiers are moſt eſteemed and priuiledged, and they make little account of a Gentleman if hee bee not inrolled in the Souldierie. The Souldierie conſiſts of Souldiers of the Kings Guard which are ſix hundred, diuided into ſixe companies, commanded by the Mouſcoulis. There are ten other great Companies gathered together, each whereof hath a Captayne of the Grand Signiors of the Realme. Theſe guard not, but ſerue the King, when hee hath any affaires, not onely as Souldiers to march and fight, but to doe all that hee commands, as to lanch a Ship, to draw it on dry land, or to doe ſuch great worke where there is neede of men to build his Palace, if it bee needfull, or to make any worke or edifice for him. They call them and gather them together with the ſound of a certayne Bell. They diuide them into parts, for there are fiue Companies which are more honourable, wherein they admit none but Gentlemen, and other fiue Companies meaner, of all ſorts of perſons.

None can bee entred into the Companies, before they haue permiſſion of the King; and moreouer it coſts him for his entrance ſixtie Larins, twentie to the King for his permiſſion, and fortie to diſtribute to the Companie whereof hee ought to bee. The Slaues therefore cannot bee inrolled, nor they which get their liuing and ſubſtance from the Coco Trees, nor any mechanicall and baſe people, and generally thoſe which cannot write and reade, nor thoſe which ſerue others. Moreouer they buy for the moſt part all Offices of the King, and they are greatly ſought after by rich men, becauſe of Honour, Authoritie, and Power, which they haue ouer others; but they may not ſell, leaue, nor reſigne them.

One name.

All the Ilanders haue but one name, without any firname or name of the familie, and vſe frequently theſe names, Mahomet, Haly, Huſſum, Aſſan, Ibrahim, and ſuch others, but to know them, they diſtinguiſh them by their qualitie, which they adde in the end of their name as they that are of Noble race adde to their name Tacourou, and their Wiues Bybis: Moreouer they put alſo the Ile which is theirs. Thoſe which are not Noble, but by their Office or qualitie, call themſelues Callogues, and their Wiues and Daughters, Camulogues. Not thoſe onely which I haue named vſe theſe, but others obtayning of the King vacant functions, to bee ſeparated from the Plebeians. They buy this dearely of the King, becauſe the Names and Titles are limited to a certayne number. The common people are called with their proper Callo, and adde alſo the trade and condition whereof they are, their Wiues and Daughters Camulo.

The Kings Palace.

The Palace of the King is built of Stone, compoſed of many handſome manſions and well built, yet without any ornament of Architecture, and of one ſtorie. Round about it are Yardlands and Gardens, where are Fountaines and Ciſternes of water, encloſed with walles and paued on the bottome with great ſmooth ſtones. Theſe places are guarded continually by men appointed for it, becauſe the King and Queenes waſh themſelues there, all others being ſtraitly pohibited from waſhing there. In the incloſure of the Palace (called in their Language Gandoyre, which is very large) are many Lodgings and Courts, which haue all in the midſt a Well garniſhed with faire white ſtones. In one of theſe Courts, are two Magaſins of the King: in one he puts his Ordnance, in the other all other ſorts of Munition.

Guard.

At the entrance of the Palace is a Corps de guard, where are many Pieces of Ordnance, and other kindes of Armes. The Portall is made like a ſquare Tower, vpon the top whereof on Feaſt dayes, players of Inſtruments play and ſing. From thence they come to the firſt Hall, where the Souldiers wayte: a little further is another great Hall for the Signiors, Gentlemen, and perſons of faſhion. For none neither Signiors, nor Plebeian, man, woman, nor childe, dare goe further, except the domeſticall Officers of the King and Queenes, and their Slaues and Seruitors. The pauement of theſe Hals are eleuated three foot aboue the ground, and neatly boarded with wood well playned. It is thus raiſed vp becauſe of the Ants. Then the floore is after all couered with a little Matte, which they make in the Iles, interlaced in various colours, with Characters and other workes very finely contriued. The walls are hanged with Tapiſtrie of Silke; alſo vpon the plat-fonds, it is couered with tapeſtrie of ſilke, from which hangs round about faire fringes as a Curtaine. The King made the great Enſigne and Banner of our ſhip which was blue, where the Armes of France were well made, to bee diſplayed in the Souldiers and Strangers hall.

In theſe Halls before the place where the King ſits, there is another forme of Curtaines very rich, vnder which is a large place eleuated two foot, couered with a great Tapeſtrie, hereon they ſit croſſe-legged, for they vſe no other ſeats. Vpon theſe Mattes throughout all the hall, the Nobles which come to aſſemble together ſit downe. In this ſitting they obſerue exactly the order of their Dignities: for they which are of lower degree, ſtay at the lower end, if the King or his Grandes which are there in his abſence, bid them not ſit. For the Gentlemen of the Ile of Male, and ordinarie Courtiers, which are bound to come and ſalute the King euerie day after noone, ſtay and ſit in the ſecond Hall, and may goe no further, wayting till the King come foorth, or that they ſee ſome domeſticke Officer, by whom they ſend the King word that they are come to ſalute him. Sometimes the King ſends them while they are thus ſitting, platters full of Bettell and Fruits, which they hold a great honour. The Gentrie of the other Ilands come alſo and obſerue the ſame cuſtomes that they doe of the Ile of Male: but they come not without Preſents, for none is permitted to ſalute the King, neither Noble-man nor Merchant, without one.

Preſents.

The Chambers and inner Lodgings are well adorned, hanged with Tapeſtrie of ſilke, inriched with flowers, boughes and branches of Gold, and of diuers colours. The people vſe tapeſtrie of Cotton, which is compoſed of many pieces of cloath of Cotton of all colours. Their Beds are hanged in the ayre by foure cords to a barre which is ſuſtained with two pillers. They make the beds of the King and rich men in this ſort, becauſe they may rocke and ſhogge them more eaſily. They are accuſtomed when they are layd downe to make their folke touch and mooue their bodie, and chafe them eaſily, ſtrike them little blowes with both their hands together, ſaying that is good againſt the Spleene, and makes their griefe ceaſe; alſo that it makes them ſleepe ſoundly, and makes them forget the griefe of the member beaten and rubbed.

The ordinarie habillement of the King, is a white fine Robe of Cotton, or rather a Caſſoque, deſcending to the girdle or a little lower, edged with white and blue, made faſt before with maſſie buttons of Gold. With this he weares a piece of red imbroydered Taffetie, which reacheth from the girdle to the heele. This Taffetie is girded with a long large girdle of Silke fringed with Gold, and a great chayne of Gold before, whereat hangs a great Iewell as big as a hand, of exquiſite ſtones which may bee ſeene. Hee weares alſo a knife after the manner of the Countrey, but more richly wrought. Vpon his head hee hath a Bonnet of red Scarlet, which is much eſteemed in this Countrey, and permitted to none but the King: this bonnet is laced with Gold, and on the top it hath a great button of maſſie Gold with a precious Stone; and although the Grandes and Souldiers weare their hayre long, yet hee hath his ſhauen euery weeke. Hee vſeth to haue his legges alwayes bare as others, and weares only on his feet Pantoffles of guilded Copper, brought out of Arabia and made like ſandals. Of which ſort none but the Queenes and Princeſſes his kinſwomen may weare. When the King goeth foorth, hee hath a Sun-ſhadow or white Paroſel, which is the principall Enſigne of Maieſtie, carryed ouer him. This is permitted to none but Strangers who may haue what they will: alwayes there is one Page neere the King which carries a fanne, another the Kings Sword and Buckler, another a boxe full of Bettell and Arecqua, which hee chawes euery houre. A Doctor of the Law alwayes followes him, and neuer looſeth ſight of him, reading a Booke in his preſence, and admoniſhing him of his Religion.

His exerciſes and ordinarie paſtimes are not to goe out and fiſh as his predeceſſors vſed to doe, but to remayne for the moſt immured in his Palace, to court his Queenes, ſee his Courtiers, and many Mechanickes and Artificers worke, as Painters, Goldſmiths, Imbroiderers, Cutlers, Ioyners, Turners, Armorers, and others ſorts which hee keepes in his Palace, and furniſheth them with matter to worke. Hee workes himſelfe, and ſaith frequently that it is a ſinne to bee idle. Hee hath a quicke and viue apprehenſion, and hath skill to worke in many Crafts and Myſteries, and is daily curious to learne: hee ſeekes out thoſe which are excellent in any thing; if hee meet with any ſtranger that knowes that which he nor his Ilanders know not, he makes very much of him, that he may ſhew him his Art.

Reſpect of Arts.

Going out of his Palace, hee is accompanied with his Souldiers, whereof hee hath a hundred euery day for his Guard. On Friday he goeth to the Moſche, in a faire order and kind of pompe, for the Souldiers goe in rankes, ſome before and ſome behinde, and ſo his ordinarie Officers: the Drums, Flutes, Trumpets, make good agreeable muſicke. After ſeruice is done, hee returnes in the ſame order, the Souldiers going with the ſound of Inſtruments playing among them and leaping before the King with their armes, and ſtriking blowes with their Swords on one anothers Bucklers: ſhewing their agilitie, yet not all together, to auoyde confuſion but two at a time onely, and ſo one after another without ceaſing. The people of the Ile which are preſent goe home with him, and it ſhould bee a ſhame to any one not to goe. Then the Pandiare, Naybes, Catibes and Moudins, and principall Signiors, Gentlemen and Souldiers, which hee chooſeth diuerſly, dine with him, and after dinner hee imployes himſelfe in doing Iuſtice. Moreouer, when the King goeth foorth hee is alwayes on foot (for in theſe Ilands is neither Horſe nor any Beaſt to ride on) except hee bee carried in a Chayre on his Slaues ſhoulders: but this is ſeldome, becauſe he is ſtrong and luſtie & had rather go on foot. As if they ſay of a man hee ſleepeth, if it bee of the King, they ſay, he ſlumbreth or takes his reſt, which they neuer ſay but ſpeaking of the King.

Queenes, and their pompe.

Bathing in the ſalt and freſh-water.

Perpetuall night.

The Queenes are attired as other women formerly deſcribed, but in more coſtly manner. The Ladies, Wiues and Daughters of the Grand Signiors of the Ile, are bound to come ſee them in the euening, to paſſe the time with them. They goe ſometimes forth, but it is very rare: and then there are women and ſlaues which goe a great way before, to aduertiſe the men that they retire and appeare not in the way, but onely the women, who aſſemble by their quarters and diuiſions, and come to meet them with Preſents of Flowers and Fruits. There are foure principall women which carry ouer the Queenes head a white Curtine of Silke reaching to the ground, ſo that they cannot be ſeene. They goe often to bath in the Sea, as all other women: for it is the cuſtome of the Country, and they hold it very healthfull; for this cauſe therefore they haue prepared in the Sea a little incloſure, couered round with Cotton cloth, where the Queenes and great women bath: after they come out they haue another little houſe alſo made purpoſely where they bath againe in Freſh-water. Within the chambers of the Queenes, Princeſſes, and great Ladies they neuer ſee day, nor haue any other light but of Lamps, which burne continually. They retyre themſelues into a part of the chamber, being encloſed with foure or fiue rowes of Tapiſtry, which they muſt lift vp before they come where they are: but none neither man nor woman, domeſticall nor others dare lift vp the hindmoſt, although they are not laid, nor eating, in briefe although they be idle. They muſt firſt cough, and tell who they be, and then they call them or ſend them whither they thinke good. Neither women nor maids pull off the cloth which goes about their middle, but only their robe: the men doe ſo alſo, and dare not doe otherwiſe.

The Kings reuenewes conſiſts in his Crowne lands, which are many Ilands; and the duties which his ſubiects pay of the fruits which grow in the Countrie, that is to ſay, the fifth part of the graines which they ſow, they giue the King a portion of their Cocos and Limons, they compound alſo throughout all the yeere for a certaine quantitie of Hony or fruit. Beſides theſe duties the King impoſeth an ordinary taxe on his ſubiects, according to their meanes, which conſiſts in cords of Cocos, in ſhells called Boly, and dryed Fiſh. For they giue him no mony for his Taxes and Rents, but onely when they buy Titles and Offices, and haue permiſſion to weare their braueries. Alſo hee chargeth the Inhabitants of the Iles to make and furniſh him yeerely Cotton clothes, which serueth him for his Souldiers, to whom hee giues thrice a yeere Cloth, beſides their pay. The reuenew of the King conſiſts alſo in merchandiſe: For all the Ships which arriue there, firſt goe to him, and declare what they haue brought, after they agree at a certaine price for that which hee will haue, which is very often the better part: after the people buy it at a dearer rate then the King; and then the King ſends to diſtribute his merchandiſe throughout the Iles to the richeſt, at what price hee will; although they haue no vſe of it, taking in exchange ſuch merchandiſe, as hee hath need of, at a better price by halfe then it is worth. He ſends often alſo Ships laden with merchandiſe of his Ile to other Countries. The King hath alſo beſides theſe Royalties, whatſoeuer is found on the Sea ſhoare, and no man dare touch it to detaine it, but is bound to take it vp and bring it him, whether it bee pieces of ſhipwrackt Ships, pieces of Wood, Coffers, or other things: or Amber Greece, which they call Gomen, hereof is the greateſt quantitie in the Indies, and none dare keepe it on paine of hauing his hand cut off.

Sea Nuts.

Coyne.

Buying.

Alſo there is a certaine Nut, which the Sea ſometimes caſts vp, which is as great as a mans head: they call it Tauarcarre, and ſuppoſe that it commeth of certaine trees that are vnder the ſea: the Portugals call them Cocos of the Maldiues. It is a thing very medicinable & of great price. Alſo the fiſhing for Blacke Corrall appertaines to the King, who hath many men to make this fiſhing. The mony of the Kingdome is onely Siluer, and of one kind. Theſe are pieces of Siluer which they call Larins, of the valew of eight Sols or thereabouts of our mony, long as a finger, but much folded. The King coynes them in his Iland, and imprints on them his name in Arabick letters. The other monyes are Exotick coynes, and there goe currant, but they take them not but at iuſt value, and at equall weights, and onely the Gold or Siluer, all other ſorts of coyne which are not of the Countrie they reiect. For in India, as there are many Realmes and Signiories, ſo great diuerſitie of mony, of ſtampe and character, not onely of Gold and Siluer, but alſo of another mettall called Calin, which is white like Tin, and very hard, pure, and beautifull, whereof they make great eſteeme in the Indies; they haue alſo Iron mony. But this kind of mony goeth onely in the Dominions of the Prince that coynes it. The Gold and Siluer of whatſoeuer ſtampe and character it be, is currant through all Kingdomes according to the iuſt valew, which is of different valew from ours, becauſe Siluer is deerer then here, and Gold baſer. The King makes no leſſer coynes then the Larin: ſo that to effect their merchandiſe, they cut the Siluer and giue in weight according to the valew of the merchandiſe: which is not without loſſe, for in cutting of a Larin they looſe the twelfth part. They take no piece of Siluer which they haue not weighed, and put in the fire to try the goodneſſe: euery one hath weights in his houſe for this purpoſe. Alſo in ſtead of little and baſe mony they vſe ſhells, whereof 12000. goe at the valew of a Larin.

All

Bartering.

All their Gold and Siluer come from forraine places, for they haue no coine in theſe Iles. In all their publique markets and particuler bargainings, they vſe to exchange very often one thing for another.

Merchants.

Merchandiſe. Coco-commodities.

The Maldiues are very well frequented with Merchants of many Countries, as of the Malabares, of Barcelor, Onor, Bacalor, Cananor, Calecut, Tananor, Cochin, Coulam, Cael: of the Guzerattes, of Cambaia, Surate, and Chaule of the Arabs, Perſians, of thoſe of Bengale, Saint Thoma and Maſulipatan, Ceylan and Sumatra; which bring Merchandiſe whereof the Ilanders haue need and eſteeme, and in recompence carrie away thoſe things wherewith the Ilands abound. Firſt of the Cocos tree, they make many kindes of things which the ſtrangers ſeeke after, as Cordage, wherewith they trim all the Ships of the Indies: they lade yeerely more then one hundred ſhips of the fruit of the Cocos, which they carry into the Coaſts of Arabia, Malabar, and throughout all India, alſo Oyle and Honey of the ſame Tree: and weauing the Leaues of this tree ſerue them to make Sayles.

Shell money.

There is another ſort of riches in the Ilands: Theſe are little ſhells wherein there is a little creature, as great as the end of the little finger, all white, very ſmooth and gliſtering, which they fiſh for but twice a moneth, three dayes before, and three dayes after the new Moone, and likewiſe the Full, and finde them at no other ſeaſon. The women gather them vpon the ſands and flats of the Sea, being in the water to the girdle. They tranſport great quantities of them to other Countries, inſomuch that I haue ſeene yeerely thirtie or fortie ſhips laden without any other commoditie. They goe all into Bengala: for there onely they buy them at great prices, and in great quantitie. They of Bengala make ſuch eſteeme of them, that they vſe them as common money, although they haue Gold and Siluer, and enough of other mettals: and that which is more maruellous, the Kings and Nobles build places to lay them vp in, and account them part of their Treaſure. They giue twentie * meaſures of Rice for one fardell of Shels. For all theſe Bolys are put vp by fardels of twelue thouſand together in little baskets made of the Cocos leafe, garniſhed within with cloath made of the ſame Tree, for feare the ſhells ſhould fall out. They much eſteeme in India Tortois ſhells, which they call Cambe. This ſort of Tortois is found no where but there, and in the Philippinas: it is faire, very ſmooth, all blacke, with many naturall figures. They ſell them beſt in Cambaia where they make (beſides bracelets for women) faire Coffers and Cabbinets inlayed with ſiluer. They make heere very fine mattes of Reed of diuers colours, and inrich them with ornaments and ciphers very neatly. They haue alſo faire cloaths of Cotton and Silke.

Exotike wares.

In counter-change of theſe the Merchants bring them Rice, white Cotton clothes, and cloath of Silke: Oyle which is made of an odoriferous Graine, wherewith they vſe to rub their bodies when they haue bathed, Arecqua, Iron and Steele, Spices, Porcelane, and whatſoeuer they haue need of: and yet euery thing is very cheape by reaſon of the abundance, and ordinarie arriuall of Ships. They bring alſo Gold and Siluer, which neuer goeth foorth againe: for they giue it not for any thing to Strangers, but put it among the Treaſure and Iewels of their Wiues.

Moſchees.

THeir Religion is Mahometan, their Temples or Moſchees are builded ſquare of hewen ſtone. They haue three doores, and at the entrie of each doore on the outſide, there is a large Well whereinto they deſcend by degrees, the bottomes and ſides are garniſhed with poliſhed ſtone, in theſe they vſe to bathe themſelues.

Their beliefe of the world, the Deuill and their Prayers.

The Temple is eleuated nine or ten greeces; the floore of it is couered with Mattes and Tapiſtrie: they are very curious to keepe them neate and handſome; they dare not ſpit in them, nor blow their noſe, but if they bring no handkerchiffe with them, if they haue any neceſſitie, they muſt goe foorth. The roofe is of wood, of excellent Carpenters worke, the wall waynſcotted, whereon hang Tables of wood or ſtone, engrauen with letters and writings in Arabicke. There are ſeparations of certaine places appointed to certaine perſons, yet not to one particuler perſon, but for thoſe which are of one order, eſtate, age, or qualitie, and none dare place himſelfe in a place not appointed for his condition. Within the Temples are Lamps light continually. Euery Moſche hath a Moudin or Prieſt. Each day in the weeke, they goe at the breake of day to the Moſche, and there make a prayer according to their beliefe, that is to ſay, that the world is flat and not round, and that there is a wall of Copper about it, which hinders the world from being ouerwhelmed with the waters which inuirone it, and that the Deuill the enemy of Mankinde, ſeekes euery night to pierce thorow and vndermine this wall, and by day breake hee wants very little to haue made a hole thorow; for this cauſe all the men from fifteene yeeres old, goe at the point of day to their Moſchees, to make prayers, ſaying that without their prayers all the world would periſh.

Waſhing rites.
Diuerſified deuotions.

They goe foure other times in a day to the Moſche : at mid-day, three houres after, at Sun-ſet, and ten a clocke in the euening, and tarie each time halfe an houre. The Women neuer enter into their Temples, but abide in their houſes, and there make Prayers. Yet if they goe not to their Temples the ordinarie dayes of the weeke, they make their Prayers and Ceremonies in their houſes or elſe-where : and although they conſtraine none to doe thus ; yet if they know of any that neglects it, they will neither eate nor communicate with them. Before they enter into the Temple, they waſh their feete, hands, eares, mouth, and eyes, making alſo certaine Ceremonies, and pronouncing prayers, which are diuers according to the houres, feaſts, occaſions, for which they waſh : If they make vrine, or doe their neceſſities, or touch their priuities, they waſh and ſay their prayers deſtined for that : If they haue accompanied with a woman, they muſt bath and ſay their Prayers of another ſort ; if with their owne wife, of another ſort. They waſh and bath in publike and ſay their prayers ſo loude, that by the diuerſitie of prayers according to the occaſions, a man may know what they haue done in ſecret, and when they haue lyen with their wiues, or elſe with others.

Circumciſion.
Females.
Feaſts.
Bells.
Trumpets.
Holiday ſute and ſeruice.

They are all Circumciſed, the males at ſeuen yeere old. Before an Infant is Circumciſed, they ſay hee is an Innocent, and cannot ſinne. For their Daughters, they make no feaſts nor ceremonies, but for their Circumciſion draw two or three drops of blood from their nature, then when they come to the age of ten yeeres old. All the yeere long they celebrate many Feaſts. Firſt euerie weeke they ſolemnize Friday. On Thurſday in the euening, ſome make prayers for their health, others for the deceaſed : and therefore they prepare to eate and drinke, and ſend to their Prieſts or Moudins neere the place where their dead are interred, to pray to God for them : or elſe they inuite them to their houſes, and there entertaine them. On Friday morning one goeth through the Ile carrying in his hand a kind of caſt Bell, much reſembling the couer of a Limbeck, with a hammer of wood, wherewith hee beates it : and at the end of euerie ſtreet hee ſtayes, and admoniſheth the people, that is their feaſt Oucourou or Friday. Hee is aſſiſted with three perſons which haue ſtraight Trumpets, wherewith they often ſound. The people being thus warned ceaſe from their worke, and bathe and waſh themſelues, ſaying their Prayers. And each of them cloathes himſelfe in his beſt attire, and all from the age of fifteene yeeres are bound to bee there. In the meane while on the portall of the Kings Palace, are players of diuers Inſtruments. Then the Kings foure Moudins all together aſcend an Edifice of ſtone, high erected, joyning to the Moſche, putting their hands to their eares, crying thrice with all their might with a moſt fearefull voice all together in the Arabicke language, Alas, alas Aquebar, that is to ſay, Great God: and then they adde ſomething of Mahomet.

Their Office or rites of ſeruice.
Diuers geſtures and poſtures.
Seruice by heart.

Then they goe to the Kings Palace; and the King, if hee will bee found, as hee is ſeldome defectiue, ſends a Carpet of ſilke to ſpread in the place where he will ſit : if hee doth not, it is a certaine ſigne hee will not bee found. When all the companie is aſſembled (and the King is come and hath made his prayers) the Catibe aſcends a raiſed place of wood ſixe or ſeuen ſteppes high. There hee holds a naked Sword in his hand, with the point downward, which hee often flouriſheth this way and that way, and recites his prayers. All this time the people pray without ceaſing, putting themſelues in diuers poſtures, ſitting, ſtanding vpright, kneeling, their face grouelling to the earth, their hands lifted vp and caſt downe, then croſſed, turning their head and eyes hither and thither : it were very difficult to repreſent all the geſtures and apiſh tricks which they doe in this time : then they put off their weapons, and their kniues, and dare haue nothing about them but their cloathes, and they alſo muſt bee very neate. The Catibe changeth his prayers euery Friday to the end of the yeere, and then begins againe. Hee ſaith all by heart, and in the meane time one of the Moudins holds the Booke, and if it chanceth that hee faileth in one word, ſillable, or letter, the Moudine reprehends him with a loud voyce and without diſſembling : for they ſay, if hee ſhould faile in one point, the Feaſt ſhould bee nullified, and worth nothing.

New Moone rites.
Sweet ſmells.

On the dayes of their New Moone all the yeere long, they make the like Feaſt, and reioyce when they ſee the new Moone : then they make cleane their Houſes, Courts, and all their ſtreets and the wayes to the Moſches, and all the gates of their houſes as well without as within, and they ſet on both ſides Cocos ſhells cut in the middle, like woodden diſhes, and fill them with white ſand, and burning coales vpon it, ſcarce ceaſing all the night to burne Aromaticke gummes, and odoriferous woods and perfumes : likewiſe within in their Houſes, at the corners of their Beds and elſe-where, they beſmeare and faſhion all their doores and houſholdſtuffe at their feaſts, with Sanders, and other ſweet ſmelling odours beaten and tempered together; but aboue all, they ſolemniſe foure New Moones in the yeere more then the others.

Foure principall New Moones.
Ramedan.
Seuere faſting.

In the moneth of December or thereabouts at the New Moone, they obſerue a feaſt called in Arabicke Ramedan : this begins at the new Moone, and ends at the new Moone following. This night the men and the women each by themſelues viſite one another, and feaſt, and reioyce together with banquets, dances and merriments, ſo that it is neere day before they retire. The day before, they bathe and make particuler ceremonies, cleanſe and waſh their teeth, and leaue their Bettell, and thence forward faſt till night although the day be long, with ſuch ſuperſtition, that they will not only not taſte any thing, but alſo not waſh their mouth, nor put their fingers in it, nor yet ſwallow their ſpittle. This cauſeth them often to ſpit, and diſeaſeth them much, eſpecially at their Meſquit, where it is not lawfull for them to ſpet, but euer and anone they muſt goe forth for that purpoſe. The men may waſh themſelues * but not plunge their heads in water, leſt ſome drop ſhould enter their mouthes or eares: but the women dare not, leſt the water ſhould enter at their lower parts. Halfe an houre before Sunne-ſet, all which are fifteene yeeres old and vpwards goe to the Temple, that they may in that halfe houres ſpace cleanſe their mouthes and picke their teeth very exactly; to which purpoſe the Mondins furniſh themſelues all the Lent with Pick-tooths, and other inſtruments of neatneſſe, made of the Coco wood. This done, the Mondin makes his crie three times, and enters the Temple; all the People are behinde him; thus they make their Prayers there, and the women in their houſes; which ended, they make good cheere with their friends, and feaſt each other by courſe, hauing made prouiſion long before to that end; the pooreſt ſparing before hand that they may haue to feaſt during the Ramedan. The King makes ſeuerall entertainments, one day feaſting his Nobles, another his Souldiers, a third the Pandeare, Moudins and Religious perſons; and all the people of the Ile in their differing rankes. The Nobles obſerue the like cuſtome for their friends and equals; for they religiouſly obſerue this, not to eate with men of differing ranke and qualitie. Men and Boyes feaſt thus, the Women goe not, but ſend Preſents and Viands one to another, and bathe themſelues in the euening, at which time, men may not bee admitted to bathe. In the day-time the men neither marrie nor touch their women: and during the Ramedan they are more carefull to auoide ſinne then at other times. And if any by occaſion breakes any of the Faſting-dayes, hee faſteth as many after; which often happeneth by reaſon of their ſuperſtition, ſuppoſing their Faſt defectiue, if they happe to bleed in any part. They will not in this moneth worke, be they neuer ſo poore, nor trauell or ſend out of their Ile.

S. Auguſtin in diuers places mentions the Chriſtians of thoſe parts of Africa in his time, not waſhing till the Faſt were ended.

Feaſt-faſts.

Ridiculous Faſt-breaches and making amends.

The Pandiare (whom the Arabs call the Cadi) euery day preacheth at the Kings Palace, or at the Temple, or at his Houſe, beginning at three after noone, and holding on two houres; and all the Inhabitants of the Ile of Malé, aſſemble thither: this commonly in the vulgar Language, and ſometimes in Arabike, which hee after interpreteth. They employ themſelues the reſt of the time in exerciſe of Armes and diuers playes, as at the Ball, in ſeuerall companies, with their feet: the women and daughters alſo haue their viſitations and petie ſports. The youths alſo and maidens court and make loue to each other more in that moneth then at other times; ſend each other Songs, Sonnets, and Verſes written in Coco leaues (which are as white as Paper) inſcribed or grauen with Bodkins; and ſend Garlands of the faireſt and ſweeteſt flowers to their Sweep-hearts. All deuiſe paſtimes to entertaine that moneth. The women and maidens for their flowers ſake muſt faſt eight dayes more then the men, after the Ramedan is ended.

Daily Sermons

Loue-moneth.

Three dayes before it ends, the Coly warneth all from the top of the Steeple to ſend their names to the Pandiare of Malé, as in other Ilands to the Naybe, to pay their offerings (halfe a Larin for each perſon) or elſe man and boy, woman and maide haue loſt the merite of their faſting, ſaying it is their Tribute to God and Mahomet. They which haue it not may borrow, for the King and the richer ſort will pay for all that aske; but if any will not indure the ſhame that another ſhould pay for him, his name is recorded neuertheleſſe, and he makes it his debt, to pay after the feaſt. Parents pay for their children till they be married and dwell from them, as alſo for their ſlaues. This money is after diuided into three parts: and foure Receiuers are appointed, one on behalfe of the King, another for the Church-men, the third for New Conuerts, the fourth for the Poore: there are eight Regiſters which record the offerings. It is after ſhared one part to the Prieſts, as the Pandiare, Naybes, Catibes, Moudins, Deuanits, and others of their Church: The ſecond to the Conuerts, the third to the Poore. On the laſt day of the Faſt is celebrated a great feaſt called Ydu. The day is no more certaine then the beginning of the Ramedan (which is when they firſt ſee the New Moone, as in all their Moon-feaſts, not at the change but at the appearance, which is therefore) ſooner or later in one Iland then another, as it hath had cleerer weather or ſooner ſight. Their May Ydu, a three dayes ſolemnitie;, and their Poycacan at the Full Moone about Aprill or May; and their Dida, or All-Soules feaſt in Iune, when they viſit the Sepulchres and there ſet viands; and their Candis Cacan in Auguſt; and Maulude or Night-feaſt in October (the night that Mahomet died) with the ſeuerall ceremonies thereof, as alſo of their Marriages and Funerals, I dare not preſent you for feare of tediouſneſſe.

Halfe a Larin, a generall perſonal offering, as halfe a ſhekel amongſt the Iſraelites.

No New moon feaſt certaine. They aſcend high places purpoſely being ambitious euery man of her firſt ſight,

Wee will therefore returne with our Authour, and free you alſo from the Maldiues. Tenne dayes before his libertie he had a dreame that hee was free and in Chriſtendome, whereat hee much reioyced, and awaking made a vow to make a Voyage to S. Iames of Galicia, to giue God thankes. Two nights after the King was told of an Armada of ſixteene Gallies or Gallicts comming thither. The King commanded to rigge his ſeuen Gallies with other Ships, Barkes and Boates. This was attempted with all induſtrie, but could not be effected before the Enemies Fleet came in ſight. Thereupon he charged that all his beſt goods ſhould be embarqued, ſo to ſaue himſelfe and his women in the Southerne Iles. He forſooke his Palace, and fled with his three Queenes, each of them carried in armes by Gentlemen, as Nurſes carrie their Infants; couered with Vailes and Taffataes of diuers colours. The ſtreets were full of cries of women and infants. He was forced to leaue great part of his goods and all his Armes and Ordnance behind for want of time; and with much lamentation ſet ſayle for the South, to the Atollons of Sonadou. But the winde fayled, and the Enemie ſent eight Gallies after him, in fight with whom the King was ſlaine, and his wiues and goods taken. The other eight entred on land, and the Authour yeelded to them, and being found not to be a Portugall, was ſpared. They ſtayd ten dayes to lade their Gallies with the goods which they found, and with fiue or ſixe ſcore peeces of Ordnance great and ſmall (a principall cauſe of their Voyage) and then departed, leauing the Queenes and all the people in libertie, except the brother of the Chiefe Queene and the Kings brother in law. His arriuall in Malicut a ſmall Ile, and the Iles Dioandurou thirty leagues thence, and at laſt at Chatigan in Bengala, I omit. At his departure from Bengala, the Mogol had denounced warre to the chiefe King of Bengala, who prepared to entertaine him with aboue a million of men and ten thouſand Elephants. The Kings of Aracan and Chaul, and other great Lords, Mahumetans and Gentiles were his Tributaries, and were bound to finde him a certaine number of men and horſes. The ſucceſſe is related by others, and other things many of many other Indian Regions are related by the Authour, whom wee are willing now to diſmiſſe, hauing entertained him only for a Maldiuan Guide and Pilot.

Mogols conqueſt of Bengala. See in Capt. Hawkins and S. Thomas Roe.

The particulars of his returne he relateth at large: firſt his paſſage from Bengala to Moutingué, gouerned by a petie Prince, a Nairo, ſubiect to the Samory of Calecut. It is ſeated betwixt Cananor and Calecut, and is a Port of the Malabar Pirats. He was here much amazed to ſee ſo many in Armes, borne by all from ten or twelue yeeres. There are ten other neere Ports within ten ſmall leagues of each other, Chombais, Badara, &c. But Moutingué is the beſt. Thence he went to Calicut, and waiting eight moneths for a Holland ſhip in vaine, he was perſwaded by Ieſuites to goe to Cochin, where he was impriſoned for a Spie. At Goa alſo hee was priſoner with thoſe which remained of the ſeuenteene Engliſhmen taken at the Barre of Surrat. The Ieſuits had brought one Maſter Richard and foure other Engliſhmen from the Mogols Court; ſome Hollanders alſo were there: and they all were priſoners together. But the Ieſuites vndertooke for them, and procured their libertie; namely Thomas Steuens an Engliſhman, Rector of Margon Colledge in Salſete, and Nicolas Trigaut a Wallon, and Steuen Croſſe a Frenchman of Roan, with Gaſpar Aleman a Spaniard. The ſaid Thomas Steuens procured the libertie of the Engliſhmen alſo, foure of which became Catholike-Romaniſts, and two of them died there. Don Loys Lorencio d'Eſtabla arriued at Goa with the title of Vice-roy, to the peoples great griefe, which more deſired Don André Furtado. Ten moneths after his comming, foure great Caracks arriued, contayning each about two thouſand tunnes. Fiue had departed from Liſbon, but they knew not what was becomne of the fift, ſeparated by tempeſt at the Cape. In each were embarqued a thouſand perſons, Souldiers, Mariners, Ieſuites, and other Church-men, with Merchants and Gentlemen. But when they arriued at Goa, there were not aboue three hundred in each, by reaſon of ſickneſſe and miſeries endured eight moneths at Sea, without ſight of Land. Theſe brought an Edict from the King, forbidding Engliſh, French, or Dutch commerce, and if there were any ſuch there, to packe them away vpon perill of their liues. On the ſixe and twentieth of December, 1609. He returned for Liſbon. March the fifteenth, 1610. they arriued at the Ile of Diego Rodrigue, in 20. Southerne degrees, about forty leagues Eaſt from Saint Laurence. After a cruell ſtorme there fiue dayes together, they attained the Cape, Saint Helena, Braſill, the Açores, the Berlings, and hauing payed his vow to Saint Iames in Galicia, he arriued at Rochell, the ſixteenth of Februarie, 1611.

Briefe Collections of Voyages, chiefly of Spaniards and Portugals, taken out of ANTONIE GALVANOS Booke of the Diſcoueries of the World.

IN the yeere 1153. * in the time of Fredericke Barbaroſſa it is written, that there came to Lubec, a Citie of Germanie, one Canoa with certaine Indians, like vnto a long Barge: which ſeemed to haue come from the coaſt of Baccalaos, which ſtandeth in the ſame latitude that Germanie doth: The Germaines greatly wondered to ſee ſuch a Barge, and ſuch People, not knowing from whence they came, nor vnderſtanding their ſpeech, eſpecially becauſe there was then no knowledge of that Countrie, as now there is: it may be credible that though the Boate was ſmall in reſpect of thoſe huge Seas, yet the Winde and Water might bring them thither: as wee ſee in theſe our dayes, that the Almaaie which is but a ſmall Boate, commeth notwithſtanding from Quiloa, Moſambique, and Sofala, to the Iland of Saint Helena, being a ſmall ſpot of Land ſtanding in the mayne Ocean off the coaſt of Bona Sperança ſo farre ſeparated.

* This Author writ in Portugall a Summarie of Diſcoueries in Chronologicall order from the beginning of the world: hee was tranſlated and publiſhed in a ſmall book in quarto, An. 1601. by Maſter Hakluyt, I haue choſen theſe, which follow, out of his booke; thoſe which are here omitted, I haue more fully deliuered in other parts of this voluminous worke.

In the yeere 1300. after the comming of Chriſt, the great Soldan of Cairo commanded, that the Spiceries and Drugs, and merchandiſes of India ſhould be carried through the Red Sea, as it was vſed before: at which time they vnladed on the Arabian ſide, at the Hauen of Iuda, and carried them vnto the houſe at Mecca, and the Carriers of it were the Pilgrims. So that each Prince vſed a cuſtome to augment the honour, and increaſe the profite of his countrie. And theſe Soldans had ſpeciall regard to Cairo, from whence the wares were carried vnto the Countries of Egypt, Lybia, Africa, the Kingdomes of Tunez, Tremeſſen, Fez, Marocco, Suz: and ſome of it was carried beyond the Mountaines of Atlas vnto the Citie of Tombuto, and the Kingdome of the Ialophos; vntill afterwards that the Portugals did bring it about the Cape of Bona Sperança vnto the Citie of Lisbone, as in the place conuenient we purpoſe to ſhew more at large.

In the yeere 1344. King Peter the fourth of that name reigning in Arragon, the Chronicles of his time report, that one Don Luis of Cerda, ſonne vnto the ſonne of Don Iohn of Cerda, craued aide of him to goe and to conquere the Iles of the Canaries, ſtanding in 28. degrees of latitude to the North, becauſe they were giuen vnto him by Pope Clement the ſixt, which was a French man.

The Canarie Ilands.

Whereby in thoſe dayes there grew a knowledge of thoſe Ilands in all Europe, and ſpecially in Spaine: for ſuch great Princes would not begin nor enterpriſe things of ſuch moment without great certaintie.

The Iland of Madera diſcouered by Macham an Engliſh man.

About this time alſo the Iland of Madera was diſcouered by an Engliſh man, called Macham: who ſailing out of England into Spaine, with a woman of his, was driuen out of his direct courſe by a tempeſt, and arriued in that Iland, and caſt his anker in that Hauen, which now is called Machico, after the name of Macham. And becauſe his Louer was then Sea-ſicke, hee there went on Land with ſome of his companie, and in the meane time his ſhip weyed and put to Sea, leauing him there: whereupon his Louer for thought died. Macham, which greatly loued her, built in the Iland a Chappell or Hermitage to burie her in, calling it by the name of Ieſus Chappell: and wrote or graued vpon the ſtone of her Tombe his name and hers, and the occaſion whereupon they arriued there. After this hee made himſelfe a Boate all of a Tree, the trees being there of a great compaſſe about, and went to Sea in it with thoſe men of his companie that were left with him, and fell with the coaſt of Africke without Saile or Oare, and the Moores among whom hee came tooke it for a miracle, and preſented him vnto the King of that countrie: and that King alſo admiring the accident, ſent him and his companie vnto the King of Caſtile.

In the yeere 1395. King Henrie the third of that name reigning in Caſtile, the information which Macham gaue of this Iland, and alſo the ſhip wherein hee went thither, mooued many of France and of Caſtile to goe and diſcouer it, and the great Canarie: And they which went were principally the Andaluzes, the Biſcaines, and the Guepuſeoes, carrying with them many people and horſes. But I know not whether the charge of that voyage was theirs or the Kings. But by whomſoeuer it was ſet out, they ſeeme to bee the firſt that diſcouered the Canaries, and landed in them: where alſo they tooke one hundred and fiftie of the Ilanders priſoners. Concerning the time of this diſcouerie, there is ſome difference among the Writers: for ſome affirme this to bee done in the yeere 1405.

The firſt diſcouerie of the Canaries by the Chriſtians 1405.

The firſt beginning of the Portugall Diſcoueries.

THe Chronicles of Portugall haue this record, That after the Incarnation of Chriſt 1415. King Iohn the firſt of that name King of Portugall, departed from the Citie of Liſbone with the Prince Don Duarte or Edward, and Don Peter, and Don Henrie his ſonnes, with other Lords, and Nobles of his Realme, and ſailed into Africa, where he tooke the great Citie of Ceuta, ſtanding on the North ſide thereof betweene 35. and 36. degrees in latitude: which was one of the principall cauſes of the enlarging of the Dominions of Portugall.

Cape Boiador.

When they were come from thence, Henrie, the Kings third ſonne, deſirous to enlarge the Kingdome, and to diſcouer ſtrange and vnknowne Countries, being then in Algarbe, gaue direction for the diſcouerie of the coaſt of Mauritania. For in thoſe dayes none of the Portugals had euer paſſed the Cape de Non, ſtanding in 29. degrees of latitude. And for the better accompliſhing of this diſcouerie, the aforeſaid Don Henrie prepared a fleete, and gaue commandement to the chiefe Captaines to proceede in diſcouerie from the aforeſaid Cape forward: Which they did. But when they came to another Cape named Boiador, there was not one of them that durſt goe farther or beyond it: at which fearfull and cowardly faintneſſe of theirs, the Prince was exceedingly diſpleaſed.

In the yeere 1417. King Iohn the ſecond reigning in Caſtile, and his mother Lady Katharine then vſing the gouernment, one Monſieur Ruben of Bracamonte, which was then Admirall of France, craued the conqueſt of the Ilands of the Canaries, with the title to be King of them, for a kinſman of his, called Monſieur Iohn Betancourt: which being granted him by the Queene, and farther alſo partly furniſhed out, he departed from Siuil with a good armie: But the chiefe or principall cauſe that moued him to enter into this action, was to diſcouer and perfectly to take a view of the Iland of Madera, whereof Macham before had giuen ſo much information. But for all that he went vnto the Canaries, and carried with him a Friar, called Mendo, to bee as Biſhop thereof, admitted by Pope Martin the fift. When they were landed, they wonne Lancerota, Forteuentura, Gomera, and Ferro: from whence they ſent into Spaine many Slaues, Hony, Waxe, Comfora or Camfire, Hides, Orchall, Figs, Sanguis Draconis, and other merchandiſes, whereof they made good profit: And this Armie alſo, as they report, diſcouered Porto Santo. The Iland that they inhabited was Lancerota, where they built in it a Caſtle of ſtone for their better defence and ſecuritie.

The Canarie Ilands conquered.

Porto Santo.

*Iohn de Barros Decad.*1.*l.*1.*c.*2.

In the yeere 1418. one Iohn Gonzales Zarco, and Triſtam Vaz Teixera, houſhold Gentlemen vnto Don Henrie the Kings third ſonne, perceiuing the deſire that their Maſter had to diſcouer new Countries, and willing in that courſe to doe him ſome ſeruice, craued of him a Barke, and licence to vndertake the action: which they obtayned, and ſailed to the coaſt of Africa: where they were ouertaken with a terrible tempeſt; but they were ſuccoured by falling with the Land, and entring into an Hauen called Santo, where they landed, and remayned two yeeres.

*Barros Decad.*1. *lib.*1. *cap.*3.

The Chappell built by Macham found in Madera.

In the yeere 1420. they diſcouered the Iland of Madera, where they found the Chappell and the Stone and Tombe, whereupon the foreſaid Macham had grauen his name. There are others that write, that a certaine Caſtillian, perceiuing the deſire and fauour to Nauigation, which Don

Henrie had, told him that they had found the Iland of Porto Santo; which being but a ſmall thing they made no reckoning of it. Don Henrie ſent Bartholomew Pereſtrello, Iohn Conzales Zarco, Triſtam Vaz Teixera, and by the ſignes and likelihoods that they had receiued, they went to Porto Santo, and there remayned two yeeres: and after that, namely, in the yeere 1420. they ſailed alſo to the Iland of Madera, where they found the memoriall and moniment of the aforeſaid Macham the Engliſh man.

Porto Santo.

As for Monſieur Betancourt, who entred into the Conqueſt of the Canaries, as is aboue mentioned, he was ſlaine in the middeſt of the action, and left behinde him for his heire a kinſman of his, called Monſieur Menante, who after that ſold the ſaid Ilands of the Canaries vnto one Peter Barba of Sinil. There are other which ſpeake otherwiſe, and ſay, that Monſieur Iohn Betancourt went into France to prepare a new Armie about this Conqueſt, and left there a Nephew of his; who becauſe he heard no more of his Vncle, and ſaw that hee could not maintaine the warres any longer, he ſold the Canaries to Don Henrie the King of Portugals third ſonne, for a certaine thing that he gaue him in the Iland of Madera.

The Canarie Ilands ſold ouer to a Spaniard.

In the yeere 1424. they write that the ſaid Don Henrie prepared a Nauie and Armie to conquer theſe Ilands, wherein there went as Captaine Generall, one Don Fernando de Caſtro; and by reaſon of the valiantneſſe and warlike behauiour of the people, they had the repulſe: whereupon Don Ferdinando, conſidering the great charge, and little or no good ſucceſſe, hee gaue ouer the action, and returned back againe. After this Don Henrie reſigned ouer theſe Ilands to the Crowne of Caſtile, in conſideration of the aides which Betancourt had receiued. But the Caſtellians agree not vnto this report. For they ſay, that neither the Kings of Portugall, nor Don Henrie would render the Ilands, till they came in queſtion before Pope Eugenius the fourth; who fully vnderſtanding the matter, gaue the Conqueſt of the Ilands by order of iudgement vnto the King of Caſtile in the yeere 1431. whereupon this contention ceaſed touching the Title of the Canaries, betweene the Kings of Portugall and of Caſtile.

The Canaries came to the Crowne of Spaine in the yeere 1431.

Theſe Ilands being in number ſeuen, were called by the name of Fortunatæ, ſtanding in 28. degrees to the North: where the longeſt day is but thirteene houres, and the longeſt night as much, lying diſtant from Spaine two hundred leagues, and from the Coaſt of Africa eighteene leagues. The people were Idolaters, and did eate their fleſh raw for want of fire: they had no Iron, and ſowed without any toole: they tilled and raiſed the ground with Oxe hornes, and Goats hornes.

Euery Iland did ſpeake a ſeuerall language. They tooke many wiues, and knew them not carnally vntill they had deliuered them to the Superiours. They had diuers other Paganiſh cuſtoms: but now the Chriſtian faith is planted among them. The commodities of theſe Ilands are Wheat, Barly, Sugar, Wine, and certaine birds, called Canarie birds, much eſteemed in Spaine and other places.

In the yeere 1428. it is written that Don Peter, the King of Portugals eldeſt ſonne, was a great traueller. He went into England, France, Almaine, and from thence into the Holy Land, and to other places; and came home by Italie, taking Rome and Venice in his way: from whence hee brought a Map of the World, which had all the parts of the World and Earth deſcribed. The Streight of Magelan was called in it, The Dragons taile: The Cape of Bona Sperança, The forefront of Afrike, and ſo forth of other places: by which Map, Don Henrie the Kings third ſonne, was much helped and furthered in his Diſcoueries.

A moſt rare & excellent Map of the world.

A great helpe to Don Henrie in his Diſcoueries.

It was told mee by Francis de Soſa Tauares, that in the yeere 1528. Don Fernando the Kings ſonne and heire did ſhew him a Map, which was found in the ſtudie of Alcobaza, which had beene made one hundred and twentie yeeres before, which Map did ſet forth all the Nauigation of the Eaſt Indies, with the Cape of Bona Sperança, according as our later Maps haue deſcribed it. Whereby it appeareth, that in ancient time there was as much or more diſcouered, then now there is. Notwithſtanding all the trauaile, paines, and expences in this action of Don Henrie, yet he was neuer wearie of his purpoſed Diſcoueries. At length, there was a ſeruant of his, called Gilianes, that firſt paſſed the Cape Boiador, a place before terrible to all men: and hee brought word that it was not ſo dangerous, as it was reported: for on the other ſide of it he went on land, and in manner of taking poſſeſſion, ſet in the ground a Croſſe of wood, to bee as a marke and token afterwards of his diſcouerie ſo farre. In the yeere 1433. in the moneth of Auguſt, Don Iohn died, and his ſonne Don Duarte or Edward ſucceeded him in his Kingdome.

As much diſcouered in ancient time as now is.

In the yeere 1438. King Edward, whom the Portugals call Don Duarte, died, and Don Alphonſo the Prince being yong, Don Peter his Vncle, gouerned the Kingdome.

Cape Blanco.

In the yeere 1441. Don Henrie ſent out two ſhips, and the Captaines were in the one Triſtan, and Antonie Gonſales in the other. Being put to Sea they tooke a prize vpon the Coaſt; and ſailed on to Cape Blanco, that is, the White Cape, ſtanding in 20. degrees, and informed Don Henrie of the ſtate of that Conntrie by the Moores, which they brought from thence. Whereupon hee ſent one Fernan Lopez de Sauado, to giue knowledge thereof to Pope Martin, truſting to make theſe things commodious to Holy Church. Vpon which knowledge the Pope granted Indulgences and euerlaſting pardon, and all other things demanded of him, vnto thoſe which ſhould die in this enterpriſe. After this, in the yeere 1443. Don Henrie commanded Antonie Gonſales to carry backe the ſlaues which he had brought, and to ranſome them in their Countrie: Which he did, and the Moores gaue them in trucke for them againe blacke Moores with curled haire, and ſome gold; ſo that now that place is called Rio de Oro, that is, the Golden Riuer; whereby the deſire of the Diſcouerie might be the more increaſed.

Indulgences granted to encourage to this enterpriſe.

Not long after he ſent out another, named Nunnez Triſtan, who came vnto the Ilands of Arguin, where he tooke more ſlaues, and brought them to Portugall in the yeere 1444. Hereupon alſo one Lanſarote, a Groome of Don Gilians chamber, with others aſſociated with him, armed out certaine ſhips, which went coaſting till they came to the Ilands of Garze, where they tooke two hundred ſlaues: which were the firſt that were brought from thence to Portugall.

Angra de Gonſaluo de Syntra.

In the yeere 1445. there went as Captaine of a Barke one Gonſalo de Syntra, an Eſquire belonging to Don Henrie into thoſe parts; and he went on Land, where he was taken with ſixe or ſeuen more of his companie, which place was therefore called after his name, Angra de Gonſaluo de Syntra. This was the firſt loſſe, which the Portugals receiued in their Diſcoueries.

In the yeere following, Don Henrie ſent out three Carauels, wherein went as Captaines Antonie Gonſales, Diego Alonzio, and Gomes Perez, who had their direction, not to enter into Rio de Oro, nor to beare themſelues diſorderly, but to trauaile in peace, and to conuert as many Infidels as they could to Chriſtianitie. But none of theſe things were performed by them; for they returned without doing any memorable act. In the ſame yeere 1446. another Eſquire belonging to the King of Portugall, called Denis Fernandes, of the Citie of Lubone, entred into theſe Diſcoueries, more to win fame then to reape commoditie by them. And he being in his voyage came to the Riuer of Sanaga, ſtanding betweene 15. and 16. degrees of latitude towards the North, where he tooke certaine Negroes; and not contented therewith, hee went forward and diſcouered Cape Verde, ſtanding in 14. degrees on the ſame ſide; and there hee ſet vp vpon the Land a Croſſe of wood, and then returned with great contentation.

In the yeere 1447. one Nunnez Triſtan went forth to diſcouer in a Carauell, and he paſſed the aforeſaid Cape Verde, and Rio Grande, and went paſt it vnto another, ſtanding beyond it in 12. degrees, where he was alſo taken with eighteene Portugals more: but the ſhip came home againe in ſafetie, conducted by foure or fiue which eſcaped the hands of the Negroes.

The Iland of ſeuen Cities.

In this yeere alſo 1447. it hapned that there came a Portugall ſhip through the Streight of Gibraltar; and being taken with a great tempeſt, was forced to run Weſtwards more then willingly the men would, and at laſt they fell vpon an Iland which had ſeuen Cities, and the people ſpake the Portugall tongue, and they demanded if the Moores did yet trouble Spaine, whence they had fled for the loſſe which they receiued by the death of the King of Spaine, Don Roderigo. The Boatſwaine of the ſhip brought home a little of the Sand, and ſold it vnto a Gold-ſmith of Lisbon, out of the which hee had a good quantitie of gold. Don Pedro vnderſtanding this, being then Gouernour of the Realme, cauſed all the things thus brought home, and made knowne, to be recorded in the houſe of Iuſtice. There be ſome that thinke, that thoſe Ilands whereunto the Portugals were thus driuen, were the Antiles, or New Spaine, alleaging good reaſons for their opinion, which here I omit, becauſe they ſerue not to my purpoſe. But all their reaſons ſeeme to agree, that they ſhould be that Countrie, which is called Noua Spagna.

In the yeere 1449. the King Don Alfonſo gaue licence vnto his Vncle Don Henrie, to inhabit the Ilands of the Açores, which were long before diſcouered. And in the yeere 1458. this King went into Africa, and there hee tooke the Towne, called Alcaçer. And in the yeere 1461. hee commanded Signior Mendez, a Gentleman of his Houſe, to build the Caſtle of Arguin, whereof he gaue vnto him the gouernment, as to his Lieutenant.

In the yeere 1462. there came into the Realme of Portugall three Genowais of good parentage, the chiefe of whom vvas called Antonie de Noli, and of the other two, the one was his brother, the other was his nephew, and each of theſe had his ſeuerall ſhip, crauing libertie of Don Henrie to diſcouer the Ilands of Cape Verde, which was granted them. Others ſay, that the places which they diſcouered, were thoſe vvhich Antiquitie called the Gorgades, Heſperides, and Dorcades: but they named them Mayo, Saint Iago, and Saint Philip, becauſe they diſcouered them on thoſe Saints dayes: but they are alſo called by ſome, the Ilands of Antonio.

In the yeere 1469. the King of Portugall did let out for yeerely Rent the trade of Guiney vnto one called Fernan Gomez, which Countrie afterwards was called The Mine. He let it out for fiue yeeres, for two hundred thouſand Reyes by the yeere (which is of our Engliſh money, one hundred thirty eight pounds ſeuenteene ſhillings nine pence halfpeny) and added vnto his leaſe this condition, that euery yeere he ſhould diſcouer an hundred leagues. In the yeere following, which was 1470. this King went into Africa, with his ſonne Prince Iohn, where they tooke the Towne of Arzila, and the people of the Citie of Tanger fled out for feare, and that he took alſo. There they tooke ſhipping, and being on the Red Sea they arriued at the Citie of Aden, and there they ſeparated themſelues: for Alfonſo de Payua went towards Æthiopia, and Pedro de Couillan into India. From Sofala he turned backe to Moſambique, and vnto the Cities of Quiloa, Mombaza, and Melinde, till he came backe againe vnto the Citie of Aden: where he and Alfonſo de Payua diuided themſelues: and thence hee ſayled againe through the Red Sea vnto the Citie of Cayro, where he thought to haue met with his companion: but there hee heard that he was dead by the Letters that he receiued from King Iohn his Maſter; in which Letters he was farther commanded to trauell into the Countrie and Dominions of Preſbyter Iohn. Vpon this commandement he prouided for his farther Iourney, and from Cayro went backe againe to the Hauen of Toro, and from thence to Aden, where hee had beene twice before: and there hearing of the fame of the Citie of Ormuz, he determined to goe thither; and therefore went along the Coaſt of Arabia vnto the Cape Razalgate ſtanding vnder the Tropike of Cancer, and from thence he went to Ormuz, ſtanding in 27. degrees on that ſide. In the yeere 1492. in the time of Don Ferdinando King of Caſtile, he being at the ſiege of Granada, diſpatched one Chriſtopher Columbus a Genoway with three ſhips to goe and diſcouer Noua Spagna: who firſt had offered his ſeruice for a Weſterne diſcouerie vnto King Iohn of Portugall; but he would not entertaine him.

Hereupon there grew ſuch a common deſire of trauell among the Spaniards, that they were ready to leape into the Sea to ſwimme, if it had beene poſſible, into thoſe new-found parts. The aforeſaid companie of Columbus, at their comming home, tooke in their way the Iles of the Açores, and the fourth day of March in the yeere 1493. the entred into the barre of Liſbon: which diſcouerie pleaſed not the King of Portugall. Whereupon roſe a contention betweene thoſe two Kings.

Chriſtopher Columbus being arriued, went preſently into Caſtile with the newes of all things, and acquainted the King Fernando with the diſcontentedneſſe of the King of Portugall: whereupon he and the Queene Iſabella his wife ſent ſtreight word thereof vnto Pope Alexander the Sixt, whereat he and the Italians were in great admiration, maruelling that there was any more Land beſides that which was vnder the Romanes. But the end of this matter was this: Alexander the Pope gaue theſe Countries by his Iudgement vnto the Kingdomes of Leon and Caſtile; with this condition, That they ſhould labour to extirpate Idolatrie, and plant the holy Faith in theſe Countries.

Fernando the King hauing receiued this anſwere, was glad of it, and ſent Chriſtopher Columbus againe on the former Voyage, hauing made him Admirall, and giuen him other honours, with particular Armes, and a Poſie written about his Armes to this effect. For Caſtile and for Leon, A new world found out Colon.

In the yeere 1493. the fiue and twentieth of the moneth of October Chriſtopher Columbus went back vnto the Antiles, and from Cadiz he tooke his courſe, hauing in his companie ſeuenteene ſhips, and fifteene hundred men in them, with his brethren Bartholomew Columbus, and Diego Columbus, with other Knights, Gentlemen, men of Law, and Religious men, with Chalices, Croſſes, rich ornaments, and with great power and dignitie from Pope Alexander; and the tenth day after their ſetting forth, they arriued at the Canaries; and from thence in fiue and twenty or thirty dayes they ſayled vnto the Antiles; and the firſt Iland that they ſaw ſtandeth in 14. degrees towards the North, due Weſt from Cape Verde on the coaſt of Africa. They ſay that the diſtance from thence to the Canaries is eight hundred leagues. The name they gaue it was Deſeada, that is, the Deſired or wiſhed Iland, for the great deſire which the companie had to come to ſight of Land. After that they diſcouered many more which they named the Virgines, which the Naturals of the Countrie call the Caribas, for that the men of that Countrie are good warriers, and ſhoot well in Bowes. they poiſon their Arrowes with an herbe, whereof he that is hurt dieth, biting himſelfe like as a made Dog doth.

Here the Admirall left the moſt part of the people to plant it, and appointed his brethren to bee Gouernours there: and ſo tooke two ſhips, and went to diſcouer the other ſide of the Iland of Cuba, and from thence to Iamaica. All theſe Ilands ſtand from 16. vnto 20. degrees of Northerly latitude. In the meane time that the Admirall ſayled about, his brethren and they that were left with them were much troubled, becauſe the Sauages did riſe againſt them. So that Chriſtopher Colon went backe againe into Spaine, to tell the King and Queene of his aduentures.

In the yeere 1494. and in the moneth of Ianuary there was an agreement made of the differences which were betweene the two Kings of Spaine and Portugall. For the which agreement there were ſent out of Portugall Ruy de Soſa, and Don Iohn his ſonne, and the Doctor Ayres de Almada: and for the King of Spaine there were Don Henry Henriques, Don Iohn de Cardenas, and the Doctor Maldonado. All theſe met in the Towne of Tordeſillas, and they diuided the World from the North to the South by a Meridian which ſtandeth Weſt from the Ilands of Cape Verde 300. leagues: ſo that the one halfe which lay to the Eaſt ſhould belong vnto Portugall, and that which lay to the Weſt to the King of Spaine, whereby notwithſtanding libertie to trauell was left equall vnto both. In the yeere 1496. there was a Venetian in England, called Iohn Cabota, who hauing knowledge of ſuch a new Diſcouerie as this was, and perceiuing by the Globe, that the Ilands before ſpoken of ſtood almoſt in the ſame Latitude with his Countrey, and much neerer to England then to Portugall, or to Caſtile, hee acquainted King Henrie the ſeuenth then King of England with the ſame, wherewith the ſaid King was greatly pleaſed, and furniſhed him out with two Ships and three hundred men: which departed and ſet ſayle in the Spring of the yeere, and they ſayled Weſtward till they came in ſight of land in 45. degrees of Latitude towards the North, and then went ſtraight Northwards till they came into 60. degrees of Latitude, where the day is eighteene houres long, and the night is very cleere and bright. There they found the ayre cold, and great Ilands of ice, but no ground in an hundred fathoms ſounding: and ſo from thence finding the land to turne Eaſtwards, they trended along by it diſcouering all the Bay and Riuer named Deſcada, to ſee if it paſſed on the other ſide: Then they ſayled backe againe till they came to 38. degrees toward the Equinoctiall line, and from thence returned into England. There be others which ſay, that hee went as farre as the Cape of Florida, which ſtandeth in 25. degrees.

The great diſcouery of Iohn Cabota and the Engliſh. His ſonne Sebaſtian was the chiefe Diſcouerer of the American Continent on the Eaſterne ſhores that euer hath liued, as in the next tome will often appeare.

The Countrey now called New Scotland diſcouered by Cabota aboue a yeere before Columbus had ſeen the Continent.

In the yeere 1497. the King of Spaine Don Fernando ſent out Chriſtopher Columbus with ſixe ſhips, and hee himſelfe prouided two ſhips at his owne coſt, and ſending his brother before, he made ſayle from the Bay of Cadiz, carrying with him his Son Don Diego Colon. It was then reported that he went to take the Iland of Madera, becauſe he miſtruſted the French-men, & therfore ſent thither three ſhips: others ſay it was to the Canaries. But howſoeuer it was, this is true, that he and three more went vnto the Ilands of Cape Verde, and ranne along by the line finding great calmes and raine, and the firſt land which they came vnto of the Antiles was an Iland ſtanding in 9. degrees of Latitude towards the North joyning faſt vnto the maine land, which they called La Trinidada; and ſo he entred into the Gulfe of Paria, and came out of the mouth which they name Bocca de Dragone, or the Dragons mouth: and they tooke their courſe hard by the Coaſt, where they found three ſmall Ilands, which they named Los Teſtigos, that is to ſay, The Witneſſes, beyond which ſtandeth the Iland of Cubagua, where is great fiſhing of muſcle Pearles: where alſo, as they ſay, there ſpringeth a Well of oyle: and beyond that Iland they came to the Iles of Frailes, Roques, Aruba, and Curacao, with other ſmall ones all along the Bay: and they came to the point of Cabo de Vela, and diſcouered along the Coaſt almoſt two hundred leagues, from whence they croſſed ouer to Hiſpaniola, hauing had alſo ſight of the Iland called Beata.

In the yeere 1499. on the thirteenth day of the moneth of Nouember, there departed from Palos one Vincent Yannez Pinſon and his nephew Aries Pinſon, with foure ſhips well appointed at their owne coſt and charges, to diſcouer the new world vnder the licence of the King of Caſtile, and with commandement not to touch there, where the Admirall Columbus had beene. And ſo they went to the Ilands of Cape Verde, and paſſed the line to the Southward, and diſcouered the Cape of Saint Auguſtine, ſtanding on that ſide in 8. degrees of latitude, and there they wrote on the rindes of Pine trees the names of the King and Queene, alſo the yeere and day when they arriued there. They fought with the people of Braſil, but got nothing, they tooke their courſe all along the coaſt towards the Weſt vnto the Riuer Maria Tambal, and at that time they had taken thirtie and odde Priſoners. In the yeere 1500. and in the moneth of March, one Pedro Aluarez Cabral ſayled out of Liſbon with thirteene ſhips, with commandement not to come neere the coaſt of Africa to ſhorten his way; and he loſing the ſight of one of his ſhips, went to ſeeke her, and in ſeeking of her loſt his courſe, and ſayled till he came within ſight of the land. The Generall was ſo long in ſeeking his ſhip, that the companie were wearie of it, and entreated him to leaue his enterpriſe. The next day they fell in ſight of the Coaſt of Braſil: whereupon the Generall commanded a Barke to goe to land and ſeeke a hauen: which they did, and found a good and ſafe hauen, and they named it Puerto Seguro, that is to ſay, The ſafe Hauen, ſtanding on the South ſide in 17. degrees of latitude. From thence they ſayled towards the Cape of Bona Speranca, and Melinde, and croſſed ouer to the Riuer of Cochin, which before was not knowne, where they laded themſelues with Pepper, and at their returne Sancho de Thouar diſcouered the Citie of Sofala vpon the coaſt of Africa.

In this ſame yeere 1500. it is reported that Gaſpar Cortereal craued a generall licence of the King Emmanuel to diſcouer the New found land. Hee went from the Iland Tercera with two ſhips well appointed at his owne coſt, and hee ſayled vnto that climate which ſtandeth vnder the North in 50. degrees of latitude, which is a land now called after his name; and hee came home in ſafetie vnto the Citie of Lisbon: And making another time this voyage, the ſhip was loſt wherein he went, and the other came backe into Portugall. Wherefore his brother Michael Cortereal went to ſeeke him with three ſhips well appointod at his owne coſt; and when they came vnto that Coaſt, and found ſo many entrances of Riuers and Hauens, euery ſhip went into her ſeuerall Riuer, with this rule and order, that they all three ſhould meet againe the twentieh day of Auguſt. The two other ſhips did ſo, and they ſeeing that Michael Cortereal was not come at the day appointed, nor yet afterwards in a certaine time, returned backe into the realme of Portugall, and neuer heard any more newes of him, nor yet any other memorie. But that Countrey is called, The land of Cortereall vnto this day.

Although this Tome doe not properly containe occurrents of America: yet becauſe in this Chronologie of Diſcoueries partly Portugal to the Eaſt, partly Spaniſh to the Weſt, we could not but follow our Author; It may alſo ſerue as a Preface or Prologue to the following American relations.

In the yeere 1502. one Alfonſo Hoieda went to diſcouer Terra firma, and followed his courſe till he came to the Prouince of Vraba.

The next yeere following, alſo one Roderigo Baſtidas of Siuill went out with two Carauels at his owne coſt, and the firſt land of the Antiles that hee ſaw was an Iland which he named Iſla Verde, that is, the Greene Iland, ſtanding faſt by the Iland of Guadalupe, towards the land: and from thence they tooke their courſe towards the Weſt to Santa Martha, and Cape De la Vela, and to Rio Grande, or the Great riuer, and they diſcouered the Hauen of Zamba, the Coradas, Carthagena, and the Ilands of Saint Barnard, of Baru, and Iſlas de Arenas, and went forward vnto Iſla fuerte, and to the point of Caribana, ſtanding at the end of the Gulfe of Vraba, where they had ſight of the Farrallones ſtanding on the other ſide hard by the Riuer of Darien, and from Cape De la Vela vnto this place are two hundred leagues: and it ſtandeth in 9. degrees and two parts of latitude. From thence they croſſed ouer vnto the Iland of Iamaica, where they refreſhed themſelues. In Hiſpaniola they graued their ſhips becauſe of the holes which certaine wormes of the water had eaten into the plankes. In that Countrey they got foure hundred markes of Gold, although the people there be more warlike then in Noua Spania: for they poiſon their arrowes which they ſhoote.

In this ſame yeere 1502. Chriſtopher Columbus entred the fourth time into his diſcouerie with foure ſhips, at the commandement of Don Fernando to ſeeke the Straight, which as they ſaid did diuide the land from the other ſide, and he carried with him Ferdinando his ſonne. They went firſt to the Iland of Hiſpaniola, to Iamaica, to the Riuer Azua, to the Cape of Higueras, and vnto the Ilands Gamares, and to the Cape of Hunduras, that is to ſay, the Cape of the Depthes:

from thence they ſayled towards the Eaſt vnto the Cape Gracias a Dios and diſcouered the Prouince and Riuer of Veragua, and Rio Grande, and others which the Indians call Hienra. And from thence he went to the Riuer of Crocodiles, which now is called Rio de Chagres, which hath his ſprings neere the South ſea, within foure leagues of Panania, and runneth into the North Sea: and ſo he went vnto the Iland which hee called Iſla de Baſtimentos, that is the Ile of Victuals, and then to Puerto Bello, that is, the Faire Hauen, and ſo vnto Nimbre de Dios, and to Rio Franciſco, and ſo to the Hauen of Retrete, and then to the Gulfe of Cabeſa Cattina, and to the Ilands of Caperoſa, and laſtly to the Cape of Marble, which is two hundred leagues vpon the Coaſt: from whence they began to turne againe vnto the Iland of Cuba, and from thence to Iamaica, where he grounded his ſhips being much ſpoyled and eaten with Wormes.

In this yeere alſo 1502. Don Vaſques de Gama being now Admirall, went againe into India with nineteene or twentie Caruels. Hee departed from Lisbon the tenth day of Februarie, and by the laſt day of that moneth he came to an anker at Cape Verde, and from thence he went vnto Moſambique, and was the firſt that croſt from that Iland into India: and hee diſcouered another in 4. degrees of Latitude, which he called the Iland of the Admirall, and there he tooke his lading of Pepper and Drugs, and left there one Vincent Sodre to keepe the Coaſt of India with fiue ſhips. Theſe were the firſt Portugals that with an Armie did runne along the Coaſt of Arabia Fœlix. It is there ſo barren, that their Cattell and Camels are onely maintayned with drie Fiſh brought from the ſea; whereof there is ſuch plentie and abundance, that the Cats of the Countrey doe vſe to take them.

And it is ſaid that they found the Captaine Luis de la Guerra; and they together tooke land in the Ile of Codego, where they tooke ſixe hundred perſons of the Sauages: And going farther along the Coaſt they entred into the Gulfe of Vraba, where they found Sand mingled with Gold, being the firſt that was brought to the King Don Ferdinando: from thence they returned to the Citie of Santo Domingo laden with Slaues without victuals, becauſe they of the Countrey would not bargaine with them, which grew to their great trouble and griefe. In the latter end of this yeere dyed Ladie Iſabella Queene of Caſtile: Which Queene while ſhe liued would not ſuffer any man of Arragon, Catalunia, Valencia, nor any borne in the Countrey of Don Fernando her huſband to enter into theſe diſcoueries, saue thoſe which were there Seruants, or by ſpeciall commandement, but onely the Caſtillians, Biſcaines, and thoſe which were of her owne Signories, by whom all the lands aforeſaid were diſcouered.

In Cananor alſo he built another Fort, giuing the Captainſhip of it to Laurence de Brito. In Cochin he did the like, where Don Alfonſo de Noronia was made Captayne. This yeere one Peter de Anhaya did build the Fortreſſe of Sofala, whereof alſo himſelfe was made Captayne. In the latter end of this yeere, the Viceroy commanded his Sonne, whoſe name was Don Laurenzo to make ſome entrie vpon the Ilands of Maldiua, and with contrarie weather he arriued at the Ilands, which of ancient time were called Tragana, but the Moores called them Titernbenero, and wee call them Ceilan: where he went on land, and made peace with the people there, and afterward came backe vnto Cochin, ſayling along the Coaſt and fully diſcouering it. He went forth at his owne charges, and diſcouered The firme Land, where it is called Vraba; which he named Caſtilia del Oro, that is Golden Caſtilia, becauſe of the Gold which they found among the ſand along the Coaſt: And they were the firſt Spaniards that did this. Alfonſo de Hoida went firſt from the Iland of Hiſpaniola and the Citie of San Domingo with foure Ships and three hundred Souldiers, leauing behind him the Bacheler Anciſo, who afterwards compiled a Booke of theſe Diſcoueries. And after him there went alſo one ſhip with victuals, munition, and 150. Spaniards. He went on land at Carthagena: but there the people of the Countrey tooke, ſlew and eate ſeuentie of his Souldiers, whereupon he grew very weake. In this yeere 1508. one Diego de Niqueſa, prepared ſeuen ſhips in the Port of Beata to goe vnto Veragua, and carried in them almoſt 800. men. When he came to Carthagena, he found there Alfonſo de Hoieda ſore ſpoyled with his former loſſe: but then they both ioyned together, and went on land and auenged themſelues of the people. And in this voyage Diego de Niqueſa went and diſcouered the Coaſt called Nombre de Dios, and went vnto the ſound of Darien, and called it Puerto de Miſas, which is vpon the Riuer of Pito. When they were come vnto Veragua, he went on ſhore with his Armie, his Souldiers being out of hope to returne to Hiſpaniola. Alfonſo de Hoida began a Fortreſſe in Caribana againſt the Caribes; which was the firſt Towne that the Spaniards builded in the Firme land: and in Nombre de Dios they built another, and called it Nueſtra Sennora de la Antigua. They builded other Townes alſo, whoſe names I here omit. But theſe Captaines had not that good ſucceſſe which they hoped for.

The people of this countrey of Sian are people that eate of all kinde of beaſts, or vermine. They haue a delight to carrie round bels within the skin of their priuie members: which is forbidden to the King and the religious people. It is ſaid that of all other people of thoſe parts they be moſt vertuous and honeſt. They commend themſelues much for their chaſtitie and pouertie. They bring no hennes nor doues vp in their houſes. This Kingdome hath in length two hundred and fiftie leagues, and in breadth eightie. Of this only Kingdome the King may bring forth into the field thirtie thouſand Elephants, when hee goeth to warre, beſides thoſe which remaine in the Cities for the guarde of them. The King much eſteemeth a white Elephant and a red one alſo, that hath his eyes like vnto flaming fire.

Maſter Ralph Fitch which had beene in this countrey brought diuers of theſe bels into England.
* Note that thoſe Kingdomes haue often alterations, as any can ouertop his neighbours ſo that in one age the King is a mightie Potentate, and in another the King of the ſame ſtate is a meane vaſſall: as betwixt Siam, Pegu, & the Bramas hath beene ſeene.

There is in this countrey a certaine ſmall vermine, which vſeth to cleaue faſt to the trunke of the Elephant, and draweth the bloud of the Elephant, and ſo he dieth thereof. The skull of this vermine is ſo hard, that the ſhot of an handgun cannot enter it: they haue in their liuers the figures of men and women, which they call Toketa, and are much like vnto a Man-drake. And they affirme, that hee which hath one of them about him cannot die with the ſtroke of any iron They haue alſo wilde Kine in this countrey, in the heads of whom they finde ſtones, which are of vertue to bring good hap and fortune to Merchants.

In the end of this yeere 1511. Alfonſo de Albuquerque ſent three ſhips to the Ilands of Banda, and Maluco. And there went as Generall of them one Antonio de Breu, and with him alſo went one Francis Serrano: and in theſe ſhips there were 120. perſons. They paſſed through the Streight of Saban, and along the Iland of Samatra, and others, leauing them on the left hand, towards the eaſt: and they called them the Salites. They went alſo to the Ilands of Palimbam and La Puparam; from whence they ſailed by the noble Iland of Iaua, and they ranne their courſe Eaſt, ſailing betweene it and the Iland Madura. The people of this are very warlike and ſtrong, and doe little regard their liues. The women alſo are there hired for the wars and they fall out often together, and kill one another, as the Mocos doe, delighting onely in ſhedding of bloud.

Beyond the Iland of Iaua they ſailed along by another called Bali: and then came alſo vnto others called Auiaue, Zambaba, Solor, Galao, Mallua, Vitara, Roſalanguin, and Arus, from whence are brought delicate birds, which are of great eſtimation becauſe of their feathers: they came alſo to other Ilands lying in the ſame parallell on the South ſide in 7. or 8. degrees of Latitude. And they be ſo neere the one to the other, that they ſeeme at the firſt to bee one entire and maine land. The courſe by theſe Ilands is aboue fiue hundred leagues. The Ancient Coſmographers call all theſe Ilands by the name Iauos: but late experience hath found their names to bee verie diuers, as you ſee. Beyond theſe there are other Ilands toward the North, which are inhabited with whiter people going arraied in ſhirts, doublets and ſlops like vnto the Portugals, hauing alſo money of ſiluer. The Gouernours among them doe carrie in their hands red ſtaues, whereby they ſeeme to haue ſome affinitie with the people of China. There are other Ilands and people about this place, which are redde, and it is reported that they are of the people of China.

From thence they went to the Ilands of Burro and Amboino, and came to an anchor in an hauen of it called Guliguli, where they went on land and tooke a Village ſtanding by the Riuer, where they found dead men hanging in the houſes; for the people there are eaters of mans fleſh. Here the Portugals burnt the ſhip wherein Francis Serrano was, for ſhe was old and rotten. They went to a place on the other ſide ſtanding in 8. degrees toward the South, where they laded cloues, nutmegs, and mace in a Iunco or Barke which Francis Serrano brought here. They ſay that not farre from the Ilands of Banda there is an Iland, where there breedeth nothing elſe but Snakes, and the moſt are in one caue in the middeſt of the land. This is a thing not much to be wondred at; for as much as in the Leuant Sea hard by the Iles of Maiorca and Minorca there is another Iland of old named Ophiuſa, and now Fornientera, wherein there is great abundance of theſe vermine: and in the reſt of the Ilands lying by it there are none.

Theſe were the firſt Portugals that came to the Ilands of Cloues, which ſtand from the Equinoctiall line towards the North in one degree, where they liued ſeuen or eight yeeres.

The Iland of Gumnape now called Ternate is much to be admired, for that it caſteth out fire. There were ſome Princes of the Mores and couragious Portugals which determined to go neere to the firie place to ſee what it was; but they could neuer come neere it. But Antonie Galuano hearing of it, vndertooke to goe vp to it, and did ſo, and found a riuer ſo extreame cold that he could not ſuffer his hand in it, nor yet put any of the water into his mouth: And yet this place ſtandeth vnder the line, where the ſunne continually burneth. In theſe Ilands of Maluco there is a kinde of men that haue ſpurres on their ankles like vnto Cocks. And it was told me by the King of Tydore, that in the Ilands of Batochina there were people that had tayles, and had a thing like vnto a dug betweene their cods, out of the which there came milke. There are ſmall hennes alſo which lay their egges vnder the ground aboue a fathome and a halfe, and the egges are bigger then ducks egges, and many of theſe hennes are blacke in their fleſh. There are hogs alſo with hornes, and parats which prattle much, which they call Noris. There is alſo a riuer of water ſo hot, that whatſoeuer liuing creature commeth into it, their skins will come off, and yet fiſh breede in it. There are crabs which be verie ſweete, and ſo ſtrong in their clawes, that they will breake the iron of a Pikeaxe. There bee others alſo in the ſea little and hairie, but whoſoeuer eateth of them dieth immediately. There be likewiſe certaine oyſters, which they doe call Bras, the ſhels whereof haue ſo large a compaſſe, that they doe Chriſten in them. In the Sea alſo there are liuely ſtones, which doe grow and increaſe like vnto fiſh, whereof verie good lime is made: and if they let it lye when it is taken out of the water, it loſeth the ſtrength and it neuer burneth after. There is alſo a certaine tree, which beareth flowers at the ſun ſet, which fall downe as ſoone as they be growne. There is a fruit alſo, as they ſay, whereof if a woman that is conceaued of child eateth, the child by and by mooueth. There is further a kind of herbe there growing, which followeth the Sunne, and remooueth after it, which is a verie ſtrange and maruailous thing.

Hee tooke the like courſe that the Pinſons had done: hee went alſo to the Cape of Saint Auguſtine, and went forwards to the South, coaſting the ſhoare and land, and he came vnto the Port De Lagoa: and in 35 degrees of ſoutherly latitude he found a riuer which they of Braſil call Parana-guazu, that is, The great Water. He ſaw there ſignes of ſiluer, and therefore called it Rio de Plata, that is, The Riuer of ſiluer. And it is ſaid that at that time he went farther becauſe he liked the countrey well: but he returned backe againe into Spaine, and made account of all things to Don Fernando, demaunding of the King the gouernment thereof, which the King granted him. Whereupon he prouided three ſhips and with them in the yeere 1515. he went againe into that Kingdome; but he was there ſlaine. In the yeere 1513. Vaſco Nunnes de Valboa hearing ſpeech and newes of the South Sea, determined to goe thither, although his companie diſſwaded him from that action. But being a man of good valour with thoſe Souldiers that he had, being two hundred and ninetie, hee reſolued to put himſelfe into that ieoperdie. Hee went thereſore from Dariene the firſt day of September, carying ſome Indians of the Countrie with him to be his Guides, and he Marched ouerthwart the Land ſometimes quietly, ſometimes in Warre: and in a certaine place called Careca he found Negroes Captiues with Curled haire. This Valboa came to the ſight of the South Sea on the 25. day of the ſaid Moneth, and on Saint Michaels day came vnto it: where hee Imbarked himſelfe againſt the will of Chiapes, who was the Lord of that Coaſt, who wiſhed him not to do ſo becauſe it was verie dangerous for him. But he deſirous to haue it knowne. that he had beene vpon thoſe Seas, went forwards, and came backe againe to Land inſſafetie, and with great contentment, bringing with him good ſtore of Gold, Siluer, and Pearles, which there they tooke. In the yeere 1523. Cortes ſent vnto him for his aide Peter de Aluarado, with two hundred Souldiers footmen, and fortie horſemen, and the Caſiques of Tecoantepec and Quahutemallan asked them for the Monſters of the Sea which came thither the yeere paſt, meaning the ſhips of Gil Gonzales de Auila, being greatly amazed at the ſight of them, and wondring much more when they heard, that Cortes had bigger then thoſe: and they painted vnto them a mightie Carrake with ſixe Maſts, and Sayles and Shroudes, and men armed on horſebacke. This Aluarado went through the Countrie and builded there a Citie of Saint Iago or Saint Iames, and a Towne which he called Segura leauing certaine of his people in it.

They of Panuco reſiſted him, but Cortes in the end ouerthrew them, and conquered the Countrie: And hard by Chila vpon the Riuer he built a Towne, and named it Santo Stephano del puerto, leauing in it an hundred footmen, and thirty horſemen, and one Peter de Valleio for Lieutenant. In this yeere 1523. Francis de Garay made nine Ships and two Brigandines to goe to Panuco, and to Rio de las Palmas, to be there as Gouernour: for that the Emperour had granted vnto him from the Coaſt of Florida vnto Panuco, in regard of the charges which hee had beene at in that Diſcouerie. He carried with him eight hundred and fifty Souldiers, and an hundred and fortie Horſes, and ſome Men out of the Iland of Iamaica, where he furniſhed his Fleet with munition for the warre: and he went vnto Xagua an Hauen in the Iland of Cuba, where he vnderſtood that Cortes had peopled the coaſt of Panuco: & that it might not happen vnto him as it did to Pamphilus de Naruaez, he determined to take another companion with him, and deſired the Doctor Zuazo to goe to Mexico and procure ſome agreement betweene Cortes and him. And they departed from Xagua each one about his buſineſſe. Zuazo came in great ieopardie, and Garay went not cleere without. Garay arriued in Rio de las Palmas on Saint Iames his day, and then he ſent vp the Riuer one Gonſaluo de Ocampo, who at his returne declared that it was an euill and deſart Countrie: but notwithſtanding Garay went there on land with foure hundred footmen and ſome horſemen; and he commanded one Iohn de Grijalua to ſearch the Coaſt, and he himſelfe marched by land towards Panuco, and paſſed a Riuer which hee named Rio Montalto; he entred into a great Towne where they found many Hennes, wherewith they refreſhed themſelues, and he tooke ſome of the people of Chila which he vſed for meſſengers to certaine places: And after great trauell comming to Panuco they found no victuals there by reaſon of the warres of Cortes, and the ſpoile of the Souldiers. Garay then ſent one Gonzalo de Ocampo to Sant Iſteuan del puerto to knowe whether they would receiue him or no. They had a good anſwere. But Cortes his men priuily by an ambuſhment tooke forty of Garayes horſemen, alleaging that they came to vſurpe the gouernment of another: and beſides this misfortune he loſt foure of his ſhips: whereupon he left off to proceed any farther.

He had with him three hundred Souldiers, an hundred and ſeuenty Horſemen, foure Field-pieces, and ſome Noblemen of Mexico, with people of the Countrie to aide him as well it the warre, as by the way being long. Hee went by Tecoantepec to Xochnuxco, and other places abouesaid with great trauell and loſſe of his men: but he diſcouered and ſubdued all the Countrie. There are in thoſe parts certaine Hills that haue Alume in them, and out of which diſtilleth a certaine liquor like vnto Oyle, and Sulphur or Brimſtone, whereof the Spaniards made excellent Gun-powder. He trauelled foure hundred leagues in this Voyage, and paſſed certaine Riuers which were ſo hot, that they could not well endure to wade thorow them. Hee builded a Citie calling it Sant Iago de Quahutemallan. Peter de Aluarado begged the gouernment of this Countrie, and the report is that it was giuen him.

In the yeere 1524. in Februarie Cortes ſent one Roderigo Rangel with an hundred and fifty Spaniards & many of the Tlaxcallans and Mexicans againſt the Zapotecas and Nixticas, and vnto other Prouinces and Countries not ſo well diſcouered: they were reſiſted at the firſt, but quickly put the people to the worſt, and kept them for euer after in ſubiection. In this ſame yeere 1524. one Roderigo de Baſtidas was ſent to diſcouer, people, and gouerne the Countrie of Santa Afterward Don Pedro de Lugo, and Don Alfonſo his ſonne were Gouernours of that place, which vſed themſelues like couetous Tyrants; whereof grew much trouble.

In this ſame yeere alſo 1524. after that the Licenciate Lucas Vaſques de Aillon had obtained of the Emperour the gouernment of Chicora, he armed for that purpoſe certaine Ships from the Citie of Santo Domingo and went to diſcouer the Countrie, and to inhabite it. but he was loſt with all his companie, leauing nothing done worthie of memorie. And I cannot tell how it commeth to paſſe, except it bee by the iuſt iudgement of God, that of ſo much Gold and Precious ſtones as haue beene gotten in the Antiles by ſo many Spaniards, little or none remaineth, but the moſt part is ſpent and conſumed, and no good thing done.

In this yeere 1524. Cortes ſent one Chriſtopher de Olid with a Fleet to the Iland of Cuba, to receiue the victuals and munition which Alonſo de Contreras had prepared, and to diſcouer and people the Countrey about Cape De Higueras, and the Honduras; and to ſend Diego Hurtada de Mendoça by ſea, to ſearch the Coaſt from thence euen to Darien, to finde out the Straight which was thought to runne into the South ſea, as the Emperour had commanded. He ſent alſo two ſhips from Panuco to ſearch along the coaſt vnto Florida. Hee commanded alſo certaine Brigandines to ſearch the coaſt from Zacatullan vnto Panama. This Chriſtopher de Olid came to the Iland of Cuba, and made a league with Diego Volaſquez againſt Cortes, and to ſet ſayle and went on land hard by Puerto de Cauallos ſtanding in 10. degrees to the North, and built a Towne which he called Triumpho de la Cruz. Hee tooke Gil Fonzales de Auila priſoner, and killed his nephew and the Spaniards that were with him, all ſauing one Childe, and ſhewed himſelfe an enemy to Cortes, who had ſpent in that expedition thirtie thouſand Caſtellans of gold to doe him pleaſure withall. Cortes vnderſtanding hereof the ſame yeere 1524. in the moneth of October he went out of the Citie of Mexico, to ſeeke Chriſtopher de Olid to bee reuenged of him, and alſo to diſcouer, carrying with him three hundred Spaniſh footmen and horſemen, and Quahutimoc King of Mexico, and other great Lords of the ſame Citie. And comming to the Towne called La villa del Eſpiritu ſanto, he required guides of the Lords of Tauaſco and Xicalanco: and they ſent him ten of their principall men for guides: who gaue him alſo a Map of Cotton-wooll, wherein was painted the ſituation of the whole Countrey from Xicalanco vnto Naco, and Nito, and euen as farre as Nicaragua, with their Mountaines, Hils, Fields, Meadowes, Vallies, Riuers, Cities, and Townes. From hence Cortes went to the Towne of Truxillo ſtanding in the hauen of the Honduras, where the Spaniards dwelling there did entertaine him well: and while hee was there, there arriued a ſhip which brought newes of the ſtirre in Mexico in Cortes his abſence: whereupon hee ſent word to Gonſola de Sandoual to march with his companie from Naco to Mexico by land toward the South ſea vnto Quahutemallan, becauſe that is the vſuall plaine and ſafeſt way, and hee left as Captaine in Truxillo Fernando de Saauedra his Couſen: and he himſelfe went by ſea along the Coaſt of Iucatan, to Chalchicoeca, now called Sant Iuan de Vlhua, and ſo to Medellin, and from thence to Mexico, where hee was well receiued, hauing beene from thence eighteene moneths, and had gone fiue hundred leagues trauelling often out of his way, and enduring much hardneſſe.

Hauing rowed vp one hundred and twentie leagues, they made a Fortreſſe and ſtayed there aboue a yeere : and then rowed further till they came to the mouth of another Riuer called Paragioa, and perceiuing that the Countrey yeelded Gold and Siluer they kept on their courſe, and ſent a Brigandine before; but thoſe of the Countrey tooke it : and Cabote vnderſtanding of it thought it beſt to turne backe vnto their Fort, and there tooke in his men which he had left there, and ſo went downe the Riuer where his ſhips did ride, and from thence he ſailed home to Siuill in the yeere 1530. leauing diſcouered about two hundred leagues within this Riuer, reporting it to bee very Nauigable, and that it ſpringeth out of a Lake named Bombo.

Warre betwixt the Span. and Portug. in the friend-foe Indies.

This yeere 1527. when Cortes vnderſtood by the Pinneſſe aforeſaid, that Don Garcia de Loaiſa was paſſed by the Straight of Magelan, toward the Ilands of Cloues, hee prouided three ſhips to goe ſeeke him, and to diſcouer by that way of New Spaine as farre as the Iles of Maluco. There went as Gouernour in thoſe ſhips one Aluaro de Saavedra Ceron, couſen vnto Cortes, a man fit for that purpoſe. Hee made ſayle from Cinatlaneio, now named Saint Chriſtopher ſtanding in twentie degrees toward the North on All Saints day. They arriued at the Ilands which Magelan named The Pleaſures : and from thence ſayled to the Ilands, which Gomes de Sequeira had diſcouered, and not knowing thereof, they named them Iſlas de los Reyes, that is to ſay, The Iles of the Kings, becauſe they came vnto them on Twelfe day. In the way Saavedra loſt two ſhips of his company, of which they neuer after heard newes. But from Iland to Iland hee ſtill ſayled and came to the Iland of Candiga, where he bought two Spaniards for ſeuentie Ducats, which had beene of the companie of Frier Loaiſa, who was loſt thereabout. In the yeere 1528. in March, Saavedra arriued at the Ilands of Maluco, and came to an anker before the Ile of Gilolo : hee found the ſea calme and winde at will, without any tempeſts : and he tooke the diſtance from thence to Noua Spagna to bee two thouſand and fiftie leagues. At this time Martin Ynniguez de Carquiçano dyed, and Fernando de la Torre was choſen their Generall, who then was in the Citie of Tidore, who had there erected a Gallowes and had fierce warre with Don George de

Meneſes Captaine of the Portugals: and in a fight which they had the fourth day of May, Saavedra tooke from him a Galiot and ſlew the Captaine thereof called Fernando de Baldaya, and in Iune hee returned towards New Spaine, hauing with him one Simon de Brito Patalin, and other Portugals, and hauing beene certayne moneths at Sea, he was forced backe vnto Tidore, where Patalin was beheaded and quartered, and his companions hanged.

In this yeere 1528. Cortes ſent two hundred Footmen and 60. Horſmen, and many Mexicans to diſcouer and plant the Countrey of the Chichimecas, for that it was reported to be rich of Gold. This being done he ſhipped himſelfe, and came into Caſtile with great pompe, and brought with him 250000. markes of Gold and Siluer: and being come to Toledo where the Emperour then lay, hee was entertayned according to his deſerts, and the Emperour made him Marqueſſe Del Valle, and married him to the Lady Iane de Zuniga, Daughter vnto the Earle De Aguilar, and ſent him backe againe to be Generall of New Spaine.

Gomar. hiſt. gen. lib. 2. cap. 73.

In the yeere 1529. in May, Saavedra returned backe againe towards New Spaine, and hee had ſight of a land toward the South in two degrees, and he ranne Eaſt along by it aboue fiue hundred leagues till the end of Auguſt. The Coaſt was cleane and of good ankerage, but the people blacke and of curled hayre; from the girdle downward, they did weare a certayne thing plaited to couer their lower parts. The people of Maluco call them Papuas, becauſe they bee blacke and frizeled in their hayre: and ſo alſo doe the Portugals call them. Saavedra hauing ſayled 4. or 5. degrees to the South of the line, returned vnto it, and paſſed the Equinoctiall towards the North, and diſcouered an Iland which hee called Iſla de los Pintados, that is to ſay, The Ile of painted people: for the people thereof bee white, and all of them marked with an Iron: and by the ſignes which they gaue hee conceaued that they were of China. There came vnto them from the ſhore a kinde of Boate full of theſe men, making tokens of threatnings to the Spaniards; who ſeeing that the Spaniards would not obey them, they began to skirmiſh with ſlinging of Stones, but Saavedra would ſuffer no ſhot to bee ſhot at them, becauſe their ſtones were of no ſtrength, and did no harme. A little beyond this Iland in 10. or 12. degrees, they found many ſmall low Ilands full of Palme trees and graſſe, which they called Los Iardines, and they came to an anker in the middeſt of them, where they tarried certayne dayes. The people ſeemed to deſcend from them of China, but by reaſon of their long continuance there they are become ſo brutiſh, that they haue neither Law, nor yet giue themſelues to any honeſt labour. They weare white chothing which they make of Graſſe. They ſtand in maruelous feare of fire, becauſe they neuer ſaw any. They eate Cocos in ſtead of Bread, breaking them before they bee ripe, and putting them vnder the ſand, and then after certayne dayes they take them out and lay them in the Sunne, and then they will open. They eate Fiſh which they take in a kinde of boat called a Parao, which they make of Pine wood, which is driuen thither at certayne times of the yeere, they know not how, nor from whence, and the tooles wherewith they make their boates are of ſhells.

Saavedra perceiuing that the time and weather was then ſomewhat better for his purpoſe, made ſayle towards the firme land and Citie of Panama, where hee might vnlade the Cloues and merchandiſe which he had, that ſo in Cartes it might bee carried foure leagues to the Riuer of Chagre, which they ſay is Nauigable running out into the North ſea, not farre from Nombra de Dios, where the ſhips ride, which come out of Spaine: by which way all kinde of goods might be brought vnto them in ſhorter time, and with leſſe danger, then to ſayle about the Cape of Bona Speranza. For from Maluco vnto Panama they ſayle continually betweene the Tropikes and the line: bnt they neuer found winde to ſerue that courſe, and therefore they came backe againe to Maluco very ſad, becauſe Saavedra dyed by the way: who if hee had liued meant to haue opened the land of Caſtillia del Oro and New Spaine from ſea to ſea. Which might haue beene done in foure places: namely from the Gulfe of S. Michael to Vraba, which is fiue and twentie leagues, or from Panama to Nombre de Dios being ſeuenteene leagues diſtance: or through Xaquator, a Riuer of Nicaragua, which ſpringeth out of a Lake three or foure leagues from the South ſea, and falleth into the North ſea; whereupon doe ſayle great Barks and Crayers. The other place is from Tecoantepec through a Riuer to Verdadera Cruz, in the Bay of the Honduras, which alſo might be opened in a ſtraight. Which if it were done, then they might ſayle from the Canaries vnto the Malucos vnder the climate of the Zodiacke in leſſe time and with much leſſe danger, then to ſayle about the Cape de Bona Speranza, or by the ſtraight of Magelan, or by the Northweſt. In this yeere 1529. one Damian de Goes a Portugall being in Flanders, after that he had trauelled ouer all Spaine, was yet deſirous to ſee more Countries and faſhions, and diuerſities of people; and therefore went ouer into England and Scotland, and was in the Courts of the Kings of thoſe parts: and after that came againe into Flanders, and then trauelled through Zealand, Holland, Brabant, Luxenburgh, Suitzerland, and ſo through the Cities of Colen, Spyres, Argentine, Baſill, and other parts of Almaine, and then came backe againe into Flanders: and from thence hee went into France through Picardie, Normandie, Champaine, Burgundie, the Dukedome of Borbon, Gaſcoigne, Languedoc, Daulphinie, the Dukedome of Sauoy, and paſſed into Italie into the Dukedome of Millaine, Ferrara, Lombardie, and ſo to Venice, and turned backe againe to the territorie of Genoa, and the Dukedome of Florence through all Tuſcane : and hee was in the Citie of Rome, and in the Kingdome of Naples from the one ſide to the other. From thence hee went into Germanie to Vlmes, and other places of the Empire, to the Dukedome of Suenia, and of Bauier, and the Archdukedome of Auſtrich, the Kingdome of Boeme, the Dukedome of Morauia, and the Kingdome of Hungarie, and ſo to the Confines of Grecia. From thence he went to the Kingdome of Poland, Pruſſia, and the Dukedome of Liuonia, and ſo came into the great Dukedome of Moſcouia. From whence hee came backe into high Almaine, and through the Countries of the Lantzgraue, the Dukedome of Saxonie, the Countries of Denmarke, Gotland, and Norway, trauelling ſo farre, that hee found himſelfe in 70. degrees of latitude toward the North. He did ſee, ſpeake and was conuerſant with all the Kings, Princes, Nobles, and chiefe Cities of all Chriſtendome, in the ſpace of two and twentie yeeres : So that by reaſon of the greatneſſe of his trauell, I thought him a man worthie to be heere remembred.

In the yeere 1529. or 1530. one Melchior de Soſa Tauarez went from the Citie of Ormuz vnto Balſera and the Ilands of Giſſara with certaine ſhips of warre, and paſſed vp as farre as the place where the Riuers Tygris and Euphrates meete one with the other. And although other Portugals had diſcouered and ſailed thorow that Strait, yet neuer any of them ſailed ſo farre vpon the freſh water till that time, when hee diſcouered that Riuer from the one ſide to the other, wherein he ſaw many things which the Portugals knew not. Not long after this, one Ferdinando Coutinho a Portugall came vnto Ormuz, and being deſirous to ſee the world, he determined to goe into Portugall, from thence ouer land to ſee Aſia and Europe; And to doe this the better, he went into Arabia, Perſia, and vpwards the Riuer Euphrates the ſpace of a moneth, and ſaw many Kingdomes and Countries, which in our time had not beene ſeene by the Portugals: He was taken priſoner in Damaſco, and afterward croſt ouer the Prouince of Syria, and came vnto the Citie of Alepo. He had beene at the holy Sepulchre in Ieruſalem, and in the Citie of Cayro, and at Conſtantinople with the Great Turke; and hauing ſeene his Court he paſſed ouer vnto Venice, and from thence into Italie, France, Spaine, and ſo came againe to Liſbon. So that he and Damian de Goes were in our time the moſt noble Portugals, that had diſcouered and ſeen moſt Countries and Realmes of their owne affections.

In the yeere 1531. there went one Diego de Ordas to be Gouernour in the Riuer of Maragnon, with three ſhips, ſixe hundred Souldiers, and thirty fiue Horſes. He died by the way, ſo that the intention came to none effect. After that, in the yeere 1534. there was ſent thither one Hierome Artal with an hundred and thirty Souldiers, yet he came not to the Riuer, but peopled Saint Michael de Neueri, and other places in Paria. Alſo there went vnto this Riuer Maragnon a Portugall Gentleman named Aries Dacugna, and hee had with him ten ſhips, nine hundred Portugals, and an hundred and thirty horſes. Hee ſpent much, but hee that loſt moſt was one Iohn de Barros. This Riuer ſtandeth in 3. degrees toward the South, hauing at the entrance of it fifteene leagues of bredth and many Ilands inhabited, wherein growe trees that beare Incence of a greater bigneſſe then in Arabia, gold, rich ſtones, and one Emerald was found there as bigge as the palme of a mans hand. And to doe this he carried with him two hundred and fifty Horſes, and fiue hundred Souldiers. He went thorow the Countrie of Mechuacan, where he had much Gold, ten thouſand Markes of Siluer, and ſixe thouſand Indians to carrie burdens. He conquered many Countries, called that of Xaliſco Nueua Galicia, becauſe it is a ragged Countrie, and the People ſtrong. He builded a Citie which he called Compoſtella, and another named Guadalaiara, becauſe hee was borne in the Citie of Guadalaiara in Spaine. Hee likewiſe builded the Townes De Santo Eſpirito, De la Conception, and De San Miguel ſtanding in 24. degrees of Northerly latitude.

In the yeere 1532. Ferdinando Cortes ſent one Diego Hurtado de Mendoça vnto Acapulco ſeuenty leagues from Mexico, where he had prepared a ſmall Fleet to diſcouer the Coaſt of the South Sea as he had promiſed the Emperour. And finding two ſhips ready, he went into them, and ſailed to the Hauen of Xaliſco, where he would haue taken in Water and Wood : but Nunnez de Guſman cauſed him to be reſiſted, and ſo he went forward : but ſome of his men mutined againſt him, and hee put them all into one of the ſhippes, and ſent them backe into New Spaine. They wanted water, and going to take ſome in the Bay of the Vanderas, the Indians killed them. But Diego Hurtado ſailed two hundred leagues along the Coaſt, yet did nothing worth the writing.

In the yeere 1533. Francis Pizarro went from the Citie of Tumbes to Caxamalca, where he tooke the King Attabalipa. Peter Aluarado found Mountaines full of Snowe, and ſo cold, that ſeuenty of his men were frozen to death. When he came vnto Quito, he began to inhabite it, and named it S. Francis.

In the yeere 1534. a Briton called Iaques Cartier, with three ſhips went to the land of Cortereális, and the Bay of Saint Laurence, otherwiſe called Golfo Quadrato, and fell in 48. degrees and an halfe towards the North; and ſo he ſailed till he came vnto 51. degrees hoping to haue paſſed that way to China, and to bring thence drugs and other merchandiſe into France. The next yeere after he made another Voyage into thoſe parts, and found the Countrie abounding with Victuals, Houſes, and good Habitations, with many and great Riuers. He ſailed in one Riuer toward the South-weſt three hundred leagues, and named the Countrie thereabout Noua Francia: at length finding the water freſh, he perceiued he could not paſſe thorow to the South Sea, and hauing wintered in thoſe parts, the next yeere following he returned into France.

In the yeere 1535. or in the beginning of the yeere 1536. Don Antonie de Mendoza came vnto the Citie of Mexico, as Vice-roy of New Spaine. In the meane while Cortes was gone for more men to continue his Diſcouerie, which immediatly he ſet in hand ſending forth two ſhips from Tecoantepec which hee had made ready. There went as Captaines in them Fernando de Grijalua, and Diego Bezerra de Mendoza, and for Pilots there went a Portugall named Acoſta, and the other Fortunio Ximenez a Biſcaine. The firſt night they diuided themſelues. Fortunio Ximenez killed his Captaine Bezerra, and hurt many of his confederacy: and then he went on land to take Water and Wood in the Bay of Santa Cruz, but the Indians there ſlue him, and aboue twenty of his companie. Two Mariners which were in the Boat eſcaped, and went vnto Xaliſco, and told Nunnes de Guſman that they had found tokens of Pearles: hee went into the ſhip, and ſo went to ſeeke the Pearles, he diſcouered along the Coaſt aboue an hundred and fifty leagues. They ſaid that Ferdinando de Grijalua ſailed three hundred leagues from Tecoantepec without ſeeing any land, but onely one Iland which he named The Ile of Saint Thomas, becauſe he came vnto it on that Saints day: it ſtandeth in 20. degrees of latitude.

In this ſame yeere 1535. Nunnez Dacunna being Gouernour of India, while he was making a Fortreſſe at the Citie of Diu, he ſent a Fleet to the Riuer of Indus, being from thence ninety or an hundred leagues towards the North vnder the Tropike of Cancer. The Captaines name was Vaſques Perez de San Paio: alſo he ſent another Armie againſt Badu the King of Cambaia, the Captaine whereof was Coſeſofar a Renegado. In this yeere 1535. one Simon de Alcazaua went from Siuill with two ſhips and two hundred and forty Spaniards in them. Some ſay they went to New Spaine, others that they went to Maluco, but others alſo ſay to China, where they had beene with Ferdinando Perez de Andrada. Howſoeuer it was, they went firſt vnto the Canaries, and from thence to the Straight of Magelan, without touching at the Land of Braſill, or any part at all of that Coaſt. They entred into the Straight in the moneth of December with contrary windes and cold weather. The Souldiers would haue had him turne backe againe, but he would not. Hee went into an Hauen on the South ſide in 53. degrees: There the Captaine Simon of Alcazana commanded Roderigo de Iſla with ſixty Spaniards to goe and diſcouer Land: but they roſe vp againſt him and killed him, and appointed ſuch Captaines and Officers as pleaſed them, and returned. Comming thwart of Braſill they loſt one of their ſhips vpon the Coaſt, and the Spaniards that eſcaped drowning were eaten by the Sauages. The other ſhip went to Saint Iago in Hiſpaniola, and from thence to Siuill, in Spaine.

Hee died by the way returning homewards. The moſt part of his men remained in that Riuer, and builded a great Towne contayning now two thouſand houſes, wherein great ſtore of Indians dwell with the Spaniards. They diſcouered and conquered the Countrie till they came to the Mines of Potoſſi, and to the Towne La Plata, which is fiue hundred leagues diſtant from them.

In the yeere 1536. Cortes vnderſtanding that his ſhip wherein Fortunio Ximenez was Pilot was ſeized on by Nunnez de Guzman, hee ſent forth three ſhips to the place where Guzman was, and he himſelfe went by Land well accompanied, and found the ſhip which he ſought all ſpoiled and rifled. When his three other ſhips were come about, hee went aboord himſelfe with the moſt part of his Men and Horſes, leauing for Captaine of thoſe which remained on land one Andrew de Tapia. So he ſet ſayle, and comming to a Point the firſt day of May he called it S. Philip, and an Iland that lieth faſt by it he called Sant Iago. Within three dayes after he came into the Bay where the Pilot Fortunio Ximenez was killed, which hee called La plaia de Santa Cruz, where he went on land, and commanded Andrew de Tapia to diſcouer. Cortes tooke ſhipping again, and came to the Riuer now called Rio de San Pedro y San Paulo, where by a tempeſt the ſhips were ſeparated, one was driuen to the Bay de Santa Cruz, another to the Riuer of Guaiaual, & the third was driuen on ſhore hard by Xaliſco, and the men thereof went by land to Mexico. Cortes long expected his two ſhips that he wanted: but they not cōming he hoiſed ſaile and entred into the Gulfe now called Mar de Cortes, Mar Vermeio, or the Gulfe of California, and ſhot himſelfe fiftie leagues within it: where he eſpied a ſhip at anker, and ſayling towards her hee had beene loſt if that ſhip had not ſuccoured him. But hauing graued his ſhip, hee departed with both the ſhips from thence. He bought victuals at a deare rate at Saint Michael of Culhuacan; and from thence he went to the Hauen of Santa Cruz, where hee heard that Don Antonio de Mendoça, was come out of Spaine to be Viceroy. He therefore left to be Captayne of his men one Francis de Vlloa, to ſend him certaine ſhips to diſcouer that Coaſt.

While he was at Acapulco, meſſengers came vnto him from Don Antonio de Mendaça the Viceroy, to certifie him of his arriuall: and alſo hee ſent him the copie of a Letter, wherein Francis Piſarro wrote, that Mango Ynga was riſen againſt him, and was come to the Citie of Cuſco with an hundred thouſand fighting men, and that they had killed his brother Iohn Piſarro, and aboue foure hundred Spaniards, and two hundred Horſes, and hee himſelfe was in danger ſo that hee demanded ſuccour and ayde. Cortes being informed of the ſtate of Piſarro, and of the arriuall of Don Antonio de Mendoça, becauſe he would not as yet bee at obedience; Firſt he determined to ſend to Maluco to diſcouer that way along vnder the Equinoctiall line, becauſe the Ilands of Cloues ſtand vnder that paralell: And for that purpoſe hee prepared two ſhips with prouiſion, victuals and men, beſides all other thinges neceſſarie. Hee gaue the charge of one of theſe ſhips to Ferdinando de Grijalua, and of the other vnto one Aluarado a Gentleman. They went firſt to Saint Michael de Tangarara in Peru to ſuccour Francis Piſarro, and from thence to Malucco all along neere the line as they were commanded. And it is declared that they ſayled aboue a thouſand leagues without ſight of land, on the one ſide, nor yet on the other of the Equinoctiall. And in 2. degrees toward the North they diſcouered one Iland named Aſea, which ſeemeth to be one of the Ilands of Cloues: fiue hundred leagues little more or leſſe as they ſayled, they came to the ſight of another which they named Iſla de los Peſcadores. Going ſtill in this courſe they ſaw another Iland called Hayme towards the South, and another named Apia: and then they came to the ſight of Seri: turning towards the North one degree, they came to anker at another Iland named Coroa, and from thence they came to another vnder the line named Meonſum, and from thence vnto Buſu, ſtanding in the ſame courſe. The people of all theſe Ilands are blacke, and haue their haire frizled, whom the people of Maluco doe call Papuas. The moſt of them eate mans fleſh, and are Witches, ſo giuen to diueliſhneſſe, that the Diuels walke among them as companions. If theſe wicked ſpirits doe finde one alone, they kill him with cruell blowes or ſmoother him. Therefore they vſe not to goe, but when two or three may bee in a companie.

From theſe Ilands they came vnto others named the Guelles ſtanding one degree towards the North-eaſt, and Weſt from the Ile Terenate, wherein the Portugals haue a Fortreſſe: theſe men are haired like the people of the Malucos. Theſe Ilands ſtand one hundred and foure and twentie leagues from the Iland named Moro; and from Terenate betweene fortie and fiftie. From whence they went to the Ile of Moro, and the Ilands of Cloues, going from the one vnto the other. But the people of the Countrey would not ſuffer them to come on land, ſaying vnto them: Goe vnto the Fortreſſe where the Captayne Antonie Galuano is, and we will receiue you with a good will: for they would not ſuffer them to come on land without his licence: for hee was Factor of the Countrey, as they named him. The Mountaines of Abibe

In the yeere 1537. the Licenciate Iohn de Vadillo Gouernour of Cartagena, went out with a good Armie from a port of Vrabi called Saint Sebaſtian de buena Viſta, being in the Gulfe of Vraba, and from thence to Rio verde, and from thence by land without knowing any way, nor yet hauing any Carriages, they went to the end of the Countrey of Peru, and to the Towne La plata, by the ſpace of one thouſand two hundred leagues: a thing worthie of memorie. For from this Riuer to the Mountaines of Abibe the Countrey is full of Hils, thicke Foreſts of trees, and many Riuers: and for lacke of a beaten way, they had pierced ſides. The Mountaines of Abibe as it is recorded haue twentie leagues in bredth. They muſt be paſſed ouer in Ianuarie, Februarie, March, and Aprill. And from that time forward it raineth much, and the Riuers will be ſo greatly increaſed, that you cannot paſſe for them. There are in thoſe Mountaines many heards of Swine, many Dantes, Lions, Tygres, Beares, Ounſes, and great Cats, and Monkies, and mightie Snakes, and other ſuch vermine. Alſo there bee in theſe Mountaines abundance of Partridges, Quailes, Turtle doues, Pigeons, and other Birds and Fowles of ſundrie ſorts. Likewiſe in the Riuers is ſuch plentie of Fiſh, that they did kill of them with their ſtaues: and carrying Canes and Nets, they affirme that a greet armie might bee ſuſtained that way without being diſtreſſed for want of victuals. Moreouer they declared the diuerſities of the people, tongues, and apparell that they obſerued in the Countries, Kingdomes, and Prouinces which they went through, and the great trauels and dangers that they were in till they came to the towne called Villa de la Plata, and vnto the ſea thereunto adioyniug. This was the greateſt diſcouerie that hath beene heard of by land, and in ſo ſhort a time. And if it had not beene done in our dayes, the credit thereof would haue beene doubtfull.

The Portugals and Spaniards which haue beene in theſe Ilands affirme, that there be certaine hogs in them, which beſides the teeth which they haue in their mouthes, haue other two growing out of their ſnouts, and as manie behinde their eares of a large ſpan and an halfe in length. Likewiſe they ſay there is a tree, the one halfe whereof, which ſtandeth towards the eaſt is a good medecine againſt all poyſon, and the other ſide of the tree which ſtandeth toward the Weſt is very poyſon; and the fruit on that ſide is like a bigge peaſe; and there is made of it the ſtrongeſt poyſon that is in all the World. Alſo they report that there is there another tree, the fruit whereof whoſoeuer doth eate, ſhall bee twelue houres beſides himſelfe, and when he commeth againe vnto himſelfe, he ſhall not remember what hee did in the time of his madneſſe. Moreouer there are certaine crabs of the land, whereof whoſoeuer doth eate ſhall be a certaine ſpace out of his wits. Likewiſe the countrey people declare that there is a ſtone in theſe Ilands whereon whoſoeuer ſitteth ſhall be broken in his bodie. It is farther to be noted, that the people of theſe Ilands doe gild their teeth.

In the yeere 1539. Cortes ſent three ſhips with Francis Villoa to diſcouer the coaſt of Culuacan Northward. From Cabo del Enganno to another Cape called Cabo de Liampo in China there are one thouſand or twelue hundred leagues ſayling. Cortes and his Captaines diſcouered new Spaine, from 12. degrees to 32, from the South to the North, being ſeuen hundred leagues, finding it more warme then cold, although Snow doe lie vpon certaine mountaines moſt part of the yeere. In New Spaine there be many trees, flowers and fruits of diuers ſorts and profitable for many things. The principall tree is named Metl. It groweth not very high nor thicke. They plant and dreſſe it as we doe our vines. They ſay it hath fortie kinde of leaues like wouen clothes, which ſerue for many vſes. When they be tender they make conſerues of them, paper, and a thing like vnto flaxe: they make of it mantles, mats, ſhooes, girdles, and cordage. Theſe trees haue certaine prickles ſo ſtrong and ſharpe, that they ſewe with them. The roots make fire and aſhes, which aſhes make excellent good lie. They open the earth from the root and ſcrape it, and the iuyce which commeth out is like ſirrupe. If you doe ſeeth it, it will become honie; if if you purifie it, it will be ſugar. Alſo you may make wine and vineger thereof. It beareth the Coco. The rinde roſted and cruſhed vpon ſoares and hurts healeth and cureth. The iuyce of the tops and roots mingled with incenſe are good againſt poyſon, and the biting of a Viper. For theſe manifold benefits it is the moſt profitable rree knowne to grow in thoſe parts. Alſo there be there certain ſmall birds named Vicmalim, their bil is ſmal & long. They liue of the dew, and the iuyce of flowers and roſes. Their feathers bee verie ſmall and of diuers colours. They be greatly eſteemed to worke gold with. They die or ſleepe euery yeere in the moneth of October, ſitting vpon a little bough in a warme and cloſe place: they reuiue or wake againe in the moneth of Aprill after that the flowers bee ſprung, and therefore they call them the reuiued birdes.

In the yeere 1538. and 1539. after that Diego de Almagro was beheaded, the Marqueſſe Francis Piſarro was not idle. For he ſent ſtraight one Peter de Baldiuia with a good companie of men to diſcouer and conquer the countrey of Chili. He was well receiued of thoſe of the countrey, but afterwards they roſe againſt him and would haue killed him by treaſon. Yet for all the warres that hee had with them, he diſcouered much Land, and the coaſt of the Sea toward the South-eaſt, till he came into 40. degrees and more in Latitude. While he was in theſe diſcoueries he heard newes of a King called Leucengolina, which commonly brought to the field two hundred thouſand fighting men againſt another King his neighbour; and that this Leucengolina had an Iland, and a Temple therein with two thouſand Prieſts: and that beyond them were the Amazones, whoſe Queene was called Guanomilla, that is to ſay, The golden heauen. But as yet there are none of theſe things diſcouered. About this time Gomez de Aluarado went to conquer the Prouince of Guanuco: and Francis de Chauez went to ſubdue the Conchineos, which troubled the towne of Truxillo, and the countreys adioyning. Peter de Vergara went to the Bracamores, a people dwelling toward the North from Quito. Iohn Perez de Vergera went againſt the Craciapoians: Alfonſus de Mercadiglio went vnto Mulubamba. Ferdinando and Gonzaluo Piſarros went to ſubdue Collao, a countrey very rich in golde. Peter de Candia went to the lower part of Collao. Peranzures alſo went to conquer the ſaid countrey. And thus the Spaniards diſperſed themſelues, and conquered abone ſeuen hundred leagues of countrey in a very ſhort ſpace, though not without great trauailes and loſſe of men.

The countreyes of Braſill and Peru ſtand Eaſt and Weſt almoſt eight hundred leagues diſtant. The neereſt is from the Cape of Saint Auguſtine vnto the hauen of Truxillo: for they ſtand both almoſt in one parallell and Latitude.

Earth of diuers colours good to dye withall.
Strange root

In ſome places of the Andes and Countries the earth is of diuers colours, as blacke, white, red, greene, blew, yellow, and violet, wherewith they die colours without any other mixture. There grow on theſe mountaines many turneps, rapes, and other ſuch like rootes and herbes. One there is like vnto Aipo or Rue which beareth a yellow flower, and healeth all kinde of rotten ſores, and if you apply it vnto whole and cleane fleſh it will eate it vnto the bone: ſo that it is good for the vnſound and naught for the whole.

An hearbe named Coca which ſatisfieth hunger and thirſt.

Thoſe which liue on the tops of theſe mountaines of Andes betweene the cold and the heat for the moſt part be blinde of one eye, and ſome altogether blinde, and ſcarce you ſhall finde two men of them together, but one of them is halfe blinde. Alſo there groweth in theſe fieldes, notwithſtanding the great heate of the ſand good Maiz, and Potatoes, and an herbe which they name Coca, which they carrie continually in their mouthes (as in the Eaſt India they vſe another herbe named Betele) which alſo (they ſay) ſatisfieth both hunger and thirſt. Alſo they ſow much cotton wooll, which of nature is white, red, blacke, greene, yellow, orange tawnie, and of diuers other colours.

Fowle of Peru

Likewiſe they affirme, that from Tumbez Southward it doth neither raine, thunder, nor lighten, for the ſpace of fiue hundred leagues of land: but at ſome times there falleth ſome little ſhower. Alſo it is reported, that from Tumbez to Chili there breede no Peacocks, Hens, Cocks nor Eagles, Falcons, Haukes, Kites, nor any other kinde of rauening Fowles, and yet there are of thm in all other regions and countreyes: but there are many Ducks, Geeſe, Herons, Pigeons Partridges, Quailes, and many other kinds of birdes. There are alſo a certaine kinde of foule, like vnto a duck which hath no wings to flie withall, but it hath fine thinne feathers which couer all the bodie. Likewiſe there are Bitters that make warre with the ſeale or Sea-wolfe: for finding them out of the water they will labour to picke out their eyes, that they may not ſee to get to the water againe, and then they doe kill them. They ſay it is a pleaſant ſight to behold the fight betweene the ſaid Bitters and Seales. With the beards of theſe Seales men make clean their teeth, becauſe they bee wholſome for the tooth-ache. There are certaine beaſts which thoſe of the countrey call Xacos, and the Spaniards ſheepe, becauſe they beare wooll like vnto a ſheepe, but are made much like vnto a Deere, hauing a ſaddle backe like vnto a Camell. They will carrie the burthen of an hundred weight. The Spaniards ride vpon them, and when they be wearie they will turne their heads backeward, and voide out of their mouthes a wonderfull ſtinking water.

Xacos a kind of great ſheepe that men ride vpon.

Salt rockes couered with egs
Strange waters

From the Riuer of Plata and Lima Southward there breede no Crocodiles nor Lizards, nor Snakes, nor any kinde of venemous vermine, but great ſtore of good fiſhes breede in thoſe Riuers. On the coaſt of Saint Michael in the South Sea there are many rockes of ſalt couered with egges. On the point of Saint Helena are certaine Well ſprings which caſt forth a liquor, that ſerueth in ſtead of pitch and tarre. They ſay that in Chili there is a fountaine, the water whereof will conuert wood into ſtone. In the hauen of Truxillo there is a Lake of freſh water, and the bottome thereof is of good hard ſalt. In the Andes beyond Xauxa there is a riuer of freſh water, in the bottome whereof there lieth white ſalt.

Ramuſius 3. vol fol. 363.

In the yeere 1540. the Captaine Ferdinando Alorchon went by the commandement of the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoza with two ſhips to diſcouer the bottome of the gulfe of California, and diuers other countries.

In this yeere 1540. Gonſaluo Piſarro went out of the Citie of Quito, to Diſcouer the Countrie of Canell or Cinamome, a thing of great fame in that Countrie. Hee had with him two hundred Spaniards, Horſe-men and Foote-men, and three hundred Indians to carie burthens. Hee went forward till he came to Guixos, which is the fartheſt place gouerned by the Ingas: where there hapned a great Earthquake with Raine and Lightning, which ſunke ſeuentie Houſes. They paſſed ouer cold and Snowie hils, where they found many Indians Frozen to death, maruelling much of the great Snow that they found vnder the Equinoctiall line. From hence they went to a Prouince called Cumaco, where they taried two Moneths, becauſe it Rained continually. And beyond they ſaw the Cinamome-trees, which be very great, the Leaues thereof reſembling Bay-leaues, both Leaues, Branches, Rootes, and all taſting of Cinamome. The Rootes haue the whole taſte of Cinamome. But the beſt are certaine knops like vnto Alcornoques or Acornes, which are good merchandiſe. It appeareth to be wild Cinamome, and there is much of it in the Eaſt Indies, and in the Ilands of Iaoa or Iaua. From hence they went to the Prouince and Citie of Coca, where they reſted fiftie dayes. From the place forwards they trauelled along by a Riuers ſide being ſixtie Leagues long, without finding of any Bridge, nor yet any Foorde to paſſe ouer to the other ſide. They found one place of this Riuer, where it had a fall of two hundred fathoms deepe, where the Water made ſuch a noyſe, that it would make a man almoſt deafe to ſtand by it. And not farre beneath this fall, they ſay they found a Channell of ſtone verie ſmooth, of two hundred foote broad, and the Riuer runneth by: and there they made a Bridge to paſſe ouer on the other ſide, where they went to a Countrie called Guema, which was ſo poore, that they could get nothing to eate, but onely Fruites and Herbes. From that place forward they found a people of ſome reaſon, wearing certaine Clothing made of Cotton-wooll, where they made a Brigandine, and there they found alſo certaine Canoas, wherein they put their Sicke men, and their Treaſure and beſt Apparell, giuing the charge of them to one Francis de Orellana: and Gonſaluo Pizarro went by Land with the reſt of the Companie along by the Riuers ſide, and at night went into the Boates, and they trauelled in this order two hundred Leagues as it appeareth. When Pizarro came to the place where he thought to finde the Brigandine and Canoas, and could haue no ſight of them nor yet heare of them, he thought himſelfe out of all hope, becauſe hee was in a ſtrange Countrie without Victuals, Clothing, or any thing elſe: wherefore they were faine to eate their Horſes, yea and Dogs alſo, becauſe the Countrie was poore and barren, and the Iourney long, to goe to Quito. Yet notwithſtanding, taking a good heart to themſelues they went on forward in their Iourney, trauelling continually eighteene Moneths; and it is reported, that they went almoſt fiue hundred Leagues, wherein they did neither ſee Sunne nor any thing elſe, whereby they might be comforted, wherefore of two hundred men which went forth at the firſt, there returned not backe paſt ten vnto Quito, and theſe ſo weake, ragged and diſfigured, that they knew them not. Orellana went fiue hundred or ſixe hundred Leagues downe the Riuer, ſeeing diuers Countries and people on both ſides thereof, among whom he affirmed ſome to bee Amazones. He came into Caſtile, excuſing himſelfe, that the water and ſtreames draue him downe perforce. This Riuer is named the Riuer of Orellana, and other name it the Riuer of the Amazones, becauſe there be Women there which liue like vnto them.

In the yeere of our Lord 1542. one Diego de Freitas, being in the Realme of Siam, and in the Citie of Dodra as Captaine of a Ship, there fled from him three Portugals in a Iunco (which is a kind of Ship) towards China. Their names were Antonie de Mota, Francis Zeimoro, and Anthonie Pexoto, directing their courſe to the Citie of Liampo, ſtanding in thirtie and odde Degrees of Latitude. There fell vpon their Sterne ſuch a ſtorme, that it ſet them off the Land, and in fewe dayes they ſaw an Iland towards the Eaſt ſtanding in thirtie two Degrees, which they doe name Iapan, which ſeemeth to be the Ile of Zipangri, whereof Paulus Venetus maketh mention, and of the riches thereof. And this Iland of Iapan hath Gold, Siluer, and other riches.

They Sailed till they came to a place called Sierras Neuadas, or The Snowie mountaines, ſtanding in fortie Degrees toward the North, where they ſaw Ships and Merchandiſes, which carried on their Stems the Images of certaine Birds called Alcatarzi, and had the Yardes of their Sailes gilded, and their Prowes laide ouer with ſiluer. They ſeemed to be of the Iles of Iapan, or of China; for they ſaid that it was not aboue thirtie dayes ſayling into their Countrie.

In the ſame yeere 1542. Don Anthonie de Mendoça, ſent vnto the Ilands of Mindanao a Fleete of ſixe Ships with foure hundred Souldiers, and as many Indians of the Countrie, the Generall whereof was one Rui Lopez de villa Lobos, being his Brother in law and a man in great eſtimation. They ſet Sayle from the Hauen of Natiuidad ſtanding in twentie Degrees towards the North, vpon All Saints Eeue, and ſhaped their courſe towards the Weſt. They had ſight of the Iland of Saint Thomas, which Hernando de Grijalua had Diſcouered, and beyond in ſeuenteene Degrees they had ſight of another Iland which they named La Nublada, that is, The Cloudie Iland. From thence they went to another Iland named Roca partida, that is; The Clouen Rocke. The third of December they found certaine Baxos or Flats of ſixe or ſeuen Fathoms deepe. The fifteene of the ſame Moneth they had ſight of the Ilands, which Diego de Rota, and Gomez de Sequeira, and Aluaro de Saauedra had Diſcouered, and named them Los Reyes, becauſe they came vnto them on Twelfe-day. And beyond them they found other Ilands in ten Degrees all ſtanding round, and in the midſt of them they came to an Anker, where they tooke freſh water and wood.

Sarangam.

In the yeere 1543. in Ianuarie they departed from the foreſaid Ilands with all the Fleete, and had ſight of certaine Ilands, out of which there came vnto them men in a certaine kind of Boates, and they brought in their hands Croſſes, and ſaluted the Spaniards in the Spaniſh tongue, ſaying, Buenas dias, Matelotes, that is to ſay, Good morrow companions; whereat the Spaniards much marueiled, being then ſo farre out of Spaine to ſee the men of that Countrie with Croſſes, and to bee ſaluted by them in the Spaniſh tongue, and they ſeemed in their behauiour to encline ſomewhat to our Catholicke Faith. The Spaniards not knowing, that many thereabout had beene Chriſtned by Francis de Caſtro, at the commandement of Antonie Galuano, ſome of them named theſe Ilands, Iſlas de las Cruzes, and others named them Iſlas de los Matelotes. In the ſame yeere 1543. the firſt of Februarie Rui Lopez, had ſight of that noble Iland Mindanao ſtanding in nine Degrees: they could not double it nor yet come to an Ancre as they would, becauſe the Chriſtened Kings and people reſiſted them, hauing giuen their obedience to Anthonie Galuano, whom they had in great eſtimation, and there were fiue or ſixe Kings that had receiued Baptiſme, who by no meanes would incurre his diſpleaſure. Rui Lopez perceiuing this, and hauing a contrarie wind, Sayled along the Coaſt to find ſome ayde: and in foure or fiue Degrees, hee found a ſmall Iland which they of the Countrie call Sarangam, which they tooke perforce, and in memorie of the Vice-roy who had ſent them thither, they named it Antonia, where they remained a whole yeere.

In the ſame yeere 1543. and in the moneth of Auguſt, the Generall Rui Lopez ſent one Bartholomew de la torre in a ſmall Ship into new Spaine, to acquaint the Vice-roy Don Antonio de Mendoça with all things. They went to the Ilands of Siria, Gaonata, Bilasa, and many others, ſtanding in eleuen and twelue Degrees towards the North, where Magellan had beene, and Francis de Caſtro alſo, who there Baptized many, and the Spaniards called them the Philippinas in memorie of the Prince of Spaine. Here they tooke victuals and wood, and hoyſed Sayles, they Sayled for certaine dayes with a fore-wind, till it came vpon the skanting, and came right vnder the Tropicke of Cancer. The twentie fiue of September they had ſight of certaine Ilands, which they named Malabrigos, that is to ſay, The euill Roades. Beyond them they Diſcouered Las dos Hermanas, That is, The two Siſters. And beyond them alſo they ſaw foure Ilands more, which they called los Volcanes. The ſecond of October they had ſight of Farfana, beyond which there ſtandeth an high pointed Rocke, which caſteth out Fire at fiue places. So Sayling in ſixteene Degrees of Northerly Latitude, from whence they had come, as it ſeemeth wanting Wind, they arriued againe at the Ilands of the Philippinas. They had ſight of ſixe or ſeuen Ilands more, but they Ankered not at them. They found alſo an Archipelagus of Ilands, well Inhabited with people, lying in fifteene or ſixteene Degrees: the people be White, and the Women well proportioned, and more beautifull and better Arraied then in any other place of thoſe parts, hauing many Iewels of Gold, which was a token, that there was ſome of that Mettall in the ſame Countrie. Heere were alſo Barkes of fortie three Cubits in length, and two Fathoms and a halfe in breadth, and the Plankes fiue Inches thicke, which Barkes were rowed with Oares. They told the Spaniards, that they vſed to Saile in them to China, and that if they would goe thither they ſhould haue Pilots to conduct them, the Countrie not being aboue fiue or ſixe dayes Sayling from thence. There came vnto them alſo certaine Barkes or Boates handſomely decked, wherein the Maſter and principall men ſate on high, and vnderneath were very Black-moores with Friſled haire: and being demanded where they had theſe Black moores, they anſwered, that they had them from certaine Ilands ſtanding faſt by Sebut, where there were many of them, a thing that the Spaniards much maruailed at, becauſe from thence it was aboue three hundred Leagues to the places where the Blacke people were. Therefore it ſeemed, that they were not naturally borne in that Climate, but that they be in certaine places ſcattered ouer the whole circuit of the World. For euen ſo they be in the Ilands of Nicobar and Audeman, which ſtand in the Gulfe of Bengala, and from thence by the ſpace of fiue hundred Leagues, we doe not know of any Blacke people. Alſo Vaſco Nunez de Vaiboa declareth, that as he went to Diſcouer the South Sea, in a certaine Land named Quareca, he found Blacke people with Friſled haire, whereas there were neuer any other found either in Noua Spagna, or in Caſtilia del Oro, or in Peru.

In the yeere 1544. Don Gutierre de Vargas Biſhop of Placenza ſent a Fleet from the Citie of Siuill vnto the Straits of Magellan: which is reported to haue beene done by the counſell of the Vice-roy Don Antonie de Mendoça his Couſin. Some ſuſpected, that they went to Maluco, others to China, others, that they went onely to diſcouer the Land betwixt the Strait and the Land of Peru on the other ſide of Chili, becauſe it was reported to bee very rich in Gold and Siluer. But this Fleet by reaſon of contrary windes could not paſſe the Strait, yet one ſmall Barke paſſed the ſame, and ſayled along the coaſt, and diſcouered all the Land, till he came vnto Chirimai, and Arequipa.

In the yeere 1545. and in the moneth of Ianuary Rui Lopez de villa Lobos, and Giraldo with the Caſtilians came to the Iland of Moro, and the Citie of Camafo, where they were well receiued of the Kings of Gilolo and Tidore, and of the people of the Countrie (becauſe Antonie Gualuano was gone) and put the Captaine Don George de Caſtro to great trouble, as appeared by thoſe things which paſſed betweene him and the Portugals, and the great expences whereunto he put the Fortreſſe.

They ſailed to the Coaſt of Os Papuas, and ranged all along the ſame, and becauſe they knew not that Saauedra had been there before, they chalenged the honour and fame of that Diſcouerie. And becauſe the people there were blacke and had friſled haire, they named it Nueua Guinea. For the memory of Saauedra as then was almoſt loſt, as all things elſe doe fall into obliuion, which are not recorded, and illuſtrated by writing.

In this yeere 1545. and in the moneth of Iune, there went a Iunke from the Citie of Borneo, wherein went a Portugall called Peter Fidalgo, and by contrary winds he was driuen towards the North; where he found an Iland ſtanding in 9. or 10. degrees, that ſtretched it ſelfe to 22. degrees of latitude, which is called The Ile of the Luçones, becauſe the Inhabitants thereof were ſo named. It may haue ſome other name and harbours which, which as yet we know not: it runneth from the North vnto the Southweſt, and ſtandeth betweene Mindanao and China. They ſay they ſayled along by it 250. leagues, where the Land was fruitfull and well couered, and they affirme, that there they will giue two Pezos of gold for one of ſiluer.

WEe ſet ſayle from Liſbon, the ſixteenth of Aprill, 1618. being three ſhips: foure and thirty of the ſociety were diſtributed into two ſhips: one of them called Saint Mauro carried twelue deſtined for Iapon, of which was the Reuerend Lord, L. Iames Valent Biſhop of Iapon of our ſocietie. Father Gabriel Matos was Superiour of the other ten. In the other ſhip two and twenty of vs were carried for China, ten Portugals, three Italians, foure Germans, and beſides my ſelfe, foure Belgians. Wee ſayled proſperouſly, ſauing that all Ours were Sea-ſicke till wee came to the Canaries. There I know not how the ſhips parted companie. Wee ſayled to the Torrid Zone pleaſantly appointing ſet and diſtinct houres for taking care of the ſicke, for Sermons, the Maſſe (almoſt daily) Caſes of Conſcience, Mathematicall diſciplines, exerciſe of the China Language, &c. About the Line we were infeſted with Feuers, all ſaue one, and fiue died; laſtly, I and my brother Philip were ſicke, and kept our beds fifty dayes, inſomuch as I receiued Vnction likely in few houres to die. Wee paſſed the Cape on Saint Iames his Day, and a few dayes after (hauing hitherto had no tempeſt) were three nights together horribly toſſed. The Captaine of our ſhip alſo died, and ſcarcely could another ſucceed in peace.

After fiue moneths and a halfe ſayling, wee came to Goa. The Saint Maure came thither a moneth after vs, one of our Societie (an Italian) being dead. The Admirall a fortnight after that, arriued with diſgrace, for that hauing fallen in companie with ſixe Engliſh ſhips, ſhee choſe rather with eighty thouſand pieces of money which they call Patacas, to redeeme the fight, then to fight it out with victorie or death. For which cauſe the Admirall and ſome other Officers are depriued and ſent backe to the King in bonds to be puniſhed, or to render accounts of their fact. A few dayes after, my brother falls ſicke and dieth. The reſt follow their ſtudies at Goa, till affaires of China and Iapon bee more quieted. For howſoeuer I had left the China buſineſſe quiet, and imagined ſtill the ſame, yet they which aſpire now to their helpe muſt propound croſſes and martyrdome to themſelues.

China proceedings or receedings in Chriſtianitie.

At Nanquin Chriſtianitie thriued well and in other our houſes. Thence aroſe the beginning of euill. A chiefe Iudge in the third Tribunall named Xin, a great Idolater, ſought to chaſe Chriſtianitie out of the Kingdome, and therefore oppoſed Ours by putting vp many Petitions fraught with calumnies, which he ſent ſecretly to the King. But after often petitioning obtayning no reſcript, he employeth others & vſeth bribes, getting to his party the chief Preſident of the Third Tribunal, to which Court belongs the knowledge of forren affaires, and of Religion. He alſo petitions the King, but with ſuch effect, that the King makes no anſwere (which with the Chinois is a denyall) and at laſt he writes to the King, that according to his Office he will ſend them out of the Kingdome, ſuch excepted as remained in the Royall Citie. This he did, but the Magiſtrates of thoſe Cities where Ours reſided diſſembled the matter, except that Nanquin aduerſarie, which apprehended two Prieſts and a Brother, their Pupils, Seruants, and ſome new Conuerts, but durſt not ſend them away before the Kings anſwer. Meane while he exerciſed them all in diuers Courts about nine moneths ſpace, and ſome were often whipped after their cruell manner; one or two died in priſon by force of the torments. Many of the Ethnikes fauoured Ours; but the Chriſtian Magiſtrates Paulus, Michael, Leo did maruellouſly beſtirre themſelues. Nor did any Conuert apoſtatiſe, but beyond the China puſillanimitie were both conſtant and cheerfull in their ſufferings.

Perſecution and martyrdome.

At laſt our Nanquin aduerſarie bribing the Eunuchs with ten thouſand pieces of Gold extorted from the King that Ours ſhould be ſent backe to their owne, but not (which he ſought) their death. Ours therefore honorably diſmiſſed from Pequin, came to Canton. Thoſe of Nanquin were ſent away with ſhame, and two were carried in Cages to Canton. In other reſidences they were more gently vſed, and all continued in the Kingdome but two of Pequin and two of Nanquin. After this the Pequin Magiſtrate was depriued and ſent home with diſhonour: he of Nanquin alſo fell ſicke, and loſt his onely daughter, which the Chinois eſteeme a great euill; for which cauſe in great rage he burned a certaine Idoll to which hee had commended that his daughter. Ours adorned a new ſeat or reſidence in Xanſi. Father Felicianus à Sylua a Portugall, his carkaſſe hauing lien foure yeeres in the Coffin, kept at home after the China faſhion, was opened and found entire with his garments. The skie ſuddenly ouercaſt was calmed on the ſhutting of the Coffin; a horrible thing to the Chinois, which are very ſcrupulous to open Graues. His body was buried in the fields, and is reported to worke miracles, and to be frequented of the New Conuerts. I am called by my Superiours with all ſpeed, and there is hope that all things will bee amended.

Now for the Iaponian Church. Daifu, after that noble victorie which he obtained againſt Fideiori and Zaca, is dead: in the glorie whereof his ſonne obtained the Empire without tumult. The Church had quiet a yeere and halfe; but by the indiſcreet zeale of ſome Religious at Nangaſaque, the ſore brake out againe. Foure men, a Dominican, Auſtinian, Franciſcan, and Ieſuite, haue beene martyred, other two continued in priſon. Twenty in all Iapon haue died for the Faith, others haue beene exiled and puniſhed, the ſtory whereof is not vnlike to thoſe which I left in Europe comprehended in foure Bookes of Iaponian triumphs, which I hope ere this haue ſeene the light. I looke for other intelligence within theſe two moneths, which I will leaue in Latine before I goe for the next ſhips.

Iapon affaires. Daifus death.

In India things remayne in the wonted ſtate. At Bazain was an vnwonted tempeſt, whereupon Proceſſions were made in all India. Two Comets were ſeene at the ſame time, one fourteene dayes after the other: the later directed his courſe to the North, and ſtill is ſeene whiles I write theſe things the twentieth of December, beginning to appeare the eleuenth of Nouember, 1618.

Two Comets.

Extracts out of TRIGAVTIVS his Martyrologe, or Fiue Bookes of Chriſtian Triumphs among the Iaponians, before mentioned.

L.1.c.1.

THe Iaponian State being oppreſſed, He is Emperour which poſſeſſeth the Imperiall Prouinces called Tenca (or Tenſa) a name receiued of the Chinois, of whom the Iaponian Ilands are a Colonie (by the Chinois called Iepuen, the beginning of the Sunne, by themſelues Gitpon or Nitpon) and that which the Chinois call Thienhia, that is, Whatſoeuer is vnder Heauen, the Iaponians terme Tenca, expreſſed with the ſame characters, howſoeuer differing in pronunciation. Taicoſama died *An.*1598. and left for his Heire a childe called Fideyori. Daifuſama King of Quanto with others were appointed his Tutors or Protectors, which quarrelling for themſelues, A. 1600. Daifuſama getting the better, entituled himſelfe Xogun or Cuboſama. He left Fideyori in the moſt famous Fort of Iapon, with a tolerable reuenue. This continued till the yeere 1614. He remoued the Imperiall ſeat from Miaco to Surunga the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome of Fuchu, and built there a Caſtle to keepe his treaſure: his Sonne *, deſtined to the Inheritance, he placed at Yendo (or Edoo) and married him to the Neece of Nabunanga, which was next Emperour before Taicoſama, and Aunt to Fideyori, being Siſter to his Mother. This Fideyori being now growne in yeeres at his Caſtle of Ozaca, Daifuſama fearing that he might interuert the Inheritance from his Sonne, deuiſed trickes firſt, which being eluded brake forth into open warre.

* Shongaſama.

He had ſet Fideyori on worke to build a ſumptuous Temple in the Suburbs of Miaco, in which Daibut (that is, a great Idoll or Coloſſe of guilded Braſſe, his thumbe a ſpanne compaſſe and the reſt proportionable,) ſhould be worſhipped. His Father Taicoſama had before built at great expence this Temple, but the fire had conſumed it, and the Sonne was incited to renue it by him, which ſought by that meanes to exhauſt his Treaſures, the ſinewes of warre. This Temple at the eighth Moone (which is our September) was to be dedicated by three thouſand Prieſts thither aſſembled with great pompe, the Emperour meane while intending to ſeize on Ozaca. To this end hee had ſent for Ichinocam the Gouernour of the Citie and wonne him to his part. But at his returne vpon ſuſpition he was forced to quit the Towne, and the Emperours intents made knowne, and that Dedication deferred. The Emperour came before Ozaca with a great Armie of two hundred thouſand, of which he loſt thirtie thouſand in the Siege, and was forced to depart with diſſembled Conditions of Peace, in Ianuarie 1615. This laſted but few moneths, and hee returned with another Armie as great as the former. Fideyori is alſo reported to haue two hundred thouſand in his armie. Sacay was burned, and in two Battels Fideyori had the better. In the third the Emperour was ſo out of hope that hee thought there to haue ended his dayes, and ſpake to ſome to diſpatch him, if they ſaw no meanes for him to eſcape his Enemies hands. But Samandonus the Generall ſeeing the Victorie ſure, ſent for Fideyori that hee ſhould come to haue the honour thereof, who in youthfull haſt neglecting his old Captaines, they enraged at this ſeeming contempt, and perhaps corrupted by Cuboſamas money, ſet fire on the Caſtle. This forced Fideyori backe to ſaue his Mother, Wife, and what he could from the flames, preferring ſafetie before honour. But hee loſt both, with himſelfe together, no man yet knowing what became of him. Ozaca was quite deſtroyed in Iuly 1615. and the Emperour returned Victorious to Surunga, and magnified his Idols which had done him this Honour for his zealous perſecution of Chriſtians. But in March 1616. this Tryumph was turned to his Funerall. Hee was buried in his Caſtle Cuno, where his Treaſure was kept. One of his Sonnes hee would not ſee, his other ſonne ſucceeded, who is thought not likely to containe the mutable Iaponian ſpirits in order: Two other ſonnes he left, of which hee gaue order, that if they would not otherwiſe bee ordered they ſhould loſe their Heads. Some hopes by his death befell the Chriſtians of more libertie, and they haue ſince performed their holies, but ſecretly, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to inſult on the Dead. For in pretence of wrongs by Portugall Merchants, and Contempts of his Imperiall Edicts, and of Death, and the reports of worſhipping ſome executed Chriſtian Malefactors (at whoſe death ſome kneeling had commended them to Chriſt, which was thus Paganly miſconſtrued) hee had exiled many, and done many to diuers kindes both of tortures and death; which our Author handles at large in fiue * Bookes, where they which pleaſe may both read and ſee in Pictures their diuerſified paſſions: which alſo from Captaine Saris, Captaine Cocke and others, wee haue in part before deliuered, with another Cauſe inciting the Emperour thereto, namely Ieſuiticall hypocriſie, who vnder pretence of Conuerting ſoules, had become Factors and Agents for the Portugall Merchants. But we ſhall giue you further and later Iaponian intelligence from our owne Countrymen.

A Letter concerning later Occurrents in Iapon from Maſter R. Cocke to Captaine Saris, written at Firando in Iapon, the 31. of December. 1622.

Captayne Saris:

I Haue written you two former Letters to one effect, the one dated the Fourteenth vltimo, ſent by a Scotchman called Iohn Portis, in the Ship Moone. And the other kept till the Twentieth ditto, and ſent per Maſter Iohn Munden, in the ſhip Bull. In both which Letters, I wrote you at large as time then offered, vnto the which I referre me, not doubting, but one of them will come to your hands, if not both.

Since which time I am informed of the greateſt Conſpiracie that euer was heard of in Iapon, pretended againſt the perſon of Shonga Samma, the Emperour of Iapon now raigning, the Factors being ſuch great perſonages, that it is thought the Emperour dare not meddle with them, but winke at it and make Peace with them. Nine of them being named as followeth, viz.

Cangano Figen Dono, the Emperours kinſman, and of the greateſt reuenues in Iapon, per Annum 200. Mangocas. (Which Maſter G. Saris calculated at 1875000. pounds ſterling money: and ſo of the reſt proportionably.)

Shimaſzu Dono, King of Xaxica and Liqueas, moſt feared of any Prince in Iapon, for the ſtrength of his Countries and valiantneſſe of his Souldiers, his reuenues more then per annum 100. Mangocas, Micauano Camy Dono, Sonne to this Emperours eldeſt Brother, called by the ſame name, a valiant man, but diſinherited by Ogoſho Samma his Father, becauſe hee had loſt his Noſe by too much Venerie, and Shongoſama his brother (now Emperour) Conſtituted in his place : this mans reuenues rated at 70. Mangocas.

Maſſamoneda Dono, King of Oſhew, per annum 70. Mangocas.

Mengamy Dono, King of , per annum 35. Mangocas.

Yechew Dono, King of Cocora, per annum 34. Mangocas.

Catto Samma Dono, King of I. O. per annum 30. Mangocas.

Nancobo Dono, High Prieſt or Bonſe of Edo, and ſecond to the Daire in Church matters, and Tutor to this Emperour Shonga Samma, per annum 001. Mangoco.

Codgſque Dono, Secretarie to Ogoſho Samma when you were in Iapon, then had 3. Mangocas, but aduanced per Shongo Samma, per annum to 015. Mangocas.

Rule to ſumme the Reuenues aforeſaid.

* viz. of Firando.

Oſaca.

Euery Mangoca is 10000. Gocas, and each Gaca is 100. Gantas of Rice, and each Ganta may be ſome three Ale pintes in England, for it is aboue three Wine pintes as I haue ſeene it proued per an Engliſh wine pinte in Iapon. And this King * (or Tono) of Firando, hath but ſix Mangocas, as I thinke you doe remember, yet is eſteemed as much as the greateſt Earledome in England, hee being ſtinted at foure thouſand Souldiers or men at Armes, two thouſand to keepe his owne Countrey, and two thouſand to ſerue the Emperor at demand, but is able to ſet out many thouſands more if need require.

And it is now ſome ſixe or ſeuen yeere paſt, that Calſa Samma this Emperours ſecond Brother, (who is married to Maſſamonedas Daughter) was vpon ſuſpition diſinherited by his Brother, and ſhauen a Pagan Bonſe or Monke, and Confined into a Pagan Monaſterie, with gaurds ſet about him. Attending euer ſince when the Emperour his brother would command him to cut his belly, but yet liuing.

Thus much I thought good to aduiſe you of the preſent ſtate of Iapon, much altered from that it was at your being heere; and for the reſt, I hope to tell you by word of mouth at my returne into England, which I hope to doe the next yeere, God ſparing me life and libertie.

Maſter Edmond Sayer departed from hence towards Edo, the tenth day of this moneth of December; as the Hollanders did the like, to carry Preſents to the Emperour: and wee haue newes that they arriued at Oſaca tenne dayes paſt. And now this Ship the Elizabeth being ready to depart towards Bantam, and ſo I thinke from thence for England, I thought it good to write you theſe few lines of Aduiſe; and ſo end with my heartie Commendations to your ſelfe, not forgetting all the reſt of our friends and acquaintance.

A Note of the Vnicornes Companie in China.

ALthough wee haue referred China relations to another Tome, yet becauſe in Captayne Prings former relations, mention is made of the Vnicorne wracked by foule weather on the dangerous ſhores of China; I thought good to mention thus much heere. I ſpake with Maſter Roberts the Maſter of the Ship, alſo with Maſter Pickering another of the companie: which both told me, that their Ship being loſt, the Companie saued themſelues and with part of the goods went a ſhore. The rude Chinois would haue aſſaulted and rifled them, but they ſtood to their defence, till an Officer or Magiſtrate came and relieued them from the vulgar: after which they found both juſt dealing and kind vſage. They were permitted to buy for their money two Veſſels with all neceſſarie prouiſions for their departure, and one part of the Companie went to Iapon, the other (as I remember) to Malacca. If thou haſt no compleater ſtorie (of thoſe, the onely Engliſh-men which I know to haue been on land in China) I muſt excuſe my ſelfe by their promiſes of perfecter Relations, which whiles I expected, I was leſſe inquiſitiue then otherwiſe I would haue beene. They fayled me, and as I heare, are returned to the Indies: and I, if I ſeeme to ſayle heere, ſhall in the next Tome repay thee with vſe.

A Letter touching Iapon with the Gouernment, Affaires and later Occurrents there, written to me by Maſter ARTHVR HATCH Miniſter, lately returned thence.

Salutem in authore ſalutis.

Worthy SIR:

HAuing promiſed to impart vnto you ſome obſeruations of thoſe Countries where I haue trauelled, eſpecially of Iapan, I was loath either to breake my promiſe, or in the leaſt reſpect fruſtrate your expectation. Late performance is better then none; but the multiplicitie of my buſineſſe hath beene the occaſion of my late writing vnto you, which I hope you will excuſe; and being now called into the Countrey, and ſo barred from conference with you, I know not how or in what manner fully to accompliſh your deſire; and therefore I intend at this time to make relation vnto you of ſome particular paſſages onely, vntill I heare further from you, but if I may ſtand you in any ſtead for the furtherance of your intended purpoſe, I would intreat you to acquaint me with your requeſt, and you ſhall finde me moſt ready and willing to the vttermoſt of my ſlender power to accompliſh it.

Deſcription of Iapon.

Soyle.

Climate.

Stormes.

Earthquakes.

The Countrey of Iapon is very large and ſpacious, conſiſting of ſeuerall Ilands and pettie Prouinces; it is Mountainous and craggie, full of Rockes and ſtonie places, ſo that the third part of this Empire is not inhabited or manured; neither indeed doth it afford that accommodation for Inhabitants which is needfull, or that fatneſſe and conuenciencie for the growth of Corne, Fruit, and ſmall grayne as is requiſite; which cauſeth the people to ſelect the choyſeſt and plaineſt parts and places of the land both to till and dwell in. The Climate is temperate and healthie not much peſtred with infectious or obnoxious ayres, but very ſubiect to fierce windes, tempeſtuous ſtormes, and terrible Earthquakes, inſomuch that both Ships in the harbour haue beene ouer-ſet, and driuen a ſhore by the furie of the one, and Houſes on the land diſioynted and ſhaken to pieces by the fearefull trembling of the other.

Emperour and Gouernment, 65. Vaſſals.

Councell.

Magnificence.

Chaſtitie.

Riches.

It is gouerned by an Emperour who hath threeſcore and fiue Kings vnder his command; they haue but ſmall and pettie Kingdomes, yet all of them challenge and aſſume to themſelues that Royall ſtate and dignitie, which may well become the perſons of farre more famous Princes. There are but fiue of the Emperours priuie Counſell, who commonly are ſuch, that for Wiſdome, Policie, and carefull vigilancie in managing the State affaires, in preuenting of Treaſons and Rebellions, in executing of Iuſtice and continuing of peace and quietneſſe may bee compared with many, nay moſt in Chriſtendome. No man may make knowne any cauſe vnto the Emperour himſelfe, either by word of mouth or petition, but euery one muſt acquaint the Counſell with his cauſe, and if they approue it, the Emperour ſhall know of it, if not, you muſt be content to haue it drowned in obliuion. The Emperour liues in great Royaltie and ſeldome goes abroad either to Hawke or Hunt without a thouſand followers at leaſt to attend him: he hath but one Wife, and it is generally reported that hee keepes companie with no other, but her onely; and if it bee true as it is thought, hee may in that reſpect be tearmed the Phœnix of all thoſe parts of the world: as for thoſe within his owne Dominions they are ſo farre either from imitating or following him, that one is ſcarcely contented with a hundred women, and they are ſo ſhameleſſe in that kinde, that they will boaſt of it, and account it a glory vnto them to make relation of the multitude of women which they haue had the vſe of. Conſuetudo peccandi tollit ſenſum peccati. This Emperour hath abundance of Siluer and Gold, and not onely his Coffers but whole Store-houſes are cramm'd with coyne; hee hath ſome balls of Gold which were brought to his Court from Ozechya Caſtle of that waight and magnitude, that fifteene or ſixteene men are ſcarcely able to beare one of them.

Preſents.

Iealouſie.

Policie to impouerish Subiects.

All Riuers doe in a kinde of thankfull renumeration returne their waters to the Sea, becauſe they tooke them from thence, but the Princes of Iapon doe cleane contrarie, for they receiue nothing from the Emperour, and yet they giue all to the Emperour, for they doe euen impouerish themſelues, by enriching him by preſents; nay, they ſtriue and contend who may giue the greateſt and chiefeſt Preſent. And each of thoſe ſeuerall Princes muſt alwayes bee either himſelfe in perſon, or his Brother, eldeſt Sonne, or the chiefe Nobleman within his Realme at the Emperours Court; the reaſon of it is not well knowne, but it is pretended, that it is done to keepe the ſeuerall Kingdomes in quiet, and free from tumults, treaſons and rebellions. The Emperour doth ordinarily requite his Princes preſents after this manner: hee giues them a Feather for a Gooſe, ſome few Kerrimoones or Coates, for Gold, Siluer or other precious and rare commodities; and that they may not grow rich, and of ſufficient abilitie to make head againſt him, he ſuffers not their Fleeces to grow, but ſheares them off, by raiſing Taxes on them for the building of Caſtles, and the repairing of Fortifications, and yet they are not ſuffered to repaire their owne, or any way to fortifie themſelues.

Oſaca or Ozechia.

Edo and other Caſtles.

Falcata neatneſſe & Temple.

Ozechya is the moſt famous Caſtle that the Emperour hath, or that is within the Empire; it is of an extraordinarie bigneſſe and compaſſed round with three ſeuerall walls; the Caſtle of Edo is likewiſe walled and moated, hauing ſome few Ordnance on it; at Crates and Falkata there are likewiſe Caſtles both walled and moated, the circumference of each of them is neere about two mile. The chiefe Noble-men of thoſe Kingdomes haue Houſes within the Caſtle walls to come and liue there, either at the Kings or their owne pleaſures, within each of thoſe Caſtles there is a Storehouſe kept ordinarily full of Rice, which may ſerue for their prouiſion at all occaſions and needs. At Falkata there is a Wood of Pine trees neere about three mile ſquare, which is all the Summer time ſwept and kept ſo cleane, that you ſhall hardly ſee any ſmall twig bough, or leafe vnder the Trees, and the trees ſtand ſo cloſe together, that you may ſolace and recreate your ſelfe there at all houres of the day without any hurt or heat of the Sunne. In the midſt of it there is a great Pagod or Church very richly adorned with gilded Images, and all ſorts of curious carued workes.

Cuſtomes of the people.

The people are generally Courteous, affable and full of Complements, they are very punctuall all in the entertayning of Strangers, and they will aſſoone loſe a limbe as omit one Ceremonie in welcomming their friend; they vſe to giue and receiue the emptie Cup at one the others hands, and before the Maſter of the houſe begins to drinke, hee will proffer the Cup to euery one of his Gueſts, making ſhew to haue them to begin though it bee farre from his intention; they feed not much vpon varietie; for Fiſh, Rootes and Rice are their common junkates, and if they chance to kill a Hen, Ducke or Pigge, which is but ſeldome, they will not like Churles eate it alone, but their friends ſhall be ſurely partakers of it. Their ordinary drinke is Water, and that is made moſt times hot, in the ſame pot where they ſeeth their Rice, that ſo it may receiue ſome thickneſſe and ſubſtance from the Rice. They haue ſtrong Wine and Rack diſtill'd of Rice, of which they will ſometimes drinke largely, eſpecially at their Feaſts and meetings, and being moued to anger or wrath in the heate of their Drinke, you may aſſoone perſwade Tygres to patience and quietneſſe as them, ſo obſtinate and wilfull they are in the furie of their impatience. Their Lawes are very ſtrict and full of ſeueritie, affoording no other kinde of puniſhment but either Death or Baniſhment: Murther, Theft, Treaſon, or the violation of any of the Emperours Proclamations or Edicts, are puniſhed with death; ſo is Adulterie alſo if it bee knowne and the parties purſued, but the Deuill their maſter in thoſe actions hath taught them ſuch cleanly conueyances, that ſeldome or neuer are they apprehended; they proceed both in Controuerſies and criminall cauſes according to the verdict of the produced witneſſes, and the Sentence being once paſt, they will not reuoke or mittigate the ſeueritie of it, but if the parties attached haue deſerued death they ſhall ſurely haue it, and for the manner, they are either Beheaded or Crucified; hee kneeles downe on his knees and then comes the Executioner behind him and cuts off his head with a Catan or their Countrie-ſword, and his head being off, the young CauallEers trie their weapons on his limbes, and proue whether they can cut off an Arme or Leg at a blow; the other haue their armes and legges ſpread abroad on a Croſſe, which done, they ſet the Croſſe vpright in the ground, and then comes one either with a Lance or Speare and runnes the partie through the bodie, where hee hangs vntill he rots off, no man being ſuffered to take him downe.

Euery one may change his Name three times, when he is a childe, when he is a young-man, and when he is old; ſome change their names more often, euery one as hee pleaſeth may make choyſe of his owne name, and they are commonly named either by the King, or elſe by ſome Noble or Great man with whom they are chiefely in fauour.

They haue the vſe of Writing and Printing, and haue had the ſpace of many yeeres, no man knowes certainly how long. They haue ſeuen ſorts of Letters, each ſingle letter ſeruing for a word, and many of them in their placing ſerue for ſixe or ſeuen; and each Alphabet hath eight and fortie Letters, and yet with all theſe letters they are not able to write our Chriſtian names; they haue not the true pronounciation of H. B. T. and ſome other letter, and a Chineſſe if his life lay on it, cannot truely pronounce D.

They obſerue no Sabbath, but certaine Feaſt dayes according to the Moone, as the firſt of the Moone, the 15. or 28.; on theſe dayes they goe to the Church, viſit the Sepulchers of the dead, and vſe many fooliſh and apiſh Ceremonies, which time will not permit me now to relate.

The ninth day of the Moone throughout the yeere they hold for accurſed, and therefore in that day they will not begin or vndertake any worke of conſequence and importance.

They ſtrictly obſerue a Faſt on that day of the moneth, in which their Father or Mother dyed, which they doe ſo preciſely keepe, that they will not touch or eate any thing that hath blood.

Kind Sir, if I haue not in this ſatisfied you according to your expectation, yet I will aſſure you it is according as the time and my wayward affaires will now permit me; I would intreat to heare from you, and God willing as I haue leaſure I will more fully declare vnto you my particular obſeruations of Iapon, in the meane time I will pray for your health and good ſucceſſe in all your affaires and godly enterpriſes.

CHAP. IIII.

Extracts of Maſter CÆSAR FREDERIKE his eighteene yeeres Indian Obſeruations.

The Authors going from Venice to Cyprus & Tripoly. Touching the way from Aleppo to Bagdet, See ſup.l.9.c.1. & 3.

IN the yeere of our Lord God 1563, I Caſar Fredericke being in Venice, and very deſirous to ſee the Eaſt parts of the World, tooke my journey to Alepo, and there I acquainted my ſelfe with Merchants of Armenia, and Moores, that were merchants, and conſorted to goe with them to Ormus, and wee departed from Alepo, and in two dayes iourney and a halfe, we came to a Citie called Bir. (Thence to Babylon or Bagdet, and ſo to Baſora and Ormus.)

The election of the King of Ormus.

Diu.

Cambaietta.

Macareo, great Tides

Ormus hath a Moore King of the race of the Perſians, who is created and made King by the Captaine of the Caſtle, in the name of the King of Portugall. At the creation of this King I was there, and ſaw the ceremonies that they vſe in it, which are as followeth. The old King being dead, the Captaine of the Portugals chuſeth another of the bloud Royall, and maketh this election in the Caſtle with great Ceremonies, and when hee is elected, the Captaine ſweareth him to be true and faithfull to the King of Portugall, as his Lord and Gouernour, and then he giueth him the Scepter regall. After this with great feaſting and pompe, and with great company, he is brought into the royall Palace in the Citie. This King keepeth a good traine, and hath ſufficient reuenues to maintayne himſelfe without troubling of any, becauſe the Captaine of the Caſtle doth maintayne and defend his right, and when that the Captaine and he ride together, he is honoured as a King, yet he cannot ride abroad with his traine, without the conſent of the Captaine firſt had: it behoueth them to doe this, and it is neceſſarie, becauſe of the great trade that is in this Citie: their proper language is the Perſian tongue. There I ſhipped my ſelfe to goe for Goa, a Citie in the Indies, in which paſſage the firſt Citie that you come to in the Indies, is called Diu, and is ſituate in a little Iland in the Kingdome of Cambaia, which is the greateſt ſtrength that the Portugals haue in all the Indies, yet a ſmall Citie, but of great trade, becauſe there they lade very many great ſhips for the ſtraights of Mecca and Ormus with marchandiſe, and theſe ſhips belong to the Moores and Chriſtians, but the Moores cannot trade neither ſaile into thoſe ſeas without the licence of the Vice-roy of the King of Portugall, otherwiſe they are taken and made good priſes. The merchandiſe that they lade theſe ſhips withall commeth from Cambaietta a Port in the Kingdome of Cambaia, which they bring from thence in ſmall barkes, becauſe there can no great ſhippes come thither, by reaſon of the ſholdneſſe of the water thereabouts, and theſe ſholdes are an hundred or foureſcore miles about in a ſtraight or gulfe, which they call Macareo, which is as much to ſay, as a race of a tide, becauſe the waters there run out of that place without meaſure, ſo that there is no place like to it, vnleſſe it be in the Kingdome of Pegu, where there is another Macareo, where the waters run out with more force then theſe doe. Cambaietta is ſituate on the ſeas ſide, and is a very faire Citie. The time that I was there, the Citie was in great calamitie and ſcarceneſſe, ſo that I haue ſeene the men of the country that were Gentiles take their children, their ſonnes and their daughters, and haue deſired the Portugals to buy them, and I haue ſeene them ſolde for eight or ten Larins a piece, which may bee of our money ten ſhillings or thirteene ſhillings foure pence. For all this, if I had not ſeene it, I could not haue beleeued that there ſhould bee ſuch a trade at Cambaietta as there is: for in the time of euery new Moone and euery full Moone, the ſmall barkes (innumerable) come in and out, for at thoſe times of the Moone the tides and waters are higher then at other times they be. Theſe barkes be laden with all ſorts of ſpices, with ſilke of China, with Sandols, with Elephants teeth, Veluets of Vercini, great quantitie of Pannina, which commeth from Mecca, Chickinos which be pieces of gold worth ſeuen ſhillings a piece ſterling, with money, and with diuers ſorts of other merchandiſe. Alſo theſe barkes lade out, as it were, an infinite quantitie of cloth made of Bumbaſt of all ſortes, as white ſtamped and painted, with great quantitie of Indico, dried ginger and conſerued, Myrabolans drie and condite, Boraſo in paſte, great ſtore of Sugar, great quantitie of Cotton, abundance of Opium, Aſſa Fetida, Puchio, with many other ſorts of drugges, Turbants made in Dui, great ſtones like to Corneolaes, Granats, Agats, Diaſpry, Calcidonij, Hematiſts and ſome kinde of naturall Diamonds.

A maruellous fond delight in women.

During the time I dwelt in Cambaietta, I ſaw very maruellous things: there were an infinite number of Artificers that made Bracelets called Manny, or bracelets of Elephants teeth, of diuers colours, for the women of the Gentiles, which haue their armes full decked with them. And in this occupation there are ſpent euery yeere many thouſands of crownes: the reaſon whereof is this, that when there dieth any whatſoeuer of their kindred, then in ſigne and token of mourning and ſorrow, they breake all their bracelets from their armes, and preſently they goe and buy new againe, becauſe that they had rather bee without their meat then without their bracelets.

Coco tree and profits thereof. They are moſt plentifull in the Iles of the Maldiues.

There come euery yeere to Chaul from Cochin, & from Cananor ten or fifteen great ſhips laden with great Nuts cured, and with Sugar made of the ſelfe ſame Nuts called Giagra: the tree wheron theſe Nuts doe grow is called the Palmer tree, and thorow out all the Indies, and eſpecially from this place to Goa, there is great abundance of them, and it is like to the Date tree. In the whole world there is not a tree more profitable and of more goodneſſe then this tree is, neither doe men reape ſo much benefit of any other tree as they doe of this, there is not any part of it but ſerueth for ſome vſe, and none of it is worthy to be burnt. With the timber of this tree they make Ships without the mixture of any other tree, and with the leaues thereof they make Sayles, and with the fruit thereof, which bee a kinde of Nuts, they make Wine, and of the wine they make Sugar and Placetto, which Wine they gather in the ſpring of the yeere: out of the middle of the tree where continually there goeth or runneth out white liquor like vnto water, in that time of the yeere they put a veſſell vnder euery tree, and euery euening and morning they take it away full, and then diſtilling it with fire it maketh a very ſtrong liquor: and then they put it into Buts, with a quantity of Zibibbo, white or blacke and in ſhort time it is made a perfect Wine. After this they make of the Nuts great ſtore of Oyle: of the tree they make great quantitie of boords and quarters for buildings. Of the barke of this tree they make Cables, Ropes, and other furniture for ſhips, and, as they ſay, theſe Ropes be better then they that are made of Hempe. They make of the Bowes, Bedſteds, after the Indies faſhion, and Scanaſches for merchandiſe. The leaues they cut very ſmall, and weaue them, and ſo make Sayles of them, for all manner of ſhipping, or elſe very fine Mats. And then the firſt rinde of the Nut they ſtampe, and make thereof perfect Ockam to calke ſhips, great and ſmall: and of the hard barke thereof they make Spoones and other veſſels for meate, in ſuch wiſe that there is no part thereof throwne away, or caſt to the fire. When theſe Mats be greene they are full of an excellent ſweet water to drinke: and if a man bee thirſty, with the liquor of one of the Mats he may ſatisfie himſelfe: and as this Nut ripeneth, the liquor thereof turneth all to kernell.

A very good ſale for horſes.

In the yeer of our Lord 1567. I went from Goa to Bezeneger the chiefe Citie of the Kingdom of Narſinga eight dayes iourney from Goa, within the Land, in the companie of two other Merchants which carried with them three hundred Arabian Horſes to that King: becauſe the Horſes of that Countrie are of a ſmall ſtature: and at the going out of Goa the Horſes pay cuſtome, two and forty Pagodies for euery Horſe, which Pagody may be of ſterling money ſixe ſhillings eight pence, they be pieces of gold of that value. So that the Arabian Horſes are of great value in thoſe Countries, as 300. 400. 500. and to 1000. Duckets a Horſe.

Bezeneger. Idalcan. Xamalucco. &c.

A moſt vnkind and wicked treaſon againſt their Prince: this they haue for giuing credite to ſtrangers, rather then to their owne natiue people.

THe Citie of Bezeneger was ſacked in the yeere 1565. by foure Kings of the Moores, which were of great power and might: the names of theſe foure Kings were theſe following: the firſt was called Dialcan *, the ſecond Zamaluc, the third Cotamaluc, and the fourth Viridy: and yet theſe foure Kings were not able to ouercome this Citie and the King of Bezeneger, but by treaſon. This King of Bezeneger was a Gentile, and had, amongſt all other of his Captaines, two which were notable, and they were Moores: and theſe two Captaines had either of them in charge threeſcore and ten or foureſcore thouſand men. Theſe two Captaines being of one Religion with the foure Kings which were Moores, wrought meanes with them to betray their owne King into their hands. The King of Bezeneger eſteemed not the force of the foure Kings his enemies, but went out of his Citie to wage battell with them in the fields; and when the Armies were ioyned, the battell laſted but a while, not the ſpace of foure houres, becauſe the two traiterous Captaines, in the chiefeſt of the fight, with their companies turned their faces againſt their King, and made ſuch diſorder in his Armie, that as aſtonied they ſet themſelues to flight. Thirty yeeres was this Kingdome gouerned by three brethren which were Tyrants, the which keeping the rightfull King in priſon, it was their vſe euery yeere once to ſhew him to the people, and they at their pleaſures ruled as they liſted. Theſe brethren were three Captaines belonging to the father of the King they kept in priſon, which when he died, left his ſonne very young, and then they tooke the gouernment to themſelues. The chiefeſt of theſe three was called Ramaragio, and ſate in the Royall Throne, and was called the King: the ſecond was called Temiragio, and he tooke the gouernment on him: the third was called Bengatre, and he was Captaine generall of the Armie. Theſe three brethren were in this battell, in the which the chiefeſt and the laſt were neuer heard of quicke nor dead. Onely Temiragio fled in the battell, hauing loſt one of his eyes. When the newes came to the Citie of the ouerthrowe in the battell, the wiues and children of theſe three Tyrants, with their lawfull King (kept priſoner) fled away, ſpoyled as they were, and the foure Kings of the Moores entred the Citie Bezeneger with great triumph, and there they remained ſixe moneths, ſearching vnder houſes and in all places for money and other things that were hidden, and then they departed to their owne Kingdomes, becauſe they were not able to maintayne ſuch a Kingdome as that was, ſo farre diſtant from their owne Countrie.

The ſacking of the Citie.

When the Kings were departed from Bezeneger, this Temiragio returned to the Citie, and then beganne for to repopulate it, and ſent word to Goa to the Merchants, if they had any Horſes, to bring them to him, and he would pay well for them, and for this cauſe the aforeſaid two Merchants that I went in companie withall, carried thoſe Horſes that they had to Bezeneger. Alſo this Tyrant made an order or law, that if any Merchant had any of the Horſes that were taken in the aforeſaid battell or warres, although they were of his owne marke, that he would giue as much for them as they would: and beſide he gaue generall ſafe conduct to all that ſhould bring them. When by this meanes hee ſaw that there were great ſtore of Horſes brought thither vnto him, he gaue the Merchants faire words, vntill ſuch time as he ſaw they could bring no more. Then hee licenced the Merchants to depart, without giuing them any thing for their Horſes, which when the poore men ſaw, they were deſperate, and as it were mad with ſorrow and griefe.

Policy to entrap men.

I reſted in Bezeneger ſeuen moneths, although in one moneth I might haue diſcharged all my buſineſſe, for it was neceſſarie to reſt there vntill the wayes were cleere of Theeues, which at that time ranged vp and downe. And in the time I reſted there, I ſaw many ſtrange and beaſtly deeds done by the Gentiles. Firſt, when there is any Noble man or woman dead, they burne their bodies: and if a married man die, his wiſe muſt burne herſelfe aliue, for the loue of her husband, and with the body of her husband: ſo that when any man dyeth, his wiſe will take a moneths leaue, two or three, or as ſhee will, to burne herſelfe in, and that day being come, wherein ſhe ought to be burnt, that morning ſhe goeth out of her houſe very earely, either on Horſebacke or on an Elephant, or elſe is borne by eight men on a ſmall ſtage: in one of theſe orders ſhee goeth, being apparelled like to a Bride, carried round about the Citie, with her haire downe about her ſhoulders, garniſhed with Iewels and Flowers, according to the eſtate of the partie, and they goe with as great ioy as Brides doe in Venice to their Nuptials: ſhe carrieth in her left hand a looking-glaſſe, and in her right hand an arrow, and ſingeth through the Citie as ſhe paſſeth, and ſaith, that ſhe goeth to ſleepe with her deere ſpouſe and husband. Shee is accompanied with her kindred and friends vntill it be one or two of the clocke in the afternoone, then they goe out of the Citie, and going along the Riuers ſide called Nigondin, which runneth vnder the walls of the Citie, vntill they come vnto a place where they vſe to make this burning of Women, being widdowes, there is prepared in this place a great ſquare Caue, with a little pinnacle hard by it, foure or fiue ſteps vp: the foreſaid Caue is full of dryed wood. The woman being come thither, accompanied with a great number of people which come to ſee the thing, then they make ready a great banquet, and ſhe that ſhall bee burned eateth with as great ioy and gladneſſe, as though it were her Wedding day: and the feaſt being ended, then they goe to dancing and ſinging a certaine time, according as ſhe will. After this, the woman of her owne accord, commandeth them to make the fire in the ſquare Caue where the drie wood is, and when it is kindled, they come and certifie her thereof, then preſently ſhe leaueth the feaſt, and taketh the neereſt kinſman of her husband by the hand, and they both goe together to the banke of the foreſaid Riuer, where ſhe putteth off all her iewels and all her clothes, and giueth them to her parents or kinsfolke, and couering herſelfe with a cloth, becauſe ſhee will not bee ſeene of the people being naked, ſhe throweth herſelfe into the Riuer, ſaying: O wretches, waſh away your ſinnes. Comming out of the water, ſhe rowleth herſelfe into a yellow cloth of fourteene braces long: and againe ſhe taketh her husbands kinſman by the hand, and they goe both together vp to the pinnacle of the ſquare Caue wherein the fire is made. When ſhee is on the pinnacle, ſhe talketh and reaſoneth with the people, recommending vnto them her children and kindred. Before the pinnacle they vſe to ſet a Mat, becauſe they ſhall not ſee the fierceneſſe of the fire, yet there are many that will haue them plucked away, ſhewing therein an heart not fearefull, and that they are not affraid of that ſight. When this ſilly woman hath reaſoned with the people a good while to her content, there is another woman that taketh a pot with oyle, and ſprinkleth it ouer her head, and with the ſame ſhee annointeth all her body, and afterwards throweth the pot into the fornace, and both the woman and the pot goe together into the fire, and preſently the people that are round about the fornace throw after her into the caue great pieces of wood, ſo by this meanes, with the fire and with the blowes that ſhee hath with the wood throwen after her, ſhe is quickly dead, and after this there groweth ſuch ſorrow and ſuch lamentation among the people, that all their mirth is turned into howling and weeping, in ſuch wiſe, that a man could ſcarſe beare the hearing of it. I haue ſeene many burnt in this manner, becauſe my houſe was neere to the gate where they goe out to the place of burning: and when there dyeth any Great man, his Wiſe with all his Slaues with whom hee hath had carnall copulation, burne themſelues together with him. Alſo in this Kingdome I haue ſeene amongſt the baſe ſort of people this vſe and order, that the man being dead, hee is carried to the place where they will make his ſepulcher, and ſetting him as it were vpright, then commeth his wife before him on her knees, caſting her armes about his necke, with imbracing and claſping him, vntill ſuch time as the Maſons haue made a wall round about them, and when the wall is as high as their neckes, there commeth a man behind the woman and ſtrangleth her: then when ſhee is dead, the workmen finiſh the wall ouer their heads, and ſo they lie buried both together.

In the yeere of our Lord God 1567. for the ill ſucceſſe that the people of Bezeneger had, in that their Citie was ſacked by the foure Kings, the King with his Court went to dwell in a Caſtle eight dayes iourney vp in the land from Bezeneger, called Penegonde. Alſo ſixe dayes iourney from Bezeneger, is the place where they get Diamants: I was not there, but it was told me that it is a great place, compaſſed with a wall, and that they ſell the earth within the wall, for ſo much a ſquadron, and the limits are ſet how deepe or how low they ſhall digge. Thoſe Diamants that are of a certaine ſize and bigger then that ſize are all for the King, it is many yeeres agone, ſince they got any there, for the troubles that haue beene in that Kingdome. The firſt cauſe of this trouble was, becauſe the ſonne of this Temeragio had put to death the lawfull King which hee had in Priſon, for which cauſe the Barons and Noblemen in that Kingdome would not acknowledge him to be their King, and by this meanes there are many Kings, and great diuiſion in that Kingdome, and the Citie of Bezeneger is not altogether deſtroyed, yet the houſes ſtand ſtill, but emptie, and there is dwelling in them nothing, as is reported, but Tygres and other wild beaſts. The circuit of this Citie is foure and twentie miles about, and within the walls are certaine Mountaines. The houſes ſtand walled with earth, and plaine, all ſauing the three Palaces of the three tyrant Brethren, and the Pagodes which are Idoll houſes: theſe are made with Lime and fine Marble. I haue ſeene many Kings Courts, and yet haue I ſeene none in greatneſſe like to this of Bezeneger, I ſay, for the order of his Palace, for it hath nine Gates or Ports. Firſt when you goe into the place where the King did lodge, there are fiue great ports or gates: theſe are kept with Captaines and Souldiers: then within theſe there are foure leſſer gates, which are kept with Porters. Without the firſt Gate there is a little porch, where there is a Captaine with fiue and twentie Souldiers, that keepeth watch & ward night and day: and within that another with the like guard, where thorow they come to a very faire Court, and at the end of that Court there is another porch as the firſt, with the like guard, and within that another Court. And in this wiſe are the firſt fiue Gates guarded and kept with thoſe Captaines: and then the leſſer Gates within are kept with a guard of Porters: which gates ſtand open the greateſt part of the night, becauſe the cuſtome of the Gentiles is to doe their buſineſſe, and make their feaſts in the night, rather then by day. The Citie is very ſafe from Theeues, for the Portugall Merchants ſleepe in the ſtreets, or vnder Porches, for the great heat which is there, and yet they neuer had any harme in the night. At the end of two moneths, I determined to go for Goa in the company of two other Portugall Merchants, which were making ready to depart, with two Palanchines or little Litters, which are very commodious for the way, with eight Falchines which are men hired to carry the Palanchines, eight for a palanchine, foure at a time: they carry them as we vſe to carry Barrowes. And I bought me two Bullocks, one of them to ride on, and the other to carry my victuals and prouiſion, for in that Countrey men ride on bullocks with pannels, as wee terme them, girts and bridles, and they haue a very good commodious pace. From Bezeneger to Goa in Summer it is eight daies iourney, but we went in the midſt of Winter, in the month of Iuly, and were fifteene dayes comming to Ancola on the Sea coaſt, ſo in eight dayes I had loſt my two Bullocks: for he that carried my victuals was weake and could not goe, the other, when I came vnto a Riuer where was a little bridge to paſſe ouer, I put my Bullocke to ſwimming, and in the middeſt of the Riuer there was a little Iland, vnto the which my bullocke went, and finding paſture, there hee remained ſtill, and in no wiſe we could come to him: and ſo perforce, I was forced to leaue him, and at that time there was much raine, and I was forced to goe ſeuen dayes a foot with great paines: and by great chance I met with Falchines by the way, whom I hired to carry my clothes and victuals. We had great trouble in our iourney, for that euery day we were taken Priſoners, by reaſon of the great diſſention in that Kingdome: and euery morning at our departure we muſt pay reſcat foure or fiue Pagies a man. And another trouble wee had as bad as this, that when as we came into a new Gouernours Country, as euery day we did, although they were all tributarie to the King of Bezeneger, yet euery one of them ſtamped a ſeuerall coyne of Copper, ſo that the money that wee tooke this day would not ſerue the next: at length, by the helpe of God, we came ſafe to Ancola, which is a Countrey of the Queen of Gargopam, tributarie to the King of Bezeneger. The Merchandize that went euery yeere from Goa to Bezeneger were Arabian Horſes, Veluets, Damaskes, and Sattens, Armeſine of Portugall, and pieces of China, Saffron and Scarlets: and from Bezeneger they had in Turkie for their commodities, Iewels, and Pagodies which be Ducats of gold: the apparell that they vſe in Bezeneger is Veluet, Satten, Damaske, Scarlet, or white Bumbaſt cloth, according to the eſtate of the perſon, with long Hats on their heads, called Colae, made of Veluet, Satten, Damaske, or Scarlet, girding themſelues in ſtead of girdles with ſome fine white Bumbaſt cloth: they haue breeches after the order of the Turkes: they weare on their feet plaine high things called of them Aſpergh, and at their eares they haue hanging great plentie of Gold.

Men ride on Bullockes, and trauell with them on the way.

The Merchandiſe that come in and out to Bezeneger euery yeere.

The apparell of thoſe people.

Returning to my voyage, when we were together in Ancola, one of my companions that had nothing to loſe, tooke a guide, and went to Goa, whither they goe in foure dayes, the other Portugall not being diſpoſed to goe, tarried in Ancola for that Winter. The Winter in thoſe parts of the Indies beginneth the fifteenth of May, and laſteth vnto the end of October: and as we were in Ancola, there came another Merchant of Horſes in a Palanchine, and two Portugall Souldiers which came from Zeilan, and two carriers of Letters, which were Chriſtians borne in the Indies: all theſe conſorted to goe to Goa together, and I determined to go with them, and cauſed a palanchine to be made for me very poorely of Canes; and in one of them Canes I hid priuily all the Iewels I had, and according to the order, I tooke eight Falchines to carie me: and one day about eleuen of the clocke we ſet forwards on our iourney, and about two of the clocke in the afternoone, as we paſſed a Mountaine, which diuideth the territorie of Ancola and Dialcan, I being a little behind my company, was aſſaulted by eight theeues, foure of them had ſwords and targets, and the other foure had bowes and arrowes. When the Falchines that carried me vnderſtood the noiſe of the aſſault, they let the Pallachine and me fall to the ground, and ranne away and left me alone, with my clothes wrapped about me: preſently the theeues were on my necke and rifling me, they ſtripped me ſtarke naked, and I fained my ſelfe ſicke, becauſe I would not leaue the Pallanchine, and I had made me a little bed of my clothes; the theeues ſought it very narrowly and ſubtilly, and found two Purſes that I had, well bound vp together, wherein I had put put my Copper money which I had changed for foure Pagodies in Ancola. The theeues thinking it had beene ſo many Ducats of gold, ſearched no further: then they threw all my clothes in a buſh, and hied them away, and as God would haue it, at there departure there fell from them an hankercher, and when I ſaw it, I roſe from my pallanchine or couch, and tooke it vp, and wrapped it together within my pallanchine. Then theſe my Falchines were of ſo good condition, that they returned to ſeeke me, whereas I thought I ſhould not haue found ſo much goodneſſe in them: becauſe they were payed their money aforehand, as is the vſe, I had thought to haue ſeene them no more. Before there comming I was determined to plucke the Cane wherein my Iewels were hidden, out of my coutch, and to haue made me a walking ſtaffe to carry in my hand to Goa, thinking that I ſhould haue gone thither on foot, but by the faithfulneſſe of my Falchines, I was rid of that trouble, and ſo in foure dayes they carried me to Goa, in which time I made hard fare, for the theeues left me neither money, gold, nor ſiluer, and that which I did eate was giuen me of my men for Gods ſake: and after at my comming to Goa I payed them for euery thing royally that I had of them. From Goa I departed for Cochin, which is a voyage of three hundred miles, and betweene theſe two Cities are many holds of the Portugals, as Onor, Mangalor, Barzelor, and Cananor. The Hold or Fort that you ſhall haue from Goa and Cochin that belongeth to the Portugals, is called Onor, which is in the Kingdom of the Queen of Bartacella, which is tributarie to the King of Bezeneger: there is no trade there, but onely a charge with the Captaine and companie hee keepeth there. And paſſing this place, you ſhall come to another ſmall Caſtle of the Portugals called Mangalor, and there is very ſmall trade but onely for a little Rice: and from thence you goe to a litle Fort called Barzelor, there they haue good ſtore of Rice which is carried to Goa: and from thence you ſhall goe to a Citie called Cananor, which is a Harquebuſh ſhot diſtant from the chiefeſt Citie that the King of Cananor hath in his Kingdome being a King of the Gentiles: and hee and his are very naughtie and malicious people, alwayes hauing delight to bee in warres with the Portugals, and when they are in peace, it is for their intereſt to let their Merchandiſe paſſe: there goeth out of this Kingdom of Cananor, all the Cardamomum, great ſtore of Pepper, Ginger, Honie, ſhips laden with great Nuts, great quantitie of Archa, which is a fruit of the bigneſſe of Nutmegs, which fruit they eate in all thoſe parts of the Indies, and beyond the Indies, with the leafe of an Herbe which they call Bettell, the which is like vnto our Iuie leafe, but a litle leſſer and thinner: they eate it made in plaſters with the lime made of Oiſterſhels, and thorow the Indies they ſpend great quantitie of money in this compoſition, and it is vſed daily, which thing I would not haue beleeued, if I had not ſeene it. The cuſtomers get great profit by theſe Herbes, for that they haue cuſtome for them. When this people eate and chawe this in their mouthes, it maketh their ſpittle to be red like vnto blood, and they ſay, that it maketh a man to haue a very good ſtomacke and a very ſweet breath, but ſure in my iudgement they eate it rather to fulfill their filthie luſts, and of a knauerie, for this Herbe is moiſt and hote, and maketh a verie ſtrong expulſion. From Cananor you goe to Cranganor, which is another ſmall Fort of the Portugals in the land of the King of Cranganor, which is another King of the Gentiles, and a Countrey of ſmall importance, and of an hundreth and twentie miles, full of Theeues, being vnder the King of Calicut, a King alſo of the Gentiles, and a great enemie to the Portugals, which when he is alwaies in warres, he and his Countrie is the neſt and reſting for ſtranger Theeues, and thoſe be called Moores of Carpoſa, becauſe they weare on their heads long red Hats, and theſe Theeues part the ſpoiles that they take on the Sea with the King of Calicut, for he giueth leaue vnto all that will goe a rouing, liberally to goe, in ſuch wiſe, that all along that Coaſt there is ſuch a number of Theeues, that there is no ſailing in thoſe Seas but with great ſhips and very well armed, or elſe they muſt goe in companie with the armie of the Portugals. From Cranganor to Cochin is fifteene miles.

Foure ſmall Forts of the Portugals.

Bettell is a very profitable Herbe in that Countrey.

Enemies to the King of Portugall.

Cochin is next vnto Goa, the chiefeſt place that the Portugals haue in the Indies, and there is great trade of Spices, Drugges, and all other ſorts of Merchandize for the Kingdome of Portugall, and there within the land is the Kingdome of Pepper, which Pepper the Portugals lade in their ſhippes by bulke, and not in Sackes: the Pepper that goeth for Portugall is not ſo good as that which goeth for Mecca, becauſe that in times paſt the Officers of the King of Portugall made a contract with the King of Cochin, in the name of the King of Portugall, for the prices of Pepper, and by reaſon of that agreement between them at that time made, the price can neither riſe nor fall, which is a verie low and baſe price, and for this cauſe the villaines bring it to the Portugals, greene and full of filth. Cochin is two Cities, one of the Portugals, and another of the King of Cochin: that of the Portugals is ſituate neereſt vnto the Sea, and that of the King of Cochin, is a mile and a halfe vp higher in the land, but they are both ſet on the bankes of one Riuer which is verie great and of a good depth of water, which Riuer commeth out of the Mountaines of the King of the Pepper, which is a King of the Gentiles, in whoſe Kingdome are many Chriſtians of Saint Thomas order: the King of Cochin is alſo a King of the Gentiles, and a great faithfull friend to the King of Portugall, and to thoſe Portugals which are married, and are Citizens in the Citie of Cochin of the Portugals. And by this name

Within Cochin is the Kingdom of Pepper.

The Pepper that the Portugals bring, is not ſo good as that which goeth for Mecca. The Moores buy the beſt by ſtealth.

Great Priuiledges that the Citizens of Cochin haue.

of Portugals throughout all the Indies, they call all the Chriſtians that come out of the Weſt, whether they bee Italians, Frenchmen, or Almaines, and all they that marrie in Cochin doe get an Office according to the Trade he is of: this they haue by the great priuiledges which the Citizens haue of that Citie, becauſe there are two principall commodities that they deale withall in that place, which are theſe. The great ſtore of Silke that commeth from China, and the great ſtore of Sugar which commeth from Bengala: the married Citizens pay not any cuſtome for theſe two commodities: for all other commodities they pay foure per cento cuſtome to the King of Cochin, rating their goods at their owne pleaſure. Thoſe which are not married and Strangers, pay in Cochin to the King of Portugall eight per cento of all manner of Merchandiſe.

Amochi and Nairi.

This King of Cochin is of a ſmall power in reſpect of the other Kings of the Indies, for he can make but ſeuentie thouſand men of Armes in his Campe: he hath a great number of Gentlemen which he calleth Amochi, and ſome are called Nairi: theſe two ſorts of men eſteeme not their liues any thing, ſo that it may bee for the honour of their King, they will thruſt themſelues forward in euery danger, although they know they ſhall die. Theſe men goe naked from the girdle vpwards, with a cloth rolled about their thighes, going bare-footed, and hauing their haire very long and rolled vp together on the top of their heads, and alwayes they carrie their Bucklers or Targets with them and their Swords naked, theſe Nairi haue their wiues common amongſt themſelues, and when any of them goe into the houſe of any of theſe women, hee leaueth his Sword and Target at the doore, and the time that he is there, there dare not any bee ſo hardie as to come into that houſe. The Kings children ſhall not inherite the Kingdome after their Father, becauſe they hold this opinion, that perchance they were not begotten of the King their Father, but of ſome other man, therefore they accept for their King, one of the ſonnes of the Kings ſiſters, or of ſome other woman of the blood Royall, for that they bee ſure they are of the blood Royall.

Huge huge Eares.

The Nairi and their Wiues vſe for a brauerie to make great holes in their Eares, and ſo big and wide, that it is incredible, holding this opinion, that the greater the holes bee, the more Noble they eſteeme themſelues. I had leaue of one of them to meaſure the circumference of one of them with a threed, and within that circumference I put my arme vp to the ſhoulder, clothed as it was, ſo that in effect they are monſtrous great. Thus they doe make them when they be little, for then they open the eare, and hang a piece of gold or lead thereat, and within the opening, in the hole they put a certaine leafe that they haue for that purpoſe, which maketh the hole ſo great.

Note the departing of the ſhips from Cochin.

Coulam.

The ſhips euery yeere depart from Cochin to goe for Portugall, on the fifth day of December, or the fifth day of Ianuary. Now to follow my voyage for the Indies: From Cochin I went to Coulam, diſtant from Cochin ſeuentie and two miles, which Coulam is a ſmall Fort of the King of Portugals, ſituate in the Kingdome of Coulam, which is a King of the Gentiles, and of ſmall trade: at that place they lade onely halfe a ſhip of Pepper, and then ſhe goeth to Cochin to take in the reſt, and from thence to Cape Comori is ſeuentie and two miles, and there endeth the coaſt of the Indies: and alongſt this Coaſt, neere to the water ſide, and alſo to Cape Comori, downe to the low land of Chilao, which is about two hundred miles, the people there are as it were all turned to the Chriſtian Faith: there are alſo Churches of the Friers of Saint Pauls order, which Friers doe very much good in thoſe places in turning the people, and in conuerting them, and take great paines in inſtructing them in the law of Chriſt.

The order how they fiſh for Pearles.

Ieſuites are called F. of Saint Paul in the Indies, by reaſon of their Colledge of that name in Goa.

THe Sea that lyeth betweene the Coaſt which deſcendeth from Cape Comori, to the low land of Chilao, and the Iland Zeilan, they call The fiſhing of Pearles, which fiſhing they make euery yeere, beginning in March or Aprill, and it laſteth fiftie dayes, but they doe not fiſh euery yeere in one place, but one yeere in one place, and another yeere in another place of the ſame Sea. When the time of this fiſhing draweth neere, then they ſend very good Diuers, that goe to diſcouer where the greateſt heapes of Oyſters bee vnder water, and right againſt that place where greateſt ſtore of Oyſters be, there they make or plant a Village with houſes and a Bazaro, all of ſtone, which ſtandeth as long as the fiſhing time laſteth, and it is furniſhed with all things neceſſarie, and now and then it is neere vnto places that are inhabited, and other times farre off, according to the place where they fiſh. The Fiſhermen are all Chriſtians of the Countrey, and who ſo will may goe to fiſhing, paying a certaine dutie to the King of Portugall, and to the Churches of the Friers of Saint Paul, which are in that Coaſt. All the while that they are fiſhing there are three or foure Fuſts armed to defend the Fiſhermen from Rouers. It was my chance to bee there one time in my paſſage, and I ſaw the order that they vſed in fiſhing, which is this. There are three or foure Barkes that make conſort together, which are like to our little Pilot boates, and a little leſſe, there goe ſeuen or eight men in a Boat: and I haue ſeene in a morning a great number of them goe out, and anker in fifteene or eighteene fathom of water, which is the ordinarie depth of all that Coaſt. When they are at anker, they caſt a rope into the Sea, and at the end of the rope, they make faſt a great ſtone, and then there is readie a man that hath his noſe and his eares well ſtopped, and annointed with Oyle, and a basket about his necke, or vnder his left arme, then hee goeth downe by the rope to the bottome of the Sea, and as faſt as he can he filleth the basket, and when it is full, hee ſhaketh the rope, and his fellowes that are in the Barke hale him vp with the Basket: and in ſuch wiſe they goe one by one vntill they haue laden their Barke with Oyſters, and at euening they come to the Village, and then euery companie maketh their mount or heape of Oyſters one diſtant from another, in ſuch wiſe that you ſhall ſee a great long row of mounts or heapes of Oyſters, and they are not touched vntill ſuch time as the fiſhing be ended, and at the end of the fiſhing euery companie ſitteth round about their mount or heape of Oyſters, and fall to opening of them, which they may eaſily doe becauſe they be dead, drie and brittle: and if euery oyſter had pearles in them, it would bee a very good purchaſe, but there are very many that haue no pearles in them: when the fiſhing is ended, then they ſee whether it bee a good gathering or a bad: there are certaine expert in the Pearles, whom they call Chitini, which ſet and make the price of Pearles according to their carracts, beautie, and goodneſſe, making foure ſorts of them. The firſt ſort be the round Pearles, and they be called Aia of Portugall, becauſe the Portugals doe buy them. The ſecond ſort which are not round, are called Aia of Bengala. The third ſort which are not ſo good as the ſecond, they call Aia of Canara, that is to ſay, The Kingdome of Bezeneger. The fourth and laſt ſort, which are the leaſt and worſt ſort, are called Aia of Cambaia. Thus the price being ſet, there are Merchants of euery Countrey which are readie with their money in their hands, ſo that in few dayes all is bought vp at the priſes ſet according to the goodneſſe and carracts of the Pearles.

Theſe Pearles are priſed according to the Caracts which they weigh, euery caract is 4. Graines, and theſe men that priſe them haue an Inſtrument of Copper with holes in it, which be made by degrees for to ſort the Pearls withall.

In this Sea of the fiſhing of Pearles, is an Iland called Manar, which is inhabited by Chriſtians of the Countrey which firſt were Gentiles, and haue a ſmall hold of the Portugals being ſituate ouer againſt Zeilan: and betweene theſe two Ilands there is a Channell, but not very bigge, and hath but a ſmall depth therein: by reaſon whereof there cannot any great Ship paſſe that way, but ſmall Ships, and with the increaſe of the water which is at the change, or the full of the Moone, and yet for all this they muſt vnlade them and put their goods into ſmall veſſels to lighten them before they can paſſe that way for feare of Sholdes that lie in the Channell, and after lade them into their ſhips to goe for the Indies, and this doe all ſmall ſhips that paſſe that way, but thoſe ſhips that goe for the Indies Eaſtwards, paſſe by the Coaſt of Coromandel, on the other ſide by the land of Chilao, which is betweene the firme land and the Iland Manor: From Cape Comori to the Iland Zeilan is one hundred and twentie miles ouerthwart.

Manar.

Zeilan is an Iland, in my iudgement, a great deale bigger then Cyprus: on that ſide towards the Indies lying Weſtward is the Citie called Columba, which is a hold of the Portugals, but without walls or enemies. It hath towards the Sea a free Port, the lawfull King of that Iland is in Columbo, and is turned Chriſtian and maintained by the King of Portugall, being depriued of his Kingdome. The King of the Gentiles, to whom this Kingdome did belong, was called Madoni, which had two ſonnes, the firſt named Barbinas the Prince; and the ſecond Ragine. This King by the policie of his younger Sonne, was depriued of his Kingdome, who becauſe hee had entiſed and done that which pleaſed the Armie and Souldiers, in deſpight of his Father and Brother being Prince, vſurped the Kingdome, and became a great Warriour. Firſt, this Iland had three Kings; the King of Cotta with his conquered Priſoners: the King of Candia, which is a part of that Iland, and is ſo called by the name of Candia, which had a reaſonable power, and was a great friend to the Portugals, which ſaid that hee liued ſecretly a Chriſtian; the third was the King of Gianiſampatan. In thirteene yeeres that this Ragine gouerned this Iland, he became a great Tyrant.

Zeilan.

In this Iland there groweth fine Sinamom, great ſtore of Pepper, great ſtore of Nuts and Arochoe: there they make great ſtore of Cairo to make Cordage: it bringeth forth great ſtore of Chriſtall Cats eyes, or Ochi de Gati, and they ſay that they finde there ſome Rubies, but I haue ſold Rubies well there that I brought with me from Pegu. I was deſirous to ſee how they gather the Sinamom, or take it from the tree that it groweth on, and ſo much the rather, becauſe the time that I was there, was the ſeaſon which they gather it in, which was in the moneth of Aprill, at which time the Portugals were in Armes, and in the field, with the King of the Countrey; yet I to ſatisfie my deſire, although in great danger, tooke a guide with me and went into a Wood three miles from the Citie, in which wood was great ſtore of Sinamom trees growing together among other wild trees; and this Sinamom tree is a ſmall tree, and not very high, and hath leaues like to our Bay-tree. In the moneth of March or Aprill, when the ſappe goeth vp to the top of the Tree, then they take the Sinamom from that tree in this wiſe. They cut the barke off the tree round about in length from knot to knot, or from ioynt to ioynt, aboue and below, and then eaſily with their hands they take it away, laying it in the Sunne to drie, and in this wiſe it is gathered, and yet for all this the Tree dyeth not, but againſt the next yeere it will haue a new barke, and that which is gathered euery yeere is the beſt Sinamom: for that which groweth two or three yeeres is great, and not ſo good as the other is; and in theſe woods groweth much Pepper.

Cairo is a ſtuffe that they make Ropes with, the which is the barke of a Tree.

The cutting and gathering of Sinamom.

A rare thing.

Negapatan.

FRom the Iland of Zeilan men vſe to goe with ſmall ſhips to Negapatan, within the firme land, and ſeuentie two miles off is a very great Citie, and very populous of Portugals and Chriſtians of the Countrey, and part Gentiles: it is a Countrey of ſmall trade.

Saint Thomas or San Tome. S.Thomas his Sepulcher.

FRom Negapatan following my voyage towards the Eaſt an hundred and fiftie miles, I found the Houſe of bleſſed Saint Thomas, which is a Church of great deuotion, and greatly regarded of the Gentiles, for the great Miracles they haue heard to haue beene done by that bleſſed Apoſtle: neere vnto this Church the Portugals haue builded them a Citie in the Countrey ſubiect to the King of Bezeneger, which Citie although it bee not very great, yet in my iudgement it is the faireſt in all that part of the Indies. It is a maruellous thing to them which haue not ſeene the lading and vnlading of men and merchandize in Saint Tome as they doe: it is a place ſo dangerous, that a man cannot bee ſerued with ſmall Barkes, neither can they doe their buſineſſe with the Boates of the ſhips, becauſe they would be beaten in a thouſand pieces, but they make certaine Barkes (of purpoſe) high, which they call Maſadie, they be made of little boards; one board being ſowed to another with ſmall cordes, and in this order are they made. And when they are thus made, and the owners will embarke any thing in them, either men or goods, they lade them on land, and when they are laden, the Barke-men thruſt the Boate with her lading into the ſtreame, and with great ſpeed they make haſt all that they are able to row out againſt the huge waues of the Sea that are on that ſhore vntill that they carrie them to the ſhips: and in like manner they lade theſe Maſadies at the ſhips with merchandiſe and men. When they come neere the ſhore, the Bark-men leape out of the Barke into the Sea to keepe the Barke right that ſhee caſt not thwart the ſhore, and being kept right, the Suffe of the Sea ſetteth her lading drie on land without any hurt or danger, and ſometimes there are ſome of them that are ouerthrowen, but there can bee no great loſſe, becauſe they lade but a little at a time. All the Merchandize they lade outwards, they emball it well with Oxe hides, ſo that if it take wet, it can haue no great harme.

Dangerous ſurge and ſhores.

In the Iland of Banda they lade Nutmegs, for there they grow.

In my voyage, returning in the yeere of our Lord 1566. I went from Goa vnto Malacca, in a ſhip or Gallion of the King of Portugall, which went vnto Banda for to lade Nutmegs and Maces: from Goa to Malacca are one thouſand eight hundred miles, wee paſſed without the Iland Zeilan, and went through the Channell of Nicubar, or elſe through the channell of Sombrero, which is by the middle of the Iland of Sumatra, called in old time Taprobana: and from Nicubar to Pegu, is as it were a rowe or chaine of an infinite number of Ilands, of which many are inhabited with wild people, and they call thoſe Ilands the Ilands of Andemaon, and they call their people Sauage or wilde, becauſe they eate one another: alſo theſe Ilands haue warre one with another, for they haue ſmall Barkes, and with them they take one another, and ſo eate one another: and if by euill chance any Ship bee loſt on thoſe Ilands, as many haue beene, there is not one man of thoſe ſhips loſt there that eſcapeth vneaten or vnſlaine. Theſe people haue not any acquaintance with any other people, neither haue they trade with any, but liue onely of ſuch Fruites as thoſe Ilands yeeld: and if any Ship come neere vnto that place or Coaſt as they paſſe that way, as in my voyage it hapned as I came from Malacca through the channell of Sombrero, there came two of their Barkes neere vnto our Ship laden with Fruit, as with Muces which we call Adams Apples, with freſh Nuts, and with a fruit called Inani, which fruit is like to our Turneps, but is very ſweet and good to eate: they would not come into the ſhip for any thing that wee could doe: neither would they take any money for their Fruit: but they would trucke for olde Shirts or pieces of old Linnen breeches: Theſe ragges they let downe with a rope into their Barke vnto them, and looke what they thought thoſe things to bee worth, ſo much fruit they would make faſt to the rope and let vs hale it in: and it was told me that at ſometimes a man ſhall haue for an old Shirt a good piece of Amber.

In the Ilands of Andemaon, they eate one another.

Sion or Siam.

SIon was the Imperiall ſeat, and a great Citie, but in the yeere of our Lord God 1567. it was taken by the King of Pegu, which King made a voyage or came by land foure moneths iourney with an Armie of men through his land, and the number of his Armie was a million and foure hundreth thouſand men of Warre: when he came to the Citie, hee gaue aſſault to it, and beſieged it one and twentie moneths before he could winne it, with great loſſe of his people, this I know, for that I was in Pegu ſixe moneths after his departure, and ſaw when that his Officers that were in Pegu, ſent fiue hundreth thouſand men of warre to furniſh the places of them that were ſlaine and loſt in that aſſault: yet for all this, if there had not beene Treaſon againſt the Citie, it had not beene loſt: for on a night there was one of the Gates ſet open, through the which with great trouble the King gate into the Citie, and became Gouernour of Sion: and when the Emperour ſaw that hee was betrayed, and that his Enemie was in the Citie, he poyſoned himſelfe: and his Wiues and Children, Friends and Noblemen, that were not ſlaine in the firſt affront of the entrance into the Citie, were all carried Captiues into Pegu, where I was at the comming home of the King with his tryumphs and victorie, which comming home and returning from the warres was a goodly ſight to behold, to ſee the Elephants come home in a ſquare, laden with Gold, Siluer, Iewels, and with Noble men and women that were taken Priſoners in that Citie.

Now to returne to my Voyage: I depared from Malacca in a great Ship which went for Saint Tome, being a Citie ſituate on the Coaſt of Coromandell: and becauſe the Captaine of the Caſtles of Malacca had vnderſtanding by aduiſe that the King of * Aſi would come with a great Armie and power of men againſt them, therefore vpon this hee would not giue licence that any Ships ſhould depart: Wherefore in this Ship we departed from thence in the night, without making any prouiſion of our water: and we were in that Ship foure hundreth and odde men: wee departed from thence with intention to goe to an Iland to take in water, but the winds were ſo contrarie that they would not ſuffer vs to fetch it, ſo that by this meanes wee were two and fortie dayes in the Sea as it were loſt, and we were driuen too and fro, ſo that that the firſt Land that wee Diſcouered, was beyond Saint Tome, more then fiue hundred miles which were the Mountaines of Zerzerline, neere vnto the Kingdome of Oriſa, and ſo we came to Oriſa with many Sicke, and more that were dead for want of water: and they that were Sicke in foure dayes died: and I for the ſpace of a yeere after had my Throate ſo ſore and hoarſe, that I could neuer ſatisfie my thirſt in drinking of water: I iudge the reaſon of my hoarſeneſſe to be with Sops that I wet in Vineger and Oyle, wherewith I ſuſteined my ſelfe many dayes. There was not any want of Bread nor of Wine: but the Wines of that Countrie are ſo hot that being drunke without Water they will kill a man: neither are they able to drinke them: when we began to want water, I ſaw certaine Moores that were officers in the ſhip, that ſolde a ſmall diſh full for [illegible] Duckat, after this I ſaw one that would haue giuen a barre of Pepper, which is two quintals and a halfe, for a little meaſure of water, and he could not haue it. Truely I beleeue that I had died with my ſlaue, whom then I had to ſerue mee, which coſt me very deare: but to prouide for the danger at hand, I ſolde my Slaue for halfe that he was worth, becauſe that I would ſaue his drinke that he drunke, to ſerue my owne purpoſe, and to ſaue my life.

Oriſa was a faire Kingdome and truſty, through the which a man might haue gone with gold in his hand without any danger at all, as long as the lawfull King reigned which was a Gentile, who continued in the Citie called Catecha, which was within the Land ſixe dayes iourney. This King loued ſtrangers marueilous well, eſpecially merchants which had trafficke in and out of his Kingdome, in ſuch wiſe that hee would take no Cuſtome of them, neither any other grieuous thing. Onely the Ship that came thither payde a ſmall thing according to her portage, and euery yeere in the Port of Oriſa were laden fiue and twentie or thirtie ſhips great and ſmall, with Rice and diuers ſorts of fine white bumbaſt cloth, oyle of Zerzeline which they make of a ſeede, and it is very good to eate and to frye fiſh withall, great ſtore of Butter Lacca, long Pepper, Ginger, Mirabolans drie and condite, great ſtore of cloth of Herbes, which is a kind of ſilke which groweth amongſt the woods without any labour of man, and when the bole thereof is growne round as bigge as an Orenge, then they take care onely to gather them. About ſixeteene yeeres paſt, this King with his Kingdome were deſtroyed by the King of Patane, which was alſo King of the greateſt part of Bengala, and when he had got the Kingdome, he ſet cuſtome there twentie pro cento, as Merchants paide in his Kingdome: but this Tyrant enioyed his Kingdome but a ſmall time, but was conquered by another Tyrant, which was the great Mogol King of Agra, Delly, and of all Cambaia, without any reſiſtance. I departed from Oriſa to Bengala, to the harbour Piqueno, which is diſtant from Oriſa towards the Eaſt an hundred and ſeuentie miles. They goe as it were rowing alongſt the coaſt fiftie and foure miles, and then we enter into the riuer Ganges: from the mouth of this Riuer, to a City called Satagan, where the Merchants gather themſelues together with their trade, are an hundred miles, which they rowe in eighteene houres with the increaſe of the water: in which riuer it floweth and ebbeth as it doth in the Thames, and when the ebbing water is come, they are not able to rowe againſt it, by reaſon of the ſwiftneſſe of the water, yet their barks be light and armed with Oares, like to Foiſtes, yet the cannot preuaile againſt that Streame, but for refuge muſt make them faſt to the banke of the Riuer vntill the next flowing water, and they call theſe Barkes Bazaras and Patuas: they rowe as well as a Galliot, or as well as euer I haue ſeene any. A good Tides rowing before you come to Satagan, you ſhall haue a place which is called Buttor, and from thence vpwards the Sips doe not goe, becauſe that vpwards the Riuer is very Shallow, and little water. Euery yeere at Buttor they make and vnmake a Village, with Houſes and Shops made of Straw, and with all things neceſſarie to their vſes, and this Village ſtandeth as long as the Ships ride there, and till they depart for the Indies, and when they depart, euerie man goeth to his plot of Houſes, and there ſetteth fire on them, which thing made me to maruaile. For as I paſſed vp to Satagan, I ſaw this Village ſtanding with a great number of people, with an infinite number of Ships and Bazars, and at my returne comming downe with my Captaine of the laſt Ship, for whom I tarried, I was all amazed to ſee ſuch a place ſo ſoone razed and burnt, and nothing left but the ſigne of the burnt Houſes. The ſmall Ships goe to Satagan, and there they lade.

Tanaſari.

IN the Port of Satagan euery yeere they lade thirtie or fiue and thirtie ſhips great and ſmall, with Rice, Cloth of Bombaſt of diuers ſorts, Lacca, great abundance of Sugar, Mirabolans dried and preſerued, long Pepper, Oyle of Zerzeline, and many other ſorts of merchandiſe. The Citie of Satagan is a reaſonable faire Citie for a Citie of the Moores, abounding with all things, and was gouerned by the King of Patane, and now is ſubiect to the Great Mogol. I was in this Kingdome foure moneths, whereas many Merchants did buy or fraight boates for their benefits, and with theſe Barkes they goe vp and downe the Riuer of Ganges to Faires, buying their commoditie with a great aduantage, becauſe that euery day in the weeke they haue a Faire, now in one place, and now in another, and I alſo hired a Barke and went vp and downe the Riuer and did my buſineſſe, and ſo in the night I ſaw many ſtrange things. The Kingdome of Bengala in times paſt hath beene as it were in the power of Moores, neuertheleſſe there is great ſtore of Gentiles among them: alwaies whereas I haue ſpoken of Gentiles, is to be vnderſtood Idolaters, and whereas I ſpeake of Moores I meane Mahomets Sect. Thoſe people eſpecially that be within the Land doe greatly worſhip the Riuer of Ganges: for when any is ſicke, he is brought out of the Countrey to the banke of the Riuer, and there they make him a ſmall Cottage of ſtrawe, and euery day they wet him with that water, whereof there are many that die, and when they are dead, they make a heape of ſtickes and boughes and lay the dead bodie thereon, and putting fire thereunto, they let the bodie alone vntill it be halfe roſted, and then they take it off from the fire, and make an emptie Iarre faſt about his necke, and ſo throw him into the Riuer. Theſe things euery night as I paſſed vp and downe the Riuer I ſaw for the ſpace of two moneths, as I paſſed to the Fayres to buy my commodities with the Merchants. And this is the cauſe that the Portugals will not drinke of the water of the Riuer Ganges, yet to the ſight it is more perfect and clearer then the water of Nilus is. From the Port Piqueno I went to Cochin, and from Cochin to Malacca, from whence I departed for Pegu being eight hundred miles diſtant. That voyage is wont to bee made in fiue and twentie or thirtie dayes, but we were foure moneths, and at the end of three moneths our ſhip was without victuals. The Pilot tolde vs that wee were by his Altitude not farre from a Citie called Tanaſary, in the Kingdome of Pegu, and theſe his words were not true, but wee were (as it were) in the middle of many Ilands, and many vninhabited rockes, and there were alſo ſome Portugals that affirmed that they knew the Land, and knew alſo where the Citie of Tanaſary was.

Marchandiſe comming from Sion.

Nyper wine good to cure the French diſeaſe.

Ill voyage.

This Citie of right belongeth to the Kingdome of Sion, which is ſituate on a great Riuers ſide, which commeth out of the Kingdome of Sion: and where this Riuer runneth into the Sea, there is a Village called Mirgim, in whoſe Harbour euery yeere there lade ſome ſhips with Verzina, Nypa, and Beniamin, a few Cloues, Nutmegs and Maces which come from the coaſt of Sion, but the greateſt marchandiſe there is Verzin and Nypa, which is an excellent Wine, which is made of the floure of a tree called Nyper. Whoſe liquor they diſtill, and ſo make an excellent drink cleare as Chriſtall, good to the mouth, and better to the ſtomacke, and it hath an excellent gentle vertue, that if one were rotten with the French poxe, drinking good ſtore of this, hee ſhall bee whole againe, and I haue ſeene it proued, becauſe that when I was in Cochin, there was a friend of mine, whoſe noſe began to drop away with that diſeaſe, and he was counſelled of the Doctors of Phiſick that he ſhould goe to Tanaſary at the time of the new Wines, and that hee ſhould drinke of the Nyper wine, night and day, as much as hee could before it was diſtilled, which at that time is moſt delicate, but after that it is diſtilled, it is more ſtrong, and if you drinke much of it, it will fume into the head with drunkenneſſe. This man went thither, and did ſo, and I haue ſeene him after with a good colour and ſound. This Wine is very much eſteemed in the Indies, and for that it is brought ſo farre off, it is very deare: in Pegu ordinarily it is good cheape, becauſe it is neerer to the place where they make it, and there is euery yeere great quantitie made thereof. And returning to my purpoſe, I ſay, being amongſt theſe rockes, and farre from the Land which is ouer againſt Tanaſary, with great ſcarcitie of victuals, and that by the ſaying of the Pilot and two Portugals, holding then firme that wee were in front of the aforeſayde harbour, wee determined to goe thither with our boat and fetch victuals, and that the ſhip ſhould ſtay for vs in a place aſsigned Wee were twentie and eight perſons in the boat that went for victuals, and on a day about twelue of the clocke wee went from the ſhip, aſſuring our ſelues to bee in the harbour before night in the aforeſaid Port, wee rowed all that day, and a great part of the next night, and all the next day without finding harbour, or any ſigne of good land, and this came to paſſe through the euil counſell of the two Portugals that were with vs.

Hunger in great extremitie.

For wee had ouerſhot the harbour and left it behinde vs, in ſuch wiſe that wee had loſt the land inhabited, together with the ſhip, and wee eight and twentie men had no manner of victuall with vs in the boate, but it was the Lords will that one of the Mariners had brought a little Rice with him in the boat to barter away for ſome other thing, and it was not ſo much but that three or foure men would haue eaten it at a meale: I tooke the gouernment of this Rice, promiſing that by the helpe of God that Rice ſhould be nouriſhment for vs vntil it pleaſed God to ſend vs to ſome place that was inhabited: and when I ſlept I put the Rice into my boſome becauſe they ſhould not rob it from me: we were nine dayes rowing alongſt the coaſt, without finding any thing but Countries vninhabited, and deſert Ilands, where if we had found but graſſe it would haue ſeemed

Sugar vnto vs, but we could not finde any, yet we found a few leaues of a tree, and they were ſo hard that we could not chew them, we had water and wood ſufficient, and as we rowed, we could go but by flowing water, for when it was ebbing water we made faſt our Boat to the banke of one of thoſe Ilands, and in theſe nine dayes that wee rowed, wee found a Caue or Neſt of Tortoiſe egges, wherein were 144. egges, the which was a great helpe vnto vs: theſe egges are as big as a Hennes egge, and haue no ſhell about them but a tender skinne, euery day we ſod a Ketle full of thoſe Egges, with a handfull of Rice in the broth thereof: it pleaſed God that at the end of nine dayes we diſcouered certaine Fiſher-men fiſhing with ſmall Barkes, and we rowed towards them, with a good cheere, for I thinke there were neuer men more glad then we were, for wee were ſo ſore afflicted with penurie, that wee could ſcarce ſtand on our legges. Yet according to the order that wee ſet for our Rice, when wee ſaw thoſe Fiſher-men, there was left ſufficient for foure daies. The firſt Village that wee came to was in the Gulfe of Tauay, vnder the King of Pegu, whereas we found great ſtore of victuals: then for two or three dayes after our arriuall there, we would eate but little meate any of vs, and yet for all this, wee were at the point of death the moſt part of vs. From Tauay to Martauan in the Kingdome of Pegu, are ſeuenty two miles. We laded our Boat with victuals which were abundantly ſufficient for ſixe moneths, from whence wee departed for the Port and Citie of Martauan, where in ſhort time we arriued, but we found not our ſhip there as we had thought we ſhould, from whence preſently we made out two barkes to goe to looke for her. And they found her in great calamitie, and need of water, being at an anchor with a contrary winde, which came very ill to paſſe, becauſe that ſhee wanted her Boat a moneth, which ſhould haue made her prouiſion of wood and water, the ſhip alſo by the grace of God arriued ſafely in the foreſaid Port of Martauan.

Tauay vnder the King of Pegu.

WEe found in the Citie of Martauan ninety Portugals of Merchants and other baſe men, which had fallen at difference with the Rector or Gouernour of the Citie, and all for this cauſe, that certaine vagabonds of the Portugals had ſlaine fiue Falchines of the King of Pegu, which chanced about a moneth after the King of Pegu was gone with a million and foure hundred thouſand men to conquere the Kingdome of Sion. They haue for cuſtome in this Countrie and Kingdome, the King being whereſoeuer his pleaſure is to be out of this Kingdom, that euery fifteene dayes there goeth from Pegu a Carauan of Falchines, with euery one a basket on his head full of ſome Fruits or other delicates of refreſhings, and with cleane clothes: it chanced that this Carauan paſſing by Martauan, and reſting themſelues there a night, there happened betweene the Portugals and them words of deſpight, and from words to blowes, and becauſe it was thought that the Portugals had the worſe, the night following, when the Falchines were a ſleepe with their companie, the Portugals went and cut off fiue of their heads. Now there is a law in Pegu, that whoſoeuer killeth a man, he ſhall buy the ſhed bloud with his money, according to the eſtate of the perſon that is ſlaine, but theſe Falchines being the ſeruants of the King, the Recors durſt not doe any thing in the matter, without the conſent of the King, becauſe it was neceſſary that the King ſhould knowe of ſuch a matter. When the King had knowledge thereof, he gaue commandement that the malefactors ſhould be kept vntill his comming home, and then he would duely miniſter iuſtice, but the Captaine of the Portugals would not deliuer thoſe men, but rather ſet himſelfe with all the reſt in Armes, and went euery day through the Citie marching with his Drumme and Enſignes diſplayed. For at that time the Citie was empty of men, by reaſon they were gone all to the warres and in buſineſſe of the King: in the middeſt of this rumour wee came thither, and I thought it a ſtrange thing to ſee the Portugals vſe ſuch inſolency in anothers mans Citie.

Martauan a Citie vnder the King Pegu.

Pegu.

From Martauan I departed to goe to the chiefeſt Citie in the Kingdome of Pegu, which is alſo called after the name of the Kingdome, which Voyage is made by Sea in three or foure dayes; they may goe alſo by Land, but it is better for him that hath merchandiſe to goe by Sea, and leſſer charge. And in this Voyage you ſhall haue a Macareo, which is one of the moſt maruellous things in the world that Nature hath wrought, and I neuer ſaw any thing ſo hard to bee beleeued as this, to wit, the great encreaſing and diminiſhing of the water there at one puſh or inſtant, and the horrible Earth-quake and great noiſe that the Macareo maketh where it commeth. Wee departed from Martauan in Barkes, which are like to our Pilot-Boats, with the encreaſe of the water, and they goe as ſwift as an Arrowe out of a Bowe, ſo long as the Tide runneth with them, and when the water is at the higheſt, then they draw themſelues out of the channell towards ſome banke, and there they come to anchor, and when the water is diminiſhed, then they reſt on drie land: and when the Barkes reſt drie, they are as high from the bottome of the channell, as as any houſe top is high from the ground. They let their Barkes lie ſo high for this reſpect, that if there ſhould any ſhip reſt or ride in the channell, with ſuch force commeth in the water, that it would ouerthrowe Ship or Barke: yet for all this, that the Barkes be ſo farre out of the channel, and though the water hath loſt her greateſt ſtrength and furie before it come ſo high, yet they make faſt their Prow to the ſtreame, and oftentimes it maketh them very fearefull, and if the anchor did not hold her Prow vp by ſtrength, ſhee would be ouer throwne and loſt with men and goods.

Admirable Tides.

This tide is like to the tides in our Riuer of Seuerne: but it ſeemeth greater.

Theſe Tides make their iuſt courſe as ours doe.

This Macareo is a Tide or a Current.

goods. When the water beginneth to encreaſe, it maketh ſuch a noiſe, and ſo great, that you would thinke it an Earthquake, and preſently at the firſt it maketh three waues. So that the firſt waſheth ouer the Barke, from ſtemme to ſterne, the ſecond is not ſo furious as the firſt, and the third raiſeth the anchor, and then for the ſpace of ſixe houres while the water encreaſeth, they rowe with ſuch ſwiftneſſe that you would thinke they did flie: in theſe tides there muſt be loſt no iot of time, for if you arriue not at the ſtagions before the Tide bee ſpent, you muſt turne backe from whence you came. For there is no ſtaying at any place but at theſe ſtagions, and there is more danger at one of theſe places then at another, as they bee higher and lower one then another. When as you returne from Pegu to Martauan, they goe but halfe the Tide at a time, becauſe they will lay their Barkes vp aloft on the bankes, for the reaſon aforeſaid. I could neuer gather any reaſon of the noiſe that this water maketh in the encreaſe of the Tide, and in diminiſhing of the water. There is another Macareo in Cambaya, but that is nothing in compariſon of this.

Foure white Elephants.

This money called Tanſa is halfe a Ducket which may be three ſhillings and foure pence.

By the helpe of God we came ſafe to Pegu, which are two Cities, the old and the new, in the old Citie are the Merchant ſtrangers, and Merchants of the Countrie, for there are the greateſt doings and the greateſt trade. This Citie is not very great, but it hath very great Suburbs. Their houſes be made with canes, and couered with leaues, or with ſtraw, but the Merchants haue all one houſe or Magaſon, which houſe they call Godon, which is made of brickes, and there they put all their goods of any value, to ſaue them from the often miſchances that there happen to houſes made of ſuch ſtuffe. In the new Citie is the Palace of the King, and his abiding place with all his Barons and Nobles, and other Gentlemen; and in the time that I was there, they finiſhed the building of the new Citie: it is a great Citie, very plaine and flat, and foure ſquare, walled round about, and with Ditches that compaſſe the Walls about with water, in which Diches are many Crocodiles. It hath no Draw-bridges, yet it hath twenty Gates, fiue for euery ſquare on the Walls, there are many places made for Centinels to watch, made of Wood and couered or gilt with Gold, the Streets thereof are the faireſt that I haue ſeene, they are as ſtreight as a line from one Gate to another, and ſtanding at the one Gate you may diſcouer to the other, and they are as broad as ten or twelue men may ride a-breaſt in them: and thoſe Streets that be thwart are faire and large, theſe Streets, both on the one ſide and the other, are planted at the doores of the Houſes with Nut trees of India, which make a very commodious ſhadow, the Houſes be made of wood, and couered with a kind of tiles in forme of Cups, very neceſſary for their vſe: the Kings Palace is in the middle of the Citie, made in forme of a walled Caſtle, with ditches full of water round about it, the Lodgings within are made of wood all ouer gilded, with fine pinacles, and very coſtly worke, couered with plates of gold. Truly it may be a Kings houſe: within the gate there is a faire large Court, from the one ſide to the other, wherein there are made places for the ſtrongeſt and ſtouteſt Elephants, hee hath foure that be white, a thing ſo rare, that a man ſhall hardly finde another King that hath any ſuch, as if this King knowe any other that hath white Elephants, he ſendeth for them as for a gift. The time that I was there, there were two brought out of a farre Countrie, and that coſt me ſomething the ſight of them, for that they command the Merchants to goe to ſee them, and then they muſt giue ſomewhat to the men that bring them: the Brokers of the Merchants giue for euery man halfe a Ducket, which they call a Tanſa, which amounteth to a great ſumme, for the number of Merchants that are in that Citie; and when they haue payd the aforeſaid Tanſa, they may chuſe whether they will ſee them at that time or no, becauſe that when they are in the Kings ſtall, euery man may ſee them that will: but at that time they muſt goe and ſee them, for it is the kings pleaſure it ſhould be ſo.

A warlike policy.

An excellent deuiſe to hunt and take wilde Elephants.

This King amongſt all other his Titles, is called The King of the white Elephants, and it is reported, that if this King knew any other King that had any of theſe white Elephants, and would not ſend them vnto him, that he would hazard his whole Kingdome to conquere them. He eſteemeth theſe white Elephants very deerely, and they are had in great regard, and kept with very meet ſeruice, euery one of them is in a houſe, all gilded ouer, and they haue their meate giuen them in veſſels of ſiluer and gold. There is one blacke Elephant, the greateſt that hath beene ſeene, and he is kept according to his bigneſſe; he is nine cubits high, which is a maruellous thing. It is reported that this King hath foure thouſand Elephants of warre, and all haue their teeth, and they vſe to put on their two vppermoſt teeth ſharpe pikes of Iron, and make them faſt with rings, becauſe theſe beaſts fight and make battell with their teeth; hee hath alſo very many young Elephants that haue not their teeth ſprouted forth: alſo this King hath a braue deuiſe in hunting to take theſe Elephants when he will, two miles from the Citie. He hath builded a faire Palace all gilded, and within it a faire Court, and within it and round about there are made an infinite number of places for men to ſtand to ſee this hunting: neere vnto this Palace is a mighty great Wood, through the which the Huntſ-men of the King ride continually on the backes of the female Elephants, teaching them in this buſineſſe. Euery Hunter carrieth out with him fiue or ſixe of theſe females, and they ſay that they anoint the ſecret place with a certaine compoſition that they haue, that when the wilde Elephant doeth ſmell: hereunto, they follow the females and cannot leaue them: when the Huntſ-men haue made prouiſion, and the Elephant is ſo entangled, they guide the females towards the Palace which is called Tambell, and this Palace hath a doore which doth open and ſhut with engines, before which doore there is a long ſtraight way with trees on both the ſides, which couereth the way in ſuch wiſe, as it is like darkeneſſe in a corner: the wilde Elephant when he commeth to this way thinketh that hee is in the Woods. At the end of this darke way there is a great field: when the Hunters haue gotten this prey, when they firſt come to this field, they ſend preſently to giue knowledge thereof to the Citie, and with all ſpeed there goe out fifty or ſixty men on horſebacke, and doe beſet the field round about: in the great field then the females which are taught in this buſineſſe goe directly to the mouth of the darke way, and when as the wilde Elephant is entred in there, the Hunters ſhoute and make a great noiſe, as much as is poſſible, to make the wilde Elephant enter in at the gate of that Palace, which is then open, and as ſoone as he is in, the gate is ſhut without any noiſe, and ſo the Hunters with the female Elephants and the wilde one are all in the Court together, and then within a ſmall time the females withdraw themſelues away one by one out of the Court, leauing the wilde Elephant alone: and when hee perceiueth that hee is left alone, hee is ſo mad that for two or three houres to ſee him, it is the greateſt pleaſure in the world: he weepeth, he flingeth, he runneth, he iuſtleth, he thruſteth vnder the places where the people ſtand to ſee him, thinking to kill ſome of them, but the poſts and timber is ſo ſtrong and great that he cannot hurt any body, yet he oftentimes breaketh his teeth in the grates. At length when he is weary, and hath laboured his body that he is all wet with ſweat, then he plucketh in his trunke into his mouth, and then he throweth out ſo much water out of his belly, that he ſprinkleth it ouer the heads of the lookers on, to the vttermoſt of them, although it be very high: and then when they ſee him very weary, there goe certaine Officers into the Court with long ſharpe canes in their hands, and pricke him that they make him to goe into one of the houſes that are made alongſt the Court for the ſame purpoſe: as there are many which are made long and narrow, that when the Elephant is in, hee cannot turne himſelfe to goe backe againe. And it is requiſite that theſe men ſhould bee very wary and ſwift, for although their canes be long, yet the Elephant would kill them if they were not ſwift to ſaue themſelues: at length when they haue gotten him into one of thoſe houſes, they ſtand ouer him in a loft, and get ropes vnder his belly and about his neck, & about his legs, and bind him faſt, and ſo let him ſtand foure or fiue dayes, and giue him neither meate nor drinke. At the end of theſe foure or fiue dayes, they vnlooſe him, and put one of the females vnto him, and giue them meate and drink, and in eight dayes he is become tame. In my iudgement there is not a beaſt ſo intellectiue as are theſe Elephants, nor of more vnderſtanding in all the world: for he will doe all things that his keeper ſayth, ſo that he lacketh nothing but humane ſpeach.

An excellent paſtime of the Elephants.

Theſe canes are like to them in Spaine which they cal Loco de tore.

A ſtrange thing that a beaſt ſo wilde ſhould in ſo ſhort time be made tame.

It is reported that the greateſt ſtrength that the King of Pegu hath, is in theſe Elephants, for when they goe to battell, they ſet on their backes a Caſtle of wood bound thereto, with bands vnder their bellies: and in euery Caſtle foure men very commodiouſly ſet to fight with Harquebuſſes, with Bowes and Arrowes, with Darts and Pikes, and other lancing weapons: and they ſay that the skinne of this Elephant is ſo hard, that an Harquebuſſe will not pierce it, vnleſſe it be in the eye, temples, or ſome other tender place of his body. And beſides this, they are of great ſtrength, and haue a very excellent order in their battell, as I haue ſeene at their Feaſts which they make in the yeere, in which Feaſts the King makes Triumphs, which is a rare thing and worthie memorie, that in ſo barbarous a People there ſhould bee ſuch goodly orders as they haue in their Armies, which be diſtinct in ſquares of Elephants, of Horſemen, of Harquebuſſers and Pikemen, that truly the number of them are infinite: but their armour and weapons are very naught and weake, as well the one as the other: they haue very bad Pikes, their Swords are worſe made, like long Kniues without points, his Harquebuſſes are moſt excellent, and alwaies in his warres he hath eighty thouſand Harquebuſſes, and the number of them encreaſeth daily. Becauſe the King will haue them ſhoot euery day at the Planke, and ſo by continuall exerciſe they become moſt excellent ſhot: alſo he hath great Ordnance made of very good metall; to conclude, there is not a King on the Earth that hath more power or ſtrength then this King of Pegu, becauſe hee hath twenty and ſixe crowned Kings at his command Hee can make in his Campe a million and an halfe of men of warre in the field againſt his Enemies. The ſtate of his Kingdome, and maintenance of his Armie, is a thing incredible to conſider, and the victuals that ſhould maintayne ſuch a number of people in the warres: but he that knoweth the nature and qualitie of that people, will eaſily beleeue it. I haue ſeene with mine eyes, that thoſe people and Souldiers haue eaten of all ſorts of wilde beaſts that are on the earth, whether it be very filthie or otherwiſe all ſerueth for their mouthes: yea, I haue ſeene them eate Scorpions and Serpents, alſo they feed of all kinde of herbes and graſſe. So that if ſuch a great Armie want not Water and Salt, they will maintayne themſelues a long time in a buſh with rootes, flowers, and leaues of trees, they carrie Rice with them for their Voyage, and that ſerueth them in ſtead of Comfits, it is ſo dainty vnto them.

minions, Gold and Siluer, he farre exceeds the power of the great Turke in treaſure and ſtrength. This King hath diuers Magaſons full of treaſure, as Gold, and Siluer, and euery day he encreaſeth it more and more, and it is neuer diminiſhed. Alſo hee is Lord of the Mines of Rubies, Saphirs, and Spinels. Neere vnto his Royall Palace there is an ineſtimable treaſure whereof he maketh no account, for that it ſtandeth in ſuch a place that euery one may ſee it, and the place where this treaſure is, is a great Court walled round about with walls of ſtone, with two gates which ſtand open euery day. And within this place or Court are foure gilded houſes couered with Lead, and in euery one of theſe are certaine heatheniſh Idols of a very great valure. in the firſt houſe there is a Statue of the image of a Man of gold very great, and on his head a Crowne of gold beſet with moſt rare Rubies and Saphires, and round about him are foure little children of gold. In the ſecond houſe there is the Statue of a Man of ſiluer, that is ſet as it were ſitting on heapes of money: whoſe ſtature in height, as he ſitteth, is ſo high, that his highneſſe exceeds the height of any one roofe of an houſe; I meaſured his feet, and found that they were as long as all my body was in height, with a Crowne on his head like to the firſt. And in the third houſe there is a Statue of braſſe of the ſame bigneſſe, with a like Crowne on his head. In the fourth and laſt houſe, there is a Statue of a Man as big as the other, which is made of Ganſa, which is the metall they make their money of, and this metall is made of Copper and Lead mingled together. This Statue alſo hath a Crowne on his head like the firſt: this treaſure being of ſuch a value as it is, ſtandeth in an open place that euery man at his pleaſure may goe and ſee it: for the keepers thereof neuer forbid any man the ſight thereof. I ſay as I haue ſaid before, that this King euery yeere in his feaſts triumpheth: and becauſe it is worthie of the noting, I thinke it meet to write thereof, which is as followeth. The King rideth on a triumphant Cart or Wagon all gilded, which is drawne by ſixteene goodly Horſes: and this Cart is very high with a goodly Canopie ouer it, behind the Cart goe twenty of his Lords and Nobles, with euery one a rope in his hand made faſt to the Cart for to hold it vpright that it fall not. The King ſitteth in the middle of the Cart; and vpon the ſame Cart about the King ſtand foure of his Nobles moſt fauoured of him, and before this Cart wherein the King is, goeth all his Armie as aforeſaid, and in the middle of his Armie goeth all his Nobilitie, round about the Cart, that are in his Dominions, a maruellous thing it is to ſee ſo many people, ſuch riches and ſuch good order in a People ſo barbarous as they be. This King of Pegu hath one principall wife which is kept in a Seralio, hee hath three hundred Concubines, of whom it is reported that he hath ninety children.

The order of Iuſtice.

No difference of perſons before the King in controuerſies or in Iuſtice.

This King ſitteth euery day in perſon to heare the ſuits of his Subiects, but he nor they neuer ſpeake one to another, but by ſupplications made in this order. The King ſitteth vp aloft in a great Hall, on a Tribunall ſeate, and lower vnder him ſit all his Barons round about, then thoſe that demand audience enter into a great Court before the King, and there ſet them downe on the ground forty paces diſtant from the Kings perſon, and amongſt thoſe people there is no difference in matters of audience before the King, but all alike, and there they ſit with their ſupplications in their hands, which are made of long leaues of a tree, theſe leaues are three quarters of a yard long, and two fingers broad, which are written with a ſharpe Iron made for the purpoſe, and in thoſe leaues are their ſupplications written, and with their ſupplications, they haue in their hands a preſent or gift, according to the weightineſſe of their matter. Then come the Secretaries downe to reade theſe ſupplications, taking them and reading them before the King, and if the King thinke it good to doe to them that fauour or iuſtice that they demand, then hee commandeth to take the preſents out of their hands: but if he thinke their demand be not iuſt or according to right, he commandeth them away without taking of their gifts or preſents.

The commodities that are ventured in Pegu.

Note the departure of the ſhips from Saint Tome to Pegu.

In the Indies there is not any merchandiſe that is good to bring to Pegu, vnleſſe it be at ſome times by chance to bring Opium of Cambaia. and if hee bring money hee ſhall loſe by it. Now the commodities that come from Saint Tome are the onely merchandiſe for that place, which is the great quantitie of Cloth made there, which they vſe in Pegu; which Cloth is made of Bombaſt wouen and painted, ſo that the more that kinde of Cloth is waſhed, the more liuely they ſhew their colours, which is a rare thing, and there is made ſuch account of this kinde of Cloth which is of ſo great importance, that a ſmall bale of it will coſt a thouſand or two thouſand duckets. Alſo from Saint Tome they lade great ſtore of red yarne, of Bombaſt died with a root which they call Saia, as aforeſaid, which colour will neuer out. With which merchandiſe euery yeere there goeth a great ſhip from S. Tome to Pegu, of great importance, and they vſually depart from Saint Tome to Pegu the eleuenth or twelfth of September, and if ſhee ſtay vntill the twelfth, it is a great hap if ſhee returne not without making of her Voyage. Their vſe was to depart the ſixt of September, and then they made ſure Voyages, and now becauſe there is a great labour about that kinde of Cloth to bring it to perfection, and that it bee well dried, as alſo the greedineſſe of the Captaine that would make an extraordinary gaine of his fraight, thinking to haue the winde alwaies to ſerue their turne, they ſtay ſo long, that at ſometimes the winde turneth. For in thoſe parts the winds blowe firmely for certaine times, with the which they goe to Pegu with the wind in poope, and if they arriue not there before the winde change, and get ground to anchor, petforce they muſt returne backe againe: for that the gales of the winde blowe there for three or foure moneths together in one place with great force. But if they get the coaſt and anchor there, then with great labour they may ſaue their Voyage. Alſo there goeth another great ſhip from Bengala euery yeere, laden with fine cloth of Bombaſt of all ſorts, which arriueth in the Harbour of Pegu, when the ſhip that commeth from Saint Tome departeth. The Harbour where theſe two ſhips arriue is called Coſmin. From Malaca to Martauan, which is a Port in Pegu, there come many ſmall ſhips, and great, laden with Pepper, Sandolo, Procellan of China, Camfora, Bruneo, and other merchandiſe. The ſhips that come from Mecca enter into the Port of Pegu and Cirion, and thoſe ſhips bring cloth of Wooll, Scarlets, Veluets, Opium, and Chickinos, by the which they loſe, and they bring them becauſe they haue no other thing that is good for Pegu; but they eſteem not the loſſe of them, for that they make ſuch great gaine of their commodities, that they carrie from thence out of that Kingdome. Alſo the King of Aſſi * his ſhips come thither into the ſame Port laden with Pepper; from the coaſt of Saint Tome of Bengala, out of the Sea of Bara to Pegu are three hundred miles, and they goe it vp the Riuer in foure dayes, with the encreaſing water, or with the floud, to a Citie called Coſmin, and there they diſcharge their ſhips, whither the Cuſtomers of Pegu come to take the note and markes of all the goods of euery man, and take the charge of the goods on them, and conuey them to Pegu, into the Kings houſe, wherein they make the Cuſtome of the merchandiſe. When the Cuſtomers haue taken the charge of the goods, and put them into Barkes, the Retor of the Citie giueth licence to the Merchants to take barke, and goe vp to Pegu with their merchandiſe; and ſo three or foure of them take a Barke and goe vp to Pegu in companie. God deliuer euery man that he giue not a wrong note, and entrie, or thinke to ſteale any Cuſtome: for if they doe, for the leaſt trifle that is, he is vtterly vndone, for the King doeth take it for a moſt great affront to bee deceiued of his Cuſtome; and therefore they make diligent ſearches, three times at the lading and vnlading of the goods, and at the taking of them a-land. In Pegu this ſearch they make when they goe out of the ſhip for Diamonds, Pearles, and fine Cloth which taketh little roome: for becauſe that all the Iewels that come into Pegu, and are not found of that Countrie, pay Cuſtome, but Rubies, Saphyrs and Spinels pay no Cuſtome in nor out: becauſe they are found growing in that Countrie. All Merchants that meane to goe thorow the Indies, muſt carrie all manner of houſhold-ſtuffe with them which is neceſſary for a houſe, becauſe that there is not any lodging, nor Innes, nor Hoſts, nor chamber roome in that Countrie, but the firſt thing a man doth when hee commeth to any Citie is to hyre a houſe, either by the yeere, or by the moneth, or as hee meanes to ſtay in thoſe parts.

Commodities brought into Pegu.

The Chikinos are pieces of gold worth ſterling ſeuen ſhillings.

* Achen.

Great rigour for the ſtealing of Cuſtomes.

Merchants muſt carrie their prouiſions, for there are no Innes.

In Pegu their order is to hire their houſes for ſixe moneths. Now from Coſmin to the Citie of Pegu they goe in ſixe houres with the floud, and if it be ebbing water, then they make faſt their Boate to the Riuer ſide, and there tarrie vntill the water flowe againe. It is a very commodious and pleaſant Voyage, hauing on both ſides of the Riuers many great Villages, which they call Cities: in the which Hennes, Pigeons, Egges, Milke, Rice, and other things bee very good cheape. It is all plaine, and a goodly Countrie, and in eight dayes you may make your Voyage vp to Macceo, diſtant from Pegu twelue miles, and there they diſcharge their goods, and lade them in Carts or Waines drawne with Oxen, and the Merchants are carried in a Cloſet which they call Deling, in the which a man ſhall be very well accommodated, with Cuſhions vnder his head, and couered for the defence of the Sunne and Raine, and there he may ſleepe if he haue will thereunto: and his foure Falchines carrie him running away, changing two at one time, and two at another. The cuſtome of Pegu and fraight thither, may amount vnto twenty or twenty two per cento, and twenty three according as he hath more or leſſe ſtolne from him that day they cuſtome the goods. It is requiſite that a man haue his eyes watchfull, and to bee carefull, and to haue many friends, for when they cuſtome in the great Hall of the King, there come many Gentlemen accompanied with a number of their ſlaues, and theſe Gentlemen haue no ſhame that their ſlaues robbe ſtrangers: whether it be Cloth in ſhewing of it, or any other thing, they laugh at it. And although the Merchants helpe one another to keepe watch, and looke to their goods, they cannot looke thereto ſo narrowly but one or other will robbe ſomething, either more or leſſe, according as their merchandiſe is more or leſſe: and yet on this day there is a worſe thing then this: although you haue ſet ſo many eyes to looke there for your benefit, that you eſcape vnrobbed of the ſlaues, a man cannot chooſe but that hee muſt be robbed of the Officers of the Cuſtome houſe. For paying the cuſtome with the ſame goods oftentimes they take the beſt that you haue, and not by rate of euery ſort as they ought to doe, by which meanes a man payeth more then his dutie. At length when the goods be diſpatched out of the Cuſtomhouſe in this order, the Merchant cauſeth them to be carried to his houſe, and may doe with them at his pleaſure.

Deſcription of the fruitfulneſſe of that ſoyle.

Deling is a ſmall litter carried with men as is aforeſaid.

There are in Pegu eight Brokers of the Kings, which are called Tareghe, who are bound to ſell all the merchandiſe which come to Pegu, at the common or the current price: then if the Merchants will ſell their goods at that price, they ſell them away, and the Brokers haue two in the hundred of euery ſort of merchandiſe, and they are bound to make good the debts of thoſe goods, becauſe they bee ſold by their hands or meanes, and on their words, and oftentimes the Brokers.

A law for Bankrupts.

Euery man may ſtampe what money hee will.

Merchant knoweth not to whom he giueth his goods, yet he cannot loſe any thing thereby, for that the Broker is bound in any wiſe to pay him, and if the Merchant ſell his goods without the conſent of the Broker, yet neuertheleſſe hee muſt pay him two per cento, and bee in danger of his money: but this is very ſeldome ſeene, becauſe the Wife, Children and Slaues of the debtor are bound to the Creditor, and when his time is expired and paiment not made, the creditor may take the debtor and carrie him home to his houſe, and ſhut him vp in a Magaſin, whereby preſently hee hath his money, and not being able to pay the creditor, he may take the Wife, Children, and Slaues of the debtor, and ſell them, for ſo is the Law of that Kingdome. The currant money that is in this Citie, and throughout all this Kingdome is called Ganſa or Ganza, which is made of Copper and Lead: It is not the money of the King, but euerie man may ſtampe it that will, becauſe it hath his iuſt partition or value: but they make many of them falſe, by putting ouermuch lead into them, and thoſe will not paſſe, neither will any take them. With this money Ganza, you may buy Gold or Siluer, Rubies and Muske, and other things. For there is no other money currant amongſt them. And Gold, Siluer and other Merchandize are at one time dearer then another, as all other things bee.

How a man may diſpoſe himſelfe for the trade in Pegu.

Good inſtructions.

This Ganza goeth by weight of Byze, and this name of Byza goeth for the account of the weight, and commonly a Byza of a Ganza is worth (after our account) halfe a Ducket, litle more or leſſe: and albeit that Gold and Siluer is more or leſſe in price, yet the Byza neuer changeth: euerie Byza maketh a hundreth Ganza of weight, and ſo the number of the money is Byza. He that goeth to Pegu to buy Iewels, if hee will doe well, it behooueth him to bee a whole yeere there to doe his buſineſſe. For if ſo be that he would returne with the Ship he came in, hee cannot doe any thing ſo conueniently for the breuitie of the time, becauſe that when they cuſtome their goods in Pegu that come from Saint Tome in their ſhips, it is as it were about Chriſtmas: and when they haue cuſtomed their goods, then muſt they ſell them for their credits ſake for a moneth or two: and then at the beginning of March the ſhips depart. The Merchants that come from Saint Tome take for the paiment of their goods, Gold and Siluer, which is neuer wanting there. And eight or ten dayes before their departure they are all ſatisfied: alſo they may haue Rubies in paiment, but they make no account of them: and they that will Winter there for another yeere, it is needfull that they bee aduertized, that in the ſale of their goods, they ſpecifie in their bargaine, the terme of two or three moneths paiment, and that their paiment ſhall be in ſo many Ganza, and neither Gold nor Siluer: becauſe that with the Ganza they may buy and ſell euerie thing with great aduantage. And how needfull is it to be aduertized, when they will recouer their paiments, in what order they ſhall receiue their Ganza? Becauſe he that is not experienced may doe himſelfe great wrong in the weight of the Ganza, as alſo in the falſeneſſe of them: in the weight hee may bee greatly deceiued, becauſe that from place to place it doth riſe and fall greatly: and therefore when any will receiue money or make paiment, hee muſt take a publike weigher of money, a day or two before he goe about his buſineſſe, and giue him in paiment for his labour two Byzaes a moneth, and for this hee is bound to make good all your money, and to maintaine it for good, for that he receiueth it and ſeales the bags with his ſeale: and when he hath receiued any ſtore, then he cauſeth it to be brought into the Magaſon of the Merchant, that is the owner of it.

The Marchandizes that goe out of Pegu.

Idol-houſes couered with Gold.

That money is verie weightie, for fortie Byza is a ſtrong Porters burthen; and alſo where the Merchant hath any paiment to bee made for thoſe goods which hee buyeth, the Common weigher of money that receiueth his money muſt make the paiment thereof. So that by this meanes, the Merchant with the charges of two Byzes a moneth, receiueth and payeth out his money without loſſe or trouble. The Mercandizes that goe out of Pegu, are Gold, Siluer, Rubies, Saphires, Spinelles, great ſtore of Beniamin, long Pepper, Lead, Lacca, Rice, Wine, ſome Sugar, yet there might be great ſtore of Sugar made in the Countrey, for that they haue abundance of Canes, but they giue them to Eliphants to eate, and the people conſume great ſtore of them for food, and many more doe they conſume in vaine things, as theſe following. In that Kingdome they ſpend many of theſe Sugar-canes in making of Houſes and Tents which they call Varely for their Idols, which they call Pagodes, whereof there are great abundance, great and ſmall, and theſe houſes are made in forme of little Hils, like to Sugar-loaues or to Bels, and ſome of theſe houſes are as high as a reaſonable Steeple, at the foot they are verie large, ſome of them be in circuit a quarter of a mile. The ſaid houſes within are full of earth, and walled round about with Brickes and dirt in ſtead of lime, and without forme, from the top to the foot they make a couering for them with Sugar-canes, and plaiſter it with lime all ouer, for otherwiſe they would bee ſpoyled, by the great abundance of Raine that falleth in thoſe Countries. Alſo they conſume about theſe Varely or Idol-houſes great ſtore of leafe-gold, for that they ouerlay all the tops of the houſes with Gold, and ſome of them are couered with gold from the top to the foot: in couering whereof there is great ſtore of Gold ſpent, for that euery ten yeeres they new ouerlay them with gold, from the top to the foot, ſo that with this vanitie they ſpend great abundance of Gold. For euery ten yeeres the raine doth conſume the gold from theſe houſes. And by this meanes they make gold dearer in Pegu then it would bee, if they conſumed not ſo much in this vanitie. Alſo it is a thing to bee noted in the buying of Iewels in Pegu, that he that hath no knowledge ſhall haue as good Iewels, and as good cheape, as hee that hath beene practiſed there a long time, which is a good order, and it is in this wiſe. There are in Pegu foure men of good reputation, which are called Tareghe, or Brokers of Iewels. Theſe foure men haue all the Iewels or Rubies in their hands, and the Merchant that will buy commeth to one of theſe Tareghe and telleth him, that hee hath ſo much money to imploy in Rubies. For through the hands of theſe foure men paſſe all the Rubies; for they haue ſuch quantitie, that they know not what to doe with them, but ſell them at moſt vile and baſe prices. When the Merchant hath broken his mind to one of theſe Brokers or Tareghe, they carrie him home to one of their ſhops, although hee hath no knowledge in Iewels: and when the Iewellers perceiue that hee will employ a good round ſumme, they will make a bargaine, and if not, they let him alone. The vſe generally of this Citie is this; that when any Merchant hath bought any great quantitie of Rubies, and hath agreed for them, hee carrieth them home to his houſe, let them bee of what value they will, he ſhall haue ſpace to looke on them and peruſe them two or three dayes: and if hee hath no knowledge in them, he ſhall alwayes haue many Merchants in that Citie that haue very good knowledge in Iewels; with whom hee may alwayes conferre and take counſell, and may ſhew them vnto whom he will; and if he finde that he hath not employed his money well, he may returne his Iewels backe to them whom he had them of, without any loſſe at all. Which thing is ſuch a ſhame to the Tareghe to haue his Iewels returne, that he had rather beare a blow on the face then that it ſhould bee thought that he ſold them ſo deare to haue them returned. For theſe men haue alwayes great care that they affoord good penniworths, eſpecially to thoſe that haue no knowledge. This they doe, becauſe they would not loſe their credite: and when thoſe Merchants that haue knowledge in Iewels buy any, if they buy them deare, it is their owne faults and not the Brokers: yet it is good to haue knowledge in Iewels, by reaſon that it may ſomewhat eaſe the price. There is alſo a very good order which they haue in buying of Iewels, which is this; There are many Merchants that ſtand by at the making of the bargaine, and becauſe they ſhall not vnderſtand how the Iewels bee ſold, the Broker and the Merchants haue their hands vnder a cloth, and by touching of fingers & nipping the ioynts they know what is done, what is bidden, and what is asked. So that the ſtanders by know not what is demanded for them, although it be for a thouſand or ten thouſand Duckets. For euery ioynt and euery finger hath his ſignification. For if the Merchants that ſtand by ſhould vnderſtand the bargaine, it would breed great controuerſie amongſt them. And at my being in Pegu in the moneth of Auguſt, in Anno 1569. hauing gotten well by my endeuour, I was deſirous to ſee mine owne Countrey, and I thought it good to goe by the way of Saint Tome, but then I ſhould tarie vntill March.

Rubies exceeding cheape in Pegu.

An honeſt care of Heathen people.

Bargaines made with the nipping of fingers vnder a cloth.

In which journey I was counſailed, yea, and fully reſolued to goe by the way of Bengala, with a Ship there ready to depart for that voyage. And then wee departed from Pegu to Chatigan a great Harbour or Port, from whence there goe ſmall ſhips to Cochin, before the Fleet depart for Portugall, in which ſhips I was fully determined to goe to Lisbon, and ſo to Venice. When I had thus reſolued my ſelfe, I went a boord of the ſhip of Bengala, at which time it was the yeere of Touffon: concerning which Touffon you are to vnderſtand, that in the Eaſt Indies oftentimes, there are not ſtormes as in other Countries; but euery ten or twelue yeeres there are ſuch tempeſts and ſtormes, that it is a thing incredible, but to thoſe that haue ſeene it, neither doe they know certainly what yeere they will come.

This Touffon or Tuffon, is an extraordinary ſtorme at Sea.

Vnfortunate are they that are at Sea in that yeere and time of the Touffon, becauſe few there are that eſcape that danger. In this yeere it was our chance to bee at Sea with the like ſtorme, but it happened well vnto vs, for that our ſhip was newly ouer-plancked, and had not any thing in her ſaue victuall and balaſts, Siluer and Gold, which from Pegu they carrie to Bengala, and no other kind of Merchandize. This Touffon or cruel ſtorme endured three dayes and three nights: in which time it carried away our ſayles, yards, and rudder; and becauſe the ſhip laboured in the Sea, wee cut our Maſt ouer-boord: which when we had done, ſhee laboured a great deale more then before, in ſuch wiſe, that ſhe was almoſt full with water that came ouer the higheſt part of her and ſo went downe: and for the ſpace of three dayes and three nights, ſixtie men did nothing but hale water out of her in this wiſe, twentie men in one place, and twentie men in another place, and twentie in a third place: and for all this ſtorme, the ſhip was ſo good, that ſhe tooke not one iot of water below through her ſides, but all ranne downe through the hatches, ſo that thoſe ſixtie men did nothing but caſt the Sea into the Sea. And thus driuing too and fro as the wind and Sea would, wee were in a darke night about foure of the clocke caſt on a ſhold: yet when it was day, we could neither ſee Land on one ſide nor other, and knew not where we were. And as it pleaſed the Diuine power, there came a great waue of the Sea, which draue vs beyond the ſhold. And when wee felt the ſhip afloat, we roſe vp as men reuiued, becauſe the Sea was calme and ſmooth water, and then ſounding we found twelue fathom water, and within a while after wee had but ſixe fathom, and then preſently wee came to anker with a ſmall anker that was left vs at the ſterne, for all our other were loſt in the ſtorme: and by

The Touffon commeth but euery 10. or 12 yeeres.

A manifeſt token of the Ebbing and flowing in thoſe Countries.

and by the ſhip ſtrooke a ground, and then wee did prop her that ſhee ſhould not ouerthrow.

This Iland is called Sondiua

When it was day the ſhip was all drie, and wee found her a good mile from the Sea on drie land. This Touffon being ended, wee diſcouered an Iland not farre from vs, and we went from the ſhip on the ſands to ſee what Iland it was: and wee found it a place inhabited, and, to my iudgement the fertileſt Iland in all the world, the which is deuided into two parts by a channell which paſſeth betweene it, and with great trouble wee brought our ſhip into the ſame channell, which parteth the Iland at flowing water, and there we determined to ſtay fortie dayes to refreſh vs. And when the people of the Iland ſaw the ſhip, and that we were comming a land: preſently they made a place of Bazar or Market, with Shops right ouer againſt the ſhip with all manner of prouiſion of victuals to eate, which they brought downe in great abundance, and ſold it ſo good cheape, that wee were amazed at the cheapneſſe thereof. I bought many ſalted Kine there, for the prouiſion of the ſhip, for halfe a Larine a piece, which Larine may be twelue ſhillings ſixe pence, being very good and fatte; and foure wilde Hogges ready dreſſed for a Larine; great fat Hennes for a Bizze a piece, which is at the moſt a Penie: and the people told vs that we were deceiued the halfe of our money, becauſe we bought things ſo deare. Alſo a ſacke of fine Rice for a thing of nothing, and conſequently all other things for humaine ſuſtenance were there in ſuch abundance, that it is a thing incredible but to them that haue ſeene it.

Sondiua is the fruitfulleſt Countrey in all the world.

This Iland is called Sondiua belonging to the Kingdome of Bengala, diſtant one hundred and twentie miles from Chatigan, to which place we were bound. The people are Moores, and the King a very good man of a Moore King, for if he had bin a Tyrant as others bee, he might haue robbed vs of all, becauſe the Portugall Captaine of Chatigan was in armes againſt the Retor of that place, and euery day there were ſome ſlaine, at which newes wee reſted there with no ſmall feare, keeping good watch and ward aboord euery night as the vſe is, but the Gouernour of the Towne did comfort vs, and bad vs that we ſhould feare nothing, but that we ſhould repoſe our ſelues ſecurely without any danger, although the Portugals of Chatigan had ſlaine the Gouernour of that Citie, and ſaid that we were not culpable in that fact; and moreouer he did vs euery day what pleaſure he could, which was a thing contrarie to our expectations conſidering that they and the people of Chatigan were both ſubiects to one King.

Chatigan is a port in Bengala whither the Portugals goe with their ſhips.

The King of Rachim or Aracam, neighbour to Bengala.

Wee departed from Sondiua, and came to Chatigan the great Port of Bengala, at the ſame time when the Portugals had made peace and taken a truce with the Gouernours of the Towne, with this condition that the chiefe Captaine of the Portugals with his ſhip ſhould depart without any lading: for there were then at that time eighteen ſhips of Portugals great and ſmall. This Captaine being a Gentleman and of good courage, was notwithſtanding contented to depart to his greateſt hinderance, rather then he would ſeeke to hinder ſo many of his friends as were there, as alſo becauſe the time of the yeere was ſpent to goe to the Indies. The night before hee departed, euery ſhip that had any lading therein, put it aboord of the Captaine to helpe to eaſe his charge and to recompence his courteſies. In this time there came a meſſenger from the King of Rachim to this Portugall Captaine, who ſaid in the behalfe of his King, that hee had heard of the courage and valour of him, deſiring him gently that hee would vouchſafe to come with the ſhip into his Port, and comming thither he ſhould be very well intreated. This Portugall went thither and was very well ſatisfied of this King.

* Or, Aracam.

He made another voyage to Pegu here omitted.

This King of Rachim hath his ſeate in the middle coaſt betweene Bengala and Pegu, and the greateſt enemie he hath is the King of Pegu: which King of Pegu deuiſeth night and day how to make this King of Rachim his ſubiect, but by no meanes hee is able to doe it: becauſe the King of Pegu hath no power or armie by Sea. And this King of * Rachim may arme two hundreth Gallies or Fuſts by Sea, and by land hee hath certaine Sluces with the which when the King of Pegu pretendeth any harme towards him, hee may at his pleaſure drowne a great part of the Countrey. So that by this meanes hee cutteth off the way whereby the King of Pegu ſhould come with his power to hurt him.

Now to returne to my voyage, when I came to Ormus, I found there Maſter Francis Berettin of Venice, and we fraighted a Barke together to goe for Baſora for ſeuentie Duckets, and with vs there went other Merchants, which did eaſe our fraight, and very commodiouſly wee came to Baſora, and there we ſtayed fortie daies for prouiding a Carouan of Barkes to goe to Babilon, becauſe they vſe not to goe two or three Barkes at once, but fiue and twentie or thirtie, becauſe in the night they cannot goe, but muſt make them faſt to the bankes of the Riuer, and then wee muſt make a very good and ſtrong guard, and bee well prouided of armour, for reſpect and ſafegard of our goods, becauſe the number of Theeues is great that come to ſpoile and rob the Merchants.

An order how to prouide to goe ouer the Deſert from Babilon to Alepo.

And when we depart for Babilon wee goe a little with our ſayle, and the voyage is eight and thirtie or fortie dayes long but we were fiftie daies on it. When we came to Babilon we ſtayed there foure moneths, vntill the Carouan was readie to goe ouer the Wilderneſſe or Deſert for Alepo; in this Citie we were ſixe Merchants that accompanied together, fiue Venetians and a Portugall; whoſe names were as followeth, Meſſer Florinaſa with one of his kinſmen, Meſſer Andrea de Polo, the Portugall, and Maſter Francis Berettin and I, and ſo we furniſhed our ſelues with victuals and Beanes for our horſes for fortie dayes; and wee bought Horſes and Mules, for that they be very good cheape there. I my ſelfe bought a Horſe there for eleuen Akens, and ſold him after in Alepo for thirtie Duckets. Alſo we bought a Tent which did vs very great pleaſure: we had alſo amongſt vs two and thirtie Camels laden with Merchandiſe: for the which wee paid two Duckets for euery Camels lading, and for euery ten Camels they made eleuen, for ſo is their vſe and cuſtome. We take alſo with vs three men to ſerue vs in the voyage, which are vſed to goe in thoſe voyages for fiue Duckets a man, and are bound to ſerue vs to Alepo: ſo that we paſſed very well without any trouble: when the Camels cryed out to reſt, our Pauilion was the firſt that was erected. The Carouan maketh but ſmall iournies about twentie miles a day, and they ſet forwards euerie morning before day two houres, and about two in the afternoone they ſit downe. We had great good hap in our voyage, for that it rained: for which cauſe we neuer wanted water, but euery day found good water, ſo that wee could not take any hurt for want of water. Yet we carried a Camell laden alwaies with water for euery good reſpect that might chance in the Deſert, ſo that we had no want neither of one thing nor other that was to be had in the Countrey. For we came very well furniſhed of euerie thing, and euerie day we eate freſh Mutton, becauſe there came many Shepheards with vs with their flocks, who kept thoſe ſheepe that wee bought in Babilon, and euerie Merchant marked his ſheepe with his owne marke, and we gaue the ſhepheards a Medin, which is two pence of our money, for the keeping and feeding our ſheepe on the way, and for killing of them. And beſide the Medin they haue the Heads, the Skinnes, and the intrals of euerie ſheepe they kill. Wee ſixe bought twentie ſheepe, and when we came to Alepo we had ſeuen aliue of them. And in the Carouan they vſe this order, that the Merchants doe lend fleſh one to another, becauſe they will not carrie raw fleſh with them, but pleaſure one another by lending one one day, and another another day.

36. Daies iourney ouer the Wilderneſſe.

From Babilon to Alepo is fortie daies iourney, of the which they make ſixe and thirtie daies ouer the Wilderneſſe, in which ſixe and thirtie dayes they neither ſee Houſe, Trees nor people that inhabite it, but onely a Plaine, and no ſigne of any way in the world. The Pilots goe before, and the Carouan followeth after. And when they ſit downe, all the Carouan vnladeth and ſitteth downe, for they know the ſtations where the wells are. I ſay, in ſixe and thirtie dayes we paſſe ouer the Wilderneſſe. For when we depart from Babilon two dayes wee paſſe by Villages inhabited vntill we haue paſſed the Riuer Euphrates. And then within two dayes of Alepo wee haue villages inhabited. In this Carouan there goeth alway a Captaine that doth Iuſtice vnto all men: and euery night they keepe watch about the Carouan, and comming to Alepo we went to Tripoli, whereas Maſter Florin, and Maſter Andrea Polo, and I, with a Frier, went and hired a Barke to goe with vs to Ieruſalem. Departing from Tripolie, wee arriued at Iaffa: from which place in a day and a halfe we went to Ieruſalem, and wee gaue order to our Barke to tarie for vs vntill our returne. Wee ſtayed in Ieruſalem fourteene dayes, to viſit thoſe holy places: from whence we returned to Iaffa, and from Iaffa to Tripolie, and there we ſhipped our ſelues in a ſhip of Venice called the Bagazzana: And by the helpe of the Diuine power, we arriued ſafely in Venice the fifth of Nouember 1581. I will not bee vnmindfull to put them in remembrance, that haue a deſire to goe into thoſe parts, how they ſhall keepe their goods, and giue them to their heires at the time of their death, and how this may be done very ſecurely. In all the Cities that the Portugals haue in the Indies, there is a Houſe called the ſchoole of Sancta miſericordia comiſſaria: the Gouernours whereof, if you giue them for their paines, will take a copie of your Will and Teſtament, which you muſt alwayes carrie about you; and chieflie when you goe into the Indies. In the Countrey of the Moores and Gentiles, in thoſe voyages alwaies there goeth a Captaine to adminiſter Iuſtice to all Chriſtians of the Portugals. Alſo this Captaine hath authoritie to recouer the goods of thoſe Merchants that by chance die in thoſe voyages, and they that haue not made their Wills and regiſtred them in the aforeſaid Schooles, the Captaines will conſume their goods in ſuch wiſe, that little or nothing will be left for their heires and friends. Alſo there goeth in theſe ſame voyages ſome Merchants that are Commiſſaries of the Schoole of Sancta miſericordia, that if any Merchant die and haue his Will made, and hath giuen order that the Schoole of Miſericordia ſhall haue his goods and ſell them, then they ſend the money by exchange to the Schoole of Miſericordia in Lisbon, with that copie of his Teſtament, then from Lisbon they giue intelligence thereof, into what part of Chiſtendome ſoeuer it be, and the heires of ſuch a one comming thither, with teſtimoniall that they bee heires, they ſhall receiue there the value of his goods: in ſuch wiſe that they ſhall not loſe any thing. But they that die in the Kingdome of Pegu loſe the third part of their goods by ancient cuſtome of the Countrey, that if any Chriſtian dieth in the Kingdome of Pegu, the King and his Officers reſt heires of a third of his goods, and there hath neuer beene any deceit or fraud vſed in this matter. I haue knowne many rich men that haue dwelled in Pegu, and in their age they haue deſired to goe into their owne Countrey to die there, and haue departed with all their goods and ſubſtance without let or trouble.

An order how to prouide for the going to Ieruſalem.

The Author returneth to Venice, 1581.

A very good order that they haue in thoſe Countries for the recouering of the goods of the dead.

Order of Apparell in Pegu.

In Pegu the faſhion of their apparell is all one, as well the Nobleman, as the ſimple: the onely difference is in the fineneſſe of the Cloth, which is cloth of Bombaſt one finer then another, and they weare their apparell in this wiſe: Firſt, a white Bombaſt cloth which ſerueth for a ſhirt, then they gird another painted Bombaſt cloth, of fourteene braces, which they bind vp betwixt their legs, and on their heads they weare a ſmall Tocke of three braces, made in guiſe of a Myter, and ſome goe without Tockes, and carrie (as it were) a Hiue on the heads, which doeth not paſſe the lower part of his eare, when it is lifted vp: they goe all bare-footed, but the Noblemen neuer goe on foot, but are carried by men in a ſeate with great reputation, with a Hat made of the leaues of a tree to keepe him from the Raine and Sunne, or otherwiſe they ride on horſebacke with their feet bare in the ſtirrops. All ſorts of women whatſoeuer they be, weare a ſmocke downe to the girdle, and from the girdle downewards to the foot they weare a cloth of three braces, open before, ſo ſtraight that they cannot goe, but they muſt ſhew their ſecret as it were aloft, and in their going they faigne to hide it with their hand, but they cannot by reaſon of the ſtraightneſſe of their cloth. They ſay that this vſe was inuented by a Queene to be an occaſion that the ſight thereof might remoue from men the vices againſt nature, which they are greatly giuen vnto: which ſight ſhould cauſe them to regard women the more. Alſo the women goe bare-footed, their armes laden with hoopes of Gold and Iewels: And their fingers full of precious Rings, with their haire rolled vp about their heads. Many of them weare a cloth about their ſhoulders in ſtead of a Cloake.

Chap. V.

Gasparo Balbi his Voyage to Pegu, and obſeruations there, gathered out of his owne Italian Relation.

ANno 1579. on the thirteenth of December Gaſparo Balbi a Ieweller of Venice trauelled with the Carauan from Aleppo towards Bagdet and the Eaſt Indies: the firſt day came to Bebbe, the ſecond to Saguir, the third to Bir, or Albir on the banke of Euphrates on the left hand, and there embarked their goods for Felugia. They ſtayed till the eleuenth of Ianuarie in cold and ſnowe to expect fiue other Barkes. Theſe Barkes of Albir are double keeled or botomed to preuent harmes. On the twelfth they came to Tellenini much afflicted with winde, ſnowe and cold. Thence to Matao Lantache on the right hand: and ſo on to Calatelnegiur a diſhabited Caſtle, to Zoxeniaſir, to Miſeraſi, to Blis (many dangerous ſhelues and trunkes of trees are in that dayes way) to Meliolzura, to Chalagiabar, to Elaman, to Suriech, to Raccha, to Elamora, to Aman, to Auagia Abulena, to Caſabi, to Celibi, the ruinous Caſtle Zelebe, and the ſame day halfe an houre together vnder mountainous beetlebrowed ouerlookers threatning to fall on them, many ſtones whereof lying falne in the water made it more dreadfull (the Mountaine is called Eltoreſtrouil) and the next day came to two Falls or Precipices cauſed by the ſtones carried thither from that ouerhanging Hills ruines, ſo heightning the water, that the Fall was ten cubits, euery one there making his prayer for a good Voyage. At night they came to Elder on the right hand of the Riuer, anciently called Port of the Chaine, in which was a Turkiſh Saniak and Cadi, goodly men and fairer women then in the reſt of thoſe parts. Thence to Muacheſir, to Elpiſara, the Riuer Cabur falling into Euphrates (comming from Merdin) of reddiſh colour, to Rahabi, to Zoxoſuldan, to Siara, to Gorur, and then vnder a Mountaine hollowed by the courſe of the water, called Carteron, minacing a downfall vpon vs, made the more fearefull by a threefold fiſſure and manifold ruines of ſtones; which paſſed in a quarter of an houre, they came to Sora a Caſtle neere to a great ruined Citie diſhabited on the left hand ſeeming to them greater then Cairo; the Mariners affirmed that they had heard their Progenitors tell, that there had beene in it three hundred ſixty and ſixe Gates; it is called Elerſi, and rowing downe the ſtreame with foure Oares from morning to noone, we hardly paſſed beyond one ſide thereof. Thence to Anga another ruined Citie, with many Mills, whereby it appeareth that Euphrates hath now a larger chanell then in thoſe times. Next was Chaime, and neere it an Engine to throwe water into a chanell to water the fields; to Sema, to Carpilchelbi, to Fochelcurmi, to Edir, to Rechtalmel, to Zaſara, beyond which are ſtraight paſſages, and a Sepulchre which they held in veneration, and each Mariner threw in a Bisket ſuperſtitiouſly to preuent Shipwracke: to Elcuxi, to Elmeſetana, to Caſtle Anna, neere to which in Diana, Aboriſe an Arabian Lord liueth; to the Ile Anatelbes; after dangerous paſſages to Beggian another Ile full of Date trees, to Cabin, to Sberie, to Zouia, to Giera, Germa, Benexi, Dulетgidit, then to two Ilands nameleſſe being newly made by the Riuer, to Zibida, Vraſa, Fuochelbera, Abuſabur, Aditi (in which an Arabike Saniak keepeth to Zezirnalus, to Giuba, (reſidence of a Saniak) to Nauſa, to Eit, neere to which is a boiling Fountaine of Pitch, wherewith the Inhabitants build their houſes, daubing it on boughes cut from trees, ſo that they may ſeeme rather of Pitch then Wood, euery one taking what him pleaſeth freely; and if the ouerflowing Euphrates ſhould not carrie away the Pitch throwne into the field where it ariſeth, they ſay there would be hills raiſed by it. that a Boat in Bir coſting fiue and twenty Duckets in Eit or Felugia is not worth aboue fiue. Following their Voyage they came to Caraguol, the Inhabitants whereof ſpeake Arabike, Turkiſh and Perſian. To water their fields they vſe abundance of ſkin-bottles (faſtned to a chaine with cords) drawne vp by Oxen in a Mill (as in the Water-houſe at London) which empty themſelues into water-paſſages. Theſe mens Religion is reputed a Gallimaufrey or Hereſie. On the one and twentieth of Februarie they arriued at Felugia. On the foure and twentieth at Sunne-riſing they paſſed a Bridge ouer a Streame which runneth when the water is high from Euphrates to Tigris, and came at noone to the ruines of a Citie called Sendia, and then halfe an houre after to the beginnings of old Babylon, and going along by the ſame, at night came to Nareiſa, midway from Felugia to Bagdet, a place perilous for Robbers and Lions. Before Sun-riſing next day we trauelled againe alongſt thoſe ruines leauing them on the left hand, ſeeing pieces of great walls ruined, and one piece of the great Tower of Babylon, till comming to Maſcadon they ſaw the Towers of Bagdet or new Babylon. From Felugia thither the ſoyle ſeemes good, yet neither is there Tree or greene Graſſe, Houſe or Caſtle: but Muſhromes ſo good that the Moores eate them raw. They were nine and forty dayes from Bir to Bagdet by reaſon of the Winter.

The thirteenth of March, 1580. they departed from Bagdet towards Balſara, embarked in the Tigris, a Riuer ſeeming like Nilus, not ſo endangered with ſhelues and bodies of trees as Euphrates. At Elmaca the Riuer is diuided into two, one running after into Euphrates, the other to Balſara. The Inhabitants on the right hand are Arabs, on the left Gurgi. On the eighteenth they came to Gher. There are many Lions, and Arab Theeues. There are alſo many keepers of Oxen, Sheepe and Goats. Thence to Encaſerami, where each Mariner caſt in a Biſket for deuotion to a holy man there buried. Hitherto both in Euphrates and Tigris they had good aire; but there they began to haue an ill ſent of the Riuer, very noiſome, and they were in the night endangered with a kinde of whirlepoole, and were faine to call to their conſorts which towed them out. The next day they came to Caſale, a Saniaks reſidence, where the Perſian Riuer Maroan diſemboqueth. Heere the Tide was firſt encountred out of the Perſian Gulfe. A little beyond at Calaetel they faſten their Barkes when the Tide ariſeth, which otherwiſe could force them backe. The Champaines are well inhabited. They entred Corno, and a little beyond encountred a piece of Euphrates ioyning with Tigris, where abide many Souldiers with a Saniak to preuent theeues, which by hundreds in a companie vſe to robbe. Here the Riuer (which in ſome places had beene like Brent) was as large as Nilus, and well inhabited. At certaine times it is here ſo hote that many die thereof: and in this Voyage foure perſons wearied with heate and trauell ſate downe to refreſh themſelues a while, and were ouercome by a hote winde which ſtrangled them all foure. The one and twentieth they arriued at Balſara.

The Authors Voyage from Balſara to Ormus, Diu, Goa, Cochin, Cananor, Seilan, Negapatan, I omit, and will firſt welcome him to Saint Thome.

On the nine and twentieth of May, 1582. in the name of Chriſt wee ſet ſayle, directing our Prow towards the North to auoide certaine ſhelues which are very perilous; we ſaw many Fiſhers, which tooke great ſtore of fiſh, which they eate with Rice. All that night we ſayled with a South winde Northerly. About three of the clocke the next morning we came to a place which is called the Seuen Pagods, vpon which are eight pleaſant hillockes not very high, which are ſeuen leagues from Saint Thomas, right ouer againſt it, where wee arriued about noone the thirtieth of May, ſaluting it with three Peeces of Ordnance. The Citie of Saint Thomas is ſo called of the Reliques of that Saint, which are kept here with great veneration; it is ſcituated in 13. degrees and a third part. The Front is towards the Weſt, very ſtrong by reaſon of the Blocke-houſes, which are vpon the Port, along towards the Sea, this Port is ſo low that Elephants cannot enter in at it, for the Horſes enter with not a little trouble. There are three Churches: one very faire, of Saint Thomas, which is well ſerued with Prieſts, the chiefe of them is a Vicar (for ſo they call him) who was ſent thither by the Archbiſhop of Goa. There is another of Saint Francis, very wel ſerued with Capuchins: and another of Saint Iohn the Baptiſt, where the Fathers of Saint Paul of the Companie of Ieſus, are in continuall prayer; to build this they had not ſo many tranſomes as were ſufficient, when miraculouſly a great piece of timber was caſt vp by the Sea, which ſeemed to be made by the line and meaſure of that Church. I was here when this piece of timber was caſt vp; for one day going to Maſſe to the Church of our Lady, I ſaw great concourſe of people running to the Sea-ſide, and I went alſo to ſee what was the matter, and ſaw this piece of timber caſt vpon the ſhoare. Then the Church of Saint Iohn Baptiſt was finiſhed, but becauſe they wanted tranſomes to make the roofe they couered it with ſtraw. This was held for a great miracle, that ſo great a piece of timber ſhould bee caſt vp by the Sea, the point lay towards the Quire of the Church. Moreouer, when they ſawed this piece of wood, they perceiued in the outſide of it, as alſo within it a ſtinke of * Oaſe, ſo that they could not come neere * it: whereupon they iudged, that it was cauſed by the abundance of water, wherewith it was inuolued in the Sea, and that it came from ſome farre Countrie. But after a while they ſet it on end; and now it is ſo hard, that the Portugals may make vſe of it. The foreſaid Fathers of Saint Paul haue another Church in the Citie, dedicated to Our Lady, where they baptiſe the Gentiles, and exhort and inſtruct them them in matters of Faith. There is another Church called Our Lady of Light, which is ſerued by Saint Thomas his Prieſts; but it is three miles out of the Towne. There is alſo another called Our Lady of the Mount, and another of the Croſſe, here is alſo the Church of Mercy; out of the Towne there is one of Saint Lazarus, and many others well ſerued. Saint Thomas is as faire a Citie as I ſaw any in that Countrie, and the houſes ioyne one to the other, ſo to be able to ſuccour one another. Without the Citie of Saint Thomas is another Citie enuironed with walls, made of earth, and inhabited with Gentiles Souldiers, whoſe Chieftaine is called Adicario, who hath power to execute iuſtice. They obſerue the cuſtome to burne their Dead in this Citie, as at Negapaton; but neere to this is a Citie called La Caſta de gli Orefici, Goldſmiths rowe; they haue a cuſtome when the Husband is dead, to make a pit in the earth, and there to place the dead corps croſſe-legged; and on the other ſide ſet his liuing Wife in the ſame manner, and their kindred caſt earth vpon her, preſsing her downe, that ſhee may die alſo; and when they wiue, they marrie with their Comperes, as a Carpenter takes the daughter of a Carpenter, and ſo of others. The foreſaid Inhabitants worſhip ſometimes the figure of a Kow, and otherwhiles of a Serpent called Bittia di Cappella, whoſe biting is deadly, and it hath one part of the fleſh from the middle inuerted towards the head.

The Bramins are wont to burne Kowes excrements, and with the aſhes for deuotion meeting with the Gentiles to dawbe their forehead and noſe; who ſo painted waſh not that day for deuotion of the Kow. The men which are deuoted to the Pagod or Statue, after they haue liued a whole yeere after their will in carnall pleaſures, are wont to take a Bowe and an Arrowe, and ſhoot their owne fleſh aloft in the aire, which they ſlaſh off in morſels, and when they can continue no longer in this manner, they cut their owne throat, thus ſacrificing their body to the Pagod. There are ſome alſo which are called Amocchi, who are a kinde of people called Chiani, and are not of thoſe Gentiles of Saint Thomas, but of the Coaſt of Chiaua, who being weary of liuing, ſet themſelues in the way with a weapon in their hands, which they call a Criſe, and kill as many as they meete with, till ſome body killeth them; and this they doe for the leaſt anger they conceiue, as deſperate men. Theſe Gentiles are very different in their adoration, for ſome worſhip the image of a Man, ſome of a Kow, others of Serpents; others the Sunne, or the Moone, ſome a Tree or the Water, and other things. They are acquſtomed to celebrate many Feaſts; but in the moneth of Septemb. I ſaw one: the people planted a tree in the ground like the Maſt of a ſhip, with the Main-yard acroſſe, vpon which Main-yard were two hooks faſtned: and there are many which deſire to free themſelues from ſome trouble or miſery, who make a vow to the Pagod, to hooke or ganch themſelues; and for this there are ſome deputed that ſtand there, who ſeeing any that will ganch themſelues for deuotion, they firſt make an offering, and then they looſen a cord and let downe the hookes, and with them they faſten the ſhoulders of him that will hooke himſelfe, and then they hoiſe him vp aloft, making him turne his face to the Pagod, and ſalute it three times with his hands in ſuppliant wiſe before his breaſt, and make him play with a weapon, which hee carrieth in his hands while he is in drawing vp: and after a while they let him downe, and colour the tree with his bloud, ſaying they doe it in reuerence to the Pagod; and then they let him downe, and put a rope thorow the holes which the hookes made, and faſtning that cord to the Pagod, they draw him by little and little to the Statue by that cord; then the women of the Pagod conduct him to the Statue to reuerence it, and after this they take care to heale him if they can. And thus they doe by a vow or promiſe to the Pagod to obtaine any thing, or in ſickneſſe to recouer health. They haue another Feaſt by night which dureth eight nights in a long ſtreet of the Citie full of lights on both ſides, and three or foure perſons take one another by the hands, who haue on their armes certaine baskets full of viands made of Rice and Milke, and then they runne and caſt that meate behind them, which they ſay the Deuill eats who runnes behind them, and while they are in this motion they neuer looke behind them; for they ſay, if they doe, they ſhall ſuddenly die: and this is ſufficient for the mad cuſtomes of this Countrie.

Negrais.

On the thirteenth of September, 1583. in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, after wee had laded our merchandiſe, and payd our Cuſtomes, we went a ſhipboord; And hauing ſailed vntill the three and twentieth of this moneth, we found our ſelues neere to Maccareo, it is very ſtrange which is reported of the ebbings and flowings of the water, and certainly he which hath not ſeene them will ſcarcely beleeue them; Certaine Pilots goe from Martouan, as ſwift as an Arrow in the encreaſing of the water, as long as the Floud laſteth, and the Tide being at the height, they turne out of the chanell, and there ride; when the water is fallen on drie land; and the bore or tide comes as ſome great tree: and in ſuch a time they oppoſe the Prow againſt it, and ſo expect the furie of the water, which reſembleth the noiſe of a great Earthquake; ſo that maugre their ſtrength and skill the Barke is waſhed from head to ſtearne, and with that violence is carried ſwiftly into the chanell. After that, the winde blew from the South-weſt, and wee ſailed to the North-weſt, till the morning, when we found our ſelues at Bara, right ouer Negrais (they call ſo in their language the Hauen which goeth into Pegu) where wee diſcouered on the left ſide of the Riuer a Pagod or Varella all gilded ouer, which is ſeene afarre off by the veſſels that come from the Maine, and eſpecially when the Sunne ſhines, which makes it gliſter round about as farre as it is ſeene. And becauſe the raine waſheth it often and conſumeth the gold, the men of that place often regild it, that the ſhips by the ſplendor thereof may haue this benefit, to know the Hauen: and they doe it for deuotion and reuerence to the place. Wee then all reioyced at that time, and made merrie; becauſe we conſidered that if we had arriued there foure or fiue dayes later we could not haue entred the Hauen by reaſon of the continual winds which blowe there with great furie. Then caſting anchor, to expect the floud, ſo to ſhunne ſome Rockes which are vnder the water: we ſaw a place very curiouſly adorned with Bowers and a Church (where the Talipois reſide, which are there as the Friers with vs) where the people of this Countrie aſſemble to pray. It is reported that in this place there are abundance of Tigres which deuoure the men and beaſts of the Countrie. On the foure and twentieth of September, there came a little Barke neere vs called a Salangara, whereby the Captaine of our ſhip ſent a Portugall with a preſent to the King, to giue him notice of our arriuall, and the euening following wee drew neere to the Iland of Flies, ſo called of the multitudes of them there cauſed from the abundance of fiſh there ſalted, wherewith alſo we furniſhed our ſhip. In the meane time the ſhip went to Coſmi, to the Lord of the Countrie, who ſent twenty Boats with eight Oares a piece, and a royall Almadie, which is a certaine long Barke, rowed with many Oares, and it beganne to put forth, and two dayes after the Lord of Coſmi came together with the ſhip, who preſented our Mooriſh Captaine with great faire Hennes, of a very good taſte, and many Oranges, which growe in great quantitie in the Countrie. The ſaid Lord was rowed in a Barke made very fantaſtically, it was of the length of a Foiſt; but ſo narrow that in the middle it ſeemed not to be aboue one pace ouer, at the head and ſtearne it was as narrow as our Gondolos; but it was very high, and there were more then an hundred Rowers, which rowe at the ſide with an hundred Oares like ſtickes, and they did obſerue in their rowing to draw the water towards them all together by reaſon of foure Trumpeters, which ſound when they ſhould rowe, and ſit in the middle of the Barke; the Signior was in a high Cabbin made in the middle of the Boat couered after the manner of the middle part of a Gondolo, but greater, with a Port before to ſhut, and open as he pleaſeth.

Coſmi.

Now the fift of October we came to Coſmi, whoſe Territories on both ſides are woody, and frequented with Parrots, Tigres, wilde Boares, Apes, and ſuch like creatures. Coſmi is ſeated in 16. degrees and a third part, and hath the houſes made of great Indian canes, and couered with ſtraw, fronted towards the North-eaſt, ſcituate in a very fine place, but ſubiect to the rauening of Tigres, which often enter into the Towne, and catch men and beaſts, and deuoure them; but this they doe in the night, for they abide in the Woods all day.

Dangerous Tigres.

Wee departed from Coſmi the ſixe and twentieth of Octocter, with a little Paro, which is to ſay, a voyage Barke, hauing committed our merchandiſe to the Guardian of the great Paro, and ſayling down the Riuer, at euen we arriued at a Village on the left hand of the Riuer called Pain Perlon; and about three of the clocke the next morning at Marma Mala, and about the euening before a great Citie on the left hand of the Riuer called Iaccubel; and an houre after at another on the right ſide called Tegiatden. The morning following we came to a place called Balatin, where they make Pots and Iarres of excellent fine earth, and a little after we ſaw Dian a fertile Countrie, plentifull in timber both for Houſes, Ships, and Barkes, where they haue certaine veſſels like Galeaſſes, which haue on both ſides from head to ſterne Cabbins with diuers merchandiſes, and in the middle in ſtead of the Maſt there is a houſe like ours, ſo that within them they traffique for ſtore of Muske, Beniamin, and diuers Iewels. On the nine an twentieth day we ſaw the Land of Bedogiamana, Lagapala, and Purdabui, and the euening wee came to a great Countrie called Gungiebui, where wee tarried with great feare of being aſſaulted by theeues, who vnder the ſhew of friendſhip betray diſperſed paſſingers; and in like manner we auoyded the danger of the multitude of Tigres, which in theſe parts aſſaile men, and deſtroy as many as they can get. For this cauſe we ſtrengthned our ſelues in the middle of the Riuer; yet they report, that the fierceneſſe of this creature is ſuch that he will prey in the water. The day following wee went in a narrow Riuer like our Brent by Padua, which is ſhadowed with Palme trees that growe in great abundance in both ſides of the Riuer; there is the great Citie of Coilan, which is a league long on each ſide, which being a perfect ſquare make twelue of our miles. After that, we came by another Citie called Tuuaguedan, where are many Pagods and Statues; and at euening we arriued at Leungon a very faire Citie, ſeated in a pleaſant Territorie, repleniſhed with Palme trees: parting from thence after wee had ſeene many buildings on both ſides of the Riuer: about morning we came to a great populous Citie called Siluanſedi, and at euening before another called Moggio, where were infinite ſtore of great and ſmall veſſels, all couered from head to ſterne with ſtraw, within which are the families of one houſe, ſo that they ſerue for conuenient habitations, they vſe to drinke in them hot waters made of Rice, as ſtrong as our Aquauitæ, theſe Barkes ſell freſh fiſh, and ſalted and dreſſed in diuers faſhions, and other ſorts of prouiſion, ſo that along that Riuer, to the mouth of the Sea, which is freſh water, they may ſayle without carrying any victuals, but only money to ſpend. The ſecond of Nouember we came to the Citie of Dala, where beſides other things are ten large roomes full of Elephants: which are kept there by diuers ſeruants of the King of Pegu. The day following we came to the faire Citie of Dogon, it is finely ſeated, and fronted towards the Southweſt, and where they land are twenty long ſteps, as from the Pillar of Saint Marke to the Straw-bridge, the matter of them is ſtrong and great pieces of timber, and there are great currents of water both at ebbe and floud, becauſe it is a place neere Maccareo, which entreth and goeth out of the mouth of Sirian, which is a Sea-port: and alwaies when the water encreaſeth, they goe vpon the Staires: and when it is ebbe, it diſcouers all about, and makes it a great way drie land. On both ſides the Riuer, at the end of the banke, or at the ſtaires, is a woodden Tigre, very great, and painted after the naturall colour of a Tigre; and there are two others in the midſt of the ſtaires, ſo farre one from another, that they ſeeme to ſhare the ſtaires equally. They ſtand with open mouth, ſhewing their teeth and tongue, with their clawes lifted vp and ſtretched forth, prepared to aſſaile him that lookes on them. Concerning theſe they told mee a fooliſh beliefe which they haue, that they ſtand there to guard, for if any ſhould be ſo bold to diſpleaſe the Pagod, thoſe Tigres ſhould defend him, for he would giue them life. After we were landed we began to goe on the right hand in a large ſtreet about fifty paces broad, in which wee ſaw woodden houſes gilded, and adorned with delicate gardens after their cuſtome, wherein their Talapois, which are their Friers, dwell, and looke to the Pagod, or Varella of Dogon. The left ſide is furniſhed with Portals and Shops, very like the new Procuratia at Venice: and by this ſtreet they goe towards the Varella, for the ſpace of a good mile ſtraight forwards, either vnder painthouſes, or in the open ſtreet, which is free to walke in. When we came at the Varella, we found a paire of ſtaires of ninety ſteps, as long in my iudgement as the chanell of the Rialto at Venice. At the foot of the firſt ſtaire are two Tigres, one at the right hand, and the other at the left, theſe are of ſtone, and ſtand in the ſame faſhion that they doe on the ſhoare-ſide. The ſtaires are diuided into three, the firſt is forty ſteps, the ſecond thirty, and the third twenty, and at the top of each of them is a plaine ſpacious place. On the laſt ſtep are Angels of ſtone, each with three Crowns one vpon the other; but ſo, that that which is vndermoſt is the greateſt, and that which is next leſſer then that, yet greater then the vppermoſt, which is the leaſt. They haue the right hand lifted vp, ready to giue the benediction, with two fingers ſtretched out. The other hand of the one is layd vpon the head of a Childe, and of the other vpon the head of an Ape; thoſe Statues are all of ſtone. At the right hand is a Varella gilded in a round forme, made of ſtone, and as much in compaſſe as the ſtreete before the Venetian Palace, if it were round: and the height may equall Saint Markes Bell-tower, not the top of it, but the little Pinnaces. At the left hand is a faire Hall carued and gilded within and without. And this is the place of deuotion, whither the people goe to heare the Talapois preach: the ſtreete is greater then Saint Markes, at the leaſt larger. And this is a place of great deuotion amongſt them, and yeerely multitudes of people come by Sea and by Land. And when they celebrate a ſolemne Feaſt, the King in perſon goeth before them all, and with him the Queene, the Prince, and his other ſonnes, with a great traine of Nobles and others, who goe to get a pardon. And on this day there is a great Mart where are all ſorts of merchandiſes which are current in thoſe Countries, which they frequent in great multitudes, which come thither not ſo much for deuotion as traffique, and wee may freely goe thither if wee will. Round about this and vpon another Varella were Apes running vp and downe, the great and ſmall ſtaires alſo are full of them. After wee had ſeene this, at the foot of the firſt ſtaire when I went downe I turned my face to the left ſide, and with ſome Portugals which were in my companie found in a faire Hall a very large Bell, which we meaſured, and found to be ſeuen paces and three hand bredths, and it is full of Letters from the top to the bottome, and ſo neere together that one toucheth the other, they are very well and neatly made: but there was no Nation that could vnderſtand them, no not the men of Pegu, and they remember not whence, nor how it came thither.

Sirian.

At the euening about one of the clocke at night wee went from this place, and about three we came among ſome Fiſhers Nets, which almoſt ſhipwrackt vs, as they did one of our companie, who being entangled in them went vnder them, and ſo was ſunke, and this was through the negligence of ſome Fiſhers, who when they lay forth ſuch Nets, ought to haue a barke with a light or fire all the night to giue warning to Saylers, that they come not on that ſide. But praiſed be God, we freed our ſelues in the beſt manner we could; that day after the Sunne was vp wee arriued ouer againſt the mouth of Sirian, which is on the South ſide, where with ſome difficulty we landed, for the violence of the water drew vs into Maccareo. Sirian was an Imperiall Citie, where an Emperour reſided, the Walls and Bulwarkes are ruined, by which one may ſee that it hath beene very ſtrong, and almoſt impregnable: but Anno 1567. it was ſubdued by the King of Pegu, who to take it ſent a million and an halfe of men; and after he had beſieged it two yeeres with the loſſe of halfe a million of his men, he tooke it by treaſon. Which when the Emperour vnderſtood he poiſoned himſelfe, and the reſt of his familie were carried away priſoners vpon Elephants, who returned in great numbers laden with Gold, Iewels, and other precious things: departing from Sirian we followed our Voyage, ſeeing many inhabiſed Townes called by diuers names. Finally we came to a place called Meccao, where we diſimbarqued to goe by land to Pegu, being about twelue miles. Ouer againſt Meccao are certaine habitations where the King of Pegu was then for his diſport, who cauſeth there beautifull gilded veſſels to be made, beſeeming ſuch a King. From Coſmi to Meccao we were eleuen dayes in our Voyage, ſayling alwaies by Riuers of freſh water, which ebbe and flowe, and on both ſides there are houſes and habitations made vpon piles planted in the earth, ſo that the Tigres cannot moleſt the Inhabitants; they goe vp to them vpon ladders made of light wood, which they draw vp. Some of the Inhabitants keepe Bufalos in their houſes, for they ſay, that the Tigres will not come neere the places where theſe beaſts are, by reaſon of their ill ſauour: they are in theſe Countries of vnmeaſurable greatneſſe and thickneſſe. For the Voyage of Saint Thomas to Pegu, it is good to carrie Bracelets, which they make of glaſſe in Saint Thomas; for with theſe better then with money you may buy victuals, and there in the Citie where you buy them they are ſold at a lowe price, but if they are enamelled they ſell them deare. The number of Pagods or Varellas which wee ſaw in this Voyage I write not, for they are innumerable, and in diuers ſhapes; but I onely ſay, that on the ſhoare where wee landed to goe to Dogon, which is made of large ſtrong timbers, are two Statues, which reſemble two Boyes from the head downewards, their faces after the likeneſſe of Deuils with two wings. There are ſome Varellas gilded, and ſet in faire places, to which they come and offer Gold and other merchandiſe in great quantitie, to maintayne their gilding, for the raine ſpoiles it. About theſe Varellas are found very many Apes of that kinde which reſemble Mountain-cats, which wee call Monkeyes; they keepe them very carefully, holding them to be creatures beloued of God, becauſe they haue their hands and feet like humane creatures; and therefore their Woods are full of them, for they neuer take any, except for their Varellas and Statues.

There are two Cities of Pegu, the old and the new; in the former Strangers and Merchants inhabite, who are many, and vtter great ſtore of merchandiſe, in this alſo is the Kings Nobles, and Gentlemen, and other people. The new is not very large, it was built by the father of the preſent King, on a ſudden, in a very neat faſhion and with wonderfull ſtrength: The old is very ancient and reaſonable great with many houſes made of great canes, and many Magaſins of brick to keepe wares in: and to ſpeake of the old Citie of Pegu, as of the nobler, becauſe of the Kings reſidence in it, and of all his Court, you muſt knowe that the Citie is pleaſantly ſeated in the altitude of 16. degrees and a third part, it is enuironed with walls, and hath the forme of a perfit ſquare, and in euery ſquare are fiue gates: round about it are many ditches full of water, which continues all the yeere, and in them are many Crocodiles, which are put there, that if any will wade ouer theſe ditches they may be taken and killed.

After that I was prouided of a good Druggerman and Interpreter, the noiſe of Trumpets was heard, which ſignified wee ſhould ſee the King and haue audience of him, wee entred within the ſecond gate, whereby they goe into the Court-yard, and the Interpreter and I caſt our ſelues vpon our knees on the ground, and with our hands eleuated in humble wiſe, and making a ſhew three times before we roſe of kiſſing the ground, and three other times we did thus before wee came neere to the place where the King ſate with his Semini, proſtrate on the earth (for no Chriſtian, how neere ſoeuer to the King, nor Mooriſh Captaines, except of his Semini, come in that place ſo neere the King) I heard all his Speach, but vnderſtood it not: I gaue the Emeralds to the Interpreter, who lifted them vp ouer his head, and againe made reuerence, of them called Rombee: and as ſoone as the King ſaw it, a Nagiran, that is to ſay, the Lord of his words, or Interpreter, making the like Rombee, tooke the Emeralds, and gaue them into the Kings hand, and then went out of his preſence, who a little while after called him, commanding him as Lord of his words, that he ſhould aske mee what Countriman I was, how many yeeres it was ſince I left my Countrie, and what was my name, and from what place I had brought thoſe Emeralds, and I with the accuſtomed Rombee (for at euery word they ſpeake they muſt make ſuch an obeiſance) anſwered that my name was Gaſpar Balbi, that I had beene in my Voyage foure yeeres, and that I brought the Emeralds from Venice to giue his Maieſtie, the fame of whoſe bountie, courteſie and greatneſſe was ſpread ouer the world, and eſpecially in our parts, to be the greateſt King in the world; all this was written in their letters, and read by the Lord of his words to his Maieſtie. He commanded to aske me in what parts Venice was ſeated, and what King gouerned it; and I told him that it was in the Kingdome of Italie, and that it was a Republike or free State, not gouerned by any King. When the King heard this, he greatly wondered; ſo that he began to laugh ſo exceedingly, that hee was ouercome of the cough, which made him that hee could hardly ſpeake to his Great men. Laſtly, hee demanded, if that King which laſt tooke Portugall were as great, and if Venice were warlike. To which I anſwered, that King Philip that had taken Portugall was the potenteſt King among the Chriſtians, and that the Venetians were in league with him, but had no feare of any, yet ſought friendſhip with all. And then I reported the ouerthrow which the Venetians gaue the Emperour of the Turkes. Ametbi, who at that time was at Mecca, confirmed this to be true of the defeat of the Turkiſh Armado. Then he gaue me a Cup of gold, and fiue pieces of China Damaske of diuers colours, and bad them tell me, that he gaue me theſe, and and did not ſo pay me for my Emeralds, for which I ſhould be contented of his publike Terreca, which are his Treaſurers. This was holden for nouelty with them that ſaw it, for it was not the Kings cuſtome to preſent any thing to any. Moreouer, the King ordered that for the wares which I had brought, the Decacini ſhould not make me pay any Taxe or Cuſtome.

Store of Elephants.

The King nouriſheth at his charges more then eight hundred domeſticall Elephants of warre; but for wilde ones they may haue as many as they will, for the Woods are full of them. The Buſalos of this Countrie are of berettine colour, but ſo great, that they are like Elephants. There are other creatures as with vs, and many alſo of other kinds. When he goeth to his recreations ſolemnely, or in his Robes, foure white Elephants goe before him veſted with Gold, hauing their teeth incloſed in a ſheath wrought with Iewels. The King of Pegu hath great ſtore of Artillarie of all ſorts; but he wants men to manage them, he might make as many Gallies, Foiſts & Galleaſſes as he would, if he had men to gouerne them, and to make them, and therefore makes none: yet when he vndertakes any enterpriſe, he carries with him ſmall Ordnance, which are gouerned by certaine Gunners, Moores of Bengala, of whom, as of ſtrangers, he hath ſmall confidence.

King of Auua or Aua his Rebellion.

The King of Auua, being ſubiect to the King of Pegu, and Brother to his Father, had a purpoſe to make himſelfe Maſter of his Nephewes Kingdome, and to make himſelfe King, becauſe he was the ancienter of the Royall branch; therefore at the Inauguration of the preſent King, he would not come to doe him homage as he ought, and as other Kings and Dukes his ſubiects did; he did not onely abſent himſelfe, but alſo kept backe the Preſent of Iewels which he was wont to giue, and reſtrained alſo the trade from his Countrie to Pegu, not ſuffering any Merchant to paſſe, but ſought to conſpire with his chiefe Courtiers againſt the King of Pegu, who as a good Nephew diſſembled it, the ſaid King of Auua being recommended to him from his Father before his death. Finally, the King of Pegu, willing to cleare himſelfe of the ill will conceiued againſt the King of Auua his Vncle, ſent one of his houſhold ſeruants to him, who was ſlaine by the King of Auua becauſe of the warre, truſting that the Grandes of the Kingdome of Pegu would fauour his part, and reuolt from their naturall Lord, to ſet Him in his place. Therefore the King of Pegu proclaimed warre againſt Auua, and called to him his Bagnia and Semins, and gaue order to his Decagini, that as they came he ſhould put them in priſon; which being performed by the Decagini, the King ordained that the morning following they ſhould make an eminent and ſpacious Scaffold, and cauſe all the Grandes to come vpon it, and then ſet fire to it, and burne them all aliue. But to ſhew that he did this with iuſtice, he ſent another mandate, that he ſhould doe nothing till he had an Olla or Letter written with his hand in letters of gold, and in the meane time he commanded him to retaine all the priſoners of the Grandes families vnto the women great with child, and thoſe which were in their ſwadling clothes, and ſo he brought them all together vpon the ſaid Scaffold; and the King ſent the Letter that he ſhould burne them, and the Decagini performed it, and burned them all, ſo that there was heard nothing but weepings, ſhrikings, cryings, and ſobbings: for there were foure thouſand in this number which were ſo burned great and ſmall, for which execution were publike Guards placed by the King, and all of the old and new Citie were forced to aſſiſt them; I alſo went thither, and ſaw it with great compaſſion and griefe, that little children without any fault ſhould ſuffer ſuch martyrdome, and among others there was one of his chiefe Secretaries, who was laſt put in to be burned, yet was freed by the Kings order; but his legge was begunne to be burnt, ſo that he was lame.

Expedition againſt Aua.

And after followed this order from his Maieſtie, that thoſe other Captaines which remained ſhould come to him, and he ſaid to them, You haue ſeene what we haue done to Traitors, but be faithfull, and ſet in order all the people as you can, for I am a Captaine that warre iuſtly, going without any feare of not ouercomming: and ſo on a ſudden, and within few dayes, he gathered together out of both the Cities more then three hundred thouſand perſons, and encamped without the Citie. Ten dayes after that I ſaw the King vpon an Elephant all ouer couered with Gold and Iewels, goe to the warre with great courage, with a Sword after our cuſtome ſent him by the Vice-roy of Goa, the hilt whereof was gilded: the ſaid Vice-roy was called Don Luis de Zuida: he left the white Elephants in the Citie. After that, the King fell ſicke of the ſmall poxe, but when he was well, he encountred with the King of Auua, and they two fought body to body without any hinderance of the Armies; who being equally matched, as their vſe is, combated brauely, as did alſo the Guard of this King with that of the other, and after the Kings had fought a while hand to hand, firſt with Harquebuſſes, then with Darts, and laſtly with the Sword, the Elephant of the King of Pegu brake his right tooth with charging that of Auua, in which furie he ſo coupled with the other Elephant, that the King of Pegu killed the King of Auua, and he remained lightly wounded on one arme, and in the meane while his Elephant fell dead vnder him, and the King of Pegu mounted vpon that of Auua. But when the Armie of Auua ſaw their King dead, they ceaſed to fight, and demanded pardon of the King of Pegu, who with a ioyfull countenance praiſing their valour pardoned them all, and making a muſter, found that of three hundred thouſand which hee brought from Pegu, there died died in that battell more then 200000. and little leſſe of thoſe of Auua. After this victorie he ordered that Auua ſhould be deſtroyed, and all the people made priſoners, among which was the Queene taken priſoner, who was ſiſter of the King of Pegu, and confined, during her life in a large houſe with many royall attendants; but ſhee agreed neuer to goe forth. The reſt of the Citizens were baniſhed to liue in Woods among Tigres, and other creatures, and this was becauſe the King of Pegu could not finde the great treaſure which the King of Auua had. This warre was in the beginning of the moneth of Aprill, when in that Countrie fall great ſtore of raines, cauſing great cold in a place called Meccao; and the fourteenth day of Iuly, in ſixe dayes he returned vnexpectedly to Pegu, not finding the Citie with thoſe guards which his Maieſtie had appointed, but at the requeſt of the Prince his ſonne he did no other iuſtice.

Aua diſpeopled.

At this his arriuall he vnderſtood, that when hee was at the warre, there was arriued vnder excuſe to come to his fauour in the old Citie of Pegu the ſonne of the Emperour of Silon (or Siam) with fifty Elephants of warre, and eight hundred Horſes, beſides Harquebuſſers, Pikemen, and Souldiers with ſwords, who were ſent towards Auua by the great Brama; but in ſtead of taking his way towards that coaſt he returned to Silon.

Warre betwixt Pegu and Siam, of which ſee Pimenta.

In the mean time was brought into Pegu the Elephant of the King of Auua, which was ſo much diſcontented, that all the day long he mourned, I my ſelfe ſaw him lament, and that hee would eate but very little; and this I ſaw in the lodging where the King of Pegu was wont to keepe his, where continually were two Semini, that prayed him to eate, and mourne no longer, but be merry, for he was come to ſerue a King greater then his own. Notwithſtanding the ſaid Elephant would not ceaſe from teares, and alwaies in token of ſorrow held down his trunk: and thus he continued the ſpace of 15. dayes, and then he began to eate, to the Kings great content. With the teeth of the Kings Elephant which died in battell by command from his Maieſtie were made certaine Pagods or Statues, which were layd vp to bee kept among the Pagods of gold and ſiluer. After the King made fiue other of * Gonza, which was a maruellous thing to ſee, for ſitting croſſe-legged, they were as high as a ſtrong man could fling a ſtone, and they were ingraued fairely and curiouſly: one toe of the foot was greater then a man, and the ſaid Pagods were ſet in publike before the Palace, and beſpangled with gold.

The warre of Auua being now finiſhed, the King of Silon, who was ſubiect to the King of Pegu, ſent one to his Maieſtie to tell him, that it grieued him that a ſlaue had giuen anſwer to his ſonne, whom he had ſent to aide the King himſelfe, and therfore now he made no more account of him, nor held him for his Lord; therefore the King Pegu ſent forth a great Armie againſt Silon, vnder the conduct of the great Brama, who after he had loſt many people through the heat; & through the great fortitude of Silon, could obtaine nothing of him but this, that if the King of Pegu would come to the campe he would reuerence him, but he would not yeeld himſelfe to his inferior; and the King of Pegu anſwered, that he would haue his leaſt ſlaue ſubdue his ſubiect. Although they kept a ſtraight ſiege againſt Silon, yet the Citie ſtood it out manfully. It hath beene an Imperiall Citie; the houſes are of timber, built high becauſe of the ouerflowing of the Riuer. In Winter euery houſe hath a Boat to tranſport their people from one ſide of the Riuer to the other: there are many houſes of poore people made vpon great plankes with edifices of wood or great canes built on them, which they guide whither they will, to buy and ſell any ſort of merchandiſe, which is exerciſed by women, who when a ſhip comes to that place, doe not vnlade it; but goe themſelues vpon theſe Rafts to negotiate, buy and ſell. The people of Silon are Gentiles, as thoſe of Pegu, they are white and beautifull; they feare not to bee ouercome by the King of Pegu after this manner; for his father brought them to his obedience, going in perſon, and accompanied with eight hundred thouſand men, neither had he taken it, if it had not beene by treaſon, by opening a Gate, there were many Portugals then taken priſoners, who were freed by the preſent King of Pegu with commendations for doing what the King of Silon commanded them. In the meane time there was a great fire kindled in a ſtreet of the Portugals in Pegu, by the diuerſitie of winds which blew, it burned more then 3800. houſes, and ſome Pagods, and praying places: and becauſe it is a cuſtome, that the King of Pegu in ſuch caſes proceeds againſt thoſe which are authors of ſuch a fire, there was ſearch made who kindled the fire, and he was certified, that it was in the houſe of a Portugall Pilot which brought vs to the Citie. The King made no ſhew of iudging this to haue beene for malice: but we were in continuall feare of burning, and ſo much the rather, becauſe one of the Kings Diuiners told him, that if hee would haue the victorie of Silon, hee muſt burne a Citie, as his father did; and therefore we doubted that hee would deſtroy this old Citie of Pegu; but he was diſſwaded from it by the Prince his ſonne, who is very courteous and pleaſant, and much delighted in diſcharging Harquebuſſes, and to ſhoot in Bowes, hee is of great ſtature, and browne, as his father; when he goes abroad he is carried vp in a Palamkin very pompouſly (as his other three little brothers are alſo) vnder a Cloth of ſtate openly.

The Voyage of Maſter Ralph Fitch Merchant of London to Ormus, and ſo to Goa in the Eaſt India, to Cambaia, Ganges, Bengala; to Bacola, and Chonderi, to Pegu, to Iamahay in the Kingdome of Siam, and backe to Pegu, and from thence to Malacca, Zeilan, Cochin, and all the Coaſt of the Eaſt India: begun in the yeere of our Lord 1583. and ended 1591.

* See Maſter Newbery his voyage to Ormus. ſup. l. 9. c. 3. & 18. I had thought to haue left out this voyage of Maſter Fitch, as being before publiſhed by Mr. Hakluit but ſeeing none other of our Engliſh trauellers haue ſeene diuers Countries here Diſcouered, for the better knowledge of him and them, I haue added it here alſo.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1583. I Ralph Fitch of London Merchant, being deſirous to ſee the Countries of the Eaſt India, in the companie of Maſter Iohn Newberie Merchant, (which * had beene at Ormus once before) of William Leedes Ieweller, and Iames Storie Painter, being chiefly ſet foorth by the right Worſhipfull Sir Edward Osborne Knight, and Maſter Richard Staper Citizens and Merchants of London, did ſhip my ſelfe in a Ship of London called the Tygre, wherein wee went for Tripolis in Syria: and from thence wee tooke the way for Alepo, which we went in ſeuen dayes with the Carouan. Being in Alepo and finding good companie, we went from thence to Birra, which is two dayes and a halfe trauell with Camels.

Birra.

Birra is a little Towne, but very plentifull of victuals: and neere to the wall of the Towne runneth the Riuer Euphrates. Here wee bought a Boate and agreed with a Maſter and Bargemen, for to goe to Babilon. Theſe Boates be but for one voyage; for the ſtreame doth runne ſo faſt downwards that they cannot returne. They carry you to a Towne which they call Felugia, and there you ſell the Boat for a little money, for that which coſt you fiftie at Birra, you ſell there for ſeuen or eight. From Birra to Felugia is ſixteene dayes iourney, it is not good that one Boat goe alone, for if it ſhould chance to breake, you ſhould haue much adoe to ſaue your goods from the Arabians, which bee alwayes thereabouts robbing: and in the Night when your Boates be made faſt, it is neceſſarie that you keepe good watch. For the Arabians that be Thieues, will come ſwimming and ſteale your goods and flee away, againſt which a Gunne is very good, for they doe feare it very much. In the Riuer of Euphrates from Birra to Felugia, there bee certaine places where you pay Cuſtome, ſo many Medines for a ſome or Camels lading, and certaine Raiſens and Sope, which is for the ſonnes of Aboriſe, which is Lord of the Arabians and all that great Deſart, and hath ſome Villages vpon the Riuer. Felugia where you vnlade your goods which come from Birra, is a little Village: from whence you goe to Babilon in a day.

Felugia.

Babilon (ſo vulgarly but falſely it is called) the true name is Bagdet, See ſup. l. 9. c. 9. touching it. Babilon is now Babel indeed, nothing but ruine and confuſion.

Babilon is a Towne not very great but very populous, and of great traffique of Strangers, for that it is the way to Perſia, Turkia, and Arabia: and from thence doe goe Carouans for theſe and other places. Here are great ſtore of victuals, which come from Armenia downe the Riuer of Tygris. They are brought vpon rafts made of Goat-skinnes blowne full of winde and bords layd vpon them: and thereupon they lade there goods which are brought downe to Babilon, which being diſcharged they open their skinnes, and carrie them backe by Camels, to ſerue another time. Babilon in times paſt did belong to the Kingdome of Perſia, but now is ſubiect to the Turke. Ouer againſt Babilon there is a very faire Village from whence you paſſe to Babilon vpon a long Bridge made of Boates, and tyed to a great Chayne of Iron, which is made faſt on either ſide of the Riuer. When any Boates are to paſſe vp or downe the Riuer, they take away certaine of the Boates vntill they be paſt.

The Tower of Babel.

The Tower of Babell is built on this ſide the Riuer Tygris, towards Arabia from the Towne about ſeuen or eight miles, which Tower is ruinated on all ſides, and with the fall thereof hath made as it were a little Mountaine, ſo that it hath no ſhape at all: it was made of Brickes dryed in the Sunne, and certaine Canes and leaues of the Palme tree layed betwixt the Brickes. There is no entrance to be ſeene to goe into it. It doth ſtand vpon a great Plaine betwixt the Riuers of Euphrates and Tygris.

Boyling Pitch continually iſſuing out of the earth.

By the Riuer Euphrates, two dayes iourney from Babilon at a place called Ait, in a Field neere vnto it, is a ſtrange thing to ſee: a mouth that doth continually throw foorth againſt the ayre boyling Pitch with a filthy ſmoake: which Pitch doth runne abroad into a great field which is alwayes full thereof. The Moores ſay that it is the mouth of Hell. By reaſon of the great quantitie of it, the men of that Countrey doe pitch their Boats two or three inches thicke on the out-ſide, ſo that no water doth enter into them. Their Boates bee called Danec. When there is great ſtore of water in Tygris, you may goe from Babilon to Baſora in eight or nine dayes: if there be ſmall ſtore it will coſt you the more dayes.

Baſora in times paſt was vnder the Arabians, but now is ſubiect to the Turke. But ſome of them the Turke cannot ſubdue, for that they hold certaine Ilands in the Riuer Euphrates, which the Turke cannot winne of them. They be Thieues all and haue no ſetled dwelling, but remoue from place to place with their Camels, Goates, and Horſes, Wiues and Children and all. They haue large blew Gownes, their Wiues eares and noſes are ringed very full of rings of Copper and Siluer, and they weare rings of Copper about their legs.

Baſora ſtandeth neere the Gulfe of Perſia, and is a Towne of great trade of Spices and Drugs which come from Ormus. Alſo there is great ſtore of Wheat, Rice, and Dates growing thereabout, wherewith they ſerue Babilon and all the Countrey, Ormus, and all the parts of India. I went from Baſora to Ormus downe the Gulfe of Perſia, in a certaine ſhip made of bordes, and ſowed together with Cayro, which is threed made of the huske of Cocoes, and certaine Canes or ſtraw leaues ſowed vpon the ſeames of the bordes which is the cauſe that they leake very much. And ſo hauing Perſia alwayes on the left hand, and the Coaſt of Arabia on the right hand wee paſſed many Ilands, and among others, the famous Iland Baharim, from whence come the beſt Pearles which be round and Orient.

Ormus.

Ormus is an Iland in circuit about fiue and twentie or thirtie miles, and is the dryeſt Iland in the world: for there is nothing growing in it but onely Salt; for their water, wood, or victuals, and all things neceſſary come out of Perſia, which is about twelue miles from thence. All thereabout be very fruitfull, from whence all kind of victuals are ſent vnto Ormus. The Portugals haue a Caſtle * here which ſtandeth neere vnto the ſea, wherein there is a Captaine for the King of Portugall, hauing vnder him a conuenient number of Souldiers, whereof ſome part remaine in the Caſtle, and ſome in the Towne. In this Towne are Merchants of all Nations, and many Moores and Gentiles. Here is very great trade of all ſorts of Spices, Drugs, Silke, cloth of Silke, fine Tapeſtrie of Perſia, great ſtore of Pearles which come from the Ile of Baharim, and are the beſt Pearles of all others, and many Horſes of Perſia, which ſerue all India. They haue a Moore to their King which is choſen and gouerned by the Portugals. Their Women are very ſtrangely attired, wearing on their Noſes, Eares, Neckes, armes and legges, many rings ſet with Iewels, and lockes of Siluer and Gold in their eares, and a long barre of gold vpon the ſide of their Noſes. Their Eares with the weight of their Iewels be worne ſo wide, that a man may thruſt three of his fingers into them. Here very ſhortly after our arriuall wee were put in Priſon, and had part of our goods taken from vs by the Captaine of the Caſtle, whoſe name was Don Mathias de Albuquerque; and from hence the eleuenth of October hee ſhipped vs and ſent vs for Goa vnto the Vice-roy, which at that time was Don Franciſco de Maſcarenhas. The ſhip wherein wee were imbarked for Goa belonged to the Captaine, and carried one hundred twentie and foure Horſes in it. All Merchandize carried to Goa in a ſhip wherein are Horſes, pay no Cuſtome in Goa. The Horſes pay cuſtome, the goods pay nothing; but if you come in a ſhip which bringeth no Horſes, you are then to pay eight in the hundred for your goods. The firſt Citie of India that wee arriued at vpon the fifth of Nouember, after wee had paſſed the Coaſt of Zindi, is called Diu, which ſtandeth in an Iland in the Kingdome of Cambaia, and is the ſtrongeſt Towne that the Portugals haue in thoſe parts. It is but little, but well ſtored with Merchandize; for here they lade many great ſhips with diuers commodities for the ſtraights of Mecca, for Ormus, and other places, and theſe bee ſhips of the Moores and of Chriſtians. But the Moores cannot paſſe, except they haue a Paſport from the Portugals.

* Imo habui Chreme, The Perſians haue lately taken it.

Diu.

Cambaietta is the chiefe Citie of that Prouince, which is great and very populous, and fairely builded for a Towne of the Gentiles: but if there happen any Famine, the people will ſell their Children for very little. The laſt King of Cambaia was Sultan Badu, which was killed at the ſiege of Diu, and ſhortly after his Citie was taken by the great Mogor, which is the King of Agra and of Delli, which are fortie dayes iourney from the Countrey of Cambaia. Here the Women weare vpon their armes infinite numbers of rings made of Elephants teeth, wherein they take ſo much delight, that they had rather bee without their meat then without their Bracelets. Going from Diu wee come to Daman, the ſecond Towne of the Portugals in the Countrey of Cambaia, which is diſtant from Diu fortie leagues. Here is no trade but of Corne and Rice. They haue many Villages vnder them which they quietly poſſeſſe in time of Peace, but in time of Warre the enemie is maſter of them. From thence wee paſſed by Baſaim, and from Baſaim to Tana, at both which places is ſmall trade but onely of Corne and Rice.

Chaul.

The tenth of Nouember, wee arriued at Chaul which ſtandeth in the firme land. There bee two Townes, the one belonging to the Portugals, and the other to the Moores. That of the Portugals is neereſt to the Sea, and commandeth the Bay, and is walled round about. A little aboue that, is the Towne of the Moores which is gouerned by a Moore King called Xa-Maluco. Heere is great traffique for all ſorts of Spices, and Drugges, Silke, and cloth of Silke, Sandales, Elephants teeth, and much China worke, and much Sugar which is made of the Nut called Gagara: the Tree is called the Palmer: which is the profitableſt Tree in the world: it doth alwayes beare fruit, and doth yeeld Wine, Oyle, Sugar, Vineger, Cordes, Coles, of the leaues are made Thatch for the houſes, Sayles for ſhips, Mats to ſit or lie on: of the branches they make their Houſes, and broomes to ſweepe, of the Tree wood for ſhips. The wine doth iſſue out of the top of the tree. They cut a branch of a bough and binde it hard, and hang an earthen pot vpon it, which they emptie euery morning and euery euening, and ſtill it and put in certaine dried Raiſins, and it becommeth very ſtrong Wine in ſhort time. Hitherto many ſhips come from all parts of India, Ormus, and from Mecca : heere bee many Moores and Gentiles. They haue a very ſtrange order among them, they worſhip a Cow, and eſteeme much of the Cowes dung to paint the walls of their houſes. They will kill nothing not ſo much as a Louſe: for they hold it a ſinne to kill any thing. They eate no fleſh, but liue by Roots, and Rice, and Milke. And when the husband dyeth his wife is burned with him, if ſhee be aliue : if ſhee will not, her head is ſhauen, and then is neuer account made of her after. They ſay if they ſhould bee buried, it were a great ſinne, for of their bodies there would come many Wormes and other vermine, and when their bodies were conſumed, thoſe Wormes would lacke ſuſtenance, which were a ſinne, therefore they will bee burned. In Cambaia they will kill nothing, nor haue any thing killed : in the Towne they haue Hoſpitals to keepe lame Dogs and Cats, and for Birds. They will giue meate to the Ants.

Biſapor.

This was the twentieth of Nouember.

Goa is the moſt principall Citie which the Portugals haue in India, wherein the Vice-roy remaineth with his Court. It ſtandeth in an Iland, which may be fiue and twentie or thirtie miles about. It is a fine Citie, and for an Indian Towne very faire. The Iland is very faire, full of Orchards and Gardens, and many Palmer trees, and hath ſome Villages. Here be many Merchants of all Nations. And the Fleet which commeth euery yeere from Portugall, which be foure, fiue, or ſixe great ſhips, commeth firſt hither. And they come for the moſt part in September, and remaine there fortie or fiftie dayes; and then goe to Cochin, where they lade their Pepper for Portugall. Oftentimes they lade one in Goa, the reſt goe to Cochin, which is from Goa an hundred leagues Southward. Goa ſtandeth in the Countrey of Hidalcan, who lyeth in the Countrey ſixe or ſeuen dayes iourney. His chiefe Citie is called Biſapor. At our comming we were caſt into Priſon, and examined before the Iuſtice and demanded for Letter, and were charged to bee ſpies, but they could proue nothing by vs. Wee continued in Priſon vntill the two and twentie of December, and then wee were ſet at libertie, putting in ſureties for two thouſand Duckets not to depart the Towne; which ſureties Father Stephens an Engliſh Ieſuite which wee found there, and another religious man a friend of his procured for vs. Our ſureties name was Andreas Taborer, to whom we payd two thouſand one hundred and fiftie Duckets, and ſtill he demanded more : whereupon we made ſute to the Vice-roy and Iuſtice to haue our money again, conſidering that they had had it in their hands neere fiue moneths and could proue nothing againſt vs. The Viceroy made vs a very ſharpe anſwer, and ſaid we ſhould bee better ſifted before it were long, and that they had further matter againſt vs.

They fled from Goa. See hereof Linſchoten in fine lib. 1.

Whereupon wee preſently determined rather to ſeeke our liberties, then to bee in danger for euer to be Slaues in the Countrey, for it was told vs wee ſhould haue the Strapado. The fifth day of Aprill 1585. in the morning wee ranne from thence. And being ſet ouer the Riuer, we went two daies on foot not without feare, not knowing the way nor hauing any guide, for we durſt truſt none. One of the firſt Townes which we came vnto, is called Bellargan, where there is a great Market kept of Diamants, Rubies, Saphires, and many other ſoft Stones. From Bellergan wee went to Biſapor, which is a very great Towne where the King doth keepe his Court. He hath many Gentiles in his Court and they be great Idolaters. And they haue their Idols ſtanding in the Woods, which they call Pagodes. Some bee like a Cow, ſome like a Monkie, ſome like Buffles, ſome like Peacockes, and ſome like the Diuell. Here bee very many Elephants which they goe to warre withall. Here they haue good ſtore of Gold and Siluer : their houſes are of ſtone very faire and high. From hence we went for Gulconda, the King whereof is called Cutup de laſbach. Here, and in the Kingdome of Hidalcan, and in the Countrey of the King of Decan, be the Diamants found of the olde water. It is a very faire Towne, pleaſant, with faire houſes of Bricke and Timber, it aboundeth with great ſtore of Fruits and freſh water. Here the men and the women doe goe with a cloth bound about their middles, without any more apparell. We found it here very hote.

Strange Marriages.

The Winter beginneth here about the laſt of May. In theſe parts is a Port or Hauen called Maſulipatan, which ſtandeth eight dayes iourney from hence toward the Gulfe of Bengala, whether come many ſhips out of India, Pegu, and Sumatra, very richly laden with Pepper, Spices, and other commodities. The Countrey is very good and fruitfull. From thence I went to Seruidore, which is a fine Countrey, and the King is called, The King of Bread. The houſes here bee all thatched and made of Lome. Here be many Moores and Gentiles, but there is ſmall Religion among them. From thence I went to Bellapore, and ſo to Barrampore, which is in the Countrey of Zelabdim Echebar. In this place their money is made of a kind of Siluer round and thicke, to the value of twentie pence, which is very good ſiluer. It is maruellous great and a populous Countrey. In their Winter which is in Iune, Iuly, and Auguſt, there is no paſſing in the ſtreets but with Horſes, the waters bee ſo high. The houſes are made of lome and thatched. Here is great ſtore of Cotton-cloth made, and painted clothes of Cotton-wooll : here groweth great ſtore of Corne and Rice. We found Marriages great ſtore both in Towne and Villages in many places where wee paſſed, of Boyes of eight or ten yeeres, and Girles of fiue or ſixe yeeres old. They both doe ride vpon one Horſe very trimly decked, and are carried through the Towne with great piping and playing, and ſo returne home and eat of a Banquet made of Rice and Fruits, and there they dance the moſt part of the night, and ſo make an end of the marriage. They lie not together vntill they bee ten yeeres old. They ſay they marrie their Children ſo young, becauſe it is an order, that when the man dyeth, the woman muſt be burned with him: ſo that if the Father die, yet they may haue a Father in law to helpe to bring vp the Children which be married: and alſo that they will not leaue their Sonnes without Wiues, nor their Daughters without Husbands.

From thence we went to Mandoway, which is a verie ſtrong Towne. It was beſieged twelue yeeres by Zelabdim Echebar, before hee could winne it. It ſtandeth vpon a verie great high Rocke as the moſt part of their Caſtles doe, and was of a very great circuit. From hence wee went to Vgim and Serringe, where we ouertooke the Ambaſſadour of Zelabdim Echebar with a maruellous great companie of men, Elephants, and Camels. Here is great trade of Cotton and Cloth made of Cotton, and great ſtore of Drugs. From thence we went to Agra, paſſing many Riuers, which by reaſon of the raine were ſo ſwollen, that we waded and ſwamme oftentimes for our liues. Agra is a very great Citie and populous, built with ſtone, hauing faire and large ſtreets, with a faire Riuer running by it, which falleth into the Gulfe of Bengala. It hath a faire Caſtle and a ſtrong, with a very faire Ditch. Here bee many Moores and Gentiles, the King is called Zelabdim Echebar: the people for the moſt part call him The great Mogor. From thence we went for Fatepore, which is the place where the King kept his Court. The Towne is greater then Agra, but the houſes and ſtreets bee not ſo faire. Here dwell many people both Moores and Gentiles. The King hath in Agra and Fatepore, as they doe credibly report, one thouſand Elephants, thirtie thouſand Horſes, one thouſand and foure hundred tame Deere, eight hundred Concubines: ſuch ſtore of Ounces, Tygres, Buffles, Cockes and Hawkes, that is very ſtrange to ſee. He keepeth a great Court, which they call Dericcan. Agra and Fatepore are two very great Cities, either of them much greater then London, and very populous. Betweene Agra and Fatepore are twelue miles, and all the way is a Market of victuals and other things, as full as though a man were ſtill in a Towne, and ſo many people as if a man were in a Market. They haue many fine Carts, and many of them carued and gilded with Gold, with two wheeles which bee drawne with two little Bulls about the bigneſſe of our great Dogs in England, and they will runne with any Horſe, and carrie two or three men in one of theſe Carts: they are couered with Silke or very fine cloth, and bee vſed here as our Coaches be in England. Hither is great reſort of Merchants from Perſia, and out of India, and very much Merchandize of Silke and Cloth, and of precious Stones, both Rubies, Diamants, and Pearles. The King is appareled in a white Cabie made like a Shirt tyed with ſtrings on the one ſide, and a little cloth on his head, coloured oftentimes with red or yellow. None come into his houſe but his Eunuches which keepe his women.

Here in Fatepore wee ſtayed all three vntill the eight and twentieth of September 1585. and then Maſter Iohn Newberie tooke his iourney toward the Citie of Labor, determining from thence to goe for Perſia, and then for Aleppo or Conſtantinople, whether hee could get ſooneſt paſſage vnto; and directed me to goe to for Bengala and for Pegu, and did promiſe me, if it pleaſed God, to meet me in Bengala within two yeeres with a ſhip out of England. I left William Leades the Ieweller, in ſeruice with the King Zelabdim Echebar in Fatepore, who did entertayne him verie well, and gaue him an Houſe and fiue Slaues, an Horſe, and euery day ſixe *S. I went from Agra to Satagam in Bengala, in the companie of one hundred and fourescore Boates laden with Salt, Opium, Hinge, Lead, Carpets, and diuers other commodities downe the Riuer Iemena. The chiefe Merchants are Moores and Gentiles. In theſe Countries they haue many ſtrange Ceremonies. The Bramenes which are their Prieſts, come to the water and haue a ſtring about their necks made with great ceremonies, & lade vp water with both their hands, and turne the ſtring firſt with both their hands within, and then one arme after the other out. Though it be neuer ſo cold, they will waſh themſelues in cold water or in warme. Theſe Gentiles will eate no Fleſh, nor kill any thing. They liue with Rice, Butter, Milke, and Fruits. They pray in the water naked, and dreſſe their meat and eate it naked, and for their penance they lie flat vpon the earth, and riſe vp and turne themſelues about thirtie or fortie times, and vſe to heaue vp their hands to the Sunne, and to kiſſe the earth, with their armes and legs ſtretched along out, and their right leg alwayes before the left. Euery time they lie downe, they make a ſcore on the ground with their finger, to know when their ſtint is finiſhed. The Bramenes marke themſelues in the foreheads, eares, and throats, with a kind of yellow geare which they grind, and euery morning they doe it. And they haue ſome old men which goe in the ſtreets with a boxe of yellow Powder, and marke men on their heads and neckes as they meet them. And their wiues doe come by ten, twentie, and thirtie together, to the water ſide ſinging, and there doe waſh themſelues, and then vſe their Ceremonies, and marke themſelues in their foreheads and faces, and carrie ſome with them, and ſo depart ſinging. Their Daughters bee married, at, or before the age of ten yeeres. The men may haue ſeuen wiues. They be a kind of craftie

Holy holy Beggers.

From Agra I came to Prague, where the Riuer Iemena entreth into the mightie Riuer Ganges, and Iemena loſeth his name. Ganges commeth out of the Northweſt, and runneth Eaſt into the Gulfe of Bengala. In thoſe parts there are many Tygres, and many Partridges and Turtle-doues, and much other Fowle. Here be many Beggers in theſe Countries which goe naked, and the people make great account of them: they call them Scheſche. Here I ſaw one which was a Monſter among the reſt. He would haue nothing vpon him, his beard was very long, and with the haire of his head hee couered his priuities. The nailes of ſome of his fingers were two inches long, for he would cut nothing from him, neither would he ſpeake. He was accompanied with eight or ten, and they ſpake for him. When any man ſpake to him, he would lay his hand vpon his breſt and bowe himſelfe, but would not ſpeake. Hee would not ſpeake to the King. We went from Prague downe Ganges, the which is here very broad. Here is great ſtore of Fiſh of ſundrie ſorts, and of wild Fowle, as of Swannes, Geeſe, Cranes, and many other things. The Countrey is very fruitfull and populous. The men for the moſt part haue their faces ſhauen, and their heads very long, except ſome which be all ſhauen ſaue the crowne: and ſome of them are as though a man ſhould ſet a diſh on their heads, and ſhaue them round, all but the crowne. In this Riuer of Ganges are many Ilands. His water is very ſweet and pleaſant, and the Countrey adioyning very fruitfull.

A Pilgrimage of the Gentiles to the Riuer Ganges.
Images.

From thence we went to Bannaras which is a great Towne, and great ſtore of Cloth is made there of Cotton, and Shaſhes for the Moores. In this place they bee all Gentiles, and be the greateſt Idolaters that euer I ſaw. To this Towne come the Gentiles on Pilgrimage out of farre Countries. Here alongſt the waters ſide, bee very many faire houſes, and in all of them, or for the moſt part they haue their Images ſtanding, which bee euill fauoured, made of ſtone and wood, ſome like Lyons, Leopards, and Monkies, ſome like Men and Women, and Peacockes, and ſome like the Diuell with foure armes & foure hands. They ſit croſſe legged, ſome with one thing in their hands, and ſome another, and by breake of day and before, there are men and women which come out of the Towne and waſh themſelues in Ganges. And there are diuers old men, which vpon places of earth made for the purpoſe, ſit praying, and they giue the people three or foure ſtrawes, which they take and hold them betweene their fingers when they waſh themſelues: and ſome ſit to marke them in the foreheads, and they haue in a cloth a little Rice, Barlie, or money, which, when they haue waſhed themſelues, they giue to the old men which ſit there praying. Afterwards they goe to diuers of their Images, and giue them of their Sacrifices. And when they giue, the old men ſay certaine prayers, and then is all holy. And in diuers places there ſtandeth a kind of Image which in their language they call Ada. And they haue diuers great ſtones carued, whereon they powre water, & throw thereupon ſome Rice, Wheat, Barley, and ſome other things. This Ada hath foure hands with clawes. Moreouer, they haue a great place made of Stone like to a Well with ſteps to goe downe; wherein the water ſtandeth very foule and ſtinketh: for the great quantitie of Flowers, which continually they throw into it, doe make it ſtinke. There be alwayes many people in it: for they ſay when they waſh themſelues in it, that their ſinnes be forgiuen them, becauſe God, as they ſay, did waſh himſelfe in that place. They gather vp the ſand in the bottome of it, and ſay it is holy.

Ada an Idoll, it may ſeeme, of Adam, whom ſome haue dreamed to haue both ſexes, with foure hands, &c. after diuided into Male and Female.

They neuer pray but in the water, and they waſh themſelues ouer head, and lade vp water with both their hands, and turne themſelues about, and then they drinke a little of the water three times, and ſo goe to their Gods which ſtand in thoſe houſes. Some of them will waſh a place which is their length, and then will pray vpon the earth with their armes and legges at length out, and will riſe vp and lie down, and kiſſe the ground twentie or thirtie times, but they will not ſtirre their right foot. And ſome of them will make their Ceremonies with fifteene or ſixteene pots little and great, and ring a little Bell when they make their mixtures ten or twelue times: and they make a circle of water round about their pots and pray, and diuers ſit by them, and one that reacheth them their Pots: and they ſay diuers things ouer their pots many times, and when they haue done, they goe to their Gods, and ſtrow their Sacrifices which they thinke are very holy, and marke many of them which ſit by, in the foreheads, which they take as a great gift. There come fiftie and ſometime an hundred together, to waſh them in this Well, and to offer to theſe Idols. They haue in ſome of theſe Houſes their Idols ſtanding, and one ſitteth by them in warme weather with a fanne to blow winde vpon them. And when they ſee any companie comming, they ring a little Bell which hangeth by them, and many giue their almes, but eſpecially thoſe which come out of the Countrey. Many of them are blacke and haue clawes of braſſe with long nayles, & ſome ride vpon Peacocks & other Fowles which bee euill fauoured, with long hawkes bills, and ſome like one thing and ſome another, but none with a good face. Among the reſt there is one which they make great account of: for they ſay hee giueth them all things both food and apparell, and one ſitteth alwayes by him with a fanne to make winde towards him.

Idolatrous rites.

Funerals by burning.

Here ſome bee burned to aſhes, ſome ſcorched in the fire and throwne into the water, and

Dogs and Foxes doe preſently eate them. The Wiues here doe burne with their Husbands when they die, if they will not, their heads be ſhauen, and neuer account is made of them afterward. The people goe all naked ſaue a little cloth bound about their middle. Their women haue their neckes, armes and eares decked with rings of Siluer, Copper, Tinne, and with round hoopes made of Iuorie, adorned with Amber ſtones, and with many Agats, and they are marked with a great ſpot of red in their foreheads, and a ſtroke of red vp to the crowne, and ſo it runneth three manner of wayes. In the Winter, which is our May, the men weare quilted Gownes of cotton like to our Mattraces and quilted Caps like to our great Grocers morters, with a ſlit to looke out at, and ſo tyed downe beneath their eares. If a man or a woman be ſicke and like to die, they will lay him before their Idols all night, and that ſhall helpe him or make an end of him. And if he doe not mend that night, his friends will come and ſit with him a little and crie, and afterwards will carrie him to the waters ſide, and ſet him vpon a little raft made of reeds, and ſo let him goe downe the Riuer. When they bee married the man and the woman come to the water ſide, and there is an old man which they call a Bramane, that is, a Prieſt, a Kow, and a Calfe, and a Kow with Calfe. Then the Man and the Woman, the Kow and Calfe, and the old man goe into the water together, and they giue the old man a white cloth of foure yards long, and a baſket croſſe-bound with diuers things in it: the cloth hee layeth vpon the backe of the Kow, and then he taketh the Kow by the end of the tayle, and ſayeth certaine words: and ſhee hath a Copper or a Braſſe pot full of water, and the man doeth hold his hand by the old mans hand, and the wiues hand by her huſbands, and all haue the Kow by the tayle, and they powre water out of the pot vpon the Kowes tayle, and it runneth through all their hands, and they lade vp water with their hands, and then the old man doeth tye him and her together by their clothes. Which done, they goe round about the Kow and Calfe, and then they giue ſomwhat to the poore which be alwaies there, and to the Bramane or Prieſt they giue one Kow and Calfe, and afterward goe to diuers of their Idols and offer money, and lie downe flat vpon the ground and kiſſe it diuers times, and then goe their way. Their chiefe Idols be blacke and euill-fauored, their mouthes monſtrous, their eares gilded, and full of Iewels, their teeth and eyes of Gold, Siluer, and Glaſſe, ſome hauing one thing in their hands, and ſome another. You may not come into the houſes where they ſtand, with your ſhooes on. They haue continually Lampes burning before them.

From Bannaras I went to Patenaw downe the Riuer Ganges: where in the way wee paſſed many faire Townes, and a Countrie very fruitfull: and many very great Riuers doe enter into Ganges, and ſome of them as great as Ganges, which cauſe Ganges to be of a great bredth, and ſo broad that in the time of raine you cannot ſee from one ſide to the other. Theſe Indians when they be ſcorched and throwne into the water, the men ſwimme with their faces downewards, the women with their faces vpwards, I thought they tyed ſomething to them to cauſe them to doe ſo: but they ſay no. There bee very many Thieues in this Countrie, which bee like to the Arabians: for they haue no certaine abode, but are ſometime in one place, and ſometime in another. Here the women be ſo decked with Siluer and Copper, that it is ſtrange to ſee, they vſe no ſhooes by reaſon of the rings of Siluer and Copper which they weare on their toes. Here at Patanaw they finde Gold in this manner. They dig deepe pits in the earth, and waſh the earth in great bolls, and therein they find the Gold, and they make the pits round about with bricke, that the earth fall not in. Patanaw is a very long and a great Towne. In times paſt it was a Kingdome, but now it is vnder Zelabdim Echebar the Great Mogor. The Men are tall and ſlender, and haue many old folkes among them: the Houſes are ſimple, made of earth, and couered with ſtraw, the Streets are very large. In this Towne there is a trade of Cotton, and cloth of Cotton, much Sugar, which they carrie from hence to Bengala and India, very much Opium, and other commodities. Hee that is chiefe here vnder the King, is called Tipperdas, and is of great account among the people. Here in Patanaw I ſaw a diſſembling Prophet which ſate vpon an Horſe in the Market place, and made as though he ſlept, and many of the people came and touched his feet with their hands, and then kiſſed their hands. They tooke him for a great man, but ſure he was a laſie lubber. I left him there ſleeping. The people of theſe Countries be much giuen to ſuch prating and diſſembling hypocrites.

From Patanaw I went to Tanda, which is in the Land of Gouren. It hath in times paſt beene a Kingdome, but now is ſubdued by Zelabdim Echebar. Great trade and traffique is here of Cotton, and of cloth of Cotton. The people goe naked with a little cloth bound about their waſte. It ſtandeth in the Countrie of Bengala. Here be many Tigres, wilde Buffes, and great ſtore of wilde Fowle: they are very great Idolaters. Tanda ſtandeth from the Riuer Ganges a league, becauſe in times paſt, the Riuer flowing ouer the bankes in time of raine did drowne the Countrie and many Villages, and ſo they doe remaine. And the old way which the Riuer Ganges was wont to runne, remaineth drie, which is the occaſion that the Citie doeth ſtand ſo farre from the water. From Agra downe the Riuer Iemena, and downe the Riuer Ganges, I was fiue moneths comming to Bengala, but it may be ſayled in much ſhorter time.

The Port is called Cacchegate. All the Countrie is ſet with Bambos or Canes made ſharpe at both the ends and driuen into the earth, and they can let in the water and drowne the ground aboue knee deepe, ſo that Men nor Horſes can paſſe. They poiſon all the waters if any warres bee. Here they haue much Silke and Muske, and cloth made of Cotton. The people haue eares which be maruelous great of a ſpanne long, which they draw out in length by deuices when they bee young. Here they be all Gentiles, and they will kill nothing. They haue Hoſpitals for Sheepe, Goats, Dogs, Cats, Birds, and for all other liuing creatures. When they be old and lame they keepe them vntill they die. If a man catch or buy any quicke thing in other places and bring it thither, they will giue him money for it, or other victuals, and keepe it in their Hoſpitals, or let it goe. They will giue meat to the Ants. Their ſmall money is Almonds, which oftentimes they vſe to eate.

In Mexico they vſe likewiſe for ſmall money the fruit Cacao, which are like Almonds.

We went through the Wilderneſſe, becauſe the right way was full of thieues, where we paſſed the Countrie of Gouren, where we found but few Villages, but almoſt all Wilderneſſe, and ſaw many Buffes, Swine and Deere, Graſſe longer then a man, and very many Tigres. Not farre from Porto Piqueno South-weſtward, ſtandeth an Hauen which is called Angeli, in the Countrie of Orixa. It was a Kingdome of it ſelfe, and the King was a great friend to ſtrangers. Afterwards it was taken by the King of Patan, which was their neighbour, but he did not enioy it long, but was taken by Zelabdim Echebar, which is King of Agra, Delli, and Cambaia. Orixa ſtandeth ſixe dayes iourney from Satagan South-weſtward. In this place is very much Rice, and cloth made of Cotton, and great ſtore of cloth which is made of Graſſe, which they call Yerua, it is like a Silke. They make good cloth of it which they ſend for India, and diuers other places. To this Hauen of Angeli come euery yeere many ſhips out of India, Negapatan, Sumatra, Malacca, and diuers other places; and lade from thence great ſtore of Rice, and much cloth of Cotton wooll, much Sugar, and long Pepper, great ſtore of Butter and other victuals for India. Satagam is a faire Citie for a Citie of the Moores, and very plentifull of all things. Here in Bengala they haue euery day in one place or other a great Market which they call Chandeau, and they haue many great Boats which they call Pericoſe, wherewithall they goe from place to place and buy Rice, and many other things: theſe Boats haue foure and twenty or ſixe and twenty Oares to rowe them, they be great of burthen, but haue no couerture. Here the Gentiles haue the water of Ganges in great eſtimation, for hauing good water neere them, yet they will fetch the water of Ganges a great way off, and if they haue not ſufficient to drinke, they will ſprinkle a little on them, and then they thinke themſelues well. From Satagam I trauelled by the Countrie of the King of Tippara or Porto Grande, with whom the Mogores or Mogen haue almoſt continuall warres. The Mogen which be of the Kingdome of Recon * and Rame, be ſtronger then the King of Tippara, ſo that Chatigan or Porto Grande is oftentimes vnder the King of Recon.

There is a Countrie foure dayes iourney from Conche before mentioned, which is called Bottanter, and the Citie Bottia, the King is called Dermain; the people whereof are very tall and ſtrong, and there are Merchants which come out of China, and they ſay out of Muſcouia or Tartarie. And they come to buy Muske, Cambals, Agats, Silke, Pepper, and Saffron like the Saffron of Perſia. The Countrie is very great, three moneths iourney. There are very high Mountaines in this Countrie, and one of them ſo ſteepe, that when a man is ſixe dayes iourney off it he may ſee it perfectly. Vpon theſe Mountaines are people which haue eares of a ſpanne long: if their eares be not long they call them Apes. They ſay that when they bee vpon the Mountaines, they ſee ſhips in the Sea ſayling to and fro; but they know not from whence they come, nor whither they goe. There are Merchants which come out of the Eaſt, they ſay, from vnder the Sunne, which is from China, which haue no beards, and they ſay there it is ſomthing warme. But thoſe which come from the other ſide of the Mountaines, which is from the North, ſay there it is very cold. Theſe Northerne Merchants are apparelled with woollen Cloth and Hats, white Hoſen cloſe, and Boots which bee of Muſcouia or Tartarie. They report that in their Countrie they haue very good Horſes, but they bee little: ſome men haue foure, fiue, or ſixe hundred Horſes and Kine: they liue with Milke and Fleſh. They cut the tayles of their Kine, and ſell them very deare, for they be in great requeſt, and much eſteemed in thoſe parts. The haire of them is a yard long, the rumpe is aboue a ſpanne long: they vſe to hang them for brauerie vpon the heads of their Elephants: they be much vſed in Pegu and China: they buy and ſell by ſcores vpon the ground. The people be very ſwift on foot.

Bacola.

Houſes and apparell.

From Chatigan in Bengala, I came to Bacola; the King whereof is a Gentile, a man very well diſpoſed, and delighteth much to ſhoot in a Gunne. His Countrie is very great and fruitfull, and ſtore of Rice, much Cotton cloth, and cloth of Silke. The Houſes be very faire and high builded, the Streets large, the People naked, except a little cloth about their waſte. The Women weare great ſtore of ſiluer hoopes about their neckes and armes, and their legs are ringed with Siluer and Copper, and rings made of Elephants teeth.

Serrepore.

From Bacola I went to Serrepore which ſtandeth vpon the Riuer of Ganges, the King is called Chondery. They be all hereabout Rebels againſt the King Zelabdim Echebar: for here are ſo many Riuers and Ilands, that they flee from one to another, whereby his Horſemen cannot preuaile againſt them. Great ſtore of Cotton cloth is made here.

Sinnergan.

Pythagoreans.

Sinnergan is a Towne ſixe leagues from Serrepore, where there is the beſt and fineſt cloth made of Cotton that is in all India. The chiefe King of all theſe Countries is called Iſacan, and he is chiefe of all the other Kings, and is a great friend to all Chriſtians. The Houſes here, as they be in the moſt part of India, are very little, and couered with ſtraw, and haue a few mats round about the walls, and the doore to keepe out the Tigres and the Foxes. Many of the people are very rich. Here they will eate no fleſh, nor kill no beaſt; they liue of Rice, Milke, and fruits. They goe with a little cloth before them, and all the reſt of their body is naked. Great ſtore of Cotten cloth goeth from hence, and much Rice, wherewith they ſerue all India, Ceilon, Pegu, Malacca, Sumatra, and many other places.

Dwelling in Boats.

I went from Serrepore the eight and twentieth of Nouember, 1586. for Pegu in a ſmall Ship or Foiſt of one Albert Carauallos, and ſo paſſing downe Ganges, and paſſing by the Iland of Sundiua, Porto Grande, or the Countrie of Tippera, the Kingdome of Recon and Mogen, leauing them on our left ſide with a faire winde at North-weſt: our courſe was South and by Eaſt, which brought vs to the Barre of Negrais to Pegu: if any contrary winde had come, wee had throwne many of our things ouer-boord: for we were ſo peſtered with people and goods, that there were ſcant place to lie in. From Bengala to Pegu is ninety leagues. We entred the Barre of Negrais, which is a braue Barre, and hath foure fathomes water where it hath leaſt. Three dayes after we came to Coſmin, which is a very pretie Towne, and ſtandeth very pleaſantly, very well furniſhed with all things. The people be very tall and well diſpoſed; the women white, round faced, with little eyes: the houſes are high built, ſet vpon great high poſts, and they goe vp to them with long Ladders for feare of the Tigres which be very many. The Countrie is very fruitfull of all things. Here are very great Figs, Oranges, Cocoes, and other fruits. The Land is very high that we fall withall; but after we be entred the Barre, it is very lowe and full of Riuers, for they goe all to and fro in Boats, which they call Paroes, and keepe their houſes with wife and children in them.

Medon.

From the Barre of Nigrais to the Citie of Pegu is ten dayes iourney by the Riuers. We went from Coſmin to Pegu in Paroes or Boats, and paſſing vp the Riuers wee came to Medon, which is a pretie Towne, where there be a wonderfull number of Paroes, for they keepe their Houſes and Markets in them all vpon the water. They rowe to and fro, and haue all their merchandiſes in their Boats with a great Sombrero or Shadow ouer their heads to keepe the Sunne from them, which is as broad as a great Cart wheele made of the leaues of the Coco trees and Figge trees, and is very light.

Dela.

Cirion.

From Medon we went to Dela, which is a very faire Towne, and hath a faire Port into the Sea, from whence goe many ſhips to Malacca, Mecca, and many other places. Here are eighteene or twenty very great and long houſes, where they tame and keepe many Elephants of the Kings: for there about in the Wilderneſſe they catch the wilde Elephants. It is a very fruitfull Countrie. From Dela wee went to Cirion, which is a good Towne, and hath a faire Port into the Sea, whither come many ſhips from Mecca, Malacca, and Sumatra, and from diuers other places. And there the ſhips ſtay and diſcharge, and ſend vp their goods in Paroes to Pegu.

From Cirion we went to Macao, which is a pretie Town, where we left our Boats and in the morning taking Delingeges, which are a kinde of Coaches made of cords and cloth quilted, and carried vpon a ſtang between three or foure men: we came to Pegu the ſame day. Pegu is a Citie very great, ſtrong, and very faire, with walls of ſtone, and great ditches round about it. There are two Townes, the old Towne and the new. In the old Towne are all the Merchants ſtrangers, and very many Merchants of the Countrie. All the goods are ſold in the old Towne which is very great, and hath many ſuburbs round about it, and all the houſes are made of Canes which they call Bambos, and be couered with ſtraw. In your Houſe you haue a Ware-houſe, which they call Godon, which is made of bricke, to put your goods in, for oftentimes they take fire and burne in an houre foure or fiue hundred houſes: ſo that if the Godon were not, you ſhould bee in danger to haue all burned, if any winde ſhould riſe, at a trice. In the new Towne is the King, and all his Nobilitie and Gentrie. It is a Citie very great and populous, and is made ſquare and with very faire Walls, and a great Ditch round about it full of water with many Crocodiles in it: it hath twenty Gates, and they be made of ſtone, for euery ſquare fiue Gates. There are alſo many Turrets for Centinels to watch, made of wood, and gilded with Gold very faire. The Streets are the faireſt that euer I ſaw, as ſtraight as a line from one Gate to the other, and ſo broad, that ten or twelue men may ride afront thorow them. On both ſides of them at euery mans doore is ſet a Palmer tree, which is the Nut-tree which make a very faire ſhew and a very commodious ſhadow, ſo that a man may walke in the ſhade all day. The houſes be made of wood, and couered with tiles.

Gilded houſes.

The Kings houſe is in the middle of the Citie, and is walled and ditched round about: and the buildings within are made of wood very ſumptuouſly gilded, and great workmanſhip is vpon the fore-front, which is likewiſe very coſtly gilded. And the houſe wherein his Pagode or Idoll ſtandeth is couered with tiles of ſiluer, and all the walls are gilded with gold. Within the firſt Gate of the Kings houſe is a great large roome, on both ſides whereof are houſes made for the Kings Elephants, which bee maruellous great and faire, and are brought vp to warres and in ſeruice of the King. And among the reſt hee hath foure white Elephants, which are very ſtrange and rare: for there is none other King which hath them but hee if any other King hath one, hee will ſend vnto him for it. When any of theſe white Elephants are brought vnto the King, all the Merchants in the Citie are commanded to ſee them, and to giue him a preſent of halfe a Ducat, which doth come to a great ſumme: for that there are many Merchants in the Citie. After that you haue giuen your preſent you may come and ſee them at your pleaſure, although they ſtand in the Kings houſe. This King in his Title is called the King of the white Elephants. If any other King haue one, and will not ſend it him, hee will make warre with him fot it: for hee had rather loſe a great part of his Kingdome, then not to conquer him. They doe very great ſeruice vnto theſe white Elephants; euery one of them ſtandeth in an houſe gilded with gold, and they doe feed in veſſels of ſiluer and gilt. One of them when hee doth goe to the Riuer to bee waſhed, as euery day they doe, goeth vnder a Canopie of cloth of gold or of ſilke carried ouer him by ſixe or eight men, and eight or ten men goe before him playing on Drummes, Shawmes, or other Inſtruments: and when hee is waſhed and commeth out of the Riuer, there is a Gentleman which doth waſh his feet in a ſiluer Baſin: which is his office giuen him by the King. There is no ſuch account made of any blacke Elephant, bee he neuer ſo great. And ſurely there bee wonderfull faire and great, and ſome bee nine cubits in height. And they doe report that the King hath aboue fiue thouſand Elephants of warre, beſides many other which be not taught to fight.

Foure white Elephants.

The King of the white Elephants.

Taking of Elephants.

This King hath a very large place wherein hee taketh the wilde Elephants. It ſtandeth about a mile from Pegu, builded with a faire Court within, and is in a great Groue or Wood: and there be many Hunts-men, which goe into the Wilderneſſe with ſhee Elephants: for without the ſhee they are not to be taken. And they be taught for that purpoſe: and euery Hunter hath fiue or ſixe of them: and they ſay that they anoint the ſhee Elephants with a certaine ointment, which when the wilde Elephant doth ſmell, he will not leaue her. When they haue brought the wilde Elephant neere vnto the place, they ſend word vnto the Towne, and many Horſemen and footmen come out and cauſe the ſhee Elephant to enter into a ſtraight way which doth goe to the Palace, and the ſhee and hee doe runne in: for it is like a Wood: and when they be in, the gate doth ſhut. Afterward they get out the female: and when the male ſeeth that he is left alone, he weepeth and crieth, and runneth againſt the walls, which be made of ſo ſtrong trees, that ſome of them doe breake their teeth with running againſt them. Then they pricke him with ſharpe canes, and cauſe him to goe into a ſtrait houſe, and there they put a rope about his middle & about his feet, and let him ſtand there three or foure dayes without eating or drinking: and then they bring a female to him, with meate and drinke, and within few dayes he becommeth tame. The chiefe force of the King is in theſe Elephants. And when they goe into the warres they ſet a frame of wood vpon their backes, bound with great cords, wherein ſit foure or ſixe men, which fight with Gunnes, Bowes and Arrowes, Darts and other weapons. And they ſay that their skinnes are ſo thicke that a pellet of an Harquebuſſe will ſcarce pierce them, except it bee in ſome tender place. Their weapons be very bad. They haue Gunnes, but ſhoot very badly in them, Darts and Swords ſhort without points.

King ſits twice a day.

The King keepeth a very great State: when hee ſitteth abroad, as hee doth euery day twice, all his Noblemen which they call Shemines, ſit on each ſide, a good diſtance off, and a great guard without them. The Court yard is very great. If any man will ſpeake with the King, hee is to kneele downe, to heaue vp his hands to his head, and to put his head to the ground three times, when hee entreth, in the middle way, and when hee commeth neere to the King: and then hee ſitteth downe and talketh with the King: if the King like well of him, hee ſitteth neere him within three or foure paces: if hee thinke not well of him, hee ſitteth further off. When hee goeth to warre, hee goeth very ſtrong. At my being there hee went to Odia in the Countrie of Siam with three hundred thouſand men, and fiue thouſand Elephants. Thirty thouſand men were his Guard. Theſe people doe eate Roots, Herbes, Leaues, Dogs, Cats, Rats, Serpents, and Snakes; they refuſe almoſt nothing. When the King rideth abroad, he rideth with a great Guard, and many Noblemen, oftentimes vpon an Elephant with a fine Caſtle vpon him very fairely gilded with gold; and ſometimes vpon a great frame like an Horſ-liter, which hath a little houſe vpon it couered ouer head, but open on the ſides, which is all gilded with gold, and ſet with many Rubies and Saphires, whereof hee hath infinite ſtore in his Countrie, and is carried vpon ſixteene or eighteene mens ſhoulders. This Coach in their Language is called Serrion. Very great feaſting feaſting and triumphing is many times before the King both of men and women. This King hath little force by Sea, becauſe he hath but very few ſhips.

Hee hath houſes full of Gold and Siluer, and bringeth in often, but ſpendeth very little, and hath the Mines of Rubies and Saphires, and Spinelles. Neere vnto the Palace of the King, there is a Treaſure wonderfull rich; the which becauſe it is ſo neere, hee doth not account of it: and it ſtandeth open for all men to ſee in a great walled Court with two Gates, which bee alwayes open. There are foure Houſes gilded very richly, and couered with Lead: in euery one of them are Pagodes or Images of huge ſtature and great value. In the firſt is the Picture of a King in Gold with a Crowne of gold on his head, full of great Rubies and Saphires, and about him there ſtand foure Children of Gold. In the ſecond houſe is the picture of a Man in Siluer wonderfull great, as high as an houſe; his Foot is as long as a man, and hee is made ſitting, with a Crowne on his head very rich with Stones. In the third houſe is the picture of a Man greater then the other made of Braſſe, with a rich Crowne on his head. In the fourth and laſt houſe doth ſtand another made of Braſſe, greater then the other, with a Crowne alſo on his head very rich with Stones. In another Court not farre from this, ſtand foure other Pagodes or Idols, maruellous great of Copper, made in the ſame place where they doe ſtand; for they bee ſo great, that they be not to be remoued: they ſtand in foure Houſes gilded very faire, and are themſelues gilded all ouer ſaue their heads, and they ſhew like a blacke Morian. Their expences in gilding of their Images are wonderfull. The King hath one Wife and aboue three hundred Concubines, by which they ſay he hath foureſcore or foureſcore & ten Children. He ſitteth in Iudgement almoſt euery day. They vſe no ſpeech, but giue vp their ſupplications written in the Leaues of a Tree with the point of an Iron bigger then a Bodkin. Theſe Leaues are an elle long, and about two inches broad; they are alſo double. Hee which giueth in his ſupplication, doth ſtand in a place a little diſtance off with a preſent. If his matter bee liked of, the King accepteth of his preſent, and granteth his requeſt: if his ſute be not liked of, hee returneth with his preſent; for the King will not take it.

In India there are few commodities which ſerue for Pegu, except Opium of Cambaia, painted Cloth of Saint Thome, or of Maſulipatan, and white cloth of Bengala, which is ſpent there in great quantitie. They bring thither alſo much Cotton, Yarne red coloured with a Root which they call Saia, which will neuer loſe his colour: it is very well ſold here, and very much of it commeth yeerely to Pegu. By your money you loſe much. The ſhips which come from Bengala, Saint Thome, and Maſulipatan, come to the barre of Nigrais and to Coſmin. To Martauan a port of the Sea in the Kingdome of Pegu, come many ſhips from Malacca laden with Sandall, Porcelanes, and other wares of China, and with Camphora of Borneo, and Pepper from Achen in Sumatra. To Cirion a Port of Pegu come ſhips from Mecca with Woollen cloth, Scarlets, Veluets, Opium, and ſuch like. There are in Pegu eight Brokers, whom they call Tareghe, which are bound to ſell your goods at the price which they bee worth, and you giue them for their labour two in the hundred: and they be bound to make your debt good, becauſe you ſell your Merchandizes vpon their word. If the Broker pay you not at his day, you may take him home, and keepe him in your houſe: which is a great ſhame for him. And if hee pay you not preſently, you may take his Wife and Children and his Slaues, and bind them at your doore, and ſet them in the Sunne; for that is the Law of the Countrey. Their current money in theſe parts is a kind of braſſe which they call Ganſa, wherewith you may buy Gold, Siluer, Rubies, Muske, and all other things. The Gold and Siluer is Merchandiſe, and is worth ſometimes more, and ſometimes leſſe, as other wares bee. This braſen money doth goe by a weight which they call a Biza; and commonly this Biza after our account is worth about halfe a Crowne or ſomewhat leſſe. The Merchandize which bee in Pegu, are Gold, Siluer, Rubies, Saphires, Spinells, Musk, Beniamin or Frankincenſe, long Pepper, Tinne, Lead, Copper, Lacca whereof they make hard Waxe, Rice, & Wine made of Rice, and ſome Sugar.

The Elephants doe eate the Sugar Canes, or elſe they would make very much. And they conſume many Canes likewiſe, in making of their Varellaes or Idoll Temples, which are in great number both great and ſmall. They bee made round like a Sugar loafe, ſome are as high as a Church, very broad beneath, ſome a quarter of a mile in compaſſe; within they be all earth done about with ſtone. They conſume in theſe Varellaes great quantitie of Gold; for that they bee all gilded aloft: and many of them from the top to the bottome: and euery ten or twelue yeeres they muſt be new gilded, becauſe the raine conſumeth off the Gold: for they ſtand open abroad. If they did not conſume their gold in theſe vanities, it would bee very plentifull and good cheape in Pegu. About two dayes iourney from Pegu, there is a Varelle or Pagode, which is the Pilgrimage of the Pegues: it is called Dogonne, and is of a wonderfull bigneſſe, and all gilded from the foot to the top. And there is an houſe by it, wherein the Tallipaies which are their Prieſts doe Preach. This houſe is fiue and fiftie paces in length, and hath three pawnes or walkes in it, and fortie great Pillars gilded, which ſtand betweene the walkes; and it is open on all ſides with a number of ſmall pillars, which bee likewiſe gilded: it is gilded with Gold, within and without. There are houſes very faire round about for the Pilgrimes to lie in; and many goodly Houſes for the the Tallipoies, to Preach in, which are full of Images both of men and women, which are all gilded ouer with Gold. It is the faireſt place, as I ſuppoſe, that is in the world: it ſtandeth very high, and there are foure wayes to it, which all along are ſet with Trees of fruits, in ſuch wiſe that a man may goe in the ſhade aboue two miles in length. And when their Feaſt day is, a man can hardly paſſe by water or by land for the great preſſe of people; for they come from all places of the Kingdome of Pegu thither at their Feaſt.

In Pegu they haue many Tallipoies or Prieſts, which Preach againſt all abuſes. Many men reſort vnto them. When they enter into their Kiack, that is to ſay, their holy place or Temple, at the doore there is a great Iarre of water with a Cocke or ladle in it, and there they waſh their feet; and then they enter in, and lift vp their hands to their heads, firſt to their Preacher, and then to the Sunne, and ſo ſit downe. The Tallipoies goe very ſtrangely apparelled, with one Camboline or thinne cloth next to their bodie of a browne colour, another of yellow, doubled many times vpon their ſhoulder: and thoſe two bee girded to them with a broad Girdle: and they haue a Skinne of leather hanging on a ſtring about their neckes, whereupon they ſit, bare headed and bare footed; for none of them weareth Shooes; with their right armes bare, and a great broad Sombrero or ſhadow in their hands to defend them in the Summer from the Sunne, and in the Winter from the Raine. When the Tallipoies or Prieſts take their Orders, firſt they goe to Schoole vntill they bee twentie yeeres old or more, and then they come before a Tallipoie, appointed for that purpoſe, whom they call Rowli: hee is of the chiefeſt and moſt learned, and hee oppoſeth them, and afterward examineth them many times, whether they will leaue their Friends, and the companie of all Women, and take vpon them the habite of a Tallipoie. If any be content, then he rideth vpon an Horſe about the ſtreets very richly apparelled, with Drums and Pipes, to ſhew that he leaueth the riches of the world to bee a Tallipoie. In few dayes after, he is carried vpon a thing like an Horſlitter, which they call a Serion, vpon ten or twelue mens ſhoulders in the apparell of a Tallipoie, with Pipes and Drums, and many Tallipoies with him, and all his friends, and ſo they goe with him to his Houſe, which ſtandeth without the Towne, and there they leaue him. Euery one of them hath his Houſe, which is very little, ſet vpon ſixe or eight Poſts, and they goe vp to them with a Ladder of twelue or foureteene ſtaues. Their Houſes bee for the moſt part by the high wayes ſide, and among the Trees, and in the Woods. And they goe with a great Pot made of wood or fine earth, and couered, tyed with a broad girdle vpon their ſhoulder, which commeth vnder their arme, wherewith they goe to begge their victuals which they eate, which is Rice, Fiſh, and Herbes. They demand nothing, but come to the doore, and the people preſently doe giue them, ſome one thing, and ſome another: and they put all together in their Pot: for they ſay they muſt eate of their Almes, and therewith content themſelues. They keepe their Feaſts by the Moone: and when it is new Moone they keepe their greateſt feaſt: and then the people ſend Rice and other things to that Kiack or Church of which they bee; and there all the Tallipoies doe meete which bee of that Church, and eate the victuals which are ſent them. When the Tallipoies doe Preach, many of the people carrie them gifts into the pulpit where they ſit and preach. And there is one which ſitteth by them to take that which the people bring. It is deuided among them. They haue none other Ceremonies nor ſeruice that I could ſee, but onely Preaching.

Iamahey fiue and twentie dayes iourney Northeaſtward from Pegu.

Phyſicke in the Diuels name.

They burne their Dead.

I went from Pegu to Iamahey, which is in the Countrey of the Langeiannes, whom wee call Iangomes; it is fiue and twentie dayes iourney Northeaſt from Pegu. In which iourney I paſſed many fruitfull and pleaſant Countries. The Countrey is very low, and hath many faire Riuers. The Houſes are very bad, made of Canes, and couered with Straw. Here are many wilde Buffes, and Elephants. Iamahey is a very faire and great Towne, with faire houſes of ſtone, well peopled, the ſtreetes are very large, the men very well ſet and ſtrong, with a cloth about them, bare headed and bare footed: for in all theſe Countries they weare no Shooes. The Women bee much fairer then thoſe of Pegu. Heere in all theſe Countries they haue no Wheat. They make ſome cakes of Rice. Hither to Iamahey come many Merchants out of China, and bring great ſtore of Muske, Gold, Siluer, and many other things of China worke. Heere is great ſtore of Victuals: they haue ſuch plentie, that they will not milke the Buffles, as they doe in all other places. Heere is great ſtore of Copper and Beniamin. In theſe Countries when the people bee ſicke they make a vowe to offer meat vnto the Diuell, if they eſcape: and when they bee recouered they make a Banquet with many Pipes and Drums and other Inſtruments, and dauncing all the night, and their friends come and bring gifts, Cocos, Figges, Arrecaes, and other Fruits, and with great dauncing and reioycing they offer to the Diuell, and ſay, they giue the Diuell to eate, and driue him out. When they bee dauncing and playing they will cry and hallow very loud; and in this ſort they ſay they driue him away. And when they be ſicke a Tallipoie or two euery night doth ſit by them and ſing, to pleaſe the Diuell that hee ſhould not hurt them. And if any die hee is carried vpon a great frame made like a Tower, with a couering all gilded with gold made of Canes, carried with foureteene or ſixteene men, with Drums and Pipes and other inſtruments playing before him to a place out of the Towne and there is burned. He is accompanied with all his Friends and Neighbours, all men: and they giue to the Tallipoies or Prieſts many Mats and Cloth: and then they returne to the houſe and there make a Feaſt for two dayes: and then the Wife with all the neighbours Wiues and her friends, goe to the place where he was burned, and there they ſit a certaine time and cry, and gather the peeces of bones which bee left vnburned and burie them, and then returne to their houſes and make an end of all mourning. And the men and women which bee neere of kin doe ſhaue their heads, which they do not vſe except it be for the death of a friend: for they much eſteeme of their haire.

Caplan is the place where they finde the Rubies, Saphires, and the Spinelles: it ſtandeth ſixe dayes iourney from Aua in the Kingdome of Pegu. There are many great high Hills out of which they digge them. None may goe to the Pits but onely thoſe which digge them.

Caplan is the place where the Rubies and other precious Stones are found.

In Pegu, and in all the Countries of Aua, Langeiannes, Siam, and the Bramas, the men weare bunches or little round Balls in their priuie members: ſome of them weare two and ſome three. They cut the skinne and ſo put them in, one into one ſide and another into the other ſide; which they doe when they bee fiue and twentie or thirtie yeeres old, and at their pleaſure they take one or more of them out as they thinke good. When they be married the Husband is for euery Child which his Wife hath, to put in one vntill hee come to three, and then no more: for they ſay the women doe deſire them. They were inuented becauſe they ſhould not abuſe the Male ſexe. For in times paſt all thoſe Countries were ſo giuen to that Villanie, that they were very ſcarſe of people. It was alſo ordayned, that the Women ſhould not haue paſt three cubites of Cloth in their nether clothes, which they bind about them; which are ſo ſtrait, that when they goe in the ſtreets, they ſhew one ſide of the legge bare aboue the knee. The bunches aforeſaid bee of diuers ſorts: the leaſt be as bigge as a little Walnut, and very round: the greateſt are as bigge as a little Hens egge: ſome are of Braſſe, and ſome of Siluer: but thoſe of ſiluer bee for the King and his Noblemen. Theſe are gilded and made with great cunning, and ring like a little bell. There are ſome made of Lead, which they call Selwy, becauſe they ring but little: and theſe be of leſſer price for the poorer ſort. The King ſometimes taketh his out, and giueth them to his Noblemen as a great gift: and becauſe hee hath vſed them, they eſteeme them greatly. They will put one in, and heale vp the place in ſeuen or eight dayes.

Anthony Galuano writeth of theſe Bals. Captaine Saris alſo and others

The Bramas which bee of the Kings Countrey (for the King is a Brama) haue their legges or bellies, or ſome part of their body, as they thinke good themſelues, made blacke with certaine things which they haue: they vſe to pricke the skinne, and to put on it a kind of Anile or Blacking, which doth continue alwayes. And this is counted an Honour among them: but none may haue it but the Bramas which are of the Kings kindred.

Theſe people weare no Beards: they pull out the haire on their faces with little pinſons made for that purpoſe. Some of them will let ſixteene or twentie haires grow together, ſome in one place of his face and ſome in another, and pulleth out all the reſt: for he carrieth his pinſons alwayes with him to pull the haires out aſſoone as they appeare. If they ſee a man with a beard they wonder at him. They haue their teeth blacked both men and women, for they ſay a Dog hath his teeth white, therefore they will blacke theirs.

The people of Pegu weare no Beards.

The Pegues if they haue a ſute in the law which is ſo doubtfull that they cannot well determine it, put two long Canes into the water where it is very deepe: and both the parties goe into the water by the poles, and there ſit men to Iudge, and they both doe diue vnder the water, and he which remaineth longeſt vnder the water doth winne the ſute.

Triall of ſuites

The tenth of Ianuarie I went from Pegu to Malacca, paſſing by many of the Ports of Pegu, as Martauan, the Iland of Tani, from whence commeth great ſtore of Tinne which ſerueth all India, the Ilands of Tanaſeri, Iunſalaon, and many others; and ſo came to Malacca the eight of Februarie, where the Portugals haue a Caſtle which ſtandeth neere the Sea. And the Countrey faſt without the Towne belongeth to the Malayos, which is a kind of proud people. They goe naked with a cloth about their middle, and a little roll of cloth about their heads. Hither come many ſhips from China, and from the Malucos, Banda, Timor, and from many other Ilands of the Ianas, which bring great ſtore of Spices and Drugs, and Diamants and other Iewels. The voyages into many of theſe Ilands belong vnto the Captaine of Malacca: ſo that none may goe thither without his licence: which yeeld him great ſummes of money euery yeere. The Portugals heere haue oftentimes warres with the King of Achem, which ſtandeth in the Iland of Sumatra: from whence commeth great ſtore of Pepper and other Spices euery yeere to Pegu and Mecca, within the Red Sea, and other places.

Malacca.

When the Portugals goe from Macao in China to Iapan, they carrie much white Silke, Gold, Muske, and Porcelanes: and they bring from thence nothing but Siluer. They haue a great Caracke which goeth thither euery yeere, and ſhee bringeth from thence euery yeere aboue ſixe hundred thouſand Cruſadoes: and all this Siluer of Iapan, and two hundred thouſand Cruſadoes more in Siluer which they bring yeerely out of India, they imploy to their great aduantage in China: and they bring from thence Gold, Muske, Silke, Copper, Porcelanes, and many other things very coſtly and gilded. When the Portugals come to Canton in China to traffique, they muſt remaine there but certaine dayes: and when they come in at the Gate of the Citie, they muſt enter their names in a booke, and when they goe out at night they muſt put out their names. They may not lie in the Towne all night, but muſt lie in their Boats without the Towne.

And their dayes being expired, if any man remaine there, they are euill vſed and impriſoned. A man may keepe as many Concubines as hee will, but one Wife onely. All the Chineans, Iaponians, and Cauchin Chineans doe write right downwards, and they doe write with a fine Penſill made of Dogs or Cats haire.

Laban. Diamants. Iamba. Gold.

Laban is an Iland among the Ianas from whence come the Diamants of the New water. And they find them in the Riuers: for the King will not ſuffer them to digge the Rocke. Iamba is an Iland among the Ianas alſo, from whence come Diamants. And the King hath a maſſe of earth which is Gold; it groweth in the middle of a Riuer: and when the King doth lacke Gold, they cut part of the earth and melt it, whereof commeth Gold. This maſſe of earth doth appeare but once in a yeere; which is when the water is low: and this is in the moneth of Aprill.

Bima.

Bima is an other Iland among the Ianas, where the Women trauell and labour as our men doe in England, and the Men keepe houſe and goe where they will.

He returneth from Malacca. Bengala. Ceylon.

The nine and twentieth of March 1588. I returned from Malacca to Martauan, and ſo to Pegu, where I remained the ſecond time vntill the ſeuenteenth of September, and then I went to Coſmin, and there tooke ſhipping: and paſſing many dangers by reaſon of contrarie winds, it pleaſed God that wee arriued in Bengala, in Nouember following: where I ſtayed for want of paſſage vntill the the third of Februarie 1589. and then I ſhipped my ſelfe for Cochin. In which Voyage wee endured great extremitie for lacke of freſh water: for the weather was extreame hot, and we were many Merchants and Paſſengers, and we had verie many calmes, and hot weather. Yet it pleaſed God that we arriued in Ceylon the ſixth of March, where we ſtaied fiue daies to water and to furniſh our ſelues with other neceſſarie prouiſion. This Ceylon is a braue Iland, verie fruitfull and faire; but by reaſon of continuall Warres with the King thereof, all things are verie deare: for he will not ſuffer any thing to be brought to the Caſtle where the Portugals be: wherefore oftentimes they haue great want of victuals. Their prouiſion of victuals commeth out of Bengala euerie yeere. The King is called Raia, and is of great force; for hee commeth to Columbo, which is the place where the Portugals haue their Fort, with an hundred thouſand men, and many Elephants. But they be naked people all of them; yet many of them bee good with their Pieces which be Muskets. When the King talketh with any man, hee ſtandeth vpon one legge, and ſetteth the other foot vpon his knee with his Sword in his hand: it is not their order for the King to ſit but to ſtand. His apparell is a fine painted cloth made of Cotton-wooll about his middle: his haire is long and bound vp with a little fine cloth about his head: all the reſt of his bodie is naked. His Guard are a thouſand men, which ſtand round about him, and hee in the middle; and when he marcheth, many of them goe before him, and the reſt come after him. They are of the race of the Chingalayes, which they ſay are the beſt kind of all the Malabars. Their Eares are verie large; for the greater they are, the more Honourable they are accounted. Some of them are a ſpanne long. The Wood which they burne is Cinamon wood, and it ſmelleth verie ſweet. There is great ſtore of Rubies, Saphires, and Spinelles in this Iland: the beſt kinde of all bee here; but the King will not ſuffer the Inhabitants to digge for them, leſt his Enemies ſhould know of them, and make Warres againſt him, and ſo driue him out of his Countrey for them. They haue no Horſes in all the Countrey. The Elephants bee not ſo great as thoſe of Pegu, which bee monſtrous huge: but they ſay all other Elephants doe feare them, and none dare fight with them, though they bee verie ſmall. Their Women haue a cloth bound about them from their middle to their knee: and all the reſt is bare. All of them bee Blacke and but little, both Men and Women. Their Houſes are verie little, made of the branches of the Palmer or Coco-tree, and couered with the Leaues of the ſame tree.

Large Eares.

Blacke and little people.

Cape de Comori. Coulam. Cochin.

The eleuenth of March wee ſayled from Ceylon, and ſo doubled the Cape of Comori. Not farre from thence, betweene Ceylon and the maine land of Negapatan, they fiſh for Pearles. And there is fiſhed euery yeere verie much; which doe ſerue all India, Cambaia, and Bengala, it is not ſo orient as the Pearle of Baharim in the Gulfe of Perſia. From Cape de Comori, wee paſſed by Coulam, which is a Fort of the Portugals: from whence commeth great ſtore of Pepper, which commeth for Portugall: for oftentimes there ladeth one of the Carackes of Portugall. Thus paſſing the Coaſt we arriued in Cochin the two and twentieth of March, where wee found the weather warme, but ſcarſitie of Victuals: for here groweth neither Corne nor Rice: and the greateſt part commeth from Bengala. They haue here very bad water, for the Riuer is farre off. This bad water cauſeth many of the people to bee like Lepers, and many of them haue their legges ſwollen as big as a man in the waſte, and many of them are ſcant able to goe. Theſe people here be Malabars, and of the race of the Naires of Calicut: and they differ much from the other Malabars. Theſe haue their heads very full of haire, and bound vp with a ſtring: and there doth appeare a buſh without the band wherewith it is bound. The men be tall and ſtrong, and good Archers with a long Bow and a long Arrow, which is their beſt weapon: yet there bee ſome Caliuers among them, but they handle them badly.

People with ſwollen legges mentioned alſo by Ioh. Huygen.

How Pepper groweth.

Here groweth the Pepper; and it ſpringeth vp by a Tree or a Pole, and is like our Iuie berry, but ſomething longer like the Wheat-eare: and at the firſt the bunches are greene, and as they waxe ripe they cut them off and drie them. The leafe is much leſſer then the Iuie leafe and thinner. All the Inhabitants here haue very little houſes, couered with the leaues of the Coco-trees. The men be of a reaſonable ſtature; the women little; all blacke, with a cloth bound about their middle hanging downe to their hammes: all the reſt of their bodies be naked: they haue horrible great Eares with many rings ſet with Pearles and Stones in them. The King goeth incached, as they doe all; he doth not remaine in a place aboue fiue or ſixe dayes: he hath many houſes, but they be but little: his Guard is but ſmall: he remoueth from one houſe to another according to their order. All the Pepper of Calicut and courſe Cinamom, groweth here in this Countrey. The beſt Cinamom doth come from Ceylon, and is pilled from fine young Trees. Here are verie many Palmer or Coco-trees, which is their chiefe food: for it is their meat and drinke: and yeeldeth many other neceſſarie things, as I haue declared before.

Blacke people.

The Naires which be vnder the King or Samorin, which bee Malabars, haue alwayes Warres with the Portugals. The King hath alwayes peace with them; but his people goe to the Sea to rob and ſteale. Their chiefe Captaine is called Cogi Alli; he hath three Caſtles vnder him. When the Portugals complaine to the King, he ſaith he doth not ſend them out: but hee conſenteth that they goe. They range all the Coaſt from Ceylon to Goa, and goe by foure or fiue Parowes or Boates together; and haue in euery one of them fiftie or threeſcore men, aud boord preſently. They doe much harme on that Coaſt, and take euery yeere many Foiſts and Boates of the Portugals. Many of theſe people bee Moores. This Kings Countrey beginneth twelue leagues from Cochin, and reacheth neere vnto Goa. I remained in Cochin vntill the ſecond of Nouember, which was eight moneths; for that there was no paſſage that went away in all that time: if I had come two dayes ſooner I had found a paſſage preſently. From Cochin I went to Goa, where I remained three dayes. From Cochin to Goa, is an hundred leagues. From Goa I went to Chaul, which is threeſcore leagues, where I remained three and twentie dayes: and there making my prouiſion of things neceſſarie for the Ship, from thence I departed to Ormus; where I ſtayed for a paſſage to Balſora fiftie dayes. From Goa to Ormus is foure hundred leagues.

Heere I thought good, before I make an end of this my Booke, to declare ſome things which India and the Countrey farther Eaſtward doe bring forth.

The Pepper groweth in many parts of India, eſpecially about Cochin: and much of it doeth grow in the Fields among the buſhes without any labour: and when it is ripe they goe and gather it. The Shrub is like vuto our Iuie-tree: aad if it did not runne about ſome Tree or Pole, it would fall downe and rot. When they firſt gather it, it is greene; and then they lay it in the Sunne, and it becometh blacke.

The Pepper tree.

The Ginger groweth like vnto our Garlike, and the root is the Ginger: it is to bee found in many parts of India.

Ginger.

The Cloues doe come from the Iles of the Moluccoes, which bee diuers Ilands: their Tree is like to our Bay-tree.

Cloues.

The Nutmegs and Maces grow together, and come from the Iles of Banda: the tree is like to our Walnut-tree, but ſomewhat leſſer.

Nutmegs and Maces.

The white Sandoll is wood very ſweet and in great requeſt among the Indians; for they grind it with a little water, and annoint their bodies therewith: it commeth from the Ile of Timor.

Camphora is a precious thing among the Indians, and is ſold dearer then Gold. I thinke none of it commeth for Chriſtendome. That which is compounded commeth from China: but that which groweth in Canes and is rhe beſt, commeth from the great Ile of Borneo.

Camphora.

Lignum Aloes commeth from Cauchinchina.

Lignum Aloes.

The Benjamin commeth out of the Countries of Siam and Iangomes.

The Long Pepper groweth in Bengala, in Pegu, and in the Ilands of the Ianas.

Long Pepper.

The Muske commeth out of Tartarie, and is made after this order, by report of the Merchants which bring it to Pegu to ſell; In Tortarie there is a litle beaſt like vnto a yong Roe, which they take in ſnares, and beat him to death with the blood: after that they cut out the bones, and beat the fleſh with the blood very ſmall, and fill the skin with it: and hereof commeth the Muske.

Muske.

Of the Amber they hold diuers opinions; but moſt men ſay it commeth out of the Sea, and that they finde it vpon the ſhores ſide.

The Rubies, Saphires, and Spinelles, are found in Pegu.

Rubies, Saphires, and Spinelles.

The Diamants are found in diuers places, as in Biſnagar, in Agra, in Delli, and in the Ilands of the Ianas.

Diemants.

The beſt Pearles come from the Iland of Baharim in the Perſian Sea, the worſer from the Piſcaria, neere the Ile of Ceylon, and from Aynam a great Iland on the Southermoſt Coaſt of China.

Spodium and many other kindes of Drugges come from Cambaia.

Spodium.

Now to returne to my Voyage; from Ormus I went to Balſora or Baſora, and from Baſora to Babilon: and wee paſſed the moſt part of the way by the ſtrength of men by halling the Boat vp the Riuer with a long cord. From Babilon I came by land to Moſul, which ſtandeth neere to Niniue, which is all ruinated and deſtroyed; it ſtandeth faſt by the Riuer of Tigris. From Orſa.

Moſul I went to Merdin, which is in the Countrey of the Armenians; but now there dwell in that place a people which they call Cordies, or Curdi. From Merdin I went to Orfa, which is a very faire Towne, and it hath a goodly Fountaine full of Fiſh; where the Moores hold many great Ceremonies and opinions concerning Abraham: for they ſay hee did once dwell there. From thence I went to Bir, and ſo paſſed the Riuer of Euphrates. From Bir I went to Aleppo, where I ſtayed certaine moneths for companie; and then I went to Tripolis; where finding Engliſh ſhipping, I came with a proſperous voyage to London, where by Gods aſſiſtance I ſafely arriued the nine and twentieth of Aprill 1591. hauing beene eight yeeres out of my natiue Countrey.

Indian Obſeruations gathered out of the Letters of NICOLAS PIMENTA, Viſiter of the Ieſuites in India, and of many others of that Societie, written from diuers Indian Regions; principally relating the Countries and accidents of the Coaſt of Coromandel, and of Pegu.

Letter of Francis Fernandes.

NIcholas Pimenta*, the Indian Viſiter in his Letter to Claudius Aquauiua the Generall of the Ieſuites, relateth his viſitation-Voyage from Goa in December 1597. To Cochin firſt, the occurrents wherein hee had certified by Letter in the Vice-royes ſhip or Caracke, which being richly laden was accidentally and irrecouerably fired, the Ordnance thundring Death and lightning manifold miſchieues to the Reſcuers. Hee ſent from Cochin a Miſſion to Bengala, Francis Fernandes, and Dominicke Soſa; another to Pegu, Melchior Fonſera, and Andrew Boues. The effect whereof appeared in their letters. Fernandes writ from Siripur in Bengala, in Ianuarie 1599. the dangers of their Voyage by Malabar Pirats, a three dayes Tempeſt, the ſhelues of Ganges, before they arriued at Gullum, two hundred and ten miles vp that Riuer: where they left one of their Societie which could meanly write to teach that Schoole. Soſa indeuoured to learne the Bengalan Language and tranſlated into it a tractate of Chriſtian Religion, in which were confuted the Gentile and Mahumetan errours: to which was added a ſhort Catechiſme by way of Dialogue, which the Children frequenting the Schoole learned by heart, and taught the Seruants in their Families, with the ſigne of the Croſſe and other things belonging to Chriſtianitie. They perſwaded them to erect an Hoſpitall, buying a houſe and houſholdſtuffe to that purpoſe, and reformed the courſes of many which liued in Piracie, and looſe luſts: and in October departed thence to the Great Port ſixe hundred miles from the Small Port or Porto Pequeno, not without dangers from Tigres and Theeues. In the midway in the Kingdome of Chandecan, where they ſtayed a moneth to reforme diſorders by Luſts and Diſcord, and Baptiſed two hundred; The King gaue them a place to build a Church in, and monies to that purpoſe, with libertie to Preach the Goſpell. In the Woods of that Kingdome great ſtore of Waxe is made which is thence tranſported to other parts of India. At Siripur in December, they arriued and were receiued as Angels from Heauen, by reaſon the Biſhop of Cochin had Excommunicated the new Captayne with his followers, from which Sentence they hoped the Ieſuites would exempt them: and although wee were loth to intermeddle, yet could we not but giue anſwer to them. At Siripur the Gouernour gaue vs leaue to Preach and aſſigned ſixe hundred peeces of Gold for reuenue, and roome to build a Church, with promiſe of all neceſſaries. I ſend you two Boyes of Bengala to bee inſtructed in the Colledge, and next yeere will ſend two others as your Worſhip commanded. When we came to Chatigan wee learned that the King of Aracan was gone to the warre of Pegu. Thus farre Fernandes.

Father Baltaſar Sequeira was Elected to the Peguan miſſion, which went to the Towne of Saint Thomas, thence to ſayle with the firſt opportunitie with Father Iohn Coſta for Pegu: but wee arriued at Saint Thomas before they were gone. We departed from Cochin, and in the way viſited the new Church in the Kingdome of Porca; thence came to Coulan, and paſſed the reſt of the way with great feare; for the King of Trauancor had certified vs, that the King of Madure was comming againſt him with ſeuentie thouſand armed men, and many Elephants. But wee viſited three and thirtie Churches in his Kingdome, and turned to the Promontorie Cori, and beyond that to the Fiſhing Coaſt euen to Turacurin. In the Towne Punicale, I met F. Henrie whom F. Xauier had there left two and fiftie yeeres before, ſtill of able bodie, and daily writing in the Malabar language to illuſtrate the Chriſtian Religion. Periapatan is the chiefe Citie of the Parauelines, where wee left a Reſidence of two Prieſts, which might paſſe as farre as Tripalacur, which two places by Cape Ramanancor are made farre diſtant by Sea, but by Land are neere each other. Wee reſted all night in the Tents of Fiſhermen, which with many lights round about prohibited the aſſaults of Elephants. But we ſaw nothing but Peacockes; and a Viper had conueyed herſelfe into our ſtuffe, which vſeth to kill within ſeuen houres after her ſtriking, which was eſpied. There come from the Regions about ſixtie thouſand into theſe Tents of Fiſhermen, bringing all their Families: Our Prieſts ſay Maſſe in the Churches erected on the ſhore, appeaſe tumults and haue care of good order, without whom all that companie would bee diſſolued. Wee paſſed from Manare not without great perill by tempeſt to Negapatan, where Father Francis Paez lieth buried, whom the Inhabitants worſhip as a Saint. Many Portugals dwell there, and many winter there, which come from the Coaſt of China, Bengala, Pegu, and Malaca. They buy a place for fiue hundred Duckets for a new Reſidence of ours.

The Naich of Tanaor deſired a Church in his Port, and at Trangobar ſixe miles from Negapatan another was begun. From hence wee went by land to Saint Thomas, trauelling twelue dayes in a pleaſant Countrey, beautified with Groues and Streames, enriched with a fertile ſoile and wholſome eyre. But ſo prodigious and innumerable were their Idols, in many very faire Temples, and other leſſe Oratories almoſt without number, that Superſtition contended with Ambition; and the Coloſſes of their Idols were remoued from place to place in Chariots as high as ſteeples, by thouſands of men ſetting their ſhoulders to the Wheeles. In our way wee ſaw Cidambaran the mother Citie of their Superſtitions, furniſhed with gorgeous Temples. Their Brachmanes haue thirtie thouſand Duckets reuenue, whereof but twelue thouſand are now payed.

Naichus or King of Gingi.

The Naichus of Gingi was come thither, in whoſe Dominion it ſtandeth. Hee commanded that we ſhould be brought to his Preſence. Before vs two hundred Brachmanes went in a ranke to ſprinkle the houſe with Holy water, and to preuent Sorcerie againſt the King, which they vſe to doe euery day that the King firſt entreth into any houſe. We found him lying on a ſilken Carpet leaning on two Cuſhions, in a long ſilken Garment, a great Chaine hanging from his necke, diſtinguiſhed with many Pearles and Gemmes, all ouer his breſt, his long haire tyed with a knot on the crowne, adorned with Pearles; ſome Princes and Brachmanes attended him. He entertained vs kindly, and maruelled much that wee chewed not the leaues of Betele which were offered vs, and diſmiſſed vs with gifts of precious Clothes wrought with Gold, deſiring a Prieſt of vs for his new Citie which hee was building. The next day wee went away, which we had not done, had any told vs of a ſtrange Spectacle that day there to bee ſeene, which wee after came certainly to know.

Legendarie lies.

There were twentie Prieſts which they call Iogues, which threw themſelues from the higheſt pinnacle of the Temple for this cauſe. There is a Temple of Perimal, in which is worſhipped an Ape called Hanimant, whom they report to haue beene a God, and for I know not what offence, with many other thouſands of Gods (in like wiſe metamorphoſed) to haue beene transformed into an Ape, and to haue ruled ouer all thoſe Apes in that place. But hauing neceſſarie occaſion to paſſe from Ramanancor to Ceilan, wanting ſhipping, hee leaped ouer the waters, and at euery leape made an Iland or hill of Sands, ſo making way for himſelfe and his. They ſay it was his Tooth, which the Viceroy Conſtantine caſt into the fire, notwithſtanding the Ethnikes offer of three hundred thouſand Duckets for the Redemption. Theſe Ethnikes alſo fable, that a holy man at Cidambaran for penance ſake kept his foot many yeeres nayled thorow with an Iron nayle; and when God forbad him that penance, hee refuſed and ſaid he would neuer giue it ouer, till hee might ſee God dancing about him. At length God yeelded to him, and with the Sunne, Moone and Starres danced before that Saint, they playing on Inſtruments and dancing. From God, as he danced, fell a Gold chaine off his foot, whence Cidambaran receiued the name, ſignifying A Golden Chaine. Now at this time was a great Controuerſie amongſt theſe Gentiles, whether it were lawfull to place the Signe of Perimal (which is nothing but a Maſt or Pole gilded, with an Ape at the foot) in the Temple of Cidambaran. Some refuſed, others by their Legats importunately vrged, and the Naichus of Gingi Decreed to erect it in the Temple, the Prieſts of the Temple which were the Treaſurers, withſtanding, and threatning if it were done to caſt downe themſelues from the top. The Brachmanes of the Temple ſware to doe the like after they had buried the former, which yet after better aduiſe they performed not. About twentie had periſhed in that precipitation on that day of our departure; whereat the Naichus angrie, cauſed his Gunners to ſhoot at the reſt, which killed two of them, the reſt wandring in vncertaine places. A Woman alſo was ſo hote in this zealous quarrell that ſhee cut her owne throat. The Maſt with the Ape was neuertheleſſe erected.

of good Fortune, God of great Prouinces, King of the greateſt Kings, and God of Kings, Lord of all Horſe-forces, Maſter of thoſe which know not how to Speake, Emperour of three Emperours, Conquerour of all which hee ſeeth, and Keeper of all which hee hath ouercome; Dreadfull to the eight Coaſts of the world, the Vanquiſher of Mahumetan Armies, Ruler of all Prouinces which hee hath taken, Taker of the Spoiles and Riches of Ceilan; which farre exceedeth the moſt Valiant men, which cut off the head of the Inuincible Viraualalan; Lord of the Eaſt, South, North, Weſt, and of the Sea; Hunter of Elephants, which liueth and glorieth in virtue Militarie. Which titles of Honour enioyeth the moſt Warlike Vencatapadin, Ragin, Deuamagan Ragel, which now raigneth and gouerneth this World. Hee now reſideth in Chandegrin, and in times paſt raigned farre and wide, from Cape Cori to the Kingdomes adjoyning to Goa, on the Coaſts of both Seas, till Idalcan and others (as the Naichi before mentioned) ſhooke off his yoke. Hee was now embroiled in warre with the Naichus of Madure. I appointed Father Simon Sa Rector of the Colledge of Saint Thomas, to begin a Miſſion thither as ſoone as hee could. A Seminarie was erected at Meliapor, of the chiefe Children of the Badagades by the almes of Deuout men, and a Schoole of the Malabars adioyned, in which is taught the Tongue of Tamul (or vulgar) and the Badagan vſed by the Courtiers. Whiles a new Peguan miſſion was talked of, there came ſhips from Pegu which related the turbulent ſtate of that Kingdome, and I will heere adioyne what I learned of credible perſons which a long time had beene eye-witneſſes of Pegues proſperitie and aduerſitie.

Miſeries of Pegu: and how cauſed.

THe King of Pegu, Father of the preſent, of the race of the Bramas, was the mightieſt of all which haue raigned in Pegu. For hee ſubdued twelue Kingdomes to his Empire * viz. the Kingdome of Cauelan, whence come the beſt Saphires and Rubies; Aua, in which are Mines of Ciprian Braſſe, Lead and Siluer; Bacan, in which are many Gold mines; Tangram, which abounds with Lead and Lac; Prom, which aboundeth alſo in Lead and Lac; Iangoma, ſtored with Copper, Muske, Pepper, Silke, Gold, Siluer; Lawran, where is ſtore of Bejoine, enough to lade ſhips; the eight and ninth, are the Kingdomes of Trucon; whence many China wares are tranſported to vs; the tenth and eleuenth, are the Kingdomes of Cablan abounding in Gemmes, neere to the Kingdome of Aaua, betwixt it and China. The twelfth, is the Kingdome of Sion (or Siam) which he ſubdued laſt, and in that Expedition is ſaid to haue armed 1060000. men, taking one of ten with him to that warre. Hee raigned ſixe and thirtie yeeres in ſuch affluence of all things, that one hundred Ships laden with Rice would not haue ſeemed to diminiſh the ſtore. The plentie of Gemmes was ſuch, that in one moneth a man might haue beſtowed many talents of Gold thereon. Yet now there are ſcarſely found in all that Kingdome any men, but a few which with the King haue betaken themſelues to the Caſtle, which with Women and Children are ſaid not to exceed ſeuen thouſand. For in late times they haue beene brought to ſuch miſerie and want, that they did eate Mans fleſh and kept publike ſhambles thereof, Parents abſtained not from their Children, and Children deuoured their Parents. The ſtronger by force preyed on the weaker, and if any were but skinne and bone, yet did they open their intrailes to fill their owne and ſucked out their braines. The women went about the ſtreets with kniues to like butcherly purpoſes. The cauſe of this miſery was this.

Miſerable execution.

See this Combate before in Balbi.

The former King being dead, his Sonne the ſecond moneth of his Raigne hearing that the King of Aua his Vncle affected ſome change of State, and that fortie of his Grandes had conſpited with him, committed thoſe fortie and Burned them all, together with their Wiues, Children, Friends and Familiers, cauſing all that fled out of the fire to bee Cut in peeces. This eſtranged his Subiects hearts, whereof hee had experience in the Warre againſt his Vncle, and therefore offered him ſingle Combate vpon an Elephant, the ſuruiuor to poſſeſſe the Scepter, In this Combat, the King of Pegu ſlew his Vncle of Aua. But whiles hee was in that expedition, the King of Siam entred the Peguan Confines with an Armie as farre as a Towne called Satan, diuulging a rumour that hee came to ayde his Lord the King. This was much ſtomacked by the King of Pegu, who ſent an Armie againſt him, commanding the Generall to bring him Captiue. But this Armie diſpoſed it ſelfe, and neglecting the Kings command, returned to their homes. The King after his returne ſent to the Siamite to come to him, who offered to continue his Tribute, but refuſed to come.

Siam inuaded.

Peguan loſſes.

Two yeeres after, the Peguan with an Armie of nine hundred thouſand men, marcheth againſt Siam and beſiegeth it. The Siamite makes him faire offers, but protracted the time till the third moneth, that in the inundation which happeneth in March, the Kings Armie might be indammaged. That Riuer like Nilus (but in another moneth) vſeth to couer one hundred and twentie miles circuit in ground, and ſo ouerwhelmed this Armie, that ſcarſely ſeuenty thouſand of that great multitude returned to Martauan, and thoſe without Horſes and Elephants. The King of Pegu hauing once and againe made ſuch Expeditions in vaine, at length hee ſent his Brother the King of Iangoma with many Commanders; twiſe alſo hee ſent his Sonne thither with a great Armie: which committed hoſtile ſpoyles, but yet euer returned with the loſſe of more then halfe their Armie: and his Sonne in the laſt Expedition was killed with ſhot of a Piece. Thus enraged and reſolued to reuenge, hee made great preparations three yeeres together, ther, and then thought to carrie with him all the Peguans to this warre. But of them, preſenting the former dreadfull ſlaughters and loſſes to their mindes, ſome became Talapoies (Friers in their Ethniciſme) others hid themſelues in Deſarts, and Woods, and many ſold themſelues for Slaues. The King cauſed Ximibogo his Vncle to ſearch the publike Records, and to preſſe one halfe to the warres, he alſo proclaimed that all which in ſuch a ſpace had turned Talapoies ſhould returne ſecular; the young ſhould be compelled to the warres, the old to be exiled into the Region of the Bramas, whom alſo he after changed away for Horſes. He ordained alſo that all the Peguans ſhould be branded in the right hand, that euery mans name, Countrie and condition might be known. They ſeeing themſelues thus opprobriouſly branded, Talapoies forced to returne Secular, and old men exchanged for Horſes, began to rebell.

The Coſmians firſt ſet a King ouer them, againſt whom the King ſent an Armie, which ſpoiled all the Countrie, and brought many Captiues, whom the King cauſed to be burned: and continuing his warre vpon them, forced by famine, they yeelded to his mercy, but he with exquiſite torments ſlue them all. The next ſtage of his furie was the Kingdome of Aua, where hee commanded his ſonne the Gouernour to bring them all into the Kingdome of Pegu, now ſo deſtitute of Inhabitants; but the aire not agreeing, they brake out in puſhes and diſeaſes, which alſo infected the Natiues, that ſome with impatience of the torture threw themſelues into the Riuer. Some of the Peguſians in this time had with the Siamites help, brought the Caſtle of Murmulan into their poſſeſſion, whom the King beſieged a yere together. And the Siamites comming on them vnexpected, ouerthrew his Armie, killed his Horſes and Elephants, ſlue and drowned many, tooke others: and ſo became Lords of all that Countrie, and many Peguan Peeres fled to them; whoſe wiues, children, and families the King after his manner deſtroyed vtterly with fire, ſword and water. And thus the whole tract from Pegu to Martauan and Murmulan, was brought to a Wilderneſſe.

Coſmi deſtroyd.

Aua diſpeopled.

Murmulan alienated.

Martauan deſolate.

Whiles hee beſieged Murmulan, hee ſent for his ſonne the Vice-roy of Prom, who imagined that it was to proclaime him Heire apparant, and ſo preferre him to his elder brother the Prince of Aua: but when he came was ſent to the ſiege of Murmulan, which he excuſing was threatned by his father, and commanded preſently to ſalute his brother, and bee gone thither. Hee returned to Prom, and rebelled againſt his father. In theſe broiles the Siamite taketh opportunitie, and marcheth againſt Pegu in harueſt time. Some of their fruits were haſtily inned, the reſt burned by the Kings command. The Siamite layeth ſiege to Pegu, in which were then numbred an hundred and fifty thouſand Peguans, Bramans, and of other Nations; three thouſand peeces of Ordnance, one thouſand of them braſſe. The ſiege continued from Ianuarie to Aprill, 1596. By the helpe of ſome Portugals and Turkes, the Citie eſcaped, and the rumour of Portugals comming by the way of Camboia raiſed the ſiege, the Siamite fearing to loſe his owne, whiles he ſought to winne that which was anothers. But Famine ſucceeded with a worſe ſiege, which made the forren Souldiers leaue the Citie, a few remayning which were fled from Tangu. The King hereupon commanded the King or Vice-roy of Tangu, to gather the harueſt then ripe, and to imbarke it and the people for Pegu. Hee anſwered that hee would ſend halfe, and that he or his ſonne would come. The King ſends foure principall men to fetch him and the prouiſion by force. The Tanguan kills thoſe Commiſſioners, poſſeſſed himſelfe of the ſhips and Souldiers, and by Proclamation prohibiteth returne and aide to Pegu. Thus the famine encreaſed in the Citie, inſomuch that they killed and did eate each other. The King cauſed the people to be numbred, and there finding ſeuen thouſand Siamites, cauſed them all to be ſlaine, and diuided the prouiſion to the reſt, of which there were not of all ages and ſexes aboue thirty thouſand remayning.

Prom threatned.

Pegu beſieged;

Forſaken;

Famiſhed.

The King of Prom held out three yeeres againſt his father, and then repenting, ſent meſſengers that he would bring all the people of Prom, which were 50000. to the Citie. Hereupon the King pardoned him, and ſent him preſents. But his chiefe Counſellour which had ſet him on worke, fearing his head would be the price of his reconciliation, poiſoned this young Prince, and aſpiring to the Kingdome, was within ſeuen dayes after killed by the Grandes, of whom euery weeke almoſt yeelded a riſing Sunne ſetting in a bloudy Cloude: inſomuch that in two moneths ſpace, of fifty thouſand ſcarcely fifty men remained, which going to Pegu, left Prom to the habitation of wilde beaſts. Many Peguſians yet remained in other Countries whither they had fled, as in Iangoma, Arracan, Siam. The Talipois perſwaded the Iangoman, brother to the King of Pegu, to vſurpe the Kingdome, which he refuſed, pretending his Oath. They replied, that no Religion hindered, if he placed his brother in the Vabat, that is a Golden throne, to be adored of the people for a God. He alſo found out another tricke, that his brother of Pegu was borne before his father was enthronized, himſelfe after he was now King, begotten alſo of the old King of Pegus daughter, whereas the Kings mother was not a Kings daughter. The King is ſaid to haue killed two hundred Eunuches, leſt they ſhould betray his huge treaſures: it is alſo reported, that his father cauſed to be caſt three hundred ſixty ſixe Combalengas of Gold (a great kinde of Gourd) which none knoweth where they be. He hath alſo ſixty ſeuen Idols of Gold adorned with Iewels of all ſorts, foure Store-houſes with great plenty of Prom made a Wilderneſſe.

Trickes for treaſon.

Great treaſures.

Lead, Braſſe, Ordnance, without weight. This was then the ſtate of the Kingdome of Pegu, brought to one Citie, and that almoſt deſtroyed.

Fernandes his Letter.

Martauans fertilitie.

The reſt wee will ſupply out of the Epiſtle of Andrew Boues, and Francis Fernandes, Ieſuites. This writes concerning Martauan, that it is a large Kingdome, but now deſolate by the Siamites warre no leſſe then Pegu. But two hundred thouſands of the Inhabitants lurke in Woods and Mountaines. The King hath only two or three fortified Cities, not able to withſtand the Siamite. The fertilitie of that Countrie is ſuch, that it yeeldeth yeerely a threefold Haruest, and at what time of the yeere ſoeuer they ſowe, the ſeeds come to ripeneſſe. Cochin and Malaca alone carrie from thence yeerely thirty ſhips laden with Graine. The Woods alſo abound with diuers Fruit-trees; the Herbes are almoſt all both odoriferous and medicinable. It is able to lade yeerely twenty of the greateſt ſhips with Pitch and Timber. Their Fountaines, Riuers, wilde and tame Beaſts, Mines of Gold, Siluer, Braſſe, Iron, and Lead, alſo of Rubies and Gemmes, likewiſe their commodious Ports I omit: as alſo the temperature of the aire, and the hopes of conuerting the countrie, ſince fruſtrated.

King of Pegu taken.

600. Elephants and 600. horſes burdens of gold and gems taken.

Sirian.

Miſerable ſpectacle.

Boues writeth, the eight and twentieth of March, 1600. that the King of Pegu beleagred with a ſtraight ſiege by the Kings of Tangu and Arracan, deliuered himſelfe (vnable to hold out any longer) to the King of Tangu, which cauſed his head and the Queenes alſo to bee cut off. The like he did to his ſonne the Prince. After this he went to the Tower where the Kings treaſure was kept, which was ſo much that ſcarcely ſixe hundred Elephants and as many Horſes were ſufficient to carrie away the Gold and Gemmes onely. For I ſay nothing of the Siluer and other Metals, as things of no price. The King of Arracan then abſent, hearing that the King of Tangu againſt his agreement with him had taken all this treaſure for himſelfe, and diſmiſſed the Armie without his Knowledge, came thither with the aide of the Portugals to inuade Tangu. I went thither with Philip Brito, and in fifteene dayes arriued at Sirian, the chieſe Port in Pegu. It is a lamentable ſpectacle to ſee the bankes of the Riuers ſet with infinite fruit-bearing trees, now ouerwhelmed with ruines of gilded Temples, and noble edifices; the wayes and fields full of skulls and bones of wretched Peguans, killed or famiſhed and caſt into the Riuer, in ſuch numbers that the multitude of carkaſſes prohibiteth the way and paſſage of any ſhip; to omit the burnings and maſſacres committed by this the cruelleſt of Tyrants that euer breathed.

Siluer and Braſſe.

Hot puniſhment for cold courage.

Pet. Williamſ. Floris, ſup. l. 3. cap. 14.

The King of Arracan is now ending his buſineſſe at the Tower of Macao, carrying thence the Siluer which the King of Tangu had left, exceeding three millions, beſides many and rare pieces of brazen Ordnance remayning in that Caſtle. The Kings of Siam and Iangoma with great forces haue inuaded the King of Tangu to deſpoile him of his ſpoiles. The King of Arracan is yet Lord of Pegu, though not acknowledged by thoſe which fled or hid themſelues, and hath deliuered the Port of Sirian to Philip de Brito, that the Peguan fugitiues might haue refuge vnder Portugall protection. Brito is in hand with building the Fort, and is earneſt for a Reſidence of our Society. The King of Siam in his way towards Tangu made irruption into the Kingdome of Martauan, but was twice repelled with loſſe; and hath therefore reenforced his Armie, withall commanding two of his Captaines for negligence and cowardiſe to bee drowned in Caldrons of ſcalding Oile, after which entring a third time hee hath ſubdued that Kingdome of Martauan. What after happened in Pegu and Siam, See before in Maſter Floris his Iournall. Wee will returne to Coromandel with Pimenta.

Town of Saint Thomas.

Gingi.

Iogues ſucceſſours of Gymnoſophiſts. They haue another ſort called Sanaſſes, which liue in Deſarts, and ſomtimes come forth ſtarke naked, as thoſe mentioned by Oneſicritus and Megaſthenes, but not ſo learned.

The Towne of Saint Thomas is famous by the Cathedrall Church, the Apoſtles Sepulchre, his houſe in the little Hill, his martyrdome in the great Hill, and the miracle of the Croſſe. Wee went thence to Gingi; the greateſt Citie we haue ſent in India, and bigger then any in Portugall, Liſbon excepted. In the midſt thereof is a Caſtle like a Citie, high walled with great hewen ſtone and encompaſſed with a ditch full of water: in the middle of it is a Rocke framed into Bulwarkes and Turrets, and made impregnable. The Naicus ſhewed vs his golden ſtuffe, amongſt which were two great Pots carried on their ſhoulders full of water for the King to drinke. The Iogues which had returned by land from Bengala, brought in ſuch veſſels water from Ganges for the Courtiers, they were encompaſſed with filthie baſe clothes, which they kiſſed as holy veſſels notwithſtanding. The Naicus appointed our lodging in the Tower, but the heat forced vs to the Groue (though conſecrated to an Idoll) the Iogues ambitiouſly affecting applauſe by tolerating in the open Court the moſt intolerable Sun-beames, ſometimes at noone (but ſildome) interpoſing a thinne Vaile. Wee ſaw one of them, which being ſhut vp in Iron Cage had there made himſelfe perpetuall priſoner, ſo walking with his head and feet out, that he neuer could ſit nor lie downe. At the ſides of the Caue hung forth an hundred Lampes, which at certaine times foure Iogues his attendants lighted. He ietted with great iollitie and glorie as if he gaue light to the world by his ſplendour.

The next day the inner part of the Caſtle was ſhewed vs, hauing no entrance but by the Gates which are perpetually guarded. In the Court the younger ſort were exerciſed in Tilts. Wee ſaw much Ordnance, Powder, and Shot; a Spring alſo of cleare water. The Naicus had beene here kept by his Vncle, whom yet by helpe of his friends he forced to become in the ſame place his vnwilling ſucceſſour, hauing put out his eyes. He was guarded homeward with a thouſand armed men: in the Streete were ranked three hundred Elephants as it were fitted to the warre. At the Porch one entertained him with an Oration in his praiſe, a thing vſuall in their ſolemne pompes. Chriſtapanaichus (that is his name) ſhewed vs another day his ſtore of Iewels, and gaue vs leaue in his new Citie, which hee called Chriſtapatama, to fixe a reſidence and erect a Church, two hundred pieces of gold being aſsigned to the Prieſt thereof, his Letters Patents written in the Tamulan and Badagan Languages. This new Citie is ſeated in the Land Arungor, neere the mouth of the Riuer Velarius. Thence we came to the Riuer Colocam. Cholgana a great man receiued vs with great kindneſſe. Hee is old and ſeuere, and hath cauſed Crocodiles to bee put in his Riuer for his ſecuritie, charging them not to hurt his owne people. They neuertheleſſe killed a man, whereupon I knowe not by what arts hee tooke two of them which were the malefactors, and put chaines about their neckes, and caſt them into a miry place, there to bee ſtoned by the people, and to die of famine. One of theſe we ſaw.

Cholganas Crocodiles charmed.

Wee paſſed thence to Trangambaran, and thence to Taniaor, the walls whereof are built of hewen ſtone, and it is the ſeat of another Naichus, who had lately renounced the world and prepared himſelfe for death, accompanied in that deuotion by his ſeuenty wiues, all which were to be burned in the ſame fire with his carkaſſe. Hee had beſtowed fiue thouſand pieces of gold in ſweet woods againſt that day. The Naichus of Madure is very ſuperſtitious, and reſigned his Palace to his Idol Chochanada, vpon the authoritie of a Prieſt which ſaid the Idoll by night had bidden him tell the King, that hee or I muſt dwell in this houſe. Hee daily ſits in iudgement, a Bramene ſtanding by, which euer and anone whineth out the name of the Idoll Aranganaſſa; and when one is weary another ſucceedeth, and continueth that acclamation, though hee ſits ſixe houres.

Simon Sa writes from Meliapor, the twentieth of Nouember, 1598. amongſt many other things of Paparagiu, which in one houſe kept three hundred Brachmans, and gaue hoſpitalitie to the Pilgrims which went to, or came from Tripiti, a famous Idoll three miles from Chandegrin. They purge their ſinnes by waſhing their bodies and ſhauing their heads and beards. The Idoll is in a cold hill compaſſed with fertile valleyes abounding with fruits, which none dare touch. There are plenty of Apes, which are ſo tame, that they will take meate out of ones hand. The people take them for a Nation of gods which hold familiaritie with Perimal. They worſhip Perimal in many figures, of a Man, an Oxe, Horſe, Lion, Hog, Ducke, Cocke.

Reformation of Saint Thomas Chriſtians

Emanuel Carualius in his Letters from Malaca, in Ianuarie, 1599. writeth of an Embaſſage ſent thither from the King of Camboia to obtaine ſome of the Fathers of Saint Paul (ſo the Ieſuites are called in the Eaſt Indies) to bee ſent into his Kingdome. This Kingdome of Camboia hath Cauci or Cochinchina on the North, Sion (or Siam) on the South, which alſo lieth in the midſt betwixt Pegu and Camboia, the Sea on the other ſide. It hath a Riuer which ouerfloweth yeerely. The Region is fertile, and hath alſo ſtore of Beioine and other merchandiſe. Within twenty yeeres laſt paſt this numerous people hath beene much diminiſhed by warres with Siam. Beyond Camboia are the Laos, which inhabite on the Riuers ſides, and Lakes made by it. For the Riuer runneth twelue hundred miles, and the head thereof is not knowne by the Camboyans. The Laos which dwelt aboue on the Riuer twenty yeeres agoe, would needs come downe the Riuer with an Armie of two hundred thouſand men, which all periſhed, and the King of Camboia periſhed alſo in the battell. His ſonne by helpe of the Portugals expelled the Laos, which ten yeeres together infeſted the Countrie. They haue many Cities and Temples like the Chinois and Iaponians, with their Bonzos.

Emanuel de Veiga from Chandegrin, in September, 1599. writeth of his Voyage from Saint Thomas thither. The ſecond day at night they lay at Triualur, where they ſaw their Idols ſolemne Proceſsion by night, carried into the ſtreet by eight Porters in a high Throne: the Image it ſelfe not aboue three ſpannes long clothed with an vpper garment of red ſilke, an inner ſhirt of linnen. An Elephant went before the pompe, conſecrated to the Idoll, carrying a white Banner on his backe; and after him three Oxen ſacred alſo thereto, on which ſate Drummers: after them Trumpetters and Pipers with diuerſified Inſtruments, ſtraight, crooked, great, ſmall. Theſe all made a confuſed ſound, without any obſeruation of order and time. After theſe came 30. women-dancers, which haue deuoted themſelues to the Idols perpetuall ſeruice, which may not marrie, but proſtitute themſelues for the moſt part, all goodly and richly arrayed, all carrying Lampes burning. And the Idoll came in the Rere with his Porters and Prieſts, liuing on the reuenues of the Temple. The common people followed with lights. They paſſed foure ſtreets, and in their returne ſet the Idoll in a place erected with pillars with a ſtone roofe, and all the companie compaſſed the Idoll three times, which done, they carried him to the Temple, where foure Brachmanes entertained him, which bowed their heads to the Idoll; one of them bringing on his head a basket of boyled Rice for the Idols ſupper, attended with Fanners to ſcarre away Flies. When the meate was ſet downe, a Curtaine was drawne, leſt any might ſee the Idoll eating, the Inſtruments ſounding the while. Soone after the Curtaine was drawne againe, the Rice remoued, the Miniſters gone in, and one comes forth which makes an Oration in his praiſe, and then all went into the Temple, where foure houres were ſpent in idle-idol-rites. The King of Biſnagar gaue vs leaue to erect a Church and make reſidence there, and was much delighted with the picture of Our Lady, and the things vttered by Father Ricius. This Father Francis Ricius writ at the ſame time of the great pleaſure which the King tooke in beholding the Image of our Sauiour, and of the bleſſed Virgin aduocata noſtra, (theſe are his words) by whoſe interceſsion the King and Nobilitie became ſo kinde to vs to giue vs leaue to build a Church, erect Croſſes, and conuert men, inſomuch that fifty families were to giue place, and depart from the ground, thereto aſsigned vs. The King of Biſnagar writ a Letter to Pimenta, beginning thus, The King of Kings and Great Lord, the Knight of Knights, Ouencatepati, that is, King after God, &c.

At the Feaſt of Perimals marriage was ſuch concourſe of people, that that dayes offering amounted to two hundred thouſand Ducats, the King, Queene and Courtiers being preſent. The Idoll was carried in a great triumphall Chariot drawne by ten thouſand men, about midnight, a mile and an halfe. The Feaſt of Kowes was ſolemnized a moneth before, and all the wayes filled with them: for they hold Perimal to haue beene the ſonne of a Kow. The rumour was that the King would warre vpon the Naichus of Tangaor called Aſtapanaicus, but his death preuented it, his three hundred Concubines being burned with him to honour his Exequies, willingly leaping into the flames. IOHN HVIGHEN van Linſchoten his Voyage to Goa, and obſeruations of the Eaſt Indies, abbreuiated.

VPon the eight of Aprill, being Good-friday, in the yeere of our Lord 1483. which commonly is the time when their ſhips ſet ſayle within foure or fiue dayes vnder or ouer, wee all together iſſued out out of the Riuer of Liſbon, and put to Sea, ſetting our courſe for the Ilands of Madera.

Chap. 3. The manner and order vſed in the ſhips in their Indian Voyages.

The ſhips are commonly charged with foure or fiue hundred men at the leaſt, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſſe, as there are Souldiers and Saylers to be found. When they goe out they are but lightly laden, onely with certaine pipes of Wine and Oyle, and ſome ſmall quantitie of merchandiſe, other thing they haue not in, but balaſt, and victuals for the companie, for that the moſt and greateſt ware that is ſent into India, are Rials of eight, becauſe the principall Factors for Pepper doe euery yeere ſend a great quantitie of money, wherewith to buy Pepper, as alſo diuers particular Merchants, as being the leaſt ware that men can carrie into India: for that in theſe Rials of eight they gaine at the leaſt forty per cento: when the ſhips are out of the Riuer, and enter into the Sea, all their men are muſtered, as well Saylers as Souldiers, and ſuch as are found abſent and left on land, being regiſtred in the Bookes, are marked by the Purſer, that at their returne they may talke with their Sureties, (for that euery man putteth in Sureties) and the goods of ſuch as are abſent, being found in the ſhip are preſently brought forth and priſed, and an Inuentorie being made, it is left to be diſpoſed at the Captaines pleaſure. The like is done with their goods that die in the ſhip, but little of it commeth to the owners hands, imbeſeled and priuily made away.

The Maſter and Pilot haue for their whole Voyage forth and home againe, each man an hundred and twenty Milreyes, euery Milrey being worth in Dutch money ſeuen Gilders, and receiue before hand, each man foure and twenty Milreyes, beſides that they haue Chambers both vnder in the ſhip, and Cabbins aboue the hatches, as alſo Primage, and certaine tunnes fraight. The like haue all the other Officers in the ſhip according to their degrees, and although they receiue money in hand, yet it coſteth them more in gifts before they get their places, which are giuen by fauour and good will of the Proueador.

The chiefe Boat-ſwain hath for his whole pay 50. Milreyes, and receiueth 10. in ready money, The Guardian, that is the quarter maſter, hath 1400. Reyes the moneth, and for fraught 2800. and receiueth 7. Milreyes in ready money. The Sota Piloto, which is the Maſters mate, hath 1200. Reyes, which is three Duckets the moneth, and as much fraught as the quarter Maſter. Two Carpenters, and two Callafaten which helpe them, haue each man foure Ducats a moneth, and 3900. Milreyes fraught, The Steward that giueth out their meate and drinke, and the Merinho, which is he that impriſoneth men aboord, and hath charge of all the Munition and Powder, with the deliuering forth of the ſame, hath each man a Milreye the moneth, and 2340. Reyes fraught, beſides their Chambers and freedome of Cuſtome, as alſo all other Officers, Saylers, Pikemen, Shot, &c. haue euery man after the rate, and euery one that ſerueth in the ſhip. The Cooper hath three Duckets a moneth, and 3900. Reyes fraught. Two Strinceros, thoſe are they which hoiſe vp the Main-yard by a wheele, and let it downe againe with a wheele as neede is, haue each man one Milrey the moneth, and 2800. Reyes fraught. Three and thirty Saylers haue each man one Milrey the moneth, and 2800. Reyes fraught. Seuen and thirty Rowers haue each man 660. Reyes the moneth, and 1860. Reyes fraught, foure Pageants, which are Boyes, haue with their fraught 443. Reyes the moneth, one maſter Gunner, and eight vnder him, haue each man a different pay, ſome more, ſome leſſe. The Surgeon likewiſe hath no certaine pay. The Factor and Purſer haue no pay but onely their Chambers, that is belowe vnder hatches, a Chamber of twenty pipes, for each man ten pipes, and aboue hatches each man his Cabbin to ſleepe in, whereof they make great profit. Theſe are all the Officers and other perſons which ſayle in the ſhip, which haue for their portion euery day in victuals, each man alike, as well the greateſt as the leaſt, a pound and three quarters of Bisket, halfe a Can of wine, a Can of water, an Aroba which is 32. pound of ſalt fleſh the moneth, ſome dried Fiſh, Onions and Garleeke are eaten in the beginning of the Voyage, as being of ſmall value; other prouiſions, as Sugar, Honie, Raiſins, Prunes, Rice, and ſuch like, are kept for thoſe which are ſicke: yet they get but little thereof, for that the Officers keepe it for themſelues, and ſpend it at their pleaſures, nor letting much goe out of their fingers: as for the dreſsing of their meate, Weede, Pots, and Pannes, euery man muſt make his owne prouiſion: beſides all this there is a Clarke and Steward for the Kings Souldiers that haue their parts by themſelues, as the Saylers haue.

This is the order and manner of their Voyage when they ſayle vnto the Indies, but when they returne againe, they haue no more but each man a portion of Bisket and Water vntill they come to the Cape de Bona Eſperance, and from thence home they muſt make their owne prouiſions. The Souldiers that are paſſengers haue nothing elſe but free paſſage, that is roome for a Cheſt vnder hatches, and a place for their Bed in the Orloope, and may not come away without the Vice-royes paſport, and yet they muſt haue beene fiue yeeres Souldiers in the Indies before they can haue licence, but the Slaues muſt pay fraught for their bodies, and cuſtome to the King. The one and twentieth of September wee entred the Riuer into the Road vnder the Land of Bardes.

Of the Towne and Iland of Goa, chiefe Citie of India.

Chap. 28.

THe Citie of Goa, is the Metropolitan or chiefe Citie of all the Orientall Indies, where the Portugals haue their traffique, where alſo the Vice-roy, the Arch-biſhop, the Kings Counſell, and Chancerie haue their reſidence, and from thence are all places in the Orientall Indies, gouerned and ruled. There is likewiſe the Staple for all Indian commodities, whither all ſorts of Merchants doe reſort, comming thither both to buy and ſell, and out of Arabia, Armenia, Perſia Cambaia, Bengala, Pegu, Sian, Malacca, Iaua, Molucca, China, &c. The Citie and Iland of Goa lieth vnder 15. degrees, on the North ſide, and is diſtant from the Equinoctiall, (by the way that the Portugals ſhips doe come thither from Moſſambique) foure hundred miles. It is an Iland wholly compaſſed about with a Riuer, and is aboue three miles great, it lieth within the Coaſt of the Firme Land, ſo that the Iland, with the Sea coaſt of the Firme Land, doe both reach as farre each as other into the Sea. It is onely ſeparated from the firme Land, by an arme of the Sea, or of the Riuer, that runneth in by the North ſide of the Towne, and ſo round about the Iland to the South ſide, where it entreth againe into the Sea, and is in forme almoſt like a Halfe-moone. The Riuer runneth euen vnto the Towne, and is indifferent broad, there are betweene the Firme Land and the Iland, certaine ſmall Ilands that are all inhabited by the naturall borne Countrimen, and on the other ſide of the Towne the Riuer is there ſo ſmall, that in Summer time, by wading to the knees in water, a man may paſſe it ouer on foot. On the which ſide the Iland hath a wall with certaine Bulwarkes, which the Portugals of late yeeres haue cauſed to be made, to defend them from the Firme Land in time of warre, as it often happeneth, for it hath diuers times beene beſieged by Dialcan or Hidalcam, at the mouth and the entrie of the Riuer. On the North ſide lieth the Land of Bardes, which is high Land, vnder which Land the Portugals doe anchor ſafely out of all danger, and there they haue a place to lade and vnlade their wares. This Land of Bardes is alſo vnder the Portugall ſubiection, and is full of Villages inhabited with people that are of the Firme Land, lying aboue it, called Canaryns, who for the moſt part are Chriſtians, but obſerue their owne manner of apparell, which is to goe all naked, their priuie members onely couered. This Land is full of Indian Palme trees, whereon the Indian Nuts called Cocos doe growe, as alſo all the other Ilands lying in the Riuer. This Iland of Bardes is ſeparated from the Firme Land by a ſmall Riuer, which is ſo little, that it cannot almoſt be diſcerned from the Firme Land. On the South ſide of the Iland of Goa, where the Riuer runneth againe into the Sea, there commeth euen out with the coaſt a Land called Salſette, which is alſo vnder the ſubiection of the Portugals, and is inhabited, and planted both with people and fruit, like the Land of Bardes, and is likewiſe parted with a little Riuer from the Firme Land. Betweene this Land of Salſette, and the Iland of Goa, lie alſo ſome ſmall Ilands, all full of Indian Palme trees, and by the mouth or iſſue of the Riuer, lieth an Iland which is called Goa Velha, that is old Goa, from whence there commeth no ſpeciall thing, neither is it much inhabited. Thoſe Lands of Bardes and Salſette, are by the Kings of Portugall let out to farme, and the rents thereof are employed to the payment of the Arch-biſhop, Cloiſters, Prieſts, and other the Kings Officers, yeerely ſtipends, which is granted them by ſpeciall Priuiledges and Patents from the King. The Iland is very hilly, and in ſome places ſo deſart and rough, that on ſome ſides men can hardly trauell ouer land (but with great labour) to the Towne of Goa. The Iland euen to the Sea ſide is full of Villages, and inhabited by the Canarijns which are the naturall borne people of the Land, and doe altogether liue by working vpon the Land, and by their Palme trees. The Villages and dwellings of theſe Canaryns are moſt round about the Iland, and on the water ſides, or by ſmall Lakes, whereof there are ſome few within the Iland, and the cauſe why they dwell thus, is for that the Palme trees will not growe in any other place but on lowe ground, by the waters, ſpecially in ſandy ground: ſo that there are no Palme trees to bee found on the high land within the Countrie vnleſſe it bee vpon ſandy grounds on the Sea coaſt, or Riuers ſides. On the Eaſt ſide of the Towne of Goa vpwards, into the Riuer, about three miles from the Towne of Bardes, lieth a place where the Portugals ſhips doe anchor, the Riuer hath ſome creekes, and a ſhip of two hundred tunnes or there abouts, may eaſily diſcharge before the Towne, but the Portugals great ſhips muſt diſcharge themſelues at Bardes: which being done, they may if they will freely goe and lie before the Towne. The Towne is well built with faire houſes and ſtreets, after the Portugall manner, but becauſe of the heate they are ſomewhat lower. They commonly haue their Gardens and Orchards at the back-ſide of their houſes, full of all kind of Indian fruits: as alſo the whole Iland through, they haue many pleaſant Gardens and Farmes, with houſes to play in, and trees of Indian fruits, whether they goe to ſport themſelues, and wherein the Indian women take great delight. The Towne hath in it all ſorts of Cloyſters and Churches as Liſbon hath, onely it wanteth Nunnes, for the men cannot get the women to trauell ſo farre, where they ſhould bee ſhut vp, and forſake Venus.

Touching the Portugals iuſtice and ordinances, as well in worldly as ſpirituall cauſes, they are all one as they are in Portugall. They dwell in the Towne among all ſorts of Nations, as Indians, Heathens, Moores, Iewes, Armenians, Guſarates, Benianes, Bramenes, and of all Indian Nations and People, which doe all dwell and traffique therein, euery man holding his owne Religion, without conſtraining any man to doe againſt his conſcience, onely touching their ceremonies of burning the dead, and the liuing, of marrying and other ſupperſtions, and deuilliſh inuentions, they are forbidden by the Arch-biſhop to vſe them openly, or in the Iland, but they may freely vſe them vpon the Firme Land, and ſecretly in their houſes, thereby to ſhunne and auoide all occaſions of diſlike that might be giuen to Chriſtians, which are but newly baptiſed: but touching the worldly policy or good gouernment of the Countrie, and executing of iuſtice, as alſo for the ruling of the Towneſ-men in the Citie: it is common to them all, and they art vnder the Portugals law, and hee that is once chriſtned, and is after found to vſe any heatheniſh ſuperſtitions, is ſubiect to the Inquiſition, whatſoeuer he be, or for any point of Religion whatſoeuer.

Inquiſition.

The Iland hath nothing of it ſelfe to nouriſh it withall, but only ſome Cattell, Hennes, Goats, Doues, &c. but very few, becauſe of the barrenneſſe and euill ſituation of the place, which is a moſt hilly, barren, and wilde Countrie, and full of waſte ground: all their neceſſaries, as Beaſts, Hennes, Hogges, Egges, Milke, &c. come from Salſette and Bardes, but moſt part out of the Firme Land, Corne, Rice, and other Graine: alſo Oyle, and all other neceſſaries come from other Countries, and are brought in by the Riuer, as from Cambaia on the North ſide, and from the coaſt of Malabar, and other places, as in the deſcription of the coaſt we haue in part declared: of Wine called Wine of Palme trees, they haue enough, and ſo much that they haue to ſpare for other places. They haue but little freſh water, but onely one Well, called Banganyn, which ſtandeth about a quarter of a mile without the Citie, wherewith the whole Towne is ſerued, which the ſlaues fetch in Pots and ſell it in the Towne, and is very good to drinke: for water to dreſſe meate, waſh, and doe other things withall, they commonly haue Wells within their houſes: the Land of it ſelfe is very ſtony and drie, hauing a kind of red earth, ſo that ſome Italian Alchimiſts haue promiſed to get Copper and Gold out of the ſame, which neither the King nor Vice-roy would euer conſent vnto, fearing leſt the report of ſuch treaſure would bee occaſion of greater trouble.

Mines dangerous,

Chap. 29. Of the cuſtomes of the Portugals, and ſuch as are iſſued from them, called Meſtiços, or halfe countrimen, as well of Goa, as of all the Orientall Countries.

THe Portugals in India, are many of them married with the natural born women of the Countrie, and the children proceeding of them are called Meſtiços, that is, half-countrimen. Theſe Meſtiços are commonly of yellowiſh colour, notwithſtanding there are many women among them, that are faire and well formed. The children of the Portugals, both boyes and girles, which are borne in India, are called Caſtiços, and are in all things like vnto the Portugals, only ſomwhat diffring in colour, for they draw toward a yellow colour: the children of thoſe Caſtiços are yellow, and altogether like the Meſtiços, and the children of Meſtiços are of colour and faſhion like the naturall borne Countrimen or Decanijns of the Countrie, ſo that the poſteritie of the Portugals, both men and women being in the third degree, doe ſeeme to be naturall Indians, both in colour and faſhion. Their liuings and daily traffiques are to Bengala, Pegu, Malacca, Cambaia, China, and euery way, both North and South: alſo in Goa there is holden a daily aſſemblie or meeting together, as well of the Citizens and Inhabitants, as of all Nations throughout India, and of the Countries bordering on the ſame, which is like the meeting vpon the Burſe in Antwerpe, yet differeth much from that, for that hither in Goa there come as well Gentlemen, as Merchants and others, and there are all kindes of Indian commodities to ſell, ſo that in a manner it is like a Faire. This meeting is onely before noone, euery day in the yeere, except Sundayes and Holidayes: it beginneth in the morning at ſeuen of the clocke, and continueth till nine of the clocke, but not in the heate of the day, nor after noone, in the principall ſtreet of the Citie, named the Straight ſtreet, and is called the Leylon, which is as much to ſay, as an outroop: there are certaine Criers appointed by the Citie for the purpoſe, which haue of all things to be cried and ſold: theſe goe all the time of the Leylon or Outroop, all behangd about with all ſorts of gold chaines, all kinds of coſtly Iewels, Pearles, Rings, and Precious ſtones: likewiſe they haue running about them, many ſorts of Captiues and Slaues, both men and women, young and old, which are daily ſold there, as beaſts are ſold with vs, where euery one may chuſe which liketh him beſt, euery one at a certaine price. There are alſo Arabian Horſes, all kind of Spices and dried Drugs, ſweet Gummes, and ſuch like things, fine and coſtly Couerlets, and many curious things, out of Cambaia, Sinde, Bengala, China, &c. and it is wonderfull to ſee in what ſort many of them get their liuings, which euery day come thither to buy wares, and at another time ſell them again. And when any man dieth, all his goods are brought thither and ſold to the laſt peniworth, in the ſame outroop, whoſoeuer they be, yea although they were the Vice-royes goods: and this is done to doe right and iuſtice vnto Orphans and Widowes; and that it may bee ſold with the firſt, where euery man may ſee it, ſo that euery yeere there is great quantitie of ware ſold within that Citie, for that there die many men within the Towne, by meanes of their diſordered liuing, together with the hotneſſe of the Countrie: the like aſſemblie is holden in all places of India, where the Portugals inhabite. There are ſome married Portugals that get their liuings by their ſlaues, both men and women, whereof ſome haue 12. ſome 20. and ſome 30. for it coſteth them but little to keep them. Theſe ſlaues for money do labor for ſuch as haue need of their helpe, ſome fetch freſh water, and ſell it for money about the ſtreets: the women ſlaues make all ſorts of confectures and conſerues of Indian fruits, much fine needle-worke, both cut and wrought workes, and then their maſters ſend the faireſt and the youngeſt of them well dreſt vp with their wares about the ſtreets to ſell the ſame, that by the neatneſſe and beauty of the ſaid women ſlaues, men might be moued to buy, which hapneth more for the affection they haue to the ſlaues, & to fulfill their pleaſure with them, then for any deſire to the conſerues or needle-workes: for theſe ſlaues do neuer refuſe them, but make their daily liuing thereby, and with the gaines that they by that meanes bring home, their maſters may well keepe and maintayne them. There are others that vſe exchanging of moneyes, and to buy money when it commeth, as time ſerueth to ſell it again, for they buy the Rials of eight, when the ſhips come from Portugall, whereof ſome buy at the leaſt ten or twelue hundred, and keepe them till the moneth of April, which is the time when the ſhips ſayle to China, for then are the Rials of eight ſought for to carrie thither, & are commonly worth fiue and twenty or thirty in the hundred profit, and then they receiue for them a certaine money, which at the ſame time is brought from Ormus, called Larrijns, that come out of Perſia, which they buy for eight or ten in the hundred profit, and keep them till the Portugals on the moneth of September come thither, and ſo deliuer them againe for twenty or fiue and twenty in the hundred profit, in exchange for Rials of eight, as I ſaid before, for they muſt haue theſe Larrijns with them to Cochin, to buy Pepper and other wares, for that it is the beſt and moſt profitable money. There are yet other ſorts of money called Pagods, Venetianers, and Santbones, which are gold, all which they doe likewiſe buy and ſell, ſo that there are many that doe nothing elſe, and become rich, ſpecially he that hath a good ſtocke. This exchange commeth moſt commonly from the Spiritualtie, who doe ſecretly vſe it, by other mens meanes, without any let or hinderance. Some there are that liue vpon their rents which they haue by their Palme trees.

Exchange.

There are among them but two manner of people, that is, Married men, and Souldiers, for that all Young men vnmarried are named Souldiers, which is the beſt name that a man can haue; not that the Souldiers are any wayes bound or vnder the commandement and Regiment of any Captaine, which throughout India, is not vſed, but when the Portugals come into India out of Portugall, and are arriued there, euery man goeth where he thinketh beſt, although in Portugall euery mans name that goeth in the ſhip is written and regiſtred, which is done in this ſort: euery man is written vp, both his name and ſirname, with a note what pay they receiue of the King, whereof ſome beare the title of Fidalgo da Caza del Rey noſſas Senor, that is, a Gentleman of the Kings Houſe, which is the chiefeſt title: there are others named Mozos Fidalgos, which is alſo an Honourable title, and they are commonly Gentlemens Sonnes, or by the Kings fauour aduanced thereunto: There are yet others that are named Caualhiero Fidalgo, which is not ſo much as the other two, yet it is an Honourable title, and is the title of a Knight, who for ſome Valiant act by him done is made Knight, which they doe for a ſmall matter: for that if he doe any Act to be accounted of, or be in a manner of ſuch an action doing, preſently he is of a Captaine or a Gentleman made a Knight, whereof they much boaſt themſelues: and it is now growne ſo common among them, that very Cookes Boyes and others as meane as they, are made Knights: there are others alſo that are named Moſos da Camara, do Numero, e do Seruiço, which is ſeruants to the King, ſome of his Chamber, ſome of his Accounts, and ſome for his Seruice, this is the firſt Title or Degree of credite, whereby through their good ſeruice they attaine vnto better, and are more glorious of their Titles, then of all the riches in the world. There are alſo that are named Eſcuderos Fidalgos, that is Eſquires, which is likewiſe a degree of credit: Others are named Hommes honorados, which is men of Honour, and the pooreſt among them (which are not named by any title) are ſet downe for Souldiers, which are the common and Raſcall ſort: theſe are euery man paied their wages according to their Titles, and may each man in his qualitie (by long ſeruice, or ſome good action, but moſt by fauour) riſe to higher degree; for that according to their Titles their ſeruice is rewarded. The Portugals which ſayle for India, being thus regiſtred and written downe, the ſaid Regiſter at their arriuall there, is deliuered to be kept by one of the Kings Officers thereunto appointed, which euery three yeeres is likewiſe changed, as other Officers are, and is called the chiefe Clerke of the Matricola Generall.

Chap. 30. Of the Portugals and Meſtiços, their Houſes, Curteſies, Narriages, and other Cuſtomes and manners of India.

THe Portugals, Meſticos, and Chriſtians, keepe Worſhipfull and bountifull Houſes, hauing commonly (as it is ſaid before) fiue, ſixe, ten, twentie, ſome more, ſome leſſe Slaues, both men and women, in their houſes euery man according to his eſtate and qualitie, I meane Married men. They are very cleanly and ſweet in all things belonging to their Houſes, ſpecially in their Linnen, for that euery day they change Shirts and Smockes both men and women, and their Slaues and Seruants likewiſe, with other things that they weare, which they doe becauſe of the great heat in that Land. The Portugals are commonly ſerued with great grauitie, without any difference betweene the Gentleman and the common Citizen, Towneſman or Souldier, and in their going, curteſies, and conuerſations, common in all things: when they goe in the Streets they ſtep very ſoftly and ſlowly forwards, with a great pride and vaine-glorious maieſtie, with a Slaue that carrieth a great Hat or vayle ouer their heads, to keepe the Sunne and Raine from them. Alſo when it raineth they commonly haue a Boy that beareth a Cloake of Scarlet or of ſome other Cloth after them, to caſt ouer them: and if bee before Noone, he carrieth a Cuſhion for his Maſter to kneele on when he heareth Maſſe, and their Rapier is moſt commonly carried after them by a Boy, that it may not trouble them as they walke, nor hinder their Grauities. When they meet in the ſtreets a good ſpace before they come together, they begin with a great Beſolas maos, to ſtoope with their bodies, and to thruſt forth their foot to ſalute each other, with their Hats in their hands, almoſt touching the ground: likewiſe when they come into the Church where they haue Stooles readie, which their Slaues haue prepared for them: all that are by him that commeth in, doe ſtand vp, and with the ſame manner of bowing their bodies doe him great Reuerence, and if it chanceth that any doth him reuerence (as the manner is) and that hee to whom it is done doth not greatly eſteeme thereof, ſo that he doth him not the like curteſie, they doe altogether for that cauſe goe after him, and cut his Hat in peeces, ſaying that he had diſgraced the partie, wherein it is not for them to aske wherefore they ſhould ſo doe, for it would bee the greateſt ſhame and reproach in the world vnto them, if they ſhould not reuenge ſo great an iniurie: and when they ſeeke to be reuenged of any man that hath ſhewen them diſcurteſie, or for any other cauſe whatſoeuer it bee, they aſſemble ten or twelue of their Friends, acquaintance or companions, and take him whereſoeuer they find him, and beat him ſo long together, that they leaue him for dead, or verie neare dead, or elſe cauſe him to be ſtabbed by their Slaues. But if they deſire not to kill him, they baſte him well about the ribbes and all his bodie ouer with a thicke Reed, as big as a mans legge, which is called Bambus, whereby for eight daies after and more he hath enough to doe to keepe his Bed, and ſometime in that manner they leaue him for dead. This is their common Cuſtome, and is neuer looked vnto or once corrected. Alſo they vſe long bagges of full of Sand, wherewith they will giue ſuch blowes each vpon other, that therewith they will breake each others limbes, and for euer after make them lame.

When any man goeth to viſit another in his Houſe, although he which is viſited bee one of the principall Gentlemen of the Citie, and the viſitor but a ſimple Souldier, or ſome other man, it is the manner that hee which is viſited commeth vnto the doore of his Houſe, with his Hat in his hand, and with great curteſie to receiue him that commeth to viſit him, and ſo leadeth him vp into his Hall or Chamber, wherein hee will ſpeake with him, where he offereth him a Chaire to ſit downe, and then he himſelfe ſitteth by him, then he asketh him what hee would haue, which hauing vnderſtood hee bringeth him downe againe to the doore in the like ſort, and ſo with a Beſolaimanos biddeth him farewell, and if hee ſhould not doe ſo, or when he giueth him a Stoole, ſhould giue him one vnlined, or one that is leſſe or lower then that he taketh for himſelfe, hee that viſiteth him would take it in euill part, eſteeming it a great ſcorne, and ſeeke to be reuenged on him for the ſame.

When they haue any Weddings and are married, whoſoeuer they bee if they haue any wealth, all the Friends and Neighbours come together, euery man on Horſebacke, and hee that hath not a Horſe will borrow one, and are euery man very coſtly Apparelled, at the leaſt ſome fiftie or a hundreth Horſes little more or leſſe, as the perſon is of qualitie, and ſo they ride altogether in good order vnto the Church with their Seruants, and euery man his Hat for the Sunne, the Parents and Friends in the hinder part, and in the laſt row the Bridegroome betweene two of them, whom they call Goſſops: after them followeth the Bride betweene two Commeres, each in their Pallamkin, which is moſt coſtly made, and after follow the Slaues both men and women going in Troupes, as if they ranne to Hunt, and ſo comming to the Church, and being Married according to the order vſed in the Church of Rome: they are in the ſame order brought home againe, and paſſing through the ſtreets, the neigbours leaning vpon Indian Carpets looke out of the windowes, and throw Roſe water vpon the Bride and Bridegroome, and other ſweet ſmelling waters, with Roſes and Sugar Comfets, or Corne. In the meane time their Slaues play vpon Shalmes and Trumpets moſt pleaſant and melodious to heare, and comming to the Houſe where the Bride and Bridegroome dwell, with great reuerence and curteſie bowing downe their bodies, they take their leaues of all the Companie, which are all on Horſebacke about the doore. And ſo the Bride, the Bridegroome and the Commeres, goe vp and ſit with great grauitie in a Window, and then begin the Horſemen that led them to Church, in honour of the Married couple, one after the other to runne a courſe, the Goſſops beginning firſt, and the reſt following twice or thrice one after the other, with continuall playing on Shalmes, which are very common in India, for that he which is of any wealth hath them of his owne within his Houſe. This being ended, they all paſſe before the window where the Bride & Bridegroome ſit with a great reuerence, and ſo paſſe on all ſauing the Goſſops, for they goe vp to the Bride and Bridegroome, and bid God giue them Ioy; then is there ſome Comfets and Marchpane brought forth, to drinke a Cup of water withall, and after ſome curteous ſalutations and congratulations to the new Married couple, they take their leaues and depart: ſo there remaineth with the Bride and Bridegroome but three or foure of their neareſt friends and kinſmen, for whom there is a Dinner prepared, with litle meat, yet very coſtly, which they paſſe ouer very lightly, and not many words, which done they preſently bring the Bride to Bed, without any other Ceremonies or Charges, wherewith the Marriage is done and ended. Oftentimes it chanceth, that they goe to bed at the leaſt two houres before Sun-ſetting, not hauing the patience to ſtay ſo long as wee doe in theſe Countries.

When a Child is to bee Chriſtened, it is likewiſe in the ſame ſort led to Church with Horſes, and laſt of all commeth the Father alone, after whom followeth two men on Foot, the one with a great Siluer or Gilt veſſell full of Bread baked like Cracklings, which in Portugall are called Roſquilhos, and in the middle a great Waxe candle, well made and gilded, thruſt through with ſome peeces of money of Gold and Siluer, for an Offering to the Prieſt that baptiſeth the Child, and all ouer ſtrowed and couered with Roſes: the other carrieth a great Siluer or gilt Saltſeller in one of his hands, and a Lampe of the ſame ſtuffe in his other hand, each with rich and coſtly Towels on their ſhoulders: after that followeth two Pallamkins, on the one ſide the Commere, on the other ſide the Midwife with the Child, couered with a coſtly Mantle, made for the purpoſe, and ſo the ceremonies of Baptiſme being ended in the Church, it is againe in the like ſort brought home, and being there, they haue the like manner of Muſicke & Shalmes, running and leaping with their Horſes before the window where the Commere ſitteth, with the ſame Ceremonies as at the Wedding. This is the manner and cuſtome of thoſe that are Married and keepe Houſe.

But concerning the Souldier that is vnmarried, thus it is. They goe in the Summer time into the Armado lying on the water, and being within the Townes and on the Land, they are verie ſtately apparelled, and goe verie grauelie along the ſtreets with their Slaues or men hired for the purpoſe, that beare a Hat ouer them for the Sunne and Raine: for there are many Indians that are daily hired for the purpoſe, and haue twelue Baſarucos the day, which is as much as two Stiuers or a Stoter, and they ſerue ſuch as haue no ſlaues, and that will not keepe any to that end. The Souldiers dwell at leaſt ten or twelue in a houſe, where they haue among them a ſlaue or hired Indian or two which ſerueth them, and waſheth their Shirts, and haue foure or fiue Stooles with a Table, and euerie man a Bed. Their meat is Rice ſodden in water, with ſome ſalt Fiſh, or ſome other thing of ſmall value (without Bread) and cleare Fountaine water for their drinke, wherewith they are well pleaſed. They haue amongſt them all one or two good ſuites of Apparell, all of Silke as the manner is there, and when one goeth abroad, the other ſtay at home, for in the houſe they haue no need of Clothes, (but ſit whoſoeuer they be) in their Shirts and a paire of linnen Breeches, and ſo as it were naked by reaſon of the great heat, for if ſome of them haue occaſion to goe out twentie times in one day, they muſt ſo often lend him their Apparell, and he muſt likewiſe put off his clothes, as often as he commeth home againe. Some Souldiers haue a Gentleman or Captaine to their friends which lendeth them money to apparell themſelues withall, to the end when Summer time commeth, they may bee readie to goe with them in Fleet to Sea, as alſo to haue their friendſhip, by night and at other times to beare them companie, or to helpe them to be reuenged of any iniurie by them receiued, as I ſaid before: for that he which in India hath moſt Souldiers to his friends, is moſt regarded and feared. So that to be ſhort, in this manner they doe maintaine themſelues in common, whereby they are able to come in preſence of the beſt of the Countrey. Many and moſt of them haue their chiefe maintenance from the Portugals and Meſticos wiues, as alſo the Indian Chriſtians wiues, which doe alwaies beſtow liberall rewards and gifts vpon them to fulfill their vnchaſte and filthie deſires, which they know very well how to accompliſh, and ſecretly bring to paſſe. There are ſome likewiſe that get their liuing by their Friends, trauelling for them from place to place with ſome wares and Merchandizes, and they are called Chattyns. Theſe doe giue ouer and leaue the office of a Souldier in the Fleet, and the Kings ſeruice: and now likewiſe they are all giuen to ſcraping and catching, as well the Vice-roy, Gouernours, and others, as alſo the Church-men and Spiritualtie, little paſſing or eſteeming the common profit or the ſeruice of the King, but onely their particular profites, making their account, that the time of their abode is but three yeeres: wherefore they ſay they will not doe otherwiſe then thoſe that were before them did, but ſay that others which come after them ſhall take care for all: for that the King (ſay they) gaue them their Offices, thereby to pay them for their ſeruices in times paſt.

Chap. 31.
Of the manuer and Cuſtomes of Portngall and Meſticos women in India.

THe Portugals, Meſtiços, and Indian-Chriſtian women in India, are little ſeene abroad, but for the moſt part ſit ſtill within the houſe, and goe but ſeldome forth, vnleſſe it bee to Church, or to viſit their friends, which is likewiſe but verie little, and when they goe abroad, they are well prouided not to be ſeene, for they are carried in a Pallamkin couered with a Mat or other cloth, ſo that they cannot be ſeene.

Their pride.

Their feeding.

When they goe to Church, or to viſit any friend, they put on very coſtly apparell, with bracelets of Gold, and Rings vpon their armes, all beſet with coſtly Iewels & Pearles, & at their eares hang laces full of Iewels. Their clothes are of Damaske, Veluet, and cloth of Gold, for Silke is the worſt thing they doe weare. Within the houſe they goe bare headed, with a Waſtcoate called Baiu, that from their ſhoulders couereth their nauels, and is ſo fine that you may ſee all their body through it, and downwards they haue nothing but a painted cloth wrapped three or foure times about their bodies. Theſe clothes are very faire, ſome of them being verie coſtly wrought with Loome-worke, and diuers figures and flowers of all colours, all the reſt of the body is naked without any hoſe, but onely bare-footed in a paire of Moiles or Pantofles, and the men in like ſort. This is their manner in the Houſe both old and young, rich and poore, none excepted, for they goe forth but very little, and then they are both couered and carried, and what they need abroad, that the Slaues both men and women doe fetch in. The Women eate no Bread or very little, nor yet the Slaues, not that they refuſe it for the deareneſſe or want of bread, (for they haue enough and great abundance) but they are ſo vſed to eate Rice, that they deſire no other, which they ſeeth with water and eate it with ſome ſalt Fiſh, or a kind of ſalt fruit called Mangas, or with ſome other compoſition both of Fiſh and Fleſh, with Pottage which they powre vpon it, and ſo eate it with their hands: for there they eate nothing with Spoones, and if they ſhould ſee any man doe ſo, they would laugh at him. When they drinke they haue certaine pots made of blacke earth verie fine and thinne, much like thoſe that wee vſe in Holland for Flower-pots, hauing in the necke thereof a partition full of holes with a ſpout, (and theſe Cruſes are called Gorgoletta,) to this end, that when they drinke, they may hold the pot on high, and touch it not with their mouthes, but the water running from the ſpout falleth into their mouthes, neuer ſpilling drop, which they doe for cleanlineſſe, becauſe no man ſhould put it to his mouth, and when any man commeth out of Portugall, and then beginneth to drinke after their manner, becauſe he is not vſed to that kind of drinking, hee ſpilleth it in his boſome, wherein they take great pleaſure and laugh at him, calling him Reynol, which is a name giuen in Iealouſie.

Luxurie and filthy Luſts.

Deutroa

ieſt to ſuch as newlie come from Portugall, and know not how to behaue themſelues in ſuch graue manner, and with ſuch ceremonies as the Portugals vſe there in India: ſo that at the firſt they are much whooped and cried at in the ſtreets, vntill by vſe and practice they haue learned the Indian manner, which they quicklie doe. The men are very iealous of their Wiues, for they will neuer bring any man into their houſes, how ſpeciall a friend ſoeuer hee be, that ſhall ſee their Wiues or their Daughters, vnleſſe it be ſome goſſip or other married man with his wife in companie. When they will goe together to ſome place to ſport and ſolace themſelues, they are alwaies well guarded by their Slaues, both men and women, both for their ſafetie and ſeruice. If any man commeth to the doore to aske for the Maſter of the Houſe, preſently their Wiues and their Daughters runne to hide them, and ſo leaue the man to anſwer him that ſtandeth at the doore: likewiſe they ſuffer no man to dwell within their houſes, where the Women and Daughters be, how neere kinſman ſouer he bee vnto them, being once fifteene yeeres of age, nor their owne Sonnes, but haue certaine Chambers and places beneath, or beſides their houſe where they lie, and may in no ſort come among the women, and thither they ſend them their meat and other prouiſions, for it hath oftentimes beene ſeene in thoſe Countries, that the Nephew hath layne by his Aunt, and the Brother by the Brothers wife, and the Brother with his Siſter: whereof I haue knowne ſome that haue been taken with the manner, and that both they and the woman haue beene ſlaine by the Husbands. The women are very Luxurious and vnchaſte, for there are very few among them, although they be married, but they haue beſides their husbands one or two of thoſe that are called Soldiers, with whom they take their pleaſures: which to effect, they vſe all the ſlights and practiſes they can deuiſe, by ſending out their Slaues and Baudes by night, and at extraordinary times, ouer Walls, Hedges, and Ditches, how narrowly ſoeuer they are kept and looked vnto. They haue likewiſe an Hearbe called Deutroa, which beareth a ſeed, whereof bruiſing out the ſap, they put it into a Cup or other veſſell, and giue it to their Husbands, either in meat or drinke, and preſently therewith, the man is as though he were halfe out of his wits, and without feeling, or elſe drunke, doing nothing but laugh, and ſometime it taketh him ſleeping, whereby he lyeth like a dead man, ſo that in his preſence they may doe what they will, and take their pleaſure with their friends, and the husband neuer know of it. In which ſort he continueth foure and twentie houres long, but if they waſh his feet with cold water hee preſently reuiueth, and knoweth nothing thereof, but thinketh hee had ſlept.

Cunning poyſoners.

There are many men poyſoned by their wiues, if once they be moued: for they know how to make a certaine Poyſon or Venome, which ſhall kill the perſon that drinketh it, at what time or houre it pleaſeth them: which poyſon being prepared, they make it in ſuch ſort, that it will lie ſixe yeeres in a mans body, and neuer doe him hurt, and then kill him, without miſſing halfe an houres time. They make it alſo for one, two, or three yeeres, moneths or dayes, as it pleaſeth them beſt, as I haue ſeene it in many, and there it is very common. There are likewiſe many women brought to their ends by meanes of their Husbands, and ſlaine when ſoeuer they take them in Adulterie, or that they doe but once ſuſpect them; which if they doe, preſently they cut their throats, and bring three or foure witneſſes to teſtifie that ſtrange men entred into their houſes by night, at vnaccuſtomed times, or elſe by day, and had their pleaſures of their Wiues, or in other ſort as they will deuiſe it; whereby they are preſently diſcharged of the crime, according to the Lawes and Ordinances both of Spaine and Portugall, and preſently may marrie with another wife. This notwithſtanding is no meanes to make the Women feare, or once to leaue their filthy pleaſures, although there are euery yeere many women without number ſo diſpatched and made away by their husbands, and it is ſo common with them, that no man thinketh it ſtrange, or once wondereth thereat, becauſe of the Cuſtome. The Women alſo for their part ſay and flatly affirme, that there can be no better death then to die in that manner, ſaying that ſo they are ſacrificed for Loue, which they thinke to be a great Honour vnto them.

Neatneſſe.

Idleneſſe and coſtlineſſe.

Bettele and Arrequa.

The women are by nature very cleanly and neat, as well in their Houſes as in Apparell, for that although all whatſoeuer ſhee putteth on her bodie euery day, is both white, cleane and freſh: yet they haue a manner euery day to waſh themſelues all the bodie ouer, from head to foot, and ſometimes twice a day, in the morning and at euening: and as often as they eaſe themſelues or make water, or elſe vſe the companie of their Husbands, euery time they doe waſh themſelues, were it a hundreth times a day and a night: they are no great workers, but much delighted in ſweet Hearbes, and in perfumes and Frankincenſe, and to rub their bodies and their foreheads with ſweet Sanders and ſuch like woods, which with water they doe ſteepe or breake in peeces: alſo the whole day long they doe nothing, but ſit and chaw Leaues or Herbes, called Bettele, with Chaulke and a certaine Fruit called Arrequa, whereof in another place among Fruits and Herbes I will ſpeake more. This Arrequa, ſome of it is ſo ſtrong, that it maketh men almoſt drunke, and wholly out of ſence, although in ſhew and in taſte it is almoſt like Wood or Rootes: theſe three things they ſit all the whole day chawing in their mouthes, like Oxen or Kine chawing the cudde: they let the ſap goe downe into their throats, and ſpit the reſt out of their mouthes, whereby they make their mouthes ſo red and blackiſh, that to ſuch as know it not it is ſtrange to ſee: all which, with their waſhing, Frankinſence, and rubbing with Sanders, they haue learned and receiued of the Indian Heathens, which haue had thoſe Cuſtomes of long time, and yet till this day vſe them: they ſay it preſerueth the Teeth, and keepeth them ſound, good for the mawe, and againſt a ſtinking mouth and euill breath, inſomuch as they are ſo vſed to chaw it, that whereſoeuer they goe or ſtand, they muſt alwaies haue of thoſe Leaues caried with them, and the women Slaues doe likewiſe goe alwaies chawing, and are ſo vſed thereunto, that they verilie thinke, that without it they can not liue, for their common worke is to ſit all day, when their Husbands are out of doores, behind the Mat which hangeth at the window, alwaies chawing the herbe Bettele, ſeeing thoſe that paſſe by in the ſtreets, and no man ſeeth them: but as any man paſſeth by which liketh them, and they will let them haue a ſight, they lift vp the Mat, whereby they doe the paſſenger a great fauour, and with that manner of ſhewing themſelues and caſting lookes, they make their beginnings of Loue, which by their ſlauiſh women they bring to effect: to the which end they haue all diuelliſh deuiſes that poſſible may bee inuented, for that both night aud day they doe practiſe nothing elſe, but make it their onely worke, and to make nature more liuely to abound and moue them thereunto, they doe vſe to eate thoſe Betteles, Arrequas and Chaulke, and in the night it ſtandeth by their bed ſides, this they eate, whole handfuls of Cloues, Pepper, Ginger, and a baked kind of meat called Chachunde, which is mixed and made of all kindes of Spices and Herbes, and ſuch like meates, all to increaſe their leacherie.

Otia ſi tollas, periere Cupidinis arcus.

And they are not content therewith, but giue their Husbands a thouſand Herbes for the ſame purpoſe to eate, they not knowing thereof, thereby to fulfill their pleaſures, and to ſatisfie their deſires, which can not by any meanes bee ſatisfied. They are likewiſe much vſed to take their pleaſures in Bathes, by ſwimming therein, which they can verie well doe, for there are verie few of them, but they would eaſilie ſwim ouer a Riuer of halfe a mile broad.

Chap. 32.

Of the Vice-roy of Portugall, and of his Gouernment in India.

Everie three yeeres there is a new Vice-roy ſent into India, and ſometime they ſtay longer, as it pleaſeth the King, but verie few of them, he continueth in Goa. In the Hall of his Palace ſtand the Guard, and in the great Hall, where his Councell ſit, are painted all the Viceroyes, that haue gouerned in India, ſince the firſt Diſcouerie and Conqueſt thereof, and as they new come, their Pictures are likewiſe placed there. Theſe Viceroyes haue great reuenues, they may ſpend, giue, and keepe the Kings treaſure, which is verie much, and doe with it what pleaſeth them, for it is in their choiſe, hauing full and abſolute power from the King, in ſuch ſort, that they gather and hoord vp a mightie quantitie of Treaſure, for that beſides their great allowance from the King, they haue great Preſents and Gifts, beſtowed vpon them. For it is the cuſtome in thoſe Countries, when any Viceroy commeth newly ouer, that all the Kings bordering about Goa, and that haue peace and friendſhip with the Portugals, doe then ſend their Ambaſſadours vnto him, to confirme their Leagues with great and rich Preſents, therewith likewiſe to bid the Viceroy welcome, which amounteth to a great maſſe of Treaſure: theſe Preſents in this ſort giuen, the Ieſuites by their practiſes had obtained of the King, and for a time enioyed them at their pleaſure (looking verie narrowly vnto them, that they might not be deceiued) vntill long time ſince, a Viceroy named Don Lois de Taide Earle of Atougia came thither, and refuſed to let them haue them, ſaying that the King being in Portugall knew not what was giuen him in India, and that thoſe Preſents were giuen vnto the Viceroy and not to the King, and ſaid the King had no power to giue them to the Ieſuites: ſo that hee kept them for himſelfe, which the Ieſuites tooke in euill part, and ſaid, the Viceroy was an Hereticke. Yet from his time euer ſince the Viceroyes haue vſed to keepe them for themſelues. They ſay, and it is found to bee moſt true, that the firſt yeere of the Viceroyes time, he hath enough to doe to repaire and furniſh his Houſe. and to know the manners and cuſtomes of the Countries, without any further troubling of himſelfe. The ſecond yeere to gather Treaſure, and to looke vnto his particular profits, for the which cauſe he came into India. The third and laſt yeere to prepare himſelfe and ſet all things in order, that he bee not ouertaken or ſurpriſed by the new Vice-roy when hee commeth, but that he may returne into Portugall with the goods which he had ſcraped together. The ſame is to bee vnderſtood of all the Captaines in the Fortes, and of all other Officers in India.

Of the Heathens, Indians, and other ſtrangers dwelling in Goa.

In the Towne and Iland of Goa, are reſident manie Heathens, Moores, (which are Mahumetans) Iewes, and all ſtrange Nations bordering thereabout, euerie one of them vſing ſeuerall cuſtomes and ſuperſtions in Religion. The Moores eate all things except Swines fleſh, and dying are buried like the Iewes; but the Heathens, as Decanijns, Guſarates, and Canaras, and other Indians being dead, are burnt to aſhes, and ſome Women being aliue are burned with them, that is, ſuch as are Gentlemen or Noblemen, and the Wiues of the Bramenes, which are their Idolatrous Prieſts. Alſo for the Merchants, ſome of them eate all things, except Kowes, or Buffles fleſh, which they eſteeme to bee Holy. Others eate not any thing whatſoeuer, that hath either life or bloud in it, as thoſe of Guſarata, and the Banianes of Cambaia, which obſerue Py- thagoras Law: moſt of them pray vnto the Sunne and Moone, yet they doe all acknowledge a God that made, created and ruleth all things, and that after this life there is another, wherein men ſhall be rewarded according to their workes. But they haue Idols and Images, which they call Pagodes, cut and formed moſt vglie, and like monſtrous Diuels, to whom daily they offer, and ſay, that thoſe Holy men haue beene liuing among them, whereof they tell ſo many Miracles, as it is wonderfull, and ſay, that they are interceſſours betweene them and God. The Diuell oftentimes anſwereth them out of thoſe Images, whom they likewiſe know, and doe him great honour by offering vnto him, to keeph friendſhip with him, and that hee ſhould not hurt them. They haue a Cuſtome, when any Maide is to be married, and that they will honour their Pagode, for the more credit to the Bridegroome, they bring the Bride with great Triumph and Muſicke before their Pagode, which is made with a Pinne of Iuorie bone, to whom the neareſt friends and kinſwomen of the Bride, together with the Bride doe goe, and by force make the Image to take the Brides maidenhead, ſo that the blood remaineth ſtill vpon the Image, for a remembrance thereof, and then after other diuelliſh Superſtitions and Ceremonies, hauing made their Offerings, they bring the Bride home, where ſhee is deliuered to the Bridegroome, hee being very ioyfull and proud, that their Pagode hath honoured him ſo much and eaſed him of ſo much labour. They haue for the moſt part a cuſtome to Pray vnto the firſt thing they meet withall in the Morning, and all that day after they pray vnto it, bee it Hog, or any other thing. And if in the morning they goe out, they chance at the firſt ſight to ſee a Crow (whereof there are great numbers in India) they will not goe forth of their doores all that day, no not for all the goods in the world, for they eſteeme it an euill ſigne, and an vnluckie day. They pray likewiſe to the New Moone, and when ſhee firſt appeareth, they fall vpon their knees, and ſalute her with great Deuotion. There are among them certaine people called Iogos, which are ſuch as we call Hermits, & thoſe doe they eſteem for Holie men, theſe men liue a verie ſtrict life with great Abſtinence, and make the common people beleeue many ſtrange things. They haue likewiſe many Southſaiers and Witches, which vſe Iugling, and trauell through the out Countrie, hauing about them many liue Snakes, which they know how to bewitch, and being ſhut vp in little Baskets, they pull them out and make them dance, turne, and winde at the ſound of a certaine Inſtrument, whereon they play, and ſpeake vnto them. They wind them about their neckes, armes, and legges, kiſſing them, with a thouſand other deuiſes, onely to get money. They are all for the moſt part verie skilfull in preparing of Poyſons, wherewith they doe many ſtrange things, and eaſilie poyſon each other, their dwellings and Houſes are verie little and low, couered with Straw, without windowes, and verie low and narrow doores, ſo that a man muſt almoſt creepe vpon his knees to goe in; their Houſholdſtuffe is Mats of ſtraw, both to ſit and lie vpon, their Tables, Table-clothes, and Napkins, are made of the great Indian Fig-leaues, they ſerue them not onely for Tables, Sheets, and other Linnen, but alſo for Diſhes, wherein they put their meat, which you ſhall likewiſe ſee in the Grocers, and Pothecaries ſhops, to put and wrap in all things whatſoeuer they haue within their ſhops, (as wee doe in Paper.) They likewiſe joyne them together in ſuch ſort, that they can put both Butter, Oyle, and ſuch liquid ſtuffes therein, and alſo whatſoeuer commeth to hand. To dreſſe their meat they haue certaine Earthen pots wherein they ſeeth Rice, and make holes in the ground, wherein they ſtampe it, or beat it with a woodden Peſtell made for the purpoſe, and they are ſo miſerable, that they buy the Rice in the Huskes, as it groweth on the ground, and ſome of them haue Rice ſowen behind their Houſe to ſerue their neceſſarie vſe. They vſe to drinke out of a Copper kanne with a ſpout, whereby they let the water fall downe into their mouthes, and neuer touch the Pot with their lippes. Their Houſes are commonly ſtrawed with Kow-dung, which (they ſay) killeth Fleas. They are verie cleane on their Bodies, for euerie day they waſh themſelues all their bodie ouer, as often as they eaſe themſelues or make water, both men and women, like the Moores and Mahometans. They waſh themſelues with the left hand, becauſe they eate with the right hand, and vſe no Spoones. They doe keepe and obſerue their Ceremonies and Superſtitions, with great deuotion, for they neuer goe forth without praying, when they trauell by the way. They haue on euery Hill, Cliffe, Hole, or Denne their Pagodes and Idols in moſt deuilliſh and deformed ſhapes, cut and hewed out of the ſtones and rockes, with their Furnaces hard by them, and a Ciſterne not farre from them, which is alwaies full of water, and euery one that paſſeth by, waſheth their feet therein, and ſo fall downe before their Idoll, ſome ſetting before him for an offering Fruits, Rice, Egges, Hennes, &c. as their deuotions ſerue, and then commeth the Bramene their Prieſt and taketh it away and eateth it, making the common people beleeue that the Pagode hath eaten it.

The Diuell neuer hinders the quantitie but the qualitie of Deuotion: for falſehood makes it his, whereof he is ambitious.

When they will make a voyage to Sea, they vſe at the leaſt fourteene daies before they enter into their Ships, to make ſo great a noiſe with ſounding of Trumpets, and to make Fires, that it may bee heard and ſeene both by night and day, the Ship being hanged about with Flagges, wherewith (they ſay) they feaſt their Pagode, that they may haue a good Voyage. The like doe they at their returne for a Thankſgiuing fourteene daies long, & thus they vſe to doe in all their Feaſts, Affaires, Mariages, Childbirths, & at other times of the yeere, as Sowing, & Mowing, &c.

The Heatheniſh Indians that dwell in Goa are very rich Merchants, and traffique much, there is one ſtreet within the Towne, that is full of ſhops kept by thoſe Heatheniſh Indians, that not onely ſell all kinds of Silkes, Sattins, Damaskes, and curious workes of Porceline from China and other places, but all manner of wares of Veluet, Silke, Sattin and ſuch like, brought out of Portugall, which by meanes of their Brokers they buy by the great, and ſell them againe by the piece or elles, wherein they are very cunning, and naturally ſubtile. There is alſo another ſtreet, where the Benianes of Cambaia dwell, that haue all kinds of wares out of Cambaia, and all ſorts of precious ſtones, and are very ſubtile and cunning to bore and make holes in all kinds of ſtones, Pearles, and Corrals: on the other ſide of the ſame ſtreet dwell other Heathens, which ſell all ſorts of Bedſteads, Stooles, and ſuch like ſtuffe, very cunningly couered ouer with Lacke, moſt pleaſant to behold, and they can turne the Lacke into any colour that you will deſire. There is alſo a ſtreet full of Gold and Siluer Smiths that are Heathens, which make all kind of workes, alſo diuers other Handicrafts men, as Copper-ſmiths, Carpenters, and ſuch like Occupations, which are all Heathens, and euery one a ſtreet by themſelues. There are likewiſe other Merchants that deale all by great, with Corne, Rice, and other Indian wares and merchandiſes, as Wood and ſuch like. Some of them farme the Kings Rents and Reuenues, ſo that they are ſkilfull euery way to make their profits. There are alſo many Heathen Brokers, very cunning and ſubtile in buying and ſelling, and with their tongues to pleade on both ſides.

Trade-conſtancy.

There are in Goa many Heathen Phyſicians which obſerue their grauities with Hats carried ouer them for the Sunne, like the Portugals, which no other Heathens doe, but onely Ambaſſadors, or ſome rich Merchants. Theſe Heathen Phyſicians doe not onely cure their owne Nations and Countrimen, but the Portugals alſo, for the Vice-roy himſelfe, the Arch-biſhop, and all the Monkes and Friers doe put more truſt in them then in their owne Countrimen, whereby they get great ſtore of money, and are much honoured and eſteemed. The Countrimen in the Villages round about Goa, and ſuch as labour and till the land are moſt Chriſtians: but there is not much difference among them from the other Heathens, for that they can hardly leaue their Heatheniſh ſuperſtitions, which in part are permitted them, and is done to draw the other Heathens to bee chriſtened, as alſo that otherwiſe they would hardly bee perſwaded to continue in the Chriſtian Faith. There is in euery place of the ſtreet Exchangers of money, by them called Xaraffos, which are all Chriſtian Iewes. They are very ready and expert in all manner of accounts, and in knowing of all ſorts of money, without whoſe helpe men dare not receiue any money, becauſe there is much counterfeit money abroad, which is hard to be knowne from the good, were it not for theſe Xaraffos, which can diſcerne it with halfe an eye. The Indian Heathens haue a cuſtome, that no man may change nor alter Trade or Occupation, but muſt vſe his fathers Trade, and marrie mens daughters of the ſame Occupation, Trade, or dealing, which is ſo neerely looked vnto, that they are diuided and ſet apart, each Occupation by it ſelfe, as Countries and Nations are, and ſo they call one another: for if they ſpeake to a man, they aske him of what Trade he is, whether he be a Goldſmith, Barber, Merchant, Grocer, Fiſherman, or ſuch like. They giue no houſhold-ſtuffe with their daughters, but onely Iewels, and pay the charges of the Wedding. The Sonnes inherite all their goods.

Chap. 34.
Of the times of the yeere in India, and of their diſeaſes, &c.

THe times and ſeaſons of the yeeres are as followeth. Winter beginneth on the laſt of Aprill, throughout the whole coaſt which is called India, from Cambaia to the Cape de Comorin, and commeth with a Weſterne winde, which bloweth out of the Sea vpon the Coaſt: the beginning thereof is with thunder and lightning, and after that a ſtedfaſt and continuall raine, which laſteth night and day till the moneth of September, and then Winter endeth with thunder and lightning: and by reaſon of that continuall raine, it is called Winter, as alſo becauſe at that time they cannot trauell on the Seas. But in warme weather, when fruit time commeth on, it is then right Summer: for the time, which in India is called Summer, becauſe of the cleareneſſe and drineſſe of the weather, is the colder and the wholſomer, and then there blowe Eaſt windes, ſo that the nights are then very coole, and ſomewhat ſharpe; and then there are no ſpeciall kindes of fruits in ſeaſon, but ſuch as growe continually all the yeere. Againſt the Winter commeth, euery man maketh his prouiſion of victuals, and all other neceſſaries, like as in a ſhip that is to make a Voyage of fiue or ſixe moneths; alſo all their ſhips are brought into the Riuer, and vnfurniſhed of tacklings, and euery thing being taken out of them they are couered with Mats, otherwiſe they would rot with the raine, which is ſo ſtedfaſt and continuall all the Winter, that many times diuers houſes by reaſon of the great moiſtneſſe doe fall vnto the ground: and as ſoone as Winter beginneth, there driueth into the mouth of the Hauen great bankes and ſhoales of ſands, which ſtop it vp, ſo that neither Ship nor Boat can either goe out or in: and the Sea both there and along the coaſt maketh ſo great a roaring and noiſe, that men can neither heare nor ſee: alſo the water of the Riuer of Goa which runneth about the Iland in Winter, by meanes of the land-waters that by the continuall raine falleth from the Hills, is cleane freſh water, and of a red colour, which in Summer is cleane contrarie and like ſea-water, by reaſon of the concourſe it hath with the Sea. In the Moneth of September, when Winter endeth, the bankes of ſand doe fleet and vade away out of the Riuer, ſo that not onely ſmall ſhips may come in and goe out, but alſo the great Portugall ſhips of ſixteene hundred tunnes may freely enter without a Pilot, for it is deepe enough, and without danger. In Winter it is a heauy and melancholike being there, for there is no other exerciſe to be vſed, but onely to ſit in their ſhirts, with a paire of linnen breeches, and goe and paſſe the time away with their neighbours, in playing and ſuch exerciſes, for that throughout the whole Towne there is no other doing. The women and Meſticos take great pleaſure in the Winter time when it raineth, with their husbands and ſlaues to goe into the fields, or ſome Garden, whether they carrie good ſtore of victuals, and there in their Gardens haue many Ceſternes or Ponds of water, wherein they take their delights to ſwimme and to bathe themſelues. In this time moſt of their Indian fruit is in ſeaſon.

The Summer beginneth in September, and continueth till the laſt of Aprill, and is alwaies cleare skie and faire weather, without once or very little raining: Then all the ſhips are rigged and made ready to ſayle for all places; as alſo the Kings Armie to keepe the Coaſt, and to conuoy Merchants, and then the Eaſt windes beginne to blowe from off the Land into the Seas, whereby they are called Terreinhos, that is to ſay, the Land winds. They blowe very pleaſantly and coolly, although at the firſt, by changing of the weather they are very dangerous, and cauſe many great diſeaſes, which doe commonly fall in India, by the changing of the time. Theſe winds blowe alwaies in Summer, beginning at midnight, and continue till noone, but they neuer blowe aboue ten miles into the Sea, from off the coaſt, and preſently after one of the clocke vntill midnight the Weſt winde bloweth, which commeth out of the Sea into the Land, and is called Viraſon. Theſe winds are ſo ſure and certaine at their times, as though men held them in their hands, whereby they make the Land very temperate, otherwiſe the heate would be vnmeaſurable.

Conſtancy of winds.

It is likewiſe a ſtrange thing that when it is Winter vpon the coaſt of India, that is from Diu to the Cape de Comorin, on the other ſide of the Cape de Comorin, on the coaſt called Choramandel, it is cleane contrary, ſo that there it is Summer, and yet they lie all vnder one height or degrees, and there is but ſeuenty miles by land betweene both coaſts, and in ſome places but twenty miles, and which is more, as men trauell ouer land from Cochin to Saint Thomas (which lieth on the ſame coaſt of Choramandel) and comming by the Hill of Ballagatte, where men muſt paſſe ouer to goe from the one coaſt vnto the other: on the one ſide of the Hill to the top thereof it is pleaſant cleare ſunne ſhining weather, and going downe on the other ſide there is raine, winde, thunder and lightning, as if the world ſhould end and be conſumed: which is to be vnderſtood, that it changeth from the one ſide to the other, as the time falleth out, ſo that on the one ſide of the Hills it is Winter, and on the other ſide Summer: and it is not onely ſo in that place and Countrie, but alſo at Ormus, on the coaſt of Arabia Felix by the Cape of Roſalgatte, where the ſhips lie, it is very ſtill, cleare, and pleaſant water, and faire Summer time; and turning about the Cape on the other ſide, it is raine and wind with great ſtormes and tempeſts, which with the times of the yeere doe likewiſe change on the other ſide, and ſo it is in many other places of the Orientall Countries.

Winter and Summer within few miles in the ſame height.

The ſickneſſes and diſeaſes in Goa, and throughout India, which are common, come moſt with the changing of the times and the weather, as it is ſaid before: there raigneth a ſickneſſe called Mordexijn, which ſtealeth vpon men, and handleth them in ſuch ſort, that it weakneth a man, and maketh him caſt out all that he hath in his body, and many times his life withall. This ſickneſſe is very common, and killeth many a man, whereof they hardly or neuer eſcape. The bloudy Fluxe is there likewiſe very common and dangerous, as the Plague with vs. They haue many continuall Feuers, which are burning Agues, and conſume mens bodies with extreme heate, whereby within foure or fiue dayes they are either whole or dead. This ſickneſſe is common and very dangerous, and hath no remedie for the Portugals but letting bloud: but the Indians and Heathens doe cure themſelues with herbes, as Sanders, and other ſuch like ointments, wherewith the eaſe themſelues. This ſickneſſe conſumeth many Portugals euery yeere, ſome becauſe they haue little to eate, and leſſe to drinke of any meate or drinke that is nouriſhing, and vſe much company of women, becauſe that Land is naturall to prouoke them thereunto, as alſo the moſt part of the Souldiers by ſuch meanes haue their liuing and their maintenance, which oftentimes coſteth them both life and limme, for although men were of Iron or Steele, the vnchaſte life of a woman, with her vnſatiable luſts were able to grind him to powder, and ſweepe him away like duſt, which coſteth many a mans life, as the Kings Hoſpitall can well beare witneſſe, wherein they lodge, whenſoeuer they are ſicke, where euery yeere at the leaſt there entred fiue hundred liue men, and neuer come forth till they are dead, and they are onely Portugals, for no other ſicke perſon may lodge therein, I meane ſuch as are called white men, for the other Indians haue a Hoſpitall by themſelues. In this Hoſpitall they are very well looked vnto by the Ieſuites, and Gentlemen: whereof euery moneth one of the beſt is choſen and appointed, who perſonally is there by them, and giueth the ſicke perſons whatſoeuer they will deſire, and ſometimes ſpend more by foure or fiue hundred Duckets of their owne purſes, then the Kings allowance reacheth vnto.

But returning to our matter of ſickneſſe, Pockes and Piles, with other ſecret diſeaſes, they are in thoſe Countries very common, and not hidden or concealed, for they thinke it no ſhame, more then to haue any other diſeaſe. They heale them with the root China: there are ſome that haue had them at the leaſt three or foure times, and are not any thing at all ſhunned or diſliked for the ſame, but dare both boaſt and bragge thereof. It is not any thing perilous for the body, inſomuch that they had rather haue them, and feare them leſſe then any of the foreſaid diſeaſes. The Plague hath neuer beene in India, neither is it knowne vnto the Indians, but poiſoning, witchcraft, and ſuch like, whereby ſome loſe their healths, and ſome their liues, is their daily exerciſe, and very common with them. The ſtone grauell, and rupture raigneth much among them, ſpecially among married men, by reaſon of the great quantitie of water that they drinke being giuen to all pleaſure and riotouſneſſe, enioying all what their hearts deſire, ſitting alwaies with their bellies open in their ſhirts in a Gallerie, recreating themſelues with the wind which cooleth them, ſometimes hauing a ſlaue to ſcratch and pare their nayles and feet, another the head, the third holds a Fanne to driue away the Flies. This is the common vſe for two houres after noone, where likewiſe they take an afternoones ſleepe, and euer as they haue thirſt, they bring him a diſh of Conſerues or other Comfets, that the water ſhould not worke too much in his body, but taſte the better. With ſuch and the like exerciſes they doe paſſe the day till night comes on, ſo that commonly they haue all ſwollen bellies like Bacchus, whereby the Souldiers and other Indians call them Barrigois, that is, Bellies, or Great bellies.

The day both Summer and Winter is there all of a length, not much difference, onely in the change they haue about an houres difference. The Sun riſeth at ſixe, and ſetteth at ſixe. When it is noone, commonly they haue the Sunne in the middle of the element iuſt ouer their heads, and it giueth no ſhadow, although it ſtretcheth ſomewhat out as the Sunne taketh his courſe. In Goa you may ſee both the Poles of the world, the North and South Starres ſtand not farre aboue the Horizon.

Chap. 36.
Of the Indians called Bramenes, which are the Miniſters of the Pagods, and Indian Idols, and of their manner of life.

The Bramenes are the honeſteſt and moſt eſteemed Nation among all the Indian Heathens: for they doe alwaies ſerue in the chiefeſt places about the King, as Receiuers, Stewards, Ambaſſadors, and ſuch like Offices. They are likewiſe the Prieſts and Miniſters of the Pagods, or deuiliſh Idols. They are of great authoritie among the Indian people, for that the King doth nothing without their counſell and conſent, and that they may bee knowne from other men, they weare vpon their naked bodie, from the ſhoulder croſſe vnder the arme ouer their bodie downe to the girdle, or the cloth that is wrapped about their middle, three or foure ſtrings like ſealing threed, whereby they are knowne: which they neuer put off although it ſhould coſt them their liues, for their Profeſſion and Religion will not permit it. They goe naked, ſauing onely that they haue a cloth bound about their middles to hide their priuie members. They weare ſometimes when they goe abroad, a thinne cotton linnen Gowne called Cabaia, lightly caſt ouer their ſhoulders, and hanging downe to the ground like ſome other Indians, as Benianes, Guſarates, and Decanijns. Vpon their heads they weare a white cloth, wound twice or thrice about, therewith to hide their haire, which they neuer cut off, but weare it long and turned vp as the women doe. They haue moſt commonly round rings of gold hanging at their eares, as moſt of the Indians haue. They eate not any thing that hath life, but feed themſelues with herbes and Rice, neither yet when they are ſick will for any thing be let bloud, but heale themſelues by herbes and ointments, and by rubbing their bodies with Sanders, and ſuch like ſweet woods. In Goa and on the Sea coaſts there are many Bramenes, which commonly doe maintayne themſelues with ſelling of Spices and other Apothecarie ware, but it is not ſo cleane as others, but full of garbiſh and duſt. They are very ſubtile in writing and caſting accounts, whereby they make other ſimple Indians beleeue what they will.

Touching the points of their Religion, wherein the common people beleeue them to bee Prophets: whatſoeuer they firſt meet withall in the ſtreets at their going forth, that doe they all the day after pray vnto. The women when they goe forth haue but one cloth about their bodies; which couereth their heads, and hangeth downe vnto their knees: all the reſt of the body is naked. They haue rings through their noſes, about their legs, toes, neckes, and armes, and vpon each hand ſeuen or eight rings or bracelets, ſome of ſiluer and gilt, if they be of wealth and abilitie: but the common people of glaſſe, which is the common wearing of all the Indian women. When the woman is ſeuen yeeres old, and the man nine yeeres, they doe marrie, but they come not together before the woman be ſtrong enough to beare children. When the Bramenes die, all their friends aſſemble together, and make a hole in the ground, wherein they throwe much wood and other things: and if the man bee of any account, they caſt in ſweet Sanders, and other Spices, with Rice, Corne, and ſuch like, and much Oyle, becauſe the fire ſhould burne the ſtronger. Which done, they lay the dead Bramenes in it: then commeth his wife with muſicke and many of her neereſt friends all ſinging certaine praiſes in commendation of her husbands life, putting her in comfort, and encouraging her to follow her husband, and goe with him into the other world. Then ſhee taketh all her Iewels, and parteth them among her friends, and ſo with a cheerfull countenance, ſhe leapeth into the fire, and is preſently coue-red with Wood and Oyle: ſo ſhee is quickly dead, and with her Husbands body burned to aſhes: and if it chance, as not very often it doth, that any woman refuſeth to be burnt with her Husband, then they cut the haire cleane off from her head: and while ſhe liueth ſhe muſt neuer after weare any Iewels more, and from that time ſhee is deſpiſed, and accounted for a diſhoneſt woman. Theſe Bramenes obſerue certaine Faſting dayes in the yeere, and that with ſo great abſtinence, that they eate nothing all that day, and ſometimes in three or foure dayes together. They haue their Pagodes and Idols, whoſe Miniſters they are, whereof they tell and ſhew many Miracles, and ſay that thoſe Pagodes haue beene men liuing vpon earth, and becauſe of their Holie liues, and good Workes done here in this world, are for a reward thereof, become Holie men in the other world, as by their miracles, by the Diuell performed, hath beene manifeſted vnto them, and by their commandements their formes and ſhapes are made in the moſt vgly and deformed manner that poſſible may be deuiſed. Such they Pray and Offer vnto, with many diuelliſh Superſtitions, and ſtedfaſtly beleeue that they are their Aduocates and Interceſſors vnto God. They beleeue alſo that there is a ſupreame God aboue, which ruleth all things. and that mens ſoules are Immortall, and that they goe out of this world into the other, both Beaſts and Men, and receiue reward according to their workes, as Pythagoras teacheth, whoſe Diſciples they are.

Chap. 37. Of the Guſarates and Banianes of Cambaia.

The Guſarates and Banianes, are of the Countrey of Cambaia: many of them dwell in Goa, Diu, Chaul, Cochin, and other places of India, becauſe of their trade and traffique in Merchandiſe, which they vſe much with all kindes of wares, as Corne, Cotton, Linnen, Anil, Rice, and other wares, ſpecially all kind of precious Stones wherein they haue great skill. They are moſt ſubtill and expert in caſting of Accounts and Writing, ſo that they doe not onely ſurpaſſe and goe beyond all Iewes and other Nations thereabouts, but alſo the Portugals: and in this reſpect they haue no aduantage, for that they are very perfect in the trade of Merchandiſe, and very readie to deceiue men. They eate not any thing that hath Life or Blood in it, neither would they kill it for all the goods in the world, how ſmall or vnneceſſarie ſoeuer it were, for that they ſtedfaſtly beleeue, that euery liuing thing hath a Soule, and are next after Men to be accounted of, according to Pythagoras law, and know it muſt die: and ſometimes they doe buy certaine Fowles or other Beaſts of the Chriſtians or Portugals, which they meant to haue killed, and when they haue bought them, they let them flee and runne away.

They haue a cuſtome in Cambaia, in the High-wayes, and Woods, to ſet Pots with water, and to caſt Corne and other Graine vpon the ground to feed Birds and Beaſts withall: and throughout Cambaia they haue Hoſpitals to cure and heale all manner of Beaſts and Birds therein whatſoeuer they ayle, and receiue them thither as if they were Men, and when they are healed, they let them flie or runne away whither they will, which among them is a worke of great Charitie, ſaying, it is done to their euen neighbours. And if they take a Flea or a Louſe, they will not kill it, but take or put it into ſome hole or corner in the wall, and ſo let it goe, and you can doe them no greater iniurie then to kill it in their preſence, for they will neuer leaue intreating and deſiring with all curteſie not to kill it, and that man ſhould not ſeeme to commit ſo great a ſinne, as to take away the life of that, to whom God had giuen both Soule and Bodie: yea, and they will offer much money to a man to let it liue, and goe away. They eate no Radiſhes, Onions, Garlicke, nor any kind of Herbe that hath any colour of Red in it, nor Egges, for they thinke there is blood in them. They drinke not any Wine, nor vſe any Vineger, but onely water. They are ſo dangerous of eating and drinking with other men which are not their Countrimen, that they would rather ſtarue to death then once to doe it. It happeneth oftentimes that they ſayle in the Portugals ſhips from Goa to Cochin, to ſell their Wares, and to traffique with the Portugals, and then they make their prouiſions for ſo long time as they thinke to ſtay vpon the way, which they take aboord with them, and thereupon they feed. And if the time falleth out longer, then they made account of their water and prouiſion being all ſpent, as it happened when I ſailed from Goa to Cochin, they had rather die for hunger and thirſt then once to touch the Chriſtians meat. They waſh themſelues before they eate, as the Bramenes doe, as alſo euerie time when they eaſe themſelues or make water. They are of a yellow colour like the Bramenes, and ſomewhat whiter, and there are Women among them which are much whiter and clearer of Complection then the Portugall women. They are formed and made both in Face, Limbes, and in all other things like men of Europe, colour onely excepted. Their Apparell is a thinne white Gowne vpon their naked bodies, from the head to the feet, and made faſt on the ſide vnder their armes, their Shooes of red leather, ſharpe at the toes, and turning vp like hookes, their Beards ſhauen like the Turkes, ſauing onely their Mouſtachios, they weare on their Heads a white cloth three or foure times wrapped about like the Bramenes, and vnder their haire a Starre vpon their foreheads, which they rub euery morning with a little white white Sanders tempered with water,& three or foure graines of Rice among it, which the Bramene; alſo doe as a ſuperſtitious Ceremonie of their Law. Their Bodies are commonly anoynted with Sanders and other ſweet Woods, which they doe verie much vſe, as alſo all the Indians. Their Women are apparelled like the Bramenes wiues, they eate like the Mahometans, and all other Indians vpon the ground. In their Houſes or Aſſemblies they ſit on the ground vpon Mats or Carpets, and alwayes leaue their Shooes without the doore, ſo that they are alwayes barefoot in their Houſes: wherefore commonly the heeles of their ſhooes are neuer pulled vp, to ſaue labour of vntying or vndoing them, they haue a thouſand other Heatheniſh ſuperſtitions which are not worth the rehearſall.

One liued ſixe dayes with the Engliſh, and neither did eate or drinke. See *lib.*3.*c.*14.

Chap. 38.
Of the Canaras and Decaniins.

Brutiſh and ſtinking holies

THe Canaras and Decanijns are of the Countrey of Decam, commonly called Ballagate, lying behind Goa: many of them dwell in Goa. Their Apparell is like the Guſurates and Benianes, except their Shooes, which they weare like Antiques with cut toes, and faſtned aboue vpon their naked feet, which they call Alparcas. They weare their Beards and haire long, as it groweth without cutting, but onely turne it vp, and dreſſe it as the Benianes and Bramenes vſe to doe, and are like them for colour, forme, and making. They eate all things except Kine, Hogges, and Buffles, Fleſh and Fiſh. They account the Oxe, Kow or Buffle to bee Holie, which they haue commonly in the houſe with them, and they beſmeere, ſtroke, and handle them with all the friendſhip in the world, and feed them with the ſame meat they vſe to eate themſelues, and when the Beaſts eaſe themſelues, they hold their hands vnder their tailes and ſo throw the dung away. In the night time they ſleepe with them in their Houſes, and to conclude, vſe them as if they were reaſonable Creatures, whereby they thinke to doe God great ſeruice. In their Eating, ſitting in the Houſe, Waſhing, making Cleane, and other Ceremonies and Superſtitions they are altogether like the Bramenes, Guſurates, and Banianes. In their Marriages they contract each with other at ſeuen yeeres, and at eleuen or twelue yeeres they are married, and dwell together. When they are to bee married, they begin foureteene dayes before to make a great ſound with Trumpets, Drummes, and Fires, which continueth day and night for all thoſe foureteene dayes, with ſo great a noiſe of ſongs and Inſtruments, that men can neither heare, nor ſee: On the Wedding day, all the friends and kindred on both ſides doe aſſemble together, and ſit vpon the ground, round about a Fire, and goe ſeuen times about it vttering certaine words, whereby the Wedding is done. They giue their Daughters no Houſhold-ſtuffe, but onely ſome Iewels, as Bracelets, Eare-rings, and ſuch like of ſmall value, wherewith their Husbands muſt be content, for the Daughters are no Heyres, but the Sonnes inherite all, but they keepe and maintaine their Daughters and Siſters till they marrie: when they die, they are likewiſe burnt, and ſome of their Wiues with them, but not ſo many as of the Bramenes. Euery one of them followeth his Fathers occupation, and marrieth with the Daughters of ſuch like Trades, which they name Kindreds. They haue their Faſting dayes, and Ceremonies like the Bramenes, for they are as the Laitie, and the Bramenes as the Spiritualtie, the Miniſters, Prieſts, and Prophets of their Idols. They hire and farme the Cuſtomes and Rents of the Portugals, and the Kings reuenues in the Land of Bardes, Salſette, and the Iland of Goa, ſo that oftentimes for any queſtion or ſtriſe they muſt appeare in Law, where they alwayes come without Councell or Atturney, and know ſo well how to place their words, according to the Lawes of Portugall, not onely Temporall but Spirituall, that they are able to ſet downe, and ſhew where it ſtandeth written, as well as any Counſellour could doe, and make their Petitions and Requeſts without any mans aduiſe, that the Portugals doe wonder at their readie wits, as I haue oftentimes found in them.

Oathes.

When they are to take their Oathes to beare witneſſe with any man, they are ſet within a Circle made of Aſhes vpon the pauement where they ſtand, ſtill laying a few Aſhes on their bare Heads, holding one hand on their heads, the other on their breſts, and then in their owne ſpeech ſweare by their Pagode, that they will tell the Truth without diſſimulation, whatſoeuer ſhall bee asked them, for that they certainly beleeue they ſhould be damned for euer, if as then they ſhould not ſay the truth, but conceale it.

Chap. 39.
Of the Canariins and Corumbiins of India.

THe Canarijns and Corumbijns are the Countrimen, and ſuch as deale with Tilling the Land, Fiſhing and ſuch like labours. Theſe are the moſt contemptible, and the miſerableſt people of all India, and liue very poorely, maintaining themſelues with little meat. They eate all kind of things, except Kine, Oxen, Buffles, Hogges, and Hens fleſh; their Religion is like the Decanijns and Canaras, for they are all of one Countrey and Cuſtome, little differing: they goe naked, their priuie members onely couered with a cloth. The Women goe with a cloth bound about their middle beneath their nauels, and hanging downe to the middle of their thighes, and the other end thereof they caſt ouer their ſhoulders, whereby halfe their breſts are couered. They are in a manner blacke, or of a darke browne colour, many of them are Chriſtians, becauſe their chiefe habitation and dwelling places are on the Sea-ſide, in the Countries bordering vpon Goa, for that the Palme-trees doe grow vpon the Sea coaſts, or vpon the bankes by Riuer ſides.

Rice grounds.

The Rice is ſowed vpon low ground, which in Winter time is couered with water, wherewith thoſe Canarijns doe maintaine themſelues ; theſe bring Hennes, Fruit, Milke, Egges, and other ſuch like wares into the Towne to ſell. They dwell in little ſtraw Houſes, the doores whereof are ſo low, that men muſt creepe in and out, their houſhold-ſtuffe is a Mat vpon the ground to ſleepe vpon, and a Pit or hole in the ground to beat their Rice in, with a Pot or two to ſeeth it in, and ſo they liue and gaine ſo much as it is a wonder. For commonly their Houſes are full of ſmall Children, which crall and creepe about all naked, vntill they are ſeuen or eight yeares old, and then they couer their priuie members. When the women are readie to trauell with Child, they are commonly deliuered when they are all alone, and their Husbands in the fields, as it fortuned vpon a time, as I and ſome other of my friends went to walke in the fields, and into the Villages where the Canarijns dwell, and hauing thirſt, I went to one of the Canarijns houſes to aske ſome water, therewith to refreſh vs, and becauſe I was very thirſtie, I ſtooped downe and thruſt my head in at the doore, asking for ſome water. where I eſpied a Woman alone within the houſe, tying her cloth faſt about her middle, and before her hauing a woodden Trough (by the Portugals called Gamello) full of water, where ſhee ſtood and waſhed a Child, whereof as then ſhe had newly beene deliuered without any helpe : which hauing waſht, ſhe laid it Naked on the ground vpon a great Indian Figge leafe, and deſired me to ſtay and ſhe would preſently giue me water. When I vnderſtood by her that ſhe had as then newly beene deliuered of that Child without any helpe, I had no deſire to drinke of her water, but went vnto another to aske water, and perceiued the ſame woman not long after going about her houſe, as if there had beene no ſuch matter, and the Children are brought vp in that manner cleane naked, nothing done vnto them, but onely waſhed and made cleane in a little cold water, and doe in that ſort proſper and come vp as well as man would wiſh, or as any Child within theſe Countries can doe with all the tending they haue, and liue many times vntill they be a hundreth yeares old, without any Head-ach, or Tooth-ach, or loſing any of their Teeth. They weare onely a tuske of haire on the tops of their Heads, which they ſuffer to grow long : the reſt of their haire is cut ſhort, they are very expert in Swimming and Diuing, they row vp and downe the Riuers in Boates called Almadias, whereof ſome of them are hewen out of a peece of wood, and ſo narrow that a man can hardly ſit in them, and it chanceth oftentimes that they turne ouer and ouer twice or thrice before they paſſe the Riuer, and then they leape out into the water and turne them vp, and ſo powring out the water they get into them againe. They are ſo miſerable, that for a Penie they would indure to be Whipped, and they eate ſo little, that it ſeemeth they liue by the Aire, they are likewiſe moſt of them leane, and weake of limbes, of little ſtrength and very Cowards, whereby the Portugals doe them great outrage and villanie, vſing them like Dogs and Beaſts.

Childbirth.

In their Marriages and Deaths they obſerue the manner of the Decanijns and Canaras, as alſo in their Religion and Ceremonies. When the Man is dead his body is burnt, and the Woman cuts her haire off, and breaketh all her Iewels, although they bee but few and ſmall, for they are moſt of Glaſſe.

Chap. 40.
Of the Arabians and Abexiins dwelling in India.

There are many Arabians and Abexijns in India. The Arabians obſerue Mahomets Law, and the Abexijns, ſome are Mahometans, ſome Chriſtians, after their manner, for they are of Preſter Iohns land. The Abexijns that are Chriſtians, haue on their Faces foure burnt markes in manner of a Croſſe, one ouer their Noſe in the middle of the forehead, betweene both their eies, on each of their Cheekes one, betweene their eyes and their eares, and one vnder their nether Lip downe to the chinne. Theſe Abexijns and Arabians, ſuch as are free doe ſerue in all India for Saylers and Sea-faring men. The Portugals (although they ſerue for Saylers in the Portugals Ships) that come into India, and haue neuer beene other in Portugall but Saylers, yet are they aſhamed to liue in that order, and thinke it a great diſcredit vnto them, together with a great diminiſhing of their Authorities and eſtimations, which they account themſelues to hold in India, ſo that they giue themſelues out for Maiſters of ſhips, and by their Captaines are alſo called Pilots and chiefe Boatſwaines, but not lower : for if they ſhould deſcend but one ſtep lower, it would be a great blot and blemiſh vnto them all their liues after, which they would not indure for any thing in the world. Theſe Abexijns and Arabians, ſerue for ſmall money, and being hired are verie lowly and ſubiect, ſo that oftentimes they are beaten and ſmitten, not as Slaues, but like Dogs, which they beare very patiently, not once ſpeaking a word : they commonly haue their Wiues and Children with them in the ſhip wherein they are hired, which continually ſtay with them, what Voyage ſoeuer they make, and dreſſe their owne meat, which is Rice ſodden in water with ſalt Fiſh among it. The cauſe why the Women ſaile in the ſhip, is, for that in Summer and not elſe, their ſhips goe to Sea, when they alwaies haue calme water and faire weather, with good windes : they haue commonly but one Portugall or two for Captaine, Maſter and Pilot, and they haue a chiefe Boatſwaine, which is an Arabian, which they call Mocadon, and he is ruler of the Arabians and Abexijns, that are Sailers, whom he hath vnder his ſubiection, euen as if they were his Slaues or Subiects.

Pride of Portugall Saylers.

This Mocadon is hee that conditioneth and maketh bargaine with the owners of the Ship, to haue ſo many Sailers, and hee receiueth the monethlie money for their wages, and accounteth with the Sailers particularly, but for gouernment of the ſhip hee hath not to doe, neither troubleth himſelfe therewith. The ſhips when they ſaile, vſe no Caske for water, becauſe there is not any throughout all India, nor any made there, ſaue onely ſuch as come out of Portugall, and vſed in the Portugall ſhippes: but in ſtead of Pipes they vſe a great foure cornered woodden Ceſterne, that ſtandeth by the maine Maſt, at the very foot thereof, vpon the keele of the ſhip, which is very well pitched, and made faſt, wherein they lade as much water as they thinke will ſerue them for their Voyage. The Captaine, Maſter or Pilot, Marchants and Paſſengers, haue euerie man their meat by themſelues, and their water in great Indian pots called Martauans.

Chap. 41. Of the blacke people of Moſambique, which are called Caffares, & of their manners and cuſtomes. See of theſe ſup. 9. c. 12.

THe Blacke people or Caffares of the Land of Moſambique, and all the Coaſt of Ethiopia, and within the land to the Cape de bona Speranza, goe all naked, although thoſe of Moſambique, (that is the Women) doe a little couer themſelues, which they doe by meanes of the daily conuerſation they haue with the Portugals. Some haue all their bodies raſed and ſeared with Irons, and all figured like raſed Satten and Damaske, wherein they take great pride, thinking there are no fairer people then they in all the world, ſo that when they ſee any white people, that weare Apparell on their bodies, they laugh and mocke at them, thinking vs to bee Monſters and vgly people: and when they will make any diuelliſh forme and Picture, then they inuent one after the forme of a White man in his apparell. There are among them that file there Teeth as ſharpe as Needles, which they likewiſe eſteeme for a great ornament.

Note of Ieſuites

There are ſome of them that are become Chriſtians ſince the Portugals came thither, but there is no great paines taken about it in thoſe Countries, becauſe there is no profite to bee had, as alſo that it is an infectious and vnwholſome Countrey: And therefore the Ieſuites are warie enough not to make any Houſes or habitations therein, for they ſee no great profite to be reaped there for them, as they doe in India and the Ilands of Iapan, and in other places, where they find great quantities of Riches, with the ſappe whereof they increaſe much and fill their Beehiues, therewith to ſatisfie their thirſtie and inſatiable deſires.

They haue a Cuſtome among them, that when they goe to Warre againſt their enemies, if they winne the Battell, or ouerthrow each other, he that taketh or killeth moſt men, is holden and accounted for the beſt and braueſt man among them, and much reſpected, and to witneſſe the ſame before their Kings, of as many as they haue ſlaine or taken Priſoners, they cut off their priuie members, that if they bee let goe againe, they may no more beget Children, which in proceſſe of time might miſchiefe them, and then they drie them well, becauſe they ſhould not rot: which being ſo dryed, they come before their Kings with great reuerence, in the preſence of the principall men in the Village, and there take theſe members ſo dried one by one in their mouthes, and ſpit them on the ground at the Kings feet, which the King with great thankes accepteth, and the more to reward and recompence their Valour, cauſeth them all to be taken vp and giuen to them againe, for a ſigne and token of Honour, whereby euer after from that time forwards they are accounted as Knights, and they take all thoſe members, wherewith the King hath thus honoured them, and tie them all vpon a ſtring like a Bracelet or Chaine, and when they Marrie, or goe to any Wedding, or Feaſts, the Bride or Wiues of thoſe Knights doe weare that Chaine of mens members about their neckes, which among them is as great an Honour, as it is with vs, to weare the Golden Fleece.

A coſtly kinde of Chaine for Women to weare.

From Moſambique great numbers of theſe Caffares are carried into India, and many times they ſell a Man or Woman that is growne to their full ſtrength, for two or three Duckets. When the Portugals ſhips put in there for freſh Water and other neceſſaries, then they are dearer. In time of Pouertie or Dearth the Fathers may ſell their Children, as it happened in my time, that there was ſuch a dearth, and ſcarſitie of Victuals in the firme land, and Countries bordering vpon Goa, that the men of India came to Goa (and other places where the Portugals are reſident) to ſell their Children in great numbers, and for ſmall prices, to buy them victuals. I haue ſeene Boyes of eight or ten yeares, giuen in exchange for fiue or ſixe meaſures of Rice, and ſome for three or foure Duckets the peece, and ſome came with their Wiues and Children to offer themſelues to bee Slaues, ſo that they might haue meate and drinke to nouriſh their bodies.

And becauſe the Portugals haue Traffique in all places (as wee haue beene in many) it is the cauſe why ſo many are brought out of all Countries to be ſold, for the Portugals doe make a liuing by buying and ſelling of them, as they doe with other wares.

Chap. 42. Of the Malabares and Nayros in India, with their manners and cuſtome.

THe Malabares, are thoſe that dwell on the Sea-coaſt, betweene Goa, and the Cape de Comoriyn Southward from Goa, where the Pepper groweth. They haue a ſpeech by themſelues, and their Countrey is diuided into many Kingdomes, they goe all naked onely their priuie members couered, the Women likewiſe haue but a cloth from their Nauell downe to their knees, all the reſt is naked, they are ſtrong of limbes, and verie arrogant and proud, of colour altogether blacke; yet verie ſmooth both of haire and skinne, which commonly they anoynt with Oyle, to make it ſhine; they weare their haire as long as it will grow, tyed on the top or crowne of their heads with a Lace, both men and women: the lappes of their Eares are open, and are ſo long that they hang downe to their ſhoulders, and the longer and wider they are, the more they are eſteemed among them, and it is thought to be a beautie in them. Of Face, Bodie and Limbes, they are altogether like men of Europe, without any difference, but onely in colour, the men are commonly verie hairie, and rough vpon the breſt, and on their bodies, and are the moſt Leacherous and vnchaſte Nation in all the Orient, ſo that there are verie few women Children among them, of ſeuen or eight yeeres old, that haue their Maidenheads: They are verie readie to catch one from another, though it bee but for a ſmall Penie.

In their Houſes they are not verie curious, their houſes and houſholdſtuffe, differeth not much from the Canarijns and Corumbijns of Goa. Their Idolatrie, Ceremonies and Superſtitions, are like the Heathens. Of theſe Malabares there are two manner of people, the one is Noblemen or Gentlemen, called Nayros, which are Souldiers, that doe onely weare and handle Armes, the other is the common people, called Polyas, and they may weare no Weapons, nor beare any Armes. The Nayros muſt in all places where they goe or ſtand, weare ſuch Armes as are appointed for them, and alwayes be readie at the Kings commandement to doe him ſeruice, ſome of them doe alwayes beare a naked Rapier or Courtelas in their right hands, and a great Target in their left hand, thoſe Targets are very great: and made of light wood, ſo that when they will they can couer their whole bodies therewith; they are ſo well vſed thereunto, that they eſteeme it nothing to beare them, and when they trauell on the way, they may be heard a great way off, for that they commonly make a great knocking with the Hilt of their Rapier againſt the Target, becauſe they would be heard. There are ſome that carrie a Bow and a venemous Arrow vpon their ſhoulder, wherein they are verie expert, others carrie long Pikes, ſome Pieces, with the Match ready lighted, and wound about their armes, and haue the beſt Lockes that poſſible may be found in all Europe, which they know ſo well how to vſe, that the Portugals can haue no aduantage againſt them. Whereſoeuer they goe, they muſt alwaies haue their Armes with them, both night and day. Not any of them are Married, nor may not marrie during their liues, but they may freely lie with the Nayros Daughters, or with any other that liketh them, what women ſoeuer they be, yea though they be Married women. When the Nayro hath a deſire thereunto, hee entreth into a houſe where he thinketh good, and ſetteth his Armes in the ſtreet without the doore, and goeth in and diſpatcheth his buſineſſe, with the good Wife or the Daughter, the doore ſtanding wide open, not fearing that any man ſhould come in to let him; for whoſoeuer paſſeth by, and ſeeth the Nayros armes ſtanding at the doore, although it be the Goodman himſelfe, hee goeth by, and letteth him make an end, and hauing done, he taketh his Armes and departeth thence, and then the Husband may come to the houſe without making any words, or once mouing queſtion about it. In that manner they goe where they will, and no man may denie them. As theſe Nayros goe in the ſtreets, they vſe to crie Po, Po, which is to ſay, Take heed, looke to your ſelues, or I come, ſtand out of the way, for that the other ſort of people called Polyas, that are no Nayros, may not once touch or trouble one of them; for if any of the Polyas ſhould ſtand ſtill, and not giue them place, whereby he ſhould chance to touch their bodies, he may freely thruſt him through, and no man aske him why he did it. And when they are once touched by any Polyas, or by any other Nation except Nayros, they muſt (before they eate, or conuerſe with other Nayros) waſh and cleanſe their bodies with great Ceremonies and Superſtitions. Likewiſe they muſt not be touched by any Chriſtian, or any other man. And when the Portugals came firſt into India, at Cochin it was concluded, (to pacifie the matter, and to keepe peace and quietneſſe among them) that two men ſhould be choſen, one for the Nayros, and the other for the Portugals, that ſhould Fight bodie to bodie, and hee that ſhould be ouerthrowne, that Nation ſhould giue place vnto the other, this was done in the preſence of both Nations, and the Portugall ouercame the Nayro, whom he ſlew; whereupon it was agreed, that the Nayros ſhould giue place vnto the Portugall, and ſtand aſide vntill he be paſt whereſoeuer they meet. The Nayros weare the nailes of their hands very long, whereby they ſhew that they are Gentlemen, becauſe the longneſſe of the Nailes doth let and hinder men from working or doing any labour. They ſay likewiſe that they doe it, the better and faſter to gripe a thing in their hands, and to hold their Rapiers, which ſome Portugals and Meſticos doe likewiſe vſe, and hold the ſame opinion with the Nayros, whereof there are many in India, which let their Nailes grow for the ſame cauſe.

Nayros.

The principalleſt or chiefeſt of thoſe Nayros, which are Leaders or Captaines of certaine numbers of Nayros, weare a Gold or Siluer bracelet, or Ring, about their armes, aboue their elbowes: as alſo their Gouernours, Ambaſſadours, and Kings, whereby they are knowne from other men, for otherwiſe they goe all naked. Alſo their Kings, Rulers, and other Captaines and Leaders, when they goe abroad, are guarded and accompanied by other Nayros. They are verie good and ſtout Souldiers, and will ſet vpon a man very fiercely, they are alſo verie full of reuenge, ſo that whenſoeuer they fight againſt their Enemies either by water or by land, and that they chance to be thruſt into the bodie with a Pike, they are not preſently therewith conſent to lie downe, but if they cannot ſpeedily plucke the Pike forth, they will not ſpare to pull it forth with both their hands, and draw it through their bodies, therewith to ſet vpon them that gaue them the wound, and to be reuenged on them.

Holy water.

Heyres.

The King may not Iudge nor execute thoſe Nayros openly, for if they haue deſerued Death, he cauſeth them by other Nayros to be put to death. The Daughters of the Nayros, may not haue the companie of any man, but onely of Nayros, although ſecretly they haue the company of many Portugals and Chriſtians, but if the Nayros once perceiued it, or finde them in the deed doing, they might kill them without further queſtion. In euery place where they dwell, they haue a Pit or Well digged, wherein they doe hold water, which ſtandeth openly in the way where euery man paſſeth by, wherein euery morning when they riſe, they waſh themſelues all ouer, beginning firſt at the Foot and ſo riſing vp to the Head, as well Men as Women, without being aſhamed to be ſeene of ſuch as goe by, or looke vpon them, and the King himſelfe likewiſe: which water is ſo greene, ſlimie and ſtinking, that a man can not chuſe but ſtop his Noſe as he goeth by it: and they certainly beleeue, that whenſoeuer they ſhould forget to waſh themſelues in that water, that they ſhould then be whollie vncleane and full of ſinne: and this waſhing or making cleane, muſt not be done in any running water, but it muſt be in a place where the water ſtandeth in a Pit or Well, and by their Bramenes conjured with many Words and Ceremonies, otherwiſe it were of no vertue but whollie vnprofitable, for their Idolatrous ſeruices. They are like the other Heathens, and are burned when they are Dead: their Sonnes may not be their Heyres, becauſe they haue no Wiues, but vſe all women, where and when they will, doubting which is their owne Sonne: for the Bramenes alſo haue the Kings wiues at their pleaſures, and doe him great honour when it pleaſeth them to lie with their Queene. Their heyres are their Siſters ſonnes, for they ſay, although they doubt of their Fathers, yet they know their Siſters are the Mothers of them. Thus much touching the Nayros and Gentlemen or Souldiers.

Polyas.

The other common people of the Malabares, called Polyas, are ſuch as are the Countrey Husbandmen and Labourers, men of Occupations, Fiſhers, and ſuch like: thoſe are much contemned and deſpiſed, they liue miſerably, and may weare no kind of Weapon, neither yet touch or bee conuerſant with the Nayros, for as the Nayros goe on the ſtreets, and they heare him call, they ſtep aſide, bowing their Armes, and ſtooping with their Heads downe to the ground, not daring ſo much as once looke vp before the Nayros be paſt: in other things they obſerue the Cuſtomes of the other Indians, for that euery man followeth the Occupation of his Elders, and may not change it for any thing.

*Chap.*43. Of the Moores and Iewes in India.

THere are great numbers of Moores and Iewes in all places of India, as at Goa, Cochin, and within the Land. In their Houſes and Apparell they follow the manner of the Land wherein they are reſident: amongſt the Indians they haue their Churches, Sinagogues and Meſquitas, wherein they vſe all Ceremonies according to their Law: but in the places where the Portugals inhabite and gouerne, it is not permitted vnto them to vſe them openly, neither to any Indian, although they haue their Families and dwelling Houſes, and get their liuings, and deale one with the other: but ſecretly in their Houſes they may doe what they will, ſo that no man take offence thereat: without the Townes and where the Portugals haue no commandement, they may freely vſe and exerciſe their Ceremonies and Superſtitions, euery one as liketh him beſt, without any man to let or denie them: but if they bee found openly doing it in the Portugals Townes and Iuriſdictions, or that they haue any point of Chriſtian ceremonies mingled among theirs, both men and women die for it, vnleſſe they turne vnto the Chriſtian Faith: they are moſt white of colour, like men of Europa, and haue many faire Women. There are many of them that came out of the Countrey of Paleſtina and Ieruſalem thither, and ſpeake ouer all the Exchange verie perfect and good Spaniſh.

The Moores likewiſe haue their Meſquitos, wherein they pray, and aboue the Church they haue many Sellers and Galleries, where they learne their Children their principles of Religion before they goe to Church: they waſh their Feet, for the which purpoſe they haue alwayes a Ceſterne with water ſtanding without the Church, and leaue their Alparcos (which are their Shooes) ſtanding at the Church doore before they goe in, and being in the Church they fall flat on the ground vpon their faces, and ſo with their armes and hands lifted vp, make many counterfeit faces. They are alſo Circumciſed like the Iewes, and eate no Hogs-fleſh, and when they are dead they are buried. In their Churches they haue not any Images, but onely ſome Stones or round Pillers ſtanding vpright with certaine Chaldean letters (out of their Alcaron) grauen vpon them. As I and a friend of mine chanced to goe out of the Towne, wee were deſirous to ſee their Mahometicall Church, and their manner of Seruice, which was denied vs by the keeper of the doore, that bad vs put off our Shooes, but becauſe we would not, hee ſaid it was not lawfull for vs to enter in that ſort into the Church: but to let vs ſee it, hee ſuffered vs to ſtand within the doore, and opened ſome of the windowes, that wee might ſee what was within it: then the Portugall asked him for their God and their Saints which they vſed to pray vnto, becauſe he ſaw the Church emptie, as I ſaid before: then the Moore anſwered him, that They vſed not to pray to Stockes and Stones, but to the liuing God, which is in Heauen, and ſaid, that the proud Portugall Chriſtians, and the Heathens were all of one Religion, for that they pray to Images made of Wood and Stones, and giue them the Glorie which onely appertaineth to the liuing God: with the which anſwer the Portugall was ſo angrie, that hee began to chide, ſo that there had growne a great quarrell, had it not beene for me.

See the proofe hereof, *ſup. pag.*28.

*Chap.*44. Of their Pagodes.

IN the Kingdome of Narſinga, or the Coaſt called Choramandel, there ſtandeth a Pagode, that is very great, exceeding rich, and holden in great eſtimation, hauing many Pilgrimages & Viſitations made vnto it from all the Countries bordering about it, where euery yeere they haue many Faires, Feaſts, and Proceſſions, and there they haue a Waggon or a Cart, which is ſo great and heauie, that three or foure Elephants can hardly draw it, and this brought foorth at Faires, Feaſts, and Proceſſions. At this Cart hang likewiſe many Cables or Ropes, whereat alſo all the Countrey people, both men and women of pure deuotion doe pull and hale. In the vpper part of this Cart ſtandeth a Tabernacle or Seat, wherein ſitteth the Idoll, and vnder it ſit the Kings Wiues, which after their manner play on all Inſtruments, making a moſt ſweet melodie, and in that ſort is the Cart drawne forth, with great Deuotions and Proceſſions: there are ſome of them, that of great zeale and pure deuotion doe cut peeces of fleſh out of their bodies, and throw them downe before the Pagode: others lay themſelues vnder the wheeles of the Cart, and let the Cart runne ouer them, whereby they are all cruſhed to peeces, and preſſed to death, and they that thus die, are acounted for holy and deuout Martyrs, and from that time forwards are kept and preſerued for great and holy Reliques, beſides a thouſand other ſuch like beaſtly Superſtitions, which they vſe, as one of my Chamber fellowes, that had ſeene it ſhewed me, and it is alſo well knowne throughout all India.

Mad Zeale.

Deuils Martyrs.

Vpon a time I and certaine Portugals my friends, hauing licence from the Vice-roy were at a Banquet and meeting, about fiue or ſixe miles within the firme Land, and with vs wee had certaine Decanijns, and naturall borne Indians, that were acquainted with the Countrey, the chiefe cauſe of our going, was to ſee their manner of burning the dead Bramene, and his Wife with him being aliue, becauſe we had beene aduertiſed, that ſuch a thing was to bee done. And there among other ſtrange deuiſes that we ſaw, we came into ſome Villages, and places inhabited by the Indians, where in the way, and at euerie Hill, ſtonie Rocke or hole, almoſt within a Pater noſter length, we found a Carued Pagode, or rather Deuils, and monſters in helliſh ſhapes. At the laſt we came into a Village, where ſtood a great Church of ſtone, wherein wee entred, and found nothing in it but a great Table that hung in the middle of the Church, with the Image of a Pagode painted therein ſo miſhaped and deformed, that more monſtrous was neuer ſeene, for it had many Hornes, and long Teeth that hung out of his mouth downe to the knees, and beneath his nauell and belly, it had another ſuch like face, with many hornes and tuskes. Vpon the head thereof ſtood a triple Crowned Myter, not much vnlike the Popes triple Crowne, ſo that in effect it ſeemed to bee a Monſter, ſuch as are deſcribed in the Apocalips. It hung before a Wall, which made a partition from another Chamber, in manner of a Quier, yet was it cloſe made vp without windowes, or any place for light, in the middle whereof was a little narrow cloſe doore, and on both ſides of the doore, ſtood a ſmall Furnace made within the wall, wherein were certaine holes or Lattices, thereby to let the ſmoke or ſauour of the fire to enter into that place, when any Offering ſhould be made. Whereof we found ſome there, as Rice, Corne, Fruits, Hennes, and ſuch like things, which the Indians daily offered, but there came ſo filthie a ſmoke and ſtinke out of the place, that whoſoeuer went neere it, was almoſt ready to choke, the ſaid place being all black, ſmeerie and foule therwith. Before this doore being ſhut, in the middle of the Church, there ſtood a Calfe of ſtone, whereon one of our companie leaped, and laughing, began to crie out, which the Bramene that kept the Church perceiuing, began to call and crie for helpe, ſo that preſently many of the neighbours ranne thither, to ſee what the cauſe migh be, but before the throng of people came, we dealt ſo well with the Bramene (acknowledging our fault, and ſaying it was vnaduiſedly done) that he was well content, and the people went home againe. Then we deſired the Bramene to open vs the doore that ſtood ſhut, which after much intreatie hee yeelded vnto, offering firſt to throw certaine Aſhes vpon our foreheads, which we refuſed, ſo that before he would open vs the doore, we were forced to promiſe him that we would not enter further in, then to the doore.

Like lips like lettice.

The doore of their Sancta Sanctorum, or rather Diabolorum, being opened, it ſhewed within like a Lime-kill, being cloſe vaulted round about, ouer the head without either hole or window to caſt in light, but onely at the doore, neither was there any light in all the Church, but that which came in at the doore we entred by. Within the ſaid Cell or Vault, there hung at the leaſt one hundred burning Lamps, in the middle wherof ſtood a litle Altar, & couered ouer with cloth made of Cotton-wooll, and ouer that with pure Gold, vnder the which (as the Bramene told vs) ſate the Pagode being of cleane Gold, of the bigneſſe of a Puppet or a Babie ſold in Faires: hard by the Church without the great doore, ſtood within the earth a great foure cornered or ſquare Ceſterne, hewed out of Free ſtone, with ſtayres on each ſide to goe downe into it, full of greene, filthie and ſtinking water, wherein they waſh themſelues when they meane to enter into the Church to pray. From thence wee went further, and ſtill as we went, in euery place we found Pagodes hewed out of hard Stones, and ſtanding in their holes, of ſuch liuely ſhapes and figures as we told you before. Theſe ſtand in the wayes vnder certaine couertures, without the Churches, and haue hard by each of them a ſmall Ceſterne of water, cut out of the ſtone to waſh their feet, with halfe an Indian Nut, that hath a handle and hangeth there to take vp water withall. And this is ordayned for Trauellers that paſſe by, who commonly at euery one of thoſe Pagodes doe fall downe and make their Prayers, and waſh their feet in thoſe Ceſternes. By the ſaid Pagodes, commonly doe ſtand two little Furnaces, with a Calfe or Kow of ſtone, before the which they ſet their Offerings, which are of ſuch things, as are to bee eaten, euery man as his Deuotion ſerueth, which they thinke the Pagode eateth in the Night, but it is taken away by the Bramene. We found in euery place ſuch Offerings ſtanding, but we had little deſire once to taſte thereof, it looked ſo filthily, and as we had ſufficiently beholden their miſhapen figures and monſtrous Images, we returned againe into the Village, wherein we ſaw the ſtone Church, becauſe the Bramene had aduertiſed vs, that the ſame day about Euening, the Pagode ſhould be carried in Proceſſion, to ſport it ſelfe in the Fields, and to fetch a circuit, which we deſired to ſee. And about the time which hee appointed, they rung a little Bell, which they had gotten of the Chriſtians, wherewith all the people began to aſſemble, and tooke the Pagode out of his diabolicall Cell, which with great reuerence, they ſet in a Palamkin borne by the chiefe men of the Towne, all the reſt with great deuotion following after, with their vſuall noyſe and ſounds of Trumpets and other Inſtruments, wherewith they went a reaſonable way round about a Field, and then brought him to the ſtone Ceſterne, where waſhing him very cleane (although he were very filthie ſtinking) they carried him againe into his Cell, leauing him ſhut herein withall his Lampes, to make good cheere, and hauing made a foule ſmoake and ſtinke about him, and euery man left his Offering behind him, they went home to their houſes, leauing the Bramene alone, who in ſtead of the Pagode, made good cheere at their coſts with his Wife and Familie.

Chap. 45.

Of all the kiud of Beaſts, Cattell, & Fowles, in India.

Kine.
Oxen.
Mutton.
Hogs.
Sheepes tailes.
Buffles and their Milke.

THere is ouer all India great ſtore of Cattell, as Oxen, Kine, Sheepe, Hogges, Goates, Kids, and ſuch like, and very good cheape, and in great abundance, although the fleſh is not of ſo good a taſte as that in Europe, which proceedeth from the heat of the Conntrey, and therefore it is not much eſteemed. A man may buy the beſt Kow in Goa, for fiue or ſixe Pardawes. Oxen are there little killed to eate, but are moſt kept to till the Land, all other things as Hogs, Sheepe and Goates, are ſold after the rate. Mutton is little eſteemed of, and not much vſed to be eaten, for it is forbidden to ſuch as are ſicke, and the Hogs fleſh is much better and ſounder, which is rather permitted vnto ſicke perſons then Mutton. There are Sheepe in that Countrey of fiue quarters in quantitie, for that the tayle is as great, and hath as much fleſh vpon it, as any of the quarters, there are many Buffles, but nothing good to bee eaten, vnleſſe it be by poore people, but their Milke is very good, and is very well ſold and ordinarily eaten, for you ſhall ſee the Slaues and Canariyns in great numbers, all day going about the ſtreets to ſell the Milke of Buffles, and Goates, and excellent ſweet Creame, and freſh Butter in ſmall peeces. They make likewiſe ſome ſmall white Cheeſes, but they are very ſalt and drie: wilde Bores, ſome Hares, Conies, Harts, and Hindes are there alſo to be found, but not many Cockes, Capons, Pheaſants, and Doues are there in great abundance and good cheape. In the Iland of Goa and thereabout are Sparrowes, and ſome other ſmall Birds, yet not many: but on the Coaſt of Cochin and Malabar, there are very few Sparrowes, nor any ſuch like ſmall birds. There are in India many Battes, and ſome of them ſo great, that it is incredible to tell. They doe great miſchiefe to Trees, Fruits and Herbes, whereby the Canariyns are conſtrained to ſet men to watch in their Trees, and yet they can hardly rid them away. The Indians eate them, and ſay they are as good meat as a Partridge.

Cheeſes
Wild Beaſts.
Few ſmall Birds.
Great Bats and hurtfull.
I haue heard that they breed & haue many young as Rats with vs.
Crowes bold.

There is a moſt wonderfull number of blacke Crowes, which doe much hurt, and are ſo bold that oftentimes they come flying in at their windowes, and take the meat out of the diſh, as it ſtandeth vpon the Table, before them that are ſet downe to eate: and as I my ſelfe ſate writing aboue in a Chamber of the houſe, the windowes being open, one of thoſe Crowes flew in at the window, and picked the Cotton out of mine Inke-horne, and blotted all the paper that lay on my Table, doe what I could to let him. They ſit commonly vpon the Buffles backes, and pecke off their haire, ſo that you ſhall find very few Buffles that haue any haires vpon their backes, and therefore to auoyd the Crowes they get themſelues into Mariſhes, and watrie places, where they ſtand in the water vp to the neckes, otherwiſe they could neuer be rid of them.

Great Rats.

There are likewiſe great numbers of Rats, and ſome as bigge as young Pigges, ſo that the Cats dare not touch them. Sometimes they digge downe the Houſes, for that they vndermine the walles and foundations through and through, whereby many times the houſes fall downe and are ſpoyled. There is another ſort of Rats, that are little and reddiſh of haire. They are called ſweet ſmelling Rats, for they haue a ſmell as if they were full of Muske.

Muske-rats: ſuch are in Virginia.

Ants hurtfull.

Of Ants or Piſmires there is ſo great abundance throughout all India, and ſo noiſome, that it is incredible to ſuch as haue not ſeene it: for that men may ſet nothing whatſoeuer it be, that is to be eaten, or fatty, nor yet their clothes nor linnen, but you ſhall preſently find at the leaſt a thouſand vpon it: and in the twinkling of an eye they will preſently conſume a loafe of bread: wherefore it is the manner throughout India, to make all the Cupboords wherein they keepe their victuals, and Cheſts, where their linnen and apparell lieth, with foure feet or pillars, and vnder euery foot or pillar a ſtone or wooden Ceſterne full of water, and place the Cupboord or Cheſt in the middle of the roome, not neere the wall, whereby they cannot come at it, otherwiſe it would be ſpoiled, and if they doe neuer ſo little forget to powre water into the Ceſterns, if it be but a Pater noſter while, preſently there will be ſo many Piſmires crawling all ouer it, that it is wonderfull: ſo that it ſeemeth to be a curſe or plague of God ſent vpon that Countrie. There are ſome likewiſe that vſe ſuch Ceſternes of water vnder their bedſtead, becauſe they would not be troubled with them as they lie in their Beds, and alſo vnder their Tables. Some men which keepe Canarie birds, or ſuch ſmall fowles (that are brought thither from Portugall, or out of Turkie and Perſia for their pleaſures) are forced to ſet them on a ſticke or pearch made for the purpoſe, with a Ceſterne of water vnder it, otherwiſe it would preſently be killed by the Piſmires: and though it hangeth in the top of the houſe, yet they will come at it if it haue a ſtring, to hold it by. The Souldiers and poore people that haue not the meanes to buy Cupboords, with Ceſternes) put the bread and other victuals which they leaue (which is not ouermuch) in a cloth tied on knots, and hang it on a naile againſt the wall, and make a circle about it of Charcole, ſo that the Piſmires cannot get ouer, nor come at it. There is another ſort of Piſmires which are almoſt a finger long, and reddiſh of colour: they runne into the fields, and doe great hurt to the herbes, fruits, and plants.

Great Ants.

Wormes.

Moths and wormes which creepe and eate through mens clothes, are there in great abundance, whereby men muſt vſe no more clothes nor linnen in thoſe Countries then that he neceſſarily and daily weareth on his backe, otherwiſe they are preſently moth-eaten and ſpoiled. They can hardly keepe any Paper or Bookes from wormes, which are like eare-wormes, but they doe often ſpoile and conſume many Papers and euidences of great importance. There are alſo many Wall-lice. There is a kind of beaſt that flieth, twice as bigge as a Bee, and is called Baratta: Theſe creatures alſo doe much hurt, and are commonly in Sugar, Honie, Butter, Oile, and all fat wares and ſweet meates. Many of them likewiſe come into their Cheſts among their clothes and linnen, which they doe alſo ſpoile and ſpot. They are in great numbers and very hurtfull. There can be nothing ſo cloſe ſhut or made faſt, but they will get in and ſpoile it, for where they lie or be, they ſpot all things with their egges, which ſticke as faſt as ſirop vpon a Paper, ſo that they may be eſteemed as a plague like to the Piſmires.

They are called Wall-lice, becauſe they breed in Wals: but in true Engliſh they are called Midges, and in Latin, Cimices.

Within the Land there are alſo Tigres: other cruell beaſts, as Lions, Beares, and ſuch like there are few or none: but venomous beaſts, as Snakes, Lizards, and ſuch like there are many, for the Lizards will clime and creepe vpon the walls in their houſes, and oftentimes fall vpon men, as they lie in their Beds and ſleepe, and therefore many men that are of abilitie, doe hang Teſters and Curtaines ouer and about their Beds. There are likewiſe many Chamelions, which are ſaid to liue by the aire, but they are not hurtfull.

Monkies.

There are many Monkies or Marmoſets, that doe great hurt to the Palme trees, wherein the Indian Nut or Cocus doth growe. In thoſe trees you ſhall commonly ſee certaine little beaſts, called Bichos de Palmeyras, that is, Beaſts of the Palme trees: They are much like Ferrets, wherewith men vſe to hunt and catch Cunnies, and haue a taile like the Penner of an Ink-horne, and grayiſh ſpeckled haire; they are prettie beaſts to keepe and to paſſe the time withall. Parrots are there in great numbers, and flie abroad in the Woods. There commeth in India out of the Iland of Malucas beyond Malacca, a kind of birds, called Nojras: they are like Parrots, but they haue many red feathers, and ſpeake like Parrots: they are worth in India twenty or thirty Pardawes the piece: they are very faire to looke on, and ſpeake ſweetly: they claw or tickle men with their tongues vpon their heads and beards, and make them cleane at the roots, as alſo their eares and their teeth, ſo that they are very pleaſant to keepe in a houſe, for that both in colour and beauty of feathers they ſurpaſſe all birds and Parrots whatſoeuer: but there could neuer yet be any of them brought liuing into Portugall, although they haue ſought and vſed all the meanes they could to bring them for a Preſent to the King, which he greatly deſireth: but they die vpon the way, for they are very delicate, and will hardly be brought vp.

Chap. 46. Of the Elephant.

Elephants are in many places of India. In the Iland of Seelon there are alſo great numbers, which are eſteemed the beſt and ſenſibleſt of all the world, for whereſoeuer they meet with any other Elephants (the Indians report for a truth, that they haue tried it) thoſe Elephants of other Countries doe reuerence and honour to the Elephants of Seylon. The moſt ſeruice that they vſe them for in India, is to draw their Pipes, Buts, Packes, and other goods, and to ſhip them, all which they doe with Elephants. They are kept at the Kings charges, and he that needeth them, ſpeaketh to their Keepers, and agreeth with them for a price to haue their labour: Then the Keeper getteth vpon the necke of the Elephant, and thruſteth his feet vnder his eares, hauing a hooke in his hand, which he ſticketh on his head, where his ſtones lie, that is to ſay, aboue betweene both his eares, which is the cauſe, that they are ſo well able to rule them: and comming to the thing which they are to draw, they bind the Fat or Packe faſt with a rope, that he may feele the weight thereof, and then the Keeper ſpeaketh vnto him: whereupon hee taketh the corde with his ſnout and windeth it about his teeth, and thruſteth the end into his mouth, and ſo draweth it hanging after him, whither they deſire to haue it. If it be to be put into a Boat, then they bring the Boat cloſe to the ſhoare of the Key, and the Elephant putteth it into the Boat himſelfe, and with his ſnout gathereth ſtones together, which he layeth vnder the Fat, Pipe, or Packe, and with his teeth ſtriketh and thruſteth the Packe or Veſſell, to ſee if it lie faſt or not. It will draw any great ſhot or other Iron worke, or metall being made faſt vnto it, be it neuer ſo heauie. They draw Fuſts, ſmall Gallies, and other great Boats, as Caruels, and ſuch like, as eaſily out of the water vpon the land, as if no man were in them: ſo that they ſerue their turnes there, euen as our Sleds or Carts with Horſes doe heere, to carrie our wares and merchandiſes. Their meate is Rice and water, they ſleepe like Kine, Oxen, Horſes, and all foure-footed beaſts, and bow their knees and all their members as other beaſts doe. In Winter when it beginneth to raine, then they are vnquiet, and altogether mad, ſo that their Keepers cannot rule them, and then they are let ſome whither out of the Towne to a great tree, and there tied vnto it by the legs with a great Iron chaine, where they carrie him meate, and ſo he lieth in the open aire, as long as he is mad, which is from Aprill to September, all the Winter time when it raineth, and then he commeth to himſelfe, and beginneth to ſerue againe as tamely, that a man may lie vnder his bellie, ſo you doe him no hurt: but he that hurteth him, he muſt take heed, for they neuer forget when any man doth them iniurie, vntill they be reuenged. They are very fearefull of a Rat or Mouſe, and alſo of the Piſmires, becauſe they feare they would creepe into their ſnouts. They are likewiſe afraide of gun-ſhot and of fire, vnleſſe by length of time they be vſed vnto them. When they haue the companie one of the other, the male Elephant ſtandeth vpon the higher ground, and the female ſomewhat lower. As they goe along the way, although you ſee them not, you may heare them a farre off by the noiſe of their feet and clapping of their eares, which they continually vſe. They are as ſwift in going almoſt as a Horſe, and are very proude, and deſirous of honour. When there is any great Feaſt or Holiday kept in Goa, with ſolemne Proceſſion, commonly the Elephants goe with them, the young before, and the old behind, and are all painted vpon their bodies with the Armes and Croſſes of Portugall, and haue euery one fiue or ſixe Trumpetters or Players vpon the Shalmes, ſitting vpon them that ſound very pleaſantly, wherewith they are as well pleaſed, and goe with as great grauitie, and in as good order, as if they were men. It happened in Goa, that an Elephant ſhould draw a great Fuſt out of the water vnto the land, which Fuſt was ſo great and heauie, that he could not doe it alone, ſo that they muſt haue another to helpe him: whereupon the Keeper chid him, vſing many hard words, ſaying, that he was idle and weake, and that it would be an euerlaſting ſhame for him, that they muſt fetch another to helpe him, wherewith the Elephant was ſo deſperate, that hee thruſt away his fellow (which was brought to helpe him) and beganne freſhly againe to draw, with ſo great force, more then he was well able to doe, that with extreme labour he burſt and fell downe ſtarke dead in the place. At ſuch time as I was to make my Voyage from Cochin to Portugall, the Rudder of our ſhip was out of order, ſo that it muſt of force be brought on land to make it fit againe, and ſo it was drawne to the Riuers ſide at the ſterne of the Boat, which the Elephant ſhould draw on land vpon two boords, that it might ſlide vp, and becauſe it was heauie, (as the Rudder of a ſhip of fourteene hundred or ſixteene hundred tunnes requireth) as alſo that the Elephant was as yet but young, and not growne to his full ſtrength, ſo that he could not draw it out alone, yet he did the beſt he could: but ſeeing he could not doe it, he fell on his fore-legs, and beganne to crie and weepe, that the teares ranne out of his eyes, and becauſe many of vs ſtood vpon the ſhoare to behold this ſight, the Keeper began to chide him, and with hard words to curſe him, becauſe he ſhamed him thus in preſence of ſo many men, not to be able to draw vp ſuch a thing: but what ſtrength or labour ſoeuer the Elephant vſed, he could not doe it alone, but when they brought another Elephant to helpe him, they both together drew it halfe out of the water, ſo that it lay partly vpon the boords. The firſt Elephant perceiuing that, with his head and teeth thruſt the other Elephant away, and would haue no more helpe, but drew it out himſelfe.

They are likewiſe very thankful & mindful of any good done vnto them. When new yeres day commeth, their keepers vſe of common cuſtome to aske new yeeres gifts of the Viceroy, the Archbiſhop, and other Gouernours and Gentlemen, and then the Elephants come to the doore and bow their heads downe, and when any thing is giuen, they kneele on their knees with great lowlineſſe, and thankfulneſſe, for the good deedes ſo done vnto their keepers (which they thinke to be done vnto themſelues.) They vſe as they paſſe by ſuch houſes, to bow their heads at the dores, as alſo when they paſſe by the Church doores, and by Croſſes, which their Maſters teach them. They haue a cuſtome that they goe often into the Market where hearbs are ſold, as Reddiſh, Lettice, Coleworts, and ſuch like ſtuffe, and thoſe that are liberall to the Elephant, doe vſe to throw ſomething before him. Among the reſt there was one hearbe wife which alwayes vſed to throw ſomething of her wares before the Elephant. Now when the time came on that the Elephant groweth mad, as I ſaid before, they vſe to goe with them three or foure dayes, or a weeke about the ſtreets before they binde them vp, (being as then but halfe mad) to aske ſomething of euery bodie for the feeding of the mad Elephant in the winter time. And going thus about the ſtreets, the Maſter is not able to rule him, for hee runneth about with his head downward, and by his roaring giueth the people warning to beware, and when he findeth or ſeeth no man, hee leapeth and ouerthroweth whatſoeuer he meeteth withall, whereby hee maketh great ſport and paſtime, much like to the baiting of Oxen in Spaine, which neuer ceaſeth, vntill one, two, or more of them be ſlaine, the like rule is kept with the mad Elephant in India. It chanced in this running about that the Elephant ranne through the ſtreetes, and in haſte at vnawares came into the market, throwing downe all that was in his way, whereat euery man was abaſht, and leauing their ware, ranne to ſaue themſelues from being ouer runne by the Elephant, and by meanes of the noyſe and preaſe of people, they fell one ouer another, as in ſuch caſes is commonly ſeene. Among them was this woman, that alwayes vſed to giue the Elephant ſomething to eate, which had a little childe in the market lying by her in a basket, and by the haſtie riſing vp and throng of the people, the woman ranne into a Houſe, not hauing time to ſnatch vp her Child, and take it with her; and when the Elephant was alone in the Market place, where hee roared vp and downe, ouerthrowing all things that were before him, hee came by the Child (that as I ſaid) lay ſtill in the Market, and as euerie man looked, ſpecially the Mother, which cried out, and verily thought that the Elephant had taken it and caſt it on his ſhoulder and ſpoyled it as he did all other things. He on the contrarie notwithſtanding all his madneſſe, being mindfull of the good will and liberalitie of the Childes Mother daly vſed vnto him, tooke vp the Child handſomely and tenderly with his Snout, and laide it ſoftly vpon a Stall by a Shop ſide, which done, he began againe to vſe the ſame order of ſtamping, crying, and clapping as he had done at the firſt, to the great wondering of all that beheld it, ſpecially to the eaſe and ioy of the Mother, that had recouered her Child ſound and well againe.

Chap. 47.
Of the Abadas or Rhinocerots.

THe Abada or Rhinoceros is not in India, but onely in Bengala and Patane. They are leſſe and lower then the Elephant. It hath a ſhort horne vpon the noſe, in the hinder part ſomewhat bigge, and toward the end ſharper, of a browne blew, and whitiſh colour; it hath a ſnout like a Hog, and the skin vpon the vpper part of his body is all wrinckled, as if it were armed with Shields or Targets. It is a great enemie of the Elephant. Some thinke it is the right Vnicorne, becauſe that as yet there hath no other beene found, but onely by heare-ſay, and by the Pictures of them. The Portugals and thoſe of Bengala affirme, that by the Riuer Ganges in the Kingdome of Bengala, are many of theſe Rhinocerots, which when they will drinke, the other beaſts ſtand and waite vpon them, till the Rhinoceros hath drunke, and thruſt their horne into the water, for hee cannot drinke but his horne muſt be vnder the water, becauſe it ſtandeth ſo cloſe vnto his noſe, and muzzle: and then after him all the other beaſts doe drinke. Their hornes in India are much eſteemed and vſed againſt all venome, poyſon, and many other diſeaſes: likewiſe his teeth, clawes fleſh, skin, and bloud, and his very dung and water and all whatſoeuer is about him, is much eſteemed in India, and vſed for the curing of many diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, which is very good and moſt true, as I my ſelfe by experience haue found. But it is to bee vnderſtood, that all Rhinoceros are not a like good, for there are ſome whoſe hornes are ſolde for one, two or three hundred Pardawes the piece, and there are others of the ſame colour and greatneſſe that are ſold but for three or foure Pardawes, which the Indians know and can diſcerne. The cauſe is that ſome Rhinocerots, which are found in certaine places in the countrie of Bengala haue this vertue, by reaſon of the hearbs which that place onely yeeldeth and bringeth forth, which in other places is not ſo, and this eſtimation is not onely held of the horne, but of all other things in his whole bodie, as I ſaid before. There are alſo by Malacca, Sion, and Bengala ſome Goates that are wilde, whoſe hornes are eſteemed for the beſt hornes againſt poyſon, and all venome that may be found: they are called Cabras de Mato, that is, wilde Goates.

Goats hornes good againſt poyſon.

Chap. 48.
Of the Fiſhes and other beaſts in the Seas of India.
Crabs leſt at the full.

FIſh in India is very plentifull, and ſome very pleaſant and ſweete. Moſt of their fiſh is eaten with Rice, that they ſeeth in broth which they put vpon the Rice, and is ſomewhat ſowre, as if it were ſodden in Gooſeberries, or vnripe Grapes, but it taſteth well, and is called Carriil, which is their daily meate, the Rice is in ſteade of bread: there are alſo good Shads, Soales, and other ſorts of fiſhes. The Crabs and Creuiſhes are very good and marueilous great, that it is a wonder to tell, and that which is more wonderfull, when the Moone is in the full, here with vs it is a common ſaying, that then Crabs and Creuiſhes are at the beſt, but there it is cleane contrarie: for with a full Moone they are emptie and out of ſeaſon, and with a new Moone good and full. There are alſo Muſckles and ſuch like Shel-fiſhes of many ſorts, Oyſters very many, ſpecially at Cochin; and from thence to the Cape de Comoriyn. Fiſh in India is very good cheape, for that with the valew of a ſtiuer of their money, a man may buy as much fiſh and Rice to it, as will ſerue fiue or ſixe men for a good meale.

Sharkes ſharking.

As our ſhip lay in the Riuer of Cochin, readie to ſayle from thence to Portugall, it hapned that as wee were to hang on our Rudder, which as then was mended, the Maſter of the Ship, with foure or fiue Saylers, went with the boate to put it on, and another Sayler beeing made faſt with a corde about his middle, and tied to the Ship, hung downe with halfe his bodie into the water to place the ſame vpon the hookes, and while hee hung in the water, there came one of thoſe Hayens, and bit one of his legs, to the middle of his thigh, cleane off at a bit, notwithſtanding that the Maſter ſtrooke at him with an Oare, and as the poore man was putting downe his arme to feele his wound, the ſame fiſh at the ſecond time for another bit did bite off his hand and arme aboue the elbow, and alſo a peece of his buttocke.

In the Riuer of Goa in winter time, when the mouth of the Riuer was ſhut vp, as commonly at that time it is, the fiſhermen tooke a Fiſh of a moſt wonderfull and ſtrange forme, ſuch as I think was neuer ſeene either in India, or in any other place, which for the ſtrangeneſſe therof was preſented to my Lord the Archbiſhop, the picture whereof by his commandement was painted, and for a wonder ſent to the King of Spaine.

Monſtrous fiſh

It was in bigneſſe as great as a middle ſized dog, with a ſnout like a Hog, ſmall eyes, no eares, but two holes where his eares ſhould bee, it had foure feete like an Elephant, the tayle beginning ſomewhat vpon the backe broad, and then flat, and at the very end round and ſomewhat ſharpe. It ranne along the Hall vpon the floore, and in euery place of the houſe ſnorting like a Hog. The whole bodie, head, tayle, and legs being couered with ſcales of a thumb breadth, harder then Iron, or Steele: Wee hewed and layd vpon them with weapons, as if men ſhould beate vpon an Anuill, and when we ſtrooke vpon him, he rouled himſelfe in a heape, head and feet altogether, ſo that hee lay like a round ball, we not being able to iudge where he cloſed himſelſe together, neyther could we with any inſtrument or ſtrength of hands open him againe, but letting him alone and not touching him, he opened himſelfe and ranne away as I ſaid before.

Maſſeus reports it alſo. Hiſt. Ind. l. 7. but ſomewhat differing.

A Ship ſayling from Moſambique into India, hauing faire weather, a good ſore winde, as much as the ſayles might beare before the winde for the ſpace of foureteene dayes together, directing their courſe towards the Equinoctiall line, euery day as they tooke the height of the Sunne, in ſteade of diminiſhing or leſſening their degrees, according to the winde and courſe they had and helde, they found themſelues ſtill contrarie, and euery day further backewardes then they were.

At the laſt the chiefe Boteſon whom they call the Maſters mate, looking by chance ouer-boord towards the beake-head of the ſhip, he eſpied a great broad taile of a Fiſh that had winded it ſelfe as it were about the beake head, the body thereof being vnder the keele, and the head vnder the Rudder, ſwimming in that manner, and drawing the ſhippe with her againſt the winde and their right courſe: whereby preſently they knew the cauſe of their ſo going backwards: ſo that hauing at the laſt ſtricken long with ſtaues and other weapons vpon the fiſhes tayle, in the end they ſtroke it off, and theredy the Fiſh left the ſhip, after it had layen fourteene dayes vnder the ſame, drawing the ſhip with it againſt winde and weather: for which cauſe the Vice-roy in Goa cauſed it to be painted in his palace for a perpetuall memory, where I haue often reade it, with the day and time, and the name both of the Ship and Captaine.

There are by Malacca certaine fiſh ſhels found on the ſhoare, much like Scalop ſhels, ſo great and ſo heauie, that two ſtrong men haue enough to doe with a Leauer to draw one of them after them. Within them there is a fiſh which they of Malacca doe eate. There were ſome of thoſe ſhels in the ballaſt of the ſhip that came from Malacca, and kept companie with vs from the Iland of Saint Helena, to the Iland of Tercera, where the ſhip was caſt away, and ſome of the ſhels taken out of her, which the Ieſuites of Malacca had ſent vnto Lisbon, to ſet in the wals of their Church and Cloyſter, which they there had cauſed to bee made, and moſt ſumptuouſly built. The like happened to a ſhip called Saint Peter that ſayled from Cochin towards Portugall, that fell vpon a Sand, which at this day is called after the ſame ſhips name Saint Peter's Sand, lying from Goa South South-eaſt vnder 6. degrees vpon the South ſide, where it was caſt away, but all the men ſaued themſelues, and of the wood of the ſhip that was caſt away, they made a ſmall Barke or Caruell, wherewith they all arriued in India: and while they were buſied about building of their ſhip, they found ſuch great Crabs vpon that Sand, and in ſo great numbers, that they were conſtrayned to make a ſconce, and by good watch to defend themſelues from them, for that they were of an vnreaſonable greatneſſe, ſo that whomſoeuer they got vnder their clawes, it coſt him his life.

Great Crabs.

Chap. 49. Of all Fruits, Trees, Plants, and common hearbs in India and firſt of a certaine fruit called Ananas.

A*Nanas* is one of the beſt fruits, and of beſt taſte in all India, but it is not a proper fruit of India, but a ſtrange fruit, for it was firſt brought by the Portugals out of Braſill, ſo that at the firſt it was ſold for a noueltie, at a Pardaw the piece, and ſometimes more, but now there are ſo many growne in the Countrie, that they are very good cheape. The time when they are ripe is in Lent, for then they are beſt and ſweeteſt of taſte. They are as bigge as a Melon, and in forme like the head of a Diſtaffe, without like a Pine apple, but ſoft in cutting: of colour red and greeniſh: They growe about halfe a fathome high from the ground, not much more or leſſe. The leaues are like the herbe that is brought out of Spaine, called Aloe, or Semper viua, becauſe it is alwaies greene, and therefore it is hanged on the beames of houſes) but ſomewhat ſmaller, and at the ends ſomewhat ſharpe, as if they were cut out. When they eate them, they pull off the ſhell, and cut them into ſlices or pieces, as men deſire to haue them dreſt. Some haue ſmall kernels within them, like the kernels of Apples or Peares. They are of colour within like a Peach, that is ripe, and almoſt of the ſame taſte, but in ſweetneſſe they ſurpaſſe all fruits. The iuyce thereof is like ſweet Muſt, or new Reniſh Wine: a man can neuer ſatisfie himſelfe therewith. It is very hot of nature, for if you let a Knife ſticke in it but halfe an houre long, when you draw it forth againe, it will be halfe eaten vp, yet it doth no particular hurt, vnleſſe a man ſhould eate ſo much thereof, that hee ſurfet vpon them. The ſicke are forbidden to vſe them.

Chap. 50.
Of Iaqua or Iaacca.

I*Aacas* growe on great trees like Nut trees, and onely on the Sea ſhoares, that is to ſay, in ſuch Countries as border on the Seas, cleane coutrarie vnto all other fruits, for they growe aboue the earth, vpon the trunkes or bodies of the trees, and vpon the great thicke branches; but where the branches ſpread abroad, being ſmall and full of leaues, there groweth none: they are as bigge as a great Melon, and much like it of faſhion, although ſome of them are as great as a man can well lift vp, and outwardly are like the Ananas, but ſmoother, and of a darke greene colour, the fruit within is in husks, like Cheſnuts, but of another forme, and euery huske hath a Nut, which is halfe white, the reſt yellowiſh, and ſticketh to a mans hands like Honie, when it is in Bee-hiues among the Wax, and for toughneſſe and in taſte for ſweetneſſe not much vnlike. The fruit is on the outſide like a Cheſnut, and in forme or faſhion like an Acorne, when the greene knob that groweth vnder it is taken away, and of that bigneſſe and ſomewhat bigger: this fruit that is outmoſt being eaten, the reſt is good to be roſted or ſodden, and are not much vnlike in taſte to the Cheſnuts in Europa. There are of theſe huskes in euery Iaacca an hundred and more, according to the greatneſſe thereof. There are two ſorts of them, the beſt are called Giraſal, and the common and leaſt eſteemed, Chambaſal, although in faſhion and trees there is no difference, ſaue that the Giraſals haue a ſweeter taſte.

Chap. 51.
Of Mangas.

M*Angas* groweth vpon trees like Iaacca trees: they are as big as a great Peach, but ſomwhat long, and a little crooked, of colour cleere, greene, ſomwhat yellowiſh, and ſometimes reddiſh: it hath within it a ſtone bigger then a Peach ſtone, but it is not good to be eaten: the Mangas is inwardly yellowiſh, but in cutting it is wateriſh, yet ſome not ſo much: they haue a very pleaſant taſte, better then a Peach, and like the Annanas, which is the beſt and the moſt profitable fruit in all India, for it yeeldeth a great quantitie for food and ſuſtenance of the Countrie people, as Oliues doe in Spaine and Portugall: they are gathered when they are greene, and conſerued, and for the moſt part ſalted in Pots, and commonly vſed to be eaten with Rice, ſodden in pure water, the huske being whole, and ſo eaten with Salt Mangas, which is the continuall food for their ſlaues and common people, or elſe ſalt dried fiſh in ſtead of Mangas, without Bread, for Rice is in diuers places in ſtead of Bread. Theſe ſalted Mangas are in cutting like the white Spaniſh Oliues, and almoſt of the ſame taſte, but ſomewhat ſauory and not ſo bitter, yet a little ſowre; and are in ſo great abundance, that it is wonderfull: there are others that are ſalted and ſtuffed with ſmall pieces of greene Ginger, and Garleeke ſodden: thoſe they call Mangas Recheadas or Machar: they are likewiſe much vſed, but not ſo common as the other, for they are coſtly and more eſteemed: theſe are kept in Pots with Oyle and Vineger ſalted. The ſeaſon when Mangas are ripe is in Lent, and continueth till the moneth of Auguſt.

Chap. 52.
Of Caions.

C*Aius* Groweth on trees like Apple trees, and are of the bigneſſe of a Peare, at one end by the ſtalke ſomwhat ſharpe, and at the head thicker, of a yellowiſh colour, being ripe they are ſoft in handling: they growe very like Apples, for where the Apples haue a ſtalke, theſe Caius haue a Cheſnut, as bigge as the fore-ioynt of a mans thumbe: they haue another colour and faſhion then the Cheſnuts of Iaqua, and are better and more ſauorie to eate, but they muſt be roſted: within they are white like the Cheſnuts of Europa, but haue thicker ſhells, which are of colour bluiſh and darke greene. When they are raw and vnroſted, you muſt not open them with your mouth, for as ſoone as you put them to your mouth, they make both your tongue and your lips to ſmart, whereby ſuch as knowe it not are deceiued: wherefore you muſt open their ſhells with a Knife, or roſt them, and then they will peele. This fruit at the end where the ſtalke groweth, in the eating doth worke in a mans throat, and maketh it ſwell, yet it is of a fine taſte, for it is moiſt and full of iuyce; they are commonly cut in round ſlices, and layd in a diſh with Water or Wine, and Salt throwne vpon them.

The

Chap. 53.
Of Iambos.

THe trees whereon the Iambos doe grow are as great as Plum trees, and very like vnto them: it is an excellent and a very pleaſant fruit to looke on, as big as an Apple: it hath a red colour and ſomewhat whitiſh, ſo cleare and pure, that it ſeemeth to be painted or made of Wax: it is very pleaſant to eate, and ſmelleth like Roſe water; it is white within, and in eating moiſt and wateriſh; it is a moſt dainty fruit, as well for beauty to the ſight, as for the ſweet ſauour and taſte: it is a fruit that is neuer forbidden to any ſick perſon, as other fruits are, but are freely giuen vnto ſicke men to eate, that haue a deſire thereunto, for it can doe no hurt. The bloſſoms are likewiſe very faire to the ſight, and haue a ſweet ſmell: they are red and ſomewhat whitiſh of colour. This tree beareth fruit three or foure times euery yeere, and which is more wonderfull, it hath commonly on the one ſide or halfe of the tree ripe Iambos, and the leaues fallen off, and on the other ſide or halfe it hath all the leaues, and beginneth againe to bloſſome, and when that ſide hath fruit, and that the leaues fall off, then the other ſide beginneth againe to haue leaues, and to bloſſome, and ſo it continueth all the yeere long: within they haue a ſtone as great (and very neere of the ſame faſhion) as the fruit of the Cypreſſe tree.

Summer and Winter at once in the ſame tree.

Chap. 54.
Of the fruits in India.

THere is a fruit called Iangomas, which groweth on trees like Cherrie trees: they are in bigneſſe like ſmall round Plummes of a darke red colour, they haue no ſtones in them, but ſome ſmall kernels: they are of taſte much like Plummes, whereof there are very many, but not much eſteemed of.

There is another fruit called Carambolas, which hath eight corners, as big as a ſmall Apple, ſowre in eating, like vnripe Plummes, and moſt vſed to make Conſerues.

There are yet other fruits, as Brindoijns, Durijndois, Iamboloens, Mangeſtains, and other ſuch like fruits; but becauſe they are of ſmall account, I thinke it not requiſite to write ſeuerally of them, but onely of two of them.

The barkes of theſe trees are kept and brought ouer Sea hither, and are good to make Vinegar withall, as ſome Portugals haue done.

There is alſo a fruit that came out of the Spaniſh Indies, brought from beyond the Philipinas or Laſons to Malacca, and from thence to India, it is called Papaios, and is very like a Melon, as big as a mans fiſt, and will not growe, but alwaies two together, that is male and female: the male tree neuer yeeldeth any fruit, but onely the female; and when they are diuided, and ſet apart one from the other, then they yeeld no fruit at all. It is a tree of the height of a man, with great leaues. This fruit at the firſt for the ſtrangeneſſe thereof was much eſteemed, but now they account not of it. There are likewiſe in India ſome Fig trees of Portugall, although the fruit doth neuer come to good perfection. Oranges, Limons, Citrons, and ſuch like fruit, are throughout all India, in great abundance, and for goodneſſe and taſte ſurpaſſe thoſe of Spaine. Grapes are not there to be found, but onely vpon ſome houſes, as we haue them in Netherland: yet againſt Chriſtmas and Lent, there are Raiſins brought into Goa, by the Decanaes and Indians out of the Firme Land, and from Ballagate, but they are not ſo good as thoſe in Spaine, and very few they are, but for price as good cheape as other fruits. There are alſo in India many Melons, but not ſo good as thoſe in Spaine, for that they muſt be eaten with Sugar, if you will haue any ſweetneſſe in them: but there is another ſort like Melons, called Pateças or Angurias, or Melons of India, which are outwardly of a darke greene colour, inwardly white with black kernels: they are very wateriſh and hard to bite, and ſo moiſt, that as a man eateth them, his mouth is full of water, but yet very ſweet, and very cold and freſh meat, wherefore many of them are eaten after Dinner to coole men. Cucumbers and Radices are there in great numbers, alſo Coleworts, but not ſo good as in Europe, for the Coleworts neuer growe to their full growth, but are looſe with their leaues open. They haue likewiſe ſome Sallet herbes, but very little: herbes whereof men make Pottage are not there to be had, nor many ſweet ſmelling herbes nor flowers, as Roſes, Lilies, Roſemarie, and ſuch like ſorts of flowers and plants there are none, yet they haue ſome few Roſes, and a little Roſemarie, but of no great ſmell. The fields neuer haue any other flowers in them, but onely graſſe, and that is in Winter when it raineth, for in Summer it is cleane burnt off with the exceeding heate of the Sunne. There is onely a kind of bloſſomes of trees, which growe all the yeere long, called Fullo, that ſmell very ſweet: the women doe ordinarily throwe them among their linnen and apparell to make them ſweet. They likewiſe make Collars or ſtrings full of them, which they weare about their neckes, and ſtrew them in their Beds, for they are very deſirous of ſweet ſauours, for other ſorts of ſweet flowers and herbes, whereof thouſands are found in Europe, they are not in India to be had: ſo that when you tell them of the ſweet flowers and herbes of theſe Countries, they wonder much thereat, and are very deſirous of them.

Chap. 55.
Of the Indian Figs.

INdian Figs there are many and of diuers ſorts, one better then the other, ſome ſmall, ſome great, ſome thicke, ſome thinne, &c. but in generall they are all of one forme and colour, little more or leſſe, but the trees are all one, and of the height of a man: the leaues are of a fathome long, and about three ſpannes broad, which the Turkes vſe in ſtead of browne Paper, to put Pepper in. In the Tree there is no Wood, but it may rather bee called a Reede then a Tree. The bodie of the tree (I meane that which couereth the outward part when it beginneth ſomewhat to grow) is in a manner very like the inner part of a Siue made of haire, but in ſhew ſomewhat thicker, and is (as it were) the barke of it: but when you open it, it is full of leaues, cloſed and rowled vp together, of the height of halfe a mans length, and ſomewhat higher. Theſe leaues doe open and ſpread abroad on the top of the Tree, and when thoſe that are within the bodie doe in their time thruſt themſelues forth vpwardes out of the innermoſt part of the Tree, then doe the outmoſt leaues beginne to dry, and fall off, vntill the Tree bee come to his full growth, and the fruit to their perfect ripeneſſe. The bodie of the Tree may be a ſpanne thicke at the moſt. The leaues haue in the middle of them a very thicke and gray veine which runneth cleane through them, and deuideth them out of the middeſt of the leaues, which are in the innermoſt part of the Tree at their ſpringing vp, there commeth forth a flowre, as bigge as an Eſtridge Egge, of colour ruſſet, which in time groweth to be long, with a long ſtalke, and it is no Wood, but rather like a Colewort ſtalke: This ſtalke groweth full of figs, cloſe one by the other, which at the firſt are in faſhion like greene Beanes, when they are yet in the huskes, but after grow to halfe a ſpanne in lengh, and three or foure inches broad, as thicke as Cucumbers, which ſtalke beareth at the leaſt, ſome two hundred figges, little more or leſſe, and grow as cloſe together as Grapes: the cluſters are ſo great as two men can ſcarcely beare vpon a ſtaffe, they are cut off when they are but halfe ripe, that is to ſay, when they are as yet halfe greene, and halfe yellow, and hanged vp in their houſes vpon beames, and ſo within foure or fiue dayes they will be fully ripe and all yellow. The Tree or Plant yeeldeth but one bunch at a time, which being ripe, they cut the whole Tree downe to the ground, leauing only the root, out of the which preſently groweth another, and within a moneth after beareth fruit, and ſo continueth all the yeere long, and neuer leaueth bearing: they are in all places in ſo great abundance, and ſo common throughout all India that it is wonderfull, being the greateſt meate and ſuſtenance of the Countrey: they are of a maruellous good taſte: when they eate them, they pull off the ſhels. The moſt and commonneſt ſort are by the Portugals called Figos dorta, that is, Garden figges, thoſe are ſomewhat thicke; there are others which are ſmaller, and thinne without, and are called Senoryns, which are of the beſt ſort: they ſmell well, and are very good of taſte.

Many kinds of them.

There is another ſort called Cadolyns, which are likewiſe well eſteemed, but the beſt of all are called Chincapoloyns, and are moſt in the Countrey of Malabar: theſe are but a little yellow, but they continue commonly on the outſide greene, and are ſmall and long, with a ſpeciall ſweet ſmell, as if they were full of Roſe Water. There are yet many ſorts, ſome that are very great, about a ſpan long, and in thickneſſe correſpondent: theſe grow much in Cananor, and in the Coaſt of Malabar, and are by the Portugals called Figges of Cananor: and by reaſon of the great quantitie thereof are dried, their ſhels being taken off, and ſo being dried are carried ouer all India to be ſold. Theſe when they are ripe are moſt roaſted, for they are but ſeldome eaten raw, as other Figges are, they are ſomewhat harſh in ſwallowing, and inwardly red of colour, and being roaſted they are ſhaled or pilled like the others, and ſo cut in ſlices, which done, they caſt ſome beaten Sinamon vpon them, ſteeping them in Wine, and then they taſte better then roaſted Quinces; they are cut vp in the middle, as all the other kind of Figges vſe to be, and then boyled or fried in Sugar, which is a very daintie meat, and very common in India: to conclude, it is one of the beſt and neceſſarieſt fruits in all India, and one of the principalleſt ſuſtenances of the common people, they are found in all places of the Indies and Orientall Countries. There are alſo found in Arabia, and are called Muſa, as alſo in Ieruſalem, Damaſco, and Cairo, as I haue beene truly informed by credible perſons, which daily trauell and traffique into India. And they doe beleeue that this is the ſame fruit, which Adam did eate when he ſinned firſt.

There grow in India many Iniamos and Batatas. Theſe Iniamos, are as bigge as a yellow Root, but ſomewhat thicker and fuller of knots, and as thicke on the one place, as in the other, they grow vnder the Earth like Earth Nuts, and of a Dun colour, and white within like Earth Nuts, but not ſo ſweet.

Earth Nuts.

The Batatas are ſomewhat red of colour, and of faſhion almoſt like the Iniames, but ſweeter, of taſte like an Earth Nut. Theſe two fruits are very plentifull.

Chap. 56. Of the Palme trees, whereon the Indian nuts called Cocos grow.

THis is the moſt profitable tree of all India. The tree waxeth very high and ſtraight, of the thickneſſe of a ſmall ſpan little more or leſſe, it hath no branches but in the vppermoſt part thereof, and in the top grow the leaues, which ſpread like vnto Date trees, and vnder the leaues cloſe to the tree grow the Coquos together, commonly ten or twelue one cloſe by another, but you ſhall ſeldome find one of them growing alone by it ſelfe. The bloſſome of this fruit is very like the bloſſome of a Cheſtnut. The wood of the tree is very ſappy like a Sponge, and is not firme, they doe not grow but on the Sea ſides, or bankes of Riuers cloſe by the ſtrand, and in ſandy grounds, for there groweth none within the Land. They haue no great Rootes, ſo that a man would thinke it were impoſſible for them to haue any faſt hold within the Earth, and yet they ſtand ſo faſt and grow ſo high, that it maketh men feare to ſee men climbe vpon them, leſt they ſhould fall downe. The Canariyns climbe as nimbly, and as faſt vpon them, as if they were Apes, for they make ſmal ſteps in the trees like ſtaires, whereon they ſtep, and ſo climbe vp, which the Portugals dare not venter; their planting is in this manner. They firſt plant the Coquos or Nuts whereof the trees doe ſpring, and when they are about the height of a man, in winter time they plant them againe, and dung them with aſhes, and in Summer time water them. They grow well about houſes, becauſe commonly there they haue good earth, and beeing well looked vnto & husbanded they yeeld fruit in few yeeres. Thoſe trees are more abundant with them then Oliue trees in Spaine, or Willow trees in the Low Countreyes. The profits they reape thereby are theſe.

The vſes of the Wood.

Firſt, the wood is very good for many things, although it be ſpongious and ſappy, by reaſon of the length of it, for in the Ilands of Maldiua they make whole ſhips thereof, without any Iron naile in them, for they ſow them together with the Cords that are made of the ſaid Cocus, or Nut, the Ropes and Cables being likewiſe of the ſame tree, as alſo the Sailes which they make of the leaues, which leaues are called Olas. They ſerue likewiſe to make the Canariyns houſes, and for Hats which they vſe to carrie ouer their heads, for the Sunne or the raine; they make alſo Mats or Tents that lie ouer the Palamkins when it raineth, to couer the Women when they are carried abroad, and ſuch like things: they likewiſe make thereof very fine Hattes, that are much eſteemed, and coſt three or foure Pardawes the piece, which they weare in Summer for lightneſſe. The Nuts are as great as an Eſtridge Egge, ſome ſmaller, and ſome greater and are outwardly couered with a huske or ſhell, * which as long as it groweth on the tree, is greene without, like an Acorne with his huske or cup.

* The Indian Nuts are couered ouer with two ſorts of huskes or ſhels, whereof the vttermoſt is hairie, and of it they make Cairo, that is, all their Cables and Ropes, and ſtop and make their ſhippes cloſe with it in ſtead of Ocam or Tow, for that it keepeth the ſhips cloſer in ſalt water then our Ocam or Tow, becauſe in ſalt water it cloſeth and ſhutteth it ſelfe cloſer together. Of the other they make not onely drinking Cups, in India, but here with vs alſo, for that the common people beleeue there is a certaine vertue in them againſt ſtirring of the bodie, but it is not ſo.

The hairie huske: Coards and Cables.

Water.

Inner ſhell.

This huske being dry and pulled off, is haire like Hempe, whereof all the Coards and Cables that are vſed throughout all India are made, as well vpon the Land as in the Ships. It is of colour very like the Ropes of Sparta in Spaine, they are very good, but they muſt bee kept in ſalt water, whereby they continue very long, but in freſh or raine water they doe preſently rot, becauſe they are not dreſt with Pitch, and Tarre as our ſhips are. The ſhip wherein I came out of India into Portugall, had no other Ropes nor Cables, nor any ſuch kind of ſtuffe, but ſuch as were made of the Indian Cocus, called Cairo, which continued very good, ſauing only that we were forced euery fourteene daies to waſh our Cables in the Sea, whereby they ſerued vs as well as Cables of Hempe. The fruit when it is almoſt ripe is called Lanha, and within is full of water, and then it is white of colour, thinne and ſoft, and the longer the Cocus is on the tree, the more the water groweth and changeth into white, which is the meate of the Nut within, and taſteth much like a Haſel Nut, but ſomwhat ſweeter. The Lanhos haue within them a good draught of water, which is very cleere, ſweet, and coole to drinke. It is at the leaſt halfe a Kan full, and when men walke abroad and are thirſtie, they goe vnto the Canariyns, who preſently with a great Knife in their hands come vp to the tree, and cut off as many Lanhos as a man deſireth, ſelling them for a Baſaruco, or two a piece, which they make verie readie and cleere to be drunke. The firſt ſhell that is ouer the inward fruit (which as the Nut is come to his full ripeneſſe, becommeth almoſt to be wood) is then but thinne and ſoft, and very pleaſant to eate with Salt and doe taſte almoſt like Artichokes, a man may drinke as much of this water as he will, for it will not hurt him, but is a very pleaſant drinke; when the fruit is ripe, there is not ſo much water in it, and is white within, and ſomewhat thicker of ſubſtance, and then the water is not ſo good as it was before beeing Lanhos, for then it becommeth ſomewhat ſowre.

Vſes of the ſhell.

Of the white meate.

Theſe Cocus beeing yet in their huskes, may bee carried ouer the whole World, and not once hurt or bruiſed, and it happeneth oftentimes that by continuance of time, the water within the Cocus doth conuert, and congeale into a certaine kind of yellow Apple, which is very ſauourie and ſweet. The huske being taken off, the ſhell ſerueth for many vſes, as to make Ladles with woodden handles, and alſo certaine little pots, which beeing faſtned to a ſticke, they doe therewith take and lade water out of their great pots, they make thereof alſo ſmall veſſels to beare Wine in when they walke into the fields, and a thouſand other things. Theſe ſhels are likewiſe burnt, and ſerue for coales for Goldſmiths, which are very good and excellent. Of the white of theſe Nuts in India they make pottage, and dreſſe meate withall, ſtrayning and preſſing out the Milke, wherein with many other mixtures they ſeeth their Rice, and to bee ſhort, they neuer dreſſe any Rice, which they call Carriyl, and is the ſawce to their meate thereunto, but they put ſome of their Cocus Milke into it, elſe the Cocus is but little eaten, for there it is not eſteemed of, but ſerueth for meate for the ſlaues, and poore people. They likewiſe breake the Cocus in pieces, and taking off the ſhell they dry the fruit or white meate that is within it, and it is carried in great quantities out of Malabar to Cambaya, and Ormus, and to the Northerne Coaſts and quarters beyond Goa, as alſo to the Countrey of Ballagate, and Traffique much therewith. Of this white ſubſtance they make Oile, which they ſtampe in Ciſternes like Oliues, and it maketh very good Oile, as well to eate as to burne, which is likewiſe very medicinable.

Oile.

There are two ſorts of Oile made of theſe Nuts, one out of the freſh or greene Nuts, ſtamped and mixed with warme water, which being preſſed forth the Oile ſwimmeth aboue the water: this Oile is vſed to purge the maw and the guts, for it purgeth very gently, and without hurt ſome mixe therewith the iuyce of Thamarindes, and maketh thereof a very wholſome Medicine, the other Oile is preſt out of the dried Cocus, which is called Copra, and is good alſo to purge the maw, and againſt the ſhrinking of the ſinewes, as alſo for old aches and paines in the ioynts and limbes.

* This water being drunke, is very good againſt the heate of the Liuer and the Kidneyes, and clenſeth the yard from corruption and filthy matter.

This dried Cocus which is ſo carried abroad, is called Copra. When they deſire to haue no Cocus or fruit thereof, they cut the bloſſomes of the Cocus away, and binde a round Pot with a narrow mouth, by them called Callao, faſt vnto the Tree, and ſtop the ſame cloſe round about with pot earth, ſo that neither Wind nor Aire can either enter in, or come forth, and in that ſort the Pot in ſhort ſpace is full of water, which they call Sura, and is very pleaſant to drinke like ſweete Whay, * and ſomewhat better.

Sura water.

Viniger and Wine.

The ſame water ſtanding but one houre in the Sunne, is very good Vineger, and in India they haue none other. This Sura being diſtilled, is called Fula, or Nipe, and is as excellent Aqua vitæ, as any is made in Dort of their beſt Rheniſh Wine; but this is of the fineſt kind of Diſtillation. The ſecond Diſtillation thereof is called Vraca, which is very good Wine, and is the Wine of India, for they haue no other Wine. It is very hot and ſtrong, yet the Indians drinke it as if it were water, and the Portugals vſe it in this ſort. They put it into Veſſels, and to a Pipe of Vraca, they put three or foure Hands of Raiſons that are brought for Merchandiſe into India from Ormus, (euery Hand is twelue pounds) which being waſhed they put into the Veſſell leauing the bung open, and the Pipe not being full, for if it were it would burſt, by reaſon of the heat, becauſe therewith it ſeetheth in the Pipe like water on the fire, and boyling ſo, it is ſtirred euery day for the ſpace of fourteene or fifteene dayes, in which time the Vraca getteth as faire a red colour, as if it were Portugall Wine, and differeth not much in taſte, but yet ſweeter and hotter of it ſelfe, howbeit it is altogether as faire, and of as good a colour as their Portugall Wine, ſo that they can hardly bee diſcerned one from the other: this Wine is called Wine of Paſſa, or Raiſons. With this Wine there is great Traffique vſed to Bengala, Malacca, China, and other places, and euery Pipe thereof coſteth within Goa thirtie Pardawen the piece, little more or leſſe. Of the aforeſaid Sura they likewiſe make Sugar, which is called Iagra: they ſeeth the water, and ſet it in the Sunne, whereof it becommeth Sugar, but it is little eſteemed beauſe it is of a browne colour, and for that they haue ſo great quantitie and abundance of white Sugar throughout all India. The innermoſt part of the tree or trunke is called Palmito, and is the pith or heart of the ſame trunke, which is much eſteemed, and ſent for a preſent vnto men of great account. It is as thin as Paper, and alſo white, and is as if it were pleated or preſt together, as they vſe to pleate and preſſe womens Huykes in the Low Countreyes: it is alſo long and ſlender, and hath ſometimes fifty or ſixty folds or pletes in it like a Paper-book This the Indians vſe for Paper and Bookes, which continueth in the ſame folds, whereon they write when it is greene, and ſo let it dry, and then it is impoſſible to get the Letters out againe, for it is printed therein with a kind of Iron Inſtrument: The Indians call it Olla, whereof all their Bookes, Writings, and Euidences are made, which they can ſeale, and ſhut vp as wee doe our Letters.

Sugar.

The Palmito.

Thoſe Ilands haue no other dealing or liuing, but with Cairo, whereof they make Ropes and Cables, and with the Copra, or the white ſubſtance of the Cocus, whereof Oile is made, ſo that they doe oftentimes come into India, when the ſhip and all the furniture, victuall and Merchandiſe is onely of thoſe Palme-trees.

Chap. 57. Of the Duryoens, a fruit of Malacca.

DUryoen is a fruit that only groweth in Malacca, and is ſo much commended by thoſe which haue prooued the ſame, that there is no fruit in the World to be compared with it: for they affirme, that in taſte and goodneſſe it excelleth all kind of fruits, and yet when it is firſt opened, it ſmelleth like rotten Onions, but in the taſte the ſweetneſſe and daintineſſe thereof is tryed. It is as great as a Mellon, outwardly like the Iaacka, whereof I haue ſpoken, but ſomewhat ſharper or pricking, and much like the huskes of Cheſſe-nuts. It hath within it certaine partitions like the Iaacka, wherein the fruit groweth, beeing of the greatneſſe of a little Hennes Egge, and therein are the Nuts as great as Peach-ſtones. The fruit is for colour and taſte like an excellent meate, much vſed in Spaine, called Mangiar Blanco, which is made of Hennes fleſh, diſtilled with Sugar: The trees are like the Iaacka trees, the bloſſomes white, and ſomewhat yellowiſh: the leaues about halfe a ſpan broad, ſomewhat ſharpe at the end, within light greene, and without darke greene.

Chap. 58.
Of the tree Arbore de Rays, that is, root tree, and the Bambus, or reed of India.
Ficus Indica ſecundum Clusium Fabricius Mordents a great traueller which had dwelt ſome yeeres at Goa, told Cluſius that ſome of theſe trees by reaſon of this multiplication contained a miles cōpaſſe, & that the Indians made galleries and chambers by cutting part away, and that it yeelded an eccho, and he had ſeene ſomtime 800. or 1000 ſhadowed vnder one, able to receiue 3000. Ouiedos Weſt Indian Mangle is of the ſame or like kind and Lopes his African Enzanda.
Reeds.

THere is a tree in India called Arbore de Rays, that is to ſay, a Tree of Roots: this tree is very wonderfull to behold, for that when it groweth firſt vp like all other trees, and ſpreadeth the branches: then the branches grow full of roots, and grow downwards againe towards the Earth, where they take root againe, and ſo are faſt againe within the ground, and in length of time, the broader the tree is, and that the branches doe ſpread themſelues, the more rootes doe hang vpon the branches, and ſeeme afarre off to be Cordes of Hempe, ſo that in the end the tree couereth a great piece of ground, and croſſeth one root within the other like a Maze. I haue ſeene trees that haue contayned at the leaſt ſome thirty or fortie paces in compaſſe, and all out of the roots which came from aboue one of the branches, and were faſt growne and had taken root againe within the Earth, and in time waxed ſo thicke, that it could not be diſcerned, which was the chiefe or principall trunke or bodie of the tree: in ſome places you may creepe betweene the roots, and the more the tree ſpreadeth, ſo much the more doe the roots ſpring out of the ſame branches, and ſtill grow downe till they come to Earth, and there take roote againe within the ground, and ſtill increaſe with rootes, that it is a wonder. This tree hath no fruit that is worth the eating, but a ſmall kind of fruit like Oliues, and good for nothing but for Birds to eate.

There are in India other wonderfull and thicke trees, whereof ſhippes are made: there are trees by Cochin, that are called Angelina, whereof certayne Scutes or Skiffes called Tones are made: there are of thoſe Tones that will lade in them at the leaſt twentie or thirtie Pipes of water, and are cut out of one piece of Wood, without any piece or ſeame, or any ioynts: whereby men may well coniecture the thickneſſe of the tree, and it is ſo ſtrong and hard a Wood, that Iron in tract of time would bee conſumed thereby, by reaſon of the hardneſſe of the Wood. There are alſo ouer all India many Sugar-canes in all places, and in great numbers, but not much eſteemed of: and all along the Coaſt of Malabare there are many thicke Reedes, ſpecially on the Coaſt of Choramandell, which Reedes by the Indians are called Mambu, and by the Portugals Bambu: theſe Mambus haue a certaine matter within them, which is (as it were) the pith of it, ſuch as Quils haue within them, which men take out when they make them Pens to write: the Indians call it Sacar Mambu, which is as much to ſay, as Sugar of Mambu, and is a very medicinable thing much eſteemed, and much ſought for by the Arabians, Perſians, and Moores, that call it Tabaxijr.

Thoſe Reeds grow moſt in the Coaſt of Choramandell in Biſnagar, and Malacca in many places, and in great abundance: they grow very high, and are diuided in each ioynt one from another, at the leaſt a ſpan and a halfe, and rather more, and are as thicke as a mans legge aboue the knee: they doe commonly grow vpright, and moſt of them as high as the higheſt houſe in the Low-countreyes: they bow them many times in growing, that they may bring them into a forme or faſhion to ſerue for their Pallamkins, wherein the Portugals and Indian Lords are carried, as I ſaid before: the leaues of thoſe Reeds or Bambus grow wide one from another, and haue almoſt the faſhion of an Oliue leafe.

Chap. 59.
Of the tree called Arbore Triſte.

THe tree called Arbore Triſte, that is, the Sorrowfull Tree, is ſo called, becauſe it neuer beareth bloſſomes but in the night time, and ſo it doth and continueth all the yeere long: it is a thing to bee wondred at: for that ſo ſoone as the Sunne ſetteth, there is not one bloſſome ſeene vpon the tree, but preſently within halfe an houre after, there are as many bloſſomes vpon it, as the tree can beare: they are very pleaſant to behold, and ſmell very ſweet, and ſo ſoone as the day commeth on, and the Sunne is riſing, preſently all the bloſſomes fall off, and couer all the ground, ſo that there remayneth not one to bee ſeene vpon the tree: the leaues ſhut themſelues cloſe together, ſo that it ſeemeth as though it were dead, vntill Euening commeth againe, and then it beginneth to bloſſome as it did before: the tree is as great as a Plumme tree, and is commonly planted behind mens houſes, in their Gardens for a pleaſure, and for the ſweet ſmell: it groweth very quickly vp, for that many young plants doe ſpring out of the roote, and as ſoone as thoſe young plants bee aboue halfe a fadome high, they haue preſently as many bloſſoms vpon them as the branches on the trees, & although they cut the tree downe to the ground, yet within leſſe then half a yeere there wil branches ſpring out of the root, and likewiſe if you breake a branch off from the tree and ſet it on the earth, it will preſently take root and grow, and within few dayes after beareth bloſſomes: the bloſſomes are in a manner like Orange tree bloſſomes, the flowre being white, and in the bottome ſomewhat yellow and reddiſh, which in India they vſe for Saffron, therewith to dreſſe their meates, and to die withall as we doe with our Saffron, but it is neither ſo good, nor of ſo pleaſant a taſte, yet it ſerueth there for want of the other.

A maruellous growth.

Chap. 60.
Bettele.

BEttle is a leafe ſomewhat greater and longer out then Orange leaues, and is planted by ſtickes, whereupon it climeth like Iuie or Pepper, and ſo like vnto Pepper, that a farre off growing each by other they can hardly be diſcerned. It hath no other fruit but the leaues onely, it is much dreſſed and looked vnto, for that it is the daily bread of India. The leaues being gathered do continue long without withering, alwaies ſhewing freſh and greene, and are ſold by the dozen, and there is not any woman or man in all India, but that euery day eateth a dozen or two of the ſame leaues or more: not that they vſe them for food, but after their meale tides, in the morning and all the day long, as likewiſe by night, and as they goe abroad in the ſtreets, whereſoeuer they bee you ſhall ſee them with ſome of theſe leaues in their hands, which continually they are chawing. Theſe leaues are not vſed to bee eaten alone, but becauſe of their bitterneſſe they are eaten with a certaine kind of fruit, which the Malabares and Portugalls call Arecca, the Guſurates and Decanijns, Suparij, and the Arabians Fauffel. This fruite groweth on trees like the Palme trees, that beare the Nut Cocus in India, but they are ſomewhat thinner, with leaues ſomewhat longer and ſmaller. The fruit is much like the fruit that groweth on Cypreſſe trees, or like a Nutmeg, though ſome of them are on the one ſide flat, and on the other ſide thicker, ſome being ſomewhat greater and very hard. They cut them in the middle with a knife, and ſo chaw them with Bettele, they are within full of veines, white, ſomewhat reddiſh. There is a kind of Arecca called Cechanijn, which are leſſe, blacker, and very hard, yet are likewiſe vſed with Bettele, and haue no taſte but only of the Wood, and yet it moiſteneth the mouth, and coloureth it with red and black, whereby it ſeemeth that the lippes and teeth are painted with blacke bloud, which happeneth when the Arecca is not well dried. There is another ſort, which in the eating or chawing being ſwallowed downe, maketh men light in the head, as if they had drunke wine all the day long, but that is ſoone paſt. They vſe yet another mixture which they eate withall, that is to ſay, a cake or role made of a certaine wood or tree called Kaate, and then they anoint the Bettele leaues with chalke made of burnt oyſter ſhels, which can doe no hurt in their bodies by reaſon of the ſmall quantitie of it; all this being chawed together, and the Iuice ſwallowed downe into their bodies, for all the reſt they ſpit forth; they ſay it is very good for the maw, and againſt a ſtinking breath, a ſoueraigne medecine for their teeth, and faſtning of gummes, and very good againſt the Schorbuck, & it is moſt true that in India very few men are found with ſtinking breaths, or tooth aches, or troubled with the Schorbuck or any ſuch diſeaſes, and although they be neuer ſo old, they alwayes haue their teeth whole and ſound, but their mouthes and teeth are ſtill as if they were painted with black bloud, as I ſaid before, and neuer leaue ſpitting reddiſh ſpittle like bloud. The Portugall women haue the like cuſtome of eating theſe Bettele leaue, ſo that if they were but one day without eating their Bettele, they perſwade themſelues they could not liue: Yea, they ſet it in the night times by their beds heads, and when they cannot ſleepe, they doe nothing elſe but chaw Bettele and ſpit it out againe. In the day time whereſoeuer they doe ſit, goe, or ſtand, they are continually chawing thereof, like Oxen or Kine chawing their cud.

Arecca.

The Noblemen and Kings, whereſoeuer they goe, ſtand, or ſit, haue alwaies a ſeruant by them, with a Siluer Ketle in their hand full of Bettele and their mixtures, and when they will eat, giue them a leafe readie prepared. And when any Ambaſſadour commeth to ſpeake with the King, although the King can vnderſtand them well, yet it is their manner (to maintaine their eſtates) that the Ambaſſadour ſpeaketh vnto them by an Interpreter, that ſtandeth there in preſence, which done, hee anſwereth againe by the ſame Interpreter. In the meane time the King lieth on a bed, or elſe ſitteth on the ground vpon a Carpet, and his ſeruant ſtanding by readie with the Bettele, which hee continually chaweth, and ſpitteth out the Iuyce and remainder thereof into a Siluer Baſon; ſtanding by him, or elſe holden by ſome one of his ſlaues or his wiues, and this is a great honour to the Ambaſſadour, eſpecially if hee profereth him of the ſame Bettele that he himſelfe doth eate.

Chap. 61. Of the Hearbe Dutroa, and a Plant called Herba Sentida, or the feeling Hearb.

THe Herbe called Dutroa is very common in India, and groweth in euery field. The leafe thereof is ſharpe at the end like the point of a Speare, and is indented on the edges like the leafe of Beares-claw, and about that bigneſſe, hauing in it many long threeds or veines, it groweth without taſte or moyſture, and ſomewhat bitter and ſmelling like a Raddiſh. The flower or bloſſome of this Plant, is very like vnto the bloſſome of Roſe-mary in colour: and out of this bloſſome groweth a bud, much like the bud of Popie, wherein are certaine ſmall kernells like the kernells of Melons, which being ſtamped and put into any meat, wine, water, or any other drinke or compoſition, and eaten or drunke therewith, maketh a man in ſuch caſe as if hee were fooliſh or out of his wits, ſo that hee doth nothing elſe but laugh, without any vnderſtanding or ſence once to perceiue any thing that is done in his preſence. And ſometime it maketh him ſleepe as if hee were dead, in that ſort he continueth for the ſpace of twentie foure houres: but if his feet be waſhed with cold water, then hee commeth to himſelfe againe before the twentie foure houres bee expired. There is yet another Herbe in India, called by the Portugalls Herba Sentida, or feeling Hearbe, the cauſe why it is called ſo, is for that if any man paſſeth by it and toucheth it, or throweth either Sand or any other thing vpon it, preſently it becommeth as though it were withered, and cloſeth the leaues together and commeth not to it ſelfe, and to his firſt force againe as long as the man ſtandeth by it: but preſently when the man is gone and turneth his backe, it openeth the leaues againe, and becommeth ſtiffe and faire againe, as though they were newly growne: and touching it againe, it ſhutteth and becommeth withered as before, ſo that it is a pleaſure to ſee it, and ſtrange to bee obſerued. Alſo there is a thing to be wondred at, and ſeemeth

Herba Sentida. This Plant groweth in Africa and America, as in Iobſon and M. Harecourt you may read; if it be the ſame: for thoſe are buſhes liker Roſes and not Hearbs, as this ſeemeth.

vnpoſſible to ſuch as haue not ſeene it: and this it is, within the Towne and Iland of Goa, at the one end of the Towne, where the Kine, Oxen, Seepe, and all kind of Cattle are killed and ſlaine to be ſold for meat for the Inhabitants, called Matauaquas: in that place there lie all the Hornes of the ſaid beaſts ſcattered and throwne about, as if they were altogether vnprofitable, becauſe the Portugalls and Indians vſe them not, and it is likewiſe a great diſhonour and iniury to the Spaniards and Portugalls to haue any Hornes, or once to ſhew a Horne to each other, or to throw it before his doore, for reuenge of which act they would kill each other, and there is ſharpe Iuſtice vſed, if any man doe offend in that ſort, by ſhewing his neighbour the Horne, or naming it vnto him, for that thereby they meane he is a man that is made cookold by his wife. Theſe hornes hauing layne there a certaine time, doe ſticke faſt in the earth (I meane the inner part of the horne) and there it taketh root as if it were a tree, as I my ſelfe haue ſeene and pulled forth many of them that had rootes of two or three ſpannes in length, which was neuer ſeene in any place of the World.

Horn-plant.

Of the Spices, Drugs, Plants and Stuffes for Phyſicians and Apothecaries, ordinarily vſed in India, and of their growing.

C. 62.

Pepper is of diuers ſorts, that is to ſay, blacke, white, and Long-pepper is called Canarijn: the blacke is the commoneſt. Pepper groweth and is planted at the foot of another tree, and moſt part at the foot of the Tree called Arecca, or ſome ſuch like Tree, and groweth vpon the tree like Bettele or Ine. The leaues of Pepper are like Orange leaues, but ſomewhat ſmaller, they are greene and ſharpe at the ends, in chawing it biteth the tongue, and taſteth much like to Bettele, it growes in bunches like Grapes, but a great deale leſſer and thinner, yet ſomewhat thicker then Gooſeberries: they are alwayes greene till they begin to drie and to ripen, which is in December and Ianuary, for at that time they are gathered. The long Pepper groweth in Bengala, and ſome in the Iland of Iaua, and is another kind of tree: the long Pepper is of the length of a needle, or the tagge of a point, but ſomewhat thicker, and all of a like thickneſſe: it is outwardly rugged, and of an aſhie colour, and within ſomewhat white, with ſmall ſeeds, but in taſte and vſe it is like the other blacke and white Pepper. The white Pepper (as I ſaid) is like the black, both in taſte and forme, yet it is accounted for better and ſtronger, and is not in ſo great quantitie as the black. The Pepper called Canarijns in the Countrey of Goa and Malabar, almoſt of the faſhion of Panike: it is an aſhe colour, and hollow within, with ſome ſmall kernells, which in eating taſteth and heateth like other Pepper, yet it is vſed only by the poore people, and therefore is called Canarijn Pepper, that is to ſay, Countrey mens Pepper, or poore peoples Pepper: therefore it is neuer laden away, for it is very courſe and of a little value, neither would it bee able to raiſe the fraight, and therefore is it left in the Countrey.

C. 63.
Cinamon.

Cinamon trees are as great as oliue trees, & ſome leſſer, with leaues of Colmi like Bay leaues, but of faſhion like Citron leaues, though ſomewhat ſmaller. They haue white bloſſomes, and a certaine fruit of the greatneſſe of blacke Portugall Oliues, whereof alſo Oyle is made, which is vſed for many things. The tree hath two Barks, but the ſecond Barke is the Cinamon, it is cut off in foure ſquare peeces, and ſo laid to dry, at the firſt it is aſhe colour, after as it beginneth to dry, it rolleth together of it ſelfe, and looketh of the colour as it commeth hither, which proceedeth of the heat of the Sun. The tree from whence the Barke is taken they let it ſtand, and within three yeers after it hath another Barke as it had before. Theſe trees are in great abundance, for they grow of themſelues without planting, in the open fields like buſhes: the root of this tree yeeldeth a water which ſmelleth like Camphora, it is forbidden to bee drawne forth for ſpoyling the trees. The Cinamon that is not well dried is of aſhe colour, and that which is ouermuch dried, blackiſh, but the beſt dried is reddiſh: there is much and excellent water diſtilled out of Cinamon while it is halfe greene, which is much vſed in India, and many times carried into Portugall and other places: it is very pleaſant both to drinke and to ſmell, but very hot and ſtrong: it is vſed againſt the Colicke and other diſeaſes proceeding of cold, it is likewiſe good againſt ſtinking breath, and euill ſauor of the mouth. There is likewiſe a water made of the bloſſomes of this tree, but not ſo good, nor ſo well eſteemed as that of Cinamon it ſelfe. The places where Cinamon groweth, is moſt and beſt in the Iland of Seylon, wherein there is whole Woods full of Cinamon trees: in the coaſt of Malabar there groweth likewiſe great ſtore, and ſome Woods of Cinamon, but not halfe ſo good, and leſſer trees, the barke being grayer and thicker and of ſmall vertue.

C. 64.
Ginger.

Ginger groweth in many places of India, yet the beſt and moſt carried abroad, is that which groweth in the Coaſt of Malabar: it groweth like thin and young Netherland Reedes of two or three ſpannes high, the Roote whereof is Ginger, being greene, it is much eaten in India for Sallets, as alſo ſodden in Vineger, which they call Achar, as I ſaid of Pepper, and other Fruits that are vſed in that manner throughout all India: the time when they are moſt gathered and begun to bee dried, is in December and Ianuarie: they drie it in this ſort, that is, they couer it with pot-earth, which they do to ſtop & fil vp the holes, & therby to make it continue the freſher, for the Pot-earth preſerueth it from wormes, without the which it is preſently conſumed by them: it is little eſteemed in India, notwithſtanding there is much ſhipped, as well to the Red Sea, as to Ormus, Arabia and Aſia.

C.65. Cloues.

THe Trees whereon Cloues grow are like Bay Trees, the bloſſomes at the firſt white, then greene, and at laſt red and hard, which are the Cloues, and when the bloſſomes are greene, they haue the pleaſanteſt ſmell in all the world. The Cloues grow very thicke together and in great numbers they are gathered and then dried, their right colour when they are drie is a darke yellow, and to giue them a blacke colour they are commonly ſmoked. The Cloues that ſtay on the Tree vngathered are thicke, and ſtay on till the next yeere, which are thoſe that are called the Mother of Cloues. And in the place where the Trees ſtand, there groweth not any graſſe or greene hearbe at all, but it is wholly drie, for that thoſe Trees draw all the moiſture vnto them. That which the Portugalls call Baſton, or with vs the Stocke of the Cloue (and is the ſtalke whereby they hang on the trees) is gathered with the Cloues, and ſo they are mingled together: for that in Maluco they neuer garble their Cloues, but in India they are many times parted, though verie little: for they are moſt part ſold and vſed with duſt and ſtalkes, and altogether; but ſuch as are to bee ſent to Portugall are ſeuered and clenſed. The Cloues are ſo hotte of nature, that whenſoeuer they are made cleane, and ſeperated from their garbiſh, if there chance to ſtand either tubbe or payle of water in the chamber where they clenſe them, or any other veſſell with wine or any kind of moiſture, it will within two daies at the furtheſt bee wholly ſoken out and dried vp, although it ſtand not neere them, by reaſon of the great heat of the Cloues that draw all moiſture vnto them, as by experience I haue often ſeene. The ſame nature is in the vnſpun Silke of China, ſo that whenſoeuer the Silke lieth any where in a houſe vpon the flowre, that is to ſay, vpon boords, a foot or two aboue the ground, and that the flowre is ſprinkled and couered with water, although it toucheth not the Silke, in the morning all that water will bee in the Silke, for that it draweth it all vnto it. And this tricke the Indians oftentimes vſe to make their Silk weigh heauie when they ſell it, for it can neither be ſeene nor found in the Silke.

Their heat.

Note.

C.66. Nutmeg.

There are two ſorts of Nutmegs, the male which is long, the female round.

THe Nutmeg Tree is like a Peare Tree, or a Peach Tree, but that they are leſſe, and it hath round leaues. Theſe Trees grow in the Iland of Banda, not farre from Maluco, and alſo in the Ilands of Iaua and Sunda, from whence they are carried to China and Malacca, and alſo into India and other places. The fruit is altogether like great round Peaches, the inward part whereof is the Nutmeg. This hath about it a hard ſhell like Wood, wherein the Nut lieth looſe: and this wooden ſhell or huske is couered ouer with Nutmeg flowre, which is called Mace, and ouer it is the fruit, which without is like the fruit of a Peach.

C.67. Cardamomum.

C*Ardamomum* is a kind of ſpice, which they vſe much in India to dreſſe with their meates, and commonly they haue it in their mouthes to chaw vpon. It is very good againſt a ſtinking breath and euill humours in the head, and ſerueth alſo for other thing in medicines: it groweth like other graines, and is very like to Panyke, but of a white colour drawing ſomewhat towardes yellow. The huskes are as great as the huskes of Panyke grains, but ſomewhat ſmall: within there is about ten or twelue graines of berries, which is the Cardamomum. There are two ſorts of Cardamomum, that is to ſay, great and ſmall; moſt of it groweth in Calecut and Cananor, places on the Coaſt of Malabar: it is likewiſe in other places of Malabar, and in the Iland of Iaua, and from the Countries aforeſaid it is moſt carried into other places, but little brought into Portugall, becauſe of the great charges and long way: yet many times the Saylers and other Trauellers bring it. They ſeeth no fleſh in India, but commonly they put Cardomomum into the pot, it maketh the meate to haue as good a ſauor and a taſte as any of the other Spices of India.

C.68. Lac.

L*Acke* by the Malabares, Bengalers, and Decanyns, is called Aſſy, by the Moores Lac; the men of Pegu (where the beſt is found, and moſt trafficked withall) doe call it Treck, and deale much therewith by carrying it vnto the Iland of Sumatra (in time paſt called Taprobana) and there they exchange it for Pepper, and from thence it is carried to the Red Sea, to Perſia and Arabia, whereupon the Arabians, Perſians, and Turkes call it Loc Sumutri, that is, Lac of Sumatra, becauſe it is brought from thence into their Countries. The manner how it is made is thus: in Pegu, and thoſe places from whence it commeth, there are certaine very great Piſmires with wings, which fly vp the trees that are there like Plum trees, and ſuch other trees, out of the which trees comes a certaine gumme, which the Piſmires ſucke vp, and then they make the Lac round about the branches of the trees, as Bees make Hony and Waxe, and when it is full, the owners of the trees come, and breaking off the branches lay them to drie, and being drie the branches ſhrinke out, and the Lac remaineth behind like a Reed: ſometimes the Wood breaketh within them, but the leſſe Wood it hath within it the better it is: the peeces and crummes that fall

They beate the Lac to powder, and melt it, and ſo mixe all manner of colours vpon it as they liſt, red, blacke, greene, yellow, or any other colour, and make peeces thereof, ſuch as are ſold here to ſeale letters withall. See 71.

fall vpon the ground, they melt them together, but that is not ſo good, for it hath filth and earth within it: it happeneth oftentimes that they finde the Piſmires wings within the raw Lac. When the Lac is raw, as it commeth from the Tree, it is a darke red colour, but being refined and clenſed, they make it of all colours in India.

B*Enioin* is a kinde of ſtuffe, like Frankinſence and Myrrhe, but more eſteemed, for it ſerueth for many medicines, and other things

As when they make Balles or peeces of Amber and Muske, they muſt alwaies haue Benioin with it to make it perfect, it groweth much in the Kingdome of Syan, in the Iland of Sumatra, in the Ilands of Iauas, and the Countrey of Malacca, they are high Trees full of branches, with leaues like Lemmon Tree leaues, with a thicke and high ſtemme or ſtocke in the middle, from whence proceedeth the Gumme, which is the Benioin. When the Tree is young, then it yeeldeth the beſt Benioin, which is blackiſh of colour, and of a very ſweet ſmell, and is called Benioin de Boninas, that is to ſay, Benioin of the Flowers, becauſe of the perfect ſmell. The ſecond Benioin, is called Benioin Amendoado, that is, Benioin of Almondes, becauſe it is mixed with pieces of white Benioin among the blacke, like to Almondes that are cut in pieces. This Benioin is not ſo good, becauſe the white Benioin is of the old Trees.

*Ca.*72.

FRankinſence groweth in Arabia, it is the Gumme that floweth out of the bodies of Trees, like Benioin.

Mirre by the Indians is called Bola, it groweth in the ſame that Benioin and Frankinſence doth, and commeth alſo out of Arabia Fælix, but moſt out of the Countrie of Abexin from the inward parts of the Countrie, lying betweene Moſambique, and the red Sea, which is called Preſter Iohns Land.

*Ca.*74.

THere are three ſorts of Sanders, that is, white, yellow and red: the white and the yellow, which is the beſt, come moſt out of the Iland of Tymor, which lieth by Iaua. This Iland hath whole woods and wilderneſſes of Sanders, both of white and yellow, and from thence it is carried throughout all India, and other Countries, and traffique much therewith: the red Sanders groweth moſt in the coaſt of Choramandel and Tanaſſaryn, which is in the Countrie of Pegu: the trees of Sanders are like Nut trees, and haue a certaine fruit vpon them like Cherries, at the firſt greene, and after blacke, but of no taſte nor any thing worth, for it preſently falleth off, onely the wood of the tree is accounted of, which is the Sanders.

Ca. 75.

SNakewood is moſt in the Iſland of Seylon: it is a lowe Tree: the roote thereof being the Snake-wood, is of colour white, ſhewing ſomewhat yellow, very hard and bitter in taſte, it is much vſed in India: they ſtampe and bruiſe it like Sanders, in water or wine, and ſo drinke it, it is very good and well proued againſt all burning Feauers: one ounce thereof bruiſed and mixed with water is good againſt all poiſon and ſickneſſe, as the collicke, wormes, and all filthy humors and coldneſſe in the body, and ſpecially againſt the ſtinging of Snakes, whereof it hath the name: it was firſt found by meanes of a little beaſt called Quil, or Quirpele, which is of bigneſſe very like a Ferret (wherewith in thoſe Countries they vſe to driue Cunnies out of their holes, and ſo catch them) whereof in India they haue many in their houſes, which they play withall to paſſe the time away, as alſo to kill their Mice and Rats, and to driue them away. This Beaſt by nature is a great enemy to the Snake, ſo that whereſoeuer ſhe findeth any, ſhe fighteth with them: and becauſe it is often bitten by the Snake, it knoweth how to heale it ſelfe with this Snake-wood, whereof there is much in Seylon, where alſo are many of thoſe Beaſts, and great ſtore of Snakes) ſo that if it be neuer ſo ſore bitten, hauing eaten of this wood, it is preſently healed, as if it had neuer beene hurt.

Ca. 76.
Lignum Aloes.

THe Lignum Aloes which in India is called Calamba and Palo D'aguilla, is moſt in Malacca, in the Iland of Sumatra, Camboia, Sion, and the Countries bordering on the ſame: the trees are like Oliue trees, and ſomewhat greater: when it is cut off, it ſmelleth not ſo well, becauſe it is greene, for the drier it is, the better it ſmelleth: the beſt and that which ſmelleth moſt is the innermoſt part of the wood: ſome of it is better then the reſt, which the Indians doe preſently know how to finde out: the beſt and fineſt is called Calamba, and the other Palo Daguilla. Now to know which is the beſt, you muſt vnderſtand that the wood that is very heauie with blacke and browne veines, and which yeeldeth much Oyle or moiſtneſſe (which is found by the fire) is the beſt, and the greater and thicker it is, the better it is, and hath the more vertue. Of this wood they make many coſtly things, and it hath a ſpeciall and precious ſmell, ſo that it is greatly eſteemed: ſpecially the Calamba, which if it be good, is ſold by weight againſt Siluer and Gold. The Palo Daguilla next after the Calamba is much accounted of. There is another kinde of Palo Daguilla, which is called Aquilla Braua, or wilde Aquilla, and is alſo much eſteemed: for the Indians vſe it therewith to burne the bodies of their Bramenes, and other men of account, when they are dead: and becauſe it is coſtly, therefore it is a great honour to thoſe that are burnt therewith, as it is to thoſe that with vs are buried in Tombes of Marble ſtones: but it is not comparable to the other Palo Daguilla, nor the Calamba. The wilde Aguilla groweth moſt in the Iſland of Seylon, and on the coaſt of Choramandel, and the beſt Palo Daguilla, and Calamba groweth in Malacca. Theſe coſtly woods are much vſed in India for Beades, and Crucifixes, which are holden in great reuerence.

The Author proceedeth in a large diſcourſe of other Drugs, Gems and Indian occurrents which I haue omitted.

CHAP. IX.

Relation of Ormuz, and of the late taking thereof by the Engliſh and Perſians.

A Relation of the Kings of Ormuz, and of the foundation of the Citie of Ormuz, taken out of a Chronicle which a King of the ſame Kingdome compoſed, called Pachaturunxa, written in Arabicke.

KIng Mahomet raigning in Aman, which is within Arabia felix: in the beginning of his reigne, deſiring to amplifie his Kingdome and fame, aſſembled all the great men of his Kingdome, and ſaid vnto them, how the Countries of the coaſt of Perſia had beene his predeceſſours, and by negligence of ſome of them they were loſt, diſinhabited, and vnprofitable: that hee determined with the principall of his Kingdome that would follow him to goe thither in perſon, and with ſome of the common ſort for to build ſome Cities and Townes in that Countrie, and that it might be cultiuated, ſeeing it was a good Countrie. And ſo would his Kingdome and his fame be augmented, and that he would leaue for the gouernment of Arabia his Sonne, which was a man able to rule well. All condeſcending that his determination ſeemed them well, he commanded preſently to prepare much people, many of the principals following him; and departing from Aman, they came to Calciate, which is neere the Sea in the ſame Arabia. Hee thought good, and his alſo to build in that port a Citie, becauſe it was a place diſpoſed for them of the Countrie to traffique with the Ships that ſhould paſſe that way: for the which his Sonne remained there with much people, putting in effect the determination of his Father and of his Counſell; and the Citie in time did ſo proſper, that at this day in the ruines it ſhoweth to haue beene a very great and noble Citie. After that King Mahomet had ordained the matters of Arabia and of Calciate, he embarked with the people he had for his company diuided in many ſhips, which hee cauſed to be made ready, and paſſed to the ſide of the coaſt of Perſia, and arriued at the Cape of Iaſques, that is where Ormuz doth now ſtand, thirty leagues without the ſtraight. And ſeeing that Country, and the diſpoſition of it not conuenient to ſettle himſelfe, iournying along the coaſt, hee arriued at a Countrie which then was called Harmuz, which is neere to that which now is called Magoſtan, and Braami, which now at this day they call Coſteca, it ſtands right againſt that which now is called Harmuz, in the coaſt of Perſia. And the King with his contenting themſelues with the Countrie, determined to ſettle themſelues in it and to inhabit, and ſo they tooke in hand preſently to build houſes, and to husband the ground.

Aman. Calciate. Iaſques. Harmuz. Magoſtan. Braami. Coſteca.

And becauſe this King was very liberall, and fauoured much the poore people of the Country, and the husbandmen, and receiued ſtrangers louingly, hee was well beloued generally of all that had notice of him. And the fame of his vertues ſpeading abroad, and his nobleneſſe through all the place round about, many people came vnto him to dwell vnder his defence and gouernment. This was the cauſe whereby this new Citie was much enobled. The fame of his vertues and goodneſſe was ſpread abroad among all the Kings of that ſtraight, as well of Perſia as of other parts of Arabia, all of them ſent to viſit him with great preſents, ſhewing the great contentment they had with his good neighbourhood. When this King ſaw himſelfe proſper, and fauoured of all about him, and with many people, to purchaſe more the loue of all men, he commanded money to be coined, for there was none in the Countrey, which increaſed greatly the loue of all men toward him, and iointly the proſperity of his Country. For this benefit which hee did to all that Countrie in the inuenting mony for them, they called him generally Deranquu, which is to ſay, Seale of money. After the Citie of Ormuz built in the coaſt of Perſia, and proſperous with many people and riches, the King commanded his great men to goe through the Countries of Magoſtan, and euery one ſhould take that which beſt liked him, for to cultiuate, inhabite, and build in it diuers Townes. They did ſo, and euery one tooke the countrie that liked him beſt, and inhabited and husbanded it, and euery one gaue his owne name to the Countrie he tooke, of whom thoſe Countries are nominated to this day. And becauſe the Kings that ſucceeded Mahomet were mighty and good in their gouernment, they held the Countrie in their ſucceſſions, increaſing alwaies in people and nobleneſſe. And their children that deſcended of them were ſuch continually, that the Fathers in their life time gaue them the gouernment of the Kingdome, and they reſted in their old age.

Cuſtome of ſucceſſion. Genealogies.

It was the cuſtome among theſe Kings, becauſe the memory of their forefathers might not periſh, when they came to the tenth generation, they began their denominations anew, the tenne following tooke the names of the ten before. In ſort that the firſt of the number of the ten was to take the name of the founder; and ſo in order till the number of ten were ended. This order continued ſome yeeres, the reigne going by a direct line. Afterward this order and cuſtome periſhed, becauſe that one for couetouſneſſe of reigning did kill the other, and many were made blinde by others that would haue the gouernment of the Kingdome. But there is one great and notable thing in this Kingdome, that although there were many that reigned tyrannouſly, murthering the lawfull Kings, yet vnto this day there neuer reigned any that was not of the bloud Royall. Onely Hormuz, being in the ſide of Perſia, one that then reigned being dead, and hauing none of the bloud royall in the Countrie, the Goazil (which is the Gouernour of the Kingdome) did make himſelfe King. At this time a Sonne in law of the King deceaſed which was his Nephew, was with a great Armie of men of warre, by commandement of his Vncle, againſt the Iland and Citie of Cays. Newes were brought him how his Vncle was dead, and how the Goazil had made himſelfe King; wherefore hee raiſed preſently the ſiege from againſt Cays, and came with all the men he had to Ormuz: and aſſoone as he came he was receiued of all with great contentments and feaſts, for they were very ſorry to haue for their King a man that was not of the bloud royall, wherefore with great feaſts they tooke the Kings Nephew for their King. Which commanded preſently to behead the Goazill which had made himſelfe King, and all his aſſociates and allies.

The Goazill.

Cays.

After that the direct line was broken in the ſucceſſion of the Kingdome, there was no ſuch good gouernment in the Kingdome, neither did the things thereof proſper, but went rather to decay and diminution, whereby there was not already ſo much reſiſtance againſt their aduerſaries, the warres of the neighbour Kings increaſing, the King of Chreman chanced to come, which is within the land of Perſia, with a great armie, and very puiſſant againſt Hormuz, for to deſtroy it. The King Cabadim which reigned at that time in Hormuz, not daring to abide the encounter and power of the King of Chreman, embarked himſelfe with all the people hee could, and the Countrey forſaken, withdrew himſelfe to the Iland that is called Quexome, which is neere the Iland of Ormuz. And being in it a few daies, and thinking he was not ſafe in it, being ſomewhat too bigge, and in it he could not well defend himſelfe, he paſſed then with his people to the Iland which now is called Hormuz, becauſe it was cloſer, holding that in it he might defend himſelfe from whatſoeuer enemies. This Iland was before deſert, and had no more but a few poore Fiſhermen, and they called it Iarum, which is to ſay a Wood. For as the Iland is almoſt all of Salt, and the grounds almoſt all ſaltiſh, becauſe ſome Riuers that run through it, which come from a Mountaine that is in the middeſt of it, are of the ſalt water, and by the ſides of the water lieth the Salt white as Snow, and hee that is to paſſe the Riuer muſt ſtep ouer the Salt. And the ſtones of the hill in ſome places are ſalt, which the ſhippes doe carrie for balaſt vnto India. Notwithſtanding about the Iland there grow ſome very thin Woods and Trees like Apple trees of Anafega, which beare a Fruite that the Portugals doe call ſmall Apples, like the Apples of Anafega, which doe not eate well, for they are ſuſtained and liue by the raine water. So that becauſe the Iland is barren, and beareth nothing but that which I ſaid: becauſe it is ſo ſalt, they call it Iarum. Alſo becauſe it was not inhabited, it was in times paſt ſmaller and cloſer then now it is, as euen to this day the Inhabitants doe ſhew the places where the Sea did reach. The King Cabadim landing now in this Iland, and determining to ſettle himſelfe in it, began to build houſes for himſelfe and his to inhabit. They remedied themſelues with that which they went to ſeeke in the Countries round about. And alſo becauſe the King of Creman returned to his owne Countrey, they went from thence to maintaine the places which before they did poſſeſſe, cultiuating them. And becauſe the Citie built in the Iland of Iarum proſpered, they made it the head of their Kingdome. Thoſe which ſucceeded them named it Hormuz, which remaineth to this day, which was the name of the principall Citie which they had on the firme land, that the King of Geman deſtroyed and arruinated.

Why Iarum was called Ormuz.

It is to be noted that this ſtraight of Harmuz, ſome leagues within from Ormuz, is an Iland called Cays; in the which was built in times paſt a very rich and noble Citie, whereof at this day there is a remembrance among them of the Country, and now the Iland is deſert, in the which appeare the memory of the old buildings that were in it. This Iland and Citie was very rich, populous, and very proſperous, becauſe of the great reſort of Ships that reſorted from all parts of India, with great riches and great ſtore of goods, and for the great concourſe of people that from

Cays.

Perſia and Arabia come to it to ſeeke ſuch goods as came thither from India, bringing alſo very rich merchandiſe, in change of the which or for mony which they made of them they bought thoſe that from India came thither. In ſort that all the riches which now Hormuz hath, & all the traffick then the Iland of Cays had, that which now is called Hormuz, being as I haue ſaid vnhabited.

The King of Hormuz ſeeing the euils that had befallen to him by meanes of the Goazil of Cays (which had prouoked the King of Xiras againſt him) he went againſt him with a great Armie, and beſieging him ſome daies, and not being able to ſubdue him, he returned to Hormuz, becauſe winter came on: and the next yeere he went againſt it, and tooke and ſacked it, and left in it a Goazill made with his owne hand, with great ſtore of people. The Goazill ouercome had meanes to eſcape, and he fled in a Terrada to the Iland of Baren: and made him ſtrong againe in Baren, with the fauour of the Goazill of Baren, and returned againe againſt Cays, and craftily comming to a parley with the Goazil which the King of Hormuz had lefe there for ſafegard of the Citie, he tooke him and pulled out both his eyes, and poſſeſt him againe of the Citie.

The Author here relateth the wars betwixt the King of Xiras, in behalfe of Cays againſt Ormuz; which I haue omitted.

Iland Baren.

But Pacaturunxa ſucceeding in the Kingdome of Hormuz (which was the Author of this Chronicle, and reigned about 300. yeeres agoe, little more or leſſe) brought it vnder his ſubiection, and from thence forward it remained ſubiect to the Kingdome of Hormuz. And preſently this Pachaturunxa ſubdued the Iland of Baren, in puniſhment for the fauour that hee gaue to the Goazil of Cays: and ſo the Kings of Hormuz were proſperous, ſo that they ſubdued all the Ilands that were in all the ſtraight and all the Countrie along the coaſt of Arabia vnto Laſſa and Catiffa, and others alſo on the ſide of Perſia, whereby it was made a very great Kingdome and a rich and very proſperous: chiefly that all the traffick of Cays was paſſed to the Iland, which now is called Hormuz: whereby Cays was vtterly loſt, as well in her buildings as in her riches, and now it is altogether deſtroyed and vnhabited, hauing beene the principall Iland in all thoſe parts. And Hormuz being a barren and vnhabited Iland, and a Mountaine of Salt, is among the richeſt Countries of the India one of the richeſt, for the many and great merchandize that come to it from all places of India, and from all Arabia, and from all Perſia, euen of the Mogores, and from Ruſſia and Europe I ſaw Merchants in it, and from Venice. And ſo the Inhabiters of Hormuz doe ſay, that all the world is a ring, and Hormuz is the ſtone of it. Whereby it is commonly ſaid, that the Cuſtome-houſe of Hormuz is a channell of Siluer which alwaies runneth. The laſt yeere that I was in Hormuz, hauing continued there three yeeres, the Officers affirmed to mee that the Cuſtome-houſe did yeeld 150000. Pardaos to the King of Portugall, beſides that which is preſumed the Moores and the Goazill did ſteale, which are Officers of the Cuſtome-houſe. And although this Iland yeeldeth no fruit, neither hath water nor victualls, yet it hath great abundance of fleſh, bread, rice, and great ſtore of fiſh, and many and good fruits, whereof it is prouided from many places, eſpecially from Perſia, &c.

Relation of Ormuz buſineſſe by Maſter W. PINDER.

A Briefe of ſome paſſages and accidents of a Voyage to the Eaſt Indie in the London, Captaine Andrew Shilling Commander of her, and three other Ships in the Company, namely the Hart, wherein Maſter Richard Bluth was Viceadmirall, the Roe Bucke Rere admirall, Maſter Richard Swan Maſter of her, and Christopher Browne Maſter of the Egell, being the fourth Ship, the fiue and twentieth of March 1620. Theſe foure Ships ſet ſaile from the Downes the foure and twentieth of Aprill. All foure Ships got into Saldany Bay, whoſe latitude is 33. degrees 57. minutes, and 29. degrees, 48. minutes, to the Eaſterne of the Lizart in Cornwall, and it hath 2. degrees 27. minutes Weſterly variation. The ſame day arriued Captaine Fitz-Harbord with the Exchange and Vnitie, who came from England in our Company with three Ships vnder his command, and left our company the fourth of Aprill: there was in the Bay an Engliſh Ship that came from Surat, named the Lyon, Captaine Widdall in her: alſo there were ten Dutch Ships, bound for Iaccatra.

The thirtieth of Iune our Ships were watered, being the chiefe cauſe of putting into that Bay, but formerly there hath bin plenty of Oxen and Sheepe, to bin bought for ſmall value, but by ſome abuſe to the people, there is nothing to be had, except water: by ſome neglect, our continuance was vntil the 25. of Iuly, with much haſſard and preiudice to our paſſage: ſo plying for Surat, with purpoſe to haue gone within the Iland of S. Lawrence, we were forſt to goe without the Iland, being the firſt paſſage of any Engliſh without, to the coſt of India: and the eight of October wee came to ſight of certaine Ilands, in latitude tenne degrees fiftie one minutes of North and longitude from the Cape of Good hope, Eaſterly fifte fiue degrees 58. minutes, and variation thirteene degrees fiftie foure minutes Weſterly. Theſe Ilands affords good reliefe, and are worth diſcouery, their owne Inhabitants report. From theſe Iles we ran with the coaſt of Indie, and firſt ſight thereof was Mount Delm, which is the higheſt hill in India, our latitude at ſight of it was 11. degrees 47. minutes longitude 56. degrees 51. minutes variation 15 degrees 43. minutes.

M. Pinder had bin before in Eaſt Indies, with thoſe ſhips which the Cōpany there tooke. He was now in this Perſian buſines (as I remember) Maſter of the London. This I promiſe as a Preface to the larger Ormuſian Relations following.

the tenth of October. The Coaſt of India is bold to runne with all dangers, ſheweth it ſelfe from Cape Commeren, you may bee bold to runne all the Coaſt to Diu head in tenne fathom the darkeſt night that may bee, and good anchoring off, to thirtie or fortie fathome depth from the Coaſt; and from September vntill Februarie, you may ſaile to and fro on that Coaſt, hauing the Land wind turnes at night, and Sea wind turnes at day, proued by many trials. The thirteenth of October, the Ship anchored in twelue fathoms, fiue leagues from the Coaſt, in the latitude 13. degrees Northerly, 14. minutes, longitude 58. degrees Eaſterly, 12. min. from Cape Bonaſperanca the ſixteenth, certaine Boats brought vs fiſh with ſome ſmall ſtore of fruit, and hence from the ſhoare riding then in the latitude, 13. degrees 33. minutes, and 14. degrees 44. variation ſo pling toward Surat: the ſeuen and twentieth we anchored ſome ſeuen mile and a halfe from Dabull, in eight fathome and a halfe depth, the Towne bearing Eaſt by North, by the Compaſſe. From this place we had good prouiſion for our men, who were moſt ſickly, but God reſtored health in ſhort time to them, the latitude of it is 17. degrees Northerly, 38. minutes Eaſterly. From Dabul, on the third of Nouember wee plied for Surat, and on the ſixth, in latitude 19. degrees 51. minutes. Capt. Shilling ſent the Hart and Egell toward Perſia, for Cape Iaſquis being ſo appointed by the worſhipfull Company. The ninth; the London and Row Buck arriued at the Port of Swally neere Surat, whoſe latitude is 21. degrees Northerly 16. minutes; there vnderſtood we that the Portugall lay with a Fleet of Ships to ſurpriſe thoſe that ſhould come to Iaſques in the Perſian-Gulfe, which to preuent we made all the haſt that might be to ſtrengthen our friends, and preuent their plot, and on the one and twentieth of Nouember, wee ſurpriſed one of their Ships of ſome two hundred and fiftie tun, who came from Arabia; this Ship wee manned landing all the Portugalls, and plied for Iaſques, and on the fifth of December, we met the Hart and Egell forced from Iaſques by the Portugall, and had turned off a Ship of theirs the which they tooke in their paſſage. Our forces vnited wee made haſt to our Port, the which the fifteenth of December wee had ſight of, and alſo of the Portugall Fleet, who aſſaulted vs the ſeuenteenth, but let them boaſt their entertainment, praiſe to the Lord he fought for vs; and if the firing of a Ship, that ſhould haue fired them had taken effect, their glorious pride had beene quailed that day. Yet were we Commanders vnder God of the Rood, while hee ſent to Ormus to renew his forces, and on the twentieth came towards vs, and then thought by often waying and tiring our men, being not accuſtomed to thoſe hot parts to bee maſter of vs; but one the eight and twentieth hee was taught a better leſſon, with Gods guard, and vſe of our Powder and Shot: which had it not failed vs, they had ſcarce any of them troubled Engliſhmen more; but I referre to them how they ſped. Our Capt. Andrew Shilling receiued a mortall wound, the ſixth ſhot that paſt this eight and twentieth, yet was valiant and ſpake cheerefull, with thankefulneſſe to God the laſt minute of his life, which ended the ſixth of Ianuarie. Hee was buried the ninth, and on the fourteenth we ſet ſaile for Surat from Iaſques, whoſe latitude is twentie fiue degrees Northerly, twentie foure minutes, and eleuen degrees twentie minutes Northerly to the Weſter of Damans meridian, ſome 18. degrees 40. minutes variation. On the ſeuen and twentieth of Ianuarie, wee tooke a Portugall in our returne, which on the firſt of Februarie we brought to Swalle, our Port of Surrat and rebuilt her, ſending the Portugalls to their homes. And on the fifth of Aprill, 1621. hauing laden the Hart and Row Buck to goe for England with foure ſaile, vnder the command of Captaine Blith wee put to Sea, the time being to late for the laden Shippes to goe for England, it was thought fit to goe for the Red Sea, there to ſtay vntill the next ſeaſon, in which paſſage we met a Portugall Ship of two hundred and fiftie tunne laden with Rice and Cordige of baſt, for to ſupply thoſe wee formerly fought with. Alſo the ſeuenth of May we tooke another of one hundred tunne. With theſe two prizes the London and Andrew went for Cape Roſſelgate, and the Hart and Row buck went for Mercera. Being neither of vs able to get into the Red Sea, the times ſo farre paſt, the Ships ſeperated. As ſoone as the London came to Zor, where formerly I had been, there we made haſt to prouide vs water, and put many Portugals on ſhore, many other with their Moores made their eſcape.

Then plied we for Tewe, where the Arabs vſed vs courteouſly, ſo that from the ſeuenth of Iune to the ninth, wee had filled ninetie tunne of water: on the fourteenth came order from Muſeat to the Arabs, to withſtand our watering; with the Portugalls aide they did their beſt, ſome ſeuen or eight hundred of them with ſmall Shot and Bow, and Arrowes, but the Lord fought our battell, ſo that but one of our men were loſt, yet landed we daily with Braſſe, Baſe, and ſmall Shot, vntill all our Ships were watered, it ſtandeth in the latitude 22. degrees Northerly fiftie minutes, and ſome twelue leagues within Cape Roſſelgate, and hath twentie degrees fiue minutes variation, the coaſt bold from Roſſelgate to it. On the two and twentieth of Iune, ſetting ſaile from thence for Zor, where wee made fall of the Rice taken, and after broke and burned the Ship by reaſon of her wants, to bring prouiſion of victuall for our men, and there daily watering on our guard, hauing newes ouer Land from the Hart and Row buck, to whom was returned anſwere, that they ſhould meet vs at a braue Harbour ſome league within Roſſelgate, it hath latitude 22. degrees Northerly 32. minutes, being by the chiefeſt of our Fleet called Londons Hoope, it hath Wood and Water on the Weſt ſide of the Bay, alſo multitude of fiſh) the eight of Auguſt the Hart & Row buck came to vs, and on the fifteenth, we all ſet ſaile for India to ſtop the Ports for entry of certaine Ships, their Prince hauing much wronged our Maſters, promiſing them free paſſage through his Countrey with their goods, but when it came within it, he preſently made bootie of it with his Souldiers; ſo Captaine Blith with the London and Primroſe, one of the prizes formerly taken lay before the Harbour of Dabull, and Maſter Keridge in the Hart, Maſter Browne in the Roe Bucke, my ſelfe in the Andrew, ſo named, being the firſt Prize taken after the Death of Captaine Shilling, and with her the other were taken. Theſe three laſt ſpecified, lay before Chaul from the thirtieth of Auguſt, vntill the thirtieth of September, on which Night I was ſent to goe for Surat in the Andrew, by order from Captaine Blith, and to aduertiſe Maſter Thomas Raſtell of our Paſſage he being Chiefe in the Factorie, and in my paſſage for Surrat, I ſurpriſed a Ship of that Princes, which had formerly wronged our Maſters, and carried her to Surrat ſurrendring her to the chiefe Factor: there found I riding Captaine Weddall in the Ionas, Maſter Woodcocke in the Whale, Maſter Stephenſon in the Dolphin, Maſter Beuerſon in the Lyon, Maſter Iohnſon in the Roſe, Maſter Dauis in the Richard, a Pinneſſe who had taken a prize from the Portugals the twentieth of October. The London, Hart, Roe Bucke, and Primroſe, came to Swalle with a Prize by them taken. We continued there till the ſixe and twentieth of Nouember, at which time with nine ſayle of Ships for Perſia, and the Hart and Egell for England. The nine that went for Perſia were vnder the Command of Captaine Blith, and Captaine Weddall, and on the three and twentieth of December we came to Cuſtacke, ſome ſeuen and twenty leagues from Iaſquis, and lyeth Latitude 26. degrees, 40. minutes. Ormus in ſight of it bearing West Northweſt, by a Meridian Compaſſe ſome ten leagues from it. Our Perſian Factors aduertiſed vs that after our Fight the former yeare, the Chiefetaine of the Portugals had erected a Caſtle on Kiſhme, an Ile in ſight of Ormus, the which the Perſian had layne ſiege vnto ſome ſeuen or eight moneths, and loſt ſome eight or nine thouſand men in ſiege of it. Wherefore he required our ayde in theſe Warres if we would haue our Maſters goods from his Countrey, telling vs it was our Enemy as well as his; therefore if wee would haue our Maſters goods or Trade with him, we muſt ayde him, and then we ſhould haue the halfe bootie gotten by the Victorie, alſo great Priuiledges for the future good of our Maſters. On theſe tearmes we Condiſcended and went for Kiſhme on the nineteenth of Ianuary from Cuſtacke, and the three and twentieth Beſieged it by Sea, and the Perſian by Land with ſome of our ayde, ſo that on the nine & twentieth of Ianuary they came to Parley, and it was Concluded that they ſhould part with Bag and Baggage; prouided, they went not for Ormus, onely their Commander to remaine as pledge. There were two of our people ſlaine at this ſeruice, the one at the ſurrender namely Maſter Baffin, there were ſome one thouſand of all ſorts in this Caſtle, and the Portugals with ſome Moores were ſent away, but the Perſian required certaine Moores which had reuolted from him as hee pretended. So thoſe being deliuered him, though he had formerly promiſed them mercy, yet he put them all to death. This Caſtle had in it 17. Pieces of Ordnance, one Braſſe Cannon Pedro, two Braſſe Culuering, 2. Iron Demiculuering, 4. Braſſe Sackers, 2. Iron Minion, 6. Iron Falken, therein left to Engliſh-men, to hold poſſeſſion with the Perſian in the behalfe of the Engliſh part.

Maſter Baffin ſlaine: a Mathematician and Mariner, to whom our Northerne & Northweſtern Voyages are much indebted

On the fourth of February, we all ſet ſayle for Combroon, which is on the mayne of Perſia ſome three leagues within Ormus. Then was ſent the Portugall Commander of the aforeſaid Caſtle by Maſter Beuerſam in the Lyon for Surrat, alſo Maſter Iohnſon in the Roſe, Maſter Dauis in the Richard, theſe went for Surrat, and the London, Ionas, Whale, Dolphin with two Prizes, each ſome two hundred and fiftie or neere, theſe ſixe ſtayed to waft the Perſian, for his ſecurer landing on Ormus. On the ninth of February he landed, and with ſmall loſſe got poſſeſſion of the Towne, for the Portugals retired to their Caſtle, and then the Perſian began preſently to intrench, and gathered daily nearer the Caſtle, and with our helpes made Bulwarks for Ordnance, and Sconces for ſecuring his men. With our Ordnance we galled their Ships, forcing them to hale cloſe vnder the Caſtle, and on the 24.th with foure of our Boats fired one of their Gallions, the ſecond of March ſunke another, the 17.th of March there was made a Breach by blowing vp part of the Caſtle wall, ſo the Perſian ſought to enter but repulſed with loſſe and hurt of moſt of his beſt Souldiers. The 19.th one Gallion more ſunke, and on the 20.th and 23.th two other Gallions ſunke. The 27.th the Portugals deſired parley, the which they had but no Concluſion, ſo that the ſecond of Aprill another breach was made by blowing vp the wall neere the firſt, and the 14.th another Flanker blowne vp. Alſo the 18.th another breach, on which the Perſian made all his Forces to aſſault, and poſſeſt ſome part of the Caſtle. Then on the 21.th the Portugals being beſtraited, proffered by Parley to deliuer the Caſtle to the Engliſh, if they would ſaue their liues, the which was granted & performed, and in the two ſhips of 250. Tunnes they were ſhipt ſome 2400. of them, and ſome 200. left vntill we had procured ſhipping for their tranſport, which was performed. The 22.th being poſſeſt of the Caſtle, there were in it 53. Pieces of Ordnance mounted, 4. Braſſe Cannon, 6. Braſſe Demicannon, 16. Cannon Pedro of Braſſe, 9 Braſſe whole Culuering, 2. Demiculuering, 3. Iron Demiculuering, 10. braſſe Baſſes, one Iron Minion, 1. whole Culuering of Iron, and 1. Iron Cannon Pedro; alſo there were 92. Braſſe pieces of Ordnance more vnmounted, & 7. Braſſe Baſtels which they had landed out of their ſhips that we ſunke. This Caſtle and Ordnance were left with the Perſian, onely 10. Pieces of the 92. on the former, we tooke in our ſhips to make good what we had broken and ſpoyled out of our ſhips in their Seruice. I iudge the Latitude 27. degrees 2. minuts, & Variation 16. deg. 34. min. So the firſt of September we left the Port, and on the 24.th arriued at Swalle, where we in the London laded, and ſo did the Ionas & Lyon for England; the time of our ſtay there was vntill the the 30.th of December, there heard we of the ſinking of three Caracks by the Engliſh and Dutch of the Port of Moſambique.

§. III.

Part of a Letter written to Sir IOHN WOSTENHOLME by T. WILSON Chyrurgion; contayning many particulars of the Ormus warre and cauſe thereof; as alſo of the moſt moſt admirable taking of a Great Portugal Ship, well manned, by a ſmall Engliſh Pinneſſe.

Right Worſhipfull:

MY dutie remembred vnto you Sir, I am glad to heare of your good health and welfare, and ſhall be heartily glad to ſee you and all yours, the which I hope will be very ſhortly. Sir, I am very much bound vnto you, that I know not how I ſhall make requitall for the ſame, in that in my abſence you haue ſhewed vnto me that kindneſſes for it which as at all other times I haue found you the beſt friend that I haue in the world, I doe giue you a thouſand thankes, and will by Gods helpe make part requitall for the ſame, and I ſhall be ready at all times to doe any thing for you that in me lyeth, to the vttermoſt of my power or to any of yours. I would haue writ vnto you concerning our Voyage, but I cannot be ſo briefe as to ſend it in a Letter, but I make no doubt but you will heare more of the paſſages thereof, then I can certifie or at leaſt wiſe haue heard alreadie, for there were Letters ſent out of Perſia ouerland to the Company, concerning the taking of Kiſhme Caſtle and the Citie of Ormus with the Caſtle, with the ſpoyling of fiue Ships and one great Galley, one ſhip burned and the reſt ſunke, the which I pray God may ſtand to the good liking of you all, for we had a terrible time in Ormus, hauing peſtilentiall Feuers with ſodaine deaths, and among the Portugals famine, and that terrible contagious heat that in my dayes I neuer felt the like, and ſuch ſents of Dead bodies lying in the ſtreets without heads being vnburned, and Cats & Dogs eating them, within Ouſt end was neuer the like ſeene, with infinite many Flies, and that the Perſians would not let the dead bodies be buried. We had ſuch mortalitie among our men, that we thought we ſhould haue periſhed, all the ſhips before mentioned were they which fought with Captaine Shilling, we tooke their principall Commander priſoner, whoſe name was Ruy Frera with his Viceadmirall. This Ruy Frera did proffer vnto our Captaine that if he would let him goe, hee would giue him a thouſand pound, although he had no money of his owne, yet he would procure it of the Clergie men, the which our Captaine refuſed, and ſent him to Surrat in the Lyon to the Preſident, giuing them ſtrait command of his ſafe looking to. And when he came to Surrat, he in the Night made his eſcape with the Ship-boat for want of the better Watch keeping. He was a proper tall Gentleman, ſwarthie of colour, ſterne of Countenance, few of words, and of an excellent ſpirit, he had liued here in India many yeares. Hee got Commiſſion of their King for three ſeuerall Deſignes, the firſt was to haue ſufficient Ships and Men with Munition, for the rooting out of the Engliſh out of India, the which he made no queſtion to performe, and did begin with Captaine Shillings Fleet: but God bee thanked therein he fayled as it fell out to his great griefe and all our comforts. The ſecond thing that he was to performe, was to erect a Caſtle vpon the Iland of Kiſhme, the which he did: for when we came thither he had ſcarſe furniſhe it. Hee brought the frame thereof ready made in his Ships and got it a ſhore with great reſiſtance, but ſo many as would not yeeld vnto him, hee put to the Sword, and ſo many as would ſerue him he allowed meanes. Now the place where this Caſtle was to be erected, was about certaine Wels of freſh water the which was for the vſe of Ormus, becauſe vpon that Iland there was none. Now for the building of this Caſtle they pulled downe a fine Towne with Churches and Tombes, onely for the Stones, ſome of which he burned and made Lime, and with the other he made the Caſtle wall of a great height and thickneſſe, with halfe Moones and Flankers very artificially, which in fiue moneths and a halfe hee had finiſhed: a thing wonderfull in ſo ſhort a time to be effected, and with a great deepe drie Moat round about. He had erected on the Caſtle 12. Pieces of great Ordnance, to the great annoyance of the Perſian Armie, which had almoſt beleaguered it round; onely a ſmall paſſage which they had towards the Sea, on either ſide of it beſet with Palleſadoes for the better going to their Boates and Frigots in ſafetie, though ſcarſe able without great perill. Hee meant to take the whole Iland of Kiſhme in their owne hands, being a very fruitfull place, abounding with all manner of Fruits, Beaſts, and freſh Water, whereof the Iland of Ormus hath none. The Portugals when they were firſt ſcituated in Ormus, did agree with the King of the Sea-coaſt vpon the mayne, which was a Kingdome of it ſelfe, and ſince hath beene Conquered of the Perſians to pay to the aforeſaid King certaine tributes or cuſtomes vpon euery head of Cattell, pots of Water and ſuch like, which did yeerely amount vnto a great ſumme of money, which the Portugals haue not payed a long time, at leaſt this thirtie yeares: and hauing been demanded it, ſince the Engliſh hath had trade heere in Perſia, they haue refuſed to pay the ſame. Moreouer they haue gotten into their poſſeſſion great quantitie of Silke, which they haue refuſed to pay alſo. For that reaſon the Perſians would not let the Portugals haue Cattell nor refreſhing from the mayne, (for it was Death vnto them that ſold them any) which was the reaſon of building the Caſtle vpon the Iland of Kiſhme. Now the Portugals policie thought it was good to haue two ſtrings to his bow, as this was one; the other was this at Muskat, a certaine place which the Portugals haue vpon Arabia. They made a great Feaſt and inuited the King of Arabia vnto the feaſt, and violently brought him away vnto Ormus, and there made him King of the Iland, and allowed him certaine Cuſtomes yeerely for his maintenance. By this meanes they had Cattell and Water ſufficient in great quantities, brought thither in Arabian Boates, with Fruits, Fiſh and all other things, which was euery day ſold in the Market (by report) very plentifully. Likewiſe the Arabian Boats did fetch them water from Kiſhme, and were conducted with their Gallies and Frigots againſt the Perſians. The King of Arabia was Priſoner in the Caſtle of Ormus, vnto the Perſian. The Portugals in theſe parts will not let any Commoditie paſſe to and againe vpon the Seas, vnleſſe it be firſt brought vnto Ormus, and there to be Cuſtomed vpon loſſe thereof being taken by their Gallies or Frigots, whereof they haue heere great ſtore that carrie pieces of Ordnance and other Munition: they trade to and fro in them and ſo are become Maſters of the Seas in theſe parts. The Cuſtomes of Ormus did yeerly amount as I haue heard reported to a hundred thouſand pounds, beſides Rents and other Duties which they taxed the Inhabitants with. This Towne or Citie of Ormus, was of great bigneſſe, the Houſes all built of ſtone, and ſeemed a moſt famous thing to looke vpon from the ſhips with Steeples and Towres; they had faire and large Churches in it, ſtrong & ſtately Buildings; the Caſtle of Ormus was the faireſt, largeſt and ſtrongeſt that euer I ſaw. Towards the Towne it had three Walls one within another, and well furniſhed with great Ordnance of Braſſe, as Cannon, Demicannon, Cannon-Pedro, whole Culuerings and Baſiliskes of 22. foot long.

Now concerning the third thing which was about the fiſhing for Pearle, he had but little leiſure, by reaſon of theſe turmoiles (and Warres in building of the Caſtle of Kiſhme, and the building of a Wall and a Moat about Ormus, which was begun in ſeuerall places) he had burnt vp all the Boates both of the Perſians and Arabians, by the reaſon they ſhould not fiſh for Pearle, and burnt all the fiſhing Townes. Now they that had any Boats were forced to carrie them vp into the Countrey to hide them from the Portugals: but when the Perſians were to goe ouer for Ormus, the Arabians did voluntary (both they & their Boats to the quantitie of 400. Boats) carrie the Perſian ſouldiers ouer to Ormus, againſt the Portugals, which otherwaies had neuer got ouer; for the Arabians could wiſh all the Portugals throats cut by the reaſon of their great hinderances in burning of their Boats and Townes, and Slauery which they daily did ſuſtaine.

I will certifie you concerning the wonderfull and ſtrange manner of the Richards taking a Portugall ſhip that came from Bumbaſſe; ſhe was a rich Prize laden with Elephants teeth, Turtle ſhels in Barrels, with Wax, Sea-horſe teeth, and a certaine Gumme, the which I make no doubt but you haue heard already; the chiefe cauſe of her taking was Iohn Filps, who bad them be of good cheare being but thirteene Men and Boyes, and told them he would diſmount their Piece preſently (which they were a diſcharging) the which he did. Plying the two Pieces, it was his fortune to kill the chiefe Merchant, who was going to encourage his men to Fight: which the Gunner perceiuing, trauerſſed another Piece of Ordnance againſt them: hee was no ſooner eſpied by this Filps, but he made a ſhot at the Piece but miſt it; the ſhot flew betweene the Gunners legs as he was going to giue fire; hee forthwith threw away his Linſtocke like a man diſtract and full of feare, and told them it was their fortunes to be taken. But the Richard plied ſtill both her Pieces, and comming neerer vnto them, this Filps ſtept vpon the Forecaſtle bidding them amaine, which they preſently did and lowed all her ſayles. So they called vnto them to bring aboord their Maſter, Merchant, Pilot and Boatſwaine; they puld vp their Boat and did it, when they came aboord they were bound and and put into hold. There were two Merchants in this Ship, the one killed, and the other was he which came aboord, who confeſſed that the Elephants teeth which were in her coſt 6000. pounds, at the firſt Penny in Bumbaſſe, which to be carried from Goa to Cambaia, would yeeld at the leaſt 18000. pounds, beſides eight Barrels of Turtle ſhels, which were the Merchants that was ſlaine, and that hee had in that ſhip of his owne 3000. pounds more which was in Wax, Sea-horſe teeth, Gumme and Negroes. They ſent the Boatſwaine for the reſt of the Portugals who brought fourteene more, which euery of them brought their Skreetaries and Keyes and preſented them to Mr. Dauis, who carefully layd them vp. Theſe 14. Portugals remained in the Boat; they thought them to be all the Portugals.

Great Ship taken by a ſmall ſmall Pinneſſe, hauing but two Pieces.

Filps or Philips chiefe cauſe of her taking.

This Filps or Phillips went aboord with three Men and three Boyes. They had no ſooner entred the Ship and veered the Boat a ſterne with the Portugals, but the Ship ſeemed to be full of people: there were in all of the Portugals ſeuentie fiue, of the Negroes, Men, Women and Children ninetie, likewiſe fortie Chaul men which were their Mariners, which ſtrucke ſuch an amazement among them being but ſeuen, that it daunted them much. This Phillips bidding them be of good courage for hee would leſſen their number preſently: the which hee in two houres time effected, he placed his men vpon the poope and halfe decke, with their Peeces pruned, and their Matches cockt, if they ſhould reſiſt: that done, hee went with his Sword and diſarmed all the Portugals, and cauſed their weapons to be layd on the poope, which were thirty Muskets ready laden and pruned, forty Rapiers beſides Swords and Poniards, ſixty Powder pots matched and pruned, forty Pikes and Launces, fifteene great Chambers belonging to eight peeces of Ordnance ready pruned. Then he found great ſtore of Musket ſhot which he brought vp alſo, he tooke the Chambers and opened them, and tooke out of euery of them a good quantitie of Powder, and in the roome thereof he put in Musket ſhot, and tamked them vp againe. This done, he bound them faſt to the decke round about him and pruned them, and cauſes three Linſlockes to be lighted, and with his ſmall Shot ſtanding by him; which the Portugals ſeeing, it ſtrucke ſuch amazement among them, that it made them to tremble, not knowing what they did determine. Hee giuing order vnto his ſmall Shot, that if any ſhould reſiſt him, they ſhould let flie as they thought fit: he ſteps forth into the waſt, and called the Boat-ſwaine vnto him, demanding of him how many of his Countrimen there were in the ſhippe? Who ſaid there were forty; ſo hee promiſed them to ſtay, if ſo be they would bee willing, and to doe their beſt indeauours, that he would aduance their meanes, and their aduentures, rather then to diminiſh any part thereof: which words greatly reuiued them, and they all ſaid, they were willing. Then preſently hee called the Blackes, to hayle vp the Boat, placing two of his men with their Muskets bent to the Boat, that none of the Portugals which were therein ſhould enter the ſhip. Which done, he drew his Sword, and commanded all the Portugals vpon their liues to auoide the ſhippe immediatly; which they did, and happie was hee which could get into the Boat firſt; for ſome lept into the water for feare. Beſides thoſe which they tooke into the Boat to them, there were other three which hid themſelues in the ſhippe that they knew not of, being almoſt ſtarued and durſt not come forth in ſight for feare.

The 40. Chaul Mariners freed to helpe the Engliſh.

When we came to Kiſhme Caſtle, where out of each ſhippe was carried Ordnance to batter againſt the Caſtle with Powder and Shot fitting, where our Gunners and others went to trie their valorous skill, when they had beene two dayes on ſhoare at that exerciſe, Maſter Baffin being then aboord, promiſed he would goe aſhoare to make a ſhot or two: this Philips got leaue of our Captaine for the like; and ſeeing their worke of battering, who finding their plat-forme of the one ſide hollow, reſting vpon a Basket within the reuerſe of the Peece, which at firing cauſed the Peece to deliuer contrary, which when hee had perceiued, cauſed the plat-forme to be new caſt; and the plankes layd firme, he loaded the Peece himſelfe, and placed it to his beſt leuell towards a peece of Ordnance vvhich lay on the Caſtle vvall, vvhich the Portugall vvas euen ready to giue fire vnto, for they vvere at that time a leauelling, he fired his Peece ſo leauelled, vvhich diſmounted their Peece, ſplit the carriage, and killed ſixe men, vvhereof the Captaine of the Caſtle vvas one; vvhich the Perſians ſeeing, gaue a great ſhout, and happy vvas he that could come to embrace him firſt, vvhich vvas a great credit to our Captaine, and our Engliſh Nation. He made but two ſhots, by reaſon there vvas no more Shot on ſhoare. Maſter Baffin vvent on ſhoare vvith his Geometricall Inſtruments, for the taking the height and diſtance of the Caſtle vvall, for the better leauelling of his Peece to make his ſhot: but as he vvas about the ſame, he receiued a ſmall ſhot from the Caſtle into his belly, vvherewith he gaue three leapes, by report, and died immediatly.

Another act of Philips.

Baffins death.

When Ormus was beſieged, and the Perſians had taken the Towne with ſmall reſiſtance, for they fled into the Caſtle, and we had brought our ſhips on the other ſide of the Iland without ſhot of the Caſtle, all our Engliſh Boats, as Barges and Skiffes did ouer night goe and lie within Musket ſhot of the Caſtle with all the Arabian Boats, to keepe that no Frigats of the Portugals ſhould either come in or out, either for the bringing in of Souldiers or reliefe, or the carrying away of their treaſure. The Arabians one night being very darke, went in cloſe vnder the wall of the Caſtle, and brought out two of the Portugals Frigats; whereof our Captaine gat one, and Captaine Blithe the other; and fitted as followeth, ſhee had one Sacar of Braſſe, one great Braſſe peece, which went with Chambers, and would carrie a Demi-culuering ſhot of ſtone, one other ſmall Braſſe peece, two Iron Baſes, and two of the ſhips Murtherers, thirty Muskets, Powder and Shot munition fitting, with foure and thirty Engliſhmen, whereof fiue were Trumpetters and one Drumme, where our Captaine placed this Philips Commander, they had fifty Blackes to rowe and trimme their Sailes. Likewiſe the Londons Frigat was ſo fitted. The Frigats all the day rode at an anchor without ſhot of the Caſtle, but at night they ſet their watch with a vollie of ſmall Shot, Drumme and Trumpets, which the Portugals might eaſily heare and ſee, and as it grew darker, they went neerer the Caſtle, and the Arabian Boats with them. The Portugals at the firſt made as if they would come forth with the ſhips, which was but a ſhew, for we waited the time, but yet they came not. They rode a pretie diſtance from the wal, but ſtill vnder command of the Caſtle, thinking we would haue come in to them. Within three dayes they got cloſe vnder the wall: then our Commander thought fit, that the firſt buſineſſe buſineſſe that was to bee done, was for the deſtroying of thoſe ſhips, for feare of any others comming to ſuccour them: wherefore it was promiſed to our men, that they that would goe in our Barges for the firing of them, ſhould be royally rewarded for their paines. So certaine of them agreed, and got things ready that night with their fire-workes in each Barge, they went and boorded Ruy Frera his ſhip, & ſet her on fire which in leſſe then a quarter of an houre was all in a light flame. But in the firing of her in our Barge vnfortunatly hauing a quantitie of Powder in one of the Lockers, one of the fireworkes being flung againſt the ſhip ſtrucke againſt ſome Iron, and rebounded backe againe, and ſtrucke into his body that flung it, and tore out his ſtomacke that hee died withall, ſet the Powder in the Locker on fire, and blew one man cleane away, burning ſixe others very ſhrewdly. They attempted the firing of another ſhip, hauing ſixe of the Countrie Boats chained together, with Tarre, Occam, Billet of wood, ſpits, and other trumperie in them for the fire-workes, ſo to driue them thwart their Halſer; they went alſo with their Barges to caſt fire-works into her, and one they caſt, but it fell off, being eſpied by the Portugals. They ſhot a ſmall ſhot thorow both the knees of one of the men in the Whales Barge, which is come home here in our ſhip. The Boats which were chained together were ſet on fire, and the Tide droue them cleane beſides the ſhip.

Frigats how furniſhed.

Ship fired.

Diſaſtrous accident.

Another exploit of Philips.

Now this Philips ſeeing this enterpriſe tooke none effect, towards the euening came cloſe vnder the Caſtle with his Frigat (hauing an eye to the Ports of the Caſtle) and hearing that they had got the Ordnance out of their ſhips while it was yet day went in reſolutely and diſcharged his ſacar, being lowe water and the ſhips aground, ſhot one of the ſhips thorow her Skeg or Run, cloſe by the water; the Perſians ſeing the ſhot ſtrucke againſt the wall, and when the water flowed her hold filled, the water ebbing againe ſhee cleane ouerſet, and brake all her faſts that ſhee had on the wall, which were Cables and Hawſers. This ſhip was the Admirall that came from Goa, called Todos los Santos, ſhee was of burthen fifteene hundred tunnes, and carried in her forty fiue pieces of Ordnance of Braſſe, the leaſt whereof was Demiculuering. This ſhip was the cauſe of the reſt ouerſetting which lie by her with their toppes in the water. Her Vice-admirall was named Noſtra Senhora de Victoria, being of burthen fourteene hundred tunnes with forty peeces of Ordnance. The Vice-admirall vnto Ruy Frera was named Saint Martin, which lieth ſunke by her being of the ſame burthen, and the like force Ruy Frera his Rere-admirall being a Flemming, of burthen foure hundred tunnes, with twenty two peeces of Ordnance, named Saint Antonie de coſſo: ſhe ſtands almoſt vpright, but bulged cloſe vnder the Caſtle wall. Then Ruy Frera his Admirall, which was fired, lieth three leagues from Ormus at Combrone ſunke vnder water; her name was Saint Pedro, being of burthen fourteene hundred tunnes, and forty foure peeces of Ordnance. Shee had Iron peeces in her hold, and a great deale of Shot. There was alſo a Galley ſunke vnder the wall which had three peeces of Ordnance. Ruy Frera his Vice-admirall that was when they fought with Captaine Shilling was broke vp in Ormus, ſhee proued ſo leake after the fight, her timbers ſerued for the building of Kiſhme Caſtle, &c.

Skeg is the ſlanting part of the keele a little without the ſtern-poſt. Run is that part of the hull vnder water which by degrees coms from the floor-timbers to the ſtern-poſt.

The reſt and all the land-ſeruice you haue in a more complete Iournall following.

Relation of the late Ormuz buſineſſe, gathered out of the Iournall of Maſter Edward Monoxe the Agent for the Eaſt Indian Merchants trading in Perſia.

AT a conſultation in Swally Road, the fourteenth of Nouember, 1621. commiſſion was giuen by Maſter Thomas Raſtell Preſident, and the Counſell of the Merchants of Surat, to Richard Blithe, and Iohn Weddell bound for Iaſques (a Perſian Port) with fiue good ſhips and foure Pinnaces (whereof the London, and Pinnace Shilling vnder Captaine Blithe; the Ionas, Whale, Dolphin, Lion, with their Pinnaces the Roſe, Robert, and Richard, vnder command of Captaine Weddell) to ſet ſayle with the ſooneſt opportunitie towards Port Iaſques, and to keepe together in ſuch ſort as they ſhould thinke fitteſt for their defence againſt the common enemie; and ſeeing the Portugals had diſturbed their trade by the ſlaughter, mayming and impriſoning of their men, and had made ſundry aſſaults againſt their ſhipping, that therefore it ſhould be lawfull to them to chaſe and ſurprize whatſoeuer veſſels pertayning to the Ports, and Subiects vnder the Vice-roy of Goa, thereof to be accountable, &c. And if they met with any of Decannee, Dabul, Chaul, or any Port belonging to the Samorin of Calecut, to arreſt them vpon account of iuſt pretences for goods robbed and ſpoiled &c. without imbezelling any part thereof, that full reſtitution may be made after ſatisfaction on their parts rendred: A ſixt part of goods gotten from the Portugall to be diſtributed, and their perſons to bee reſerued priſoners, that in exchange our Countrimen by them miſerably captiued may be deliuered: to haſte their lading and diſpatch at Iaſques, if poſſible within thirty dayes: and and ſeeing the reinforced Enemie Ruy Frera with his Armada of ſixe Galliones and other ſmall Veſſels are attending on the Perſian coaſt, in likelihood to aſſault their Fleet, that therefore it ſhould be lawfull not defenſiuely alone, but offenſiuely to await all aduantages, euen in their owne Ports if there be apparance of performance approued by generall counſell warrantably to be vndertaken, &c.

Second conſultation.

In Coſtack Road, the ſixe and twentieth of December, 1621. A conſultation was holden aboord the Ionas, whereat were preſent Iohn Weddell, Richard Blithe, Edward Monoxe, William Baffin, and many others. The Can or Duke of Xiras had by his Miniſters deſired the aide of their Ships againſt the common Enemie the Portugall. The Articles being tranſlated into the Perſian Tongue were diſpeeded by Xareeali Gouernour of the Prouince of Moguſtan towards the ſaid Duke who was then vpon the way towards Mina; the ſumme whereof followeth.

Cauſes mouing the Engliſh in thoſe parts and Ports to aſſiſt the Perſian: firſt a ſecret force from the Perſian, detayning the Engliſh goods on ſhore and not allowing carriages as before; which alſo would haue broken out to an open imbarging with danger likely to their perſons, goods and libertie. Secondly the open & often force and hoſtilitie (whereof the former Voyages teſtifie) from the Partugall. They made a vertue of neceſſitie.

For ſo much as by ſeuerall conferences had with diuers and ſundry of the Chan or Duke of Xiras his Miniſters and chiefe Commanders in the preſent warres, we haue well obſerued they are fully determined and reſolued to require the aide of our ſhips and people in this intended Expedition for the vanquiſhing not onely the Portugall Armada, but likewiſe for the taking and ſurprizing of the Iland and Caſtle of Ormuz: and we are very confident they will vſe their indeauours to inforce vs vnto the ſaid ſeruice by imbarging our goods vpon the ſhoare: which we haue well vnderſtood by the Gouernours refuſall to furniſh vs with Camels to bring our goods from Mina to the Port; Edward Monox late Agent propounded, whether they might vndertake that ſeruice or no. The propoſition being well debated, and the Factors commiſſion from Surat warranting to right themſelues of the great loſſes and hinderances ſuſtained by the Portugall, interrupting their peaceable Trade both in India and Perſia, (the laſt yeeres attempt of Ruy Frera againſt Captaine Shillings Fleet at Iaſques, to the loſſe of that worthie Commander, and other his Maieſties Subiects, being yet freſh) and for ſo much as the Perſian now ſeeketh our aide (and in manner forceth it) it is good to thinke on ſuch conditions as may be for the publike benefit, and not to omit this opportunitie of a peaceable and profitable trade, the ſame to be ſent vnto the Chan in theſe Articles.

Articles.

Firſt, In caſe God ſhall be pleaſed to deliuer the Iland and Caſtle of Ormuz into the hands of the Perſian by our aide, the moitie of the ſpoile and purchaſe of both to remaine to the Engliſh, the other moitie to the Perſian. Secondly, The Caſtle of Ormuz to be deliuered to the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, with all the Ordnance, Armes and Munition thereto belonging, and the Perſian to build another for themſelues at their owne charges. Thirdly, The Cuſtomes to bee equally diuided, the Engliſh to bee for euer Cuſtome-free. Fourthly, That all Chriſtian Captiues ſhould be at the Engliſh diſpoſing, the Muſſelmans at the Perſian. Fiftly, The Perſian to bee at halfe the ſhips charge for victuall, wages, weare and teare, and to furniſh them at his charge with ſufficient Powder and Shot. Diuers other Articles were concluded to be preſented to the Chan; After his comming to Mina, Maſter Bell, and Maſter Monox, the eight of Ianuarie were ſent to him and entertained with a ſumptuous banket: a great feaſt and triumph was alſo made for the ioyfull newes of the Kings taking in of a great Countrie in Arabia, and of Aweiza the chiefe Citie of that Countrie.

Perſian victorie in Arabia.

The next day the Duke ſent his Viſier accompanied with Sabandar Sultan and Xareearee with anſwer to the former Articles: The firſt was approued: For the ſecond, the Caſtle ſhould be equally poſſeſſed by both till the Kings pleaſure were knowne. The third granted, prouided onely, that the Kings and Dukes goods from India ſhould alſo paſſe cuſtom-free. To the fourth, they made reſeruation of the two principall Captaines Ruy Frera Captaine of Kiſhme Caſtle, and Simon de Mela Captaine of the Caſtle of Ormuz, till the Kings pleaſure knowne. Other Articles agreed on, and ordered alſo that no change of Religion ſhould be admitted on either ſide; and charges of Powder and Shot to be diuided: The Duke and Maſter Bell ſigned, and preſently the Engliſh goods were laden on the Dukes owne Camels on fire coſt, which before no money could procure.

Note.

On the tenth we turned to Coſtack. We got aboord and acquainted the Commanders with the ſucceſſe of our Iourney, which being diuulged and made known amongſt the ſeuerall ſhips Companies, it ſeemes they conſulted together with one voice to refuſe the buſineſſe; the Londons companie beginning, fifty or ſixty appearing therein, Captaine Blithe taking much paines to ſuppreſſe their diſorder, and in the end preuayling with them, they promiſing to goe whither he would. The other ſhips in a day or two were in like oppoſition, alleaging it was no merchandizing buſineſſe, nor were they hired for any ſuch exploit, nor could hee tell whether it might not be a breach of the peace (ſaid a fauourer of that Religion) till proteſts being made againſt each ſhips companie, what with feare to loſe their wages, and promiſe of a moneths pay, they at laſt yeelded.

Oppoſition.

The nineteenth of Ianuarie we ſet ſayle toward Ormuz, where we arriued the two and twentieth, and that night anchored in ſight of the Towne, about two leagues from the Caſtle, in expectation that the Enemies Armada, conſiſting of fiue Galeons and ſome fifteene or twenty Frigats, would haue come forth to fight with vs. But they hailed ſo neere the Caſtle that wee could not come at them. Which we perceiuing, and vnderſtanding that our vowed Enemie Ruy Frera was in his new erected Caſtle of Kiſhme, the next day wee addreſſed our ſelues towards the ſaid Caſtle, where we arriued in fit time to ſaue both the liues and reputations of the Portugals, not able long to hold out againſt the Perſian ſiege, and willing rather to yeeld to vs. The firſt of February they yeelded both their perſons and Caſtle after many meetings and treaties into our poſſeſſion. The fourth, we ſet ſayle towards Gombrone, where we were royally feaſted by the Duke, who was diſcontent that Ruy Frera was not deliuered to him, nor ſome of the Moores, contrarie to my liking, eſpecially for the Moores: the Duke diſſembling his diſcontent, in regard of further need of our helpe at Ormuz, and after his feaſt veſting all the Engliſh preſent according to their qualitie.

Kiſhme Caſtle yeelded.

Gombrone.

The ninth of Februarie we ſet ſayle towards Ormuz with about two hundred Perſian Boats great and ſmall with two Frigats in our companie, and in them fiue and twenty hundred or three thouſand Perſian Souldiers of all ſorts, and anchored that night about two leagues from the Caſtle. The next day before noone the Perſians were all landed, and marched in a confuſed manner towards the Citie, which they entred as farre as the Mydan or Market place without meeting reſiſtance. Which Market place they found barricadoed againſt them, and defended with Shot and Pike of the Portugals. But the Perſians ſoone made way, and the Portugals like ſo many ſheepe tooke their heeles into their Caſtle. One Perſian onely which firſt entred was ſlaine with a Pike, and he which ſlue him loſt his head in the Market place, his heeles being too heauy to carrie it away. Some eight or ten more, found ſcattered in ſeuerall houſes of the Citie, were in the ſame places executed.

Ormuz beſieged.

The Citie forſaken.

The Perſian Generall named Einam culibeg at his firſt entrance into the Citie placed his Captaines and Souldiers in ſeuerall places of the Citie, and proclaimed vpon paine of death euery man to looke to his quarter, and none to fall on pillaging. Which ſome infringing were ſeuerely executed: he hanged ſome, cut off eares and noſes of others, and others he baſtonadoed euen for trifles. Yet within two or three dayes after ſhops and houſes were broken open, and euery man wearied with carrying and recarrying ſpoiles all day, and ſleeping ſo ſecurely at night, that eaſily the Portugals in a ſallie might haue ſlaine many. The ſame night we entred, I tooke poſſeſſion of a very commodious houſe to ſettle a factorie there, which for conuenience of roomes I think exceeds any Factorie the Companie hath. But on the thirteenth it proued too hot for me, being ſet on fire in the night by one of the Maſters mates of the Whale with other his Conſorts after I was in bed, careleſly with Candles romaging for pillage, and firing a roome in which were goods giuen me by the Generall. But the winde fauoured vs, ſo that the houſe was not conſumed. When I conſider the ſtrength of the Citie, and almoſt of euery houſe, being a little Caſtle, I cannot but maruell that the Portugall would ſo ſoone abandon the ſame. But it ſeemes they feared the Perſian would haue intercepted their way to the Caſtle, or that the Moores their neighbours would haue betrayed them.

Strength of Ormuz.

The foure and twentieth of February our men by a ſtratagem of fire burned the Saint Pedro, quondam Admirall of Ruy Freras Fleet, which indangered all the reſt, but the Tide carried her off to Sea; and her Reliques by the Arabs and other Countrie Boats were towed on ſhoare at Gombrone, and ſome Iron Ordnance and Shot taken out of her burnt Carkaſſe. At this exploit the Duke much reioyced. The ſeuenteenth of March the Perſians hauing placed aboue forty barels of Powder in a Mine which they had made vnder one of the Flankers of the Caſtle, fired the ſame, and blew vp the corner of the wall making a faire breach, where they gaue a fierce aſſault till nine at night. But the Portugals made a manfull defence, and with Powder pots, ſcalding Lead, and other fiery inſtruments did much hurt to the aſſailants, burning, ſcalding, ſtoning many. Sha Culibeg notwithſtanding, with two hundred of his moſt reſolute men get vp into one of the Flankers, which they maintayned at leaſt three houres, but in the end were fired out, the Portugals beſtowing Powder pots as liberally as if they had come from Hell mouth. The ſame day the Citie was ſet on fire in diuers places, as it was reported, by the Generals command, for that the Arabs lurked therein, and could not be gotten forth to doe any ſeruice. Wee lay here foure or fiue thouſand men in a barren Iland which yeelds nothing but Salt of it ſelfe, and I knowe not what policy the Generall had to ſend away all the Rice, and our prouiſion for victuall and water wholly to depend on the Continent, ſo that if a Fleet of Frigats had come, as was expected, they muſt haue famiſhed in the Iland; the Countrie Boats not daring to aduenture to and from the Maine. The raine water in Ciſternes abroad daily waſted and waxed barkiſh, no care being taken to fill therewith the Iarres and Ciſternes whiles it is good, prouided almoſt in euery houſe for that purpoſe. The Perſians are ignorant of the art of warre, for they entred without feare or wit and loſt with ſhame what they might haue maintayned with honour. Other defects I obſerued in the very ſinewes of warre, ſuch that I cannot but wonder that one of the wonders of our age Sha Abas ſhould ſend ouer an Armie ſo weakly prouided of money, armes, munition, ſhips and all neceſſarie furniture. For the firſt, I thinke the Dukes treaſure was conſumed in one moneths pay vnto our ſhips, and I feare we ſhall ſtay for the reſt till money be made of the ſpolle. For Armes and Munition they haue no other then ſmall ſmall Pieces, Bowes and Arrowes, Swords by their ſides, and ſome of their chiefes haue Coates of Maile: Powder ſo ſcarce that after blowing vp the Caſtle they had ſcarcely Powder to plie their ſmall Shot to enter the breach, and yet were furniſhed with twentie or fiue and twentie Barrels from our Ships. They had not one ſcaling Ladder to helpe their entrance. Sould wee forſake them, they would ſoone be at a ſtand, and yet they haue broken Conditions with vs in ſeuerall things: and yet I feare when all is done, wee ſhall bee ſerued with reuerſions and what themſelues pleaſe.

Portugals ſhips ſunke.

Till the three and twentieth, our Ordnance from the ſhore ſo galled the Vice-admirall and Reere-admirall of Ruy Freras Fleet, that they and the Galley are all three ſunke cloſe vnder the Caſtle wall; and the laſt night the Admirall that came laſt from Goa, yeelded her broad ſide to the mercy of the water, hauing learned the ſame of her Conſort who the night before ſhewed her the way, and ſo all the Portugall Armado are come to ruine: Theſe two laſt Ships I thinke were voluntarily loſt by the Captaines policy, to leaue the Portugals without meanes to eſcape the more manfully to fight it out. Some thinke they ſunke by hurts receiued from ſunken Rockes in haling them ſo neere to the Caſtle to be out of danger from our Ordnance; and others, by leakes from our Shot: how euer we ſaw the deſtruction of them that were deſigned instruments for ours; for which great mercy of the moſt High towards vs moſt ſinfull men, his holy Name be euer praiſed and magnified.

Portugall Treatie.

March the ſeuen and twentieth, newes was brought me that ſome of the Portugals were come out of the Caſtle to treat of Peace, whereupon I made my repaire vnto the Generals Tent to vnderſtand the truth of the buſineſſe where I found our two Commanders ſitting, by whoſe countenance I well perceiued that my comming was not very welcome vnto them. But to requite them before our departure, both they and I perceiued that neither of our being there was acceptable to the Perſian. Yet there we ſate almoſt an houre in expectation of the Portugals comming, which was purpoſely deferred in hope we would haue auoyded, but Night approaching, and the Perſian perceiuing we purpoſed to ſtay the Meſſengers comming, at length he was brought in. Who entring rudely without any great complement, deliuered as extrauagant a Speech or Meſſage, yet with a kind of forced voyce as though he had been the prologue to ſome Play. The effect of his Speech was this: His Captaine had ſent him to kiſſe the hands of the Generall, and to know how he did, (this was his Complement) and for what cauſe hee moued this Warre againſt him, for the Portugals were the Perſians friends, and ſo had beene for many yeeres, and now for ſo ſmall a matter, onely for a Well or two of Water that ſo great Warre ſhould bee made, and the antient League and friendſhip which had beene betwixt their King and the King of Perſia, and the people of both Nations ſhould bee extinguiſhed. Beſides, his Captaine nor the Inhabitants of Ormus, was not to bee blamed for what Ruy Frera had acted at Kiſhme, yet were they willing ſo farre as might ſtand with the Honour of their King to purchaſe their Peace: which they need not doe either through feare or want, for they had within their Caſtle one thouſand able men, and prouiſions both of Victuals and Water to ſerue them for many moneths. Beſides, they expected daily new ſuccours from Goa. And if the Perſian did thinke to get the Caſtle by force, hee would find it a hard matter to accompliſh: for they were reſolued to Fight it out to the laſt man.

Perſian doubting.

Cauſe of the Warre, Portugals intruſion on the Perſian, by Ruy Frera at Kiſhme, &c.

The later part of which ſpeech being onely Portugall brauadoes, was not pleaſing to the Perſian. Wherefore the Generall willed him to declare the cauſe of his comming, to which hee anſwered, his Captaines deſire was to know what the Perſian would haue. To which the Perſian replied he would haue their Caſtle, and that was it he came for. With which ſpeech the Meſſenger was diſmiſſed (without ſo much as being offered a cup of wine, had not I cauſed one to bee giuen him) but notwithſtanding, what is here related, I cannot be perſwaded but he came with a more ſubſtantial meſſage then he deliuered, which he omitted by reaſon of our being there, wherunto he was formerly inſtructed by Sha Cullibeg, in whoſe houſe hee was at leaſt an houre before he was brought to the Generall. Wherefore I feare ſome ſiniſter dealing of the Perſian, which in fiue dayes will bee diſcouered: the Portugall diſmiſſed. Our Captaines by their Interpreters moued priuately their priuate buſineſſe to the Generall, to which he gaue no great eare, but in concluſion his anſwer was, they would deferre that buſineſſe till ſome other time: yet himſelfe had written to them in great haſte, that day to furniſh him from the ſhips with a quantitie of powder, that night to attempt the blowing vp of the Caſtle: for their mines were all readie, and they wanted nothing but powder. Which requeſt of his, our Captaines were ſo forward to conſent vnto, that preſently they brought on ſhoare foure and thirtie barrells of powder, for which their forwardneſſe I feare the companie at home will giue them but little thankes.

Another treatie.

The eight and twentieth ditto. I went in companie of the Commanders to the Generals Tent for that wee vnderſtood two chiefe men of the Portugals were in Sha Cullibeg his houſe, where they had beene in conference with the Perſian foure or fiue houres; vnto which treatie none of vs were called, nor by any meanes made acquainted with it, which encreaſed our ſuſpition of the Perſians fraudulent dealing with vs. Wherefore comming vnto the Generall, wee made knowne our diſlike of the manner of proceeding, for wee were partakers in this warre with you, wherein wee had hazarded our liues, ſhips, and Merchants goods: beſides the hinderance wee ſustaine by the loſſe of our Monſon : and as wee were partakers and aſſociates with them in the vndertaken enterpriſe, wee ought likewiſe to be of Counſell with them in all treaties and proceedings, and therefore deſired to know what they had done, or what they entented to doe, to which he anſwered they had done nothing, neither would he ſo much as drinke a cup of water without acquainting vs therewith; which was a prettie complement where all his actions ſhewed nothing leſſe. But we muſt bee content to vndergoe all with patience, yet were it not for our Merchants and their goods that are in the countrie, and ſubiect to whatſoeuer they will impoſe vpon them, wee could remedie this buſineſſe well enough, and bring the Perſian nolens volens vnto another reckoning : but we are tied from that, and therefore muſt of neceſſitie be ſubiect to accept the meaſure they pleaſe to lay vpon vs, which I feare will proue vnmeaſurable ill : yet they tell vs all things ſhall be to our owne content, but howſoeuer, it is vied and muſt now be ſeene. About noone this preſent day, ſeeing many pike and ſhot, all Arabs in the ſtreet, which formerly I haue not ſeene ſo armed, deſiring to know the cauſe, at length I perceiued they were ranged on both ſides the ſtreet, called the Mydan or Market place, where ſhortly after paſſed two Caualiers of the Portugals, attended with their Pages and Seruants, to the number of ſixe or eight, whereof one carried a faire Quintaſol ouer the two Caualiers, who were accompanied by Sha Cullabeg and other chiefe men of the Perſians, and conducted to the houſe of Agariza of Dabul : whither though vnſent for, or vninuited, I alſo addreſſed my ſelfe, where vnexpected, I found the Perſian Generall accompanied with other chiefe men, his Aſſiſtants and Counſell, into whoſe preſence I entruded my ſelfe. The Generall gaue mee a kind welcome, and cauſed mee to ſit downe next vnto him, which I would not refuſe, for that the Portugall ſhould ſee our Nation was in grace and fauour with them, where being ſet, hauing done my dutie to the Perſians firſt, I after ſaluted the Caualiers which was requited with like complement; with whom I had ſome diſcourſe of matters nothing pertaining to the preſent occaſion, for that I would not preſume to talke of that, till the Perſian himſelfe did firſt miniſter the occaſion : which was not before wee had eaten a Perſian collation of Pilaw, &c. Which being done, the Generall demanded the Portugals what was their requeſt or deſire, to which they anſwered, the Captaine of the Caſtle had giuen them inſtructions in writing but his deſire was they ſhould propound the ſame vnto the Duke himſelfe, if they might bee permitted to goe vnto him, who is now at Gombrone. To which the Generall replied, it was more then he durſt doe without firſt acquainting the Duke therewith, by which I well perceiued they were onely delayes and diſtractions on both ſides, and to gaine time for effecting their ſeuerall deſignes. Then the Portugals proceeded to their vſuall complayning againſt Ruy Frera, as if Ruy Frera as a priuate man and without order from the King his maſter had preſumed to doe that which he had done, and to excuſe themſelues, demanded what reaſon or iuſtice it was to puniſh the Father for the Childrens offence : beſides the matter in it ſelfe was ſmall, onely for a Well of water or two, to which the Perſian Generall replied againe, let the cauſe be what it would, they had moued warre againſt the King of Perſia and his Subiects, for which their Caſtle of Ormus muſt make ſatisfaction : wherefore if without more bloudſhed they would ſurrender their Caſtle and come forth into the Citie, they ſhould finde good quarter and bee well vſed; to which the Portugals made anſwere, they had no Commiſſion from their Captaine to treat of any ſuch matter, with which they were diſmiſſed. Notwithſtanding the deniall was made to the Portugals requeſt for going to the Chan, yet the ſame night they had Licenſe and were ſent vnto him to treat their buſineſſe with his Excellencie. The certaintie of the Treatie I had no meanes to know, yet what I heard reported ſhall be here inſerted. Firſt, their demand was that the Duke would vouchſafe to withdraw his Siege from their Caſtle and ſuffer them to enioy the ſame as in former times, in conſideration whereof they would giue him two hundred thouſand Tomans in hand, and alſo the rent annually they had in former times giuen to the King of Ormus out of the reuenue of the Cuſtome houſe; which as hath beene reported vnto mee is but one hundred and fortie thouſand Rials of eight per annum, but ſome report, they offer the Chan beſides the two hundred thouſand Tomans in hand, as much yeerely; and his demand was fiue hundred thouſand Tomans in hand (which amounteth to 172413. pounds ten ſhillings ſeuen pence ſterling, or thereabouts) the yeerely rent of two hundred thouſand Tomans.

Note: the Engliſh enforced by preſent occaſions to engage themſelues in this warre.

Third treatie.

The ſecond of Aprill, the Perſian with the ayde of the Engliſh did blow vp two other Mines, with which was made a very faire and paſſable breach, wherein they might haue entred without any great difficultie : but there was no aſſault giuen thereunto at all. The paſſage of this buſineſſe being well obſerued, Captaine Weddell and my ſelfe made our repaire to the Perſian Generall, to vnderſtand his purpoſe and reſolution; who to excuſe the backwardneſſe of his people in not aſſaulting the Breach, told vs it was very difficult and not to bee entred; of which we were contented to giue him the hearing, howbeit we were offered the contrarie, for that an Engliſh youth who is ſeruant to the Maſter of the Ionas, more bold then any Perſian, went vp the breach to the very top of the Caſtle wall : who told vs the way was as eaſie as to goe vp a paire of ſtayres, and ſpacious enough for many men to goe vp a breſt. Wherefore wee demanded to know his reſolution for further proceeding : who told vs within three dayes he would be fitted for another Mine, and I beleeue it well; for his mining is for Gold, not to make breaches vnleſſe it bee breach of promiſes vnto vs, which he can doe daily ; for of late they performe with vs in iuſt nothing, yet all this cannot warne vs to be circumſpect to looke vnto our ſelues.

The greateſt hurt the Portugall did vnto the Perſian in aſſaulting the Caſtle was with Powderpots, wherewith many were ſcalded and burnt : for preuention whereof, the Chan hath now ſent ouer ſtore of Coates and Iackets made of Leather, which indeed are nothing ſo ſubiect to take fire as are their Callieo Coats bumbaſted with Cotton wooll. But as the Engliſh prouerbe is, The burnt Child dreads the fire, for notwithſtanding their Leather coates, there was none ſo hardie to attempt the breach that is now made (albeit much more eaſier to enter then the laſt was) further then to pillage certaine balls of Baſtas and other ſtuffes which were fallen downe from the Baricado, the Portugals made for their defence againſt the Perſians ſhot : in this aduenture one loſt both his armes taken away with a great ſhot, by which meanes hee was faine to come backe againe without any Baſtas or other Pillage.

Pitifull pillage

The fifth of Aprill, newes was brought to the Generall of 100500. manes powder then arriued from Bahrine. The twelfth ditto came a Portugall vnto the Perſian Generall who eſcaped out of the Caſtle, and declared the great wants and weake eſtates the Souldiers were in generall, inſomuch that daily did die ſix, ſeuen or eight of the Flux, which is chiefely occaſioned through drinking their corrupt water. For the ſmall quantitie of water which they haue in their Ceſternes, is growne ſo brackiſh and ſalt, that it infects them all with the Flux, and beſides the badneſſe of it they are put to ſuch ſtrait allowance that many die with thirſt. Beſides for victuall, they haue onely Rice and ſalt Fiſh, two very good preparatiues to a Cup of good drinke if they had it. Notwithſtanding all which the Perſian deferres, yea I may ſay waſteth time in making new Mines, whereof hee hath no leſſe then three in hand at this preſent, as if he would blow vp all the Caſtle wall round about before hee will make his entrie. The twelfth at night one of our Frigots namely the Londons, being appointed to her quarter for keeping in of the Portugall Frigots, that none of them ſhould make eſcape riding ſingle and alone by her ſelfe, the Portugals perceiuing it, ſent off two of her Frigots which clapped her aboord but found her too hot for their handling, and therefore forſooke her ; with what hurt to themſelues I know not, but of the Londons men were ſlaine two outright, and ſeuen more hurt and wounded. And had not their blackes that rowed the Frigot forſaken them, they would haue put hard to haue ſurpriſed the ſurpriſers.

The fourteenth Ditto, the Perſian ſprung another of his Mines wherewith a very enterable breach was made but no aſſault giuen, nor yet ſhew of entrie made : but the troth is, hee was forced to blow vp the Mine before his time. For the Portugall from within the Caſtle was come ſo neere vnto him, that hee was in doubt he would haue defeated the ſame before he could place his powder. The fifteene Ditto, came another fugitiue from the Caſtle who confirmed the report of the others who came from thence in like manner before, and with all how the two Frigots which fought with our ſingle Frigot aboue mentioned, came from Muſcat wherein was the deceaſed Don Franciſco de Soſa, late Captaine of the Caſtle his ſonne, who came purpoſely to fetch away his Mother and other women that are in the Caſtle. Thoſe Moores in the Caſtle of Kiſhme who yeelded themſelues into our hands vpon the inſtant requeſt of the Generall, were (partly with their owne conſent) deliuered vnto him, whom hee promiſed ſhould haue pardon for the errour they had fallen into, to ſerue the Portugals againſt their owne King and Countrey, and that they ſhould alſo be prouided for and haue imployment in the then intended expedition for Ormus. Which promiſe of his both to them and vs in their behalfes, hee ſeemed to ratefie by vſing ſome of the principals in our preſence and gracing them by other ſeeming curteſies : notwithſtanding all which, the next morning hee cut off eightie of their Heads, and thoſe which he had made ſo fine in new Veſts to the number of fiue or ſixe of the principall, he ſent them ouer to Coombrone to the Duke, by him to receiue their fatall Sentence: Which was not long deferred, but they were made to drinke of the ſame Cup their fellowes had formerly drunken of. Meer Senadine who was the chiefe Captaine of them, was executed by the hands of Sherie Allie Gouernour of Moguſtan, who had married his Daughter, which hee performed vpon his Father in law with as much willingneſſe as if he had beene his mortall Enemie.

Moores at laſt deliuered according to couenant.

Perſian perfidie

The ſeuenteenth Ditto, they ſprung another Mine adioyning to the firſt Mine was ſprung, wherein was placed about ſixtie Barrels of Powder, which tooke not the effect which was expected, for it flew out at the ſide and carried part of the Wall out with it, but ſtrucke nothing at all vp vpward, whereby the firſt breach was very little bettered, which was the thing the Perſian aymed at, yet was it ſufficient to giue him encouragement to make his ſecond aſſault, which was done with at leaſt two thouſand Souldiers, who very reſolutely ranne vp the breach into a part of a Bulwarke which they might wholly haue poſſeſſed that very inſtant, had they not at firſt made ſuch haſte to runne their reſolution out of breath ; inſomuch that onely eight or ten Portugals and a few Negros, made them onely with their Rapiers to giue ground and to retire themſelues vnto the very outward skirt of the Bulwarke, where they had not roome for fortie men men to ſtand in the face of their Enemie, yet there they barracadod themſelues. Which before they could effect to their purpoſe, the Portugall plyed two or three Pieces of Ordnance from one of his Flankers that lay open vnto them, in ſuch ſort, that they ſent ſome ſcores of them to carrie newes vnto their Prophet Mortus Ali, that more of his Diſciples would ſhortly be with him. Which accordingly was effected and proceeded chiefely out of their owne ignorance and daſtardly Cowardiſe; for had they not made their ſtand in that place, but entred pell-mell with the Portugals into the Caſtle, with the loſſe of halfe thoſe men they loſt that day, they might haue gayned the Victorie, and with much leſſe paine vnto themſelues, who from that time the Mine was blowne vp (which was about nine of the clocke before Noone) the whole day ſtood ſtocking together in the Sunne without either meat or drinke, which was ſufficient to haue killed halfe of them; notwithſtanding the Portugals made very ſlender reſiſtance. The moſt that was done was by the Negroes, whom the Portugals did beat forwards to throw powder Pots, with which many of the Perſians were pittifully ſcalded and burnt. Had I not ſeene it, I ſhould hardly haue beleeued that ſuch had beene the groſſe ignorance of the Perſian, that hauing two breaches, the one not much inferiour to the other for his entrance, that he would apply all his Souldiers to the aſſault of the one and none at all to the other. Beſides hauing prouided at leaſt eightie or a hundred ſcaling Ladders, neuer ſo much as brought one of them neere vnto the Caſtle walls. But ſuch as their proceedings are, ſuch is alſo like to be their ſucceſſe. For his Souldiers hang in a cluſter vpon the breach iuſt as a ſwarme of Bees vpon a tree or buſh that want a Hiue; or like a flocke of Sheepe at a gappe, where none is ſo hardie to enter, and the Portugals to put them out of that paine gleaneth away foure, fiue, ſixe, ſometimes more at a ſhot; inſomuch that I cannot but pittie them to ſee it.

The eighteenth Ditto, the Perſian continued his aſſault but with more paines to himſelfe then hurt vnto the Portugals. The laſt night two Captiue Negroes made ſignes vnto the Perſian that they were deſirous to come vnto them, ſo the Perſians let downe ropes vnto them and ſo plucked them vp vnto them, who declared that the Captaine of the Caſtle had gotten a hurt on his head with a Stone, and how there were not aboue a hundred Souldiers in the Caſtle able to manage their Armes, their water growne ſcant and daily worſe and worſe, which alſo increaſed mortalitie amongſt them: how there is likewiſe difference among themſelues, being of different opinions, ſome holding it beſt to aduenture their eſcape by Sea with thoſe Frigots they haue, others are contrary minded, and hold it more honour to ſell their liues at the deareſt rate and defend their Caſtle ſo long as they may, and when they can no longer, then to put their Women and Children with all their treaſure into a houſe, and blow them all vp with Gunpowder (that the Turkes ſhould neither inioy their wealth nor abuſe their Wiues) which done, they would thruſt themſelues pell-mell with the Perſians, and ſo end their dayes.

Portugals poore eſtate.

Deſperate Counſels.

The nineteenth Ditto, at Euen being the third day the Perſian that had lien reſting himſelfe in the breach, neuer offering to aduance himſelfe, did then ſet forward; whereby he got himſelfe better footing and poſſeſſed himſelfe of all the Bulwarke, and forced the Portugall to forſake the ſame and retire himſelfe further within the Caſtle: in which conflict many of the Portugals were wounded and ſcalded with fire Pots, wherein the Perſian is now as cunning as themſelues, though many of them haue payed deare for their learning. In the ſaid conflict were likewiſe foure Portugals ſlaine and their heads brought before the Generall to witneſſe the ſame. Wherein all the Perſians are very well ſeene; for I doe not thinke there is any Hangman in all Germanie that can goe beyond them in that Art; for he no ſooner layeth hold on his enemie, but preſently at one blow with his Sword, off goeth his head, and then with his Knife he thruſts a hole either in the Eare or through one of the Cheekes, and ſo thruſting his finger in at the mouth and out at the hole in the cheeke, brings ſometimes two, three, or foure of them before the Generall together, in ſuch ſort that not a Butcher in Eaſt-cheape could doe it better. But if (as commonly it happeneth) that theſe Heads of their Enemies ſo taken in the warres be ſent to the view of the King or Chan, then are they no leſſe cunning to flea off the skinne of the whole head and face and ſtuffe the ſame with Straw like a football, and ſo ſend them by whole ſackfuls together. This night one of the Frigots that came from Muſcat for the Donna Soſa, made her eſcape and got away, no doubt very richly fraighted. Her conſort was chaſed in againe, which was likewiſe going: that which eſcaped, being haled by the Arab Boates, that lay in wayte to intercept their going, vſed the Watchword vſuall betwixt the Engliſh and Arabs, which was onely Ingres Ingreſſes; which Watchword hath neuer beene changed nor once altered ſince our firſt attempting the buſineſſe. Wherin both Perſians & Engliſh are much to be blamed; for by the common vſe of that one Watchword, the Portugals haue come to the knowledge of it, and haue made good vſe of it to their owne benefites, which is their gayne and our loſſe.

Quanto doctior tanto nequior. Yet this is the Perſians praiſe that they are good Swordmen, the Turks fearing to come to handblowes with them.

Frigot eſcapeth.

The twentieth Ditto at night, the other Frigot aboue mentioned offering to eſcape, was taken by the Londons men in her Frigot and Pinnace. She was ſent to carry away the Almirante named Luis de Britto, a kinſman of the Viceroy of Goa, whom the Captaine of the Caſtle would not ſuffer to depart: wherefore the Portugals which were taken in her, being fearefull of the ſucceſſe of the Caſtle, and that it was not able long to hold out, for ſafetie of their owne liues being ſeuen perſons, held it their beſt courſe to aduenture their eſcape in the ſaid Frigot, and in the night ſtole her away, and were taken as aboue mentioned. The one and twentieth Ditto, the Perſian made preparation and ſhew, as if at once they would make ſhort worke to poſſeſſe themſelues of the reſt of the Caſtle; but where we expected to ſee them put the ſame in execution, I perceiued that they and the Portugals were in parley together, wherefore I addreſſed my ſelfe to know the cauſe of ſo ſodaine an alteration; and as I was fitting my ſelfe to goe vnto the Perſian Generall for that purpoſe, I incountred a Meſſenger from our Engliſh Commanders who ſent me word, that a Boat from the Caſtle was gone with a Flag of truce aboord their Ships, and they deſired my company aboord with them to vnderſtand what the buſineſſe was; and comming aboord the London, found two Portugals with Letters from the Captaine of the Caſtle and from the Almirante, contayning, viz.

Parley.

THere hath beene ſuch antient friendſhip betwixt the Portugals and the Engliſh, that conſidering the Warres which at this preſent wee haue in this place, wee ought one to vnderſtand the other, for it ſeemeth to me when I ſee the Mines are made by the Moores, that onely by your ayde Warre is made againſt me, with which one of my Bulwarkes is gotten from me; wherefore your Worſhips would bee pleaſed to doe me the fauour to bee a meanes to make Peace betwixt me and thoſe Moores, if the ſame ſhall ſtand with their and your good liking, prouided it bee in that manner, that I loſe not my credit, neither your ſelues leaue to gaine Honour in a Time ſo fauourable vnto you; Thus not elſe our Lord keepe you, &c.

Symon de Mela Perera.

THis Fort is ſo beſet and oppreſſed, that the Moores require vs to deliuer the ſame vp on Compoſition, the which wee will not doe by any meanes, for when wee ſhall bee forced to make Compoſition wee will call your Worſhips: for it is not reaſon we ſhould treate with Moores where you are preſent. For wee hold it better to deliuer our innocent Women and other vnneceſſarie people, to the rigour of our Weapons, then to the clemencie of the Moores, and for that the knowledge hereof ſhould not bee wanting to your Worſhips, I haue written this beſides what accompanieth the ſame from the Captayne, and for what elſe you deſire to know, you may informe your ſelues from this Meſſenger, to whom you may giue the ſame credit as vnto my owne perſon, and ſo God keepe your Worſhips, &c. The firſt of May 1622.

De V.S. Luis de Brito Dareto.

The requeſt of the Portugals contayned in their ſeuerall Letters on the other ſide, being had to conſideration and commiſeration had of them as Chriſtians, it was reſolued to giue them a comfortable anſwer vnto their demands; which in effect was as followeth, but want of time the buſineſſe requiring expedition, would not permit to keepe Copie of the ſaid anſwers which was firſt vnto the Captaine Simon de Melles, to giue him notice of the receit of his Letter, and whereas the chiefe point therein was, that we would bee Tereeras for them to procure them ſuch conditions of agreement with the Perſians, as that might be to the ſauing of the liues of ſo many Chriſtian ſoules as were with him in the Caſtle; our anſwer was, that ſuch had beene our care to prouide for them, that it was in our owne power to grant that requeſt, which we were not onely ready to doe, but likewiſe to ſhew them any other curteſie, or performe any Chriſtian dutie towards them that might any way tend to their good. Therefore aduiſed him to ſet downe his Demands, and ſend the ſame vnto vs with as much breuitie as was poſſible, and to the like purpoſe and effect was our anſwer vnto the Almirant his letter, with which the two Meſſengers were diſpeeded in one of our owne Barges, who returned with another Letter both from the Captaine and Almirant, that viz. The neceſſitie of the buſineſſe ſo requiring the Commanders and my ſelfe, would not loſe ſo much time to write any other anſwer vnto the ſaid Letters, leaſt the Perſian ſhould take aduantage of the opportunitie, and ſodainly preſſe in vpon them and put them all to the Sword: wherefore we addreſſed our ſelues vnto the Perſian Generall, to be ſuiters vnto him in the diſtreſſed Chriſtians behalfe, that hee would hold his promiſe with them of a faithfull Truce for two dayes, in which time wee might treate with them of ſuch Conditions as ſhould bee as well behoouefull and beneficiall for the Perſian as for our ſelues, and that there might be no more effuſion of blood on either ſide. At length my ſelfe and a Perſian Gentleman with me, was appointed to goe with the Portugals to the Caſtle, and to treat the buſineſſe with the Captaine of the Caſtle, &c. And alſo they deſired that our Vice-admirall (Maſter Woodcocke) might come along with vs. So with conſent of the Generall we went all three of vs to the Caſtle gate, but were not admitted to goe in. Where wee met with Signior Leuis de Britto the Almirant of the Portugals, accompanied with fiue or ſixe Caualiroes but did not ſee the Captaine, for the truth is, the vnder Captaines and Souldiers had mutined againſt him and detayned him as Priſoner, ſo that all our Conference was onely with the Almirante, and his ſpeech chiefely addreſſed vnto Maſter Woodcocke our Almirant or Vice-admirall.

Engliſh Clemencie to the Portugals.

Mutinie in the Caſtle.

Meer Abel Haſſan, and Pulot Beg were after ſent to the Ship (where ſome had imbezled ſome treaſure) to requeſt their company & conference from the Chan. Comming on ſhoare to the Engliſh houſe, they began with a long ſpeech, how kindly the Duke did take the ſeuerall ſeruices and helpes we had giuen them in this their warre, and how the ſame in his part ſhould neither be forgotten, nor goe vnrewarded in a larger meaſure, then either he had promiſed, or was bound vnto. The next was to make knowne the Chans reſolution to proceede both to the inuaſion of Sware and Muſcat, and therefore that they ſhould not ſuffer the Portugals to depart vnto any of thoſe places. The third and laſt part of his ſpeech was moſt baſe and very diſhonourable, tending to this purpoſe, that we ſhould betray into their hands, after they were vnder our protection, the Captaine, and fiue or ſixe more of the principall of the Portugals, alleadging that it would be much to the Chans honour to haue them to preſent vnto the Sha Abas; which vilde diſhonorable motion, when I heard, I abſented my ſelfe, hating my eares for being guilty of the hearing of the ſame; and much more the tongue that could vtter ſo odious a buſineſſe; and for my farwell, told them, I would not be guiltie of ſuch a thing for the houſe full of Gold.

Perfidy and honeſty.

The 23. Ditto, the Portugals (whoſe meere neceſſity and pittifull eſtate wherein they were, had forced them to ſurrender their Caſtle vpon any conditions, whereby they might haue any hope at all to ſaue their liues, which ſtood then in great hazard to be ſpoiled by the Perſians) ſent this morning to giue notice vnto vs, they were contented to put themſelues into our hands, on condition that we ſhould giue them means to be tranſported either for Muſcat or India, which was promiſed them and Captaine Blith with my ſelfe went as hoſtages into the Caſtle, to ſee the ſetting of them out, and the Perſian promiſed that not one Souldier, or man of his, ſhould enter the Caſtle till they were diſpended and ſent away, and how that onely three of them and three of vs, or our people ſhould ſit at the gate to ſee that they ſhould carry nothing of valew with them: which on their parts was ſo neerely ſeene into, that moſt baſely they ſearched and abuſed the very women. But the King of Ormuz together with his rich Veſier, their Treaſure, women and ſeruants were all conueied ouer the wals or breach, and not an Engliſh man either called or ſuffered to ſee what they carried out with them: and not onely theſe, but all other Moores and Banyans with their Treaſure and beſt things, conueied forth the ſame way: yea, whole bales of goods, Cheſts, and Suppetas, with God knoweth what in them, carried ouer the breaches. And no ſooner were the Gates open to paſſe out the Portugals, but there was at leaſt fortie Perſians here and there in the Caſtle, yea and ſome of the ruder ſort of the Engliſh alſo, whoſe comming in I may iuſtly feare was cauſe the Perſians came in with them, iudging themſelues as worthy of that liberty as our people.

Perſians partialitie.

Raſcall rudeneſſe.

The 24. Ditto before noone, the Perſians and Engliſh began to pillage in ſuch ſort that I was both grieued and aſhamed to ſee it; but could deuiſe no remedie at all for it: the Perſians driuing out the ſicke, maimed, and burnt Chriſtians that were not able to helpe themſelues, that made my very heart to earne in my body to ſee it; and in the euening, the Chan in perſon came as it were in triumphing manner to ſee the Caſtle, and to view the great Ordnance, whereof there are neere vpon three hundred peeces of Braſſe, the moſt of them Cannon, Demicanon, Culuarin and Demiculuarin, part whereof were Ordnance belonging to the Gallions, the reſt belonging vnto the Caſtle; which purchaſe if wee can poſſeſſe, will be the greateſt matter will fall to our ſhare. This euening the Commanders and my ſelfe deſiring to remaine in poſſeſſion of the Church, whither wee had conueied ſome quantitie of Plate and money, for the better and ſafer keeping thereof from being imbezelled, our motion was vtterly denied by Pullot Beg, who told the Commanders in plaine tearmes, they might lye without the doores: whereat they grew in choler (as they had iuſt cauſe) and ſo we came all three of vs out of the Caſtle together: the Captaines went aboord their ſhippes, and my ſelfe to the Citie; but the Sea being vp, and want of a Boate ſtaied me at the Caſtle wals till it was neere midnight: at which time came no leſſe then ſixtie Perſians by their owne report, ſent by the Chan to watch that no Arabs ſhould come and conuey away any of the Ordnance that lieth vpon the Sea ſtrand; but I feare if the truth were knowne, their comming was to cut the poore Chriſtians throates, that lay at the Sea ſide for want of Boates to carrie them away, if they had not found them to be guarded by the Engliſh; or elſe to ſee that wee ſhould not conuey away any of the Ordnance aforeſaid: our chiefe buſineſſe this day was to ſee the poore Chriſtians diſpeeded out of the Caſtle, the greateſt number of them ſo weakened with ſeuerall ſorts of maladies, but chiefely with famine, and many ſo noyſome both to themſelues and others with their putrified wounds and ſcaldings with Gunpowder, and ſo pittifull were their ſeuerall complaints and cries, that it would haue moued a heart of ſtone to pittie them; yet ſuch was the dogged nature of the Perſians, that they droue them and hunted them out of the Caſtle like ſo many dogges, pillaging many of them to the very ſhirts. The 27. ditto at Euen, we licenſed the Portugall to depart to the number of 2500. men, women, and childen, to whom we gaue a paſſe to free them from moleſtation, in caſe they met with any of our ſhips at Sea: alſo our two priſes the Robert and Shilling to paſſe them in, with victuals and water neceſſary to the voyage; and beſides theſe, wee ſent away vpwards a hundred perſons maimed and ſicke, that could not be diſpeeded for want of ſhipping.

The King of Ormus was poore, and liued chiefly vpon his 140000. exhibition from the King of Spaine; and ſome helpes from the Cuſtome-houſe in reſeruation of ſome pettie Cuſtomes. In rumaging there amongſt his Papers was found this Letter written by him to the King of Spaine; the tranſlated Copie whereof I here preſent.

THe Letters which for three yeeres laſt paſt I haue written vnto your Maieſtie, both by Sea and Land are as yet vnanſwered, which I daily expect; for the ſame doth much import this Kingdome of Ormus and ſeruice of your Maieſtie, vnder whoſe protection I haue life and meanes thereof. In Iune laſt, 1620, arriued at this Fort the foure Galleons, of which is Captaine Generall Ruy frere Dandrada, who fitted himſelfe with all things neceſſarie to goe and attend the comming of the Engliſh Ships at Iaſques, which accordingly he did of whoſe ſucceſſe therin I ſhall not need to treate in particular, which is done by himſelfe by this Poſt, who is ſent at my charge and his; yet thus much I will ſay, this Gentleman laboured all that was poſſible to keepe the Engliſh from carrying away their ſilke, wherein hee performed the vttermoſt of his dutie, like a reſolute and valiant Captaine: but by tempeſt and ſtormie weather his Ships were more ſeparated then his enemies, by which occaſion they had opportunitie to carry away their ſilke, which coſt the life of their chiefe Commander, who was ſlaine in the fight, in which alſo died two of our Captaines.

An excuſe framed in behalfe of the Captain. You haue the ſtory ſup. l.5. The ſtorme was within their fearefull hearts.

By this occaſion, and in the time, the Captaine Generall was incumbred with the Engliſh, the King of Perſia commanded his Vaſſalls to ſend people into Arabia, to bring the ſame vnder his ſubiection, being without any to giue him impediment: Yet before they went I required the Captaine of this Fort, alſo the Veeder Dafazenda, to ſend ſome Frigats in fauour of the Arabs (who are your Maieſties Subiects) that might defend them: for without ſuch ayde it was not poſſible for them to defend themſelues: and for this effect came thither certain Xegues to demand ſuccour, which was not granted them; but the moſt the Captaine did, was to enioyne mee to ſend a kinſman of the Queene my wife, whom preſently I ſent, ſpending therein more then I was able or had to ſpare: yet his going was to no effect for want of Frigats, which onely might hinder the Boates wherein the Perſians paſſed ouer, for which cauſe this day the King of Perſia is become Lord of Arabia; and I alſo feare that verie ſhortly hee will come againſt this Fort, becauſe of all this Kingdome no more is left mee, ſaue onely this Iland of Salt without water to drinke: for all things pertaining to the ſuſtenance of mans life, come from ſuch places as the King of Perſia poſſeſſeth. The loſſe and ouerthrow of this Kingdome of Ormus proceedeth altogether from the Captaines your Maieſtie placeth therein, who for their particular intereſt, are content to diſſemble and conſent that the Kingdome bee taken, without coſt of bloud, or labour vnto the King of Perſia his Miniſters, and this is ſo apparent that I need not write thereof, but that which I will ſpeake with truth is, if that your Maieſtie bee pleaſed, that this Kingdome and Fort ſhall enioy either peace or meanes to ſubſiſt, you muſt ſend ſuch Captaines as are no Merchants, becauſe the Mariners which might ſerue in your Maieſties Nauie to keepe this ſtreit, are all imployed in the Captaines Ships and Frigats, which bee onely imployeth in Trade of Merchandiſe, in which Ships ſerue likewiſe the Souldiers of the Fort, inſomuch that many times it is left with very few. But ſo long as this continueth, there ſhall euer bee wanting both Mariners and Souldiers to your Nauy, to defend and keepe this Iland from the power of the King of Perſia, which at this day hath more then a thouſand Boates, and is commander of this ſtreit more then is your Maieſtie, and all by the fault of thoſe Captaines, which for twentie or fiue and twentie yeeres paſt haue ſerued in this place. Thoſe in former times contented themſelues with the gaine of fortie or 50000. Cruzados for their three yeeres ſeruice, but now they are not contented with 200000. Likewiſe in former times they had onely two Shippes when moſt, but now they haue foure and as many Frigats, and there is nothing wanting vnto them; but it ſeemeth not iuſt, that to ſatisfie the couetouſneſſe of one, who aymeth at nothing but his owne profit, the weale publike ſhould periſh, and that euery one ſhould haue but little that onely one may liue to inioy much. From hence is growne and groweth all the euills of this Kingdome, proceeding from ſuch Miniſters as are placed by your Maieſtie, granting vnto them the command, which heretofore the Kings my predeceſſours euer held. But I am now brought ſo low, and ſuch as are vnder mee, that we remaine altogether vnable to repaire the neceſſities that are daily offered, as appeareth by this of Arabia; by which your Maieſtie will bee forced to make warre, and continuall warre by Sea againſt this enemy, for that by Land you haue no power to conquer him, who is not contented with the taking away the firme Land of this Kingdome altogether, with the Iles of Barem and Kiſhme, but further, in confidence of his great number of Boats, hauing none to reſiſt him, hath taken from vs Arabia, which was the onely remedie of this Iland. Of the truth of what hath herein beene ſpoken, your Maieſties Ambaſſador Don Garcia de Sylua (God ſending him well to your Maieſtie) ſhall be a good witneſſe, to whoſe report I referre mee, and to all others which goe from hence; God keepe your Maieſty. Ormus the twelfth of February, 1621.

Courteſie is the daughter of Nobilitie, as euer it hath beene found in the Engliſh Caneleers, from which I inferre that in theſe occaſions may be drawne the ſame example, whereby in Europe may bee made publike your valours, and vnto his Maieſtie may bee preſented the great ſeruice vnto him is done: that from the eſtimation thereof may ariſe to bee made a good peace and conformitie, which wee will all write into India *to that effect, as miniſters of the ſame, if it ſhall ſeeme good vnto you. Let it bee graunted, that the warres and offences receiued therein prouoke a man to reuenge, notwithſtanding wee cannot deny vnto your Worſhips, and vnto all the reſt of your Company, how much we are indebted for the good intreatie ſhewed vnto theſe which yeelded themſelues vnto you: and it ſhall for euer liue in our memories thoſe benefits, for which when time and fortune ſhall miniſter occaſion, wee will indeuour to ſhew our ſelues gratefull with other, no leſſe tokens of loue due vnto a Nation, which euer haue been ſo affectionated towards vs: and euill be to him that hath cauſed diſcord betwixt vs, for it euidently appeareth how greatly the Engliſh and Portugall Nations doe loue together, and it doth well appeare wee doe all of vs adore one onely God, for notwithſtanding the warre, you doe vſe ſo many principles by the which it is not greatly to bee maruelled at, that in you there are ſuch good workes, and in vs ſuch a thankefulneſſe as may bee eternall, with a great deſire that all diſcord may ceaſe, and that wee may returne to the antient amitie in which I hope, and in the noble word and qualitie of your perſon and perſons, and for that I will not bee further troubleſome vnto your Worſhips, both in curing and ſuſtaining thoſe poore people that are with you, I haue ſent theſe foure Boates to fetch them away; and if it ſhall ſeeme good to your Worſhips, and the reſt with you, to continue your former courteſies vnto the end, in performing the word of Conquerours and Chriſtians, as formerly you haue done, now at this preſent to giue them a guard, that they may come ſafe from the Moores*; for that like yeelded people they haue neither Armour to defend themſelues, nor yet ſtrength to vſe them, if you like noble Conquerours giue them not conuoy; in* whoſe word I am confident: Thus as your ſeruant in what your Worſhips wil command mee, I reſt. Soar 27. of Iuly, 1622.

Powlet Beg the chiefe Commiſſioner, when the Engliſh exſpected to haue receiued 1200. Tomanes pay, hee made them more in his debt, the fruit of ſome Mariners priuate diſcourſe and imbezelling. The Engliſh returned demaunds of a greater ſumme due from the Perſian in like caſe. At laſt three moneths pay was allowed, and they ſhifted off from their other demands, hee forſooth, hauing no power thereto without the Cans Order. It is ſaid, that the Portugalls not onely kept the King bare, but tooke bribes of his ſubſtitutes in other Prouinces, to protect them from their lawfull King, whereby he was vſed more like a Portugall Slaue then an Arab King.

I haue heard that the Engliſh had for this ſeruice of the King of Perſia 20000. pounds.

After our buſineſſe ended, our miſery began, occaſioned by the vnſufferable heat, and partly by the diſorders of our owne people in drinking Rack, and vſing other exerciſes no leſſe hurtfull: whereby grew ſuch a mortalitie, that three fourths of our men were dangerouſly ſicke, and many died ſo ſuddenly, that they feared the plague, whereof yet no tokens appeared. This extremitie laſted but fourteene daies, in which time ſixe or ſeuen died euery day. After which it pleaſed God to ſtay it, and the reſt recouered.

This Perſian buſineſſe hath inuited, and almoſt enforced mee to remember our noble Perſian-Engliſh Sherlies, eſpecially the preſent honourable Embaſſadour Sir Robert Sherly, Count and Knight of the Empire, and therein aduanced to many priuiledges: of whom ſo much hath before beene occaſionally recited. I much deſired to haue obtained ſome Relations from his Lordſhip: but hauing late acquaintance, and hee much and weightie buſineſſe, which hee hath beene forced to attend farre from the Citie, I rather thought fit to inſert what by his humanitie and conference, I learned onely at one dinner with him (not knowing that I would publiſh what I then receiued) then not to imbelliſh theſe diſcourſes, with ſo Illuſtrious an Engliſh Trauellers Name and Memory.

CHAP. X.

A briefe Memoriall of the Trauells of the Right Hon. Sir ROB. SHERLY Knight, Count and Knight of the Sacred Empire, now Embaſſador from the Perſian King to His Maieſtie and other Chriſtian Kings.

AMongſt our Engliſh Trauellers, I know not whether any haue merited more reſpect then the Honorable, I had almoſt ſaid Heroike Gentlemen, Sir Anthony & Sir Robert Sherleys. And if the Argonants of old, and Gracian Worthies, were worthily reputed Heroricall for Europaan exploits in Aſia: what may wee thinke of the Sherley-Brethren, which not from the neerer Gracian ſhoares, but from beyond the Europaan World, Et penitus toto diuiſis Orbe Britannis; haue not coaſted a little way (as did thoſe) but pierced the very bowells of the Aſian Seas and Lands, vnto the Perſian Centre: and that not by a combination of Princes, as thoſe former; but (God directing their priuate Genius for publike benefit) to kindle a fire betwixt the two moſt puiſſant of both Aſian and Mahumetan Princes, that by their diuiſion and diuerſion of Turkiſh inuaſions, Chriſtian Princes, Countries, and States might bee indebted to their priuate vndertaking: Nor hath ten yeeres detained them at one Citie, or one voyage finiſhed their worthy indeuours, as theirs at Troy and to Colchos; but about twentie yeeres together, all Turkie hath groaned, in which ſhee hath loſt two millions of her vnhollawed * Children; remoter India, Moſcouia, Africa hath felt the Sherlian working, Poland, Spaine, the Emperour and Pope haue admired and adorned the Engliſh Name of Sherley. Theſe indeed, eſpecially Sir Robert (the ſubiect of our preſent Diſcourſe) I ſhall honour for that Diuina Palladis Arte, that Ulyſſean twentie yeeres trauell, and getting both Troies Palladium and Achilles his Armour; as alſo for Iaſonian ſowing the Dragons teeth indeed (beyond Poeticall Fables) whereby Mahumetans haue killed each others, whiles Chriſtendome might haue gotten the Golden Fleece, the vſuall fruit of peace. Let mee admire ſuch a Traueller, which trauells not of and for ſome vaine diſcourſe, or priuate gaine or skill, but ſtill trauelleth and is deliuered of the publike good, accounting his Countrey his Garden, Chriſtendome his Orchard, the Vniuerſe his Field, for this happy ſeed of publike beneficence. Who euer ſince the beginning of things and men, hath beene ſo often by Royall Employment ſent Embaſſadour to ſo many Princes, ſo diſtant in place, ſo different in rites? Two Emperours Rudolph and Ferdinand, two Popes Clement and Paul, twice the King of Spaine, twice the Polonian, the Muſcouite alſo haue giuen him audience. And twice alſo (which I laſt mention, as moſt knowne and at home, though not the leaſt for a borne ſubiect to be Embaſſadour to his Soueraigne) His Maieſtie hath heard his Embaſſage from the remote Perſian. I omit his employment from the Emperour Rudolph with the Perſian, his annuall pay of 5000. duckets, beſides other Imperiall graces. Noble attempt to goe meet the Sunne! and from the Weſt and North where he was borne, to viſit the Eaſt and South, and that both in ouerland Diameter firſt, and Sea circumference after, coaſting the Europaan and Aſian, compaſſing the African ſhores, piercing the Perſian Gulfe, and paſſing the Indus and Indian Continent, climbing the Candahar Hills, into, and ouer, and thorow and thorow Perſia; paſſing the Caſpian, and penetrating the Deſerts more then Tartarian fortie two daies together, thorow high-troubleſome graſſe, without the ſight of any man, but his retinue, and ſixtie perſons of his guard, each of which coſt him a Roble a day all that time: Extra Anni Soliſque vias, beyond, farre beyond both Tropikes, the Southerne Soldanian, the Northerne Ruſſian, the many many Tartar Hoords, the Mogoll Emperour, the treacherous Bulockes, the Goan Vice-roy, the ! but what ſhould I read a Geographicall Lecture in one mans trauells, in one mans Embaſſages ? Quæ regio in terris Sherlij non plena laboris ? Theſe haue ſeene him, and hee hath ſeene them with Eyes more then of a Traueller, more then his owne, Himſelfe being the Eyes of a mightie Monarch, which in his perſon viſited ſo many Countries, Cities, and Courts.

A Roble is about a Marke Engliſh.

The mightie Ottoman, terror of the Chriſtian World, quaketh of a Sherly-Feuer, & giues hopes of approching fates. The preuailing Perſian hath learned Sherleian Arts of War, and he which before knew not the vſe of Ordnance, hath now 500. Peeces of Braſſe, & 60000. Musketiers; ſo that they which at hand with the Sword were before dreadfull to the Turkes, now alſo in remoter blowes and ſulfurian Arts are growne terrible. Hence hath the preſent Abas won from the Turke ſeuen great Prouinces, from Derbent to Bagdat incluſiuely, and ſtill hath his eyes, mouth, and hands open to ſearch, ſwallow, and acquire more. In the renowmed battell with Cigala Baſſa, of 160000. 2000 onely remained to flee with the Generall, who yet would not remaine after that diſaſter, but by poyſon preuented domeſtike ſhame: and there did our Noble Countryman receiue three wounds, as a triple teſtimony of his loue and ſeruice to Chriſtendome. Great Abas, great by his Perſian Inheritance, is now made greater by Engliſh Merchants, Mariners, Souldiers, which aduanced his conqueſt of Ormuz, expelling thoſe Portugals which had denied the Engliſh trade in Perſia, from Perſian neighbourhood; and greateſt by victories againſt the Great Ottoman, moued thereto, aſſiſted and guided therein by the Engliſh Sherleys. And he againe hath gratified the Sherleyan name with competent reciprocall greatneſſe; not in titles of Honor, and honorable employments alone, but in rewards, THIS MANS BREAD IS BAKED FOR SIXTIE YEERES, being the formall words of his Royall Charter to him (which he that vnderſtandeth the Eaſterne phraſe of of daily bread in his pater noſter, knows how to interprete) with an explication added of the allowance to Him and his Aſſignes for that ſpace, whether he liueth himſelfe, or leaueth it to others inioying. The Great Mogol (whom he commends for the goodneſſe of his diſpoſition, of his owne naturall inclination not bloudy, but humane and bountifull; and for his yeerly pay to his Army of 44. millions of Crowns) entertained him liberally, offered him the pay of 400. Horſe if hee would ſerue him; which, had not fidelity and Perſian confidence preuented, hee had accepted; the zeale whereof, in ſome harſh reflection of wordes ſpoken ſomewhat too liberally againſt his Maſter, by him with like liberty retorted, ecclipſed the Mogolls beneuolence towards him, which otherwiſe might haue beene worth 50000. pounds, and neuertheleſſe was, in Elephants, huge maſſie Coines (inſcribed, Conſolation of Strangers) and other gifts, not leſſe valuable then eight or 9000. pounds. As for other Princes Reall and Royall acknowledgements of his loyall ſeruice to the Chriſtian affaires, I omit. But his high valuation with the Emperour Rudolph, I could not paſſe by, I hauing ſeene the Originall Imperiall Charter vnder the Great Seale, and ſubſcribed by the Emperor himſelfe. I haue ſeene alſo the Originall Breue of Pope Paulus Quintus, ſub annulo Piſcatoris, wherein the ſaid Pope doth conſtitute him Earle of the ſacred Laterano Palace, and Chamberlaine, with power to legitimate Baſtards, for which many thouſands at Goa were ſutors to him (ſuch is the Portugall diſſoluteneſſe in thoſe parts) the Archbiſhop there hauing vnder his hand acknowledged the ſaid Grant, beſides the priuiledges (allowances alſo annexed of ſo much bread, fleſh, fiſh, a crowne a day, &c.) But the Imperiall Grant (to me of more reſpect and validity) I haue here deliuered verbatim, tranſlated out of the Originall Latine, that his noble and great worth might by nobleſt and greateſt teſtimony bee acknowledged: the rather becauſe I haue ſeene the ſame Title giuen him by his Maieſty, in his Letters commendatory of the ſaid Noble Count to other Princes, and ſubſcribed with his Royall hand and name, Iacobus.

The Mogoll payeth 44. millios of crowns to his Army yeerly: beſides other expences, of which ſee ſup. in Cap. Hawkins.l.3.

R*Vdolphus* the Second, by the Diuine mercie Elect Emperour of the Romanes, Alwayes Auguſtus, and of Germanie, of Hungarie, Bohemia, Dalmatia, Croatia, Sclauonia, &c. King, Archduke of Auſtria, Duke of Burgundie, Brabant, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, &c. Marqueſſe of Morania, &c. Duke of Lucemburge, and of the higher and lower Sileſia, Wirtemberge and Teck; Prince of Sueuia, Earle of Habſpurge, Tirol, Terret, Kiburge and Goritia. Landgraue of Alſatia. Marqueſſe of the holy Romane Empire, of Burgonie, and of the higher and lower Luſatia; Lord of the Marches of Sclauonia, the Port of Naon and Salines, &c. To the Noble and of Vs entirely beloued Count Robert Sherley Knight and Earle of the ſacred Palace of Laterane, of Our Cæſars Court, and Imperiall Conſiſtorie. The aſſigned Embaſſador vnto Vs of the moſt Renowmed Lord and Prince Abbas, King of Perſia, the Medes and Armenia, Our Imperiall Grace, and all happineſſe. As the moſt reſplendent beames of the Sunne, doe illuminate with their light the whole World, and refreſh the ſame, giuing vigour and increaſe to the inferiour bodies: So the Emperour of the Romanes being placed in the height of dignitie by Almightie God (whoſe Maieſtie as full of the light of honours and dignities is reſplendent amongſt all men) doth of himſelfe ſpread farre and neere the beames of his bountie, eſpecially vpon thoſe who doe ennoble their owne worthy vertuous Race by excellent deſerts of the Common-wealth and their Soueraignes: Therefore not only for this cauſe, that themſelues may reioyce, hauing obtained by deſert theſe honours from the Imperiall Maieſtie, but that their Poſteritie and others being allured and inflamed with theſe examples and beginnings, may apply their mindes to the moſt faire attempts of vertue and glory.

Whereupon, we by the appointment and prouidence of the moſt mightie God, being placed in this high top of Our Imperiall Throne, are deſirous to obſerue the worthy Ordinances of Our Predeceſſors, as well herein as in all other things, that We might entertaine with all fauour and clemencie, men excellent and famous for their vertue, and ſuch as teſtifie their good will to Vs, and their ſingular loue and zeale towards the Sacred Empire, and Our noble houſes of Auſtria and Burgundie.

Conſidering therefore the excellent parts of your mind, and wit wherwith you are endued. As firſt being born of ſuch Parents, and ſuch a race in England, who by birth themſelues are noble, and beſides, haue borne place and dignitie in that Kingdome: You haue from your Child-hood reſolued not to degenerate from them, but by inſiſting and following their ſteps, and applying your ſelfe to the ſtudie of vertue and honourable actions, that you might not only keepe and maintaine ſafe and ſound your reputation at home, but by your owne actions and deſerts, more and more adorne and aduance the ſame, which you haue ſo farre forth performed, that when you had ſerued by Sea and Land in ſundry places for certaine yeeres, and had trauelled through many Kingdomes, and vndertooke with a couragious minde a Iourney into Perſia, and together with your Brother Anthonie Sherley, to the good of all Chiſtendome, encouraged that King to vndertake that Warre which he did againſt the Turke valiantly and reſolutely, which very happily fell out for Vs in Our Hungarian Warre: and moreouer, ſince you with your ſaid Brother Anthonie haue procured and brought to paſſe, that the ſaid King of Perſia hath ſent vnto Vs ſundry Embaſſages, which partly the chiefe of Perſia, partly your Brother and your ſelfe haue performed, and haue vſed all the meanes to make a league, and procure Amitie betweene Vs and his Maieſtie, and haue omitted nothing euen in your owne priuate thoughts and cares, whereby you might procure fit occaſions for Our Warre from farre places: We haue thought you worthy for theſe commendable Seruices to bee graced by vs by ſome notable teſtimony of Our fauour, and Imperiall bountie, as We thinke may be an Ornament to your Kindred and Poſteritie.

Therefore out of Our owne proper motion, out of Our owne certaine knowledge, with a deliberate minde, and out of the fulneſſe of Our Imperiall Authoritie, We haue made, created, and ordained you the aboue named Robert Sherley a true and a lawfull Knight, and haue receiued you to the ſtate, degree and honour of Knighthood, and haue adorned and inueſted you with the Robes and Enſignes of the Girdle, Chaines, Rings, Spurres, and other Ornaments appertayning to the Order of Knighthood according to Our cuſtome, as by the force of theſe preſents, We doe make, create, nominate, appoint, receiue, inueſt and adorne, girding you with the Sword of valour, and beſtowing vpon you all Armes and Ornaments belonging to this Order, decreeing ſeriouſly and firmely by Our foreſaid Imperiall Authoritie that euer hereafter you ought to bee eſteemed, reputed, named, and honoured for a true and lawfull Knight. And that you may without the let and contradiction of any, in all exerciſes, actions and enterpriſes vſe, poſſeſſe, and enioy Chaines, Sword, Spurres, Robes, Trappings, and what elſe ſoeuer Furniture belonging to Horſes either all Gold or Gilt, alſo whatſoeuer Honours, Prerogatiues, Enſignes, Priuiledges, Freedomes, Fauours, and Liberties which the reſt of Our owne Knights, the Knights of the Romane Empire, as alſo the Knights of Hieruſalem doe vſe, poſſeſſe, and enioy in what manner ſoeuer either of right or cuſtome, none whoſoeuer forbidding the contrary.

And that you may be graced with ſome ſingular teſtimony of Our bountie, of Our aforeſaid proper motion, and out of the fulneſſe of Our Imperiall Authoritie with deliberate aduiſe, and out of our owne knowledge We haue made, created, and ordained you Robert Sherley, Earle of the Sacred Palace of Laterane, of Our Caſars Court, and Imperiall Conſiſtorie, and fauourably haue honoured you with the Title of an Earle Palatine, as by the force of theſe preſents we doe make, create, erect, aduance, entitle you, and doe take, aſcribe and entertaine you into the Order and Fellowſhip of other Earles Palatines.

Decreeing, and by this our Imperiall Patent, firmely ordaining that from this time henceforth ſo long as you ſhall liue, you ſhall be able to enioy, vſe, and poſſeſſe all and ſingular Priuiledges, Fauours, Rights, Immunities, Honours, Exemptions, Cuſtomes, and Liberties, which other Earles of Our Sacred Palace of Laterane heretofore haue vſed and enioyed, or do vſe by right or cuſtome howſoeuer. Giuing and granting to you the ſaid Robert Sherley full authoritie and power, by which you may and ſhall bee able throughout the whole Romane Empire, and what place or Countrey elſe ſoeuer create and make publike Notaries or Regiſters, and ordinary Iudges, and to giue and grant the Office of Notarie or Regiſter, and Iudge ordinarie to any perſons who ſhall be meete and fit for the ſame (which we leaue to your owne conſcience) and to inueſt them, and euery one of them by the Pen and Penner according to the cuſtome, in the aforeſaid places. Prouided that of the aforeſaid publike Notaries, and Iudges ordinary by you to bee created, and of euery of them in the Name of vs, and the Sacred Romane Empire, and for the Romane Empire it ſelfe you take a corporall and perſonall Oath according to the cuſtome in this manner. That they ſhall be true and faithfull vnto Vs, and to the Sacred Romane Empire, and to all Our Succeſſors Emperours of the Romanes lawfully poſſeſſing the ſame, neither ſhall they bee preſent where Our danger is practiſed, but they ſhall defend and faithfully maintaine Our good and ſafetie, and they ſhall auoid and put by as much as in them lyeth whatſoeuer may be to Our damage.

Moreouer, they ſhall write all Inſtruments as well publike as priuate, Laſt Wils and Teſtaments, Enrowlments, Legacies, all Decrees of Iudgement what-ſoeuer, and all and ſingular other things, which ſhall belong vnto them, or to any one of them to be made or written (according as the place of the ſaid Offices ſhall require) iuſtly, ſincerely and faithfully, all diſſimulation, cunning, plotting, falſhood, and deceit being ſet apart, alſo reade, make and pronounce the ſame, reſpecting neither hatred, money, gifts, or any paſſions or fauours.

Their writings which they ought to draw in publike forme, they ſhall write, reade, make, rehearſe in faire Parchment, not in paper or ſheetes torne and razed. They ſhall further to their power the cauſes of Hoſpitals, and of poore people, alſo ſee to Bridges and High-wayes. They ſhall ſecretly, and faithfully keepe depoſitions and verdicts of witneſſes, vntill they ſhall be publiſhed and approued, and they ſhall doe all and ſingular other things rightly, iuſtly, and ſincerely, which ſhall any wayes appertaine to their Offices either of cuſtome or right, and that theſe publike Notaries, or Regiſters and Iudges ordinarie to bee elected by you, may and ſhall bee able throughout the whole Romane Empire, and in all places and Countreyes elſe write, and publiſh Contracts, Decrees of Iudgements, Inſtruments, laſt Wils, alſo to inſert Decrees and Authorities, in all Contracts whatſoeuer requiring the ſame, and to doe, publiſh, and exerciſe all other things which are knowne to belong and appertaine to the publike Office of a Notarie, or Regiſter, or ordinary Iudge, decreeing that abſolute credit be giuen to all Inſtruments, and writings to be written by theſe publike Notaries, or Regiſters, or Iudges ordinary, in Iudgement and without, Conſtitutions, Statutes, and whatſoeuer elſe ſhall make for the contrarie notwithſtanding.

Moreouer, we doe grant and giue to you, the aforeſaid Robert Sherley full power, that you may and ſhall be able to legitimate Baſtards of what kinde ſoeuer, Inceſtuous perſons whether they be together or ſeparated, and whoſoeuer elſe of that ſort, yea, though they bee Infants preſent or abſent, alreadie begotten or to be begotten of vnlawfull and diſallowed coniunction, Males and Females, by what name ſoeuer they be called, whether the lawfull Sonnes be knowne or no, and no further inquirie made, whether their Parents bee liuing or dead (only the Children of great Princes, Earles and Barons excepted) and to reſtore them and euery one of them, to all and ſingular their Rights and Titles, and altogether to aboliſh the imputation of baſe birth by reſtoring and enabling them to all and their ſingular Rights of ſucceſſion, Hereditaments of their Father and Mothers goods, though they died Inteſtate, alſo of their Kinſ-Kinſmen and Kinſwomen, and to all Honours, Dignities, and all lawfull actions, as well by contract as by laſt Will beſtowed, or howſoeuer elſe as well in Iudgement as without. Euen as if they had beene borne in lawfull Matrimonie, the obiection of Baſtardie for euer reſting; And we will that their legitimation made as aboue-ſaid, may be held for good and lawful, as wel as it had beene performed with all Rites and Solemnities, the defect whereof wee will ſupply with our Imperiall Authoritie. Prouided the legitimations of this kind bee not preiudiciall to the lawfull Sonnes and Heires, and thoſe that are naturally and rightly borne; but thoſe that are to be made legitimate, after they ſhal be legitimated, let them be thought and named; for ſo they ought to be named and held in all places as legitimate and lawfully borne of the Houſe, Family, and Linage of their Parents, and that they may beare and carrie their Armes and Enſignes. Withall let them be made Noble if their Parents haue beene nobly borne. Notwithſtanding certaine Lawes by which it is prouided, that Naturals, Baſtards and Inceſtuous perſons, either ioyntly or ſeuerally or any other whoſoeuer either alreadie begotten, or to begotten by vnlawfull copulation, neyther may, nor ought to be legitimated, naturall and children lawfully begotten remayning, or without the will and conſent of the true and naturall Sonnes, or Kinſmen, or the Lords of their Land, and you may eſpecially reade in the Authentike after what manner a child is naturalized. Et quibus modis Nat. effic. ſui per totum & §. Naturales li. de fœdo fuerit controuerſ. inter Domin. & Agnat. & L. Iubemus C. de emancipat liberorum & ſimilibus alijs. Which Lawes and euery one of which willingly and expreſly we will to be of no force. Yea notwithſtanding in certaine of the aforenamed caſes, the depoſitions of the Plaintiffes, and the laſt Wils of the dead, other Lawes, Statutes and Cuſtomes of other places, although they were ſuch which ought to be expreſſed, or of which ſpeciall mention here ought to be made. All which notwithſtanding, and of their power being otherwiſe able to make of none effect, the premiſes onely in this caſe out of our owne knowledge, and the fulneſſe of our Imperiall Authoritie we will wholly that they be of no force at all.

Hereto moreouer, we doe giue and grant vnto the aforeſaid Robert Sherley, that you may and ſhall be able to confirme aſſiſtants and ouer-ſeeers, and the ſame againe vpon lawfull cauſe to depriue & diſplace. Moreouer, to reſtore ſuch as are notoriouſly infamous as wel by Fact as by Law againe to their former credit, and from them to take away all note of Infamie as well alreadie impoſed vpon them, or to be hereafter layed to their charge, ſo that afterward ahey may be accounted meete and fit to be preferred to all and ſingular lawfull actions. Beſides, to adopt and ordaine Children, and to make, ordaine and to confirme them as adopted, and acknowledged for lawfull. Moreouer, to make free children legitimate, or to be made legitimate, alſo thoſe that be adopted, and to giue your conſent to all Adoptions, Naturallizings, and Freedomes whatſoeuer, of all and euery one, as well Infants as young men. And alſo to giue them time and yeeres if they ſue vnto you, and in euery thing hereunto appertayning to interpoſe your authoritie. Moreouer, to make ſeruants free, in what kind ſoeuer, with or without the allegation and alienations, or tranſactions of their neceſſary maintenance, and alſo herein to interpoſe your authoritie. Alſo to reſtore the leſſer Churches, and Immunities to their former vſe wholly, the one part hauing beene called before in queſtion, and to grant the whole reſtitution vnto them againe, or to one of them. Notwithſtanding a courſe of Law being obſerued. Theſe aforeſaid premiſes ſhal not be preiudiced by any Lawes whatſoeuer, Conſtitutions, Decrees, Cuſtomes, Ordinances, Reformations, Priuiledges, Exemptions, Fauours, and Prerogatiues, by what name ſoeuer they be called, or of what tenour and force ſoeuer they be, as well made all readie, as to be made hereafter, by vs, our Predeceſſours, our Succeſſors, or by what Princes ſoeuer, Dukes, Marqueſſes, Earles, Vniuerſities, or others of what kind or cõdition ſoeuer, vnder what clauſes or expreſſe words ſoeuer, although ſuch things and the like ſhould come to paſſe, of which it ſhould bee needful here to make mention word for word, to thoſe that ſhould attempt the contrary. From all and euery of which by our Imperial Authoritie, and out of the fulneſſe of our own proper motion, and out of our own knowledge aboue rehearſed, by theſe preſents as farre forth as they may derogate from this Our Graunt and Patent, we will the force and vigour to be taken away. Wherefore it ſhall be lawfull for no man of what ſtate, degree, ranke, condition, dignitie, or preeminence he ſhall be, to infringe or teare this Graunt of Our Creation, Erection, Allowance, Gift, Patent, Decree, Pleaſure, Priuiledge, and Fauour, or contradict it by any raſh attempt whatſoeuer.

If any man ſhall preſume to doe it, let him know that he ſhall incurre ipſo facto Our heauie diſpleaſure, and of the whole Empire. Moreouer, the puniſhment of fiftie Markes of pure Gold, halfe of which ſhall be confiſcate to Our Imperiall Treaſurie, and the reſt to bee imployed to his or their vſes that haue had the wrong without releaſe. By the teſtimonie of theſe Our Letters ſubſcribed with Our owne hand, and confirmed with the putting to of our Imperiall Seale.

The Epitaphs on the Tombe of IACOB ALMANSOR the Saracenicall Emperour, vnder whoſe Reigne Spaine was ſubdued to the Moores, written by MAHOMET ALGAZELI a learned Arabian, and grauen in the foure ſtones of his ſumptuous Monument.

The firſt Epitaph hiſtoricall.

HEre lyeth buried the high and highly reuerenced King of moſt noble birth, famous race and linage, deſcended of eightie * and two Kings, Abilgualit Miramamolim, Iacob Almanſor who was worthily called the Conquerour, being neuer ouercome; the famouſeſt of the Sonnes of Naſts Abu Malique, ſeeing hee wanne eightie and ſix battailes by Sea and by Land, and tooke fiue Kings; ſubdued three parts of the World, Aſia, Afrike and Europe, and gaue peace and tranquillitie to his ſubiects, obſeruing Iuſtice with benignitie and mercie. This is he that vſed Charitie and augmented his Religion hauing at his owne coſt builded in his Kingdome fiue hundred and ſix principall Mezquitas, eightie and two Hoſpitals with as many Royall Colledges, and endowed them with large and ſumptuous Reuenues. This is he that married euery yeere at his charge a thouſand Orphans, he that baniſhed ignorance, and embraced Learning. Hee that gaue to all the World

This Epitaph is taken out of the ſaid Iacobs life by Aly Abenſuſian, in Arabike.

* This like agreeth with Chriſtian ſtories. It ſeemes they were Arabian Princes or Heads of Tribes before Mahomets time.

Eighty Colledges or Schooles of Learning. One of theſe had a Library of 55000. Bookes; to redeeme which (for hee gaue all his goods at his death in almes) hee charged his Son to marrie 1000. Orphans giuing to each 1000. Miticals.

World examples of life in his ſayings and ſentences, and notable deeds of Armes. He who was our example of good and laudable cuſtomes. Hee that killed the hunger and thirſt and nakedneſſe of his ſubiects with his large and liberall hands. Let immortall fame euer attend on this Sepulchre acknowledge him that lyeth therein for her King and Lord, ſeeing by him ſhee is made triumphant and victorious ouer all Ages. This great Monarch died continuing in his inuocation of the mercifull God the Creatour of Heauen and Earth without ceaſing, ſo much as a moment, vntill his laſt gaſpe, imploring his incomprenſible mercie and fearing his high Iuſtice. The third day of the Moone of Rageb, the night before Friday after the laſt Watch in the hundreth and ſecond yeere of the Hixera. Praiſed bee God and bleſſed bee his moſt holy Name for euer. Amen.

A. D. this agreeth with 723.

The ſecond Epitaph, Morall.

O how great is the miſery of men, which hath brought a King of ſo great power, Empire, and command to the eſtate wherein hee is at this preſent, who as yeſterday was honoured, reuerenced, and beloued of his people, and is now forgotten and forſaken of them all, and remaineth ſolitarie in the darke Caues of the earth. He which was wont to bee clad in ſilke and cloth of gold and ſiluer, and to ſleepe in the ſofteſt and ſweeteſt beds curiouſly and richly decked and adorned, lieth heere buried in the hard Earth. He which vſed to goe perfumed with Muske and Amber and other excellent odours, now yeeldeth in his baſe eſtate a noyſome and ſtinking ſmell? He that as yeſterday did eate the choiceſt meates, and dranke the moſt delicate drinkes is heere become himſelfe to be the meate of wretched and loathſome Wormes. O mortall men, let none put confidence in the delights of this life: take example of him that lyeth heere buried: who hauing poſſeſſed them, obſerue how little while they continued. There is no confidence to bee placed in any but in God and in things eternall: let theſe terrene tranſitorie worldly things to be forgotten for his loue and reuerence. Let vs follow good and holy workes which endure for euer, that with them through his grace and mercie we may obtaine that eternall life which endureth for-euer and euer. Amen.

The third Epitaph. Political, and exemplary to Kings.

Here lieth buried the terrour and feare of the Moores, Chriſtians and Gentiles, that ploughed vp the Sea, and made the Land euen and plaine. Hee that ſubdued the Nations of the World. The example and paterne of benignitie and mercie, and the right rule of executing Iuſtice ſeuerely for the chaſtiſement of thoſe which doe not liue vertuouſly as the Soueraigne God commanded. Here reſteth that liberall hand, that was neuer ſhut or cloſed to any that ſought the reliefe thereof. The protector of the poore; the father of the Orphans; the refuge of the Widdowes; the zeale of chaſtitie; the mirrour of honeſtie and ſhamefaſtneſſe accompanied with Modeſtie; the paterne of Princes; the modell of gouernment; the picture of puritie and cleanneſſe; the type of Nobilitie; the preſeruer of truth in his tongue; the baniſher of lies, the true louer of Learning, he that hath left a liuing fame of himſelfe for the future Ages; and a worthy example of ſuch laſting memorie as time cannot conſume, which hath conſumed the great deeds and exploits of Kings, Princes and Emperours burying their memory in obliuion. O yee mortall men let vs pray to our Soueraigne God, that he vouchſafe to proſper and augment his memorie for example of the Kings to come, that by imitation of him they may gouerne their Common-weales in peace, directing vs alſo to his holy ſeruice, and filling vs with his grace. Amen.

The fourth Epitaph, Mooriſh and naturally Theologicall.

Euen as gold is refined and purified in the Cruſible, or placed on the fire which diſcouereth the fineneſſe therof among the flames: So a ſinful man who preſerues his patience in the perſecutions of this life doth purifie & perfect himſelfe therby. A man ought to conſider that he was borne to ſuffer, and he may comfort himſelfe in this, that all the trauels of this life ſhall haue an end with him at his death, and that only the good and holy workes are they which remayne for euer, being accepted and regarded of our Soueraigne God. O man, conſider that he created thee for his ſeruice: and that thou vngratefully haſt departed from him without recompence of amends. Behold, how lukewarme thy loue is towards him, and that of thy Creator towards thee is conſtant and true, hauing giuen thee thy being and accompliſhment for his mercie. Conſider with how high a prize he bought thee, and gaue thee meanes to ſaue thy ſelfe by vſing well thy libertie and freedome as he hath commended thee. And therefore doe I admoniſh thee that thou looſe not the much for the little, the certaine for the vncertaine, for if ſo thou doe, thou wilt finde thy ſelfe deceiued. Conſider how miſery and pouertie conſiſts not in the wanting of Parents, or kindred, or of temporall goods, but in the want of the fauour of God and of his benediction. Imploring therefore his mercie and grace, let vs humbly intreate him to grant vs the ſame, and hold vs with his hand. Amen.

CHAP. XII.

Maſter THOMAS CORYATES trauels to, and Obſeruations in Conſtantinople, and other places in the way thither, and his Iourney thence to Aleppo, Damaſco and Ieruſalem.

WE haue alreadie ſeene Maſter Thomas Coryate in his Indian peregrination. The beginning of which his Iourny we could not then giue you for want of that Intelligence which ſince is comne to my hands, namely his owne Bookes; out of which I haue preſented thee his Obſeruations of Zante, Syo, and Conſtantinople, with ſome other places in his way to Ieruſalem, from whence he pierced Perſia and India. Hee ſet forth October the twentieth, Anno 1612. and Ianuarie the thirteenth arriued in Zante. Out of his large Iournall I haue briefly preſented this,

Houſes in Zante.

The houſes of this Towne are built with ſtone, ſuch as is digged out of the Rockie ſide of the Mountaine. They are ſomewhat lower then I haue obſerued in other Townes: their Roofes are ſomewhat flatte according to the forme of the Italian Building, with a prettie round ſtone inſerted into the middle of the out-ſide, which maketh the Houſe there ſomewhat like to the broad Thrumbe Caps, that ſome of the olde women of the Weſt parts of England, were wont to weare for ſome twentie yeeres ſince. Neither doth their manner of tiling differ from that of Italy, being made all hollow within ſide, which is vſed ſeuerally ouer all Italie, and many parts of France. I could ſee no glaſſe windowes in their houſes, but all Lattice made of Firre which I obſerue to bee generally vſed amongſt them. Which Lattice leaues in the Summer time they doe commonly take of, and then, ſeeing they are Greekes, and merrie Greekes too, they may be very properly ſaid to keepe open houſes. Now concerning their lowe houſes, the reaſon why they build them ſo lowe is, becauſe of the manifold Earthquakes which doe as much ſhake this Iland as any other place in the World. The Earthquakes are ſo frequent with them, that ſometimes they feele ten of them in a moneth. At the time of my being in the ſame there was a little feeling of an Earthquake, which was perceiued for ſome fiue or ſixe dayes together. For which cauſe on Munday being the eleuenth of Ianuary, about tenne of the clocke in the morning there was a Proceſſion about the Caſtle ſolemnized by the Greeks Prieſts that prayed to God to ceaſe the Earthquake. Sometimes when it is any thing vehement, they vſe to ring out the Bels of all their Churches. The motion of the Earth doth neuer laſt aboue a quarter of an houre at the moſt, when it continueth longeſt moſt commonly but two or three minutes; during which time it often falleth out to bee ſo violent, that people fearing leaſt the houſes would fall downe then haue beene driuen out of doores, euen out of their naked beds, men in their ſhirts, women in their ſmockes, carrying their clothes with them, that they haue haſtily caught vp, and haue at leiſure put them on afterward. The time of the Earthquake is vncertaine, ſometimes it commeth by day, and ſometimes by night. The naturall cauſe of them is vnknowne vnto me: though ſome of the Engliſhmen that dwelt in the Towne doe coniecture that it proceedeth from the hollow Caues and Cauernes that are in the bowels of the Earth. It is obſerued, that their Earthquakes doe moſt commonly happen when there is a ſudden calme in the Sea and quiet weather, and the winds which doe for the moſt part accompany it, or rather goe before it, and partly cauſe the ſame are Weſt and by North and Weſterly. Neither is this Iland only ſubiect to theſe Terremotes, but alſo the next Ile neere at hand called Cephalonia, which is more ſhaken with the ſame then Zante: which are the only two places of the whole Countrey thereabout, that are annoyed with Earthquakes. For neither Morea neere at hand, nor Arcadia, doe at any time feele theſe ſhakings, therefore the frequencie of thoſe foreſaid Earthquakes is the reaſon of the low building of the houſes which would the ſooner fall downe with the forcible motion of the Earth, if they were very high. Howbeit as lowe as they are ſometimes two or three houſes haue fallen downe with the Earthquakes, being rooted out from the very foundations, and haue beene afterward reedified.

Earthquakes oft and ſhort.

Cephalonia.

Churches.

Now I will mention a matter of this Towne, which vnto moſt that ſhall read it will ſeeme almoſt incredible; that albeit it be no more then two miles and a halfe, or at the vttermoſt three miles in compaſſe, yet it ſhould containe three and fortie Churches and Chappels. A thing ſo abſolutely true that there is no contradiction to be made againſt it: only they are ſo little that a faire Towne Church of England, will make very neere halfe a ſcore of them. Theſe are the particular names of the totall number; firſt three in the Caſtle, Saint Francis, Saint Katharines, Saint Markes, Saint Maries in the Towne, in the Yard or Court of which before I came into any part of the Church I ſaw a very remarkable Monument that ſhall not paſſe vnmentioned, the Sepulchre of Marcus Tullius Cicero and his Wife Terentia, but ſuch an obſcene and ignoble graue, that I could not but condole the miſfortune of that famous and incomparable Orator, from the inexhauſted Fountaine of whoſe incomparable Learning, ſo many excellent Orators haue drawne liquor of Rhetoricall inuention, to the great garniſhing and adorning of their polite lucubrations.

Ciceros Sepulchre.

ons. For it ſtandeth ſub dio. in the open Aire, without any Sepulchrate or Titulararie ſtone, that might teſtifie to the Reader who lieth there; which cannot but ſtrike a kinde of veneration into any man that hath any ſparke of learning. But belike the Vrne wherein his aſhes were laid may remaine there, though the Venetians haue robbed the place of the Monument, which I know to be very true, by a certaine ancient Inſcription that I read in a ſtone in the Quadrangle of a Clariſſimoes houſe adioyning to the Piazza of Saint Marke in Venice, which I haue mentioned in my former Booke, viz. Marce Tulli Cicero, haue & tu Terentia Antoniana. Theſe foure Churches belong to the Italians, all the reſt (being 39.) to the Greekes.

Wine, Oile, & Currans commodities of Zant.

Famous is this Citie ouer moſt part of Europe, Aſia, and Africa for three principall Commodities which the Iland doth miniſter to the ſame, and the Citie again to many remote Countries, Wine, Oile, and Currans.

Marriages.

I obſerued a ſtrange cuſtome in this Iland the day of their Marriages: for whenſoeuer any of the Kindred is married, all the day, all of the ſame conſanguinity do hang out of their Windowes certaine Carpets, by which it is generally knowne in the Towne that ſuch a one is married: and they hang out moſt commonly two Carpets in euery houſe. I haue obſerued alſo a cuſtome amongſt their women which I neuer read or heard of amongſt any other women. They ride on Aſſes aſtride; and that vpon Morocco Saddles, but all thoſe that I ſaw ride were Gentlewomen of the better ſort, attired in their Silkes or Damaskes, very ſeemely to behold, beeing attended by a Page that walketh along by their ſides, many of them ſlaues that they bought with their money.

Caloieri not Prieſts, but Greeke Monks.

The firſt Caloieri that euer I ſaw were in this Towne of Zante, which are certaine Greekiſh Prieſts, whoſe names are deriued from theſe two Greeke words καλὸς and ἱερεὺς, that is, an honeſt or good Prieſt. They are ſuch as haue vndertaken the Vow of ſingle life. But there are other Prieſts among them that are ſuffered to marry, but hauing buried one Wife they may not matrimony. Their ordinarie faſting Dayes of the weeke are Wedneſday and Friday, in which they will neither eate fleſh nor any fiſh that hath any bloud in it, alſo they obſerue foure Lents euery yeere. And now we will follow our Author to Syo.

Syo.

Maſtick Tree deſcribed.

Out of Syo a great Tribute of twentie thouſand Chicquins ariſeth vnto the Grand Signior, out of a principall Commoditie that this Iland yeeldeth, viz. Maſticke, which groweth heere only of all the places of the World, the Tree that beareth it is a prettie kinde of ſhrub like vnto that Lentiſcus, that groweth in ſome parts of France and Italie, this ſhrub groweth low by the ground and beareth crooked little boughes and leaues, they are not diſperſed ouer the whole Iland, but grow only in one place of it ſome ſixe miles from the Citie, the iuyce of it is white, and in the moneth of Auguſt they begin their Recolta, that is, their Maſticke Harueſt; the men that are ſet a worke about that buſineſſe, cutting the barke of the Tree with their Iron Inſtruments, which are like Pix-axes, and it is almoſt three moneths before they end their Recolta, the Gum diſtilling inceſſantly for that ſpace.

Cotton ſhrubs

Beſides, there is another Commoditie that they ſell in this Iland, Cotton, which groweth very plentifully in ſundry places of the ſame. The ſhrub or buſh that beareth it is as low as the loweſt ſort of Vines, and there is a great multitude of plots of it neere to the Towne and in other parts of the Countrie. The downie or woolly ſubſtance which proceedeth from the Cod of the ſhrub doth yeeld that matter, of which the Ilanders doe make a certaine ſtuffe called Dimitie, and another called Scammatie.

Dimitie and Scamatie.

The day before we departed from Syo, I rode into the Countrey vpon an Aſſe (according to the cuſtome of the Iland) being accompanied with ſome other of my Countreymen, whereof the chiefe was one Maſter Richard Southerne that had liued a prettie while in thoſe parts, and vſed mee paſſing louingly in the Towne of Syo, alſo Maſter Robert Eldred, and Maſter Richard Lamplin. We tooke our Iourney to a thing very famous and worthy to be ſeene by euery learned Traueller, if that bee true that the Inhabitants doe report of it. Namely, the Sepulchres of the Prince of all Poets Diuine Homer, my Maſter for many yeeres ſince Homers Sepulchre.

—— A quo, ceu fonte perenni for indeed they doe confidently affirme, that hee was borne in this Iland, and buried heere alſo. Yet there are fiue Cities more doe challenge him as well as Syo, according to an old Diſtich in the Methologie of Greeke Poets that read long ſince

Ἑπτὰ πόλεις ἐρίζουσι περὶ ῥίζαν Ὁμήρου
Σμύρνα, Ῥόδος, Κολοφῶν, Σαλαμὶς, Χίος, Ἄργος, Ἀθῆνη.

But our ſiniſter fortune was to goe too late out of the Towne that we could not poſſibly reach thither that night ouer the dangerous precipices and difficult paſſages of Rocks and home againe, for it was about ſome twelue miles to the place. But inſteed of going thither (whither if wee had gone wee could not haue ſeene any Monument at all, but only a Vineyard that yeeldeth excellent Wine, which was once a part of the poſſeſſions of that peereleſſe Poet, and in which they ſay his bodie lieth interred) wee went to a goodly Monaſterie called Emonia, which is by many degrees the faireſt of the whole Iland: it is inhabited by Greeke Monkes called Caloieri, which which are in number two hundred, their reuenewes are at the leaſt fiue thouſand Dollars by the yeere, which make a thouſand pound ſtarling. The Monaſterie ſtandeth vpon the ſide of an hill, and was built about ſixe hundred yeeres ſince, by the Emperour Conſtantinus Monomachus; the Chappell is a very beautifull building, being built all round, and beautified with diuers faire Marble Pillars. There I ſaw the goodlieſt waxe Candle that euer I ſaw in my life, ſome eight foote high faſtned to a wall, & ſo bigge as my middle, for I meaſured it with my girdle: the firſt Monke thereof was one Nicetus. I know not what kinde of learned men the Monkes of this place haue bin in former times, but now they are ſo vnlearned, that they can onely read in their owne Manuſcript Greeke Bookes, but can neither vnderſtand nor ſpeake any learned Greeke, but the moderne; for I could not finde as much as one learned man of the whole two hundred. They haue a notable ciſterne of water in their Monaſtery which is alwaies full of water, to the end to ſerue their turne in time of neceſſitie, if they ſhould be beſieged by the enemy. This Monaſtery is famous for the Bels that are therein, in number foure, not for the greatneſſe thereof, but that thoſe Coloiri onely of all the other Greekiſh Monkes of the whole Greekiſh territorie, are ſuffred to vſe them. In this Iland is the Caue of Sibilla Helleſpontia, but the ſhortneſſe of time bared mee of the opportunitie to ſee it. The whole Iland is one hundred miles in compaſſe, and there are in it about eightie thouſand ſoules.

Monkes vnlearned.

Sybilla.

FRom this Towne I ſailed in an Engliſh Ship, to the Troian ſhoare, where I landed Feb. 22. with foureteene Engliſh men more and a Iew or Druggerman, all well weaponed for feare of any hoſtile inuſion by the Turkes: by the way as we were going thither, we found a bare little plot of ground, not farre from the Sea, where their Oxen trode out wheate, according to the cuſtome of moſt of theſe Aſiaticke Countries; we walked towards the mouldor hauen of Troy; but before we came thither we obſerued diuers antiquities worthy the relation: firſt on the left hand of vs we left the ruines of a goodly Fortreſſe; then a hillocke which was built in a round forme; there remained onely the lower part of the wall, without doubt it was a very ſtrong fortification before it was deſtroyed: afterward on the right hand of vs, wee ſaw a peece of a wall vnder the ſhoare hard by the Sea ſide, but the breadth, height, and length of it we did ſo exactly behold, becauſe we were a prettie way diſtant from it: likewiſe we ſaw a great many round Marble Pillars ſtanding vpright in the ground, and diſperſed in diuers parts of the lower ſide of the Citie that lay neere to the Sea-ſhoare: theſe Pillars are moſt of gray Marble, but of no ſuch notable bigneſſe as I ſaw afterward, moſt of them ſtood in the ground which was ſowne with Wheate, which ground was ſo couered ouer with little broken ſtones, that I did very much maruell how it was poſſible that Corne ſhould grow in that place; as for the Pillars, we beleeued that as much of euery Pillar lay buried vnder the ground, as appeared aboue the ground. Once I was about to number theſe Pillars, but by reaſon that they were ſo extreamely ſcattered, I found an extreame difficultie in it, and could not doe it truely and exactly without a longer time then was limited me, but ſurely I thinke there were no leſſe then one hundred of them, moſt of them were growne very rough and ſcabrous, which happened by the iniurie of all manner of weather in ſo long antiquitie of time; only one of them in a low plot of ground neere to the Sea, was paſſing ſmooth and plaine, like a ſleeking ſtone, and the faireſt for length and compaſſe that I could ſee in the whole number: neere vnto ſome of theſe Pillars there be foure or fiue goodly Marble Sepulchers of a great length, one of which I meaſured, and found it to be nine of my feete long. Theſe Tombes conſiſt of one intire Marble ſtone, euen of white Marble; vpon euery corner of one whereof are foure round knobs, made in the forme of little pillowes, and the middle part riſeth with a ſharpe line, like vnto the ſharpe part of a Coſtlet or breaſt plate; likewiſe there was another of white Marble, on the left ſide whereof the whole proportion of two hands (which I coniecture to haue bin the hands of ſome great Lady) were ſo curiouſly expreſſed, that it is impoſſible for Praxiteles or any other that was the moſt excellent caruer in the World to ſurpaſſe it. I finde Petrus Bellonius his obſeruations of theſe Sepulchers to be very true; for that which hee writeth of them is very certaine, that they are excauated, that is, made hollow in the inſide, in the forme of a Cheſt, & that the corners doe remaine whole and entire. I finde this to be true by my ocular experience: but moſt of theſe Sepulchers lye looſely vpon the ground, as hauing bin digged from the places where they were ſetled, ouer the bodies which lye vnderneath them: to what end I know not, onely I thinke that ſome imagining there might be treaſure hid vnder them, might digge them vp in hope to finde ſome Gold or Siluer vnder theſe tombes: but whoſoeuer doe digge vp the Sepulchers of dead men for gaine of treaſure, I wiſh they may be as much fruſtrated of their hopes as he was that in the Citie of Babilon did digge vp the Monument of Nitocris, Queene of the Babylonians, and the wife of King Nebuchadnezer, in the outſide of whoſe Tombe ſtone, there was written a certaine Epitaph, by ſome one or other that ment to delude the Reader, for though the Epitaph promiſed treaſure to him that ſhould digge vp the Monument; yet after he had rooted it vp from the ground, inſtead of treaſure he found this memorable inſcription; Niſi auri inſatiabili cupiditate flagraſſes, nunquam in defunctorum cadauera ſanitiam tuam exercuiſſes. It grieued me to the heart that I could not learne either by inſcriptions, or any other meanes, whoſe Monuments

Troy.

Oxe-threſhing

theſe were : for it is vaine to be induced by coniectures, to ſay they were theſe or theſe mens; onely I hope no man will taxe me of a raſh opinion, if I beleeue one of them might be the Monument of King Ilus, the enlarger of the Citie of Troy; for I remember that Homer ſaith in his eleuenth Æneid, that Ilus was buried in the open, as this was; and that another of them might be the Monument of King Priamus, it is not altogether vnlikely, for Virgil writeth in his ſecond Æneid that King Priamus, after the late fatall deſtruction of the Citie, was ſlaine by Pyrrhus the Sonne of Achilles, neere the Troian ſhoare : for thus ſaith he ——iacet ingens littore truncus. Now though mercileſſe Achilles perſecuted the dead carkaſe of Hector with that barbarous crueltie, as to dragge him ſtarke naked at a Carts taile, three times about the wals of the Citie : yet it is likely they would ſo much honour the old ſiluer haired King Priamus (eſpecially ſince they had now fully ſatisfied their furie, both by burning of the Citie and maſſacring of all the moſt Noble Citizens, and with the reſt their laſt King) as to couer his body with ſome royall monument beſeeming his regall ſtate : pardon me (gentle reader) for this my coniecture. I affirme nothing certainely, onely I geſſe, as another induſtrious traueller would doe, that hath or ſhall obſerue the ſame things that I haue done, that one of thoſe goodly Monuments might be the Sepulcher of King Priamus.

From the place where theſe Tombes lay, we went toward the hauen or mould of Troy, which ſeemeth to haue bin a notable place in former times; for there remaine worthy ſteps of antiquity to this day, a little on this ſide the water wee ſaw a very delicate trough of white Marble, which whether it ſerued for women to waſh cloathes in, or for any beaſts (as horſes) to drinke in, I know not, the mould was in former times a conuenient harbour for little veſſels, as Carmiſals Gallies, Frigats, but I doubt whether any great Ships could ſecurely ride at anchor there; for the water is ſo ſhallow, that I think a veſſell of any great burthen will quickly touch ground, although perhaps in thoſe daies, when the Citie did flouriſh, the water neere the ſhoare might be much deeper then it is now, by reaſon of the continuall ſcouring and clenſing of the channell. There remaine certaine memorable antiquities at this mould : certaine faire gray Marble Pillars, in number ten, that appeare aboue the water, being infixed in the ground; more then the halfe of them I beleeue are buried in the water : all theſe ſtand ſomewhat neere together, almoſt in a rowe. It is likely that they were heretofore placed there to this end, that Barges, Boates, and ſuch kinde of veſſels as anchored there, might by the meanes of cables, or other roapes be ſtaied or tied thereto. There alſo I ſaw a very ſtately and gallant aſcent from the landing place vpwards towards the Citie, a faire kinde of pile built in the water, reaching vp at the leaſt two butlengths (according to my opinion) till it ioyneth with the land, and made in the forme of a wall : It is ſo broade that I beleeue three Carts might eaſily goe together ſide by ſide vpon it : it is greatly ruined and broken downe, the ſtones being diſſipated and ſcattered a ſunder; onely the foundation of a part of it that ioyneth almoſt to the land, remaineth very entire to this day, for as I walked vp from the water towards the land by chance, I caſt mine eyes vpon the left ſide of the mould, and found it a very notable foundation; and to the end I might the more exactly view it, I leaped downe vpon the ſand to ſuruey the ſame : that part of the pile conſiſteth of a faire and ſtrong white ſtone, ſquared out very artificially, and of a great length and thickneſſe. As you walke vp from this mould towards the Citie, you may ſee the ſtately Pallace of the King before you, ſtanding in a direct line oppoſite to your face : by the conſideration of which I did the better confirme that beliefe in my ſelfe, that the Pallace, which I will ſhortly ſpeake of, might be the place of the Kings royall reſidence : for it was a very delicate paſſage for the King, either in a Chariot or a Horſe backe from this mould through a ſtately faire ſtreete, to his owne Pallace, diſtant but a little mile from the water : from this mould wee went to a ſtanding poole but a little remote from the ſhoare, being I thinke well neere a mile in compaſſe : which I firſt thought to haue bin freſh water, but when I taſted it, I found it ſalt, and therefore I gather that this is nothing but the inundation of the Sea, when it doth ſometimes exceede his bankes : hard by one ſide of the Poole I ſaw a principall relique of antiquitie, a goodly grey Marble Pillar, the faireſt that euer I ſaw in my life till then, lying on the ground, and broken in the very middeſt : it was three and thirty Geometricall foot long (for I meaſured it very exactly with a Carpenters rule of twelue inches) and fiue thicke : neere to the ſame Pillar there is a broken fragment of Marble, lying in the water, of the ſame colour and proportion with the former Pillar, whereby I know that it was part of the ſame Pillar : this was the very head of the Pillar, being wrought with ſuch a kinde of worke as is vſed about the heads of Pillars : this part was fiue foot long, ſo that the whole Pillar was eight and thirty foot long, being of one entire ſtone as I thinke, though it be now broken in three peeces, which came to paſſe by the violent fall thereof.

But a little from this goodly Pillar, which I haue now mentioned, there is another almoſt as great, lying on the ground, and ſo couered with Brambles and Briers, that I could not perfectly obſerue the length of it. Againe, about a butt length further, there is one very memorable gray Marble Pillar more, lying on the ground, ſome thirty foot long, foure foot thicke, and broken in the middeſt. As we aſcended higher from the Poole towards the Pillar, wee obſerued a very lamentable rubbiſh of ſtones intermingled here and there with a few little fragments of Brickes, and diſperſed ouer thoſe fields that were once filled vp with houſes, ſo that I could not tread vpon any plot of ground from the mould, till I came to the Pallace, but I found round about me old broken ſtones; in ſome places whereof I ſaw greene Corne growing, whereof I did not a little wonder, becauſe I could not conceiue how they ſhould plough vp ſuch hard ſtony earth: on the left hand of vs, as we aſcended the ſide of the hill, we left the wall of the Citie, which by the ruines that remaine there to this day, ſeemeth to haue bin a moſt ſtately thing indeede. Some thinke it is at the leaſt thirty foot high, and of a great thickneſſe, it conſiſteth of faire and great aſhler ſtones of a white colour, being built with the ſame from the very foundation, till towards the top; and then are built againe vpon the ſame with certaine leſſe ſtones: ſo that the whole in one part conſiſteth of two kinde of ſtones, a great faire aſhler, and a little rough ſtone in another part of the aſhler onely: this wall runneth vp a great way into the Country, being in ſome places broken and interrupted.

Let the Reader pardon this long deſcription of Troies Ruines (ſome digreſſions I haue cut off) for I would at once preſent Troy acted by a Troian ſpirit, which may both profit the ſtudious antiquarie, and ſerue to reſolue and thaw the moſt frozen ſpirit of ſeuere grauity or ſtupideſt ſtoike; melting ſome delights, if not extorting laughter from him.

In the outſide of this Wall, which wee left on the left hand, wee obſerued diuers faire buttreſſes, which were made for the ſtrengthening of the ſame, by whom thoſe wals were built: I am vncertaine, but this I haue read, that Ilus the fourth King of the Citie, who enlarged the ſame, built ſome part of the wals of the Citie; and that Laomedon finiſhed the ſame wals, which being by Hercules deſtroyed, King Priamus being reſtored into his Country, after he was carried away captiue into Greece, reedified them laſt of all: as we aſcended the hill, wee left a little on the left hand of vs the ruines of a faire and ſtately building, which ſeemed to be the Pallace of ſome eminent Noble man, or Gentleman of the Citie, a good part of the wall remained and was of a faire height, hauing in the outſide certaine faire peeces of white and red Marble curiouſly wrought, ſtanding in the very corner of the wall: not farre from that we found a prettie Well, hauing a white Marble Pillar, which I therefore mention, becauſe I haue read that Wels are very ſcarſe in this part of the Troian territory.

In our iourney to the Pallace, wee found certaine faire peeces of ſtone, as curiouſly carued and wrought with exquiſite borders and workes as euer I ſaw. In one great peece, but broken, I found an inſcription, which what it ment I could not deuiſe, it was written in Latine characters, viz. the word Numinid: likewiſe after I found a ſtately peece of white Marble of ſome foure foot long, and two foot broad, on the which was a very ancient inſcription in Latine words written with capitall Letters, but they are ſuch exoticke characters, and ſo worne out with antiquitie, that neither I my ſelfe, nor any elſe of my whole Company could perfectly read it: againe; after that wee found the ruines of a ſtately building neere to this Towne, built in a round forme, which without all queſtion was a Temple, dedicated to one of their heathen Gods, and therefore wee coniectured it to be a Religious Houſe, becauſe the manner of the ſtructure thereof differed much from the forme of all the other buildings that we ſaw there: in the inſide a little vnder the higher part of the wall, we perceiued ſome fiue or ſixe peeces of white Marble ſtanding round in a rowe, and very artificially wrought.

A little from this Temple wee found a vault in the ground, which I thinke in former times had bin a large thing, and of a goodly length, but now it is almoſt ſtopped vp. I with ſome few more of our Company entred this vault, and found it full of ordure and dung of Cattle. Againe a little aboue this we came into another vault built with faire free ſtone, and ſtately arched this vault, was of a goodly height and length, and diſtinguiſhed with many arches throughout the whole length thereof: all our company entered it at one end, and went forth at another: here alſo wee ſaw abundance of ordure wherewith the bottome of the vault was filled from one end to the other; the reaſon of it is becauſe the poore Heardſmen doe oftentimes in the winter put their Cattle all the night in theſe places: after that wee ſaw two more vaults vnder the ground, but entred neither: being now come ſomething neere to the Pallace, wee left on the right hand a ruined Caſtle or Fortreſſe, built vpon a Mount, about the lower part whereof were ſundry arches; this Fort (for ſo I take it to haue bin) was built round, and thoſe arches ſtand in a faire row round about the ſame, an ornament paſſing faire to the building when it was entire: a great part of the ground betwixt the mould and the Pallace is beſet with certaine Trees of diuers kindes, as Mulberry trees, Figge trees, Boxe trees, Oliue trees, Liue Oake trees, Almond trees, whereof ſome wee ſaw beare bloſſmes when wee were there: alſo it beareth Broome of a great height, and ſuch as yeeldeth a prettie kinde of ſent: the next thing of remarke that preſented it ſelfe vnto vs, immediately before wee entered the Pallace, was a certaine heape of ſtones vpon the top of a Mount neere to the foote of the Caſtle, and diſperſed about the ſides of the ſame Mount: theſe are free ſtones, many whereof preſented a blackiſh hewe, and were cunningly ſquared out, as our aſhler ſtones of England for building. I neuer ſaw fairer ſtones in my life to adorne the frontiſpice of any Pallace then theſe were, and being ſo neere vnto the Pallace, I am perſwaded they are the ruines of ſome part thereof.

Hauing now beheld theſe foreſaid ſquare ſtones, we approached neere to the foot of the Pallace which I thinke was by the ancient Poets both Greeke and Latine called Pergamum, by which word, whether they vnderſtood the principall Caſtle of the Citie, or the Palace wherein the ancient Kings kept their Court, I cannot certainly affirme. The whole Frontiſpice conſiſted of a moſt beautiful white ſtone, cut ſquare like our Azure ſtones in England, the fairſt for the breadth, length, and thickneſſe that euer I ſaw; though now through Antiquitie of time the beautifull grace of the ſtone is ſomewhat diminiſhed. The whole front of the Palace ſauing a little at the top conſiſteth of ſuch ſquare ſtones. Euery ſtone hath in the middle part of the front thereof a certaine little hole, which to what end it ſerued I know not. This front for a piece of plaine ſtone Worke doth yeeld the faireſt ſhew that euer I ſaw in any Palace in my life. And though I thinke it is as ancient as the Citie of Troy, yet to ſtrangers that ſaile vpon the Channell neere at hand it preſenteth ſuch a faire white ſhew, that the firſt time I looked vpon it without the helpe of an Opticke Glaſſe, I thought it had beene ſome new Building raiſed within theſe few yeeres.

The front is beautified with three Arches, whereof that in the rundle (which I thinke ſerued for a Gate) is farre the faireſt, the other two ſtanding in the ſame row, each on each ſide of the middle Arch, are by halfe leſſer then that in the middle, which for height and breadth is by many degrees, the moſt magnificent that euer I ſaw, fairer not only then the goodlieſt Palace Gate that euer preſented it ſelfe to mine eyes till then, but alſo then the greateſt Gate of any Church that euer I beheld, which doth argue the incomparable magnificence of the Palace, when it flouriſhed in his glory. It is ſome fortie Geometricall foote broad, and ſixe and thirtie foot high, but from the very top of the Frontiſpice from the ground, I take it to bee eightie foot high, for I tooke the Altitude and Latitude of it by a Mathematicall Inſtrument. Now in that I call it a Gate, you muſt conceiue (I meane) not the Inſtrument of a Gate which ſerueth to ſhut and open (for there remaines not the leaſt ſtep of any ſuch thing) but a voide and open ſpace which (as it is credible) was once furniſhed with a ſtately Gate, which Gate now it is probable, conſiſted of two leaues. Neither of thoſe leaues if it were ſtrengthened with great barres of Iron and Nailes correſpondent to the proportion of ſuch a Gate (as goodly Gates are now adayes) I beleeue could hardly bee opened or ſhut without the maine ſtrength of ten exceeding ſtrong men. The moſt entire and ſolid piece of Worke, that I ſaw ſtanding amongſt all the ruines of Troy, was this front of the Palace, which ſtandeth ſo perfectly, that I could not perceiue the leaſt blemiſh or cracke in the whole Frontiſpiece ſauing in the vpper part thereof, about the top which conſiſteth of Bricke, and is built in a bending forme. Beſides, there is one little defect more for certaine ſtones of white Marble, which are pretily contriued in a row aboue the top of the Gate, and curiouſly wrought, are ſomewhat broken. At the corners of the middle Arch there are two pieces of white Marble very exquiſitely carued with curious Borders and Workes expreſſed therein, the like alſo is in the further corner of the wall of this ſtone, from the which I brake of certaine ſtones to carrie with mee into my Countrey, and to reſerue them in my ſafe cuſtodie for memorable Antiquities while I liue at the top of the middle Arch, there are two prettie holes in which Bees doe breed honey at a certaine ſeaſon of the yeere, as a certaine Turke that ſhewed vs theſe Antiquities did inforce vs. Halfe of the middle Arch is now ſtopped vp with the like kinde of great ſtones as are compacted into the Frontiſpice: and in the other halfe which is partly open, there remaines diuers confuſed heapes of the like ſtones. It happened that when wee had throughly ſatiated our eyes, with contemplation of theſe ancient ruines, the Chiefetaine of the company, a ſworne Brother of mine, whom I haue often named before in this my Booke.

Maſter Coryats Knighthood.

Maſter Robert Rugga obſeruing that I had taken paines for ſome few houres in ſearching out the moſt notabe Antiquities of this the worthieſt part of Troy to yeeld mee ſome kinde of guerdon or renumeration for my paines, in a merrie humour drew his Sword out of his Scabberd, and aſcending to one of thoſe great ſtones that lye in the open part of this middle Gate Knighted mee, that kneeled vpon another ſtone on my right knee, by the name of the firſt Engliſh Knight of Troy, and at the Knighting of mee, pronounced thoſe wittie Verſes ex tempore.

Coryate no more, but now a Knight of Troy,
Odcombe no more, but henceforth Englands Ioy.
Braue Brute of our beſt Engliſh wits commended,
True Troiane from Æneas race deſcended.
Riſe top of wit, the honour of our Nation,
And to old Ilium make a new Oration.

Two poore Turkes that ſtood but a little way from vs when hee drew his naked Sword, thought verily hee meant to haue cut off my head for ſome notorious villany that I had perpetrated, Thoſe Verſes I anſwered ex tempore, alſo our Muſketeeres diſcharged two volleyes of ſhot for ioy of my Knighthood.

His Verſes.

Loe heere with proſtrate knee I doe embrace
The gallant title of a Troiane Knight.

In Priams Court which time ſhall ner'e deface;
A grace vnknowne to any Brittiſh Wight.
This noble Knighthood ſhall Fames Trumpe reſound,
To Odcombes honour maugre Enuie fell,
O're famous Albion throughout that Iland round,
Till that my mournfull friends ſhall ring my knell.

Withall I pronounced this extemporall Oration ſtanding vpon a high ſtone at the entrance of the great Gate, calling my Countrimen my Commilitones, becauſe I was at that time their Captaine and Leader next to the Chiefetaine. By Commilitones, I vnderſtand fellow Souldiers, which terme Liuie doth often vſe in his feigned Orations, that hee bringeth Captaines in ſpeaking to their Souldiers.

Maſter CORIATS Oration. Purus, putus CORIATVS.
Quinteſſence of CORIAT.

MY worthy Commilitones, that which in the whole race of my life heretofore I neither wiſhed nor hoped for, much leſſe expected, loe now by the decree and ordinance of the Fates hath moſt fortunately hapned vnto mee. I am arriued (with the reſt of my deere Countrimen) after ſo many bitter ſtormes, and cruell conflicts of the winds, in the moſt renowmed place of the whole World (only Gods ſacred Citie of Ieruſalem excepted) ancient Troy, old decayed Ilium, the Ladie or rather Queene of all Aſia; yea the principall and moſt noble part thereof, is the moſt Noble place which our Brittiſh feete doe now tread vpon. Me thinkes, we being conducted hither by our good Genius haue euen aſpired to the eminent degree of happineſſe which thouſands of our Countrimen that haue paſſed alongſt this Coaſt, being carried away with a proſperous gale of wind haue wiſhed to attaine vnto, but haue beene fruſtrated of opportunity to enioy theſe noble ruines that you here ſee haue had the attractiue vertue like the Adamant or Loadſtone to draw hither ſome of the moſt famous perſons of the World to contemplate the ſame. Hither came the greateſt and moſt victorious Monarch that euer liued Alexander the Great who hauing erected an Altar to the honour of Achilles from whoſe ſtocke he was lineally deſcended by his Mother Olympias, to the end to offer Sacrifice vpon it to his Ghoſt hard by his Tombe, which to this day remaines, hee pronounced him happie, for that after his death he had gotten ſo Noble a Poet as Homer to emblaſon and celebrate his inuincible courage. Hither came the Learned Emperour Adrian; Our Emperour Septimius Seuerus after he had deſtroyed Byzantium, his Sonne and Succeſſour in the Empire Antonius Baſſianus Caracalla with many thouſand worthy Peeres (I dare confidently affirme) that from time to time to come hither to ſuruey theſe (that I may ſpeake with the Prince of Latine Poets)

behold (my louing Commilitones) that lamentable rubbiſh of ſtones which hath beene honoured by the moſt elegant and ſingular Poets that euer handled Quill. This ruinous Palace which you ſee heere was the place without all queſtion of the Royall Court of the moſt ancient Troiane Kings (as by the magnificence of theſe Arches, goodly ſquared ſtones and other remarkeable ſteps of venerable antiquitie is very infallibly to be gathered) namely King Ilns, whom I take to be the firſt Founder thereof, Laomedon and his vnfortunate Sonne Priamus the laſt Troiane King. There you ſee thoſe loftie and ſtately walls, which though they were for thouſands of yeeres ſince ſubuerted firſt by Hercules, and afterward by the hoſtile force of the warlike Græcians: yet you ſee the foundations thereof were not rooted vp from the ground, but that to this day moſt notable ruines thereof (obſerue I pray you with an exact and accurate view the thickneſſe, the height of them, the goodlineſſe of the ſquared ſtones) doe preſent themſelues as wofull ſpectacles to all ſtrangers, and are obiects of ſympathy and commiſeration to the moſt Adamantine heart in the World: there you may ſee decayed Caſtles and Fortifications: there alſo in another place ſubterranean Crypts and Vaults, which I beleeue, ſerued partly for Granaries and Magazines of Corne in the time of the decennall ſiege of the Citie, and partly to containe Ciſternes of water for the publike vſe of the Citizens. Beneath alſo you may ſee a great multitude of broken Marble Pillars ſtanding vpon the ground, and diſperſed ouer many parts of the old Citie. Caſt your eyes againe vpon ſome other parts, where you may behold greene Wheate growing amidſt the old fragments of ſtones, and then remember the notable ſpeech of the Poet Ouid, Iam ſeges eſt vbi Troia fuit, &c. by all theſe pitifull rudera, I find that memorable ſentence of the Greeke Poet Heſiod to be verified.

——τὰ δ᾽ ὑπέρτερα νέρτερα θῆκε
Ζεὺς ὑψιϐρεμέτης.

That is, Thunder thumping Ioue can make the loftieſt matters the moſt low and deſpicable? Alas (my Commilitones) can you behold theſe things with irrelenting and dry eyes; let mee tell you as the wandering Prince of Troy Noble Æneas told the Punicke Queene Dido in his Harangue vnto her concerning the deſtruction of this Citie

——Quis talia fando
Myrmidonum, Dolopumue aut duri miles Vlyſſes,
Temperet à lachrymis?

Riſum teneatis amici?

Certainly, the conſideration of this grieuous deſolation may iuſtly draw both ſorrow from the hearts and teares from the eyes of all ſuch as are endued with a true inſtinct of humanitie, for what more Tragicall example can you find in the whole Vniuerſe of the inconſtancie and mutabilitie of fortune then in this quondam gallant Citie? it flouriſhed once in as great glorie as any Citie vpon the Earth did in her time, and her glorie was vntainted and vnſtained for the ſpace of three hundred yeeres wanting one, being gouerned by ſix potent Kings, the firſt of which being Dardanus, reigned ſixe and thirty yeeres, Ericthonius, ſeuentie fiue; Tros, ſixtie; Ilus a great amplifier and enlarger of the City 55. Laomedon ſixe and thirtie. Priamus the laſt Prince fortie: in all which time Fortune ſhined as merrily vpon her as vpon any other Citie then extant in the World, ſauing for the ten yeeres of Priamus, in which it was beſieged by the Greekes. But at laſt after the reuolution and period of that ten yeeres ſiege, it ſuffered ſuch a rufull deuaſtation by the meanes of that fatall Horſe of armed men, that was conueyed within the walls of the Citie, the mercileſſe rage of the fire that was ſcattered euery where by the hoſtile hand, and carried to and fro by the wings of the wind, ſpoiling and depopulating all it met with all, that after that time neuer was there found any man that would reedifie any part thereof. This happened 1183. yeeres before the Incarnation of Chriſt, and 430. yeeres before the founding of Rome by Romulus, and in the time that Iephta iudged Iſrael. The like elſewhere hath happened to many other ancient and noble Cities that now lie buried in their owne ruines: as to Niniuie, Babylon, Tyrus, Carthage, Sangunton, and Numantia in Spaine; Athens, Thebes, Lacedemon and Corinth in Greece; Ptolemais now called Acon in Syria, and diuers other notable Cities; none of which I beleeue doe yeeld thoſe ſtately ruines that you now behold in this part of the Troiane Territorie.

You may alſo obſerue as in a cleere Looking-glaſſe one of the moſt pregnant examples of Luxurie, that euer was in the World in theſe confuſed heapes of ſtones, that lie before your eyes. For Adulterie was the principall cauſe of the ruines of this Citie, which is well knowne to all thoſe that haue a ſuperficiall skill in Hiſtorie, by the remembrance whereof I will now take occaſion to wiſh one charitable wiſh to the Metropolitane Citie of mine owne Countrie, and with the ſame as with an Epilogue conclude my ſpeech, that as Luxurie deſtroyed this Citie of old Troy, to which moſt ardent petitions vpon my proſtrate knee, I beſeech the great Iehoua, which is the rewarder of Chaſtitie, and ſeuere puniſher of Incontience, to auert the puniſhment from our new Troy, (for indeed, London was in former times called Troynouant) which I thinke is as much polluted and contaminated with extrauagant luſts, as euer was this old Troy.

Fœlix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum.

Directly beyond this foreſaid middle gate as you goe forward into the inward part of the Palace, there ſtandeth another ſtately Arch, which (I thinke in former times was garniſhed with a Gate alſo: this Arch is almoſt as large as the greateſt at comming into the Palace, likewiſe on each ſide of them both on the right hand and left hand, as you goe betwixt the middle Arch at the entrance of the Palace, and the oppoſite Arch which I haue laſt mentioned, there is another ſtately Arch which, I thinke, ſerued for an entrance into the ſame of the principall parts of the Palace. After this we ſaw another part of the Palace, which is very worthy the mention, tenne ſtately Arches ſtanding in a row ioyntly together. Theſe ſtand intire without any diminution or impayring, euen on the left hand of the Palace, and make a beautifull ſhew. Theſe are fourteene foot high, and ten foot and a halfe thicke, and are built with the like hard ſtone as the wals of the Citie. There are three Arches more aboue the ſame, halfe buried in the ground. Then at the very corners aboue the laſt of theſe three Arches there ſtandeth the ruine of another moſt magnificent Arch raiſed to a very loftie height, but broken about the top, at which Arch there beganne the South wall of the Palace, betwixt that goodly Arch and another iuſt correſpondent to the ſame in ſymmetrie of workmanſhip. There are ſixe more of a leſſer quantitie, but much more ruined then the ten intire Arches that I haue alreadie mentioned. Againe there ranne on in the ſame ſeries of building betwixt the middle great arch, and another of the ſame quantitie, that ſtandeth at the farther corner, ſixe Arches more like the former, ſo that in that row there are twelue Arches, and three more of a very ſumptuous and goodly Architecture, which when they all ſtood intire beautified with their ſeuerall ornaments which are now aboliſhed, preſented to the beholder, without all doubt, a moſt ſtately ſhew. Againe, on the right hand of the Palace, but a little diſtant from the ſame, there remayneth the ruine of a very ancient Building, which wee coniectured to haue beene ſome Temple dedicated to the Ethnike Gods. From the Palace wee were conducted by our Turkiſh guides, to another old ruined Building ſome quarter of a mile off; very little whereof doth appeare aboue the ground, but if you deſcend into certaine Vaults vnder the ground, you may obſerue many memorable ruines. Diuers ſtately Arches ſtanding intirely, wonderfull thicke wals, arched roofes made by Geometricall worke, as (I ſuppoſe) without any Iron or Timber. The Turkes told vs that this was once a paſſing faire Palace, the other parts of the Building being cleane defaced and demoliſhed, ſo that not ſo much as any little ruines thereof are left, the ſtones, Marble Pillers and other ornaments beeing carried away into other Countries. For diuers of theſe Troiane ruines haue beene transferred to many of the Neighbour Countries to ſerue for their publike and priuate Buildings, as to Conſtantinople, Lemnos, Leſbos, Natolia, Syo, and diuers other parts. Yea the Turkes from ſome part or other of the Troiane Territories doe daily carry away ſtones in their Gallies. Moreouer, they told vs that this Palace ſerued for the Troian Queene to inhabite and keepe her Court in. Heere at this ruine they ſhewed vs a certaine Vault vnder the ground, wherein there was found great Treaſure within theſe few yeeres, by certaine men that ſearched it out very diligently with Candles and Torches in their hands, and the ſame Treaſure was put into the Coffers of the preſent Great Turke that liueth now, Sultan Achmet.

Hauing ſeene all theſe things, wee went towards the Sea-ſide to take Boat and to goe backe to our Ship, but betwixt the Palace and the Ship we obſerued theſe three things worthy the relation; firſt a ſtately Arch ſtanding alone by it ſelfe, which heretofore ſerued for a Spring or Fountaine, but I could not ſee the leaſt drop of water about the Arch, for the Spring is vtterly dried vp, onely there is a Well neere to the ſame. Secondly, the ruines of a Wall that runneth vp into the Southerne part of the land, which is of ſuch a maruellous thickneſſe that vnto moſt of the readers it will ſeeme perhaps incredible. For it was at the leaſt thirtie Geometricall foot thicke, for I meaſured it very exactly. The ſtones of which it was built were rough and hard, but a little further vp in the Countrey we obſerued ſome other part of the ſame Wall to ſtand more intirely, and to be built with ſuch goodly ſquare Aſhler ſtone as is in the great wall before mentioned. Thirdly, a ruined old Caſtle or Fortification erected vpon a Mount, a Fort of great ſtrength and beautie in ancient times: now it is onely a Shepheards habitation. We perceiuing that it was Inhabited by ſome people went into it, hoping to haue bought ſome Wine for the refreſhing of our ſelues.

But when wee entred the ſame, in ſtead of people wee found onely the excrements of Cattell, and a place where ſome Shepheard or Heardſman had repoſed himſelfe. Alſo wee obſerued a very miſerable rubbiſh of Stones that were diſſipated and ſcattered ouer the face of the whole ground euery where within and without the Walles, after that I went to a plot of arable Ground, where I ſaw a Plough-man hold the Plough, and my ſelfe and one Maſter Francis Flyer did the like one after another, that if wee liue to be Old men we may ſay in our old age, we had once holden the Plough in the Troiane Territorie, eſpecially in that part we ſaw the Citie ſtood. After this we ſaw Mount Ida, being by my eſtimation ſome two miles diſtant from that place, but we had not the opportunitie to goe ſo neere to it as to view it exactly. I wonder that the Epithets of Nemoroſa ſhould be giuen to it by the Poets, for I could perceiue no Tree at all growing about it, and doubt whether any grew vpon it in former times, by reaſon of the rockie and ſtonie matter it conſiſteth of, wee onely diſcerned the loftie toppe of it called by the antient Poets, both Gargarus and Dyndimia, vpon which Cybiles Prieſts were called Idæi. Dactyli, Galli, and Curetes, did celebrate their Sacrifices in honour of her, being the Mother of the Gods. I vnderſtand that ſtore of Turpentine doth grow vpon the Hill and the ſides of it.

Theſe notable things that I haue ſeen in Troy are ſo worthy the obſeruation, that I would not for fiue hundred pounds but I had ſeene them, and had I not ſeene them now, I thinke I ſhould haue taken a journey out of England of purpoſe to ſee the ſame. Therefore let me aduiſe all my Country-men that meane to trauell into the world for obſeruation, to ſee this famous place in their Trauels, as being farre the moſt worthieſt of all the ruined places in the world that are not Inhabited.

At laſt when wee came to the ſhoare ſide to enter our Boat before wee left the land, we aſcended a little Mount ſcituate hard by the Sea, which, it is likely to haue beene made by the Art of man and not by Nature, and that in the time of the tenne yeares Warres betwixt the Grecians and Troianes. Another artificiall Mount of the ſame kind I obſerued beyond that alſo. By whom (whether by the Grecians or by the Troianes) and to what end they were raiſed, I doe not know. Onely I coniecture they were made by the Troianes, to the end that from the ſame they might looke ouer the Walls, which I thinke were built alongſt the Sea-coaſt, and ſo by Darts, Slings, Stones, Arrowes, and ſuch other war-like Inſtruments to annoy the Greekes riding at Anchor neere to the ſhoare.

Beſides the fruitfull Valley that I haue mentioned, which lyeth at the backſide of the Promontorie Sygeum, through which runneth the Riuer Simois, there is another moſt fertile and delicious Valley, that lyeth by the Sea-ſide oppoſite to Tenedos, which I thinke is as pleaſant and fat a Valley as any in the world, being extended at the leaſt a dozen miles in length alongſt the Sea-coaſt, and ſome ten miles as I coniecture in bredth, the ground being as fruitfull to produce all manner of Commodites as any plot of ground vnder the Sunne, but by reaſon that the Inhabitants of the Countrey are oftentimes infeſted by Pirats and men of Warre, which take away from them what they liſt, they cannot find any ſecure place of habitation in all that tract: by meanes whereof it commeth to paſſe, that there are few dwelling Houſes there, and ſo conſequently the Coaſt is more vntilled and vnmannured then otherwiſe it would bee. Notwithſtanding there are diuers goodly plots of Corne, onely Wheat to be ſeene in ſundry parts of the Valley neere to the Sea-ſide, but the other parts of the Valley further in the Countrey ſeeme vnto thoſe that behold it a farre off vpon the Sea, to bee couered wholly with Wood, which conſiſteth eſpecially of liue Oake-trees. By a liue Oake-tree, I meane a ſtrange kind of Oake which groweth Bellonius l.2.c.6 Deſcribing the Troian ruines, ſaith that Simois and Xanthus haue not water enough in Winter for a gooſe to ſwim, and in Summer are quite drie. He mentioneth Baths &c.

Liue Oake-tree.

groweth in diuers parts of Aſia as well as heere, that differeth much from our Engliſh Oake, the body or trunke of it is much leſſer then of our Forreſt Oakes, that are but of an ordinarie ſize, alſo they are much lower then ours. As for the wood of this Tree it ſeemeth to be of an inpenetrable hardneſſe, ſuch as no Axe can cleaue or deuide a ſunder without a great deale of difficultie when it is dry, but being greene it is eaſily hewed downe. It beareth a kind of Fruit or Acorne, ſomewhat differing from ours, which is called Valania, which ſerueth for diuers vſes. For beſides that, it feedeth and fatneth Hogges making the fleſh eate paſſing ſweetly, they tanne their Leather with it, moreouer moſt of the Turkiſh Ships are made of this Wood, but it lyeth a long time in the water before they cleaue it and worke it for the Ship timber.

But me thinkes I heare ſome Troian complaine of another tedious ten-yeeres Siege: I will therefore abruptly breake off the reſt, with his comming to Conſtantinople, Entertainment there, his Oration to the Lord Ambaſſadour, Sir Paul Pinder, and manifold kindneſſes from him, and other Conſtantinopolitan Engliſh: I will ſuddenly bring you in vpon him in a Franciſcan Frierie, beholding a Superſtitious Tragedie, which you ſhall heare from himſelfe, with other Relations of that Citie.

Maſter Coryats Conſtantinopolitan Obſeruations abridged.

The firſt of Aprill being Thurſday, and the day immediatly before Good-friday, I with diuers of my Countrimen went about midnight to the Monaſtery of the Franciſcan Friers, where within a little after I came thither, I obſerued a very rigorous and auſtere kind of Diſcipline, whereof indeed I had often heard before that time, but neuer ſaw till then. Iuſt about the point of Midnight a little after Maſſe was begun, certaine fellowes proſtrating themſelues in the middle of the Quire of the Church, directly before the high Altar, Whipped themſelues verie cruelly, and continued in the mercileſſe puniſhment of themſelues at the leaſt an houre and a halfe. At the firſt I thought they had beene ſome of the Friers themſelues but therein I erred, for they loue to ſpare their fleſh though it be otherwiſe reported of them. There were of thoſe ſome foure or fiue and were indeed certaine Galley Slaues, that in lieu of the puniſhment which they did vndergoe for other men, that againſt Eaſter had confeſſed their ſinnes, and were enioyned a certaine for their offences, were to be releaſed from the Gallies. This I vnderſtand to bee the Cuſtome euery yeere, that the richer ſort of people hauing confeſſed their ſinnes to the Prieſt, and thereupon required to performe ſuch a Penance, doe procure theſe kind of Slaues vpon condition of Libertie to vndertake this puniſhment for them. The poore Villaines did endure ſuch bitter chaſtiſement which they inflicted vpon themſelues, that I could ſcarſe behold them with drie eyes: their Faces were couered with Canuaſſe vayles ſo that no man could perceiue any of them, and all the middle part of their backe was naked which they laſhed with certaine Napkins, at the ends whereof were Sitters, and againe at the end of thoſe Sitters were incloſed certaine litle ſharp peeces of Iron, made like the ſtraight part of the rowell of a Spurre, which at the very firſt blow that it layd vpon the ſkinne did eaſily draw blood. They kept a certaine order in laying on their blowes, now on the right ſhoulder, & after ouer the left, in the ſpace of a quarter of an houre, I ſaw one of them that dealt ſomwhat roughly with himſelfe by redoubling his blowes a little faſter then the reſt, did fetch off all the skin from the middle part of his backe, which was a very dolefull and tragicall Spectacle, and when hee had very bitterly whipped himſelfe, there came a certaine fellow with a Cloth in his hand ſteeped in Vineger, with which he wiped away the blood that it ſhould not rankle. After which the Slaue continued whipping of himſelfe after a very terrible and cruell manner, but moſt of the reſt fauoured themſelues much more then this man did. Amongſt diuers others Gentlemen of qualitie that came thither to behold this ſpectacle, the French Ambaſſadour preſented himſelfe with great Deuotion. This ſeuere Diſcipline being now ended, one of the Friers aſcended the Pulpit and made a Sermon in the Italian Tongue concerning the Paſſion of Chriſt.

Self-whipping. Pœnitentia pœnitenda. Herein we will allow the Popiſh Doctrine of merit. But theſe hypocrites which will doe Penance by others muſt goe to Heauen by proxie too.

The Tueſday in the Eaſter weeke my Lord went to the Captaine Baſhawes, and my ſelfe attended vpon him. At his returne from the Baſhawes Palace, his Lordſhip eſpying a certaine Turkiſh Fortune-teller called Rama, Fiſhing vnder the wall of the Seraglio neere to a holy Well, the water whereof is good (He was Fortune-teller to the Grand Signior himſelfe) one that was a kinſman of Mahomets, for hee ware a Turbet of a very deepe green die. Vnto him my Lord ſent me with Maſter Edward Connock his Secretary and one of his Druggermen, to the end he ſhould tell me my Fortune, whereupon he deliuered vnto me two Dice, and willed them to caſt them vpon a certaine ſmooth greene Stone that lay before him, which when I had done, hee wrote with his Pen certaine Turkiſh Characters vpon the ſame ſtone, by vertue whereof he Prognoſticated my Fortune and preſaged to this effect, as the Druggerman interpreted his ſpeech, viz. That I was a man deſirous to Trauell into remote Regions, that according to my deſire I ſhould trauell farre, and ſhould be in danger for my Religion ſake, and ſhould alſo eſcape that danger, after that I ſhould come to a great Citie (perhaps he meant London) where many would flocke Maſter Coryats Fortune: but it fortuned to proue a lie: the more the pitie, not for Odcombes ſake ſo much and the Syrenaicall crue, as for the curious diligence of many his obſeruations, which might to the wiſeſt haue proued profitable.

about me to heare me Diſcourſe of thoſe things that I had ſeene and done in my Trauels. At laſt Maſter Secretary gaue him certaine Aſpers for a gratuitie: hee ſaid alſo that I ſhould write a Booke of my Trauels, and publiſh it to the benefit of my Countrymen, and many thouſands beſides.

Daruiſes, a kind of Turkiſh Friers.

There is a Colledge of Turkiſh Monkes in Galata, that are called Daruiſes, neere to one of their publike Buriall places, who euery Tueſday and Friday (which is the Turkiſh Sabbath) doe performe the ſtrangeſt exerciſe of Deuotion that euer I ſaw or heard of. It was my chance to ſee it the ninth of Aprill, with ſome other Engliſh-men that went thither to obſerue the ſame, and therefore I will write a little of it according to mine owne experience. About halfe an houre after twelue of the clocke the ſame day, I entred a prettie faire roome, to the which I paſſed through an outward Court, which roome was before almoſt full of Turkes that came thither to ſerue God in their ſuperſtitious kind, and had put off their Shooes (according to their wonted cuſtome) and placed them vpon Shelfes. Some part of the walls of this roome were in the inſide decked with Inſcriptions and Poeſies written in the Turkiſh language, one directly ouer the Interpreter or Expounder of the Law, and others heere and there, all tending to Religion. The middle part of the roome which is formed out ſquare, is voyd, and reſerued onely for the Religious men to ſit in; but all the foure parts round about ſerued for the Spectators to behold that which I will now expreſſe, which Spectators were as well Chriſtians as Turkes. For hither the Turkes will ſuffer the Chriſtians to haue acceſſe, though not to their Moſquies. There are other inner roomes alſo ſomewhat neere this where Women ſate apart by themſelues, with their Maskes before their Faces. A little after I came into the roome the Daruiſes repayred into the middle voyd ſpace, ſitting Croſſe-legged, bending their Bodies lowe towards the floore for Religion ſake, euen almoſt flat vpon their Faces, and that by murmuring out certaine Religious tearmes: the whole companie of them were about two and fiftie. Their habits differing much from the other Turkes, firſt the couering of their Head was of a differing ſort from the other, for they weare certaine gray Felts made in a forme not vnlike the blockes of Hats that we vſe in England, ſome whereof about the lower end are couered with a little white Shaſh, likewiſe the Cloake or vpper Veſt of moſt of them was exceedingly patched, and mended with a great multitude of ſeuerall peeces, to which torne Gowne I thinke they attribute matter of Holineſſe.

Faſhion of their Habite.

Mahumetan Holies.

Deruiſes ſtrange turnings.

The whole company of them being now ſetled in their places, and holding their Turkiſh manuſcript Bookes in their hands, a certaine Singing-man ſitting a part in an vpper roome began to ſing certaine Hymnes, but with the moſt vnpleaſant and harſh notes that euer I heard, exceedingly differing from our Chriſtian Church ſinging, for the yelling and diſorderly ſqueaking of them did euen grate mine eares. Whenſoeuer hee pronounced the Name of Mahomet, all of them did caſt downe their Heads to their knees. After hee had done, the Interpreter of the Law aſcended into a Chaire, and read a certaine Turkiſh Booke for ſome halfe houre to the Aſſembly, which contayned the Mahometane Doctrine, but when hee named him, they fell proſtrate vpon their Faces and kiſſed the ground. Almoſt a quarter of an houre before he had done, three Pipers ſitting in the roome with the Singer, began to play vpon certaine long Pipes not vnlike Tabors, which yeelded a very ridiculous and fooliſh Muſicke, and continued ſo very neere a quarter of an houre after the Clergie man had ended his Lecture: and with them there played another, that ſtrucke with his hands a ſtrange kind of Inſtrument made of Mettall, in the forme of a kind of Baſon. Hauing played very neere a quarter of an houre, vpon a ſodaine they ſounded much louder then ordinarie, whereupon ſome fiue and twentie of the two and fiftie Daruiſes, ſuddainly roſe vp bare legged and bare-footed, and caſting aſide their vpper Garment ſome of them hauing their their breſts all vncouered, they began by little and little to turne about the Interpreter of the Law turning gently in the middeſt of them all, afterward they redoubled their force and turned with ſuch incredible ſwiftneſſe, that I could not chuſe but admire it. Amongſt the reſt, there was one little Boy of ſome twelue yeeres of age, that turning in a corner of the roome ſtrucke no ſmall admiration in all the Spectators that were Strangers. This turning they kept for the ſpace of one whole houre at the leaſt: during which time, ſometimes they turned exceeding ſwiftly, ſometimes very gently. After they had halfe done, the Singer in the vpper roome began to ſing againe, at the pronunciation of ſome of whoſe words, the Daruiſes ſodainly mumbled out certaine ſtrange tearmes, with a moſt hideous kind of murmuring that did in a manner terrifie and aſtoniſh vs that were meere ſtrangers to theſe Ceremonies. This they did three or foure ſeuerall times with an acclamation of all the Turks that ſtood by. The forme of their Dauncing is as ſtrange as the continuance of their ſwiftneſſe, for ſometimes they ſtretch out their Armes as farre as they can in length, ſometimes they contract them in a leſſer compaſſe, ſometimes they hold them about their Heads, ſometimes againe they performe certaine merry geſtures, as if they were drawing a Bow and ſhooting forth an Arrow. Likewiſe ſome of them did continue turning during the whole time in one and the ſelfe ſame place, and others more forward from one corner to another. This exerciſe now driuing to an end, one of the Daruiſes beginneth ſome Prayer in Arabicke, and continually turning about with the reſt of the Company, pronounceth it with a very audible voyce, and his Prayer being ended there is an vpſhot of this ridiculous and Ethnike deuotion for this time, after it had continued almoſt an houre and a halfe. The violence of their turning is ſo great, that I haue heard ſome of them haue fallen downe dead in the place, through the extremitie of their ſwift Circumgyration, and whoſoeuer hee is that doth ſo, is eſteemed for a Saint. Theſe Feaſts are like thoſe Trietericall Orgia that were performed by the furious Myrmalores the Prieſts of Bacchus, to the honour of their drunken God, vpon the Mountaines of Citheron in Bœotia.

Theſe Daruiſes though they are Religious men haue no lands to maintaine them as the Chriſtian Monaſteries haue, but a certaine ſtipend payed them euery day, partly by the Grand Signior, and partly by certaine Baſhawes, and it is eſteemed for ſo Holy an order, that diuers Baſhawes haue renounced their Dignitie and pompe of the world, and entred themſelues into this Order for the better ſaluation of their ſoules. And at this day the Grand Signior hath a Brother of this Societie that liueth in the Seraglia, whom he hath often intended to put to Death, according to the old principle of State that hath beene theſe many yeares obſerued amongſt the Turkiſh Emperours, but hee hath hapned to fall into ſome bitter Diſeaſe whenſoeuer he hath thought vpon any ſuch matter, which is the reaſon that he yet ſuffereth him to liue.

Muſtapha, ſince this, twice Emperour, and thrice Religious or Daruiſe.

Great Fire.

The twentieth of Aprill, there began a Fire in Conſtantinople about midnight, which was like to haue done much hurt, if it had not beene preuented by the care and induſtrie of the Captaine Baſhaw. For hee came thither a little after it began with a great multitude of men to repreſſe the furie of the flame as much as in them lay. Hee was ſo furious at that time, that with a certaine war-like Inſtrument called in the Turkiſh Tongue a Capooch, which is ſomewhat like a Mace, he ſtrucke a Ianizarie that he ſaw rifling of a Houſe, ſo fiercely vpon the head, that immediatly he fell downe dead in the place: and had done the like to ſome other Ianizaries that were the adherents of the other, in his enterpriſe of ranſacking other mens goods, if they had not ſodainly eſcaped by flight. For indeed it doth happen that Ianizaries doe of purpoſe ſet Houſes on fire, euen to the great endangering of the Citie for prey and ſpoyle ſake, eſpecially the houſes of Iewes. For which cauſe the Iewes within theſe few yeares, haue both made their Houſes ſtronger then they were wont to be, and alſo haue made Vaults vnder their houſes, into the which they may conueigh their Goods, whenſoeuer there chanceth any ſodaine Fire. Art the time of this Fire there came the Buſtan which is a great man of the Grand Signiors, with two thouſand men out of the Seraglio, for the helping of the Baſhaw. For indeed it behoued the Baſhaw to looke to the maine chance for the quenching of the Fire, in the time of the Grand Signiors abſence, leaſt if there ſhould haue beene any great hurt done, perhaps he might haue loſt his Head after the Kings returne to the Citie, but the hurt was not ſo great as it was feared to haue beene, for there were not aboue fiftie Houſes burnt. It is the Cuſtome that whenſoeuer any Fire riſeth in the Citie, to Hang vp him in whoſe Houſe it beginneth, as now a Cooke in whoſe houſe it began was Hanged preſently after the Fire ceaſed. The like kinde of Fires and much more furious haue beene often ſeene in this Citie, as they are mentioned by the antient Hiſtoriographers, which haue waſted not only the priuate Houſes of the Inhabitants, but alſo Temples, Statues, Pillers and other beautifull Ornaments of the Citie.

The one and twentieth of Aprill about ſixe of the clocke at night, I ſaw the moſt reſplendent and glittering ſhew that euer I did in my life. For the Turkes hanged all their Turkiſh Moſquies both of Conſtantinople and Galbata with Lampes; which ſtood in a very decent and comely order round about the circle of their ſlender Towers, where the Prieſt doth vſe to call the people to Prayers at certaine houres limited with a very loude voyce. Some of theſe Towers haue two and ſome three Circles in them, each aboue another, the ſhew at the firſt hanging out of the Lampes ſeemed ſtrange vnto me, that neuer had ſeene the like before; but about Mid-night when it was much darker, then when they were firſt hanged out, they yeelded a paſſing glorious and refulgent Spectacle, for it was my hap to ſee them againe. Aboue all the reſt of the Towers thoſe foure that belong to the Temple of Solyman the magnificent, made a moſt incomparable bright ſhew, for two of the foure being adorned with three Circles had three rowes of Lampes hanged out, and the other two with two Circles had two more; the Towers of which Temple made the braueſt ſhew of all the Towers of the whole Citie. Theſe Lampes hanged till foure of the clocke in the Morning, and were then taken downe. The occaſion of the hanging out of them, was becauſe that Night Mahomet was borne in the Citie of Medina in Arabia. Theſe kind of Lampes they hang out at foure times of the yeare beſides; as in the time of Ramazan, which is their Lent and laſteth thirtie dayes, during which time, it is not lawfull for any Turke to eate or drinke before Night, and then they vſe to recompence their day Abſtinence with their night Gluttonie. Alſo in that ſpace Ianizaries commit inſolencies againſt Chriſtians, taking money from whomſoeuer they meet by the way. The ſecond beginneth in December and laſteth three dayes, and is called Hodglar-byram, &c.

Lampes.

The

The eight and twentieth of April, being Wedneſday, about fiue of the clocke in the morning, my Lord and his Company (whereof my ſelfe was one) went into Adrinople ſtreet in Conſtantinople neere to the gate of Adrinople, to ſee the Grand Signior come into the Citie from Adrinople, whether hee went vpon the one and twentieth day of December laſt, the pompe of it was ſo gallant that I neuer ſaw the like in my life; neither doe I thinke that the like hath beene vſed amongſt any Princes of the world ſauing theſe Muſulmen, ſince the time of the triumphs of the Romane Emperours, when they went to the Capitol, after the conquering of ſome famous Country: the place where hence he came that morning is called Dowt Baſham, a place ſtanding by it ſelf in the Countrey ſome three miles from Conſtantinople; the people that attended vpon his perſon at that time, were ſaid to amount to the number of 15000. Firſt rode the Subbaſhaw of Conſtantinople and Galata, with one hundred men on horſebacke, and other ſeruants alſo they had which went a foot, carrying certaine Muskets in their hands. Next followed French Souldiers, a company of fugitiue Rogues, that to get a large pay ſomewhat more then they haue, either in their owne Countrey, or could get in the Low Countries fled to Conſtantinople to bee entertained by the Grand Signior, of whom the greateſt part of them doth receiue halfe a Doller a day for their pay: their Collonell rode with ſome twentie of his principall men, and all the reſt to the number of one hundred with Muskets on foot, after them the Officers of the Arſenall a foot, with the chiefe of them a horſebacke, certaine of them carrying a Gallie with a man in it, a verie ſtrange and ridiculous conceit: for indeed euerie one laughed heartily at it; after them came Squibſters, but how many in number I could not vnderſtand; then came a great multitude of Gemiglandes all on foot, whereof one had a feather ſticking in his fleſh, euen in his face ſomewhat neere to his right eye: then a Coach couered with cloth of Gold, which ſerued for the Grand Signiors riding, wherein himſelfe and his Sultana did vſe to ride: then a Delee, that is a foole with a Beares skinne vpon his backe, then Chauſes on horſebacke, with Braſſe and Iron Maces in their hands, which they carried vpon their right ſhoulders, theſe were in number 200. and their ſeruants a foot ſixe hundred, and after them ſeuen Coaches, then came Ianizaries on foot foure thouſand with Muskets; ſome of theſe weare Beares skinnes; and after them other Ianizaries on horſebacke, euerie one hauing a Speare in his hand, with a little Flag in the ſame; after them againe other kind of Ianizaries that weare leather Cappes, on the top of which were great white Oſtriches feathers: then came certaine Horſes driuen by men of purpoſe, that carried water in Leather Bottles for men to drinke in: then certaine Turkiſh Saints with verie long haire and ragged clothes. Next followed a black Elephant, after them Ladies, hundred & twelue on horſebacke, with three hundred men attending on them, and the Muftie: then head Viſiers, being eight or nine of the moſt principall of Turkie, with one hundred Chauſes their attendants; then ſqueaking Muſicke both Vocall and Inſtrumentall. The Daruiſes a foot vſing a ridiculous ſhooting and eleuation of their voyce. Then ſome one hundred Pikemen a foot, who beſides their Pikes carried alſo Bowes and Arrowes. Then Mahomets kinſmen a horſebacke, with greene Halberts. Then Vice Cadies on horſebacke, then Ladies againe; then nine goodly Horſes of the Kings led by Chiauſes, verie richly adorned with Saddles and Horſe clothes of great price, a meruellous rich Target, being hanged at the Pomell of the Saddle of each Horſe made of maſſie beaten Gold, and garniſhed with varietie of precious Stones, each of theſe Horſes is ſaide to be worth two hundred pound ſterling. Next the Kinges Grey-hounds, being ledde and clothed with couerings of Cloth of Gold: of theſe there were at the leaſt one hundred. Then came Chiauſes on horſebacke, namely twentie to attend the Kings perſon, and had fiftie ſeruants more attending vpon them: then rode one with a Streamer of greene Taffata, wherein was an Arabian Inſcription in very great Letters; this is ſaid to haue beene vſed by Mahomet himſelfe their Prophet, in his warres with Coſoroes King of Perſia and others alſo. Neere vnto this Enſigne, was carried another Enſigne (which is the common Standard that they vſe in their warres, as heeretofore the Romanes vſed the Eagle) that is the taile of the Horſe faſtened vpon the toppe of a long Staffe. Next went his Archers, called Solackes, with Bowes and Arrowes attired in fine linnen ſhirts that reached to the calfe of their legges and long ſleeues curiouſly wrought with delicate ſeames of Needle Worke. Alſo they had couerings for their head (Hattes I cannot fitly call them) which conſiſted of Siluer fairely guilt, with long feathers, &c. The one and twentieth of May happened a terrible fire: three great fiers had fallen out betwixt the twentieth of April, and the one and twentieth of May.

Graſhoppers.

Graſhoppers ſometimes doe fall ſo thick in Conſtantinople, and the Territories about the Citie in the Summer time, and that eſpecially in Iune or Iuly, being brought in with an Eaſterne wind, that a man cannot paſſe in the ſtreets of Conſtantinople or Galata, but hee ſhall euerie where tread vpon them. Alſo they flie ſo thicke vpon the tops of houſes, that they doe euen couer the tiles: and in Medowes, Paſtures, and vpon Hills, lie in ſuch infinite and innumerable multitudes, that they ſeeme to couer the graſſe, and in the high-wayes horſes that goe tread vpon them and kill them in their iourney; likewiſe vpon trees of all ſorts, Vines, Corne, &c. they fall in ſuch abundance, that ſometimes they annoy and ſpoile great ſtore of Fruit; beſides they are much greater then ours are in the Weſt parts of Europe.

Iob-

Butterflies great.

I obſerued in Conſtantinople in the moneth of May, certaine Butter-flies as great as Reare-miſe with foure wings, each whereof diſtinguiſhed with a round ſpot made circularly, conſiſting of two colours Purple and Blacke, and two Hornes in their head made in the forme of branches of a Tree; they ſpawne thirtie or fortie Spawnes in a night.

Sodomie.

Cheapneſſe.

All the Turkes and others, that doe ride in Conſtantinople or Galata, doe couer the backe and buttocks of the Horſe with a faire cloth. The Turkes are exceedingly giuen to Sodomie, and therefore diuers keep prettie boyes to abuſe them by prepoſterous venerie. A Cock and Hen of Pheſants ſold for ſixtie Aſpers, and Partridges for twentie Aſpers a paire. Hawkes called Fawlcons ſo cheape, that a man may buy one young for twentie Aſpers, being bred within fiue or ſixe miles of the Citie.

Fiery Flies.

Cadileskiers.

In the Moneth of May and Iuly, I obſerued euery euening in Conſtantinople about ſeuen of the clocke, certaine little Flies flying abroad in the aire, with fiery tailes, which ſeemed to mee the firſt time that I ſaw them, certaine little ſparkes of fire flying to and fro in the aire. Afterward hauing taken one of them and opened his bellie, I found a certaine bright and gliſtering ſparke of fire in his taile, which I neuer ſaw before. Theſe kinde of Flies doe much vſe to flie abroad in the Summer time in Conſtantinople, onely in the euening, which a ſtranger that neuer ſaw them before, would take to be true flakes of fire. There are in the Turkiſh Empire two men of great authoritie, like the Lord Chancellors, called Cadileskeers, the one of Romalia, the other of Natolia; hee of Romalia hath the authoritie to remoue Cadys from their places in Romalia, and to ſubſtitute others in their roomes, the like hath he of Natolia. Alſo they are to ſit in the Diuan with the Viſiers and Baſhawes, to giue their verdict in caſes of Iuſtice; without whoſe opinion and ſentence nothing can be certainely determined.

Cimices.

Courteſie.

The Turkes will not ſuffer theſe three things to be medled withall by a Chriſtian or Iew, viz. his Religion, his Women, his Slaue. Thoſe kind of Flies that troubled me in Italy, did in the night time as much infect mee in Conſtantinople, as being as familiar to Thrace as to Italy; I meane the Cimices, after that being once taken and bruiſed vpon the naile of a man, doth couer the whole naile with bloud and ſtinke. The Turke doth neuer at the ſaluting of his friend at any time of the day, or when hee drinketh to him at dinner or ſupper, put off his Turbant (as wee Chriſtians doe our Hats one to another) but boweth his head and putteth his right hand vpon his breſt, ſo that hee vtterly diſliketh the faſhion that is vſed amongſt vs of putting off our Hattes, therefore when hee wiſheth any ill to his Enemie, he prayeth God to to ſend him no more reſt then to a Chriſtians Hat.

Phlebotomie.

Superſtition.

The Turkes, as they ſhaue publikely in the ſtreets, likewiſe they let bloud oftentimes in the ſtreets, but ſo indiſcreetly, that they ſuffer ſometimes a man to bleed at the leaſt two or three pounds of bloud, to the extreme weakning of their bodies: wheras few of our men ſuffer their Patient to bleed aboue halfe a pound. The true Muſulman wil ſcarce kill a louſe, if he find him in his apparell, but throwes him away, affirming, that it is contrary to the rules of charitie to kill him, or any thing elſe that hath life in it, except thoſe things that they kill for their ſuſtenance. And as for Birds that they ſee incloſed in a Cage, they will buy them for ſome money of the owner, and after let them flie out of the cage, for they thinke that there is iniurie done to them to debar them of their libertie. After the moneth of May, you ſhall ſcarce ſee till the end of September, any green graſſe growing abroad in the Medowes or Fields, becauſe after that time it is all ſcorched away with the heat of the Sunne. So it falleth out in moſt of thoſe Eaſterne Countries, otherwiſe then it doth here in England.

Pride.

Boxing.

Fannes.

The pride of the Turkiſh Viſiers or Baſhawes is ſo great, that when a Chriſtian Ambaſſador doth either bring them or ſend them a Preſent of great worth, they haue not the honeſtie as to thanke him. Whenſoeuer the Turks or Greeks fall to buffets, they neither ſtrike one another with their fiſts, but altogether with the palme of their hands, which I haue often obſerued amongſt them. In England onely our women, and thoſe gentle doe carry Fannes in their hands made of Oſtrich feathers, blacke, blue, red, yellow, &c. but no Gentlemen whatſoeuer; but here in Conſtantinople I haue obſerued the contrary, that onely men, and thoſe Turkes, Greekes, and Franks doe carry theſe kind of Fannes, and neuer any women that I could perceiue.

Amis an Engliſh Iew.

Rites of Circumciſion.

The ſeuenth of Auguſt being Saturday, my courteous friend Maſter William Pearch being deſirous to gratifie mee in a matter for the which I had often before ſollicited him, inuited mee and Maſter William Ford, Preacher to our Nation, to the houſe of a certaine Engliſh Iew, called Amis, borne in the Crootched Friers in London, who hath two ſiſters more of his owne Iewiſh Religion, Commorant in Galata, who were likewiſe borne in the ſame place; to this mans houſe I ſay wee came, the foreſaid day about nine of the clocke in the morning to ſee a matter, which in my former trauells I wiſhed to haue ſeene, eſpecially in Venice, but neuer till then had the opportunitie to attaine vnto, namely a circumciſion. It was done in a priuate houſe, according to the cuſtome of the Iewes reſident in Conſtantinople, and not in a Synagogue as it is with the Iewes in other Countries. This foreſaid Amis, for the loue hee bore to our Engliſh Nation, in the which hee liued till hee was thirtie yeeres of age, being at the time of my reſidence in Conſtantinople ſixtie, as alſo for his good will ſake, which hee bore to my foreſaid friend Maſter William Pearch, receiued vs with very courteous entertainment, preſenting vnto vs at a Table in a fine little roome where he placed vs, diuers delicate diſhes and fruits with a cup of moſt excellent Wine, often welcomming vs with many heartie and wel-wiſhing ſpeeches. While wee were at breakfaſt, diuers Iewes came into the roome, and ſung certaine Hebrew Songs; after which the child was brought to his Father, who ſate downe in a chaire, and placed the child being now eight dayes old in his lap. The whole company being deſirous that we Chriſtians ſhould obſerue their ceremonie, called vs to approach neere to the child. And when we came, a certaine other Iew drawing forth a little Inſtrument made not vnlike thoſe ſmal Ciſſers that our Ladies and Gentlewomen doe much vſe, did with the ſame cut off the Prepuce or fore-ſkinne of the child, and after a very ſtrange manner vnvſed (I beleeue) of the ancient Hebrewes, did put his mouth to the childs yard, and ſucked vp the bloud. All his Priuities (before hee came into the roome) were beſprinkled with a kind of powder, which after the Circumciſer had done his buſineſſe, was blowed away by him, and another powder caſt on immediately. After he had diſpatched his worke, the ſame alſo after his worke was done, tooke a little ſtrong Wine that was held in a Goblet by a fellow that ſtood neere him, and powred it into the childs mouth to comfort him in the middeſt of his paines, who cried out very bitterly. The paine being for the time very bitter indeed, though it will be (as they told me) cured in the ſpace of foure and twentie houres. But thoſe of any riper yeeres that are circumciſed (as it too often commeth to paſſe, that Chriſtians which turne Turkes) as at fortie or fiftie yeeres of age, doe ſuffer great paine for the ſpace of a moneth, the Prepuce that was cut off was carried to the Mother, who keepeth it very preciouſly as a thing of worth.

Lampes.

The twelfth of Auguſt being Thurſday, the Turkes about eight of the clocke at night, illuminated the ſteeples of their Moskies, with abundance of Lampes ouer all Conſtantinople and Galata, (as they did vpon Mahomets birth day before mentioned by mee) as being the Eue of their firſt Sabbath in the Moneth or Moone of Regepf, by way of preparation for their great Feaſt of Ramazan, which followed afterward, which cuſtome they obſerue euery yeere vpon the foreſaid day.

Dogs baniſhed to preuent peſtilence.

The eleuenth of September, ſome of the learned Turkes that were ſkilfull in their Law, obſeruing that the contagion of the Plague was lately diſperſed ouer diuers places of the Citie, had recourſe to ſome of their Muſulman Bookes, to the end they might informe themſelues of ſome conuenient and diſcreet courſe to be taken for the preuention of the ſickneſſe, and finding in one of them, that ſome thirtie yeeres ſince there was made an Edict for the baniſhing of all the Dogs out of the Towne, as being principall Inſtruments of ſcattering the Plague, by reaſon of their free paſſing vp and downe from one houſe to another, they held it meet to imitate that example, and to doe the like. So that the matter being now propounded to the Grand Signior, it was at laſt determined, that the Dogges ſhould be baniſhed, and for the better performance of the matter, finally, they concluded thus, that euery Chriſtian and Iew dwelling in Conſtantinople ſhould by a day limited (vnder the paine of forfeiting foure Chiquins) preſent a Dogge to the Cadie, and taking of him a Teskeria (this is a Turkiſh word that ſignifieth a Certificate written vnder his hand) for a teſtimonie of performance of the ſame ſhould afterward bring him to the water ſide, and ſee him imbarked for Saitan: for there were certaine veſſels not much vnlike our lighters at London, aſſigned only for tranſporting the Dogges, the Naulum or paſſage being an Aſper for euery Dogge: by meanes whereof it came to paſſe that within one weeke there were no leſſe then twentie thouſand Dogges euen a great Armie of them carried ouer to Santan: and whereas the Citie did not yeeld Dogges enough for the ſeuerall Families of Chriſtians and Iewes to preſent to the Cadie, thoſe of Galata bought Dogges at a deere rate to tranſport them ouer to Conſtantinople, and to ſell them there much deerer. Mungrels and maſterleſſe Curres that before ſtrayed vp and downe the Citie, being now worth twenty or thirty Aſpers. Now whereas the Grand Signior held it fit that they ſhould be all killed when they came to the Saitanicall ſhoare, the Muftie who is the Turkiſh Oracle, would not giue his conſent to that, affirming, that it would be a very vncharitable action.

Dogged Charitie.

The Viſiers ſonnes circumciſed.

The twentieth of September, three of the Viſiers ſonnes Rod vp and downe in the Citie in great pompe being accompanied with many Spahies mounted vpon their goodly Palfreyes that were richly furniſhed. And the ſame three were that day circumciſed, the cuſtome beeing ſuch, that when the Sonnes of any eminent Turke is circumciſed, a little before they performe the act vpon him, he rideth vp and downe the City with great ſolemnity with diuers Iewels of great prize in his Turbant, his long lock hanging downe behind his back artificially wouen and wrought in with curious pleites and treſſes, and adorned with Diamonds and other ſparkling ſtones of great value. Likewiſe they haue two long Pendants made of Gold Plate, that hang downe in the like manner ouer their backe. In their Turbant beſides their Iewels they weare blacke Oſtridge-feathers. Some of them weare vpper Veſts of Cloth of Gold, and Cimiters by their ſides with a maruellous rich handle and ſcabberd: their horſes very luſtie, worth ſometimes a hundred pounds ſterling a Horſe, garniſhed with moſt rich Furniture, the forepart and hinder of the Saddle being of maſſie Siluer Plate double gilded: the headſtall of his Bridle and Pithell conſiſting of the like ſiluer double gilded; a Horſe-cloth couering all the buttockes of the Horſe, worth perhaps ſome two hundred Dollers. Before the youths certaine Gemilands walke afoot, carrying certaine ſtrange deuices of a prettie height in their hands, made partly of little ſhreds of Paper, and partly of thinne Siluer Plate with round Figures made in the forme of the World. Likewiſe neere to them goe certaine Flutes that yeeld a very ridiculous and ſqueaking Muſicke with their Flutes. The Horſemen rode very orderly in their rankes, two and two together. After all this, returning to their Fathers Houſe, they are feaſted with much good cheere.

Fire workes.

This day did theſe youths preſent themſelues to the Grand Signior to kiſſe his hand, who beſtowed vpon each of them two vpper Veſts of Cloth of Gold, two Iewels and two rich Goblets. The ſame day about ſeuen of the clocke at night, their Father the Viſier made notable ſhewes vpon the water before the Grand Signior with fire-workes. For there were ſixteene Boates that ſerued for the ſame purpoſe, wherein prettie Caſtles were contriued, the people in which skirmiſhed together at the leaſt an houre, ſpending ſuch abundance of Powder in their fire-workes, that I neuer ſaw the like before, ſending vp diuers of their flaſhes in the Aire, as high as the higheſt Steeple in Conſtantinople; a ſight moſt notable to obſerue ſo many Boats with their fire-workes encounter ſo long together, in which ſpace there was no ceſſation or intermiſſion, but that you ſhould ſometimes ſee foure, ſometimes ſixe fierie Steeples aſcending into the Aire together with many burning lines paſſing too and fro vpon the water in diuers ſeuerall formes. Amongſt the reſt of theſe fire-workes I obſerued ſome made vpon the very ſhoare it ſelfe with ſingular cunning reſembling the ſhape of Cypreſſe-trees; a very pleaſing and delectable obiect to behold.

Iewes feaſt of Tabernacles, nine dayes.

The twentieth of September being Munday, the Iewes of Conſtantinople and Galata, beganne their Feaſt of Tabernacles which laſted till the eight and twentieth of the ſame month, that is iuſt nine dayes in which they differ from the ancient Iewes who were commanded by Almightie God to ſpend only eight dayes in the celebration of their Feaſt. I talked with a Iew concerning the reaſon of this their difference, who told me that it was becauſe being ſo farre from Ieruſalem, as in Conſtantinople they did not altogether ſo certainly know the firſt day according to the courſe of the Moone, as thoſe Iewes that liue in Ieruſalem, and therefore for the better aſſurance of this matter, they adde a day to the number that God limited and appointed their forefathers, whereas the Iewes that liue in Ieruſalem, and the parts of the Holy Land, neere thereabout, by the courſe of the Moone more certainly knowing the preciſe time of the beginning doe ſpend only eight dayes in their Feaſt and no more. Againe, they do in another reſpect differ from Gods Inſtitution. For he commanded only two dayes to bee more ſolemnely celebrated then the reſt, that is, the firſt and the laſt, but they celebrate two at the beginning, and two alſo at the laſt. But as of the former two, the firſt day is the chiefeſt, being kept with more ſolemnitie then the ſecond: ſo alſo of the two later, the laſt of all is more ceremoniouſly obſerued then the former. In this ſpace they are much giuen to holineſſe, reſting from all labour during the whole nine dayes, and they ſometimes eate and drinke in their Tabernacles, which are made partly in their priuate Houſes, or the corner of ſome Gallerie belonging thereto, at the leaſt if they haue any, and partly neere to their Synagogues. They make the ſides of their Tabernacles of Reeds of Bulruſhes, and couer them at the top with Bayes. It was my hap to bee in one of them that was made neere to a Synagogue. Alſo the ninth day which was the laſt of their Feaſt about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, I was at their Lyturgie in one of their Synagogues, being admitted to ſit downe among them. I find the irreuerence of the Iewes in Venice, & of thoſe of Conſtantinople to be like in the ſeruice of God. They neither vncouer nor kneele the whole time of their Prayer, ſomtimes they ſtand altogether, & ſometimes they ſit altogether. For ſome quarter of an houre after the beginning of the reading of their Law, they weare nothing ouer their backe, but their ordinary apparell, but then all of them put on their Ephod both men and children; which Ephod is made of the ſame white ſtuffe, as the Turkiſh Turbants are, theſe hang ouer their backes and reach downe to the middle part of their bodies, after a looſer manner then I thinke the ancient Iewes were wont to weare them, for I read in the 2. Sam. the 6. Chapter, and 14. Verſe, that King Dauid girt it about his middle when he danced before the Arke: but they hang it looſe about their bodies. This Ephod many of them carried in a little ſcrip from their houſes, and backe againe after the end of their Lyturgie. When they ſat at their deuotion they vſed a moſt ridiculous and vnſeemely geſture; for they alwayes mooued their bodies vp and downe very ſtrangely, the head being in a continuall motion without any ceſſation. After that they mooue their right ſide then their left, and laſtly their forepart forward; which kind of wagging of their bodies by interchangeable turnes they vſe during the whole time of their ſeruice.

Synagogue.

The forme of their Synagogue is built foure ſquare, hauing abundance of little Glaſſes hanging round about, that ſerue to containe Lampes, and ſome alſo of ſiluer. The Prieſt beeing in the middle roome, which is made in the ſame forme as thoſe of Venice. That I ſaw deſcribed in my former Booke bellowed like an Oxe with a very hideous and roaring exaltation of his voyce at their ſeruice, they ſung in Hebrew (in which Language their whole Seruice is ſaid) the nine and twentieth Pſalme, though nothing at all pertinent to their Feaſt, at the vpper end of their Synagogue they haue three diſtinct places drawne ouer with branched Veluet in the middle whereof was placed their Law, which conſiſted of tenne diſtinct parcels, each part contayning the ſelfe ſame matter written therein that the other doe, beeing folded vp with two Siluer handls at the ends; at the top of each whereof is a Siluer Pomegranate, with many Bels hanging round about the ſame: within the which their Law is written in a Roll of Parchment. One of theſe parcels conſiſted of a goodly Plate of Siluer of no ſmall price, all which tenne were carried in the middeſt of their Lyturgie round about the inſide of the Synagogue, the Cachan (which is their Prieſt) being the Ringleader of the company, before whom diuers of the Iewes in a merrie manner went dancing as they alſo did that carried the ſaid parcels. The Roſe-water that was ſpitted by little young Iewes, out of Siluer Veſſels vpon all thoſe that carried about the Law was ſo much, that the Chriſtian Spectators thought that they would haue halfe drowned them in Roſe-water. The ceremonie was ſuch at that time, that a little after our company departed thence, our Emperours Ambaſſadour came to ſee their faſhions.

Sprinkling of Roſe-water.

That day in which the Iewes by night ſhould haue taken downe their Tabernacles, that is, the Munday being the eighth day, after the beginning of their Feaſt (which was woont to bee the laſt day) the Chriſtians of the Countrey beganne to erect their Tabernacles or Pauilions for their Vintage in all their Vineyards about Pera, and on both ſides of the Boſphorus towards the blacke Sea, which Vintage laſted ſixe dayes. In each of theſe dayes you might haue ſeene the greateſt part of the way betwixt the farther end of Pera, and the Vineyards full of Horſes that went to and fro from morning to night, to carrie away into the Towne the Grapes in certaine deepe woodden pots after they were cut in the Vineyard: likewiſe the owners of the Vineyards with their Families going and comming. And in theſe Pauilions was much ſolace amongſt the Chriſtians for this time with good cheere, Muſicke, &c. During the time of their Raccolta, whatſoeuer ſtrangers came into their Vineyard might freely take as many Grapes as they were able to eate, which at another time they could not doe, for if before that they ſhould be apprehended ſtealing Grapes in a Vineyard by any Ianizaries, and carried to the Subbaſhaw of Galata, perhaps he might haue twentie or fortie blowes vpon the feet. Beſides an impoſition of a thouſand Aſpers. Of thoſe Vineyards many belonged to Turkes; to whom it was lawfull to drinke Wine only at that time, while it was Muſt, but not elſe. I found not ſmall recreation in expatiating abroad ſometimes in the time of their Vintage to their Vineyards, where for exerciſe ſake I holpe the poore Greeks both to gather their Grapes and to ſtampe ſome of their wine. For in certaine Buts and other leſſer Veſſels they bruiſed many of their Grapes in the Vineyards themſelues, and afterward in their priuate houſes finiſhed the making of their Wine. Their vines grow not as in France and Germany, being vnderpropped, with little ſtakes but rather as little ſmall ſhrubs which grow ſo ſtiffe, that they need not any ſtakes to ſupport them.

Turkes diſtinction for wine.

Greeke Vines.

The third of October being Sunday, my Lord being accompanied with the greateſt part of our Engliſh Nation reſident in Galata, ouer and aboue his owne retinue went to congratulate the Polonian Ambaſſadours proſperous arriuall in Conſtantinople, who with much courteſie gaue him an Accoglienza ſpeaking only in the Latine Tongue; and vſing ſometimes in his diſcourſe a certaine word that was neuer yet allowed by the Criticall cenſures of our time, namely Illuſtritas.

There happened one very memorable thing this Summer in Galata, which ſhall not eſcape my pen. A certaine Iew turned Turke, and after his conuerſion to that Religion, buying once an Aſpers worth of Fruit of a certaine poore Turke, becauſe he obſerued that the Turke did not deliuer him ſo much as did counteruaile his Aſper, the Iewiſh Turke ſtrooke the other about the face with ſome Inſtrument that he held in his hand, which gaue him ſuch a ſound blow that hee brake his face, inſomuch that the bloud ran verie ſwiftly downe his face: another Iew that well knew this foreſaid Iewiſh Turke, and ſaw the blow giuen by him to the poore Turke, came to the Turke, and demanded of him why hee did ſo patiently ſuffer that man to abuſe him ſo outrageouſly, encouraging him to giue him a blow, becauſe otherwiſe euerie one that ſaw him put vp that wrong ſo lightly, would take him for a ranke coward. I do not at all regard this blow (quoth the poore Turke) becauſe it is giuen mee by one that is late made a Muſulman, and I will not diſhearten him by giuing another for the ſame; but will as quietly take as much at his hands, as I haue alreadie receiued, if hee thinke fit to ſtrike mee once more: yea I tell the Iew (quoth hee) that I will giue thee leaue to draw as much bloud from mee as hee hath done, without offering any reuenge at all, if thou alſo wilt turne Muſulman: a notable example if it bee well conſidered.

Turkiſh milde zeale and zealous mildneſſe.

The fourth of October, being Munday, the Turkiſh lent called Ramazan began which continueth till the fourth day of Nouember, at which time they hanged out Lamps about their Steeples, in the manner as they did twice before, that ſince the time of my arriuall in Conſtantinople which burned till foure of the clocke in the morning, euen till that time when the Turke cryeth with a loud voice, &c. but it happened that their Lamps were hanged out much later this night then I haue obſerued at other times. For before, they vſed to hang them out about the cloſing of the Euening, euen about Sun-ſet. But this night they did not before midnight, which came to Ramazan or Turkiſh Lent Lamps.

Strict faſt.

Drunkenneſſe ſeuerely puniſhed.

paſſe by reaſon that they could not ſee the Moone, notwithſtanding the Grand Signior being aduertiſed by his expert Aſtronomers about ten of the clocke at night, that it was very likely the Moone was riſen, though being darkened by clouds it did not ſhine, commanded that there ſhould bee an expreſſe order giuen forthwith that they ſhould hang forth their Lamps; whereupon within the ſpace of two houres, the Steeples belonging to all the Moskies in Conſtantinople and Galata ſhined ſuddenly with Lamps, a ſhew indeed very glorious and refulgent, ſome of their Steeples hauing onely one row of Lampes, which contained ſome fiftie particulars; ſome three rowes which make a very beautiful ſhew, yea each of the foure Steeples belonging to the Moskee of Sultan Solyman, had not onely three diſtinct rowes of Lampes, which hanged about as many ſeuerall pertitions in each Tower; but alſo three ſubdiuided rowes or ſeries that pertained to the ſaid ſeuerall pertition, which Lampes were couered with certaine Woodden Boxes to the end to keepe out the raine and the wind that they may not be blowne out; theſe Lampes were hanged out euery night. After the firſt, about the ſetting of the Sunne, before which time it was not lawfull for any man to eat or drinke; only ſick folke and little children excepted that are not circumciſed. If in the ſpace of this Ramaza any Turke ſhould bee found drunke hee is puniſhed with death, as it happened to one when I was in Conſtantinople, who by the expreſſe commandement of the Viſier had hote burning Lead powred into his mouth and eares: and as for thoſe that by reaſon of ſickneſſe haue beene conſtrained to violate this faſt, looke how many dayes they haue eaten in the Ramazan, they are to faſt as many afterwarde to recompence the ſame. This manner of faſt betwixt ſunne and ſunne was inſtituted by Mahomet himſelfe. Immediately after the Lampes are hanged out, and the Taliſman hath cryed out, it is lawfull for people to eate, but not before: for though it bee not death for any one that ſhall bee found eating or drinking (ſauing onely for Wine, for that is death without redemption) yet there is a certaine ſeuere puniſhment to bee inflicted vpon him.

Sluttiſh Butter

There is great quantitie of Butter made in Turkie, but the moſt filthy and vnſauorie that is made in any other part of the world; for beſides that it is defiled with many haires, it is alſo ſtained with many colours, as blue, redde, greene, and all the other colours of the Raine-bow. It is made commonly in Moldauia, Walachia, Mengrelia, and in ſome parts of Aſia. Thoſe that buy it in Conſtantinople refine it by ſetting it ouer the fire, and letting it ſettle, in melting whereof there is a moſt noyſome and diſtaſtefull ſmell; then they poure out the cleere ſubſtance, and the eight part remaineth as a muddy ſoot, or ſetling in the bottome. This Butter, though it bee ſo filthy; yet they preferred it before the beſt Butter that any of our Chriſtians doe bring to the Citie. Againe, whereas wee make our Butter in all parts of Chriſtendome with churning, they neuer doe ſo, but in this manner they make it. They ſet the Creame ouer the fire, and ſo the groſſe ſubſtance deſcendeth to the bottome, and the Butter ſwimmeth to the top, which they skimme with a Ladle, and after poure it into the Hide of a Buffallo or an Oxe. This being cold looketh rather like Greaſe then Butter. They bring it to Conſtantinople in Buffallo Hides, which when they tranſport from Galata to Conſtantinople, they throw it downe into the water and dragge it at a Boates taile through the Sea and before they put it out at the ſhoare of Conſtantinople, they dragge it alſo through a great deale of mud. One of theſe Hides is ſo great that when it is carried into the Citie eight men doe vſually carrie it vpon their backes by the helpe of Leuers and Ropes. The vſe of this Butter is verie frequent, by reaſon of the abundance of Pillaue that is eaten in Conſtantinople, and in moſt places of Turkie. When they ſell this Butter in their Shops, they hang it vp in the verie ſame Buffallo skinnes wherein they firſt brought it: and cut open the bellie, where they diſcouer the foreſaid colours. Their Butter hath little Salt mingled with it, which is the cauſe of the ranke ſauour thereof. Their Cheeſe likewiſe is brought in leſſer skinnes, as of Goates and Sheepe to the Citie, not preſſed as our Cheeſe is, but in crumbles. It is verie leane and drie, but fierie ſalt. But one Priſon in all Conſtantinople, where there are but a few priſoners, becauſe whenſoeuer a man is committed to priſon for any offence, hee is quickly brought to his triall.

Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

The ſeuenth of Ianuary, being Thurſday, I went with a worthy Greeke, Michael Canacco to Timotheus the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, whoſe houſe is in that part of Conſtantinople, which is called Phariaria, he is a man vnlearned and verie vnworthy of the place. When wee came to the doore of his Conclaue, wee did put off our ſhooes, and leauing them without the doore went in to him; and ſate vpon our tailes croſſe-legged as the Turkes doe vpon certaine Carpets, without either Chaire, Stoole, or Forme to ſit on, he himſelfe ſate in the like manner, clad in a black broad cloth Gowne that was furred, and a blacke habit of Say ouer his head like to the Coloires; his reuenue is one yeere with another at the leaſt 6000. Chicquins. Neere to his houſe is a Church of the Greekes, in which the foreſaid Greeke Michael ſhewed me a certaine piece of a blacke Marble Pillar ſome fiue foot long, that he ſaid was brought from Ieruſalem, and that our Sauiour was tied to the ſame when he was ſcourged. Hee told mee that the Greekes doe eſteeme it ſo deerely, that though the Duke of Florence did offer foure thouſand Chicquins for the ſame, they will not leaue it. It ſtandeth in a corner of the Church, on the right hand as you goe into their Chancell.

A Pellican deſcribed.

On Saturday, being the ninth of Ianuary, was preſented to my Lord, about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, the ſtrangeſt Bird that euer I ſaw in my life, a Pellican killed in the Sea by a ſeruant of our Engliſh Councel, Maſter Abbot with a Musket: it was white and much greater then any Bird that euer I ſaw before. His wings being ſtretched out were ſo long, that betwixt the extremitie of them both there was at the leaſt nine foot diſtance, each wing contained fortie great feathers, which feathers yeelded ſo great a quill, that it was almoſt as great as an ordinarie finger: but the ſtrangeſt thing in him was his beake, which yeelded two matters worthy the obſeruation; firſt the length, which was not ſo little as a Geometricall foot, and a quarter long, the top of the vpper part of which bill was hooked like to the bill of an Eagle, and couered cleane ouer the lower parts of the beake. Secondly, the greatneſſe of the jaw or chap in the lower part of the beake, being a kind of thinne fleſhie ſubſtance, which indeed was ſo large that I ſaw a dogge of a prettie bigneſſe put within it, and it contained the whole bodie thereof. I heard that it would containe very neere a pecke of wheat, he is a great deuourer of fiſh, and hauing once got it within this jaw, his prey is certainely become his owne. Great plentie of theſe Birds are in the Propontis and Helleſpont, and doe liue partly vpon the Land, and partly vpon the Sea, but moſt vpon the Sea.

Pariſhes and Churches.
Hoſpitalls.

In Conſtantinople, Peru, and Galata there are fiue thouſand and ſeuen hundred and fiftie Pariſhes, of the Turkes Turkiſh Muskies great and little ſeuen hundred and ſeuentie: Karabaſſaries or Xenodochia foure hundred and eighteen; publike Fountaines or Wells ſix hundred and fiftie, priuate foure hundred and ninetie eight; Ouens or Bake-houſes three hundred and eightie fiue; horſe-mills fiue hundred and eightie three; Chriſtian Churches an hundred and fiftie; Synagogues thirtie ſixe; a hundred thouſand Houſes, and amongſt them fiue thouſand Shops. As for the Bird before mentioned, the Turkes ſay that when Mecca was building, theſe to helpe forward the worke brought ſtones in their bills, that ſerued for the building of the Walles of the Citie: the Grand Signior is of the company of the Archers, as moſt of the Sultans of the Ottoman Familie haue beene free of ſome company or other. His Father Mahomet was of the Company of the Ring-makers, thoſe I meane that make Rings of the teeth of a certaine Sea-fiſh, which Ring are very commonly worne by the Turkes. They hold it a bad omen, when the Grand Signior on any occaſion goeth out of Conſtantinople to meet in his way a Chriſtian, for which onely fault one of Sir Thomas Glouers men, was taken and had ſo many blowes on his buttockes (his breeches betwixt) that he died thereof within few daies after. The Greekes that cannot pay their debts are deliuered to a Turk, who leads him with a chaine about his neck, the other end faſtned to the Keepers middle to begge till he hath paid. Sometimes at the great Bayram, the Sultan, or Viſier, or Baſſas will pay halfe the debts.

Tale.

G.S. trade.

The Turkiſh Boyes that learne the firſt Alphabet, obſerue the ſtrangeſt cuſtome that euer I ſaw, for ſitting croſſe-legged as their father doe, and holding their feſters in their hands, they moue themſelues vp and downe towards their booke that lieth before them, a motion ſo quaint that I could not chuſe but laugh at them, and ſo did many other Chriſtians beſide my ſelfe. This I ſaw to be obſerued by the Turkiſh boyes of Conſtantinople, Gallipoli and Syo, and I thinke it is vſed in all parts of the Turkiſh Dominion. I departed from Conſtantinople towardes Ieruſalem, in an Engliſh Ship, called the Great Defince, which about a month before came from Syo to Conſtantinople, which are at the leaſt eighty leagues aſunder, in the ſpace of forty two houres, a thing that I name for the raritie thereof, becauſe there are few Ships that performe it in ſo ſhort a ſpace, for the Ship in the which I went, being called the Samaritane, was almoſt ſixe weekes performing it. I departed I ſay there hence, the one and twentieth of Ianuary being Friday, about eight of the clocke in the morning, in as tempeſtuous and extreame a ſeaſon as euer I trauelled in my life, either by Land or water, for the ſnow which fell inceſſantly for the ſpace of almoſt two dayes and two nights, bred ſuch a rigid cold that ſome of vs were euen benummed. Beſides, the contrarie winds ſo croſſed our paſſage, that we found it a very faſtidious and tedious voyage. Notwithſtanding the aduerſe windes when we came within three or foure miles of Gallipoli, by tacking about and turning to windward, as they call it (thoſe are nauticall words) by the which is meant ſailing againſt the winde; with ſome kind of difficultie we entred into the Port. After we were come in, a certaine Iew that was in our Ship perceiuing that wee ſailed ſo brauely againſt the winds, told me that the Engliſhmen by reaſon of their dexteritie in ſailing, might bee not improperly called the fiſhes of the Sea: there we tarried three dayes, partly for the diſpatch of our buſineſſe with the Turkiſh Magiſtrates of the Towne, and partly by a thicke miſt vpon the Sea, during which wee could not ſecurely goe forward for feare of falling into ſhallow parts of the Sea. This Gallipoli is ſome ninetie leagues diſtant from Conſtantinople: there endeth the Propontis and beginneth the Helleſpont.

Gallipoli.

The fourteenth of Februarie wee went aſhoare at Lesbos, now called Mitylene: it is very mountainous and rough. The Sheepe bare the courſeſt Wooll that euer I ſaw, like Goats haire. The people flocked about vs, many of them women, the vglieſt ſluts that euer I ſaw, ſauing the Armenian trulls of Conſtantinople. Februarie eighteene we came to Syo. On the twentieth ſayling by the Sanijan Coaſt wee diſcerned Pathmos, and paſſed neere Cos the birthplace of Hippocrates. On the twentie three, wee eſpied the tops of Ararat ſaid to bee eightie leagues within Land, and wee fourteene from ſhoare. On the twentie foure we landed at Scanderone, infamous for the infectious aire cauſed by foggie clouds after Sun-ſet, and till nine in the morning houering about the mountaines, and letting fall an vnwholſome dew, the waters being alſo peſtiferous; which cauſe many to leaue their carkaſſes there to be deuoured of the Iackals, which ſcrape thẽ out of their graues. I ſaw one, ſomewhat like a Maſtiue Dog, but ſomewhat leſſe, his taile as long as of a Foxe. They are therefore forced to fetch their water from a Fountaine ſixe miles off. Scanderone hath about fortie Houſes, the pooreſt Cotages that euer I ſaw, being but a few boards weakly compact and couered with Reeds.

Scanderone.

Our iourney thence to Scandarone is about fiftie ſixe miles. The firſt day wee rode twelue; the ſecond ſixteene; the third ſixteene; the fourth ten.

The Right Worſhipfull Conſull of the Engliſh Nation, Commorant in Aleppo, Maſter Bart. Haggat my worthy Countryman borne in Summerſetſhire at Welles, amongſt other fauours rode with mee to the Vallie of Salt mentioned, 2.Sam. 8.13.

Poole of Giabbul, or Salt.
Deceptio viſus.

In the way wee ſeemed to ſee a Towne ſtanding like an Iland in water, and when wee came thither found no waters, but a kind of ſhrub like wild withered Time, which couering the Mountaine made with the white ſprigs a ſhew of water a farre off. The Villages in the way are inhabited with Bedwines. The Poole where the Salt is made is twentie miles long, and two broad, exceedingly frequented with plentie and varietie of Fowle. The water continueth all the yeere ſauing Iuly, Auguſt, September, at which time it is quite dried vp, beginning to waſt (or to change into Salt) in Iuly: and then is there nothing but a hard maſſie Salt, which appeareth like hard Ice digged thence with Mattocks, heaped hillocks & carried to Giabbul a village, on Camels and Aſſes, and there cuſtomed. It is as fine & excellent as any in the world. In Oct. it beginneth again to break out of certain ſprings with much vehemency, & after one month inundateth the whole place. It yeelds 20000. dollars yeerly to the Grand Signior. March, 15. 1613. I and my countryman Henry Allard of Kent, began our Pilgrimage a foot to the holy Citie of Ieruſalem. The 26. in Damaſcus I ſaw Roſes——— but wee haue trauelled with ſo many Trauellers to Damaſcus, and thence to Ieruſalem, and obſerued ſo much on thoſe parts, that I dare not to obtrude Maſter Coryats prolixitie on the patienteſt Reader. He was indeed a curious viewer of ſo much as his bodily eyes could comprehend, to which he added (not ſo faithfull intelligence of) his inquiſitiue eares; for myſteries of State and Religion hee would bee a ſafe traueller, and free from ſuſpition. I confeſſe I found much pleaſure in walking with him in his tenne dayes iourney to Damaſcus, and ſpending a little while to view his foure dayes view of Damaſcus, Abana and Pharphar flowing from the Hill on which, part of the Towne ſtandeth, to the Houſes whereof aboue one thouſand Conduits of moſt pure waters are thence conueyed; the Daruiſes Monaſtery, garden and turnings; the buildings, of which the chiefe Moskee (before Saint Zacharies Temple) hath one thouſand vnglaſed Windowes, and as many Pillars as are dayes in the yeere, with fiue brazen Gates, one fortie foot high; the Cloiſter, Bazeſtans Caſtle, and other Moskees, ſhady penthouſed Streets, all ſuperlatiue; ten Gates, 100000. Inhabitants, Fruits innumerable and dilicious, victualls ſo cheap that at a Cookes, he and his companion dined well for three farthings a man, and all things conſpiring to an earthly Paradiſe: for which cauſe it is ſaid the Grand Signior may not reſide there, leaſt he ſhould forfeit his hopes of a future Paradiſe: his further iourney to Iordans ſwift and ſounding ſtreame, to Tabors Holies, Samarias Well, and the centre of Earthly ſanctitie, Ieruſalem; his companie of Armenians, with there Patriarch or Biſhop, with a Croſier in his hand of an ordinary peece of Haſill, with a little crooke at the end of the ſame piece of Wood, with a Turbant of white and blue on his head; their cruell vſage by the Moores the Bedwine ſluts painted vnder the noſthrills and ringed on the right noſthrill vnto the ſpoyle of kiſſing, the Sugar loafed Houſes, and other rarities, in as rare a ſtile of big-ſwolne ſtrange-tired trauelling words expreſſed: all this and the reſt of Maſter Coryats long long iourney I dare not hither adde for feare you grow weary of him and mee. Yet I will adde a little of Ieruſalem that yee may know hee was there. A world of Lamps was carried before and behind them, men, women, children confuſedly, crying, Kyrie eleeſon. The next day the other Nations ioyned with them, diſplaying their Banners alſo, viz. the Armenians, Maronites, Iacobites, Cophties, and Abaſſines. The Armenians made the braueſt ſhew. Some carried Oliue boughes in their hands, with burning Waxe Candles therein, and one a branch of Palme-tree. Some of the Prieſts went before, the Patriarch backward perfuming him. Some carried Drums on their ſhoulders, which others behinde them did ſtrike vpon. The Cophties and Abaſſines *had alſo certaine clappers of Braſſe and Wood, which made ſtrange Muſicke. Relations of the Trauels of W. LITHGOVV a Scot, in Candy, Greece, the Holy-land, Egypt, and other parts of the Eaſt.

VPon the fortieth day after my departure from Paris, I arriued at Rome, of the which I will memorize, ſome rareſt things, and ſo proceede. This Citie of Rome, now extant, is not that old Rome, which Romulus founded; for after the Monarchy of the Romans had attained to the full height, the Gothes, a baſe and vnknowne people, diſplaying their banner againſt this glorious and imperiall Citie, in the end razed, and ſubuerted their Pallaces, equalizing the wals with the ground. After the which detriment, and ouerthrow (the late ſubdued Romans, recouering their ruinous habitation) were inforced, to withdraw the ſcituation of the Towne, a little more downward, neare the bankes of Tibris: And tranſported the ſtones, of theſe ranſacked buildings, to reedifie their new dwelling places:

A briefe deſcription of Rome.

Hic vbi nunc Roma eſt, olim fuit ardua ſilua,
Tantaq; res paucis, paſcua bobus erat.

Many haue wrote, of the ſingularities of old Rome, and I will alſo recite ſome decaied Monuments thereof, which I haue ſeene: The ſpeciall obiect of Antiquitie I ſaw, being neuer a whit Monuments of Antiquity.

decaied to this day, is the Templum omnium Deorum, but now, omnium ſanctorum, builded in a rotundo, and open at the top, with a large round, like to the quire of the holy graue, And a pretty way from this, are the remainants of that ancient Amphitheatre beautified with great Columnes, of a wonderfull bigneſſe and height; the reaſon why it was firſt deuiſed, the ghoſts of the ſlaughtered Sabines may teſtifie. To be briefe, I ſaw the decaied houſe of worthy Cicero, the high Capitoll, the Pallace of cruell Nero, the Statues of Marcus Aurelius, Alexander, and his horſe Bucephalus. The greene hill like vnto Mount Canallo, that was made of the Pottars ſhards at one time, which brought the tributarie Gold to this imperiall ſeat, the ſeuen hils whereon ſhe ſtands, and their ſeuen Pyramides, the Caſtell Saint Angelo, which Adrian firſt founded, and their doubtfull tranſported Reliques from Ieruſalem, with many other things I diligently remarked, ſome whereof were friuolous, ſome ambiguous, and ſome famous. Beſides all theſe I ſaw one moſt ſight-worthy-ſpectacle, which was the Library of the aneient Romans, being licenciated to enter with two Gentlemen, Sir William Kerre, and Iames Aughtermuty my Countrey-men, where when I was come, I beheld a word of old Bookes, the firſt whereof, was an infinite number of Greeke Bibles ſubſcribed with the hands of theſe holy Fathers, who (as they ſay) tranſlated them out of the Hebrew tongue.

The originall Copies (as they ſay) of famous Authors.

I ſaw alſo the Academies of Ariſtotle, wherein he treateth of the Soule, health, life, nature, and qualities of men, with the Medicaments of Galen, for the diſeaſes and infirmities of man: The familiar Epiſtles of Cicero, the Aeneidos of Virgil, the Saphicke Verſes of that Lesbian Sapho, the Workes of Ouid, Plinie, Plutarke, Titus Liuius, Horatius, Strabo, Plato, Homer, Terentius, Cato, Hippocrates, Ioſephus, Pythagoras, Diodorus Siculus, Euſebius, Saint Auguſtine, Saint Ambroſe, Saint Cyprian, Saint Gregory, and likewiſe the workes of other excellent Philoſophers, Diuines, and Poets: all wrote with their owne hands, and ſealed with their names, and manuell ſubſcriptions. I ſaw alſo the forme of the firſt ancient Writing, which was vpon leaues of trees, cakes of lead, with their fingers on aſhes, barkes of trees, with ſtrange figures, and vnknowne Letters, that was brought from Egypt: for the Ægyptians firſt deuiſed the vſe thereof, and the ſight of infinitie Obligatorie Writings, of Emperours, Kings, and Princes, which I omit to relate, referring the ſame to the regiſtred, by the next beholder.

The braſen Image of Saint Peter.

Bidding adew to my Company, and this Library, I longed to view the gorgeous Moſaicall worke of Saint Peters Church; The matter was no ſooner conceiued, but I went to the doore, yet afraid to enter, becauſe I was not accuſtomed, with the carriage, and ceremonies of ſuch a Sanctum Sanctorum. But at the laſt, abandoning all ſcrupuloſitie, I came in boldly, and on my right hand, as I entred within the doore, I eſpied the portraied image of Saint Peter, erected of pure Braſſe, and ſitting on a braſen Chaire. The faſhion of the people is this, entring the Church, they goe ſtrait to this Idoll, and ſaluting with many croſſes his ſenſleſſe body, kiſſe his feete, and euery one of his ſeuerall toes: next, they lay their heads vnder the ſoale of his right foot, and ariſing, rub their Beads on his hard coſted belly: thus adoring that breathleſſe maſſe of mettall, more then though it were a liuing creature.

The period of Time, after eight and twenty dayes abode, wiſhing my departure, I hardly eſcaped from the hunting of theſe bloud-ſucking Inquiſitors, of whom the moſt part were mine owne Countrimen; for I may iuſtly affirme it, man hath no worſer Enemie then his owne ſuppoſed friend. And the Italian ſaieth in his Prouerbe; God keepe me from the hurt of my friends, for I know well how to keepe me from mine Enemies. From thence bound Eaſtward, I viſited Naples, the commendation of which, I onely reuolue in this Verſe:

Inclyta Parthenope gignit Comiteſq; Duceſq;.

Among many other remarkeable things, neare to this Citie (as Lacus Auernus, Sibillaes Caue, Puteoli; the Sulphurean Mountaine, Capua and Cuma, where baniſhed Æneas from Troy, and Carthage arriued) I ſaw the Monument of Virgils buriall.

Lady of Loretto

In the meane while, hauing alwaies a regard, of my haſty diſpatching from Chriſtendome, I returned, addreſſing my ſelfe to Venice for tranſportation. But by your leaue, let me lay down before your eyes, ſome notable illuſions of Madonna di Loretta.

Foure Roman Pilgrimes.

Before I came neere to Loretta, by ten miles, I ouertooke a Caroch, wherein were two Gentlemen of Rome, and their two Concubines: Who, when they eſpied me, ſaluted me kindely, enquiring of what Nation I was? whither I was bound? and what pleaſure I had to trauell alone? After I had to theſe demands giuen ſatisfaction, they intreated me to come vp to the Caroach, but I thankfully refuſed, and would not, replying the way was faire, the weather ſeaſonable, and my body vnwearied. At laſt they perceiuing my abſolute refuſall, preſently diſmounted on the ground, to recreate themſelues in my company: and incontinently, the two yong vnmarried Dames, came forth alſo, and would by no perſwaſion of me, nor their familiars, mount againe; ſaying, They were all Pilgrimes, and bound to Loreta (for deuotions ſake) in pilgrimage, and for the penance enioyned to them by their Father Confeſſour. Truely, ſo farre as I could iudge, their penance was ſmall, being carried with horſes, and the appearance of deuotion much leſſe: for lodging at Riginati, after ſupper, each youth led captiue his deareſt Darling to an vnſanctified bed, and left me to my accuſtomed repoſe.

When the morning Starre appeared, wee embraced the way marching toward Loretta, and these Vermilion Nimphs, to let me vnderstand they trauelled with a cheerefull stomacke, would oft run races, skipping like wanton Lambes on grassie Mountaines, and quenching their fallies in a Sea of vnquenchable fantasies. Approaching neere the gate of the Village, they pulled off their shooes and stockings, walking bare-footed through the streetes, to this ten thousand times polluted Chappell, mumbling Pater nosters, and Aue Mariaes on their Beades. When they entred the Church, wherein the Chappell standeth, I stood at the entrie beholding many hundreds of bare-footed blinded bodies, creeping on their knees and hands: Thinking themselues not worthy to goe on foot to this idely supposed Nazaretane House, like to this saying:

Lauretum nudis pedibus, plebs crebra frequentat,
Quam mouet internus religionis amor.

Vnto this falsly patronized Chappell, they offer yeerely many rich gifts, amounting to an vnspeakable value, as Chaines, and Rings of Gold and Siluer, Rubies, Diamonds, silken Tapestries, and such like. The Iesuiticall and Pœnitentiall Fathers receiue all, but who so many all, let Camera reuerenda Romana, grant certification to this Loretan auariciousnesse, who fill their coffers twice in the yeere therewith. My foure Pilgrimes hauing performed their ceremoniall customes, came backe laughing, and asked why I did not enter? But I as vnwilling to shew them any further reason, demanded what the matter was? O (said the Italian) Iuranda per'l Cielo e Iddio Sacratissimo; This is the House wherein the Virgin Marie dwelt in Galile: and to the confirmation of these words shewed me a Booke, out of which I extracted these Annotations.

Turselline the Iesuite hath written fiue Bookes of the Loretan houses and miracles, which some superstitious zelote hath translated into English.

This Chappell, they hold it to be the house, in which Mary was annunced by Gabriel, and wherein she conceiued Iesus, by operation of the holy-Ghost. And in the meane time, that deuotion waxed scant, amongst the Christians of the Primitiue Church, in the Holy Land: Many strangers tyrannizing ouer the territories of Canaan, as Heraclius, Costroes King of Persia, Sarazens, and Harancone King of Egypt; it came to passe in the yeere of our Lord 1291. and in the time of Pope Nicholas the fourth, that it being shaken off the foundation, was transported miraculously by Angels in the night, from Nazareth in Gallile, to Tersalto in Slauonia. And in the morning, Sheepheards comming to the place of pastorage, found this house, wherewith being astonished, they returned in haste, and told S. George Allesandro, the Prior of Tersalto, who in that meane while was lying sicke. He being stricken in admiration with these newes, caused himselfe to be borne thither, and laid before the Altar, and falling in a maruellous trance, the Virgin Mary by a heauenly Vision appeared to him, saying after this manner:

Damnable illusions of Loreta.

A false assertion.

A Simonaicall Vision.

Behold, thou hast often pierced the heauens, with inuocations for thy reliefe, and now I am come, not onely to restore thee to thy health, but also to certifie thee, that thou doubt nothing of this House; for it is holy in respect of me, the chaste immaculate Virgin, ordained before all eternitie, to be the Mother of the most High. It was in this Chamber my Mother Anna conceiued me, nourished me, and brought me vp, in singing Psalmes, Hymns, & Praises to the glory of God: and also I kept in this roome the blessed infant Iesus, very God, and very Man, without any grieuance or paine, brought him vp with all diligent obseruation: And when cruell Herod sought the babes life, by the aduertisement of the Angell, I, and my husband Ioseph, who neuer knew my body, fled with him downe to Egypt. And after his passion, death, and ascension to Heauen, to make a reconciliation of humane nature, with the Court Celestiall: I staied in this house with Iohn, and the other Disciples; who considering after my death, what high mysteries had beene done into it, consecrated and conuerted the same to a Temple, for a commemoration of Christs sufferings, the chiefe of Martyrs. Also that resplending Image thou seest, was made by S. Luke (my familiar) for eternizing the memory of my portraiture as I was aliue, by the commandement of him, who doth all things, and shall conserue this sacred Image to the worlds end: That Crosse of Cedar, which standeth at the side of the little westerne window, was made by the Apostles: These Cinders in the Chimney touch not, because they are the fragments of the last fire I made on earth: And that Shelfe whereon my linnen cloathes, and prayer Bookes lay, Let no person come neere it, for all these places are sanctified and holy. Wherefore my Son, I tell thee, Awake, and goe, recite the same which I haue told thee vnto others; and to confirme thy beliefe therein, the Queene of Heauen giueth thee freely thy health.

A Papisticall dream'd-of Oration.

Frier Alexander, being rauished (say they) with this Vision, went, and reported it to Nicholas Frangipano, Lord of that Country. And incontinently he sent this Prior and other foure Friers to Nazareth, whereby he might know the truth thereof, but in that iourney they died. The Virgin Mary perceiuing their incredulitie, caused Angels the second time to transport the house ouer the gulfe of Venice, to a great wood neere by the Sea side, in the territory of Riginati. Which, when the Countrimen had found, and remarking the splendor of the illuminating Image, dispersed these newes abroad. And the Citizens of Riginati, hauing seene what great miracles were daily done, by the vertue of this Chappell, imposed to it this name, Madonna di Loretta. A little while after the people resorting to it with rich gifts, there hanted in the wood many theeues, and cut-throates, who robd and murdred the Pilgrims. Which innocent spilt bloud, pricking her to the heart, shee made the Angels transport it the third time, & set it on the top of a little Mountain, belonging to two brethren in heritage: But they vpon a day quarrelling, & discording, about the vtility of the offerings to this house, the Angels did remoue it the fourth time, & placed it in a high broad way, where where it ſtandeth vnremoued to this day. This was confirmed by the Papall Authoritie to bee of an vndoubted truth, after a hundred and fiftie three yeeres deliberation. I haue added nothing to the Authors deſcription, but onely collected theſe ſpeciall Warrants.

* Borne at St. Andrew in Scotland.

I embarqued at Ancona, in a Frigato; and by accident I heere encountred with a moſt courteous and diſcreet Gentleman *Iames Arthur, whoſe companie was to me moſt acceptable, wee arriued at Saint Markes place in Venice.

AFter foure and twentie dayes attendance, and expecting for paſſage, I embarqued in a Carmoeſalo, being bound to Zara Noua in Dalmatia.

Zara is the Capitall Citie of Dalmatia, called of old Iadara: the Inhabitants are gouerned by a Camarlingo, in the behalfe of Venice. The walls whereof, are ſtrongly rampired with earth; ſurpaſſing the tops of the ſtone worke: and fortified alſo with high Bulwarkes, and planted Cannons on eleuated rampires of earth: which are aboue fortie Cubites higher then the walls and Bulwarkes, ſtanding in the foure ſeuerall corners of the Citie.

Brazza.

Pomo.

From Zara I embarqued in a ſmall Frigot bound for Leſina, with fiue Slauonian Marriners, who ſometimes ſayled, and ſometimes rowed with Oares: In our way wee paſſed by the Ile of Brazza, which is of no great quantitie, but fertile enough for the Inhabitants, and kept by a Gentleman of Venice. It lyeth in the mouth of the Gulfe Narento, that diuideth Dalmatia from Slauonia. Many conceiue in effect that theſe two Kingdomes are all one, but I hold the contrary opinion, both by experience and by antient Authors. Hauing paſſed Cape di Coſta, which is the beginning of Slauonia. I ſaw vpon my right hand, a round Rocke of a great height, in forme of a Pyramide.

The Iles Tremiti.

A little beyond that Rocke, I ſaw the three Iles Tremiti: The chiefeſt whereof is called Teucria, but they are vulgarly called the Iles of Diomedes, who was King of Etolia. They are right oppoſite to Mount Gargano, now called Saint Angelo, and diſtant from the maine land of Pulia in Italie about nine miles.

Saint Andrew.

The poore Slauonians being fatigated in their hunger-ſtaruing Boat, with extraordinary paines (for we had three dayes calme, which is not vſually ſeene in theſe Seas) were inforced to repoſe all night, at the barren Ile of Saint Andrew. This Ile is of Circuit foure miles but not Inhabited: the exceſſiue Raine that fell in the Euening made vs goe on ſhoare, to ſeeke the couerture of ſome Rocke; which found, wee lay all night on hard ſtones, and with hungry bellies: for our prouiſion was ſpent. The breach of day giuing comfort to our diſtreſſed bodies, with fauourable windes at the Garbae ponente, we ſet forward, and about midday wee arriued in the Port of Leſina, of which the Ile taketh the the name.

Ile Leſina.

This Ile of Leſina is of Circuit, a hundred and fiftie miles, and is the biggeſt Iland in the Adriaticke Sea. It is exceeding fertile and yeeldeth all things plentifully, that is requiſite for the ſuſtenance of man. The Citie is vnwalled, and of no great quantitie, but they haue a ſtrong fortreſſe, which defendeth the Towne, the Hauen, and the veſſels in the rode. The Gouernour who was a Venetian, after he had enquired of my intended Voyage, moſt courteouſly inuited me three times to his Table, in the time of my fiue dayes ſtaying there. And at the laſt meeting, he reported the ſtorie of a maruellous miſhapen Creature borne in the Iland, asking, if I would goe thither to ſee it: Wherewith (when I perfitely vnderſtood the matter) I was contented: The

A Monſter borne in Leſina Clyſſa.

Gentleman honoured me alſo with his company, and a Horſe to ride on, where when we came, the Captaine called for the Father of that Monſter, to bring him forth before vs. Which vnnaturall Child being brought, I was amazed in that ſight, to behold the deformitie of Nature; for below the middle part there was but one Bodie, and aboue the middle there was two liuing Soules, each one ſeperated from another with ſeuerall members. Their heads were both of one bigneſſe, but different in Phiſnomie: The belly of the one ioyned with the poſteriour part of the other, and their faces looked both one way, as if the one had carried the other on his back, and often before our eyes, hee that was behind, would lay his hands about the necke of the formoſt. Their eyes were exceeding big, and their hands greater then an Infant of three times their age. The excrements of both Creatures, iſſued forth at one place, and their thighes and legges of a great growth, not ſemblable to their Age, being but ſixe and thirtie dayes old; and their feet were proportionably made like to the foot of a Camell, round, and clouen in the middeſt. They receiued their food with an inſatiable deſire, and continually mourned with a pitifull noiſe; that ſorrowfull man told vs, that when the one ſlept, the other awaked, which was a ſtrange diſagreement in Nature. The Mother of them bought deerly that birth, with the loſſe of her owne life; and as her Husband reported, vnſpeakable was that torment ſhee endured, in that woful-wreſtling paine. I was alſo informed afterwards, that this one or rather twofold wretch liued but a ſhort while.

I hired a Fiſher-boat to goe ouer to Cliſſa, being twelue miles diſtant. This Ile of Cliſſa is of length twentie, and of circuit three ſcore miles: It is beautified with two profitable Sea-ports, and vnder the Signiorie of Venice. Vpon the South-ſide of this Iland lyeth the Ile Pelaguſa.

Departing from thence in a Carmoeſalo bound to Raguſa, wee ſayled by the three Iles Briſca, Plaes.

Placa, Igezi; And when we entred into the Gulfe of Cataro, we fetched vp the ſight of the Ile Melida, called of old Meligna. Before wee could attaine vnto the Hauen, wherein our purpoſe was to ſtay all night, we were aſſayled on a ſodaine with a deadly ſtorme: Inſomuch, that euery ſwallowing waue threatened our death, and bred in our breſts an intermingled ſorrow of feare and hope. The winds becomming calme, and our deſired ſafetie enioyed, we ſet forward in the Gulfe of Cataro, and ſayled by the Ila Curzola. In this Iland I ſaw a walled Towne called Curzola, which hath two ſtrong Fortreſſes to guard it. It is both commodious for the traffique of Merchandiſe they haue, and alſo for the fine Wood that groweth there, whereof the Venetian Ships and Gallies are made: An Iland no leſſe delightfull then profitable; and the two Gouernours thereof, are changed euery eighteene moneths, by the State of Venice.

Melida.

Curzola.

It was of old called, Curcura, Melana, and of ſome Concira nigra, but by the Modernes, Gurzola. Continuing our courſe, wee paſſed by the Iles Sabionzello, Torquolla, and Catza Auguſta, appertaining to the Republike of Raguſa. They are all three well inhabited, and fruitfull, yeelding Cornes, Wines, and certaine rare kindes of excellent Fruits. It is dangerous for great Veſſels to come neare their Coaſts, becauſe of the hidden ſhelues that lie off in the Sea, called Auguſtini, where diuers ſhips haue beene caſt away in foule weather; vpon the ſecond day after our looſing from Cliſſa, we arriued at Raguſa.

Raguſa is a Common-weale gouerned by Senators, and a Senate Counſell: It is wonderfull ſtrong, and alſo well guarded, being ſcituate by the Sea-ſide, it hath a fine Hauen and many goodly ſhippes thereunto belonging. The greateſt Traffique they haue, is with the Geneſes. Their Territorie in the firme land is not much, in reſpect of the neighbouring Turkes, but they haue certaine commodious Ilands, which to them are profitable. And notwithſtanding of the great ſtrength and riches they poſſeſſe, yet for their better ſafegard and liberty, they pay a yeerely tribute vnto the great Turke, amounting to fourteene thouſand Chickenes of Gold: yea, and alſo they pay yeerely a tributarie penſion vnto the Venetians, for the Iles reſerued by them in the Adriaticall Gulfe. The moſt part of the ciuill Citizens, haue but the halfe of their heads bare, but the baſer ſort are all ſhauen.

Raguſa.

This Citie is the Metropolitan of the Kingdome of Slauonia. Slauonia was firſt called Liburnia, next Iliria, of Ilirio the ſonne of Cadmus: But laſtly, named Slauonia, of certaine Slaues, that came from Sarmatia paſſing the Riuer Danubio, in the time of the Emperour Iuſtinian. So much as is called Slauonia, extendeth from the Riuer Arſa in the Weſt, the Riuer Drino in the Eaſt, on the South bordereth with the Gulfe of Venice, and on the North with the Mountaines of Croatia: Theſe Mountaines diuide alſo Raguſa from Boſna.

Slauonia.

The next two ſpeciall Cities in that Kingdome, are Sabenica and Salona. The Slauonians are of a robuſt Nature, Martiall, and valiant fellowes, and a great helpe to maintaine the right and libertie of the Venetian ſtate. From Raguſa I embarqued in a Tartareta, loaden with Cornes, and bound to Corfu, being three hundred miles diſtant.

In all this way we found no Iland, but ſayled along the maine land of the Ilirian ſhoare: hauing paſſed the Gulfe of Cataro, and Capo di Fortuna, I ſaw Caſtello nouo, which is a ſtrong Fortreſſe, ſcituate on the top of a Rocke: wherein one Barbaruſſo, the Captaine of Solyman, ſtarued to death foure thouſand Spaniards. Hauing left Ilyria and Valona behind vs, wee ſayled by Capo di Palone. This high land is the furtheſt part of the Gulfe of Venice, and oppoſite againſt Capo di Sancta Maria, in Pulia, each one in ſight of another, and foureteene leagues diſtant. Continuing our Nauigation, we entred into the Sea Ionium, and ſayled along the Coaſt of Epire, which was the famous Kingdome of the Epirotes. This is the firſt land of Greece, and vpon the ſixt day after our deprrture from Raguſa, we arriued at Corfu.

Corfu is an Iland, no leſſe beautifull then inuincible: it lyeth in the Sea Ionean, the Inhabitants are Greekes, and the Gouernours Venetians. This Ile was much honoured by Homer, for the pleaſant Gardens of Alcino, which were in his time: it is of Circuit one hundred and twentie, and fiftie miles in bredth. The Citie Corfu, from which the Ile hath the name, is ſcituate at the foot of a Mountaine, whereupon are builded two ſtrong Fortreſſes, and inuironed with a naturall Rocke: the one is called Fortezza noua, and the other Fortezza vechia: they are well gouerned and circumſpectly kept, leaſt by the inſtigation of the one Captaine, the other ſhould commit ſome treaſonable effects: and for the ſame purpoſe, the Gouernours of both Caſtles, at their Election, before the Senatours of Venice are ſworne; neither priuatly nor openly to haue mutuall Conference; nor to write one to another for the ſpace of two yeares, which is the time of their Gouernment. Theſe Caſtles are inacceſſable and vnconquerable, if that the Keepers be loyall, and prouided with Naturall and Martiall furniture. They are vulgarly called, The Forts of Chriſtendome, by the Greekes; but more iuſtly, The ſtrength of Venice: for if theſe Caſtles were taken by the Turkes, the Trade of the Venetian Merchants would bee of none account; yea, the very meane to ouerthrow Venice it ſelfe.

Corfu.

Two ſtrong Caſtles in the Ile Corfu.

From thence, I embarked in a Greekiſh Carmoeſalo, with a great number of paſſengers, Greekes, Slauonians, Italians, Armenians and Iewes, that were all mindfull to Zante.

Biding farewell to Zante, I embarked in a Frigato going to Petraſſo in Morea, which is called led Peloponneſus : and by the way in the Gulfe Lepanto (which diuideth Etolia and Morea : the chiefeſt Citie in Etolia is called Lepanto : from thence Weſtward by the Sea-ſide, is Delphos, famous for the Oracle of Apollo) wee ſayled by the Iles Echinidi, but by Moderne Writers, Curzolari : where the Chriſtians obtained the Victorie againſt the Turkes, for there did they fight, after this manner.

The Battell betweene the Chriſtians and Turkes at Lepanto.

In the yeere 1571. and the ſixth of October, Iohn Duke of Auſtria, Generall for the Spaniſh Gallies, Marco Antonio Colonna, for Pope Pio Quinto; and Sebaſtiano Venieco, for the Venetian Armie, conuened altogether in Largoſtolo at Cephalonia : hauing of all two hundred and eight Gallies, ſixe Galliaſſes, and fiue and twentie Frigots. After a moſt reſolute deliberation, theſe three Generals went with a valiant courage to encounter with the Turkiſh Armado, on the Sunday morning the ſeuenth of October : who in the end through the helpe of Chriſt, obtayned a glorious Victorie. In that Fight there was taken and Drowned one hundred and eightie of Turkiſh Gallies ; and there eſcaped about the number of ſixe hundred and fiftie Ships, Gallies, Galeotes, and other Veſſels : there was fifteene thouſand Turkes killed, and foure thouſand taken Priſoners, and twelue thouſand Chriſtians deliuered from their ſlauiſh Bondage. In all, the Chriſtians but looſed eleuen Gallies, and fiue thouſand ſlaine. At their returne to Largoſtolo, after this victorious Battell, the three Generals diuided innumerable ſpoyles, to their well-deſeruing Captaines and worthy Souldiers.

After my arriuall in Peteraſſo, the Metropolitan of Peloponneſus, I left the turmoyling dangers of the intricated Iles of the Ionean and Adriaticall Seas, and aduiſed to trauell in the firme Land of Greec, with a Carauan of Greekes that was bound for Athens. But before hee admitted me into his companie, he was wonderfull inquiſitiue, for what cauſe I trauelled alone ? and of what Nation I was ? To whom I ſoberly excuſed, and diſcouered my ſelfe with modeſt anſwers. Which pacified his curioſitie ; but not his auaritious minde : for vnder a pretended protection he had of me, hee extorted the moſt part of my money from my purſe, without any regard of Conſcience.

In the firſt, ſecond, and third daies Iourneying, we had faire way, hard lodging, but good cheere, and kind entertainment for our money: But on the fourth day, when wee entred in the Hilly and barren Countrie of Arcadia; for a daies Iournie we had no Village, but ſaw abundance of Cattell without Keepers. In this Deſart way, I beheld many ſingular Monuments, and ruinous Caſtles, whoſe names I knew not, becauſe I had an ignorant Guide: But this I remember, amongſt theſe Rockes my belly was pinched, and wearied was my bodie, with the climbing of faſtidious Mountaines, which bred no ſmall griefe to my breaſt. Yet notwithſtanding of my diſtreſſe, the remembrance of theſe ſweet ſeaſoned Songs of Arcadian Shepheards, which pregnant Poets haue ſo well penned, did recreate my fatigated corps, with many imagined ſuppoſitions. Theſe ſterile bounds being paſt, we entred in the Eaſterne Plaine of Morea, called anciently Sparta; where, that ſometimes famous Citie of Lacedemon flouriſhed, but now ſacked, and the lump of ruines and memorie onely remaynes. Marching thus, wee left Modena and Napoli on our right hand, toward the Sea ſide, and on the ſixt day at night, we pitched our Tents, in the diſinhabited Villages of Argo and Micene, from the which vnhappie Helene was rauiſhed. Heere, I had the ground to be a Pillow, and the World-wide-fields to bee a Chamber, the whirling windy ſkies, to be a roofe to my Winter-blaſted lodging, and the humide vapours of cold Nocturna, to accompany the vnwiſhed-for-bed of my repoſe.

Although Arcadia in former times was pleaſant, yet it is now for the moſt part waſt and diſinhabited.

Lacedemon in Sparta.

In all this Countrie I could find nothing, to anſwere the famous Relations, giuen by ancient Authors, of the excellencie of that Land, but the name onely; the barbarouſneſſe of Turkes and Time, hauing defaced all the Monuments of Antiquitie: No ſhew of honour, no habitation of men in a honeſt faſhion, nor poſſeſſors of the Countrie in a Principalitie. But rather Priſoners ſhut vp in Priſons, or addicted ſlaues to cruell and tyrannicall Maſters.

Departing from Argo, vpon the ſeuenth day wee arriued at Athens: Athens is ſtill inhabited, ſtanding in the Eaſt part of Peloponneſus, neere to the Frontiers of Macedon: It was firſt called Cecropia, and laſtly Athens of Minerua. This Citie was the Mother and Well-ſpring of all Liberall Arts and Sciences, but now altogether decayed: The circuit of old Athens hath beene according to the fundamentall Wals yet extant about ſixe Italian miles, but now of no great quantitie, nor many dwelling Houſes therein. They haue abundance of all things, requiſite for the ſuſtenance of humane life, of which I had no ſmall proofe: for theſe Athenians, or Greekes, exceeding kindly banqueted me foure daies, and furniſht mee with neceſſarie prouiſion for my Voyage to Creta. And alſo tranſported mee by Sea in a Brigandine freely to Serigo, being foure and fortie miles diſtant.

Athens. See of it my Pilgrimage l. 3 c. 14. Simdor Cabaſidas writes that there are 70. Dialects of Moderne Greeke, the worſt of which is that of Athens.

Kind Athenians

Serigo is an Iland in the Sea Cretico, It was anciently called Cytherea. It is of circuit ſixtie miles, hauing but one Caſtle called Capſello: which is kept by a Venetian Captaine: here it is ſaid that Venus did firſt inhabit, and I ſaw the ruines of her demoliſhed Temple on the ſide of a Mountaine yet extant. A little more downward below this Temple of Venus, are the relikes of that Palace, wherein Menelaus did dwell, who was King of Sparta, and Lord of this Ile. The Greekes of the Ile told me there were wild Aſſes there, who had a ſtone in their heads, which was a ſoueraigne remedie for the Falling-ſickneſſe, and good to make a woman be quickly deliuered of her birth.

Wild Aſſes.

THe Ile of Candy was called Creta: It is a moſt a famous and ancient Kingdome: By moderne Writers, it is called Queene of the Iles Mediterrane: It had of old a hundred Cities, whereof it had the name Hecatompolis, but now onely foure, Candia, Canea, Rethimos, and Scythia; the reſt are but Villages and Bourges. It is of length, to wit, from Capo Ermica, in the Weſt, called by Plinie, Frons arietis, and Capo Salomone in the Eaſt, two hundred and fortie miles, large threeſcore, and of circuite ſixe hundred and fiftie miles. This is the chiefeſt Dominion, belonging to the Venetian Republike: In euery one of theſe foure Cities there is a Gouernour, and two Counſellors, ſent from Venice euery two yeeres. The Countrey is diuided into foure parts, vnder the iuriſdiction of the foure Cities, for the better adminiſtration of Iuſtice: and they haue a Generall, who commonly remayneth in the Citie of Candie, (like to a Vice-roy) who depoſeth or impoſeth Magiſtrates, Capitaines, Souldiers, Officers, and others whatſoeuer, in the behalfe of Saint Marke, or Duke of Venice. The Venetians detaine continually a ſtrong Guard, diuided in Companies, Squadrons, and Garriſons, in the Cities and Fortreſſes of the Iland: which doe extend to the number of twelue thouſand Souldiers kept, not only for the incurſion of Turkes, but alſo for feare of the Cretans or Inhabitants, who would rather if they could (as ſome ſay) render to the Turke, then to liue vnder the ſubiection of Venice. This Ile produceth the beſt Malnoſey, Muſcadine, and Leaticke, that ſuppoſedly are in the World. It yeeldeth Orenges, Limons, Mellons, Citrons Grenadiers, Adams Apples, Raiſins, Oliues, Dates, Honey, Sugar, Vuadi tre Volte, and all other kinds of fruit in abundance. But the moſt part of their Cornes are brought yeerely from Archipelago and Greece. This much of the Ile in generall; and now in reſpect of my trauelling two times through the bounds of the whole Kingdome, which was neuer before atchieued by any Traueller of Chriſtendome; I will as briefly as I can in particular relate a few of theſe miſeries indured by me in this Land, with the nature and qualitie of the people.

A deſcription of Candie. See the Map. ſup. pag. 1384.

The old and famous Citie of Lanerke.

A happie deliuerance from Theeues.

This aforelaid Carabuſa, is the principall Fortreſſe of Creta, being of it ſelfe inuincible, and is not vnlike to the Caſtle of Dunbertan, which ſtandeth at the mouth of Clyd; vpon which Riuer the moſt worthy renowmed, and anciently ennobled Citie of Lanerke is ſituated: For it is enuironed with a Rocke higher then the wals, and ioyneth with Capo Ermico: hauing learned of the Theeuiſh way, I had to Canea, I aduiſed to put my money in exchange, which the Captaine of that ſtrength, very courteouſly performed; And would alſo haue diſwaded mee from my purpoſe, but I by no perſwaſion of him would ſtay. From thence departing, ſcarcely was I aduanced twelue miles in my way, when I was beſet on the skirt of a Rockie Mountaine, with three Greeke Renegadoes, and an Italian Bandido: who laying hands on me, beat me moſt cruelly, robbed me of all my clothes, and ſtripped me naked, vſing many inuectiue ſpeeches. At laſt, the Italian perceiuing I was a ſtranger, and could not ſpeake the Cretan Tongue, began to aske mee in his owne Language, where was my money? To whom I ſoberly anſwered, I had no more then he ſaw, which was eightie Bagantines: But he not giuing credit to theſe words, ſearched all my clothes, and Budgeto, yet found nothing except my Linnen, and Letters of recommendation, I had from diuers Princes of Chriſtendome: Which when he ſaw, did mooue him to compaſſion, and earneſtly entreated the other three Theeues to grant me mercie, and ſaue my life: A long deliberation being ended, they reſtored backe againe my Pilgrimes clothes, and Letters, but my blue Gowne and Bagantines they kept: Such alſo was their theeuiſh courteſie toward mee, that for my better ſafegard in the way, they gaue me a ſtamped piece of Clay, as a token to ſhew any of their companions, if I encountred with them; for they were about twentie Raſcals of a confederate band, that lay in this Deſart paſſage. Leauing them with many counterfeit thankes, I trauelled that day ſeuen and thirtie miles, and at night attained to the vnhappy Village of Pickbrno: where I could haue neither meate, drinke, lodging, nor any refreſhment to my wearied bodie. Theſe deſperate Candiots thronged about mee gazing (as though aſtoniſhed) to ſee mee both want companie, and their Language, and by their cruell lookes, they ſeemed to bee a barbarous and vnciuill people For all theſe High-landers of Candie, are tyrannicall, bloud-thirſtie, and deceitfull. The conſideration of which, made me to ſhun their villanie, and priuately ſought for a ſecure place of repoſe in a darke Caue by the Seaſide; in which I lay till morning with a crazed bodie, and hungrie belly, Canea.

Foure ſtrong Cities.

Vpon the appearing of the next Aurora I embraced my vnknowne way, and about midday came to Canea: Canea is the ſecond Citie of Creete, exceeding populous, well walled, and fortified with Bulwarkes: It hath a large Caſtle, contayning ninety ſeuen Palaces, in which the Rector and other Venetian Gentlemen dwell. There lie continually in it ſeuen Companies of Souldiers, who keepe Centinell on the wals, guard the Gates, and Market places of the Cities: Neither in this Towne nor Candia, may any Countrey Peaſant enter with weapons (eſpecially Harquebuzes) for that conceiued feare they haue of Treaſon. Truly this Citie may equall in ſtrength, either Zara in Dalmatia, or Luka, or Ligorne, both in Tuſcana: for theſe foure Cities are ſo ſtrong, that in all my trauels I neuer ſaw them matched. They are all well prouided with Artillery, and all neceſſary things for their defence, eſpecially Luka, which continually reſerues in ſtore prouiſion of victuals for twelue yeeres ſiege. Being here diſappointed of tranſportation to Archipelago, I aduiſed to viſit Candie: and in my way I ſaw the large Hauen of Suda, which hath no Towne or Village, ſaue onely a Caſtle, ſituated on a Rocke in the Sea, at the entry of the Bay: the bounds of that Harbour may receiue at one time aboue two thouſand ſhips and Gallies, and is the onely Key of the Iland: for the which place, the King of Spaine hath oft offered an infinite deale of money to the Venetians, whereby his Nauie which ſometimes reſort in the Leuante, might haue acceſſe and reliefe; but they would neuer grant him his requeſt.

Rethimos.

Minos.

Saturne.

Labyrinth of Crete.

Vpon the third dayes iourney from Canea, I came to Rethimos; This Citie is ſomewhat ruinous, and vnwalled, but the Citizens haue newly builded a ſtrong Fortreſſe, which defendeth them from the inuaſion of Pirates: it ſtandeth by the Sea ſide, and in the yeere 1597. it was miſerably ſacked, and burned with Turkes. Continuing my Voyage, I paſſed along the skirt of Mount Ida, accompanied with Greekes who could ſpeake the Italian Tongue, on which, firſt they ſhewed me the Caue of King Minos, but ſome hold it to be the Sepulchre of Iupiter. That Groto is of length eightie paces, and eight large: This Minos was ſaid to be the Brother of Radamanthus, and Sarpedon; who, after their ſucceſſion to the Kingdome, eſtabliſhed ſuch equitable lawes, that by Poets they are feigned to be the Iudges of Hell. I ſaw alſo there, the place where Iupiter (as they ſay) was nouriſhed by Amalthea, which by Greekes is recited, as well as Latine Poets. Thirdly, they ſhewed me the Temple of Saturne, which is a worke to be admired, of ſuch Antiquitie, and as yet vndecayed; who (ſay they) was the firſt King that inhabited there. And neere to it, is the demoliſhed Temple of Matelia, hauing this ſuperſcription aboue the doore, yet to be ſeene Make cleane your feet, waſh your head and enter. Fourthly, I ſaw the entrie to the Labyrinth of Dedalus, which I would gladly haue better viewed, but becauſe wee had no Candle-light, we durſt not enter: for there are many hollow places within it; ſo that if a man ſtumble, or fall, he can hardly be reſcued: It is cut forth with many intricating wayes, on the face of a little hill, ioyning with Mount Ida.

Ida.

Mount Ida is the higheſt Mountaine in Creta, and by the computation of Shepherds feete, amounteth to ſixe miles of height: It is ouer-clad euen to the top with Cypreſſe trees, and good ſtore of medicinable herbs: inſomuch that the beaſts which feed thereupon, haue their teeth gilded, like to the colour of Gold: It is ſaid by ſome Hiſtorians, that no venemous animall can liue in this Ile; but I ſaw the contrarie: for I kild vpon one day two Serpents and a Viper: Wherefore many build vpon falſe reports, but experience teacheth men the truth. Deſcending from this Mountaine, I entred in a faire Plaine beautified with many Villages; in one of which I found a Grecian Biſhop, who kindly preſented me with Grapes of Maluaſia, and other things, for it was in the time of their Vintage. To carrie theſe things hee had giuen mee, hee cauſed to make readie an Aſſe, and a Seruant, who went with mee to Candie, which was more then fifteene miles from his Houſe. True it is, that the beſt ſort of Greekes, in viſiting other, doe not vſe to come emptie handed, neither will they ſuffer a ſtranger to depart, without both gifts and Conuoy.

Candie.

Candie is a large and famous Citie, ſituated on a Plaine by the Sea ſide, hauing a goodly Hauen for ſhips, and a faire Arſenall wherein are ſix and thirtie Gallies: It is exceeding ſtrong, and daily guarded with two thouſand Souldiers, and the Wals in compaſſe are about three leagues: Candie is diſtant from Venice thirteene thouſand miles, from Conſtantinople ſeuen hundred, from Famagoſta in Cyprus ſixe hundred, from Alexandria in Ægypt fiue hundred, and from the Citie of Ieruſalem nine hundred miles. The Candeots through all the Iland, make Muſtars euery eighth day, before the Seriant Maiors, or Officers of the Generall, and are well prouided with all ſorts of Armour; yea, and the moſt valorous people that hight the name of Greekes. It was told me by the Rector of Candie, that they may raiſe in Armes of the Inhabitants (not reckoning the Garriſons) aboue ſixtie thouſand men, all able for Warres, with fiftie foure Gallies, and twentie foure Galleots for the Sea. In all my trauels through this Realme, I neuer could ſee a Greeke come forth of his houſe vnarmed: and after ſuch a martiall manner, that on his head hee weareth a bare ſteele Cap, a Bow in his hand, a long Sword by his ſide, a broad Poynard ouerthwart his belly, and a round Target hanging at his Girdle. They are not coſtly in Apparell, for they weare but Linnen Clothes, and vſe no Shooes, but Bootes of white Leather: by nature they are craftie and ſubtile, as Paul mentioneth, Titus 1.12. Their Harueſt is our Spring: for they manure the ground, and ſow the Seed in October, which is reaped in March and Aprill. Being fruſtrate of my intention at Candie, I was forced to returne to Canea, where I ſtayed fiue and twentie dayes before I could get paſſage, for I purpoſed to view Conſtantinople. I trauelled on foot in this Ile more then foure hundred miles, and vpon the fiftie day after my firſt comming to Carabuſa, I embarked in a Fiſher-boate that belonged to Milo, being a hundred miles diſtant, which had beene violently driuen thither with ſtormie weather.

Note.

Archipelago.

Milo was called by Ariſtotle, Melada; and by others, Mimalida, Melos: And laſtly, Milo; becaue of the fine Mil-ſtones that are got there, which are tranſported to Conſtantinople, Greece, and Natolia. This Ile is one of the Iles Cyclades, or Sporades, but more commonly Archipelago, or the Arch-Ilands, and ſtandeth in the beginning of the Ægean Sea: The Inhabitants are Greekes, but ſlaues to the Turke, and ſo are all the fifty three Iles of the Cyclades, ſaue onely Tino, which holdeth of the Venetians.

Milo.

Red Partridges.

Flocks of tame Partridges.

Fountaines of Oile.

From Milo I came to Zephano, an Iland of circuit about twentie miles: The Inhabitants are poore, yet kind people: There are an infinite number of Partridges within this Ile, of a reddiſh colour, and bigger then ours in Britaine: They are wild, and onely killed by ſmall ſhot; but I haue ſeene in other Ilands flockes of them feeding in the fields, and vſually kept by Children: Some others I haue ſeene in the ſtreets of Villages, without any Keeper, euen as our Hens doe with vs. I ſaw Fountaines heere, that naturally yeeld fine Oyle which is the greateſt aduantage the Ilanders haue.

Parir.

From thence I embarked, and arriued at Anguſa, in Parir: This Ile is fortie miles long, and ſixe miles broad: being plentifull enough in all neceſſary things for the vſe of man: In Anguſa I ſtayed ſixteene dayes, tormeſted with Northerly winds; and in all that time I neuer came in bed: for my lodging was in a little Church without the Village, on hard ſtones, where I alſo had a fire, and dreſſed my meate. The Greekes viſited me oftentimes, and intreated me aboue all things, I ſhould not enter within the bounds of their Sanctuarie; becauſe I was not of their Religion. Theſe miſerable Ilanders, are a kind of ſilly poore people; which in their behauiour, ſhewed the neceſſitie they had to liue, rather then any pleaſure in their liuing. From thence I arriued in the Ile of Mecano, where I but onely dined, and ſo ſet forward to Zea. Symonides the Poet, and Eriſtato the excellent Phyſician, were borne in it. The next Ile of any note we touched at, was Tino: This Iland is vnder the Signorie of Venice, and was ſometimes beautified with the Temple of Neptune. By Ariſtotle it was called Idruſa; of Demoſthenes and Æſchines, Eruſea: It hath an impregnable Caſtle, builded on the top of a high Rocke; ſo that the Turkes by no meanes can conquer it.

Pathmos.

From this Ile I came to Palmoſa, ſometime Pathmos, which is a Mountaynous and barren Iland: It was heere that Saint Iohn wrote the Reuelation after hee was baniſhed by Domitianus Nicaria.

Greekes taken Captiues.

Icarus.

the Emperour. Thence I imbarked to Nicaria, and ſailed by the Ile Scyro; which of olde was the Signiory of Licomedes, and in the Habit of a Woman, was Achilles brought vp heere: who in that time, begot Pyrrhus vpon Deidamia, the Daughter of Licomedes, and where the crafty Vlyſſes did diſcouer this fatall Prince to Troy. As we fetched vp the ſight of Nicaria, wee eſpied two Turkiſh Galliots, who gaue vs the Chace, and purſued vs ſtraight vnto a Bay, betwixt two Mountaines, where we left the loaden Boat, and fled to the Rockes: But in our flying, the Maſter was taken, and other two old men; whom they made Captiues and Slaues: and alſo ſeized vpon the Boat, and all their goods: The number that eſcaped, were nine perſons. This Ile Nicaria, was anciently called Doliche, and Ithioſa, and is ſomewhat barren; hauing no Sea-port at all: It was here, the Poets feigned, that Icarus the Sonne of Dedalus fell, when as hee tooke flight from Creta, with his borrowed wings, of whom it hath the name. Expecting certaine dayes here, in a Village called Laphantos, for paſſage to Sio, at laſt I found a Brigandino bound thither, that was come from the fruitfull Ile of Stalimene, of old Lemnons, wherein I imbarked, and ſailed by the Ile Samos, which is oppoſite to Caria, in Aſia Minor: It is of circuit one hundred and ſixtie, and of length fortie miles: It was of old named Driuſa, and Melanphilo, in which was Pythagoras the Philoſopher, and Lycaon the excellent Muſitioner borne.

Shipwrack.

As we left the Ile Veneco on our left hand, and entred the Gulfe betweene Sio and Eolida, there fell downe a deadly ſtorme, at the Greco è Leuante, which ſplit our Maſt, carrying Sailes and all ouer-boord: Whereupon euery man looked (as it were) with the ſtampe of death in his pale viſage. The tempeſt continuing (our Boat not being able to keepe the Seas) wee were conſtrained to ſeeke into a Creeke, betwixt two Rockes, for ſafetie of our liues; where, when wee entred, there was no likelihood of reliefe: for we had a ſhelfie ſhoare, and giuing ground to the Anchors, they came both home. The ſorrowfull Maſter ſeeing nothing but ſhipwracke, tooke the Helme in hand, directing his courſe to ruſh vpon the face of a low Rocke, whereupon the Sea moſt fearefully broke. As wee touched, the Mariners contending who ſhould firſt leape out, ſome fell ouerboord, and thoſe that got Land, were pulled backe by the reciprocrating waues: Neither in all this time durſt I once moue; for they had formerly ſworne, if I preſſed to eſcape, before the reſt were firſt forth, they would throw me head-long into the Sea: So being two wayes in danger of death, I patiently offered vp my Prayers to God.

At our firſt incounter with the Rockes (our fore-deckes, and Boates Gallerie being broke, and a great Lake made) the recoyling waues brought vs backe from the ſhelfes a great way; which the poore Maſter perceiuing, and that there were ſeuen men drowned, and eleuen perſons aliue, cried with a loud voice: Be of good courage, take vp Oares, and row haſtily; it may bee, before the Barke ſinke, we ſhall attaine to yonder Caue. Euery man working for his owne deliuerance (as it pleaſed God) we got the ſame with good fortune: for no ſooner were we disbarked, but the Boat immediately ſunke. There was nothing ſaued but my Coffino, which I kept alwaies in my armes; for the which ſafetie of my things, the Greekes were in admiration. In this Caue, which was thirtie paces long, within the Mountaine, we abode three daies, without both meate and drinke: vpon the fourth day at morne, the tempeſt ceaſing, there came Fiſher-boates to relieue vs, who found the ten Greekes almoſt famiſhed for lacke of food.

The Tombe of Homer.

The dead men being found on ſhoare, we buried them; and I learned at that inſtant time, there were ſeuenteene Boats caſt away on the Coaſt of this Iland, and neuer a man ſaued: in this place the Greekes ſet vp a ſtone Croſſe in the memoriall of ſuch a wofull miſchance, and mourned heauily, faſting and praying. I reioycing, and thanking God for my ſafetie (leauing them ſorrowing for their friends and goods) tooke Iourney through the Iland to Sio: for ſo is the Citie called. In my way I paſt by an old Caſtle ſtanding on a little Hill, named Gaſbos, or Helias; where (as I was informed by two Greekes in my company) the Sepulchre of Homer was yet extant: for this is one of the ſeuen Iles that contended for his birth: and I willing to ſee it, entreated them to accompany me thither; where, when we came, we deſcended by ſixteene degrees into a darke Cell; and paſſing that, we entred in another foure ſquared Roome, in which I ſaw an ancient Tombe, whereon were ingrauen Greeke Letters, which we could not vnderſtand for their Antiquitie; but whether it was this Tombe or not, I doe not know, but this they related.

The pride of Greekiſh Whoores.

The Women of the Citie Sio, are the moſt beautifull Dames, of all the Greekes in the World, and greatly giuen to Venery: They are for the moſt part exceeding proud, and ſumptuous in apparell, and commonly goe (euen Artificers Wiues) in Gownes of Sattin and Taffetay; yea of Cloth of Siluer and Gold, and are adorned with Precious Stones and Gemmes, and Iewels about their neckes and hands. Their Husbands are their Pandors, and when they ſee any ſtranger arriue, they will preſently demand of him, if hee would haue a Miſtris: and ſo they make Whoores of their owne wiues, and are contented for a little gaine, to weare Hornes: ſuch are the baſe mindes of ignominious Cuckolds: After ſome certaine dayes attendance, I imbarked in a Carmoeſalo, bound for Nigroponti, which was forth of my way to Conſtantinople; but becauſe I would galdly haue ſeene Macedonia, I followed that determination: In our way wee ſayled by Mytelene, an Iland of olde called Iſa: next Leſbos: and laſtly Mytelene, of Milet the Sonne of Phœbus.

Nigroponti is ſeparated from the firme Land of Theſſalia, with a narrow channell, ouer the which in one part there is a bridge that paſſeth betweene the Ile and the mayne continent, and vnder it runneth a maruellous ſwift current or tyde: Within halfe a mile of the Bridge I ſaw a Marble columne ſtanding on the toppe of a little Rocke, whence (as the Ilanders tolde mee) Ariſtotle leaped in, and drowned himſelfe, after that hee could not conceiue the reaſon why this Channell ſo ebbed and flowed. This Ile bringeth forth in abundance, all things requiſite for humane life, and decored with many goodly Villages. From thence I arriued at a Towne in Macedonia, called Salonica, but of olde Theſſalonica, where I ſtaied fiue daies, and was much made of by the Inhabitants: It is a Citie full of rich commodities, and is the principall place of Theſſalie, which is a Prouince of Macedon, together with Achaia and Myrmedon, which are two Prouinces of the ſame. There is an Vniuerſitie of Iewes here, who profeſſe onely the Hebrew Tongue. About this Citie is the moſt fertile Countrey in all Greece.

Salonica.

Iewiſh Vniuerſitie.

In Salonica I found a Germe bound for Tenedos, in the which I embarked: As we ſailed along the Theſſalonian Shoare, I ſaw the two topped Hill Pernaſſus, where it was ſaid the nine Muſes haunted: but as for the fountaine Helicon, I leaue that to be ſearched, and ſeene by the imagination of Poets; for if it had beene obiected to my ſight, like an inſatiable drunkard, I ſhould haue drunke vp the ſtreames of Poeſie, to haue enlarged my poore poeticall veine. The Mountaine it ſelfe is ſomewhat ſteepe and ſterile, eſpecially the two toppes, the one whereof is drie and ſandie, ſignifying that Poets are alwayes poore and needie: The other top is barren and rockie, reſembling the ingratitude of wretched and niggardly Patrons: the vale betweene the tops is pleaſant and profitable, denoting the fruitfull and delightful ſoile, which painefull Poets, the Muſes plowmen ſo induſtriouſly manure. A little more Eaſtward, as we fetcht vp the Coaſt of Achaia, the Maſter of the veſſell ſhewed mee a ruinous Village and Caſtle; where hee ſaid the admired Citie of Thebes had beene.

Pernaſſus deſcribed.

Thebes.

Vpon the third day from Salonica, wee arriued in the Road of Tenedos, which is an Iland in the Sea Pontus or Propontis: it hath a Citie called Tenedos, built by Tenes, which is a gallant place, hauing a Caſtle and a faire Hauen for all ſorts of Veſſells: it produceth good ſtore of Wines, and the beſt ſuppoſed to be in all the Southeaſt parts of Europe.

Tenedos.

In Tenedos I met by accident, two French Merchants of Marſeills, intending for Conſtantinople, who had loſt their Ship at Sio, when they were buſie at venereall tilting with their new elected Miſtreſſes, and ſo a ſecond remedie were glad to come thither in a Turkiſh Carmoeſalo. The like of this I haue ſeene fall out with Sea-faring men, Merchants and Paſſengers, who buy ſometimes their too much folly with too deare repentance. They and I reſoluing to view Troy, did hire a Ianizarie to be our conductor & protector, & a Greeke to be our Interpreter. Where when we landed, we ſaw here & there many relicts of old walls, as we trauelled through theſe famous bounds. And as we were aduanced toward the Eaſt part of Troy, our Greeke brought vs to many Tombes which were mightie ruinous, and pointed vs particularly to the Tombes of Hector, Aiax, Achilles, Troylus, & many other valiant Champions, with the Tombes alſo of Hecuba, Creſſeid, and other Troiane Dames: Well I wote, I ſaw infinite old Sepulchres, but for their particular names and nomination of them I ſuſpend, neither could I beleeue my Interpreter, ſith it is more then three thouſand and odde yeeres agoe that Troy was deſtroied: Hee ſhewed vs alſo the ruines of King Priams Palace, and where Anchiſes the father of Æneas dwelt. At the North-eaſt corner of Troy, which is in ſight of the Caſtles of Helleſponte, there is a Gate yet ſtanding, and a piece of a reaſonable high Wall; vpon which I found three pieces of ruſted mony, which afterwards I gaue to the two younger brethren of the Duke of Florence.

The Tombs of Troians.

Where the pride of Phrygia ſtood, it is a moſt delectable Plaine, abounding now in Cornes, Fruits, and Wines, and may be called the Garden of Natolia: yet not populous, for there are but only fiue ſcattered Villages in all that bounds: The length of Troy hath been, as may be diſcerned, by the fundamentall Walls yet extant about twenty miles: the ruines of which are come to that Poeticall Prouerbe: Nunc ſeges eſt vbi Troia fuit.

A deſcription of Troy.

Leauing the Fields of noble Illium, we croſſed the Riuer of Simois, and dined at a village named Extetaſh: I remember, diſcharging our couenant with the Ianizarie, who was not contented with the former condition, the Frenchmen making obſtacle to pay that which I had giuen, the wrathful Ianizary belaboured them both with a cudgel, til the bloud ſprung from their heads, & compelled them to double his wages. This is one true note to a traueller (wherof I had the ful experience afterward) that if he cannot make his own part good, he muſt alwaies at the firſt motion content theſe Raskalls; otherwiſe he will be conſtrained doubtleſſe with ſtrokes to pay twice as much: for they make no account of conſcience, nor are ruled by the Law of compaſſion, neither regard they a Chriſtian more then a dog: but whatſoeuer extortion or iniurie they vſe againſt him, he muſt bee French like contented, bowing his head, and making a counterfeit ſhew of thanks, and happy too oftentimes, if ſo he eſcape. Hence we arriued at the Caſtles, called of old Seſtos and Abydos, which are two Fortreſſes oppoſite to other, the one in Europe, the other in Aſia, being a mile diſtant: They ſtand at the beginning of Helleſponte, and were alſo cognominate the Caſtles of Hero and Leander, which were erected in a commemoration of their admirable fidelitie in loue. But now they are commonly called the Caſtles of Gallipoly, yea, or rather the ſtrength of Conſtantinople, betweene which no Ship may enter without knowledge of the Captains: And at their returne they muſt ſtay three dayes before they are permitted to goe through. Betwixt the Caſtles and Conſtantinople is about fortie leagues: Here I left the two Frenchmen with a Greeke Barbour, and imbarked for Conſtantinople in a Turkiſh Frigato. The firſt place of any note I ſaw within theſe narrow Seas, was the ancient Citie of Gallipolis. After we had fetcht vp the famous Citie of Calcedon in Bithinia on our right hand; I beheld on our left, the proſpect of that little world, the great Citie of Conſtantinople; which indeed yeeldeth ſuch an outward ſplendor, to the amazed beholder, of goodly Churches, ſtately Towers, gallant Steeples, and other ſuch things, whereof now the world make ſo great account, that the whole earth cannot equall it. Beholding theſe delectable obiects, we entred into the channel of Boſphorus, which diuideth Perah from Conſtantinople. And arriuing at Tapanau, where all the Munition of the Great Turke lieth, I bade farewell to my company, and went to a lodging to refreſh my ſelfe till morning.

Conſtantinople hath ſo often bin preſented on this Stage, that now we will paſſe by it.

Smyrna.

DEparting from Conſtantinople, I came to Cenchrea, being three hundred miles diſtant, where Saint Paul cut his haire, after his vow was performed, Act. 18. 18. from thence I went to Smyrna in Carmania, a famous Kingdome in Aſia the Leſſer: This Citie was one of the ſeuen Churches mentioned Reuelat. 2. 8. It is a goodly place, hauing a faire Hauen for Ships: They haue great traffike with all Nations, eſpecially for the fine Silke, Cotten-wool, and dimmetie brought to it by the Country Peaſants, which ſtrangers buy from them. Truely neere vnto this Citie I ſaw ſuch a long continuing Plaine, abounding in Corne, Wines, and all ſorts of fruitful herbage, and ſo infinitely peopled, that me thought Nature ſeemed with the peoples induſtrie to contend, the one by propagating creatures, the other by admirable agriculture. Thiatyra, now called Tiria, one alſo of the ſeuen Churches is not farre hence.

Epheſus.

Hippocrates.
Appelles.

Nixa.

From this Citie I imbarked in a Turkiſh Carmoeſalo, bound for Rhodes. In our ſayling along the Coaſt of Aſia Minor, the firſt place of any note I ſaw, was the ruinous Citie of Epheſus; yet ſomewhat inhabited, and pleaſantly adorned with Gardens, faire Fieldes, and greene Woods of Oliue trees, which on the Sea doe yeeld a delectable proſpect: It was one of the ſeuen Churches, Reuel. 2. 1. Ouer-againſt this Citie is the Ile Lango, anciently called Coos, wherein the great Hippocrates was borne, and Appelles, the Painter moſt excellent. It is both fertile and populous, and of circuit about 80. miles. There is a kind of Serpent ſaid to be in it ſo friendly vnto the Inhabitants, that when the men are ſleeping vnder the ſhadow of Trees they come crauling, and will linke or claſpe themſelues about their neckes and bodies, without doing any harme, neither when they awake are the beaſts afraid. And neere to Lango is the Ile Nixa, of old Strangoli; and by ſome called Dioniſa and Naxus; an Iland both fruitfull and delightfull. As we ſailed by the Weſt part of the Ile, a Greeke Paſſenger ſhewed mee the place, where (as hee ſaid) Ariadne was deceiued of Theſeus, which is not farre from the irriguate Plaine of Darmille. Continuing our Nauigation I ſaw a little Ile called Ephdoſh, where the Turks told me, that al the Ilanders were naturally good ſwimmers, paying no more tribute to their Great Lord the Turke, ſaue only once in the yere, there are certaine men and women choſen by a Turkiſh Captaine, who muſt ſwim a whole league right out in the Sea, and go downe to the bottome of the waters to fetch thence ſome token they haue got ground: And if they ſhall happen to faile in this this, the Iland will bee reduced againe to pay him yeerely rent. This I ſaw with mine eyes, whiles wee being calmed, there came a man and two women ſwimming to vs more then a mile of way, carrying with them (drie aboue the water) baskets of Fruit to ſell, the which made mee not a little to wonder. Contenting them for their ware, vpon the ninth day after our departure from Smyrna, wee arriued at the Citie of Rhodes, ſo called of the Iland wherein it ſtandeth.

Rhodes.

The great Coloſſe.

Rhodes lieth in the Carpathian Sea; It was of old called Ibrea, Telchino and Phiula: Plinie ſaith it was called Rhodes, becauſe there were certaine Fields of Roſes in it; for Rhodes in the Greeke tongue ſignifieth a Floure: Not farre from the Citie I ſaw the relicts of that huge and admiredly-erected Idoll, named Colloſſus. This Ile of Rhodes was loſt by the Maltazes, Anno Dom. 1522. and euer ſince is in the fruition of Turks: The Fortreſſe of Rhodes, and that Fortreſſe Famogoſta in Cyprus, are the two ſtrongeſt Holds in all the Empire of the Great Turk.

Tharſus, a decayed Citie in Cilicia, where Saint Paul was borne, is the chiefeſt ſeat of that country.

After I had contented the Maſter for my fraught and victualls (who, as hee was an Infidell, vſed mee with an extraordinarie exaction) I found a Barke of the Arches purpoſed to Cyprus, with which I imbarked, being foure hundred miles diſtant. Hauing paſt the Gulfe of Sattelia, we boorded cloſe along the firme Land of fruitfull Pamphilia, and on the fifth day thereafter, we fetched vp the Coaſt of Cilicia, ſuſtaining many great dangers, both of tempeſtuous ſtormes, and inuaſions of damnable Pirats.

Cyprus.
Nicoſia.

Twelue dayes was betweene Rhodes and Limiſſo in Cyprus: where arriued, I receiued more gracious demonſtrations from the Ilanders, then I could hope for or wiſh; being far beyond my merit or expectation; onely contenting my curioſitie with a quiet mind, I renderd thankes for my imbraced courteſies. The ſecond day after my arriuall, I tooke with me an Interpreter, and went to ſee Nicoſia, which is placed in the midſt of the Kingdome. But in my iourney thither, extream was the heat and thirſt I endured; both in reſpect of the ſeaſon, and alſo want of water: And although I had with mee ſufficiencie of wine, yet durſt I drinke none thereof, being ſo ſtrong, and withall hath a taſte of pitch; and that is, becauſe they haue no Barrells, but great Iarres made of Earth, wherein there wine is put. Nicoſia is the principall Citie of Cyprus, and is inuironed with Mountaines, like vnto Florence in Hetruria; wherein the Vizier Baſhaw remaineth: The ſecond is Famogoſta, the chiefe ſtrength and Sea-port in it: Selina, Lemiſſo, Paphos, and Fontana Moroſa, are the other foure ſpeciall Townes in the Iland.

This Ile of Cyprus is in length 210. and large ſixtie, and of circuit 600. miles. In this Ile was Venus greatly honoured: It yeeldeth infinite Canes of Sugar, ſtrong Wines, and Cotten-wooll, beſides all other ſorts of Fruit in abundance.

Cyprus.

In my returne from Nicoſia to Famoguſta, with my Trenchman, wee encountered by the way with foure Turkes, who needs would haue my horſe to ride vpon; which my Interpreter refuſed: But they in reuenge pulled mee by the heeles from the horſe backe, beating me moſt pittifully, and left mee almoſt for dead. In this meane while my companion fled, and eſcaped the ſcelerateneſſe of their hands; and if it had not beene for ſome compaſſionable Greekes, who by accident came by and relieued me, I had (doubtleſſe) immediately periſhed. From Famoguſta I imbarked in a Germe, and arriued at Tripoly. Tripoly is a Citie in Siria, ſtanding a mile from the marine ſide, neere to the foot of Mount Libanus: ſince it hath beene firſt founded it hath three times beene ſcituated and remoued in three ſundrie places: Firſt, it was ouerwhelmed with water: Secondly, it was ſacked with Curſares, and Pirates: Thirdly, it is like now to bee ouer-throwne with new made Mountaines of Sand: There is no Hauen by many miles neere vnto it, but a dangerous rode, where often when Northerly windes blow, Ships are caſt away. The great trafficke which now is at this place, was formerly at Scanderona, a little more Eaſtward; but by reaſon of the infectious aire (that corrupted the bloud of ſtrangers, proceeding of two high mountaines; who are ſuppoſed to bee a part of Mount Caucaſus, which withhold the proſpect of the Sunne from the In-dwellers, more then three houres in the morning: So that in my knowledge I haue knowne dye in one Shippe, and a moneths time twentie Mariners; for this cauſe) the Chriſtian ſhips were glad to haue their commodities brought to Tripoly, which is a more holeſome and conuenient place.

Tripoly.

The daily Interrogation I had here, for a Carrauans departure to Aleppo was not to me a little faſtidious, being mindfull to viſit Babylon: In this my expectation I tooke purpoſe, with three Venetian Merchants to goe ſee the Cedars of Libanon, which was but a daies iourney thither. As we aſcended vpon the Mountaine, our ignorant guide miſtaking the way, brought vs into a laborinth of dangers; inſomuch that wreſtling amongſt intricate paths of Rocks: two of our Aſſes fell ouer a Banke and broke their necks: And if it had not beene for a Chriſtian Maronite, who accidently encountred with vs, in our wilſum wandring wee had beene miſerably loſt; both in regard of Rockes and heapes of Snow we paſſed; and alſo of great Torrents which fell downe with force from the ſteepie tops; wherein one of theſe Merchants was twice almoſt drowned. When wee arriued to the place where the Cedars grew, wee ſaw but twentie foure of all, growing after the manner of Oke trees, but a great deale taler, ſtraighter, and greater, and the branches grow ſo ſtraight out, as though they were kept by Art.

Although that in the daies of Salomon, this Mountaine was ouer-clad with Forreſts of Cedars, yet now there are but only theſe, and nine miles Weſtward thence ſeuenteene more. The nature of that Tree is alwaies green, yeelding an odoriferous ſmell, and an excellent kind of fruit like vnto Apples, but of a ſweeter taſte, and more holeſome in digeſtion. The Rootes of ſome of theſe Cedars are almoſt deſtroyed by Shepheards, who haue made fires thereat, and holes wherein they ſleepe; yet neuertheleſſe they flouriſh greene aboue in the tops and branches. The length of this Mountaine is about fortie miles, reaching from the Weſt to the Eaſt; and continually Summer and Winter, reſerueth Snow on the tops. It is alſo beautified with all the ornaments of nature, as Herbage, Tillage, Paſtorage, fructiferous Trees, fine Fountaines, good Cornes, and abſolutely the beſt VVines that is bred on the earth. The Signior thereof is a Free-holder, by birth a Turke, and wil not acknowledge any ſuperior, but the moſt part of the inhabited Villages are Chriſtians, called Maronites or Noſtranes, quaſi Nazaritans, and are gouerned by their owne Patriarke. There are none at this day doe ſpeake the Syriack * Tongue, ſaue onely theſe people of Mount Libanus; and in that Language the Alcoran of Mahomet is written. The kind Amaronite whom wee met, and tooke with vs for our beſt guide in deſcending from the Cedars, ſhewed vs many Caues and Holes in Rockes, where Coliers, religious Sirens and Amaronites abide: Amongſt theſe auſtere cottages, I ſaw a faire tombe all of one ſtone, being ſeuenteen foot of length; which (as he ſaid) was the Sepulchre of the valiant Ioſhua, who conducted the people of Iſrael in the Land of Promiſe.

Cedars.

* Arabike.

Coliers religious Greekes or Monkes.

The Mahometans eſteeme this to bee a holy place, and many reſort to it in Pilgrimage, to offer vp their Satanical praiers to Mahomet. I ſaw vpon this Mountaine a ſort of Fruit called Amazza franchi: that is, the death of Chriſtians; becauſe when Italians, or others of Europe eat any quantitie thereof, they preſently fall into the bloudie Fluxes, or elſe ingender ſome other peſtilentious Feuer whereof they die. The Patriarke did moſt kindly entertaine vs at his houſe; ſo did alſo all the Amaronites of the other Villages, who met vs in our way before wee came to their Townes, and brought Preſents with them of Bread, Wine, Figs, Oliues, Sallats, Capons, Egges, and ſuch like as they could on a ſudden prouide. About the Village of Eden, is the moſt fruitfull part of all Libanus, abounding in all ſorts of delicious Fruits. True it is, the variety of theſe things, maketh the ſilly people thinke, the Garden of Eden was there. There are with this one, other two ſuppoſed places of the earthly Paradiſe: the one is by the Turkes, and ſome ignorant Georgians, holden to be at Damaſcus, for the beautie of faire fields, gardens, and excellent fruits there; eſpecially for the tree called Mouſlee, which they beleeue hath grown there ſince the beginning of the world. Indeede it is a rare and ſingular tree, for I ſaw it at Damaſcus, and others alſo of the ſame kinde, vpon Nylus in Ægypt: The growth whereof is ſtrange; for euery yeere in September it is cut downe hard by the roote, and in fiue moneths the tree buddeth vp a pace againe, bringing forth leaues, floures, and fruit. The leafe thereof is of ſuch a breadth, that three men may eaſily ſtand vnder the ſhadow of it, and the Apple is bigger then a Foot-ball. The third place by the Chelſaines, is thought to be in the Eaſt part of Meſopotamia, neere to the ioyning of Tygris and Euphrates.

Eden.

This tree hath ſeuerall vertues bearing but one Apple at once.

After my returne to Tripoly, I departed thence Eaſtward, with a Carauan of Turkes to Aleppo, being ten daies iourney diſtant. In all this way (leauing Scanderon and Antiochia on our left hand) I ſaw nothing worthy remarking; ſaue onely a few ſcattered villages, and poore miſerable people, liuing in tents, and following their flockes, to whom I payed ſundry Caffars: who remoue their women, children, and cattell where ſo they finde fountaines, and good paſtorage.

Aleppo.

Before my arriuall in Aleppo, the Carauan of Babylon was from thence departed. I ioyned with a Carauan of Armenians and Turkes, that were well guarded with Ianiſaries, and Souldiers; of whom ſome were to ſtay at Damaſcus by the way, and ſome mindefull to Ieruſalem. And for my better ſafeguard (being alwayes alone, which by all was euer much admired) the Vize Conſull tooke ſurety of the Captaine, that he ſhould protect me ſafely from theeues, cut-throats, and the exactions of tributes by the way, deliuering mee freely into the hands of the Padre Guardiano at Ieruſalem: which being done, I hired two Mulets from a Turke, one to ride vpon, and another to carry my victuals; and ſo ſet forward with them. The number of our company were about nine hundred Armenians, Chriſtian pilgrimes, men and women: ſixe hundred Turkes, trafficking for their owne buſineſſe: and one hundred Souldiers, three Schowſſes, and ſix Ianiſaries to keep them from inuaſions.

Betweene Aleppo and Damaſcus, we had nine dayes iourney, in fiue of which, we had pleaſant trauelling, and good Canes to lodge in, that had beene builded for the ſupport of Trauellers, and are well maintained: But when we paſſed Hamſek, which is a little more then mid-way, wee had dangerous trauelling, being oft aſſailed with Arabs, fatigated with rockie Mountaines, and ſometimes in point of choaking for lacke of water. The confuſion of this multitude, was not onely grieuous in regard of the extreame heate, prouiding of victuals at poore villages, and ſcarcitie of water to fill our bottles, made of Boare ſkinnes, but alſo amongſt narrow and ſtonie paſſages, thronging, we oft fell one ouer another, in great heapes; in danger to be ſmothered: yea, and oftentimes, wee that were Chriſtians, had our bodies well beaten by our conducting Turkes. At our accuſtomed diſmounting, to recreate our ſelues: and refreſh the Beaſts, I would often fetch a walke, to ſtretch my legs, that were ſtifled with a ſtumbling beaſt; wherewith the Turkes were mightily diſcontented, and in deriſion, would laugh and mocke me: for they cennot abide a man to walke in turnes, or ſtand to eate; their vſage being ſuch, that when they come from the horſe backe, preſently ſit downe on ground, folding their feete vnder them, when they repoſe, dine, and ſup. So doe alſo their Artizans and all the Turkes in the world ſit alwaies croſſe-legged, wrongfully abuſing the commendable conſuetude of the induſtrious Tailors. In their houſes they haue no Bed to lye on, nor Chaires to ſit on, nor Tables to eate on, but a bench made of boords, along the houſe ſide, of a foote height from the floore, ſpread ouer with a Carpet; whereon they vſually ſit, eating, drinking, ſleeping, reſting, and doing of manuall exerciſes, all in one place.

The repoſing of the Turkes.

They neuer vncloath themſelues, when they goe to reſt, neither haue they any bed-cloathes, ſaue onely a couerlet aboue them: I haue ſeene hundreds of them, after this manner, lye ranked like durtie ſwine in a beaſtly ſtie, or loathſome iades in a filthy ſtable. Vpon the ninth day (leauing Cotafa behinde vs on the Mountaines) wee entred in a pleaſant plaine of three leagues in length, adorned with many villages, gardens, and riuers; and arriuing at Damaſcus, wee were all lodged (ſome in Chambers wanting beds, and others without, on hard ſtones) in a great Cane called Heramnen, where we ſtaied one day.

Damaſcus.

Damaſcus is the Capitall Citie of Syria, called by Turkes, Shamma, and is ſcituated on a faire plaine, and beautified with many riuers on each ſide (eſpecially Pharpar and Abdenab) excellent Orchards, and all other naturall obiects of elegancie: That for ſcituation, Artizens, all manner

Commodities, and varietie of Fruits, in all the Aſiaticall Prouinces it is not paraleld. By Turkes it is called, the Garden of Turkie.

Betweene Iacobs Bridge and Ieruſalem, we had ſixe dayes iourney.

Aprill the tenth day, about ten of the clocke, (paſſing the Riuer Kyſon) we arriued at Nazareth, and there repoſed till the Euening, prouiding our ſelues of Victuals and Water. In this Towne dwelt Ioſeph, and the Virgin Mary; and in which alſo our Sauiour was brought vp. After we had dined, the Armenians aroſe, and went to a heape of Stones, the ruines of an old Houſe, before the which they fell downe vpon their knees, praiſing God: and that ruinous lumpe (ſay they) was the Houſe where Mary dwelt, when Gabriel ſaluted her, bringing the Annunciation of Saluation to the world. I am fully perſwaded they carried away aboue fiue thouſand pounds weight, to keepe in a memoriall thereof. Then did I remember of the Chappell of Loretta, and told the Carauan, that I ſaw that Houſe ſtanding in Italie, which (as the Romaniſts ſay) was tranſported by the Angels. O, ſaid he, wee Armenians can not beleeue that, neither many other aſſertions of the Roman Church; for we certainly know by Chriſtians, that haue from time to time dwelt here euer ſince, that this is both the place, & ſtones of the Houſe. Let Papiſts coyne a new Law to themſelues wee care not, for as they erre in this, ſo doe they in all, following meerly the traditions of men, they runne gallopping poſt to Hell. The Patriarch being informed by the laughing Carauan of theſe newes, asked mee in diſdaine (thinking it had beene an Article of my Beliefe) if I ſaw that Houſe, or beleeued that the Chappell of Loretta was ſuch a thing: I anſwered, I did not beleeue it, affirming it was onely but a deuilliſh inuention, to deceiue the blind-folded people, and to fill the Coffers of the Roman Prieſts.

Speeches of the Patriarch.

In the time of our ſtaying heere, the Emeere or Lord of the Towne, ſent ſixe Women, conducted by twelue of his Seruants, to an Armenian Prince, that was a Pilgrime in our companie, to be vſed by him and others, whom ſo he would elect to bee his fellow labourers: which indeed hee did kindly accept, and inuited me to that Feaſt; but I gaue him the refuſall, little regarding ſuch a friuolons commoditie. Hee, and ſome of the chiefeſt Pilgrimes entertained them for the ſpace of three houres, and ſent them backe, giuing to their Conductors 15. Piaſters, in a reward.

The villanie of Armenians.

Approaching to Mount Carmell, I beheld a farre off vpon the top of the Hill, the place where Elias aſcended to Heauen, when hee left his Cloake behind him to Elizeus his Diſciple. This Mountaine is foure miles of length, lying South and North, the North end bordering with the Sea, neere to Acre, called antiently Ptolomais, and the South end ioyning with the borders of Samaria.

Mount Carmel.

Leauing Samaria on our left hand, we entred into a faire Plaine, adorned with fruitfull Trees, and all other ornaments that pleaſant Fields afford, but no Village we ſaw. Marching thus, about the declining of the Sun from the Meridian, we came in ſight of two hundred Pauillions, all piched in rankes; yeelding the proſpect of a little Citie, by a Brooke ſide of water: which being perceiued, the Captaine began to cenſure what they might bee; and immediatly there came riding towards vs ſixe naked fellowes, well mounted on Arabian Geldings, who demanded what wee were, and whither we were bound; and if there were any Frankes of Chriſtendome in our companie. To whom the Ianizaries replyed, wee were purpoſed to Ieruſalem, and that there was but one Franke with them: vpon the which they preſently ſought me, demanding Caffar, Caffar; and cauſed me perforce to pay ſeuen Chickenes of Gold for my head, becauſe (ſaid they) our King is now reſident in theſe Tents, he muſt pay therefore ſo much the more extraordinarie.

Caffar tribute.

They returning backe to their Prince, with the malediction of a Pilgrimes purſe, and wee marching on in our way, that day wee trauelled aboue three and fortie miles, and pitched at a Village called Adoaſh, where we found good Hearbs to eate, and abundance of water to drinke, and alſo to fill our emptied bottles. As wee lay downe to ſleepe, after a hungry Supper on the hard ground, and our Guard watching vs; that ſame King of the Arabians, came a little before mid-night, with foure and twentie well Horſed Runagates, and naked Courtiers, being armed with Bowes and Arrowes, and halfe Pikes, pointed at both ends with hard Steele, and asked for the Carauan, who preſently awoke, and went to ſalute him, laying his hand on his breſt, bowed his head very low; which is the vſuall courteſie amongſt the Infidels and Chriſtians in theſe parts, for they neuer vncouer their Heads to any man; and after ſome ſhort parley, they ſate all downe on the graſſe. The Carauan preſented his rude-like Maieſtie with Water, Bread, Hearbs, Figges, Garlike, and ſuch things as hee had. As they were thus merrie at this poore banquet, the awfull King tooke the oath of our Conductor, if there were any moe Frankes there then I; and he hauing ſworne the truth, the King by a malignant informer, incontinently cauſed me to bee brought before him, and ſtaring me in the face, asked my Interpreter where were my Companions? who replyed, I had none. Then ſaid he, tell that Dog, hee muſt acknowledge me with fiue peeces of Gold more, otherwiſe (making a ſigne to his owne throat) I ſhall cut off his Head. The which I being informed, and knowing that by no condition, there was reſiſtance againſt ſuch a ſcelerate Prince, gaue it him preſently with a halfe ſmiling countenance; which he remarking, told the reſt it ſeemed I gaue it with a good heart; and to recompence my outward behauiour, hee drunke a great draught of water to me, thinking thereby, he had done me more honour, then all the Chickenes of gold I gaue him now, and in the morning; would doe him profit. Truely, this was one of the greateſt Tributes I payed for one dayes iourney, that I had in all my voyage in Aſia. There are two Kings in Arabia, the one who liueth on Euphrates, the Deſarts of Meſopotamia, ſometimes in Arabia Felix, and in ſome parts of Siria. And the other, (which was the King to whom I payed this money) wandreth with his Tribes, Tents, and Beſtiall, one while in Arabia, Petrea, and Deſerta, and ſometimes in the Holy Land, as hee findeth good Paſtorage and freſh Fountaines. Theſe two Kings are mortall enemies; and if by accident they meet, they fight moſt cruelly.

Sychar of old the chiefeſt Citie in Samaria, is now altogether ruinated.

The next morning leauing Iacobs Well, and the Towne of Sychar, on our left hand, we marched through a part of the fields of Baſan, and had exceeding pleaſant trauelling; and at night wee pitched by Lydda on the fields: Lydda is not aboue ten miles from Ceſaria.

A Maſſacre of Armenian Pilgrimes.

Aprill the thirteenth, before the breake of day, ſetting forward, ſcarſely were wee well aduanced in our way, till we were beſet with more then three hundred Arabs, who ſent vs an vnexpected ſhower of Arrowes, to the great annoyance of all our companie: for if it had not been that our Souldiers ſhot off their Gunnes on a ſudden, ſurely wee had then miſerably periſhed. But the nature of the Arabs is not vnlike to the Iackals: for when any of them heare the ſhot of a Harquebuſſe, they turne backe with ſuch ſpeed, as if the fiends of the infernall Court were broken looſe vpon them. In that momentany conflict, on our ſide there were killed nine Women, fiue men, and about thirtie perſons deadly wounded, which to our worthie Captaine bred no ſmall griefe.

Proceeding in our iourney, in the hilly Countrey of Iudea we entred; leauing Rhama on our right hand. Rhama is a Towne inhabited by Chriſtians, Arabs, and Moores; not blacke Moores, as the Africans be, but they are called Mori, which are a kind of Egyptians, and not naturally blacke, but Sun-burnt with the parching heat. The whole Territorie of Canaan is inhabited with theſe Moores, ſome Turkes, ciuill Arabs, and a few Chriſtians, and ſcattered Iewes. The Arabians are for the moſt part Theeues and Robbers, the Moores cruell and vnciuill, hating Chriſtians to the death: the Turkes are the beſt of all the three, yet all ſworne enemies to Chriſt. About two of the clocke in the afternoone wee arriued at Berah, called of old Beerſheba, being eleuen miles diſtant from Ieruſalem. Hauing a little repoſed, we embraced our Mountainous way, as cheerfully as we could, for we were exceeding faint, and trauelled that day aboue three and fortie miles; whereby we might arriue at Ieruſalem before the Gates were ſhut, ſuſtaining drouth, heat, hunger, and not a few other inconueniences. At laſt we beheld the proſpect of Ieruſalem; which was not onely a contentment to my wearied body, but alſo being rauiſhed with a kind of vnwonted reioycing, the teares guſhed from my eyes for too much ioy. In this time the Armenians began to ſing in their owne faſhion, Pſalmes to praiſe the Lord; and I alſo ſung the hundred and third Pſalme all the way, till we arriued nere the walls of the Citie, where we ceaſed from our ſinging for feare of the Turkes.

Aprill the fourteenth day, vpon Palme-ſunday in the morning, we entred into Ieruſalem, and at the Gate we were particularly ſearched, to the effect we carried in no furniture of Armes, nor Powder with vs, and the Armenians (notwithſtanding they are Slaues to Turkes) behoued to render their weapons to the Keepers, ſuch is the feare they haue of Chriſtians. The Gates of the Citie are of Iron outwardly, and aboue each gate are Braſen Ordnance planted.

Aprill the fourteenth, on Palme-ſunday after dinner, the Guardiano departed from Ieruſalem to Bethphage, accompanied with twelue Friers, and many other Orientall Chriſtian, which were come thither to that Feſtiuall time, but I by no meanes would goe, repoſing my ſelfe till their returne. The ridiculous Ceremonie which that day they vſe, is thus: In an Apiſh imitation of Chriſt, at the aforeſaid Bethphage, there was an Aſſe brought to the Guardiano, whereupon hee mounted (being as it were, the greater Aſſe riding vpon the leſſer) and came riding to Ieruſalem, the people cutting downe boughes of Trees, and alſo diſpoyling themſelues almoſt to the skinne, beſtrewed the way as he rode along, crying, Hoſanna, Hoſanna, the Sonne of Dauid, bleſſed is hee that commeth in the Name of the Lord, vntill they came to the South gate of Sion, where he diſmounted. At night after Supper, the Guardiano knowing that I was a Proteſtant, and alſo ſome other Franckes, made an Oration, ſaying; You Pilgrimes, who refuſe to bee participant with vs in the Sacraments, nor will not adhere to the Proceſſions and Ceremonies, which wee follow of the Roman Church, I would therefore intreat you (your libertie being heere as much as mine, whereby you may doe whatſoeuer ſeeme good in your owne eyes) onely to abſtaine from ſcandalizing and mocking our Rites and ordinary Cuſtomes, which at this great Feaſt wee muſt performe. To the which we condiſcended and promiſed to giue no occaſion of offence. In the concluſion of his long Exhortation, he diſcloſed this admonition, ſaying; All of you Trauellers muſt in generall bee indued with theſe three worthy gifts, Faith, Patience, and Money; Faith, to beleeue theſe thinges you ſhall ſee heere at Ieruſalem; Patience, to indure the apparent iniuries of Infidels; and Money, to diſcharge all Tributes, and Coſts, which heere (meaning in his owne Monaſterie) and about this Citie muſt be defrayed.

Pilgrims their graces.

Earely vpon Tueſday morning* (being all of vs, both Friers and Pilgrimes, well mounted, Mulets laden for our prouiſion) we departed from the Citie with our Souldiers; and trauelled all that day through a barren and deſart Countrey, till Sun-ſetting, where wee repoſed by a ſtanding Well, till an houre within night. In all this deformed Countrey, we ſaw neither houſe nor Village, for it is altogether Deſartuous, and inhabited onely by wilde Beaſts, and naked Arabians. Before we came neere to Sodome and Gomorha, by ſeuen miles; (for ſo we behoued to paſſe by the Eaſt end of it, before we could arriue at that place of Iordan which we intended) wee I ſay incountred with ſuch deepe ſandie ground, that the Mulets were not able to carrie vs through, whereupon we all diſmounted, wreſtling, and wading aboue the middle part of our bodies, and ſometimes falling in ouer our heads, we were in great danger of periſhing. Euen in the middeſt of this turmoyling paine, (the night being darke) the vnwelcommed Arabs inuironed, and inuaded vs with a ſtorme of Arrowes, which they ſent from the toppes of little hard Hils whereupon they ſtood, for knowing the aduantage of the ground, they tooke opportunitie to giue the more fearefull aſſaults; yet they preuailed nothing (although they wounded ſome of our Souldiers) ſuch was the reſolute courage of our valourous defendants. True it is, that in all my trauels I was neuer ſo ſore fatigated, nor fearefully endangered, as I was that Night.

*Mondaies holy viſitations are omitted. Sandys, Timberley, and others, haue ſhewed them already.

Inuaſions of Arabs.

A little after mid-night, we left this troubleſome way, and marched along the Lake of Sodome. This Lake is called Mare mortuum, the dead Sea, for of it ſelfe it is vnmoueable, ſuch is the ſtabilitie of the water. It is alſo called ſo, becauſe if a Bird flie ouer it, ſhee preſently falleth downe therein dead: and as Salomon reporteth of it, Wiſd. 10. 7. it ſmoaketh continually; from whence proceed filthie vapours, which deforme the Fields, lying about for certaine miles, as it were blaſted, ſcorched, and made vtterly barren. This Lake is eightie miles in length, and ſixe in bredth. It breedeth nor reſerueth no kind of Fiſhes, and if by the ſwelling of Iordan, any Fiſhes be carried to it, they immediatly die. Although Ioſephus witneſſeth, that in his time, there was an Apple grew vpon the bankes thereof, like to the colour of Gold; and within was rotten, and would conſume to powder; yet I affirme now the contrary: for there is not ſuch a thing, (whatſoeuer hath beene in his dayes) as either Trees, or Buſhes, grow neere to Sodome by many miles, ſuch is the conſummation of that peſtiferous Gulfe. Diuers Authors haue reported, that nothing will ſinke into it, of any reaſonable weight, as Dead men, or Carkaſſes of beaſts; but by experience I approue the contrary, for it beareth nothing aboue at all; yea, not the weight of a Feather. The water it ſelfe is of a blackiſh colour, and at ſometimes in the yeare, there are terrible ſhapes, and ſhowes of terrour in it, as I was informed at Iericho, which is the neereſt Towne that bordereth thereupon.

A true deſcription of Sodome and Gomorha.

Nothing now groweth neere Sodome. The ſame is reported by Maſter Eldred.

About the breake of day on Tueſday morning, we paſt by the ruines of an old Houſe, where (as they ſay) Saint Iohn the Baptiſt remained, when hee Baptized thoſe that came from Ieruſalem, and other Regions about, which is but the flight of an Arrow from Iordan. Approaching to the banke-ſide, we diſmounted and vnclothed our ſelues, going in naked to the Riuer, wee waſhed vs to refreſh our bodies. In this place as the Guardian ſaid, was Chriſt Baptized of Saint Iohn, lying on the banke-ſide; whereupon are ingrauen Letters of Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, teſtifying the ſame thing: and may alſo bee ſo coniectured, in regard of the ancient Habitacle, of that precurſor, which is not farre from thence.

Iordans water is of a whitiſh colour.

This Riuer Iordan beginneth in Mount Libanus, of two Fountaines, Iore, and Dan, which run ſeperated till they come to the Lake Maronab; and hence it maketh one body, keeping his courſe through the Lake Geneſereth, endeth in Sodome. The Riuer Tibris at Rome, and Iordan are not much different in quantitie and colour, and not vnlike other in their courſes: for Iordan falleth in the old Gomorah, and Tibris runneth through the new Sodome. A hiſtorie of ſuch euidence, as trauell taught me by experience: for it is the Prieſts confluence, which breeds in the Italians inſolence. If I erre, I will beg indulgence of the Popes aureat magnificence. The water of Iordan hath beene tranſported to Venice in Barrels, for that puritie it hath; which will reſerue vnſpoyled, both moneths and yeares, and the longer it is kept, it is the freſher; and to drinke it, is an excellent remedie for the Feuer quartan, and Quotidian.

A compariſon betwixt Iordan and Tibris, whoſe colour and growth are both alike, and their courſes agreeable thereunto.

After dinner we aroſe, and went to the Houſe of Zacheus: this was hee who ſate vpon a Tree to ſee our Sauiour as he paſſed by) the Walls whereof ſtand to this day. Ierico, is now a poore Village onely of nine dwelling Houſes, inhabited by a kind of Arabs (which are in ſubiection vnder the Gouernour of Ieruſalem.) but I ſaw many ruinous lumpes of the walls, and demolliſhings of the old Towne. Heere I ſaw two moſt daintie kind of Fruits, the one was a little leſſer then an Apple, but more round; whoſe colour was like to Gold without, and within it was white as ſnow, and ſweet like Sugar. I would gladly haue eaten of them: but the Friers forbade me, ſaying; they were the onely peſt of Death vnto a Stranger. The other Apple was like to a greene Lemmon, long, and full of knots, of a reddiſh colour, like to a Mellone, being both delicate and wholſome, of which we did eate to ſatiſfie the naturall appetite. From Ierico wee ſet forward in the way of the Wilderneſſe; our determination being ſuch, as to view the Mountaine whereon Chriſt faſted fortie dayes: where arriued, being late, wee durſt not goe vp till Morning.

Iericho.

A rare kind of Apples.

Morning. Wherefore wee pitched that Night by the Fountaine of Elizeus; the water of which was of old naturally bitter, but by the Prayers of that diuine Prophet, was reſtored to a ſweet taſte. It is alſo excellent in digeſtion, and will doe a man no harme: for I eſteeme it to bee the lighteſt Water the earth yeeldeth: hauing on the morrow filled a Boares ſkinne of it, to carrie with me to the Mountaine; I found it ſo light, that I had no weight nor paine in the bearing of it on my ſhoulders, notwithſtanding, the way of it ſelfe was faſtidious.

The Mountain in the Wilderneſſe, whereupon Chriſt faſted fortie dayes.

This Mountaine is called Quarantanam, or Quaranto, being of height by the computation of my painefull experience, aboue ſixe miles, and groweth from the bottome ſtill ſmaller and ſmaller, till that the top is couered with a little Chappell, not vnlike to the proportion of a Pyramede. There is no way to aſcend vpon this Hill, ſaue one, which hath beene hewen out of the Rocke, by the induſtrie of men, experimented in Maſonrie, (which was done at the coſt of Queene Helen) going vp by the degrees of fiue and fortie turnes. In all our Companie there were onely three Friers, foure Pilgrimes, and I, that durſt attempt to climbe the Mountaine. After diuers dangers and narrow paſſages, hauing come to the top, wee entred into a Caue ioyning to the Chappell, where (ſay they) in this place did Chriſt faſt, and heere it was, that hee rebuked Sathan. In our returne againe, wee had a moſt fearefull deſcending: for one Frier Laurenzo had fallen fiue hundred fathomes ouer the Rocke, and broke his necke, if it had not beene for mee: who raſhly and vnaduiſedly endangerd my owne life for his ſafetie, as my Patent vnder the great Seale of Ieruſalem, beareth ſufficient teſtimonie thereof. But wee will follow this our Pilgrime no further, in viſiting theſe and the Ægiptian Antiquities, nor relating the other perils of his Voyage.

CHAP. XIIII.

Later Intelligence out of Turkie, touching the Reſignation of MUSTAPHA, and the aduancing of AMURATH a younger Brother of the lately Murthered OSMAN; with other later Occurrents.

BAſhaw Daout, hauing married the Daughter of Muſtaphas Mother, and taking ſome aduantage of the lenatiue and tractable diſpoſition of the Emperour, proiected without controuerſie, firſt to deſtroy the Brethren of Oſman, then to make away Muſtapha: and laſt of all, to intrude ſome Children of his owne, as if they had beene the ſaued and preſerued ſtocke of the Othoman formerly: whereupon with the pernicious aſſent of his Mother in Law, he ſendeth a ſecret Commiſſion to the Capiaga or Maior domo of the Seraglia, to remoue the Brethren of Oſman, and ſtrangle them, which hee did without either the priuitie of Muſtapha the Emperour, or any other of the Vizeers and Baſhawes. But as theſe inſtruments of Villanie were readie to carrie away the Prince in the tumult, and making a noyſe, the Pages came in to their reſcue, as emboldned by the Caſtiaraga, who long ſince grew jealous of Daout Baſhawes ambition, and by this time ſaw apparant ſignes of perfidiouſneſſe.

The Pages thus ſet on worke, preſently acquainted the Spahies and Ianizaries, with the accident, who as preſently ſhewed themſelues the ſeruants of the Empire, and ſo without further adoe or examination of the matter, killed the Capiaga, and hanged out his bodie for a Spectacle in the Hippodrome. But not thus ſatisfied, they returne in furie to the Court, and demand Iuſtice euen at the Emperour Muſtaphas hand: hee againe diſclaimes his conſent, or at leaſt out of his ſimplicitie maketh his Apologie, that if any thing were done by the name of an Emperour, it was enforced from him, and hee had much adoe to preſerue himſelfe: then they ſeeke and hunt after the Mother, who being found, played a womans part, ſhed teares, wrung her hands, modeld out a deiected Countenance, and by ſome externall ſignes made an impreſſion in them of her innocencie. Whereupon they repaire to the Vizeer, who at the firſt put them off, that it was a day of Councell; and to ſingle them, bade them repaire to the Diuan. But they as it ſhould ſeeme, outſtript his policie by their owne experience, and told him plainely they would haue no ſitting, till this Treaſon were both diſcouered, and puniſhed: at laſt hee is degraded from the place, and one Huzin Baſhaw comming from Ægypt, admitted in his roome.

This Huzin Baſhaw, was neither knowne to Conſtantinople, nor Conſtantinople vnto him; that is, the Courtiers did little looke for a harſh, barbarous, inſolent, rich, and vntractable man; and he did leſſe expect the brauerie, pleaſures, popularitie, wantonneſſe, and eaſe of a licentious Citie: But nature had quickly taught him a leſſon of Corruption, and he begins a Phaetons flouriſh of greatneſſe with the Death of Daout Baſhaw, and inſinuation into Muſtaphas modeſtie, or if you will ſimplicitie; but of all other to make himſelfe ſtrong with the loue and good opinion of the Pages, and Capogies, hee hangeth many that were conſenting to Oſmans death.

In a word, for the firſt yeare hee proued a wonder in the Empire, and by his Wiſedome, Courage, and Authority pacified ſuch tumults, and faſhioned ſuch a gouernment of peace and tranquility in ſeditious and outragious times, that both Turks, Iewes, and Chriſtians beganne to feare what a man he might proue, or Muſtapha proued, though neuer ſo ſtupid by his Viuification.

Notwithſtanding all this, ſuch is the condition of greatneſſe, that if it doe not Mole ſua ruere: yet it may be watched by the eyes of other men, who may either confound by oppoſition, or ſupplant by deuiſes: thus had this man two great enemies, the Baſhaw of Aleppo, who with open defiance acted a braue Scene of conteſtation, and the Baſhaw Chigala Admirall of the gallies, who by crafty conueyance of buſineſſe, lay ſtill in the winde to take aduantage of his contrarious flights. With both theſe was Huzein Baſhaw to deale: but ſuch was his fortune, that the Baſhaw of Aleppo, for all he had muſtred a great Army in Armenia, was almoſt out of countenance, through the rarity of the buſineſſe; for when he vnderſtood, that the Souldiers laughed him to ſcorne, if he pretended for himſelfe, or had any conceit to ſhare the Othoman Empire, and that they of Conſtantinople thought him too dangerous, if he ſhould attempt the remouing of Officers; or take vpon him to be ſo potent and wiſe, as to practiſe the reformation or alteration of the Gouernment; he fairely and quietly diſmiſſed the Army; and was contented to write his minde to the Diuan, or great Councell in the great City.

But the Admirall of the gallies went another way to work; hauing the ſea open to his flights or retirings: and the Vizeers buſineſſe was opened vnto him by ſuch as he had imployed to watch his proceedings (by whoſe endeauours he had notice, that the Vizeer meant to deſtroy him; and either to ſtrangle him in his Gally, or at the next Councell to ſurpriſe him, and ſend him to the ſeuen Towers,) whereupon he acquaints the Emperour, his Mother, and the Mufty, with the coniuration, and that he proiected the aduancing of Amurath, the ſecond brother of Oſman, and durſt many times repine, that ſo great a burthen as the Turkiſh Empire ſhould lie on ſo weake & vnable ſhoulders.

This neuer ſtarted Muſtapha at all, but contrary to expectation hee acquaints Huzein Baſhaw with the ſecret, and Huzein acquaints himſelfe with the danger, ſo that being yet at liberty ſends great ſtore of Treaſure to Gran Cayro, and as ſome haue it, retires himſelfe againſt all expection, to the country where hee had bin brought vp, and was fuller of Reeds and ſecret Canes to hide him, then other places: that is, preſuming on his wealth and the peoples loue, he verily conceiued they would giue him leaue to liue a priuate life: yet doe others affirme, that hee was ouermatched and ouertaken, and ſo caſt into the ſeuen Towers.

When Muſtapha perceiued to what ſtraights he was driuen, and that all this coile was for the glory of Soueraignty: of which though he were poſſeſſed in the higheſt degree of Maieſtie, yet far from ſecurity, in regard his two Nephewes liued of the direct Line of the Othoman Family, he reſolued to cozen death, deſtruction and misfortune, by a voluntary ſubmiſſion and reſignation of his Crowne. Whereupon he ſent for his Mother, the Doctors of the Law, & ſome principall Officers, as the Teſſierdy (or Treaſurer) the Cadiſelker (or chiefe Iudge) the Haga (or Captaine of the Ianizaries) and diuers others whom he had acquainted with his reſolution, deſiring to ſee his Nephew before he retired himſelfe to the Priſon, and ſo the Prince being preſented vnto him, he only wiſhed that he would take notice of his owne fortunes: that is, not to truſt in any condition of man: not to be peremptory, or preiudicate in his owne opinion: to diſſolue if it were poſſible that cuſtome of ſtrangling their brethren: to remember, that al Empires had their beginning, progreſſion, and diſſolution: to take heed of Flatterers and Paraſites: and by no meanes to neglect the ſeruice of God, but make vſe of true deuotion, in ſetting the Iewes before him, who loſt their glorious eſtate, meerely through Idolatrie: and thus is Muſtapha depoſed, and Amurath Oſmans brother aduanced: but herein conſiſts the wonder, that all this was done without trouble, terror, ſhutting vp of a ſhop, diſturbing the Merchant, rifling a Iew, or tumult of the Ianizaries.

A Letter written from Conſtantinople, the tenth of Iuly, 1624.

THe King of Perſia hath beſieged a ſtrong caſtle, within the Precinct of Arzerum, the old gouernment of Abaſſa Baſſa; Whether this hath occaſioned it, or that he and the Vizeer were one afraid of another, a peace is made betweene them, and the gouernment of that Prouince giuen him during life: For defence whereof, he is directly marched thither: Pardon and Honours are confirmed from the Port, and whatſoeuer the Rebels would propound for themſelues; And yet at this diſhonourable agreement, this State doth reioyce, as at a great victory, and haue raiſed their hopes now of good ſucceſſe againſt the Perſian, yet there reſts ſome doubt, becauſe neither part will truſt the other, but haue taken ſeueral waies, the Vizeer directly towards Babylon: Abaſſa to Aſzeron, from whence little this yeere is expected, and few beleeue that the Perſian will ſell all his conqueſt, for the noyſe at firſt ſight of their Armies.

From the Black Sea, hath come many aduices, that the Prince of the Tartars ſent from hence, is beaten from the land, & that the Captain Baſſa ſeeking once more to ſet him on ſhore, hath receiued a great foyle and loſſe, wherein the Prince was hurt, if not ſlaine: of the particulars we can haue no certainty, but without doubt, the parties ſent from hence haue receiued diſgrace, & the Tartar hath diſcouered an Arcanum Imperij, poſſe Principem alibi quam Roma fieri, they neuer committed a greater error, though al be one confuſion of error in gouernment, then this, nor of which they will ſooner & longer repent, that they would offer in theſe times, when the peace of Poland wauered, when all their forces were drawne into Aſia to depoſe a young Prince who was well beloued of the people, to plant an old goutie decreped wretch, who the laſt yeere was by them depoſed for inſufficiency; and now the quarrell is on foot, they know not how to retire.

This Empire hath hereby loſt or indangered one of the greateſt honours and prerogatiues; to giue that Nation a Prince at the Pleaſure of the Grand Signiour, whom now they not onely refuſe, but dare oppoſe the Armies of the Port, and ſend inſolent letters, that it is ſufficient for theſe to gouerne Conſtantinople if they will not be quiet, but undertake to moleſt the Princes in poſſeſſion; that they will eſteeme themſelues as free and as ancient, as the race of Ottoman. In concluſion, I am of opinion, there wil be found ſome way (though with ſhame) to recall their Order, and to confirme the preſent Prince, excuſing the fault by miſinformation, which for quietnes he may forwardly accept. There is not one word or mention of Bethlem Gabor, nor his deſignes, ſince the departure of his Embaſſadours: It is beleeued all things are quieter there, then is conuenient for the quiet of other Chriſtian Countries.

Nine gallies of Meſſena & 4. of Malta haue met with fiue Pirat ſhips of Barbery entring into the Port of Tunis, and being fauoured by a calme, ſunke two of them in fight, & took the other three with 600. men in them; whom they haue brought to Palermo. It is reported Sampſon was Commander, who when hee muſt fall into Captiuitie by two wounds, with his owne hands he ended his wretched life. Theſe 13. Gallies ioyning with ſixe of the great Dukes, within two dayes after went out againe, underſtanding of ſeuen Corſires more; now they haue opportunity to do any thing, if they haue courage; for there are no Gallies of this Port in the Medeterranium to hinder them. Tis thought that theſe fiue Pirates are the ſame that were at Cyprus & Scandrone. The ninth day of this month betweene 70. and 80. boats of the Coſſacks, with fifty men apeece, Rowers and Souldiers (watching their opportunitie of the Captaine Baſſas being ingaged in Tartary) entred the Boſpherus about breake of day, where diuiding themſelues, they ſackt and burnt almoſt all the villages and houſes of pleaſure on both ſides the Riuer, as farre as the Caſtles, and within foure miles of this Citie: The principall places were Baimkderry and Genneychoy, on the Grecian and Stenia, and on the Aſian ſhore, where hauing made rich and great bootie, they ſtaied till nine of the clock in the forenoone, and then all this Citie and the Suburbs hauing taken the alarum, the Grand Signior came downe to the water ſide, the Chimacham to the water Port: Hally-baſſa made himſelfe Generall in this tumult, and hauing not one Gally ready for defence, they manned and armed all the Ships, Boats, Barges, & other ſmall Wherryes, to the number of 4. or 500. with ſuch people as they could either get to row, or hope to fight; & diſpatched all the Horſe and Foot in the Citie, to the number of 10000. to defend the Coaſt from further ſpoile. Neuer was ſeene a greater feare and confuſion: Now we expected that theſe poore theeues would preſently haue retired; but they ſeeing the Turkes Boats making towards them, drew themſelues into the middſt of the channell, and not far aboue the Caſtles, and ſtaid firme upon their Oares in Battalia in forme of a Greſſant expecting the aſſault, the wind and current being againſt them. Hally-Baſſa cauſed ſome ſhot to be made a far off, but they anſwered not with one Musket, but houered from one ſhoare to another without any ſhew of retrait. Hereupon the Generall ſeeing their forme and reſolution, thought it not fit to aſſaile them with ſuch Boats as he had, but eſteemed it wiſdome enough to keepe them from further attempts, fearing if they had broken his Fleet of Boats (which was eaſily to be done) that they would venture downe to Conſtantinople, which was now empty of all defence. And theſe few Boates hauing firſt made great ſpoyle, lay the whole day untill Sun ſet, ſcaring and brauing the great and fearefull Citie of the world, and all the force it could make; and departed with their booty, with their Colours ſpread, unfought and almoſt unreſiſted. This ſmall action and bold attempt, to affront ſo great an Empire, hath made a ſtrange diſcouery; how much under the reputation, the terror and ſtrength of this State now is; how weake and unprouided they are. But as the Oracles commanded them, firſt to ſet ouer againſt blind men: So it hath bin their fortune unto this day to haue blind Enemies. Philip of Macedon had neuer proiected, nor his Sonne Alaxander euer aduentured with ſo ſmall Forces, the huge enterpriſes of ſubduing the Eaſterne Empire, if they had not diſcouered the effeminate and faint courage of the Aſiaticks, by the admirable retrait of Xenophon, and ſwift incurſion of Ageſilaus great Armies, not daring to oppoſe the vertue of their ſmall numbers. Sepe res maximæ ex paruis principijs oriuntur. How this attempt will be taken from the Poles, is a queſtion. For hereby the Treaty of Peace is abſolutely broken.

Iune 5. 1619. our Ships got into the Rode of Patania. Wee were in great danger of driuing on a ſhoald. The Preſident went to the Queene with a great Preſent. On the 16. wee had ſight of foure Dutch Ships, and fitted our ſelues to fight. No perſwaſion could moue the Preſident to ſet ſaile, but hee abode at an anchor till the Dutch Ships anchored by vs. The next morning without ſpeaking any word, they ſhot, and wee anſwered, but in ſhort time wee had but few left which could do vs any pleaſure. The weather was now calme and we could not ſet ſaile, as before wee might haue done: Whereupon the Preſident was willing to come to a parlie. I was ſhot in two places, and perſwaded him to fight it out: but when I was gone downe hee ſent the Maſter aboord the Angell (one of the Dutch Ships) to parly about yeelding, and order was preſently giuen to ſhoot no more. At which time I was ſpoiled with Powder by a ſhot from the Admirall, our Maſter detained; and the Preſident ſlaine with a ſhot thorow the bodie, after the Ship was yeelded, as I vnderſtand. For the Maſter went aboord to giue vp the Ship, with condition that the Company ſhould depart with their goods; which they promiſed: but after poſſeſſion taken, heathenlike they broke it. For mine owne part, before I vnderſtood of any thing, the Ship was full of Hollanders, we hauing at that time eleuen men ſlaine, and thirtie three hurt, foure of which were diſmembred. September 17. by reaſon of a broile raiſed among the Slaues we had two men ſlaine, and it was feared the Blackes would haue pulled down the Godowne and made pillage of all.

We being within Musket ſhot of two ſhips, muſt either go aboord or aſhore: we did the firſt, but their Admirall beſtowed vs aboord amongſt their Ships, and tooke our Boat from vs. The 22. came in the Dragon, Beare, and Expedition, to our great griefe and their great reioicing, as Prizes taken at Tecco. The thirtieth the Flying Hart brought newes, that Sir Tho. Dale was dead with many others, at which they greatly reioyced. December 4. came in a Boat with a Croſſe ſaile, being a Ships Boat called the New Hound, their Ship being loſt by fire through the Stewards Mates negligence in drawing Aquanita, 150. men loſt, the reſt in the boats eſcaping to Sumatra, where 15. were ſlain by the Blackes and others hurt. On the 21. the Dutch put the Indraught an old Ship on ſhoare, thinking to haue made a Bulwarke of her againſt Bantam, but ſhe ouerthrowing on the ſide fruſtrated their hopes and coſt. May 11. Iune the third, the Moone and the Palſgraue ſet ſaile for Iapan (I was made Maſter of the Palſgraue by a generall Councell of Defence) with the New Bantam and the Trow, two Dutch Ships. From the firſt of Feb. to the ſixt we were turning vp frō the Ile Maruels, & the Cauetta where the Spaniſh Ships ride; the Bay a very faire one, from 24. to ſix fathoms in the mid way, take heed you come no neerer the ſhore on the South then ten fathoms, in reſpect of a ſteep Bank that lieth off the ſhoare: otherwiſe nothing in all the Bay is to be feared but one Rock, on the South ſide alſo, halfe a league of the Black point within the Oyſter Rock. This Rock hath on it two fathoms water. At Cauetta we found riding ſix or ſeuen ſhips, and two of them great Gallions, but all vnrigged. The eight we paſſed by the Towne of Cauetta with our ſhips. The towne ſhot two Peeces at our Admirall, but could not reach her. Wee all anchored in the Rode halfe way betwixt Cauetta, and the towne of Manillas, in ſeuen and a halfe fathom ozie ground. Cauetta lieth from Manillas South Southweſt two leagues & a halfe by Sea, by Land aboue 3. From Cauetta to Marauelle the Courſe is weſt ſouthweſt ſomwhat Southerly. On the north of Marauella is good freſh water, but not much, deepe anchoring neere the ſhore: we went on ſhore thereon 240. but found no people.

After ſome time ſpent in watering, careening, diſcouering and other affaires, March 28. 1621. by order of a Councell, the Fleet was diſperſed for better looking out for Iunkes comming from China with the Coaſt. I was appointed to the Ship Swan to goe with it, two Frigats and two Boats into the Bay of Pangaſina to fire a ſhip there in building; but we found none ſuch. April 13. all the ſhips went to Hart Bay to water. On the 18. we boorded a Iunke which proued of Iapan, hauing the Emperours Paſſe, and Letters from Capt. Cockes and the Dutch Merchant. The ſame day the Harlem tooke a China Iunke, and carried her into Witters Iland. May 26. The Dutch Frigat fought with a China Iunke, but could not take her; wherupon our Frigat went vp and tooke her; and the Dutch comming aboord after they had yeelded, killed, and made leap ouer-boord to the quantitie of ſixtie or ſeuenty, like bloudy———) On the 30. the Dutch Frigat was in fight with another China Iunk and could not take her, hauing ſpent moſt of their powder: and met our Frigat and told them, which purſued her and the next day ouertooke her, and ſhe yeelded to them: they put the men on ſhore. The Dutch ſet fire on the Iunk, which was one of their (———) tricks Iun. 9. (there being no hopes of more Iunkes that yeere) it was concluded that wee ſhould direct our courſe for the Streits of Piſcadores, I would wiſh all from the Maniller to Macau or Piſcadores to keepe it well vp to the Weſt, and not to goe to the North to preuent ſhoalds.

On the 29. we entred the Harbour of Choochie. It was agreed that foure Ships ſhould goe to Firando: whither wee went Iuly 10. In September the Bull and Peppercorne were careened. Richad Short one of the Maſters Mates of the Moone ranne the ſecond time to the Portugalls. October the firſt, ſixe more of the Peppercorne and Bull ranne to the Portugalls, which were purſued and taken, and foure executed. Two of the Eliſabeths men ſtole a praw, with intent to runne to them alſo to Langaſack. The eighteenth, the Peppercorne and the Moyen a Dutch Shippe went for the Coaſt of China, to lie there till the comming of the Fleet. Nouember the firſt, the three Engliſh Store-houſes at Choochy were burned to the ground by negligence.

Second Voyage to Manillas.

The 23. we put to Sea with all the Fleet: December the tenth they met with the Peppercorne and Moyen, which had beene ſixe weekes on the Coaſt and taken nothing. They were now ten Ships. The twelfth, a Frigat was taken laden with Canuas to make ſailes for the Fleet at Manillas. Ianuary the third, the Countrey people (before vnſeene) killed foure of the Peppercornes men, in Witters Iland where they were watering, through their owne ſecuritie. For ten of ours might haue kept off one hundreth of them. Their Weapons are Bowes and Arrowes not poyſoned

Dutch repulſe at Macau.

The thirtieth wee went into the Bay where the Spaniards had foure great Ships, three ſmall, and three Gallies, beſides other ſmall Frigots. Some Truce-parlies paſſed and ſome bickerings alſo to ſmall purpoſe. Diuers Fugitiues came to vs from them. The Fleet obſerued their opportunities, but little was done. April 18. 1622. 8. of the Moones men ran away with her Shallop to the Manillas. The Peppercorne tooke two or three ſmall Iunkes, but little in them. May 6. at Looang Iland we found 30. tuns of Red Wood, a China Iunke, a Portugall, and two or three Champans in the Riuer, which were fired, except the Wood. The 9. foure ſhips were ſent to Macau, the reſt to Piſcadores to exchange Portugalls for our men, and to intercept Frigats. The 17. a Frigat of Macau was after long fight taken by our ſhallops, with 320. balls of goods. Iune 1. we had ſight of three Frigats, which went in among the Ilands for Macao, we not being able to hinder them. A Prieſt and others came aboord with a Flag of Truce to treat about their men. The 12. came in eleuen Dutch Ships to take in Macau, and neuer offered to ſpeake with vs, but went directly as neere the Towne at they could, and ſent preſently ſmall veſſells to ſound. They landed 1000. men on the 14. againſt Macau, & after mutuall ſhot were repelled, hauing loſt ſix Captains (as I heard) and about 300. men, beſides many hurt; and had they not gotten their Boats as they did, they had beene all, by their owne report, put to the ſword. On the 17. we departed as it had beene agreed, and anchored vnder the Iles Ladrones all night. The next day we put to Sea betwixt the Iles Sapattos and Neme. Iuly 4. wee were cloſe aboord the point of Langaſacke. On the ſixth M. Hatch the * Preacher came aboord. Auguſt 2. A Councell was called at the Dutch houſe by their Admirall, in which it was concluded to diſſolue the two Fleets; each to beare their owne aduentures till they came to Iacatra. The 15. we had a Tyffon Southerly, and broke two Cables. The Dutch Moone and Hound droue aſhoare, the Moone litle hurt, the other bilged. The Peppercorne and Hailem, droue aſhoare at Firando without hurt. This Tyffon was ſo ſore at Sea, that the Moone cut ouer-bord her maine Maſt, and threw out her Shallop: the Tro threw out 300. ſackes of Rice, wet more, with her Powder, and was ſo leake ſhee was like to ſinke. The Bantam loſt her maine and miſen Maſts, threw ouer-bord 3. Pieces of Ordnance, 2. Anchors, a Shallop, 600. ſackes of Rice, her Head and Gallerie all waſht away, &c. October 9. the Dutch Moone and Hound, layd vp ſunke. The 15. th we went out into the Road, being bound for Iambee. Till the firſt of Nouember we had no ſight of the Sun to make obſeruation. The 15. th we got into the road of Iambee. The reſt I omit; May 28. they had ſight of Saint Helena, and anchored next day in Chappell Bay. Auguſt 26. they arriued at Erith.

CHAP. XVI.

The Dutch late proceedings at Amboyna, in cruell torturing and executing of diuers Engliſh-men: with other their like Acts to the Natiues in Banda; publiſhed lately by the Engliſh-Eaſt-Indian Societie; heere much abbreuiated.

AFter the fruitleſſe iſſue of two ſeuerall Treaties: the firſt Anno 1613. in London, and the other Anno 1615. at the Hage in Holland, touching the differences betweene the Engliſh and Dutch in the Eaſt-Indies, at laſt by a third Treatie Anno 1619. in London, there was a full and ſolemne compoſition made of all the ſaid differences, and a faire order ſet for the future proceeding of the Supposts of both Companies in the Indies; aswell in the courſe of their Trade and Commerce, as otherwiſe. Amongſt ſundry other points, it was agreed, that in regard of the great blood-ſhed and coſt, pretended to bee beſtowed by the Hollanders, in winning of the Trade of the Iles of the Molluccos, Banda, and Amboyna, from the Spaniards and Portugals, and in building of Forts for the continuall ſecuring of the ſame, the ſaid Hollanders therefore ſhould enioy two third parts of that Trade, and the Engliſh the other third; and the charge of the Forts to bee maintained by taxes and impoſitions, to be leuied vpon the Merchandize. Wherefore, in conſequence of this agreement, the Engliſh Eaſt India Company planted certaine Factories for their ſhare of this Trade; ſome at the Molluccos, ſome at Banda, and ſome at Amboyna.

This Amboyna is an Iland lying neere Seran, of the Circuit of fortie leagues, and giueth name alſo to ſome other ſmall Ilands adiacent. It beareth Cloues; for gathering and buying in whereof, the Engliſh Companie for their part had planted fiue ſeuerall Factories: the head and Rendevonz of all, at the Towne of Amboyna; and therein firſt, Maſter George Muſchampe, and afterward Maſter Gabriell Towerſon, their Agents, with directions ouer the ſmaller Factories at Hitto and Larica, vpon the ſame Iland, and at Lobo and Cambello, vpon a point of their neighbouring Iland of Seran.

Amboyna deſcribed.

Vpon theſe Ilands of Amboyna, and the point of Seran, the Hollanders haue foure Forts; the chiefe of all is at the ſaid Towne of Amboyna, and is very ſtrong, hauing foure Points or Bulwarkes with their Curtaines, and vpon each of theſe Points ſixe great Pieces of Ordnance mounted, moſt of them of Braſſe. The one ſide of this Caſtle is waſhed by the Sea, and the other is diuided from the Land with a Ditch of foure or fiue fathoms broad, very deepe, and euer filled with the Sea. The Garriſon of this Caſtle conſiſteth of about two hundred Dutch Souldiers, and a Company of free Burgers. Beſides theſe, there is alwayes a matter of three or foure hundred Mardikers (for ſo they vſually call the free Natiues) in the Towne, ready to ſerue the Caſtle at an houres warning. There lye alſo in the Roade (for the moſt part) diuers good Ships of the Hollanders, as well for the guard of the place by Sea, as for the occaſions of Traffique: this being the chiefe Rendevouz, as well for the Iland of Banda, as for the reſt of Amboyna. Heere the Engliſh liued; not in the Caſtle, but vnder protection thereof, in a houſe of their owne in the Towne; holding themſelues ſafe, as well in reſpect of the ancient bonds of Amitie betweene both Nations, as of the ſtrict coniunction made by the late Treatie before mentioned.

They continued heere ſome two yeares, conuerſing and trading together with the Hollanders, by vertue of the ſaid Treatie. In which time there fell out ſundrie differences and debates betweene them; The Engliſh complayning that the Hollanders did not onely lauiſh away much money in Building, and vnneceſſarie expences, vpon the Forts and otherwiſe, and bring large and vnreaſonable reckonings thereof to the common accompt; but alſo did, for their part, pay the Garriſons with victuals and cloath of Coromandell, which they put off to the Souldiers at three or foure times the value it coſt them, yet would not allow of the Engliſh Companies part of the ſame charge, but onely in ready money; thereby drawing from the Engliſh (which ought to pay but one third part) more than two thirds of the whole true charge. Hereupon, and vpon the like occaſions, grew ſome diſcontents and diſputes, and the complaints were ſent to Iaccatra, in the Iland of Iaua Maior, to the Councell of defence of both Nations there reſiding: who alſo, not agreeing vpon the points in difference, ſent the ſame hither ouer into Europe, to bee decided by both Companies heere; or, in default of their agreement, by the Kings Maieſtie, and the Lords the States Generall, according to an Article of the Treatie of the yeare 1619. on this behalfe. In the meane time, the diſcontent betweene the Engliſh and the Dutch, about theſe and other differences, continued and daily encreaſed, vntill at laſt there was a ſword found, to cut in ſunder that knot at once, which the tedious diſputes of Amboyna and Iaccatra could not vntie. And this was vſed in manner as followeth.

Iacatra (now Baearia) ſeat of the Dutch Gouernment in the Indies.

About the eleuenth of February 1622. Stilo veteri, a Iaponer Souldier of the Dutch in their Caſtle of Amboyna, walking in the night vpon the wall, came to the Centinell (being a Hollander) and there, amongſt other talke, asked him ſome queſtions touching the ſtrength of the Caſtle, and the people that were therein. It is heere to bee noted, that thoſe Iaponers (of whom there is not thirty in all the Iland) did, for the moſt part, ſerue the Dutch as ſouldiers, yet were not of their truſtie bands, alwaies lodged in the Caſtle, but vpon occaſion called out of the Towne to aſſiſt in the Watch. This Iaponer aforeſaid, was for his ſaid conference with the Centinel, apprehended vpon ſuſpicion of Treaſon, and put to the Torture. Thereby (as ſome of the Dutch affirmed) hee was brought to confeſſe himſelfe, and ſundry others of his Countreymen there, to haue contriued the taking of the Caſtle. Hereupon, other Iaponers were examined and tortured, as alſo a Portugall, the Guardian of the Slaues vnder the Dutch. During this examination, which continued three or foure dayes; ſome of the Engliſh men went too and from the Caſtle vpon their buſineſſe, ſaw the Priſoners, heard of their tortures, and of the crime laid to their charge; but all this while ſuſpected not, that this matter did any whit concerne themſelues; hauing neuer had any conuerſation with the Iaponers, nor with the Portugall aforeſaid. At the ſame time there was one Abel Price, Chirurgion of the Engliſh, Priſoner in the Caſtle, for offering in his Drunkenneſſe to ſet a Dutch-mans houſe on fire. This fellow the Dutch tooke, and ſhewed him ſome of the Iaponers, whom they had firſt moſt grieuouſly tortured, and told him, they had confeſſed the Engliſh to haue beene of their confederacie, for the taking of the Caſtle; and that if he would not confeſſe the ſame, they would vſe him euen as they had done theſe Iaponers, and worſe alſo. Hauing giuen him the torture, they ſoone made him confeſſe what euer they asked him. This was the fifteenth of February, 1622. Stilo veteri. Forthwith, about nine of the clocke the ſame Morning, they ſent for Captaine Towerſon, and the reſt of the Engliſh that were in the Towne, to come to ſpeake with the Gouernour in the Caſtle: they all went, ſaue one that was left to keepe the Houſe. Being come to the Gouernour, he told Captaine Towerſon, that himſelfe and others of his Nation were accuſed of a Conſpiracie to ſurpriſe the Caſtle, and therefore, vntill further triall, were to remaine Priſoners. Inſtantly alſo, they attached him that was left at home in the houſe, tooke the Merchandize of the Engliſh Companie there into their owne cuſtodie by Inuentorie, and ſeized all the Cheſts, Boxes, Bookes, Writings, and other things in the Engliſh houſe. Captaine Towerſon was committed to his Chamber with a guard of Dutch Souldiers. Emanuel Towſon was kept Priſoner in the Caſtle, the reſt, viz. Iohn Beomont, Edward Collins, William Webber, Ephraim Ramſey, Timothy Iohnſon, Iohn Fardo, and Robert Browne, were ſent aboord the Hollanders ſhips then riding in Harbour, ſome to one ſhip, and ſome to another, and all made faſt in Irons. The ſame day alſo the Gouernour ſent to the two other Factories in the ſame Iland, to apprehend the reſt of the Engliſh there. So that Samuel Colſon, Iohn Clarke, George Sharrock, that were found in the Factorie at Hitto, and Edward Collins, William Webber, and Iohn Sadler at Larica, were all brought Priſoners to Amboyna, the ſixteenth of February. Vpon which day alſo Iohn Powel, Iohn Wetherall, and Thomas Ladbrooke, were apprehended at Cambello, and Iohn Beomont, William Grigs, and Ephraim Ramſey, at Loho, and brought in Irons to Amboyna the twentieth of the ſame moneth.

Abel Price examined.

In the meane time, the Gouernour and Fiſcall went to worke with the Priſoners that were already there: And firſt they ſent for Iohn Beomont, and Timothy Iohnſon, from aboord the Vnicorne; who being come into the Caſtle, Beomont was left with a guard in the Hall, and Iohnſon was taken into another roome. Where, by and by, Beomont heard him cry out very pitifully; then to be quiet for a little while, and then loud againe. After taſte of the torture, Abel Price the Chirurgion, that firſt was examined and tortured (as is aboue remembred) was brought in to confront and accuſe him: But Iohnſon not yet confeſſing any thing, Price was quickly carried out, and Iohnſon brought againe to the torture, where Beomont heard him ſometime cry aloud, then quiet againe, then roare afreſh. At laſt, after he had been about an houre in this ſecond examination, he was brought forth wailing and lamenting, all wet, and cruelly burnt in diuers parts of his body, and ſo laid aſide in a by place of the Hall, with a ſouldier to watch him that he ſhould ſpeake with no body. Then was Emanuel Tomſon brought to examination; not in the roome where Iohnſon had beene, but in another ſomthing farther from the Hall. Yet Beomont being in the Hall, heard him roare moſt lamentably, and many times. At laſt, after an houre & an halfe ſpent in torturing him, he was carried away into another roome another way, ſo that hee came not by Beomont through the Hall. Next was Beomont called in, and being demanded many things, all which he denied with deepe oathes and proteſtations, was made faſt to be tortured, a cloth tyed about his necke, and two men ready with Iarres of water to be powred on his head. But yet for this time the Gouernor bad looſe him, he would ſpare him a day or two, becauſe he was an Old man. This was all Saturdaies worke, the fifteenth of February aforeſaid.

Emanuel Tompſon examined.

Vpon Sunday the 16. of February, William Webber, Edward Collins, Ephraim Ramſey, and Robert Browne, were fetcht from aboord the Rotterdam, to be examined. At the ſame time came Samuel Colſon, William Grigs, and Iohn Clarke, George Sharrocke, & Iohn Sadler, from Hitto and Larica, and were immediatly vpon their arriuall, brought into the Caſtle-hall. Robert Browne Tailor was firſt called in, & being tormented with water, confeſſed all in order as the Fiſcall asked him. Then was Edward Collins called in, and told, that thoſe that were formerly examined, had confeſt him as acceſſary to the plot of taking the Caſtle. Which, when he denied with great oathes & execrations, they made his hands and feet faſt to the Racke, bound a cloth about his throat, ready to be put to the torture of water. Thus prepared, he prayed to be reſpited, and he would confeſſe all. Being let downe, he againe vowed & proteſted his innocencie; yet ſaid, that becauſe he knew that they would by torture make him confeſſe any thing, though neuer ſo falſe, they ſhould doe him a great fauour, to tell him what they would haue him ſay, and hee would ſpeake it, to auoyd the torture. The Fiſcall hereupon ſaid; what, doe you mocke vs? and bad, Vp with him againe; and ſo gaue him the torment of water: which he not able long to endure, prayed to be let downe again to his confeſſion. Then he deuiſed a little with himſelfe, and told them, that about two moneths and a halfe before, himſelfe, Tomſon, Iohnſon, Browne, and Fardo, had plotted, with the helpe of the Iaponers, to ſurprice the Caſtle. Here he was interrupted by the Fiſcall, and asked, whether Captaine Tawerſon were not of that conſpiracie. He anſwered, No. You lie, ſaid the Fiſcall; did not hee call you all to him, and tell you, that thoſe daily abuſes of the Dutch had cauſed him to thinke of a plot, and that hee wanted nothing but your conſent and ſecrecie? Then ſaid a Dutch Merchant, one Iohn Iooſt that ſtood by, Did not you all ſweare vpon a Bible to bee ſecret to him? Collins anſwered with great oathes, that hee knew nothing of any ſuch matter. Then they bade make him faſt againe: whereupon he then ſaid, All was true that they had ſpoken. Then the Fiſcall asked him, whether the Engliſh in the reſt of the Factories, were not conſenting to this plot. Hee anſwered, No. The Fiſcall then asked him, whether the Preſident of the Engliſh at Iaccatra, or Mr. Welden Agent in Banda, were not plotters or priuie to this buſineſſe. Againe he anſwered, No. Then the Fiſcall asked him by what meanes the Iaponers ſhould haue executed their purpoſe. Whereat, when Collins ſtood ſtaggering and deuiſing of ſome probable fiction, the Fiſcall holpe him, and ſaid, Should not two Iaponers haue gone to each point of the Caſtle, and two to the Gouernours Chamber doore; and when the hurly-burly had beene without, and the Gouernour comming to ſee what was the matter, the Iaponers to haue killed him? Here one that ſtood by, ſaid to the Fiſcall, Doe not tell him what he ſhould ſay, but let him ſpeake of himſelfe. Whereupon the Fiſcall, without attending the anſwer to his former queſtion; asked what the Iaponers ſhould haue had for their reward. Collins anſwered, 1000. Ryals a peece. Laſtly, he asked him, when this plot ſhould haue bin effected. Wherunto although hee anſwered him nothing (not knowing what to deuiſe vpon the ſodaine) yet he was diſmiſſed, and very glad to come cleere of the torture, though with certain beleefe that he ſhould die for this his Confeſſion. Next, was Samuel Colſon brought in, being newly arriued from Hitto, as is before touched, & was the ſame day brought to the torture, who, for feare of the paine wherwith he ſaw Collins come out, in ſuch a caſe, that his eyes were almoſt blowne out of his head with the torment of water; choſe rather to confeſſe all they asked him: and ſo was quickly diſmiſſed, comming out weeping, lamenting, & proteſting his innocencie. Then was Iohn Clarke, that came with Colſon from Hitto, fetcht in, and a litle after was heard (by the reſt that were without in the Hall) to cry out amaine. They tortured him with water & with fire, by the ſpace of 2. houres. The mãner of his torture (as alſo of Iohnſons & Tomſons) was as followeth: Firſt, they hoiſed him vp by the hands with a cord on a large doore, where they made him faſt vpon 2. ſtaples of Iron; fixt on both ſides, at the top of the doore poſts, haling his hands one from the other as wide as they could ſtretch. Being thus made faſt, his feet hung 2. foot from the ground, which alſo they ſtretcht aſunder as farre as they would retch, and ſo made them faſt beneath vnto the doore-trees on each ſide. Then they bound a cloth about his necke and face ſo cloſe, that little or no water could goe by. That done, They powred the water ſoftly vpon his head vntill the cloth was full, vp to the mouth and noſtrils, and ſomewhat higher; ſo that hee could not draw breath, but hee muſt withall ſucke in the water: which being ſtill continued to be powred in ſoftly, forced all his inward parts, came out of his Noſe, Eares, and Eyes; and often as it were ſtifling and choaking him, at length tooke away his breath, and broght him to a ſwoune or fainting. Then they tooke him quickly downe, and made him vomit vp the water. Beeing a little recouered, they triced him vp againe, and powred in the water as before, eftſoones taking him downe as he ſeemed to be ſtifled. In this manner they handled him three or foure ſeuerall times with water, till his bodie was ſwolne twice or thrice as bigge as before, his cheekes like great Bladders, and his eies ſtaring and ſtrutting out beyond his forehead: yet all this hee bare, without confeſſing any thing; inſomuch as the Fiſcall and tormentors reuiled him, ſaying that he was a Deuill, and no man, or ſurely was a Witch, at leaſt had ſome charme about him, or was enchanted, that he could beare ſo much. Wherefore they cut off his haire very ſhort, as ſuppoſing he had ſome Witchcraft hidden therein. Afterwards they hoiſed him vp againe as before, and then burnt him with lighted Candles in the bottome of his feete, vntill the fat dropt out the Candles; yet then applyed they freſh lights vnto him. They burnt him alſo vnder the elbowes, & in the palmes of the hands; likewiſe vnder the arme-pits, vntil his inwards might be euidently ſeene. At laſt, when they ſaw he could of himſelfe make no hanſome confeſſion, then they led him along with queſtions of particular circumſtances, by themſelues framed. Being thus wearied and ouercome by the torment; he anſwered, yea to whatſoeuer they asked: whereby they drew from him a bodie of a confeſſion to this effect; to wit, That Captaine Towerſon had vpon New-yeeres day laſt before, ſworne all the Engliſh at Amboyna to bee ſecret and aſſiſtant to a plot that hee had proiected, with the helpe of the Iaponers, to ſurprize the Caſtle, and to put the Gouernour and the reſt of the Dutch to death.

Hauing thus martyred this poore man, they ſent him out by foure Blacks; who carried him betweene them to a Dungeon, where he lay fiue or ſix daies without any Chirurgion to dreſſe him, vntill (his fleſh being putrified) great Maggots dropt and crept from him in a moſt lothſome and noyſome manner. Thus they finiſhed their Sabbath daies worke; and it growing now darke, ſent the reſt of the Engliſh (that came that day from Hitto, and till then attended in the Hall) firſt to the Smiths ſhop, where they were loaden with Irons, and then to the ſame lothſome Dungeon where Clarke and the reſt were, accompanied with the poore Iaponers, lying in the putrifaction of their tortures. The next morning being Munday the 17. of February, old Stile, William Grigs and Iohn Fardo, with certaine Iaponers, were brought into the place of examination. The Iaponers were firſt cruelly tortured to accuſe Grigs; which at laſt they did: and Grigs to auoid the like torture, confeſſed all that the Fiſcall demanded. By and by the like alſo was done by Iohn Fardo, and other Iaponers: but Fardo himſelfe endured the torture of water; and at laſt confeſſed whatſoeuer the Fiſcall asked him; and ſo was ſent backe to Priſon.

I haue no heart to proceed. In like manner Iohn Beomont, George Sharrock, William Webber, Gabriell Towerſon, Iohn Wetherall, Iohn Powle, Thomas Ladbuoke, Ephraim Ramſey, Iohn Sadler, were examined by torture of the mind or bodie, or both. The Storie is freſh and lately printed, and long, to which I referre the Reader. Ten ſuffered, viz. Mon. Towerſon, Colſon, Thomſon, Iohnſon, Wetherall, Clarke, Grigs, Fardo, Price, Browne; all proteſting their innocencie.

They had prepared a Cloth of blacke Veluet for Captaine Towerſon his bodie to fall vpon; which being ſtained and defaced with his bloud, they afterwards put to the account of the Engliſh Company.

At the inſtant of the execution, there aroſe a great darkneſſe, with a ſudden and violent guſt of wind and tempeſt; whereby two of the Dutch ſhips, riding in the Harbour, were driuen from their Anchors, and with great labour and diffiultie ſaued from the Rockes. Within a few dayes after, one William Dunckin, who had told the Gouernour, That Robert Browne the Engliſh Taylour, had a few moneths before told him, he hoped, that the Engliſh ſhould haue as much to doe in the Caſtle of Amboyna, as the Dutch; This fellow comming vpon an Euening to the Graue where the Engliſh were buried, being all (ſaue Captaine Towerſon) in one pit, fell downe vpon the Graue; and hauing lien there awhile, roſe vp againe ſtarke madde, and ſo continued two or three dayes together, and then died. Forthwith alſo fell a new ſickneſſe at Amboyna, which ſwept away about a thouſand people, Dutch and Amboyners: in the ſpace wherein, there vſually died not aboue thirtie at other Seaſons. Theſe ſignes were by the ſuruiuing Engliſh referred to the confident prediction of Emanuel Tomſon aboue-named, and were by the Amboyners interpreted as a token of the wrath of God for this barbarous tyrannie of the Hollanders.

The manifold teſtimonies of their innocencie by their owne writings before their death, deuout and deep proteſtations at their death; deſire alſo to receiue the Sacrament to ratifie the ſame, and laſtly the proofe thereof by many reaſons, with the Obiections anſwered; the Reader may at large ſee in the Booke ſet forth by the Company. Out of which for perfecting our Banda Relations, I haue added this.

But he could not ſee the thirtieth Article, which orders, that all diſputes that cannot be decided by the Councell of defence, ſhould be remitted into Europe; firſt, to the two Companies there; and in default of their agreement to the King and States. Why then was not this diſpute ſo proceeded in? There is nothing in the former Articles, to limit the Councell of defence; and this generall Article appeareth to be added by way of ampliation, to prouide for that which was not particularly and expreſly cared for in the former. Which is moſt plaine by the words of the explanation vpon this thirtieth Article, agreed vpon at the firſt, and ſubſcribed by the Commiſſioners on both ſides, Anno 1619. where this courſe of proceeding is expreſly directed, not only in diſputes about the meaning of the Articles, but alſo about any other matter happening in their common aboad. Since which alſo the Kings Maieſtie hath, vpon a ſmaller occaſion then the life of his Subiects, cleerely declared himſelfe in the point of Soueraigntie; That both Nations in the Indies ſhould wholly lay aſide al pretence therof. Which Declaration was ſent to the Lords States General, & by them accepted before this bloudie butcherie was executed. But if it were granted, that the Hollanders are abſolute Lords of their partners the Engliſh in thoſe parts, without reſpect to the Treatie, yet at leaſt the Hollanders in Amboyna, are bound to obſerue the Lawes of the vnited Prouinces; for ſo ſaith this Authour himſelfe. Doe theſe allow to begin the Proceſſe at the torture, and to bring perſons of honeſt fame to the Racke, vpon others confeſſion made in the torture? Do their Lawes allow of the leading Interrogatories aboue mentioned, to direct the Priſoner what to ſay, to auoid the torture? Where, in the vnited Prouinces, is that drowning with water, in vſe? or the torture with fire, vſed to Iohnſon, Tomſon, and Clarke? or eſpecially the ſplitting of their toes, and launcing of the breſt, and putting in Gun-powder, and then firing the ſame, whereby the bodie is not left intire, neither for innocencie, nor execution? Clarke and Tomſon were both faine to bee carried to their execution, though they were tortured many dayes before.

Laſtly, their confeſſions were contradictory, apparantly falſe, and of things impoſſible to bee done, much leſſe practiſed before by the ſaid parties; and therfore ought not by their Law to haue beene beleeued, nor the Priſoners to haue beene condemned thereupon, without other ſufficient Indicia, or euidence beſides.

In the laſt place, this Author handleth the exceſſe of the torture whereof (hee taketh notice) there is much complaint in England; and ſaith, That the Lords States Generall take great care to enforme themſelues of all the paſſages of this buſines; and to that end haue deſired to ſee all the Letters, Pieces, and Papers that concerne this Proceſſe: by which it appeareth not, that there was any cruell torture vſed. But ſuppoſe the acts make no mention of them; is it any maruell that the Authors of this murtherous and tyrannous Proceſſe, being themſelues the perſons that alſo formed the Acts would omit thoſe things that made againſt them? It is to bee preſumed alſo, that the Acts kept by their people at Poloway in Banda, haue omitted many things of their Proceſſe, againſt the poore Polaroones, whom in Auguſt 1622. being about ſixe monethes before this execution of the Engliſh, their Gouernour there vſed in like ſort, as the Gouernour of Amboyna did the Engliſh, and gaue him a modell and precedent of this Proceſſe; which it will not be amiſſe to relate briefly, becauſe this Authour, in the next place alleageth the mercifull diſpoſition of the Netherlands Nation in generall; to inferre thence, that it is therefore vnlikely, that their Gouernour at Amboyna was ſo cruell, as is reported in England.

Polaroon one of the Ilands of Banda, was in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh at the time of the Treatie, Anno 1619. and by the agreement was to remaine theirs. After the Treatie came vnto the Indies, the Hollanders forbare publiſhing thereof in the Ilands of Banda, vntill they had taken Polaroon. But, knowing that it muſt be reſtored againe, according to the Treatie, they firſt take all courſes to make the Iland little or nothing worth: they demoliſh and deface the Buildings, tranſplant the Nutmeg-trees, plucking them vp by the Roots, and carrying them into their owne Ilands of Nera and of Poloway, there to be planted for themſelues; and at laſt finde a meanes to diſpeople the Iland, and to leaue it ſo, as the Engliſh might make no vſe of it, worth their charge of keeping; and that vpon this occaſion: There was a young man, the Sonne of an Orankey, or a Gentleman in Polaroon, that had committed Felonie; for which, by the Lawes of his Countrey, hee was to die. This fellow, to ſaue his life, fled to another Iland of Banda, called Roſinging, and there turned Chriſtian: but quickly vnderſtanding, that that would not make him ſafe from puniſhment, hee went backe ſecretly to his owne Countrey of Polaroon; and, hauing lurked there a few dayes, tooke his paſſage for Nera, another Iland where the Dutch haue a Fort; and told the Dutch Gouernour, that the Orankeyes of Polaroon had conſpired to maſſacre the Dutch as well at Polaroon, as at Poloway, with helpe of the people of Seran, that ſhould ſend ouer thirtie Curricurries for that purpoſe. Immediately vpon this Indicium of this Malefactor, certaine Prowes or Fiſherboates of the Polaroons, that were fiſhing at Poloway, were ſeized, and the people made Priſoners, Command was ſent by the Dutch Gouernour to Polaroon, that the Orankeyes ſhould come ouer to him, that there might be further inquiſition made of this matter.

The Prieſt of the Polaroons and ſeuentie Orankeyes inſtantly tooke a Prow or ſmall Veſſell of their owne, and imbarked themſelues for Poloway. As they were at Sea, and yet out of the ſight of the Dutch Caſtle, they were met by a Fiſher-boat of Bandanezes, and told, how all the reſt were apprehended; and that, if they went to Poloway, they were all but dead men. Neuertheleſſe, the Prieſt and the reſt, although they had ſpace and meanes to haue eſcaped to Seran and other places ſafe enough from the Hollanders, yet were ſo confident of their innocencie, that they would needs to Poloway to purge themſelues. Where, aſſoone as they were arriued, they were inſtantly carried Priſoners to the Caſtle: and withall the Gouernour, with a force of two hundred men, went preſently for Polaroon; whence he fetched all the reſt of the Orankeyes, and brought them Priſoners to the ſame Caſtle. As ſoone as they were comne, they were preſently brought to the torture of Water and fire, euen in the ſame ſort as our people were afterward at Amboyna; onely herein differing, that of thoſe of Poloway, two were ſo tortured, that they died in their tortures: the reſt being one hundred ſixtie two perſons, were all vpon their owne forced confeſſions, condemned and executed. The Prieſt when he came to the place of execution, ſpake theſe words in the Mallaian Tongue: All yee, great and ſmall, rich and poore, black and white, looke to it: we haue committed no fault. And when hee would haue ſpoken more, hee was taken by the hands and feet, laid along, and cut in two by the middle with a Sword. Forthwith, the Gouernour cauſed the wiues, children, and ſlaues of thoſe of Polaroon, to be all carried out of the Iland, and diſtributed in other Ilands ſubiect to the Dutch; and ſo haue made a cleere Countrey for the Engliſh; where they may both plant and gather themſelues deſtitute of the helpe of any of the Countrie people; without whom, neither the Engliſh nor Hollanders can maintaine their Trade in the Indies, And yet this is not heere recited, to the end thereby to charge the Neetherlands Nation with thoſe cruell proceedings, but the perſons themſelues, that haue commited thoſe barbarous Tyrannies: Who, if we ſhall beleeue an Authour of their owne, are not of the beſt of that Nation. For the Maiores (as this Authour ſayes) vſe the Indies as a Tucht-houſe or Bridewell, to manage their vnruly and vnthriftie children and kindred; whom when they cannot rule and order at home, they ſend to the Indies, where they are preferred to Offices and places of Gouernment. Yea, ſaith he, they preferre ſuch to be Fiſcals there, as neuer ſaw Studie nor Law. So that it is no maruell, that ſuch perſons proceed not with that Iuſtice and moderation as is vſed generally in the Low Countries, by the choice of the Nation there. And this agreeth well with the report of our Merchants of credit, that came lately from Amboyna; who auerre, that excepting the Gouernour himſelfe, who is well ſtept in yeeres, of the reſt of the Councell there, as well the Fiſcall, as others, there was ſcarce any that had haire on their faces, yea, that moſt of them are lewd drunken debauched perſons; and yet muſt be Iudges as well of our Engliſh, as the poore Indians there.

CHAP. XVII.

A true deſcription of the Bay Todos los Santos in Braſill, and taking the Towne Saluador by the Admirall Maſter IACOB WILKINS 1624.

THe Bay of Todos los Santos, in the Land of Braſill is ſituated vpon thirteene degrees of Southerly Latitude an hundred leagues aboue Pharnambuco. It is the place at which the Gouernour, the Biſhop, and the Auditor Generall of all the Coaſts of Braſill are reſident. This place is moſt inhabited: it hath three Townes: the one is neere to the Barra, or comming in, and is called Villa veta, which is the firſt that was built in this Iuriſdiction.

The ſecond is the Towne called Saluador or Sauiour, in Engliſh) builded by Thomas de Soſa, and foure leagues thence Landwards in, lyeth the Village Paripe. It hath many Sugar-mils, although the Inhabitants get their liuings for the moſt part by Cotton.

Within the Towne are fiue Churches and one Colledge of the Ieſuits, of which are ſome eightie in the Towne. The Bay is ſome three leagues large, and ſtretched ſome fifteene Leagues Landwards in. It hath many ſmall Ilands which yeeld great ſtore of Cotton. It is diuided into ſeuerall parts, and hath many branches in which the Inhabitants vſe ſmall Barkes.

The Bay is (when the water is reaſonable high) in ſome places, twelue, eighteene, and twentie fathome deepe, and lyeth inwards North North-weſt. On the corner of it is a Caſtle built, which is called Saint Antonio, neere which lyeth a Banke which reacheth a league into the Sea Southeaſtward. When the wind bloweth very ſtrong, the water maketh there great noyſe: but there is no danger for the ſhips, ſeeing it is fiue or ſix fathome deepe, and the ground is ſand. The corner on which Saint Anthonio ſtandeth, is but a league diſtant from the Towne. The high ſhips Land commonly iuſt againſt the great Church.

Now for the taking of the ſame by the Dutch, it is thus both related and in Picture alſo (here omitted) deſcribed.

The High and Mightie States, with the aduiſe of his Excellencie the Prince of Orange, erected a Weſt India Company, and prepared a Nauie of aboue thirtie ſhips ſtrong, of which Maſter Iacob Wilkins was choſen Admirall, and the Lord of Dort appointed to be Generall.

This Fleet put to Sea the two and twentieth of December, in the laſt yeere 1623. and the Iland of Saint Vincent (which is one of the Ilands of Cabo Verde) being appointed to bee the Rendezuous, all the ſhips of the Fleete met there, except that in which the Generall was, who came to Sierra Liona: And the Fleet hauing tarried there the ſpace of fiue weekes, it departed on the ſixe and twentieth day of March thence, and came on the eighth of May before the Bay of Todos los Santos, in which he might haue ſailed the ſame night, but hee tarried, for good reaſons and conſiderations, till it was day, and vſed this ſtratagem or policie, namely: hee put all the Souldiers on foure of the greateſt and beſt ſhippes, and cauſed their Enſignes on the other ſtill to bee diſplayed. The ſame day hee landed fifteene hundred men with two light Peeces called Dragons, who went in the night time into a ſmall Wood which lyeth neere to the Towne.

And the Admirall commanded afterwards that foure ſhips ſhould ſaile directly to the Towne and lie againſt the batterie, which they did, and came ſo neere to it that they touched ground: whereupon they ſhot very fiercely, both vpon the Towne and the batterie, from whence the Enemy anſwered them in the ſame tune, and ſhot amongſt other, one of our Captaines named Geduldhaber. The Captaine Peter Freeckſen of Enchuyſen behaued himſelfe amongſt the reſt very valiantly, to the great admiration of all them that ſaw him: And all the others vſed likewiſe there beſt endeuours; but ſeeing that both the Ordnance of the Towne, and the battery played ſo cruelly vpon them, they reſolued to land ſome men with their Boats to ſurpriſe the batterie, although it was defended by two hundred men, and to make the Ordnance vnſeruiceable. Which charge being vndertaken by the Viceadmirall Peter Peterſſon Heyn, hee went with eight Boates, or Sloopes (which were well furniſhed with Men, Muskets, Skeanes, Hammers, and Nailes) directly to the battery, and as ſoone as our men mounted vpon the ſame, the enemies fled through the water to the Towne. Whereupon our Vice-Admirall hauing nayled the Ordnance vpon it, and caſt it downe, hee returned againe with all his men to the ſhips without receiuing any dammage by the Ordnance of the Towne which was continually diſplaied againſt him. Clayes Gerritſſon Vos was not one of the leaſt that ſhewed themſelues valorous in this Enterpriſe.

The next day being the ninth of May, it was reſolued that the Towne ſhould bee aſſaulted on two ſides, namely, from the ſhips by the Mariners, and out of the Wood by the Souldiers. But the Towneſmen hauing had the night before an allarme or two giuen vnto them by reaſon of the Souldiers which were come into the Wood, as they learned, they fled all out of the Towne with the Archbiſhop, and in the morning when our forces thought to ſcale the wals of the Towne, there appeared an old man, who ſaid that all the Burgers were runne away, and opened the gate: At which time Captaine Vogelſanck of Amſterdam marcht firſt into the Towne with his Companie, and the other following him, they beſet the Market and other paſſages, and afterwards) when they miſtruſted no enemie) they began to pillage, and euery one got rich prizes, or bootie of Gold Chaines, Duckets, Rials of eight, gilded and ſiluered Rapiers, Swords and Daggers, beſides great ſtore of rich apparell, of which there was ſuch abundance, that euery Souldier is prouided with it, as if he were a Captaine: They found likewiſe at their arriuall the Tables yet couered in the Cloyſter, and many other places, and fell to the meate and drinke on them. But becauſe no exceſſe ſhould be commited, ſome hundred Pipes or Veſſels of Wine were preſently knockt in pieces.

All the houſes were almoſt all as Palaces, and adorned and furniſhed with rich houſhold-ſtuffe, of which euery one tooke as much as he could carrie. When the pillage was done there were many inferiour Souldiers that durſt venture fortie and fiftie pieces of eight Rials, (which amount to foure ſhillings and ſix-pence) at a ſet or gaine. And there are many Officers, which haue gotten fourteene thouſand and fifteene thouſand Gilders for their owne priuate bootie, and goe with Chaines of Gold about their necks, whereby it appeareth that a man may euen in one houre grow rich in thoſe parts.

Gouernour taken.
Rich Crucifix.

The Gouernour being with his Seruants and yet armed in his Palace, the Vice-Admirall cauſed him to lay his Armes downe, and tooke him as his Priſoner. Amongſt the other booties and prizes that were found in the Church, there was a Crucifixe of Siluer ſome foure foot long, with the Image of our Sauiour being made of Gold, and was a foote and a halfe long.

When all the tumult was ceaſed, and all things were put in order, namely on the twelfth of May, a Preacher of Zealand gaue in the great Church the Almightie thankes for ſuch a great Victorie; and on the ſame day came the Lord of Dort into the Bay, when hee had wandred ſome fiue weekes about it.

And in the meane time was the Ship de Vos (or Fox in Engliſh) loaden with foure hundreth Cheſts of Sugar, beſides great ſtore of Tobacco, and Hydes, and being ſent thence, the Shipper of it, namely, the valorous Claes Gerritſſon Vos, arriued the fiue and twentieth of Auguſt, with the ſame in the Vnited Prouinces, and brought this good tydings to his Countrey-men.

Euen before the departure of this Shipper, there arriued yet in the Bay afore mentioned, a ſmall Ship that came with the Prouedidor, (or Prouidor) of the Ieſuites, with a great ſumme of money that was gathered for them that are of his Order; and hee being ſeized vpon, the money was preſently made prize. On the Caſtles which the Enemie forſooke, were left fiue and fortie Pieces of Braſſe. There was alſo preſently order giuen for the demoliſhing of the Caſtle that was ſeated neere the Sea, and for the fortification of the Towne. The goods which are taken and the remainder of the Prizes, are to bee brought into the Low-Countries with other Ships.

As ſoone as this tyding came into the Vnited Prouinces, there were on a ſodaine many Souldiers leauied to goe to the Bay afore mentioned, with a Fleet that lay readie for the ſame purpoſe, ſeeing that there are yet many other places to bee taken, beſides rich Booties and Prizes.

There is alſo Newes of great preparations in Spaine to recouer this loſſe, as alſo, of another famous Act of the Hollanders commanded by L'Hermit, which are ſaid to haue taken Lirma the chiefe Citie in Peru, and other places on the Peruan Coaſt: the old Enemy of the Spaniard, viz. the people of Chili being ioyned with the Dutch. If this bee true, it is likely to proue a Coſtly warre to the Spaniard, and Honourable to the Dutch. For as the Spaniſh Treaſure hath long kept Europe in action, ſo Peru is their chiefe Mine, and Chili their most preuayling American Enemy, which hath not onely not loſt, but gotten of them now aboue fiftie yeares together, not Cities and Forts alone, but Martiall skill, Armes, and Horſes, not fearing man to man to dare and entertaine the proudeſt. Beſides, Chili it ſelfe is the richeſt Countrey for Gold, knowne in America.
